BAR. Does your confident spirit doubt that, sir? Follow us and try.

L'AN. Come, sir, we'll lead you a dance.

Exeunt.

ACT II — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] HENRY, GUISE, [BEAUMOND,]<sup>2</sup> and Attendants.

HEN. This desperate quarrel sprung out of their envies

<sup>2</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub>; Q 1641 Montsurry, economising in personnel, though in the next scene Montsurry is informed by Guise of the pardon. Ll. 1-50, however, of II, ii, are omitted in Q 1641.

To D'Ambois' sudden bravery,<sup>3</sup> and great spirit.

GUISE. Neither is worth their envy.

HEN. Less than either

Will make the gall of envy overflow.

She feeds on outcast entrails like a kite;

In which foul heap, if any ill lies hid,

She sticks her beak into it, shakes it up,

And hurls it all abroad, that all may view it.

Corruption is her nutriment; but touch her

With any precious ointment, and you kill her.

Where she finds any filth in men, she feasts, 11

And with her black throat bruits it through the world,

(Being<sup>4</sup> sound and healthful). But if she but taste

The slenderest pittance of commended virtue,

She surfeits<sup>5</sup> of it, and is like a fly

That passes all the body's soundest parts,

And dwells upon the sores; or if her squint eye

Have power to find none there, she forges some.

She makes that crooked ever which is straight;

Calls valor giddiness, justice tyranny; 20

A wise man may shun her, she not herself;

Whithersoever she flies from her harms,

She bears her foe still clasp'd in her own arms:

And therefore, Cousin Guise, let us avoid her.

Enter NUNTIUS.

NUN. What Atlas or Olympus lifts his head

So far past covert, that with air enough

My words may be inform'd, and from their height

I may be seen and heard through all the world?

A tale so worthy, and so fraught with wonder,

Sticks in my jaws and labors with event. 30

HEN. Com'st thou from D'Ambois?

NUN.

From him, and the rest,

His friends and enemies; whose stern fight I saw,

And heard their words before and in the fray.

HEN. Relate at large what thou hast seen and heard.

NUN. I saw fierce D'Ambois and his two brave friends

Enter the field, and at their heels their foes;

Which were the famous soldiers, Barrisor,

L'Anou, and Pyrrhot, great in deeds of arms;

All which arriv'd at the evenest piece of earth

The field afforded, the three challengers 40

Turn'd head, drew all their rapiers, and stood rank'd;

When face to face the three defendants met
them,

Alike prepar'd, and resolute alike.

Like bonfires of contributory wood

Every man's look show'd, fed with either's spirit ;

As one had been a mirror to another,

Like forms of life and death, each took from
other ;

And so were life and death mix'd at their heights,

That you could see no fear of death, for life,
Nor love of life, for death ; but in their brows
Pyrrho's <sup>6</sup> opinion in great letters shone : 51
That life and death in all respects are one.

HEN. Pass'd there no sort of words at their encounter ?

NUN. As Hector, 'twixt the hosts of Greece and Troy,

When Paris and the Spartan king should end
The nine years' war, held up his brazen lance For signal that both hosts should cease from arms,

And hear him speak : so Barrisor, advis'd,<sup>7</sup>
Advanc'd his naked rapier 'twixt both sides, Ripp'd up <sup>8</sup> the quarrel, and compar'd six lives 60

Then laid in balance with six idle words ;

Offer'd remission and contrition too ;

Or else that he and D'Ambois might conclude
The others' dangers. D'Ambois lik'd the last ;
But Barrisor's friends, being equally engag'd
In the main quarrel, never would expose
His life alone to that they all deserv'd.

And, for the other offer of remission,
D'Ambois, that like a laurel put in fire 69
Sparkl'd and spit, did much more than scorn
That his wrong should incense him so like chaff
To go so soon out, and like lighted paper
Approve his spirit at once both fire and ashes.
So drew they lots and in them fates appointed
That Barrisor should fight with fiery D'Am-
bois ;

Pyrrhot with Melynell ; with Brisac, L'Anou :
And then like flame and powder they commix'd,

So spritely, that I wish'd they had been spirits,
That the ne'er-shutting wounds they needs must open

Might, as they open'd, shut, and never kill. 80

But D'Ambois' sword, that light'ned as it flew,
Shot like a pointed comet at the face

Of manly Barrisor ; and there it stuck.

Thrice pluck'd he <sup>9</sup> at it, and thrice drew on thrusts,

From him <sup>10</sup> that of himself <sup>10</sup> was free as fire ;
Who <sup>10</sup> thrust still as he <sup>9</sup> pluck'd, yet (past belief)

He <sup>9</sup> with his subtle eye, hand, body, scap'd.

At last, the deadly bitten point tugg'd off,

On fell his yet undaunted foe so fiercely

That, only made <sup>11</sup> more horrid with his wound, 90

Great D'Ambois shrunk, and gave a little ground ;

But soon return'd, redoubled <sup>12</sup> in his danger,

And at the heart of Barrisor seal'd his anger.

Then, as in Arden <sup>13</sup> I have seen an oak

Long shook with tempests, and his lofty top Bent to his root, which being at length made loose

Even groaning with his weight, he 'gan to nod
This way and that, as loth his curled brows,

Which he had oft wrapp'd in the sky with storms,

Should stoop ; and yet, his radical fibres burst, 100

Storm-like he fell, and hid the fear-cold earth :

So fell stout Barrisor, that had stood the shocks

Of ten set battles in your Highness' war,

'Gainst the sole soldier of the world, Navarre.

GUISE. Oh, piteous and horrid murder !

BEAUM. Such a life

Methinks had metal <sup>14</sup> in it to survive

An age of men.

HEN. Such often soonest end.

Thy felt report calls on <sup>15</sup> : we long to know

On what events the other have arriv'd.

NUN. Sorrow and fury, like two opposite fumes 110

Met in the upper region of a cloud,

At the report made by this worthy's fall,

Brake from the earth, and with them rose
Revenge,

Ent'ring with fresh powers his two noble
friends ;

And under that odds fell surcharg'd <sup>16</sup> Brisac,

The friend of D'Ambois, before fierce L'Anou ;

Which D'Ambois seeing, as I once did see,

In my young travels through Armenia,

An angry unicorn in his full career

<sup>15</sup> Thy report, heard by us with emotion, incites

Charge with too swift a foot a jeweller 120
 That watch'd him for the treasure of his brow,<sup>17</sup>
 And, ere he could get shelter of a tree,
 Nail him with his rich antler to the earth :
 So D'Ambois ran upon reveng'd L'Anou,
 Who eying th' eager point borne in his face,
 And giving back, fell back ; and in his fall
 His foe's uncurbed sword stopp'd in his heart ;
 By which time all the life-strings of th' tw'
 other

Were cut, and both fell as their [spirits]<sup>18</sup> flew 129

Upwards ; and still hunt honor at the view :<sup>19</sup>
 And now, of all the six, sole D'Ambois stood Untouch'd save only with the others' blood.

HEN. All slain outright ?

NUN. All slain outright but he,
 Who kneeling in the warm life of his friends,
 All freckled with the blood his rapier rain'd,
 He kiss'd their pale lips, and bade both
 farewell :

And see the bravest man the French earth
 bears !

Enter MONSIEUR [and] D'AMBOIS bare.<sup>20</sup>

BUS. Now is the time ; y' are princely vow'd my friend ;

Perform it princely, and obtain my pardon.

MONS. Else Heaven forgive not me ! Come on, brave friend ! — 140

If ever nature<sup>21</sup> held herself her own,
 When the great trial of a king and subject
 Met in one blood, both from one belly spring-
 ing ;

Now prove her virtue<sup>22</sup> and her greatness one,
 Or make the tone the greater with the tother,
 As true kings should, and for your brother's
 love,

Which is a special species of true virtue,
 Do that you could not do, not being a king.

HEN. Brother, I know your suit ; these wilful murders

Are ever past our pardon.

MONS. Manly slaughter [150
 Should never bear th' account of wilful murder ;
 It being a spice<sup>23</sup> of justice, where with life
 Offending past<sup>24</sup> law, equal life is laid
 In equal balance, to scourge that offence
 By law of reputation, which to men

Exceeds all positive law, and what that<sup>25</sup> leaves

To true men's valors (not prefixing<sup>26</sup> rights
 Of satisfaction, suited to their wrongs)

A free man's eminence may supply and take.

HEN. This would make every man that thinks him wrong'd 160

Or is offended, or in wrong or right,
 Lay on this violence, and all vaunt themselves

Law-menders and suppliers, though mere butchers ;

Should this fact<sup>27</sup> (though of justice) be forgiven ?

MONS. Oh, no, my Lord ; it would make cowards fear

To touch the reputations of true men
 When only they are left to imp<sup>28</sup> the law.
 Justice will soon distinguish murderous minds From just revengers. Had my friend been slain,

His enemy surviving, he<sup>29</sup> should die, 170
 Since he had added to a murder'd fame,
 Which was in his intent, a murdered man,
 And this had worthily been wilful murder ;
 But my friend only sav'd his fame's dear life,
 Which is above life, taking th' under value,
 Which in the wrong it did, was forfeit to him ;
 And in this fact only preserves a man
 In his uprightness, worthy to survive
 Millions of such as murder men alive.

HEN. Well, Brother, rise, and raise your friend withal 180
 From death to life ; and D'Ambois, let your
 life,

Refin'd, by passing through this merited death,
 Be purg'd from more such foul pollution ;
 Nor on your scape nor valor more presuming
 To be again so daring.<sup>30</sup>

BUS. My Lord,
 I loathe as much a deed of unjust death
 As law itself doth, and to tyrannize,
 Because I have a little spirit to dare
 And power to do, as to be tyranniz'd.
 This is a grace that, on my knees redoubled,<sup>31</sup>
 I crave, to double this, my short life's gift ; 191
 And shall your royal bounty centuple :
 That I may so make good what [God]<sup>32</sup> and nature

<sup>32</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub> ; Q 1641 Law.

Have given me for my good ; since I am free,
 Offending no just law, let no law make
 By any wrong it does, my life her slave ;
 When I am wrong'd, and that law fails to right
 me,
 Let me be king myself (as man was made),
 And do a justice that exceeds the law ; 199
 If my wrong pass the power of single valor
 To right and expiate, then be you my king,
 And do a right, exceeding law and nature.
 Who to himself is law, no law doth need,
 Offends no law, and is a king indeed.

HEN. Enjoy what thou entreat'st ; we give but ours.

BUS. What you have given, my Lord, is ever yours.

Exit REX cum BEAUMOND.

GUISE. [Mort dieu!] <sup>33</sup> who would have pardon'd such a murder? Exit.

MONS. Now vanish horrors into court attractions,
 For which let this balm make thee fresh and fair.

And now forth with thy service to the
 Duchess, 210

As my long love will to Montsurry's Countess.
Exit.

BUS. To whom my love hath long been vow'd in heart,
 Although in hand for show I held <sup>34</sup> the Duchess.

And now, through blood and vengeance, deeds of height

And hard to be achiev'd, 't is fit I make Attempt of her perfection. I need fear
 No check in his rivalry, since her virtues
 Are so renown'd, and he of all dames hated. <sup>35</sup>

Exit.

[SCENE II] <sup>36</sup>

[Enter MONTSURRY, TAMYRA, BEAUPRÉ, PERO, CHARLOTTE, [and] PYRA.

MONT. He will have pardon, sure.

TAM. 'T were pity, else :
 For though his great spirit something overflow,
 All faults are still borne that from greatness
 grow ;
 But such a sudden courtier saw I never.

 of this scene, through l. 50, is omitted in Q 1641.

BEAU. He was too sudden, which indeed was rudeness.

TAM. True, for it argued his no due conceit <sup>37</sup>

Both of the place and greatness of the persons, Nor of our sex: all which (we all being strangers

To his encounter) should have made more manners

Deserve more welcome.

MONT. All this fault is found
 Because he lov'd the Duchess and left you. [11

TAM. Alas, love give her joy ; I am so far
 From envy of her honor, that I swear,
 Had he encounter'd me with such proud slight,
 I would have put that project <sup>38</sup> face of his
 To a more test than did her Duchessship.

BEAU. Why, by your leave, my Lord, I'll speak it here,

Although she be my aunt, she scarce was modest,

When she perceived the Duke, her husband, take

Those late exceptions to her servant's courtship, 20

To entertain him.

TAM. Ay, and stand him still,
 Letting her husband give her servant place.
 Though he did manly, she should be a woman.

Enter GUISE.

GUISE. D'Ambois is pardon'd ! Where's a king? where law?

See how it runs, much like a turbulent sea,
 Here high and glorious as it did contend
 To wash the heavens and make the stars more pure,

And here so low it leaves the mud of hell
 To every common view ; come, Count Mont-surry, 29

We must consult of this.

TAM. Stay not, sweet lord.

MONT. Be pleased, I'll straight return.

Exit cum GUISE.

TAM. [aside] Would that would please me !

BEAU. I'll leave you, madam, to your passions ;
 I see there's change of weather in your looks.

Exit cum suis. [TAMYRA and PERO remain.]

TAM. I cannot cloak it ; but, as when a fume,

Hot, dry, and gross, within the womb of earth

Or in her superficialities begot,
 When extreme cold hath struck it to her
 heart,
 The more it is compress'd, the more it rageth,
 Exceeds his prison's strength that should contain it;
 And then it tosseth temples in the air, 40
 All bars made engines to his insolent fury;
 So, of a sudden, my licentious fancy
 Riots within me: not my name and house
 Nor my religion, to this hour observ'd,
 Can stand above it. I must utter that
 That will in parting break more strings in me Than death when life parts; and that holy
 man
 That, from my cradle, counsell'd for my soul,
 I now must make an agent for my blood.<sup>39]</sup> 49

Enter MONSIEUR.<sup>40</sup>

[MONS. Yet, is my mistress gracious?

TAM. Yet unanswered?]

MONS. Pray thee regard thine own good,
 if not mine,

And cheer my love for that; you do not know What you may be by me. nor what without
 me;

I may have power t' advance and pull down any.

TAM. That's not my study. One way I am sure

You shall not pull down me; my husband's height

Is crown to all my hopes; and his retiring
 To any mean state, shall be my aspiring;
 My honor's in mine own hands, spite of kings.

MONS. Honor, what's that? Your second maidenhead! 60

And what is that? A word. The word is gone,

The thing remains: the rose is pluck'd, the stalk

Abides; an easy loss where no lack's found.
 Believe it, there's as small lack in the loss
 As there is pain i' th' losing; archers ever
 Have two strings to a bow; and shall great Cupid

Archer of archers both in men and women,
 Be worse provided than a common archer?
 A husband and a friend<sup>41</sup> all wise wives have.

TAM. Wise wives they are that on such strings depend, 70

With a firm husband joining a loose friend!

MONS. Still you stand on your husband;
 so do all

The common sex of you, when y' are encounter'd

With one ye cannot fancy. All men know
 You live in court, here, by your own election, Frequenting all our common sports and triumphs,

All the most youthful company of men.

And wherefore do you this? To please your husband?

'Tis gross and fulsome! if your husband's pleasure

Be all your object, and you aim at honor 80
 In living close to him, get you from court —
 You may have him at home; these common put-offs

For common women serve: "My honor!
 husband!"

Dames maritorious<sup>42</sup> ne'er were meritorious.
 Speak plain, and say, "I do not like you, sir;
 Y' are an ill-favor'd<sup>43</sup> fellow in my eye;"
 And I am answer'd.

TAM. Then, I pray, be answer'd:
 For in good faith, my Lord, I do not like you
 In that sort<sup>44</sup> you like.

MONS. Then have at you, here!
 Take, with a politic hand, this rope of pearl; 90

And though you be not amorous, yet be wise:
 Take me for wisdom; he that you can love
 Is ne'er the further from you.

TAM. Now it comes
 So ill-prepar'd, that I may take a poison,
 Under a medicine as good cheap<sup>45</sup> as it;
 I will not have it were it worth the world.

MONS. Horror of death! could I but please your eye,
 You would give me the like, ere you would lose
 me.

"Honor and husband!"

TAM. By this light, my Lord,
 Y' are a vile fellow, and I'll tell the King 100
 Your occupation of dishonoring ladies
 And of his court. A lady cannot live
 As she was born, and with that sort of pleasure
 That fits her state, but she must be defam'd
 With an infamous lord's detraction.
 Who would endure the court if these attempts
 Of open and profess'd lust must be borne? — Who's there? Come on, dame; you are at

When men are at your mistress ; have I taught
you

Any such waiting woman's quality? 110

MONS. Farewell, good " husband."

Exit MONSIEUR.

TAM. Farewell, wicked lord.

Enter MONTSURRY

MONT. Was not the Monsieur here?

TAM. Yes, to good purpose ;
And your cause is as good to seek him, too,
And haunt his company.

MONT. Why, what's the matter?

TAM. Matter of death, were I some husbands' wife.

I cannot live at quiet in my chamber,
For opportunities <sup>46</sup> almost to rapes
Offer'd me by him.

MONT. Pray thee bear with him.
Thou know'st he is a bachelor and a courtier,
Ay, and a prince ; and their prerogatives [120
Are to their laws, as to their pardons are
Their reservations, after parliaments <sup>47</sup> —
One quits another ; form gives all their essence.
That prince doth high in virtue's reckoning
stand

That will entreat a vice, and not command.
So far bear with him ; should another man
Trust to his privilege, he should trust to death.
Take comfort, then, my comfort ; nay, triumph

And crown thyself, thou part'st <sup>48</sup> with victory ;
My presence is so only dear to thee 130
That other men's appear worse than they be.
For this night yet, bear with my forced absence ;

Thou know'st my business ; and with how much weight.

My vow hath charg'd it.

TAM. True, my Lord, and never My fruitless love shall let <sup>49</sup> your serious honor : <sup>50</sup>

Yet, sweet lord, do no[t] stay ; you know my soul

Is so long time without me, and I dead,
As you are absent.

MONT. By this kiss, receive
My soul for hostage, till I see my love. 139

TAM. The morn shall let me see you?

MONT. With the sun
I'll visit thy more comfortable <sup>51</sup> beauties.

TAM. This is my comfort, that the sun hath left

The whole world's beauty ere my sun leaves
me.

MONT. 'T is late night now indeed ; farewell, my light. Exit.

TAM. Farewell, my light and life — but not in him :

In mine own dark love and light bent to another.

Alas that in the [wane] <sup>52</sup> of our affections
We should supply it with a full dissembling,
In which each youngest maid is grown a mother ;

Frailty is fruitful, one sin gets another. 150
Our loves like sparkles are that brightest shine
When they go out ; most vice shows most divine. —

Go, maid, to bed ; lend me your book, I pray ;
Not like yourself for form ; I'll this night trouble

None of your services. Make sure the doors,
And call your other fellows to their rest.

PERO. I will. — [aside] Yet I will watch <sup>53</sup> to know why you watch. Exit.

TAM. Now all ye peaceful regents of the night,
Silently gliding exhalations, Languishing winds, and murmuring falls of waters, 160

Sadness of heart and ominous secureness, Enchantments, dead sleeps, all the friends of
rest,

That ever wrought upon the life of man,
Extend your utmost strengths, and this charm'd hour

Fix like the centre ; <sup>54</sup> make the violent wheels
Of Time and Fortune stand ; and great Existence,

The Maker's treasury, now not seem to be,
To all but my approaching friends and me.
They come ; alas, they come ! Fear, fear and hope

Of one thing, at one instant fight in me ; 170
I love what most I loathe, and cannot live
Unless I compass that which holds my death ;
For life's mere death, loving one that loathes
me,

And he I love will loathe me, when he sees

tion to the laws as a monarch's exceptions (from pardons) made after Parliament is prorogued do to the original pardons.

I fly my sex, my virtue, my renown,
To run so madly on a man unknown.

The vault opens.

See, see, a vault is opening that was never Known to my lord and husband, nor to any
But him that brings the man I love, and me.
How shall I look on him? How shall I live,
And not consume in blushes? I will in, 181
And cast myself off, as I ne'er had been.<sup>55</sup>

Exit.

Ascendit FRIAR and D'AMBOIS.

FRIAR. Come, worthiest son, I am past measure glad,
That you, whose worth I have approv'd so long,
Should be the object of her fearful love;
Since both your wit and spirit can adapt
Their full force to supply her utmost weakness.
You know her worths and virtues, for report
Of all that know is to a man a knowledge; [189
You know besides, that our affections' storm,
Rais'd in our blood, no reason can reform.
Though she seek then their satisfaction
(Which she must needs, or rest unsatisfied), Your judgment will esteem her peace, thus wrought,
Nothing less dear than if yourself had sought;
And (with another color,<sup>56</sup> which my art shall teach you to lay on) yourself must seem
The only agent, and the first orb move.<sup>57</sup>
In this our set and cunning world of love.

BUS. Give me the color, my most honor'd
father, 200
And trust my cunning then to lay it on.

FRIAR. 'T is this, good son: Lord Barrisor, whom you slew,
Did love her dearly, and with all fit means Hath urg'd his acceptation, of all which
She keeps one letter written in his blood.
You must say thus, then, that you heard from
me
How much herself was touch'd in conscience
With a report, which is in truth dispers'd
That your main quarrel grew about her love,
Lord Barrisor imagining your courtship 210
Of the great Guise's Duchess in the presence,
Was by you made to his elected mistress
And so made me your mean now to resolve her,

her passion in action; just as, in the Ptolemaic system, the Primum Mobile, the tenth and outer sphere, impelled the motion of all the inner spheres.

Choosing, by my direction, this night's depth
For the more clear avoiding of all note
Of your presumed presence; and with this,
To clear her hands of such a lover's blood,
She will so kindly thank and entertain you —
Methinks I see how — ay, and ten to one,
Show you the confirmation in his blood, 220
Lest you should think report and she did feign,
That you shall so have circumstantial means
To come to the direct, which must be used:
For the direct is crooked; love comes flying;
The height of love is still won with denying.

BUS. Thanks, honor'd father.

FRIAR. She must never know
That you know anything of any love
Sustain'd on her part: for, learn this of me,
In anything a woman does alone,
If she dissemble, she thinks 't is not done; [230
If not dissemble, nor a little chide,
Give her her wish, she is not satisfi'd;
To have a man think that she never seeks,
Does her more good than to have all she likes:
This frailty sticks in them beyond their sex,
Which to reform, reason is too perplex.
Urge reason to them, it will do no good;
Humor, that is the chariot of our food
In everybody, must in them be fed,
To carry their affections by it bred. 240
Stand close.

Re-enter TAMYRA with a book.

TAM. Alas, I fear my strangeness<sup>58</sup> will retire him.

If he go back, I die; I must prevent it,
And cheer his onset with my sight at least,
And that's the most; though every step he takes

Goes to my heart. I'll rather die than seem
Not to be strange to that I most esteem.

FRIAR. Madam.

TAM. Ah!

FRIAR. You will pardon me, I hope,
That so beyond your expectation,
And at a time for visitants so unfit, 250
I, with my noble friend here, visit you.
You know that my access at any time
Hath ever been admitted; and that friend
That my care will presume to bring with me
Shall have all circumstance of worth in him
To merit as free welcome as myself.

TAM. Oh, father! but at this suspicious hour

You know how apt best men are to suspect us,
In any cause that makes suspicious shadow

No greater than the shadow of a hair ; 260
And y' are to blame. What though my lord and husband

Lie forth to-night, and, since I cannot sleep
When he is absent, I sit up to-night?
Though all the doors are sure, and all our servants

As sure bound with their sleeps, yet there is
One

That wakes above, whose eye no sleep can bind.

He sees through doors and darkness and our
thoughts ;

And therefore as we should avoid with fear
To think amiss ourselves before his search,
So should we be as curious to shun 270
All cause that other think not ill of us.

Bus. Madam, 't is far from that ; I only heard,

By this my honor'd father, that your conscience

Made some deep scruple with a false report
That Barrisor's blood should something touch
your honor,

Since he imagin'd I was courting you,
When I was bold to change words with the Duchess,

And therefore made his quarrel ; his long love
And service, as I hear, being deeply vowed
To your perfections, which my ready presence, 280

Presum'd on with my father at this season
For the more care of your so curious <sup>59</sup> honor, Can well resolve <sup>60</sup> your conscience, is most false.

TAM. And is it therefore that you come,
good sir?

Then crave I now your pardon and my father's,
And swear your presence does me so much good,

That all I have it binds to your requital.
Indeed, sir, 't is most true that a report
Is spread, alleging that his love to me

Was reason of your quarrel, and because 290
You shall not think I feign it for my glory
That he importun'd me for his court service, <sup>61</sup>
I'll show you his own hand, set down in blood
To that vain purpose. Good sir, then come in.

Father, I thank you now a thousand fold.

<sup>61</sup> I.e., to be my "servant", according to the terminology of courtly love.

FRIAR. May it be worth it to you, honor'd daughter. Descendit FRIAR.

ACT III — SCENE I <sup>1</sup>

Enter D'AMBOIS, [and] TAMYRA with a chain of pearl.

BUS. Sweet mistress, cease ! Your conscience is too nice, <sup>2</sup>

And bites too hotly of the Puritan spice.

TAM. Oh, my dear servant, in thy close embraces,

I have set open all the doors of danger
To my encompass'd honor, and my life.

Before I was secure against death and hell,
But now am subject to the heartless fear
Of every shadow and of every breath,

And would change firmness with an aspen leaf ;
So confident a spotless conscience is, 10

So weak a guilty. Oh, the dangerous siege
Sin lays about us, and the tyranny

He exercises when he hath expugn'd ! <sup>3</sup>
Like to the horror of a winter's thunder,

Mix'd with a gushing storm, that suffer nothing

To stir abroad on earth but their own rages,
Is sin, when it hath gathered head above us ;

No roof, no shelter can secure us so,
But he will drown our cheeks in fear or woe.

Bus. Sin is a coward, madam, and insults
But on our weakness, in his truest valor ; <sup>4</sup> 21

And so our ignorance tames us, that we let
His shadows fright us ; and like empty clouds,

In which our faulty apprehensions forge
The forms of dragons, lions, elephants,

When they hold no proportion, the sly charms
Of the witch, Policy, makes him like a monster

Kept only to show men for servile money.
That false hag often paints him in her cloth

Ten times more monstrous than he is in troth.
In three of us, the secret of our meeting 31

Is only guarded, and three friends as one
Have ever been esteem'd, as our three powers <sup>5</sup>

That in [our] <sup>6</sup> one soul are as one united.
Why should we fear then? For myself I

<sup>4</sup> Only triumphs over our weakness, if its valor be accurately estimated.

ties. (Boas.)

<sup>6</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub>; om. Q 1641.

Sooner shall torture be the sire to pleasure,
And health be grievous to one long time sick,
Than the dear jewel of your fame in me
Be made an outcast to your infamy ;
Nor shall my value, sacred to your virtues, 40
Only give free course to it, from myself,
But make it fly out of the mouths of kings
In golden vapors and with awful wings.

TAM. It rests as ' all kings' seals were set in thee.

Now let us call my father, whom I swear
I could extremely chide, but that I fear
To make him so suspicious of my love
Of which, sweet servant, do not let him know
For all the world.

BUS. Alas ! he will not think it. [49

TAM. Come, then. — Ho ! Father, ope, and take your friend. Ascendit FRIAR.

FRIAR. Now, honor'd daughter, is your doubt resolv'd.

TAM. Ay, father, but you went away too soon.

FRIAR. Too soon ?

TAM. Indeed you did ; you should have stayed ;

Had not your worthy friend been of your bringing,

And that contains all laws to temper me,
Not all the fearful danger that besieged us,
Had aw'd my throat from exclamation.

FRIAR. I know your serious disposition
well. —

Come, son, the morn comes on.

BUS. Now, honor'd mistress,
Till farther service call, all bliss supply you. [60

TAM. And you this chain of pearl, and my love only.

Descendit FRIAR and D'AMBOIS.

It is not I, but urgent destiny,
That, as great statesmen for their general end
In politic justice make poor men offend, Enforceth my offence to make it just.

What shall weak dames do, when th' whole work of nature

Hath a strong finger in each one of us ?
Needs must that sweep away the silly cobweb
Of our still-undone labors ; that lays still
Our powers to it,<sup>8</sup> as to the line, the stone, [70
Not to the stone, the line should be oppos'd ;
We cannot keep our constant course in virtue.
What is alike at all parts ? Every day

<sup>7</sup> Remains (as inviolable) as if.

<sup>8</sup> Nature ever brings our powers into line with itself, just as the builder brings the stone into line with his plan.

Differs from other : every hour and minute ;
Ay, every thought in our false clock of life,
Ofttimes inverts the whole circumference :
We must be sometimes one, sometimes another.

Our bodies are but thick clouds to our souls,
Through which they cannot shine when they desire.

When all the stars, and even the sun himself, [80
Must stay the vapors' times that he exhales
Before he can make good his beams to us,
Oh, how can we, that are but motes to him,
Wand'ring at random in his ordered rays,
Disperse our passions' fumes with our weak labors,

That are more thick and black than all earth's vapors ?

Enter MONTSURRY.

MONT. Good day, my love ; what, up and ready<sup>9</sup> too !

TAM. Both, my dear Lord ; not all this night made I

Myself unready, or could sleep a wink.

MONT. Alas ! what troubled my true love, my peace, 90
From being at peace within her better self ?
Or how could sleep forbear to seize thine eyes
When he might challenge them as his just prize ?

TAM. I am in no pow'r earthly, but in
yours ;

To what end should I go to bed, my Lord,
That wholly miss'd the comfort of my bed ?
Or how should sleep possess my faculties,
Wanting the proper closer of mine eyes ?

MONT. Then will I nevermore sleep night from thee.

All mine own business, all the King's affairs, [100
Shall take the day to serve them ; every night
I'll ever dedicate to thy delight.

TAM. Nay, good my Lord, esteem not my desires

Such doters on their humors that my judgment
Cannot subdue them to your worthier pleasure ;

A wife's pleas'd husband must her object be
In all her acts, not her sooth'd fantasy.<sup>10</sup>

MONT. Then come, my love, now pay those rites to sleep

Thy fair eyes owe him. Shall we now to bed ?

TAM. Oh, no, my Lord ; your holy friar says 110

All couplings in the day that touch the bed
Adulterous are, even in the married ;
Whose grave and worthy doctrine, well I
know,
Your faith in him will liberally allow.

MONT. He's a most learned and religious
man.

Come to the presence, then, and see great
D'Ambois,

Fortune's proud mushroom shot up in a night,
Stand like an Atlas under our King's arm ;
Which greatness<sup>11</sup> with him Monsieur now envies<sup>12</sup>

As bitterly and deadly as the Guise. 120

TAM. What, he that was but yesterday his maker,

His raiser and preserver?

MONT. Even the same.

Each natural agent works but to this end,
To render that it works on like itself ;
Which since the Monsieur in his act on D'Am-
bois

Cannot to his ambitious end effect,
But that, quite opposite, the King hath power
In his love borne to D'Ambois, to convert
The point of Monsieur's aim on his own
breast,

He turns his outward love to inward hate. 130
A prince's love is like the lightning's fume,

♥ Which no man can embrace, but must consume. Exeunt.

[SCENE II]<sup>13</sup>

Enter HENRY, D'AMBOIS, MONSIEUR, GUISE, DUCHESS, ANNABELLE, CHARLOTTE, [and] Attendants.

HEN. Speak home, Bussy ;<sup>14</sup> thy impartial words

Are like brave falcons that dare truss<sup>15</sup> a fowl Much greater than themselves ; flatterers are kites

That check at<sup>16</sup> sparrows ; thou shalt be my eagle,

And bear my thunder underneath thy wings ;
Truth's words like jewels hang in th' ears of kings.

BUS. Would I might live to see no Jews hang there

<sup>13</sup> Unlocated. Presumably within the royal palace ; certainly, after Maffé's entrance, the apartments of Monsieur.

Instead of jewels ; sycophants, I mean,
Who use truth like the Devil, his true foe,
Cast by the angel to the pit of fears, 10
And bound in chains ; truth seldom decks kings' ears.

Slave Flattery (like a rippier's<sup>17</sup> legs roll'd up
In beets of hay ropes) with kings' soothed guts
Swaddled and strapp'd,<sup>18</sup> now lives only free.
Oh, 't is a subtle knave ; how like the plague
Unfelt he strikes into the brain of man,
And rageth in his entrails, when he can,
Worse than the poison of a red-hair'd man !<sup>19</sup>

HEN. Fly at him and his brood ; I cast thee off,<sup>20</sup>

And once more give thee surname of mine
eagle. 20

BUS. I'll make you sport enough, then ; let me have

My lucerns<sup>21</sup> too, or dogs inur'd to hunt
Beasts of most rapine, but to put them up,<sup>22</sup>
And if I truss not, let me not be trusted.

Show me a great man (by the people's voice,
Which is the voice of God) that by his great-
ness

Bombasts<sup>23</sup> his private roofs with public riches ;

That affects royalty, rising from a clapdish ;<sup>24</sup>
That rules so much more by his suffering king,<sup>25</sup>

That he makes kings of his subordinate slaves :
Himself and them graduate<sup>26</sup> like woodmongers, 31

Piling a stack of billets from the earth,
Raising each other into steeples' heights ;
Let him convey this on the turning props
Of Protean<sup>27</sup> law, and, his own counsel keeping,<sup>28</sup>

Keep all upright ; let me but hawk at him,
I'll play the vulture, and so thump his liver,
That, like a huge unlading argosy,
He shall confess all, and you then may hang
him.

<sup>17</sup> Rippier = "one who carries fish inland to

<sup>19</sup> I.e., from his body ; the common representation of Judas as red-headed seems to have given rise to this superstition.

<sup>24</sup> The wooden dish of the beggar, who clapped
the cover against it to attract attention.

exigencies.

Show me a clergyman, that is in voice 40
 A lark of heaven, in heart a mole of earth ;
 That hath good living, and a wicked life ;
 A temperate look, and a luxurious gut ;
 Turning the rents of his superfluous cures <sup>29</sup>
 Into your pheasants and your partridges ;
 Venting their quintessence as men read Hebrew ; <sup>30</sup>

Let me but hawk at him, and, like the other,
 He shall confess all, and you then may hang him.

Show me a lawyer that turns sacred law
 (The equal rend'rer of each man his own, 50
 The scourge of rapine and extortion,
 The sanctuary and impregnable defence
 Of retir'd learning and besieged virtue)
 Into a harpy, that eats all but's own,
 Into the damned sins it punisheth ;
 Into the synagogue of thieves and atheists,
 Blood into gold, and justice into lust ;
 Let me but hawk at him, as at the rest,
 He shall confess all, and you then may hang him.

Enter MONTSURRY, TAMYRA, and PERO.

GUISE. Where will you find such game as you would hawk at? 60

BUS. I'll hawk about your house for one of them.

GUISE. Come, y' are a glorious <sup>31</sup> ruffian, and run proud

Of the King's headlong graces. Hold your breath,

Or, by that poison'd vapor, not the King
 Shall back your murderous valor against me.

BUS. I would the King would make his presence free

But for one bout betwixt us : by the reverence

Due to the sacred space 'twixt kings and subjects,

Here would I make thee cast that popular <sup>32</sup> purple, <sup>33</sup>

In which thy proud soul sits and braves thy sovereign. 70

MONS. Peace, peace, I pray thee peace.

BUS. Let him peace first

That made the first war.

MONS. He's the better man.

BUS. And therefore may do worst?

MONS. He has more titles.

BUS. So Hydra had more heads.

MONS. He's greater known.

BUS. His greatness is the people's ; mine's mine own.

MONS. He's [nobler] <sup>34</sup> born.

BUS. He is not, I am noble ;
 And noblesse in his <sup>35</sup> blood hath no gradation,
 But in his merit.

GUISE. Th' art not nobly born,
 But bastard to the Cardinal of Ambois. <sup>36</sup>

BUS. Thou liest, proud Guiserd. — Let me fly, my Lord. 80

HEN. Not in my face, my eagle ; violence flies

The sanctuaries of a prince's eyes.

BUS. Still shall we chide and foam upon this bit?

Is the Guise only great in faction? <sup>37</sup>

Stands he not by himself? Proves he th' opinion

That men's souls are without them? Be a duke, <sup>38</sup>

And lead me to the field.

GUISE. Come, follow me.

HEN. Stay them ! — Stay, D'Ambois. —

Cousin Guise, I wonder

Your honor'd disposition brooks so ill
 A man so good, that only would uphold 90

Man in his native noblesse, from whose fall

All our dimensions rise ; that in himself,

Without the outward patches of our frailty,

Riches and honor, knows he comprehends

Worth with the greatest. Kings had never borne

Such boundless empire over other men,

Had all maintain'd the spirit and state of D'Ambois ;

Nor had the full impartial hand of nature

That all things gave in her original <sup>39</sup> 99

Without these definite terms of mine and thine,

Been turn'd unjustly to the hand of Fortune,

Had all preserv'd her in her prime, like D'Am-
 bois.

No envy, no disjunction had dissolv'd,

Or pluck'd one stick out of the golden faggot

In which the world of Saturn <sup>40</sup> bound our lives,

Had all been held together with the nerves,

 long before the latter's birth.

<sup>32</sup> Alluding to the fact that Guise was more popular than Henry with the Parisians.

The genius, and th' ingenuous <sup>41</sup> soul of D'Ambois.

Let my hand therefore be the Hermean rod <sup>42</sup>
To part and reconcile, and so conserve you,
As my combin'd embracers and supporters.

BUS. 'T is our King's motion, and we shall not seem 111

To worst eyes womanish, though we change
thus soon

Never so great grudge for his greater pleasure.

GUISE. I seal to that; and, so the manly freedom

That you so much profess, hereafter prove
not

A bold and glorious license to deprave, <sup>43</sup>

To me his hand shall hold the Hermean virtue

His Grace affects, in which submissive sign
On this his sacred right hand I lay mine.

BUS. 'T is well, my Lord, and, so your worthy greatness 120

Decline not to the greater insolence,

Nor make you think it a prerogative

To rack men's freedoms with the ruder wrongs,
My hand, stuck full of laurel, in true sign

'T is wholly dedicate to righteous peace,

In all submission kisseth th' other side.

HEN. Thanks to ye both; and kindly I invite ye

Both to a banquet, where we'll sacrifice

Full cups to confirmation of your loves; 129

At which, fair ladies, I entreat your presence;

And hope you, madam, will take one carouse
For reconciliation of your lord and servant.

DUCH. If I should fail, my Lord, some other
lady

Would be found there to do that for my servant.

MONS. Any of these here?

DUCH. Nay, I know not that.

BUS. Think your thoughts like my mistress', honor'd lady?

TAM. I think not on you, sir; y' are one I know not.

BUS. Cry you mercy, madam.

MONT. Oh, sir, has she met you?

Exeunt HENRY, D'AMBOIS, [and] Ladies.

MONS. What had my bounty drunk when it rais'd him?

<sup>41</sup> So Q1: Q 1641 ingenious. The words were not distinguished in spelling.

GUISE. Y' ave stuck us up a very worthy flag, 140

That takes more wind than we with all our sails.

MONS. Oh, so he spreads and flourishes.

GUISE. He must down;

Upstarts should never perch too near a crown.

MONS. 'T is true, my Lord; and as this doting hand,

Even out of earth, like Juno, struck this giant, <sup>44</sup>

So Jove's great ordnance shall be here impli'd
To strike him under th' Ætna of his pride;

To which work lend your hands, and let us cast <sup>45</sup>

Where we may set snares for his ranging <sup>46</sup> greatness. 149

I think it best, amongst our greatest women;

For there is no such trap to catch an upstart

As a loose downfall; for you know their falls

Are th' ends of all men's rising. If great men

And wise make scapes to please advantage, <sup>47</sup>

'T is with a woman: women that worst may Still hold men's candles; <sup>48</sup> they direct and

know

All things amiss in all men; and their women <sup>49</sup>

All things amiss in them; through whose charm'd mouths,

We may see all the close scapes of the court.

When the most royal beast of chase, the hart,

Being old and cunning in his lairs and haunts,

Can never be discovered to the bow, 162

The piece, <sup>50</sup> or hound; yet where, behind some quitch, <sup>51</sup>

He breaks his gall, and rutteth with his hind,

The place is mark'd, and by his ventry

He still is taken. Shall we then attempt

The chiefest mean to that discovery here,

And court our greatest ladies' chiefest women

With shows of love and liberal promises?

'T is but our breath. If something given in hand 170

Sharpen their hopes of more, 't will be well ventur'd.

GUISE. No doubt of that; and 't is the cunning'st point

Of your devis'd investigation.

MONS. I have broken
The ice to it already with the woman
Of your chaste lady, and conceive good hope
I shall wade thorough to some wished shore
At our next meeting.

MONT. Nay, there's small hope there.

GUISE. Take say <sup>52</sup> of her, my Lord, she comes most fitly.

MONS. Starting back?

Enter CHARLOTTE, ANNABELLE, [and] PERO.

GUISE. Y' are engag'd, indeed. 180

ANNA. Nay, pray, my Lord, forbear.

MONT. [drawing ANNABELLE aside] What, skittish, servant?

ANNA. No, my Lord, I am not so fit for your service.

CHAR. Pray pardon me now, my Lord ;
my Lady expects me.

GUISE. [drawing CHARLOTTE aside] I'll satisfy her expectation, as far as an uncle may.

MONS. Well said ; a spirit of court- [190 ship of all hands. — [drawing PERO aside] Now mine own Pero, hast thou rememb'rd me for the discovery I entreated thee make of thy mistress? Speak boldly, and be sure of all things I have sworn to thee.

PERO. Building on that assurance, my Lord, I may speak ; and much the rather, because my Lady hath not trusted me with that I can tell you ; for now I cannot be said to betray her. 200

MONS. That's all one, so we reach our objects. Forth, I beseech thee.

PERO. To tell you truth, my Lord, I have made a strange discovery.

MONS. Excellent ! Pero, thou reviv'st me.
May I sink quick to perdition if my tongue discover <sup>53</sup> it.

PERO. 'T is thus, then : this last night, my Lord lay forth ; and I, watching my lady's sitting up, stole up at midnight from my [210 pallet ; and (having before made a hole both through the wall and arras to her inmost chamber) I saw D'Ambois and herself reading a letter. <sup>54</sup>

MONS. D'Ambois?

PERO. Even he, my Lord.

MONS. Dost thou not dream, wench?

PERO. I swear he is the man.

MONS. The Devil he is, and thy lady his dam ! — [aside] Why, this was the hap- [220

piest shot that ever flew ! The just plague of hypocrisy level'd <sup>55</sup> it. Oh, the infinite regions betwixt a woman's tongue and her heart ! Is this our goddess of chastity ? I thought I could not be so slighted if she had not her fraught besides, and therefore plotted this with her woman, never dreaming of D'Ambois. — Dear Pero, I will advance thee for ever ; but tell me now — God's precious, it transforms me with admiration <sup>56</sup> — [230 sweet Pero, whom should she trust with this conveyance ? Or, all the doors being made sure, how should his conveyance be made ?

PERO. Nay, my Lord, that amazes me ; I cannot by any study so much as guess at it.

MONS. Well, let's favor our apprehensions with forbearing that a little ; for if my heart were not hoop'd with adamant, the conceit <sup>57</sup> of this would have burst it. But hark thee.

Whispers.

[CHAR. I swear to your Grace, all that [240
I can conjecture touching my Lady your niece, is a strong affection she bears to the English Milor'.

GUISE. All, quod you ? 'T is enough, I assure you ; but tell me —] <sup>58</sup>

MONT. I pray thee, resolve me ; the Duke will never imagine that I am busy about 's wife. Hath D'Ambois any privy access to her?

ANNA. No, my Lord ; D'Ambois neg- [250
lects her, as she takes it, and is therefore suspicious that either your lady, or the Lady Beaupré hath closely <sup>59</sup> entertain'd him.

MONT. By 'r lady, a likely suspicion, and very near the life, <sup>60</sup> especially of my wife.

MONS. Come, we'll disguise all with seeming only to have courted. — Away, dry palm : <sup>61</sup> sh'as a liver <sup>62</sup> as dry as a biscuit ; a man may go a whole voyage with her, and get nothing but tempests from her windpipe: 260

GUISE. Here's one, I think, has swallowed a porcupine, she casts pricks from her tongue
so.

MONT. And here's a peacock seems to have devour'd one of the Alps, she has so swelling a spirit, and is so cold of her kindness.

CHAR. We are no windfalls, my Lord ; ye must gather us with the ladder of matrimony, or we'll hang till we be rotten.

at a banquet*.

MONS. Indeed, that's the way to make [270 ye right openarses.<sup>63</sup> But, alas! ye have no portions fit for such husbands as we wish you.

PERO. Portions, my Lord? Yes, and such portions as your principality cannot purchase.

MONS. What, woman? what are those portions?

PERO. Riddle my riddle, my Lord.

MONS. Ay, marry, wench, I think thy portion is a right riddle: a man shall never find it out. But let's hear it. 280

PERO. You shall, my Lord.

"What's that, that being most rare's most cheap?

That when you sow, you never reap?

That when it grows most, most you in <sup>64</sup> it?

And still you lose it when you win it;

That when 't is commonest, 't is dearest,

And when 't is farthest off, 't is nearest?"

MONS. Is this your great portion?

PERO. Even this, my Lord.

MONS. Believe me, I cannot riddle it. 290

PERO. No, my Lord: 't is my chastity, which you shall neither riddle nor fiddle.

MONS. Your chastity? Let me begin with the end of it; how is a woman's chastity nearest a man when 't is furthest off?

PERO. Why, my Lord, when you cannot get it, it goes to th' heart on you; and that, I think, comes most near you; and I am sure it shall be far enough off. And so we leave you to our mercies. 300

Exeunt Women.

MONS. Farewell, riddle.

GUISE. Farewell, medlar.

MONT. Farewell, winter plum.

MONS. Now, my Lords, what fruit of our inquisition? Feel you nothing budding yet?
Speak, good my Lord Montsurry.

MONT. Nothing but this: D'Ambois is thought negligent in observing the Duchess, and therefore she is suspicious that your niece or my wife closely entertains him. 310

MONS. Your wife, my Lord? Think you that possible?

MONT. Alas, I know she flies him like her last hour.

MONS. Her last hour? Why, that comes upon her the more she flies it. Does D'Ambois so, think you?

MONT. That's not worth the answering.
'T is miraculous to think with what monsters

<sup>63</sup> Medlars, so called with reference to the large open disk between the persistent calyx-lobes.
(N.E.D.)

women's imaginations engross them when [320
they are once enamor'd, and what wonders they will work for their satisfaction. They will make sheep valiant, a lion fearful.

MONS. [aside] And an ass confident.—
Well, my Lord, more will come forth shortly;
get you to the banquet.

GUISE. Come, my Lord; I have the blind side of one of them.

Exit GUISE cum MONTSURRY.

MONS. Oh, the unsounded sea of women's bloods, 329

That when 't is calmest, is most dangerous;
Not any wrinkle creaming <sup>65</sup> in their faces
When in their hearts are Scylla and Charybdis,
Which still are hid in dark and standing fogs,
Where never day shines, nothing never grows
But weeds and poisons, that no statesman
knows;

Not Cerberus ever saw the damned nooks
Hid with the veils of women's virtuous looks.

<sup>66</sup> But what a cloud of sulphur have I drawn
Up to my bosom in this dangerous secret! 339
Which if my haste with any spark should light,
Ere D'Ambois were engag'd <sup>67</sup> in some sure plot,
I were blown up; he would be, sure, my death.
Would I had never known it, for before
I shall persuade th' importance to Montsurry,
And make him with some studied stratagem
Train D'Ambois to his wreck, <sup>68</sup> his maid may tell it,

Or I, out of my fiery thirst to play
With the fell tiger, up in darkness tied,
And give it some light, make it quite break
loose.

I fear it, afore Heaven, and will not see 350
D'Ambois again, till I have told Montsurry
And set a snare with him to free my fears.—
Who's there?

Enter MAFFÉ.

MAF. My Lord?

MONS. Go call the Count Montsurry,
And make the doors fast; I will speak with none

Till he come to me.

*I will conceal all yet, and give more time
To D'Ambois' triall, now upon my hooke;
He awes my throat; else, like Sybillas cave,
It should breathe oracles; I feare him strangely,
And may resemble his advanced valour
Unto a spirit rais'd without a circle,
Endangering him that ignorantly rais'd him,
And for whose furie he hath learn'd no limit.*

MAF. Well, my Lord. Exiturus.

MONS. Or else

Send you some other, and see all the doors
Made safe yourself, I pray ; haste, fly about it.

MAF. You 'll speak with none but with the Count Montsurry ?

MONS. With none but he, except it be the Guise.

MAF. See even by this, there's one exception more ! 360

Your Grace must be more firm in the command,

Or else shall I as weakly execute.

The Guise shall speak with you ?

MONS. He shall, I say.

MAF. And Count Montsurry ?

MONS. Ay, and Count Montsurry.

MAF. Your Grace must pardon me, that I am bold

To urge the clear and full sense of your pleasure ;

Which, whensoever I have known, I hope
Your Grace will say I hit it to a hair.

MONS. You have.

MAF. I hope so, or I would be glad —

MONS. I pray thee get thee gone ; thou art so tedious 370

In the strict form of all thy services

That I had better have one negligent.

You hit my pleasure well when D'Ambois hit
you,

Did you not, think you ?

MAF. D'Ambois ? Why, my Lord —

MONS. I pray thee talk no more, but shut the doors :

Do what I charge thee.

MAF. I will, my Lord, and yet
I would be glad the wrong I had of D'Am-
bois —

MONS. Precious ! then it is a fate that plagues me 378

In this man's foolery ; I may be murdered
While he stands on protection of his folly. —
Avaunt ; about thy charge.

MAF. I go, my Lord. — [aside] I had my head broke in his faithful
service ;

I had no suit the more, nor any thanks,
And yet my teeth must still be hit with
D'Ambois —

D'Ambois, my Lord, shall know —

MONS. The Devil and D'Ambois !

Exit MAFFÉ.

How am I tortur'd with this trusty fool !
Never was any curious in his place

To do things justly, but he was an ass ;
We cannot find one trusty that is witty,<sup>69</sup>
And therefore bear their disproportion. 390

Grant thou, great star and angel<sup>70</sup> of my life,
A sure lease of it but for some few days,
That I may clear my bosom of the snake
I cherish'd there, and I will then defy
All check to it but Nature's, and her altars Shall crack with vessels crown'd with every liquor

Drawn from her highest and most bloody humors.

I fear him strangely ; his advanced valor
Is like a spirit rais'd without a circle,<sup>71</sup> 399 Endangering him that ignorantly rais'd
him,

And for whose fury he hath learnt no limit.

Re-enter MAFFÉ hastily.

MAF. I cannot help it — what should I do
more ?

As I was gathering a fit guard to make
My passage to the doors, and the doors sure,
The man of blood is enter'd. [Exit MAFFÉ.]

MONS. Rage of death !
If I had told the secret, and he knew it,
Thus had I been endanger'd.

Enter D'AMBOIS.

My sweetheart !

How now, what leap'st thou at ?

BUS. O royal object !

MONS. Thou dream'st, awake ; object in th' empty air ?

BUS. Worthy the brows of Titan, worth his chair. 410

MONS. Pray thee, what mean'st thou ?

BUS. See you not a crown
Impale<sup>72</sup> the forehead of the great King
Monsieur ?

MONS. Oh, fie upon thee !

BUS. Prince, that is the subject
Of all these your retir'd and sole discourses.

MONS. Wilt thou not leave that wrongful supposition ?

BUS. Why wrongful, to suppose the doubtless right

To the succession worth the thinking on ?

MONS. Well, leave these jests. How I am overjoyed

as it intervened he was safe from the spirits he raised.

<sup>72</sup> Surround.

With thy wish'd presence, and how fit thou com'st!

For, of mine honor, I was sending for thee. [420
Bus. To what end?

MONS. Only for thy company,
Which I have still in thought; but that's no payment

On thy part made with personal appearance.
Thy absence so long suffered, oftentimes Put me in some little doubt thou dost not love
me.

Wilt thou do one thing therefore now sincerely?

Bus. Ay, anything, but killing of the King.

MONS. Still in that discord, and ill-taken note?

How most unseasonable thou playest the cuckoo,

In this thy fall of friendship!

Bus. Then do not doubt, [430
That there is any act within my nerves,
But killing of the King, that is not yours.

MONS. I will not, then; to prove which by my love

Shown to thy virtues, and by all fruits else
Already sprung from that still-flourishing tree,
With whatsoever may hereafter spring,
I charge thee utter, even with all the freedom
Both of thy noble nature and thy friendship,
The full and plain state of me in thy thoughts.

Bus. What, utter plainly what I think of
you? 440

MONS. Plain as truth.

Bus. Why, this swims quite against the stream of greatness;

Great men would rather hear their flatteries,
And if they be not made fools, are not wise.<sup>73</sup>

MONS. I am no such great fool, and therefore charge thee,
Even from the root of thy free heart, display
me.

Bus. Since you affect<sup>74</sup> it in such serious
terms,

If yourself first will tell me what you think
As freely and as heartily of me,
I'll be as open in my thoughts of you. 450

MONS. A bargain, of mine honor; and make this,

That prove we in our full dissection
Never so foul, live still the sounder friends.

Bus. What else, sir? Come, pay me home; I'll bide it bravely.

MONS. I will, I swear. I think thee then
a man

That dares as much as a wild horse or tiger;
As headstrong and as bloody; and, to feed
The ravenous wolf of thy most cannibal valor,
Rather than not employ it thou wouldst turn
Hackster<sup>75</sup> to any whore, slave to a Jew 460
Or English usurer, to force possessions
(And cut men's throats) of mortgaged estates;
Or thou wouldst 'tire thee like a tinker's
strumpet,

And murder market-folks, quarrel with sheep,
And run as mad as Ajax;<sup>76</sup> serve a butcher;
Do anything but killing of the King:

That in thy valor th' art like other naturals<sup>77</sup>
That have strange gifts in nature, but no soul Diffus'd quite through, to make them of a piece,

But stop at humors that are more absurd, [470
Childish, and villainous than that hackster,
whore,

Slave, cutthroat, tinker's bitch, compar'd
before;

And in those humors wouldst envy, betray,
Slander, blaspheme, change each hour a religion,

Do anything but killing of the King:
That in thy valor (which is still the dunghill,
To which hath reference<sup>78</sup> all filth in thy house)

Th' art more ridiculous and vainglorious
Than any mountebank, and impudent 479
Than any painted bawd; which, not to soothe
And glorify thee like a Jupiter Hammon,
Thou eat'st thy heart in vinegar; and thy gall
Turns all thy blood to poison, which is cause
Of that toad-pool that stands in thy complexion,

And makes thee with a cold and earthy moisture,

Which is the dam of putrefaction,
As plague to thy damn'd pride, rot as thou liv'st,

To study calumnies and treacheries,
To thy friends' slaughters like a screech-owl
sing, 489

And do all mischiefs — but to kill the King.

Bus. So! have you said?

MONS. How think'st thou? Do I flatter?
Speak I not like a trusty friend to thee?

Bus. That ever any man was blest withal.
So here's for me. I think you are, at worst,

<sup>73</sup> Do not consider themselves wise unless they are being made fools of by their flatterers.

No devil, since y' are like to be no king ;
Of which, with any friend of yours, I'll lay
This poor stillado <sup>79</sup> here, 'gainst all the stars, Ay, and 'gainst all your treacheries, which are
more,

That you did never good, but to do ill ;
But ill of all sorts, free and for itself : 500
That, like a murdering-piece,<sup>80</sup> making lanes
in armies,

The first man of a rank,<sup>81</sup> the whole rank falling,

If you have wrong'd one man, you are so far
From making him amends that all his race,
Friends, and associates, fall into your chase :
That y' are for perjuries the very prince
Of all intelligencers ; <sup>82</sup> and your voice
Is like an eastern wind, that where it flies
Knits nets of caterpillars, with which you catch 509

The prime of all the fruits the kingdom yields.
That your political head is the curs'd fount
Of all the violence, rapine, cruelty, Tyranny, and atheism flowing through the realm :

That y' ave a tongue so scandalous, 't will cut
The purest crystal ; <sup>83</sup> and a breath that will Kill to <sup>84</sup> that wall a spider : you will jest
With God, and your soul to the Devil tender ; <sup>85</sup>
For lust kiss horror, and with death engender :
That your foul body is a Lernean fen <sup>86</sup>
Of all the maladies breeding in all men : 520
That you are utterly without a soul ;
And, for your life, the thread of that was spun

When Clotho slept, and let her breathing rock <sup>87</sup>
Fall in the dirt ; and Lachesis still draws it,
Dipping her twisting fingers in a bowl Defil'd, and crown'd <sup>88</sup> with virtue's forced
soul :

And lastly (which I must for gratitude Ever remember) that of all my height
And dearest life, you are the only spring,
Only in royal hope to kill the King. 530

Mons. Why, now I see thou lov'st me.
Come to the banquet. Exeunt.

ACT IV — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] HENRY, MONSIEUR with a letter, GUISE, MONTSURRY, BUSSY, ELENOR, TAMYRA, BEAUPRÉ, PERO, CHARLOTTE, ANNABELLE,
[and] PYRA, with four Pages.

HEN. Ladies, ye have not done our banquet
right,

Nor look'd upon it with those cheerful rays
That lately turn'd your breaths to floods of
gold ;

Your looks, methinks, are not drawn out with
thoughts

So clear and free as heretofore, but foul,
As if the thick complexions of men
Govern'd within them.

BUS. 'T is not like, my Lord,

That men in women rule, but contrary ;
For as the moon, of all things God created,
Not only is the most appropriate image 10
Or glass to show them how they wax and wane,
But in her height and motion likewise
bears

Imperial influences that command
In all their powers, and make them wax and wane ;

So women, that, of all things made of nothing,
Are the most perfect idols <sup>2</sup> of the moon,
Or still-unwean'd sweet moon-calves with white faces,

Not only are patterns of change to men,
But, as the tender moonshine of their beauties
Clears or is cloudy, make men glad or sad ; 20
So then they rule in men, not men in them.

MONS. But here the moons are chang'd, as the King notes,

And either men rule in them, or some power
Beyond their voluntary faculty,<sup>3</sup>
For nothing can recover their lost faces.

MONT.<sup>4</sup> None can be always one ; our griefs and joys

Hold several sceptres in us, and have times
For their divided empires ; which <sup>5</sup> grief now, in them

Doth prove as proper to his diadem.

BUS. And grief's a natural sickness of the blood, 30

That time to part asks, as his coming had ;
Only slight fools griev'd suddenly are glad.
A man may say t' a dead man, " Be reviv'd,"
As well as to one sorrowful, " Be not griev'd ; "

And therefore, princely mistress,<sup>6</sup> in all wars Against these base foes that insult on weak-
ness,

And still fight hous'd behind the shield of Nature,

Of privilege, law, treachery, or beastly need,
Your servant cannot help ; authority here Goes with corruption : something like some states, 40

That back worst men ; valor to them must creep

That, to themselves left, would fear him asleep.

DUCH. Ye all take that for granted that doth rest

Yet to be prov'd ; we all are as we were,
As merry and as free in thought as ever.

GUISE. And why then can ye not disclose your thoughts?

TAM. Methinks the man hath answer'd for us well.

MONS. The man? Why, madam, d'ye not know his name?

TAM. Man is a name of honor for a king ;
Additions<sup>7</sup> take away from each chief thing ;
The school of modesty not to learn learns dames : 51

They sit in high forms<sup>8</sup> there, that know men's names.

MONS. [to Bussy] Hark ! sweetheart, here's a bar set to your valor ;

It cannot enter here ; no, not to notice

Of what your name is. Your great eagle's beak,

Should you fly at her, had as good encounter
An Albion cliff, as her more craggy liver.<sup>9</sup>

BUS. I'll not attempt her, sir ; her sight and name,

By which I only know her, doth deter me. 59

HEN. So do they all men else.

MONS. You would say so<sup>10</sup>

If you knew all.

TAM. Knew all, my Lord? What mean
you?

MONS. All that I know, madam.

TAM. That you know? Speak it.

MONS. No, 't is enough I feel it.

HEN. But, methinks

Her courtship is more pure than heretofore ;
True courtiers should be modest, and not nice ;<sup>11</sup>

<sup>9</sup> The seat of love. There is also an allusion to the myth of Prometheus.

Bold, but not impudent ; pleasure love, not vice.

MONS. [aside to Bussy] Sweetheart ! come hither, what if one should make Horns at Montsurry? Would it not strike him jealous

Through all the proofs of his chaste lady's virtues?

BUS. [aside to MONSIEUR] If he be wise,
not. 70

MONS. [aside to Bussy] What? Not if I should name the gardener

That I would have him think hath grafted
him?

BUS. [aside to MONSIEUR] So the large licence that your greatness uses
To jest at all men may be taught indeed
To make a difference of the grounds you play
on,

Both in the men you scandal, and the matter.

MONS. [aside to Bussy] As how? as how?

BUS. [aside to MONSIEUR] Perhaps led with a train<sup>12</sup>

Where you may have your nose made less and slit,

Your eyes thrust out.

MONS. [aside to Bussy] Peace, peace, I pray thee peace. 79

Who dares do that? The brother of his king?

BUS. [aside to MONSIEUR] Were your king-brother in you ; all your powers (Stretch'd in the arms of great men and their bawds),

Set close down by you ; all your stormy laws
Spouted with lawyers' mouths, and gushing
blood

Like to so many torrents ; all your glories
Making you terrible, like enchanted flames
Fed with bare cockscombs and with crooked hams ;

All your prerogatives, your shames, and tor-
tures ;

All daring Heaven, and opening hell about
you :

Were I the man ye wrong'd so and provok'd.
Though ne'er so much beneath you, like a box tree<sup>13</sup> 91

I would out of the [toughness]<sup>14</sup> of my root
Ram hardness, in my lowness, and like death Mounted on earthquakes, I would trot through all

Honors and horrors, thorough foul and fair,

<sup>14</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub> ; Q 1641 roughness.

And from your whole strength toss you into the air.

MONS. [aside to Bussy] Go, th' art a devil ; such another spirit

Could not be still'd from all th' Armenian dragons.

O my love's glory ! Heir to all I have,
(That's all I can say, and that all I swear) 100
If thou outlive me, as I know thou must,
Or else hath nature no proportion'd end
To her great labors ; she hath breath'd a mind
Into thy entrails, of desert to swell
Into another great Augustus Cæsar,
Organs and faculties fitted to her greatness ;
And should that perish like a common spirit,
Nature's a courtier and regards no merit.

HEN. Here's naught but whispering with us ; like a calm

Before a tempest, when the silent air 110
Lays her soft ear close to the earth to hearken
For that she fears steals on to ravish her ;
Some fate doth join our ears to hear it coming.
Come, my brave eagle, let's to covert fly ;
I see almighty Aether in the smoke
Of all his clouds descending ; and the sky
Hid in the dim ostents<sup>15</sup> of tragedy.

Exit HENRY with D'AMBOIS and Ladies.

GUISE. Now stir the humor, and begin the brawl.

MONT. The King and D'Ambois now are grown all one.

MONS. Nay, they are two,<sup>16</sup> my Lord.

MONT. How's that ?

MONS. No more. 120

MONT. I must have more, my Lord.

MONS. What, more than two ?

MONT. How monstrous is this !

MONS. Why ?

MONT. You make me horns.

MONS. Not I ; it is a work without my power ;

Married men's ensigns are not made with fingers ;

Of divine fabric they are, not men's hands.
Your wife, you know, is a mere<sup>17</sup> Cynthia,<sup>18</sup>
And she must fashion horns out of her nature.

MONT. But doth she — dare you charge her ? Speak, false prince.

MONS. I must not speak, my Lord ; but if you'll use

<sup>18</sup> A double allusion to Diana as goddess of chastity and as the horned moon.

The learning of a nobleman, and read, 130
Here's something to those points ; soft, you must pawn<sup>19</sup>

Your honor having read it to return it.

Enter TAMYRA [and] PERO.

MONT. Not I. I pawn mine honor for a paper !

MONS. You must not buy it under.

Exeunt GUISE and MONSIEUR.

MONT. Keep it then,

And keep fire in your bosom.

TAM. What says he ?

MONT. You must make good the rest.

TAM. How fares my Lord ?

Takes my love anything to heart, he says ?

MONT. Come y' are a —

TAM. What, my Lord ?

MONT. The plague of Herod<sup>20</sup>
Feast in his rotten entrails.

TAM. Will you wreak

Your anger's just cause given by him, on me ? 140

MONT. By him ?

TAM. By him, my Lord. I have admir'd<sup>21</sup>
You could all this time be at concord with him,
That still hath play'd such discords on your honor.

MONT. Perhaps 't is with some proud<sup>22</sup> string of my wife's.

TAM. How's that, my Lord ?

MONT. Your tongue will still admire,
Till my head be the miracle of the world.

TAM. Oh, woe is me !

She seems to swoond.

PERO. What does your Lordship mean ? —
Madam, be comforted ; my Lord but tries you.
Madam ! — Help, good my Lord, are you not mov'd ?

Do your set looks print in your words your thoughts ? 150

Sweet Lord, clear up those eyes, [for shame of noblesse,]<sup>23</sup>

Unbend that masking forehead ; whence is it
You rush upon her with these Irish wars,<sup>24</sup>

<sup>24</sup> They are not mentioned in Q<sub>1</sub>. Parrott dates the revision of the play shortly after the Irish troubles of 1607 and 1608, since thereafter Ireland was at peace till after Chapman's death. Q<sub>1</sub> (for ll. 152-154), Mercurial creature ; but it is enough.

More full of sound than hurt? But it is enough ;
You have shot home ; your words are in her
heart ;
She has not liv'd to bear a trial now.

MONT. Look up, my love, and by this kiss receive

My soul amongst thy spirits for supply
To thine, chas'd with my fury.

TAM. Oh, my Lord,
I have too long liv'd to hear this from you. 160

MONT. 'T was from my troubled blood, and not from me. —

[aside] I know not how I fare ; a sudden night Flows through my entrails, and a headlong chaos

Murmurs within me, which I must digest,
And not drown her in my confusions,
That was my life's joy, being best inform'd.<sup>25</sup>— Sweet, you must needs forgive me, that my
love,

Like to a fire disdaining his suppression, Rag'd being discourag'd ; my whole heart is wounded 169

When any least thought in you is but touch'd,
And shall be till I know your former merits,
Your name and memory, altogether crave
In just oblivion their eternal grave ;
And then, you must hear from me, there's no
mean

In any passion I shall feel for you.
Love is a razor, cleansing being well us'd,
But fetcheth blood still being the least abus'd.
To tell you briefly all : the man that left
me

When you appear'd, did turn me worse than
woman,
And stabb'd me to the heart thus, with his fingers. 180

TAM. Oh, happy woman ! Comes my stain from him ?

It <sup>26</sup> is my beauty, and that innocence proves
That slew Chimaera, rescued Peleus
From all the savage beasts in Pelion,
And rais'd the chaste Athenian prince <sup>27</sup> from hell ;

All suffering with me, they for women's lusts,
I for a man's, that the Augean stable
Of his foul sin would empty in my lap.
How his guilt shunn'd me, sacred innocence

<sup>25</sup> When I am not reduced to chaos by suspicion.

<sup>27</sup> Bellerophon (who slew the Chimaera), Peleus, and Hippolytus (whom Aesculapius restored to earth) all rejected adulterous advances by women.

That where thou fear'st, art dreadful ! <sup>28</sup> and
his face 190

Turn'd in flight from thee, that had thee in chase !

Come, bring me to him ; I will tell the serpent
Even to his venom'd teeth, from whose curs'd seed

A pitch'd field starts up 'twixt my lord and me,<sup>29</sup>

That his throat lies, and he shall curse his fingers,

For being so govern'd by his filthy soul.

MONT. I know not if himself, will vaunt
t' have been

The princely author of the slavish sin,
Or any other ; he would have resolv'd <sup>30</sup> me
Had you not come ; not by his word, but writing, 200

Would I have sworn to give it him again,
And pawn'd mine honor to him for a paper.

TAM. See how he flies me still ; 't is a foul
heart

That fears his own hand.<sup>31</sup> Good my Lord, make haste

To see the dangerous paper ; papers hold
Ofttimes the forms and copies of our souls,
And, though the world despise them, are the prizes

Of all our honors ; make your honor then
A hostage for it, and with it confer
My nearest woman here, in all she knows ; 210
Who, if the sun or Cerberus could have seen Any stain in me, might as well as they ;
And, Pero, here I charge thee by my love,
And all proofs of it, which I might call bounties,
By all that thou hast seen seem good in me,
And all the ill which thou shouldst spit from
thee,

By pity of the wound this touch hath given me,
Not as thy mistress now, but a poor woman
To death given over, rid me of my pains, 219
Pour on thy powder, clear thy breast of me.
My Lord is only here ; here speak thy worst :
Thy best will do me mischief. If thou spar'st
me,

Never shine good thought on thy memory !
Resolve my Lord, and leave me desperate.

PERO. My Lord ! My Lord hath play'd a prodigal's part,

To break his stock for nothing ; and an insolent,

<sup>28</sup> Inspirest terror even in those of whom thou art afraid. (Boas.)

To cut a gordian when he could not loose it.
What violence is this, to put true fire
To a false train? to blow up long-crown'd
peace

With sudden outrage, and believe a man 230
Sworn to the shame of women, 'gainst a
woman,

Born to their honors? But I will to him.

TAM. No, I will write (for I shall never more Meet with the fugitive) where I will defy him,
Were he ten times the brother of my king.
To him, my Lord, and I'll to cursing him.

Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>32</sup>

Enter D'AMBOIS and FRIAR.

BUS. I am suspicious, my most honor'd
father,

By some of Monsieur's cunning passages,
That his still ranging and contentious nostrils,
To scent the haunts of Mischief, have so us'd
The vicious virtue of his busy sense,
That he trails hotly of him,<sup>33</sup> and will rouse
him,

Driving him all enrag'd and foaming on us;
And therefore have entreated your deep skill
In the command of good aërial spirits,
To assume these magic rites, and call up one 11
To know if any have reveal'd unto him
Anything touching my dear love and me.

FR. Good son, you have amaz'd me but to make

The least doubt of it, it concerns so nearly
The faith and reverence of my name and order.
Yet will I justify, upon my soul,
All I have done. If any spirit i' th' earth or air

Can give you the resolve,<sup>34</sup> do not despair.

[They retire.]

Music: and TAMYRA enters with PERO, her maid, bearing a letter.

TAM. Away, deliver it. Exit PERO.

— Oh, may my lines,

Fill'd with the poison of a woman's hate, 20
When he shall open them shrink up his curs'd
eyes

With torturous darkness, such as stands in hell,
Stuck full of inward horrors, never lighted,
With which are all things to be fear'd, affrighted. — <sup>35</sup>

BUS. [advancing] <sup>36</sup> How is it with my hon-or'd mistress?

TAM. Oh, servant, help, and save me from the gripes

Of shame and infamy. Our love is known;
Your Monsieur hath a paper where is writ
Some secret tokens that decipher it.

BUS. What cold, dull northern brain, what fool but he 30

Durst take into his Epimethean <sup>37</sup> breast
A box of such plagues as the danger yields Incurr'd in this discovery? He had better Ventur'd his breast in the consuming reach

Of the hot surfeits cast out of the clouds,
Or stood the bullets that, to wreak the sky,<sup>38</sup>

The Cyclops ram in Jove's artillery.<sup>39</sup>

FRIAR. We soon will take the darkness from his face

That did that deed of darkness; we will know What now the Monsieur and your husband
do, 40

What is contain'd within the secret paper
Offer'd by Monsieur, and your love's events:
To which ends, honor'd daughter, at your motion,

I have put on these exorcising rites,
And, by my power of learned holiness
Vouchsaf'd me from above, I will command
Our resolution of <sup>40</sup> a raised spirit.

TAM. Good father, raise him in some beau-teous form

That with least terror I may brook his sight.

FRIAR. Stand sure together, then, whate'er
you see; 50

And stir not, as ye tender all our lives.

He puts on his robes.

Occidentalium legionum spiritualium imperator (magnus ille Behemoth) veni, veni, comitatus cum Asarothe locotenente invicto. Adjuvo te per Stygis inscrutabilia arcana, per ipsos irremeabiles anfractus Averni: adesto o Behemoth, tu cui pervia sunt Magnatum scrinia; veni, per Noctis & tenebrarum abdita profundissima; per labentia sydera; per ipsos motus horarum furtivos, Hecatesque altum silentium! Appare in [60

forma spiritali, lucente, splendida, & amabili.<sup>41</sup>

Thunder. Ascendit [BEHEMOTH with

CARTOPHYLAX<sup>42</sup> and other spirits].

BEH. What would the holy Friar?

FRIAR.

I would see

What now the Monsieur and Montsurry do,

And see the secret paper that the Monsieur

Offer'd to Count Montsurry, longing much

To know on what events the secret loves

Of these two honor'd persons shall arrive.

BEH. Why call'dst thou me to this accursed
light

To these light purposes? I am emperor

Of that inscrutable darkness where are hid 70

All deepest truths and secrets never seen,

All which I know; and command legions

Of knowing spirits that can do more than these.

Any of this my guard that circle me

In these blue fires, and out of whose dim fumes

Vast murmurs use to break, and from their sounds

Articulate voices, can do ten parts more

Than open such slight truths as you require.

FRIAR. From the last night's black depth I call'd up one

Of the inferior ablest ministers, 80

And he could not resolve me. Send one then

Out of thine own command, to fetch the paper

That Monsieur hath to show to Count Mont-
surry.

BEH. I will. — Cartophylax, thou that properly

Hast in thy power all papers so inscrib'd,

Glide through all bars to it and fetch that paper.

CAR. I will.

A Torch removes.

FRIAR. Till he returns, great Prince of darkness,

Tell me if Monsieur and the Count Montsurry
Are yet encounter'd?

BEH. Both them and the Guise
Are now together.

FRIAR. Show us all their persons, [90

And represent the place, with all their actions.

BEH. The spirit will straight return, and then I'll show thee. [A Torch returns.]

<sup>41</sup> Emperor of the legions of the western spirits, great Behemoth, come, come, attended by [Ash-toreth], thy unconquered lieutenant. I adjure thee by the Styx's inscrutable secrets, by the windings of Avernus, whence there is no return, appear, O Behemoth, thou unto whom are accessible the letter-files of the great. Come! — by the hidden deeps of Night and of the infernal regions, by the wandering stars, by the stealthy motion of the hours, and the deep silence of Hecate! Appear in the form of a spirit, bright, resplendent, and amiable.

See, he is come. — Why brought'st thou not the paper?

CAR. He hath prevented me, and got a spirit

Rais'd by another, great in our command,<sup>43</sup>

To take the guard of it before I came.

BEH. This is your slackness, not t' invoke our powers

When first your acts set forth to their effects;

Yet shall you see it and themselves. Behold

They come here, and the Earl now holds the paper. 100

Enter MONSIEUR, GUISE, [and] MONTSURRY with a paper.

BUS. May we not hear them?

[FRIAR.]<sup>44</sup> No, be still and see.

BUS. I will go fetch the paper.

FRIAR.

Do not stir;

There's too much distance and too many locks

'Twixt you and them, how near soe'er they seem,

For any man to interrupt their secrets.

TAM. O honor'd spirit, fly into the fancy

Of my offended lord, and do not let him

Believe what there the wicked man hath written.

BEH. Persuasion hath already enter'd him
Beyond reflection; peace till their departure!

MONS. There is a glass of ink<sup>45</sup> where you may see 111

How to make ready black-fac'd tragedy.

You now discern, I hope, through all her paintings,

Her gasping wrinkles and fame's sepulchres.<sup>46</sup>

GUISE. Think you he feigns, my Lord?

What hold you now?

Do we malign your wife, or honor you?

MONS. What, stricken dumb! Nay fie,
Lord, be not daunted;

Your case is common; were it ne'er so rare,

Bear it as rarely. Now to laugh were manly.

A worthy man should imitate the weather, [120

That sings in tempests, and being clear is silent.

GUISE. Go home, my Lord, and force your wife to write

Such loving lines to D'Ambois as she us'd

When she desir'd his presence.

MONS.

Do, my Lord,

And make her name her conceal'd messenger,
That close and most inenarrable <sup>47</sup> pander,
That passeth all our studies to exquire ; <sup>48</sup>
By whom convey the letter to her love.
And so you shall be sure to have him come
Within the thirsty reach of your revenge ; 130
Before which, lodge an ambush in her chamber,
Behind the arras, of your stoutest men
All close and soundly arm'd ; and let them share
A spirit amongst them that would serve a thousand.

Enter PERO with a letter.

GUISE. Yet stay a little ; see, she sends for
you.

MONS. Poor, loving lady ; she'll make all good yet,

Think you not so, my Lord ?

Exit MONTSURRY and stabs PERO.

GUISE. Alas, poor soul !

MONS. That was cruelly done, i' faith.

PERO. 'T was nobly done.
And I forgive his Lordship from my soul.

MONS. Then much good do't thee, Pero !
Hast a letter ? 140

PERO. I hope it rather be a bitter volume
Of worthy curses for your perjury.

GUISE. To you, my Lord.

MONS. To me ? Now, out upon her.

GUISE. Let me see, my Lord.

MONS. You shall presently. How fares my Pero ?

Enter Servant.

Who's there ? Take in this maid — sh'as caught a clap ;

And fetch my surgeon to her. Come, my
Lord,

We'll now peruse our letter.

*Exeunt MONSIEUR [and] GUISE.
Lead her out.*

PERO. Furies rise
Out of the black lines, and torment his soul.

TAM. Hath my Lord slain my woman ?

BEH. No, she lives. 150

FRIAR. What shall become of us ?

BEH. All I can say,

Being call'd thus late, is brief, and darkly this :
If D'Ambois' mistress dye not [her] <sup>49</sup> white
hand

In her forc'd blood, he shall remain untouch'd ;
So, father, shall yourself, but by yourself.

To make this augury plainer : when the voice
Of D'Ambois shall invoke me, I will rise,
Shining in greater light, and show him all
That will betide ye all. Meantime be wise,
And curb his valor with your policies. 160

Descendit cum suis.

BUS. Will he appear to me when I invoke
him ?

FRIAR. He will, be sure.

BUS. It must be shortly then ;
For his dark words have tied my thoughts on knots,

Till he dissolve and free them.

TAM. In meantime,
Dear servant, till your powerful voice revoke
him, <sup>50</sup>

Be sure to use the policy he advis'd ;
Lest fury in your too quick knowledge taken
Of our abuse, and your defence of me,
Accuse me more than any enemy.

And, father, you must on my Lord impose 170
Your holiest charges, and the Church's power,
To temper his hot spirit and disperse
The cruelty and the blood I know his hand
Will shower upon our heads, if you put not
Your finger to the storm, and hold it up,
As my dear servant here must do with Monsieur.

BUS. I'll soothe his plots, and strow my hate with smiles,

Till all at once the close mines of my heart
Rise at full date, and rush into his blood.
I'll bind his arm in silk, and rub his flesh,
To make the vein swell, that his soul may gush
Into some kennel, <sup>51</sup> where it longs <sup>52</sup> to lie, 181
And policy shall be flank'd <sup>53</sup> with policy.
Yet shall the feeling <sup>54</sup> center <sup>55</sup> where we meet Groan with the weight of my approaching feet ;

I'll make th' inspired thresholds of his court
Sweat with the weather of my horrid steps,
Before I enter ; yet will I appear
Like calm security before a ruin.
A politician must, like lightning, melt
The very marrow, and not taint the skin ; 190
His ways must not be seen ; the superficies
Of the green center must not taste his feet,

<sup>54</sup> With a proleptic sense: Bussy's feet will make it feel.

When hell is plow'd up with his wounding tracts ;
And all his harvest reap'd by hellish facts.

Exeunt.

ACT V — SCENE I <sup>56</sup>

[Enter] MONTSURRY bare, unbrac'd, pulling TAMYRA in by the hair ; FRIAR ; [and] One bearing light, a standish,<sup>57</sup> and paper, which sets a table [and exit.]

TAM. Oh, help me, father.

FRIAR. Impious Earl, forbear.
Take violent hand from her, or by mine order
The King shall force thee.

MONT. 'T is not violent ;
Come you not willingly ?

TAM. Yes, good my Lord.

FRIAR. My Lord, remember that your soul must seek

Her peace, as well as your revengeful blood.<sup>58</sup>
You ever to this hour have prov'd yourself
A noble, zealous, and obedient son,
T' our Holy Mother ; be not an apostate.
Your wife's offence serves not, were it the worst 10

You can imagine, without greater proofs,
To sever your eternal bonds and hearts,
Much less to touch her with a bloody hand ;
Nor is it manly, much less husbandly,
To expiate any frailty in your wife
With churlish strokes or beastly odds of strength.

The stony birth of clouds<sup>59</sup> will touch no laurel,

Nor any sleeper ; your wife is your laurel,
And sweetest sleeper ; do not touch her then ;
Be not more rude than the wild seed of vapor,
To her that is more gentle than that<sup>60</sup> rude ; [21
In whom kind nature suffer'd one offence
But to set off her other excellence.

MONT. Good father, leave us ; interrupt no
more

The course I must run for mine honor sake.
Rely on my love to her, which her fault
Cannot extinguish. Will she but disclose
Who was the secret minister of her love,
And through what maze he serv'd it, we are
friends.

revenge.

FRIAR. It is a damn'd work to pursue those secrets 30

That would ope more sin, and prove springs of slaughter ;

Nor is 't a path for Christian feet to tread,
But out of all way to the health of souls ;

A sin impossible to be forgiven,
Which he that dares commit —

MONT. Good father, cease your terrors ;
Tempt not a man distracted ; I am apt
To outrages that I shall ever rue ;

I will not pass the verge that bounds a Christian,

Nor break the limits of a man nor husband.

FRIAR. Then [God] <sup>61</sup> inspire you both with thoughts and deeds 40

Worthy his high respect, and your own souls.

TAM. Father !

FRIAR. I warrant thee, my dearest
daughter,

He will not touch thee ; think'st thou him a pagan ?

His honor and his soul lies for thy safety.

Exit.

MONT. Who shall remove the mountain from my breast ?

Stand the opening<sup>62</sup> furnace of my thoughts,
And set fit outcries for a soul in hell ?

MONTSURRY turns a key.

For now it nothing fits my woes to speak

But thunder, or to take into my throat

The trump of Heaven, with whose determinate<sup>63</sup> blasts 50

The winds shall burst and the devouring seas

Be drunk up in his sounds ; that my hot woes,

Vented enough, I might convert to vapor,

Ascending from my infamy unseen ;

Shorten the world, preventing the last breath<sup>64</sup>

That kills the 'iving and regenerates death.<sup>65</sup>

TAM. My Lord, my fault, as you may censure<sup>66</sup> it

With too strong arguments, is past your pardon ;

But how the circumstances may excuse me

[God] knows, and your more temperate mind hereafter 60

May let my penitent miseries make you know.

MONT. Hereafter ? 'T is a suppos'd infinite,

That from this point will rise eternally.

Fame grows in going ; in the scapes<sup>67</sup> of virtue

Excuses damn her : they be fires in cities
Enrag'd with those winds that less lights extinguish.

Come, siren, sing, and dash against my rocks
Thy ruffian galley,<sup>68</sup> rigg'd with quench for<sup>69</sup>
lust ;

Sing, and put all the nets into thy voice
With which thou drew'st into thy strumpet's lap 70

The spawn of Venus ; and in which ye danc'd<sup>70</sup> ;

That, in thy lap's stead, I may dig his tomb,
And quit his manhood with a woman's sleight,
Who never is deceiv'd in her deceit.

Sing — that is, write, — and then take from mine eyes

The mists that hide the most inscrutable
pander

That ever lapp'd up an adulterous vomit,

That I may see the devil, and survive

To be a devil, and then learn to wive ;

That I may hang him, and then cut him down,

Then cut him up, and with my soul's beams
search 81

The cranks and caverns of his brain, and study

The errant wilderness of a woman's face ;

Where men cannot get out, for<sup>71</sup> all the comets<sup>72</sup>

That have been lighted at it ; though they
know

That adders lie a-sunning in their<sup>73</sup> smiles,

That basilisks drink their poison from their
eyes,

And no way there to coast out to their hearts ;

Yet still they<sup>74</sup> wander there,<sup>75</sup> and are not stay'd

Till they be fetter'd, nor secure before 90

All cares devour them, nor in human consort,<sup>76</sup>

Till they embrace within their wife's two breasts

All Pelion and Cythaeron with their beasts.

Why write you not ?

TAM. O good my Lord, forbear
In wreak of great faults, to engender greater,
And make my love's corruption generate murder.

MONT. It follows needfully as child and parent ;

<sup>70</sup> I.e., acted under the delusion that you were unobserved.

<sup>76</sup> Lacking human fellowship.

The chain-shot of thy lust is yet aloft,
And it must murder ; 't is thine own dear
twin :

No man can add height to a woman's sin. 100

Vice never doth her just hate so provoke

As when she rageth under virtue's cloak.

Write ! for it must be — by this ruthless steel,

By this impartial torture, and the death

Thy tyrannies have invented in my entrails,

To quicken life in dying, and hold up

The spirits in fainting, teaching to preserve

Torments in ashes, that will ever last.

Speak ! Will you write ?

TAM. Sweet Lord, enjoin my sin
Some other penance than what makes it
worse ; 110

Hide in some gloomy dungeon my loath'd face,

And let condemned murderers let me down,

Stopping their noses, my abhorred food ;

Hang me in chains, and let me eat these arms

That have offended ; bind me face to face

To some dead woman, taken from the cart

Of execution, till death and time

In grains of dust dissolve me : I'll endure ;

Or any torture that your wrath's invention

Can fright all pity from the world withal. 120

But to betray a friend with show of friendship,

That is too common for the rare revenge

Your rage affecteth. Here then are my breasts,

Last night your pillows ; here my wretched
arms,

As late the wished confines of your life ;

Now break them as you please, and all the bounds

Of manhood, noblesse, and religion.

MONT. Where all these have been broken, they are kept

In doing their justice there with any show

Of the like<sup>77</sup> cruelty ; thine arms have lost

Their privilege in lust, and in their torture [131

Thus they must pay it. Stabs her.

TAM. O Lord !

MONT. Till thou writ'st,

I'll write in wounds, my wrong's fit characters,

Thy right of sufferance. Write.

TAM. Oh, kill me, kill me ;
Dear husband, be not crueller than death.

You have beheld some Gorgon ; feel, oh, feel How you are turn'd to stone. With my heart-
blood

Dissolve yourself again, or you will grow

<sup>77</sup> Q 1441 inserts cruel, probably through the com-positor's blunder, as Parrott observes. Q<sub>1</sub> omits with . . . cruelty.

Into the image of all tyranny.

MONT. As thou art of adultery! I will ever 140
Prove thee my parallel, being most a monster;
Thus I express thee <sup>78</sup> yet. Stabs her again.

TAM. And yet I live.

MONT. Ay, for thy monstrous idol is not done yet; <sup>79</sup>
This tool hath wrought enough; now, torture,
use

Enter Servants [and put her on the rack].

This other engine on th' habituate powers
Of her thrice-damn'd and whorish fortitude.
Use the most madding pains in her that ever Thy venoms soak'd through, making most of death;
That she may weigh her wrongs with them,
and then Stand, Vengeance, on thy steepest rock, a victor.

TAM. Oh, who is turn'd into my lord and
husband? 151
Husband! My lord! None but my lord
and husband!
Heaven, I ask thee remission of my sins,
Not of my pains; husband, oh, help me, husband!

Ascendit FRIAR with a sword drawn.

FRIAR. What rape of honor and religion —
Oh, wrack of nature! Falls and dies.

TAM. Poor man; oh, my father.
Father, look up; oh, let me down, my Lord,
And I will write.

MONT. Author of prodigies!
What new flame breaks out of the firmament,
That turns up counsels never known before?
Now is it true earth moves and Heaven stands
still; 161
Even Heaven itself must see and suffer ill.
The too huge bias <sup>80</sup> of the world hath sway'd Her back part upwards, and with that she braves
This hemisphere, that long her mouth hath mock'd; <sup>81</sup>
The gravity of her religious face,

<sup>78</sup> I.e., by being monstrous, and so continuing to be a parallel to you.

<sup>81</sup> The world has reversed itself, so Montsurry concludes upon learning that the pander was the Friar; it has turned upside down; its back part now shows itself arrogantly to our side of the universe, which formerly the world's mouth had mocked
(by pretending virtue).

Now grown too weighty with her sacrilege
And here discern'd sophisticate enough,
Turns to th' antipodes; and all the forms
That her illusions have impress'd in her, 170
Have eaten through her back; and now all see

How she is riveted with <sup>82</sup> hypocrisy. —
Was this the way? Was he the mean betwixt
you?

TAM. He was, he was; kind, worthy man, he was.

MONT. Write, write a word or two.

TAM. I will, I will — [aside] I'll write, but with my blood, that he <sup>83</sup>
may see

These lines come from my wounds, and not from me. Writes.

MONT. Well might he <sup>84</sup> die for thought;
methinks the frame
And shaken joints of the whole world should crack

To see her parts so disproportionate; 180
And that his <sup>85</sup> general beauty cannot stand Without these stains in the particular man.
Why wander I so far? <sup>86</sup> Here, here was she
That was a whole world without spot to me, Though now a world of spots. Oh, what a lightning

Is man's delight in women! What a bubble
He builds his state, fame, life on, when he marries!

Since all earth's pleasures are so short and small,

The way t' enjoy it is t' abjure it all.
Enough! I must be messenger myself, 190
Disguis'd like this strange creature. — In, <sup>87</sup>
I'll after,

To see what guilty light gives this cave eyes,
And to the world sing new impieties.

He puts the FRIAR in the vault and follows. She wraps herself in the arras. <sup>88</sup> Exeunt [Servants].

[SCENE II] <sup>89</sup>

Enter MONSIEUR and GUISE.

MONS. Now shall we see that Nature hath no end

scene appears in Q<sub>1</sub> at the beginning of V, iv, with the omission of ll. 54–59 and the s. d. for Montsurry's entrance.

In her great works responsive <sup>90</sup> to their worths ;

That she, that makes so many eyes and souls
To see and foresee, is stark blind herself ;
And as illiterate men say Latin prayers
By rote of heart and daily iteration,
Not knowing what they say, <sup>91</sup> so Nature lays
A deal of stuff together, and by use,
Or by the mere necessity of matter,
Ends such a work, fills it, or leaves it empty 10
Of strength or virtue, error or clear truth,
Not knowing what she does ; but usually Gives that which [we call] <sup>92</sup> merit to a man,
And [believe should] <sup>93</sup> arrive him on <sup>94</sup> huge riches,

Honor, and happiness, that effects his ruin ;
Even as in ships of war, whose lasts <sup>95</sup> of powder

Are laid, men think, <sup>96</sup> to make them last, and guard [them], <sup>97</sup>

When a disorder'd spark, that powder taking,
Blows up with sudden violence and horror Ships that kept empty had <sup>98</sup> sail'd long, with terror. <sup>99</sup> 20

GUISE. He that observes, but like a worldly
man,

That which doth oft succeed, and by th' events
Values the worth of things, will think it true
That Nature works at random, just with you ;
But with as much proportion she may make
A thing that from the feet up to the throat
Hath all the wondrous fabric man should have,
And leave it headless, for a perfect man,
As give a full man valor, virtue, learning,
Without an end more excellent than those 30
On whom she no such worthy part bestows.

MONS. Yet shall you see it here <sup>100</sup> ; here will be one

Young, learned, valiant, virtuous, and full mann'd ;

*In whose hot zeale a man would thinke they knew
What they ranne so away with, and were sure
To have rewards proportion'd to their labours ;
Yet may implore their owne confusions
For anything they know, which oftentimes
It fals out they incurre.*

<sup>92</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub> ; Q 1641 she calls. As Parrott notes, Chapman corrected this speech but was misread by the printer ; the version of Q 1641 is unintelligible.

One on whom Nature spent so rich a hand
That with an ominous eye she wept to see
So much consum'd her virtuous treasury. <sup>1</sup>
Yet, as the winds sing through a hollow tree,
And, since it lets them pass through, lets it
stand ;

But a tree solid, since it gives no way
To their wild rage, they rend up by the root ;
So this whole man, <sup>41</sup>
That will not wind with every crooked way,
Trod by the servile world, shall reel and fall
Before the frantic puffs of blind-born chance,
That pipes through empty men, and makes them dance.

Not so the sea raves on the Lybian sands, <sup>2</sup>
Tumbling her billows in each other's neck ;
Not so the surges of the Euxine sea
Near to the frosty pole, where free Boötes
From those dark deep waves turns his radiant team, <sup>50</sup> Swell, being enrag'd even from their inmost drop,

As Fortune swings about the restless state
Of virtue, now thrown into all men's hate.

Enter MONTSURRY disguis'd, with the Murderers.

Away, my Lord, you are perfectly disguis'd ;
Leave us to lodge your ambush.

MONT. Speed me, vengeance. Exit.

MONS. Resolve, my masters, you shall meet with one

Will try what proofs your privy coats <sup>3</sup> are made on ;

When he is ent'red, and you hear us stamp,
Approach, and make all sure.

MURD. We will, my Lord. Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>4</sup> •

[Enter] D'AMBOIS, with two Pages with tapers.

BUS. Sit up to-night, and watch ; I'll speak with none

But the old Friar, who bring to me.

PAGES. We will, sir. Exeunt.

BUS. What violent heat is this? Methinks the fire

Of twenty lives doth on a sudden flash
Through all my faculties ; the air goes high
In this close chamber, and the frighted earth
Thunder.

Trembles, and shrinks beneath me ; the whole
Nods with his <sup>5</sup> shaken burthen. —

Enter UMBRA FRIAR.

Bless me, Heaven !

UMB. Note what I want, dear son, and be forewarn'd ;

Oh, there are bloody deeds past and to come.
I cannot stay ; a fate doth ravish me ; 11
I'll meet thee in the chamber of thy love.

Exit.

BUS. What dismal change is here ; the good old Friar

Is murder'd, being made known to serve my
love ;

And now his restless spirit would forewarn me
Of some plot dangerous and imminent.

Note what he wants ? He wants his upper weed,<sup>6</sup>

He wants his life and body ; which of these Should be the want he means, and may supply
me

With any fit forewarning ? This strange vision, 20

Together with the dark prediction

Us'd by the Prince of Darkness that was rais'd

By this embodied shadow,<sup>7</sup> stir my thoughts
With reminiscion of the spirit's promise,
Who told me that by any invocation
I should have power to raise him, though it wanted

The powerful words and decent rites of art.
Never had my set <sup>8</sup> brain such need of spirit T' instruct and cheer it ; now, then, I will claim

Performance of his free and gentle vow 30
T' appear in greater light, and make more plain
His rugged oracle. I long to know
How my dear mistress fares, and be inform'd
What hand she now holds on the troubled blood<sup>9</sup>

Of her incensed lord. Methought the spirit,
When he had utter'd his perplex'd presage Threw his chang'd countenance headlong into clouds ;

His forehead bent, as it would hide his face,
He knock'd his chin against his dark'ned
breast,

has donned.)

And struck a churlish silence through his powers. 40

Terror of darkness ! O thou king of flames !<sup>10</sup>
That with thy music-footed horse dost strike
The clear light out of crystal on dark earth,
And hurl'st instructive fire about the world,
Wake, wake the drowsy and enchanted night,
That sleeps with dead eyes in this heavy riddle !

Or thou great prince of shades, where never sun

Sticks his far-darted beams, whose eyes are made

To shine in darkness, and see ever best

Where men are blindest, open now the
heart 50

Of thy abashed oracle, that, for fear
Of some ill it includes, would fain lie hid,
And rise thou with it in thy greater light.

Thunders. Surgit Spiritus cum suis.

[BEH.]<sup>11</sup> Thus to observe my vow of apparition

In greater light, and explicate thy fate,

I come ; and tell thee that if thou obey

The summons that thy mistress next will send
thee,

Her hand shall be thy death.

BUS.

When will she send ?

BEH. Soon as I set again, where late I rose.

BUS. Is the old Friar slain ?

BEH. No, and yet lives not. [60

BUS. Died he a natural death ?

BEH.

He did.

BUS.

Who then

Will my dear mistress send ?

BEH.

I must not tell thee.

BUS. Who lets<sup>12</sup> thee ?

BEH.

Fate.

BUS.

Who are Fate's ministers ?

BEH.

The Guise and Monsieur.

BUS.

A fit pair of shears

To cut the threads of kings and kingly spirits,
And consorts fit to sound forth harmony,

Set to the falls of kingdoms. Shall the hand

Of my kind mistress kill me ?

BEH.

If thou yield

To her next summons. Y'are fair-warn'd ;
farewell !

Thunders. Exit [cum suis].

BUS. I must fare well, however, though I
die,

My death consenting<sup>13</sup> with his augury. 71

<sup>13</sup> If my death agrees.

Should not my powers obey when she commands,

My motion must be rebel to my will,
My will to life ; if, when I have obey'd,
Her hand should so reward me, they must arm it,

Bind me or force it ; or, I lay my life,
She rather would convert it many times
On her own bosom, even to many deaths.
But were there danger of such violence,
I know 't is far from her intent to send ; 80
And who she should send is as far from thought,
Since he is dead, whose only mean she us'd. —

Knocks.
Who's there? Look to the door, and let him in,
Though politic Monsieur or the violent Guise.

Enter MONTSURRY, like the Friar, with a letter written in blood.

MONT. Hail to my worthy son.

BUS. Oh, lying spirit,
To say the Friar was dead ! I'll now believe
Nothing of all his forg'd predictions. —
My kind and honor'd father, well reviv'd ;
I have been frighted with your death and mine,
And told my mistress' hand should be my death

If I obey'd this summons.

MONT. I believ'd 91
Your love had been much clearer than to give Any such doubt a thought, for she is clear ;
And having freed her husband's jealousy,
Of which her much abus'd hand here is witness,
She prays, for urgent cause, your instant presence.

BUS. Why, then your prince of spirits may be call'd

The prince of liars.

MONT. Holy Writ so calls him.

BUS. What, writ in blood?

MONT. Ay, 't is the ink of lovers.

BUS. Oh 't is a sacred witness of her love.
So much elixir of her blood as this 101
Dropp'd in the lightest dame, would make her firm

As heat to fire ; and, like to all the signs,<sup>14</sup>
Commands the life confin'd in all my veins.
Oh, how it multiplies my blood with spirit,
And makes me apt t' encounter death and hell. —

But come, kind father, you fetch me to Heaven,

<sup>14</sup> Of the heavenly bodies.

And to that end your holy weed was given.
Exeunt.

[SCENE IV]<sup>15</sup>

Thunder. Intrat UMBRA FRIAR, and discovers TAMYRA.<sup>16</sup>

UMB. Up with these stupid thoughts, still loved daughter,
And strike away this heartless trance of anguish.

Be like the sun, and labor in eclipses ;
Look to the end of woes : oh, can you sit Mustering the horrors of your servant's slaughter

Before your contemplation, and not study
How to prevent it? Watch when he shall rise,
And with a sudden outcry of his murder,
Blow<sup>17</sup> his retreat before he be revenged.

TAM. O father, have my dumb woes wak'd your death? 10
When will our human griefs be at their height?
Man is a tree that hath no top in cares,
No root in comforts ; all his power to live
Is given to no end, but [t]<sup>18</sup> have power to grieve.

UMB. It is the misery of our creation. Your true friend,<sup>19</sup>
Led by your husband, shadowed in my weed,
Now enters the dark vault.

TAM. But, my dearest father,
Why will not you appear to him yourself,
And see that none of these deceits annoy him?

UMB. My power is limited ; alas ! I cannot.
All that I can do — see, the cave opens. 21

Exit. D'AMBOIS at the gulf.

TAM. Away, my love, away ; thou wilt be murder'd !

Enter MONSIEUR and GUISE above.

BUS. Murder'd? I know not what that Hebrew means :
That word had ne'er been nam'd had all been D'Ambois.

*'Tis the just curse of our abus'd creation,
Which wee must suffer heere, and scape heereafter:
He hath the great mind that submits to all
He sees inevitable; he the small
That carps at earth, and her foundation shaker,
And rather than himselfe, will mend his maker.*

Murder'd? By Heaven he is my murderer That shows me not a murderer; what such bug<sup>20</sup>

Abhorreth not the very sleep of D'Ambois?
Murder'd? Who dares give all the room I see
To D'Ambois' reach? or look with any odds
His fight i' th' face, upon whose hand sits
death, 30
Whose sword hath wings, and every feather pierceth?

If I scape Monsieur's 'pothecary shops,
Foutre<sup>21</sup> for Guise's shambles! 'T was ill
plotted;

They should have maul'd me here,
When I was rising. I am up and ready.
Let in my politic visitants, let them in,
Though ent'ring like so many moving armors, Fate is more strong than arms and sly than treason,

And I at all parts buckl'd in my fate.

MONS. } [aside] Why enter not the coward
GUISE. } villains? 40

BUS. Dare they not come?

Enter Murderers, with [UMBRA] FRIAR at the other door.

TAM. They come.

1 MUR. Come all at once.

UMB. Back, coward murderers, back.

OMN. Defend us, Heaven.

Exeunt all but the First.

1 MUR. Come ye not on?

BUS. No, slave, nor goest thou off. —

[Thrusts at him.]

Stand you so firm? Will it not enter here? <sup>22</sup>

You have a face yet. — So! [Kills him.] — In thy life's flame,

I burn the first rites to my mistress' fame.

UMB. Breathe thee, brave son, against the other charge.

BUS. Oh, is it true then that my sense first told me?

Is my kind father dead?

TAM. He is, my love.

'T was the Earl, my husband, in his weed that brought thee. 50

BUS. That was a speeding sleight,<sup>23</sup> and well resembled.

Where is that angry Earl? — My Lord, come
forth

And show your own face in your own affair;
Take not into your noble veins the blood
Of these base villains, nor the light reports
Of blister'd tongues for clear and weighty
truth:

But me against the world, in pure defence
Of your rare lady, to whose spotless name
I stand here as a bulwark, and project
A life to her renown, that ever yet 60
Hath been untainted, even in envy's eye,
And, where it would protect, a sanctuary.
Brave Earl, come forth, and keep your scandal in;

'T is not our fault if you enforce the spot,<sup>24</sup>
Nor the wreak yours if you perform it not.

Enter MONTSURRY, with all the Murderers.<sup>25</sup>

MONT. Cowards, a fiend or spirit beat ye off!

They are your own faint spirits that have forg'd

The fearful shadows that your eyes deluded.
The fiend was in you; cast him out then, thus.

D'AMBOIS hath MONTSURRY down.

TAM. Favor my Lord, my love, oh, favor him! 70

BUS. I will not touch him. — Take your life, my Lord,

And be appeas'd. — Pistols shot within.

Oh, then the coward Fates

Have maim'd themselves, and ever lost their honor.

UMB. What have ye done, slaves? — Ir-religious lord!

BUS. Forbear them, father; 't is enough for me

That Guise and Monsieur, death and destiny,
Come behind D'Ambois. — Is my body, then,

But penetrable flesh? And must my mind
Follow my blood? Can my divine part add
No aid to th' earthly in extremity? 80

Then these divines are but for form, not fact.<sup>26</sup>
Man is of two sweet courtly friends compact,

A mistress and a servant; <sup>27</sup> let my death
Define life nothing but a courtier's breath.

Nothing is made of nought, of all things made,
Their abstract being a dream but of a shade.

Nay, without help, in which I will exceed him ;
For he died splinted with his chamber grooms.
Prop me, true sword, as thou hast ever done ;
The equal thought I bear of life and death
Shall make me faint on no side ; I am up.
Here like a Roman statue I will stand
Till death hath made me marble. O my fame,
Live in despite of murder ; take thy wings
And haste thee where the grey-ey'd morn perfumes

Her rosy chariot with Sabaeen spices ; 100
Fly where the evening from th' Iberian vales
Takes on her swarthy shoulders Hecate, Crown'd with a grove of oaks ; fly where men feel

The burning axletree ; and those that suffer
Beneath the chariot of the snowy Bear ;
And tell them all that D'Ambois now is hast-

To the eternal dwellers, that a thunder
Of all their sighs together (for their frailties Beheld in me) may quit my worthless <sup>28</sup> fall
With a fit volley for my funeral. 110

Take it, and only give it motion,
And it shall find the way to victory

Now let me pray you that my weighty blood
Laid in one scale of your impartial spleen,
May sway the forfeit of my worthy love 120
Weigh'd in the other ; <sup>30</sup> and be reconcil'd
With all forgiveness to your matchless wife.

This killing spectacle, this prodigy.
My sun is turn'd to blood, in whose red beams
Pindus and Ossa, hid in drifts of snow
Laid on my heart and liver, from their veins
Melt like two hungry torrents, eating rocks
Into the ocean of all human life,
And make it bitter, only with my blood.<sup>31</sup>

Manlessly<sup>38</sup> digg'd in her, be eas'd and cur'd
With balm of thine own tears; or be assur'd
Never to rest free from my haunt and horror.

MONT. See how she merits this, still kneeling by,
And mourning his fall more than her own fault.

UMB. Remove, dear daughter, and content thy husband; 170
So piety wills thee, and thy servant's peace.

[Exit.]<sup>39</sup>

TAM. O wretched piety, that are so distract
In thine own constancy, and in thy right
Must be unrighteous. If I right my friend,
I wrong my husband; if his wrong I shun,
The duty of my friend I leave undone.
Ill plays on both sides; here and there it
riseth;

No place, no good, so good but ill compriseth.
[My soul more scruple breeds, than my blood,
sin.

Virtue imposeth more than any stepdame.]<sup>40</sup>
O had I never married but for form, 181
Never vow'd faith but purpos'd to deceive,
Never made conscience of any sin,
But cloak'd it privately and made it common,

Nor never honor'd been in blood or mind,
Happy had I been then, as others are
Of the like licence; I had then been honor'd;
Liv'd without envy; custom had benumb'd
All sense of scruple, and all note of frailty;
My fame had been untouch'd, my heart unbroken: 190

But, shunning all, I strike on all offence.
O husband! Dear friend! O my conscience!

Mons. Come, let's away; my senses are not proof
Against those plaints.

Exeunt GUISE [and] MONSIEUR;
D'AMBOIS is borne off.

MONT. I must not yield to pity, nor to
love.

So servile and so traitorous. Cease, my blood,<sup>41</sup>

To wrastle with my honor, fame, and judgment.—

Away! Forsake my house; forbear complaints

Where thou hast bred them: here all things [are]<sup>42</sup> full

Of their own shame and sorrow. Leave my house. 200

TAM. Sweet lord, forgive me, and I will be
gone;

And till these wounds, that never balm shall close

Till death hath enter'd at them, so I love them,
Being opened by your hands, by death be cur'd,
I never more will grieve you with my sight,
Never endure that any roof shall part
Mine eyes and Heaven, but to the open deserts,
Like to a hunted tigress, I will fly,
Eating my heart, shunning the steps of men,
And look on no side till I be arriv'd. 210

MONT. I do forgive thee, and upon my knees,

With hands held up to Heaven, wish that mine honor

Would suffer reconciliation to my love;
But since it will not, honor never serve
My love with flourishing object till it starve;<sup>43</sup>
And as this taper, though it upwards look, Downwards must needs consume, so let our
love;

As having lost his honey, the sweet taste
Runs into savor, and will needs retain
A spice of his first parents,<sup>44</sup> till, like life, 220
It sees and dies; so let our love; and lastly,
As when the flame is suffer'd to look up,
It keeps his lustre, but, being thus turn'd
down,

His natural course of useful light inverted,
His own stuff<sup>45</sup> puts it out; so let our love.
Now turn from me, as here I turn from thee,
And may both points of Heaven's straight axletree

Conjoin in one, before thyself and me.

Exeunt severally.

EPILOGUE<sup>46</sup>

WITH many hands you have seen D'Ambois
slain,

Yet by your grace he may revive again,
And every day grow stronger in his skill
To please, as we presume he is in will.
The best deserving actors of the time
Had their ascents, and by degrees did climb
To their full height, a place to study due.
To make him tread in their path lies in you;
He'll not forget his makers, but still prove
His thankfulness as you increase your love. 10

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

DEDICATED to Ben Jonson, with whom the author had recently broken a lance in the "Wars of the Theatres", Marston's masterpiece was first published in 1604. The source of its plot is unknown. Three editions appeared in 1604, the last being "Augmented by Marston" and containing "the Additions played by the King's Majesty's Servants. Written by John Webster." Professor E. E. Stoll has argued conclusively that, except for the induction, the additions are the work of Marston. To some extent they may be, as he believes, parts of the original text which had previously been cut for the stage; on the other hand, the Third Quarto, as Lucas points out, seems to represent a careful revision by Marston, who may well have had a hand in the expropriation of the play by the King's Men. They performed it, we may infer from Burbage's remarks in the induction, as a species of retaliation for the acting of one of their plays, probably The First Part of Jeronimo, by the Children of the Queen's Revels, at the Blackfriars, to whom The Malcontent had belonged.

When the latter play was written and originally produced it is impossible to say. Current opinion inclines to 1604; but Stoll argues for 1600 (John Webster, pp. 55-60), and (Modern Philology, III, 281-303) for the influence of Malevole upon Shakespeare's Hamlet and Jacques. This seems somewhat dubious, especially since Stoll points to Feliche in Marston's i Antonio and Mellida (1599) as exhibiting all the main features of Malevole. But that Marston was much influenced by Jonson there can be little question, though the splenetic moroseness of Malevole is less comic than Jonson's humors prior to 1604. Nor has it much in common with the genial crustiness of Jacques or the fantastic impudence of Hamlet's pretended madness. It may, however, as Stoll suggests, owe something to the Hamlet of Kyd.

The Malcontent is tragi-comedy, and stands halfway between Jonson's satiric comedy and the corrosive tragedy of Webster. As a play, it is full of effective situations, and exhibits in the Jonsonian fashion a gorgeous gallery of character portraits. Mendoza is one of the best examples of the Machiavellian villain; the weakness and amiability of the successful Pietro are skilfully contrasted with the force and scepticism of the deposed Altofronto; while in Bilioso and Maquerelle the courtiers of James I were treated to a scathing indictment which, bitter as it is, yet remains truly comic.

The standard edition of Marston's works is that of A. H. Bullen (1887). The Malcontent has been included in some editions of John Webster; it may be found entire in Dyce's, and Lucas reprints the induction in his. The present text is based on the Third Quarto, with a few restorations and corrections from the First.

TO THE READER

I AM an ill orator; and, in truth, use to indite more honestly than eloquently; for it is my custom to speak as I think, and write as I speak.

In plainness, therefore, understand that in some things I have willingly erred, as in supposing a Duke of Genoa, and in taking names different from that city's families; for which some may wittily accuse me, but my defence shall be as honest as many reproofs unto me have been most malicious; since, I heartily protest, it was my care to write so far from reasonable offence that even strangers, in whose state I laid my scene, should not from thence draw any disgrace to any, dead or living. Yet, in despite of my endeavors, I understand some have been most unadvisedly overcunning in misinterpreting me, and with subtlety as deep as hell have maliciously spread ill rumors, which, springing from themselves, might to themselves have heavily returned. Surely [10 I desire to satisfy every firm spirit, who, in all his actions, proposeth to himself no more ends than God and virtue do, whose intentions are always simple; to such I protest that, with my free understanding, I have not glanced at disgrace of any but of those whose unquiet studies labor innovation, contempt of holy policy, reverend comely superiority, and establish'd unity: for the rest of my supposed tartness, I fear not but unto every worthy mind it will be approved so general and honest as may modestly pass with the freedom of a satire. I would fain leave the paper; only one thing afflicts me, to think that scenes, invented merely to be spoken, should be enforcedly published to be read, and that the least hurt I can receive is to do myself the wrong. But, since others otherwise would do me more, the least inconvenience is to be accepted. I have myself, therefore, set forth this comedy; but so, that my enforced absence must much rely upon [20 the printer's discretion: but I shall entreat slight errors in orthography may be as slightly over-passed, and that the unhandsome shape which this trifle in reading presents may be pardoned for the pleasure it once afforded you when it was presented with the soul of lively action.

TO

THE MALCONTENT, AND THE ADDITIONS<sup>2</sup> ACTED BY THE KING'S MAJESTY'S SERVANTS

WRITTEN BY JOHN WEBSTER

Enter W. SLY,<sup>3</sup> a Tire-man following him with a stool.

TIRE-MAN. Sir, the gentlemen will be angry if you sit here.

SLY. Why, we may sit upon the stage at the private house.<sup>4</sup> Thou doest not take me for a country gentleman, doest? Doest think I fear hissing? I'll hold my life thou took'st me for one of the players.

TIRE-MAN. No, sir.

SLY. By God's slid, if you had, I would have given you but sixpence<sup>5</sup> for your [10 stool. Let them that have stale suits sit in the galleries. Hiss at me! He that will be laugh'd out of a tavern or an ordinary,<sup>6</sup> shall seldom feed well, or be drunk in good company. — Where's Harry Condell, Dick<sup>7</sup> Burb[al]dge, and Will<sup>8</sup> Sly? Let me speak with some of them.

TIRE-MAN. An't please you to go in, sir, you may.

SLY. I tell you, no; I am one that hath [20 seen this play often, and can give them intelligence for their action. I have most of the jests here in my table-book.<sup>9</sup>

Enter SINKLO.

SINKLO. Save you, coz!

SLY. Oh, cousin, come, you shall sit between my legs here.<sup>10</sup>

SINKLO. No, indeed, cousin: the audience then will take me for a viol-de-gamb[a], and think that you play upon me.

SLY. Nay, rather that I work upon you, [30 coz.

SINKLO. We stayed for you at supper last night at my cousin Honeymoon's, the woollen-draper. After supper we drew cuts for a score of apri-cocks, the longest cut still<sup>11</sup> to draw an apri-cock; by this light, 't was Mistress Frank Honeymoon's fortune still to have the longest cut—I did measure for the women. — What be these, coz?

Enter D. BURBADGE, H. CONDELL, and J. LOWIN.

SLY. The players. — God save you! 40

BURBADGE. You are very welcome.

SLY. I pray you, know this gentleman, my cousin; 't is Master Doomsday's son, the usurer.

CONDELL. I beseech you, sir, be cover'd.

SLY. No, in good faith, for mine ease. Look you, my hat's the handle to this fan.<sup>12</sup> God's so,<sup>13</sup> what a beast was I, I did not leave my feather at home! — Well, but I'll take an order with you. 50

Puts his feather in his pocket.

BURBADGE. Why do you conceal your feather, sir?

SLY. Why, do you think I'll have jests broken upon me in the play, to be laugh'd at? This play hath beaten all your gallants out of the feathers. Blackfriars hath almost spoil'd Blackfriars for feathers.<sup>14</sup>

SINKLO. God's so, I thought 't was for somewhat our gentlewomen at home coun-sell'd me to wear my feather to the play; [60 yet I am loth to spoil it.<sup>15</sup>

SLY. Why, coz?

SINKLO. Because I got it in the tilt-yard — there was a herald broke my pate for taking it up; but I have worn it up and down the Strand, and met him forty times since, and yet he dares not challenge it.

SLY. Do you hear, sir? this play is a bitter play.

CONDELL. Why, sir, 't is neither satire [70 nor moral, but the mean passage of a history; yet there are a sort of discontented creatures that bear a stingless envy to great ones, and these will wrest the doings of any man to their base, malicious applotment; <sup>16</sup> but should their interpretation come to the test, like your marmoset, they presently turn their teeth to their tail and eat it.

SLY. I will not go so far with you; but I say, any man that hath wit may censure,<sup>17</sup> [80 if he sit in the twelve-penny room; <sup>18</sup> and I say again, the play is bitter.

BURBADGE. Sir, you are like a patron that, presenting a poor scholar to a benefice, enjoins him not to rail against anything that stands within compass of his patron's folly. Why should not we enjoy the ancient freedom of poesy? Shall we protest to the ladies that their painting makes them angels? or to my young gallant that his expense in the [90 brothel shall gain him reputation? No, sir, such vices as stand not accountable to law should be cured as men heal tetter, by casting ink upon them. Would you be satisfied in anything else, sir?

SLY. Ay, marry, would I! I would know how you came by this play.

CONDELL. Faith, sir, the book was lost; and because 't was pity so good a play should be lost, we found it, and play it. 100

SLY. I wonder you would play it, another company having interest in it.

CONDELL. Why not Malevole in folio <sup>19</sup> with us, as Jeronimo in decimo-sexto <sup>20</sup> with them? They taught us a name for our play; we call it One For Another.

SLY. What are your additions?

BURBADGE. Sooth, not greatly needful; only as your sallet <sup>21</sup> to your great feast, to entertain a little more time, and to abridge [110

the not-received custom of music in our theatre.<sup>22</sup> I must leave you, sir.

Exit BURBADGE.

SINKLO. Doth he play the Malcontent?

CONDELL. Yes, sir.

SINKLO. I durst lay four of mine ears the play is not so well acted as it hath been.

LOWIN. Have you lost your ears,<sup>24</sup> sir, that you are so prodigal of laying them? 120

SINKLO. Why did you ask that, friend?

LOWIN. Marry, sir, because I have heard of a fellow would offer to lay a hundred-pound wager, that was not worth five baubees; <sup>25</sup> and in this kind you might venture four of your elbows; yet God defend <sup>26</sup> your coat should have so many!

SINKLO. Nay, truly, I am no great censorer; <sup>27</sup> and yet I might have been one of the college of critics once. My cousin here [130 hath an excellent memory, indeed, sir.

SLY. Who? I? I'll tell you a strange thing of myself; and I can tell you, for one that never studied the art of memory, 't is very strange too.

CONDELL. What's that, sir?

SLY. Why, I'll lay a hundred pound, I'll walk but once down by the Goldsmith's Row in Cheap, take notice of the signs, and tell you them with a breath instantly. 140

LOWIN. 'T is very strange.

SLY. They begin as the world did, with Adam and Eve. There's in all just five-and-fifty.<sup>28</sup> I do use to meditate much when I come to plays too. What do you think might come into a man's head now, seeing all this company?

CONDELL. I know not, sir.

SLY. I have an excellent thought. If some fifty of the Grecians that were cramm'd in [150 the horse' belly had eaten garlic, do you not think the Trojans might have smelt out their knavery? <sup>29</sup>

CONDELL. Very likely.

<sup>23</sup> Not comparable to Parmeno's pig. Plutarch (Symposium V. i) tells how some prejudiced persons, certain that Parmeno's imitation of grunting was unequalled, declared it superior to the efforts of a real pig, which a joker had concealed.

SINKLO. O, but, coz, coz!

"Great Alexander, when he came to the tomb of Achilles, Spake with a big loud voice, O thou thrice blessed and happy!"<sup>31</sup>

SLY. Alexander was an ass to speak so [160 well of a filthy cullion.<sup>32</sup>

LOWIN. Good sir, will you leave the stage? I'll help you to a private room.

SLY. Come, coz, let's take some tobacco. — Have you never a prologue?

LOWIN. Not any, sir.

SLY. Let me see, I will make one extempore. —

Come to them, and fencing of a congee<sup>33</sup> with arms and legs, be round<sup>34</sup> with them.<sup>35</sup>

Gentlemen, I could wish for the women's sakes you had all soft cushions; and [170 gentlewomen, I could wish that for the men's sakes you had all more easy standings.

What would they wish more but the play now? and that they shall have instantly.

The vilest out-of-tune music being heard, enter BILIOSO and PREPASSO.

BIL. Why, how now! Are ye mad, or drunk, or both, or what?

BIL. Here's a noise in court! You think you are in a tavern, do you not?

PRE. You think you are in a brothel-house, do you not? — This room is ill-scented.

Enter the DUKE PIETRO, FERRARDO, COUNT EQUATO, COUNT CELSO before, and GUERRINO.

PIETRO. Where breathes that music?

BIL. The discord rather than the music is heard from the malcontent Malevole's chamber.

FER. [calling] Malevole!

MAL. (out of his chamber)<sup>4</sup> Yaugh, god-a-man, what dost thou there? Duke's Gany-mede, Juno's jealous of thy long stockings. Shadow of a woman, what wouldst, weasel? Thou lamb o' court, what dost thou bleat [10 for? Ah, you smooth-chinn'd catamite!<sup>5</sup>

PIETRO. Come down, thou [rugged]<sup>6</sup> cur, and snarl here; I give thy dogged sullenness free liberty; trot about and bespurtle<sup>7</sup> whom thou pleasest.

MAL. I'll come among you, you goatish-blooded toderers,<sup>8</sup> as gum into taffeta, to fret, to fret.<sup>9</sup> I'll fall like a sponge into water, to suck up, to suck up. — (Howl again.)<sup>10</sup> I'll go to church<sup>11</sup> and come to you. 20

PIETRO. This Malevole is one of the most prodigious affections<sup>12</sup> that ever convers'd with nature: a man, or rather a monster, more discontent than Lucifer when he was thrust out of the presence. His appetite is unsatiable as the grave; as far from any content as from Heaven. His highest delight is to procure others' vexation, and therein he thinks he truly serves Heaven; for 't is his position, whosoever in this earth can be [30 contented is a slave and damn'd; therefore does he afflict all in that to which they are most affected.<sup>13</sup> Th' elements struggle within him; his own soul is at variance <within herself>; his speech is halter-worthy at all hours. I like him, faith: he gives good intelligence to my spirit, makes me understand those weaknesses which others' flattery palliates. Hark! they sing.

SCENE III <sup>14</sup>Enter MALEVOLE after the song.

[PIETRO.] See, he comes. Now shall you hear the extremity of a malcontent; he is as free as air: he blows over every man.—And, sir, whence come you now?

MAL. From the public place of much dissimulation, <the church.>

PIETRO. What didst there?

MAL. Talk with a usurer; take up at interest.

PIETRO. I wonder what religion thou [10 art <of>?

MAL. Of a soldier's religion.

PIETRO. And what dost thou think makes most infidels now?

MAL. Sects, sects. I have seen seeming Piety change her robe so oft, that sure none but some arch-devil can shape her a [new] <sup>15</sup> petticoat.

PIETRO. Oh, a religious policy.

MAL. But damnation on a politic [20 religion! <I am weary: would I were one of the Duke's hounds now!>

PIETRO. But what's the common news abroad, Malevole? Thou dogg'st rumor still.

MAL. Common news? Why, common words are, "God save ye," "Fare ye well;" common actions, flattery and cozenage; common things, women and cuckolds.—And how does my little Ferrard? Ah, ye lecherous animal! my little ferret! He goes [30 sucking up and down the palace into every hen's nest, like a weasel.—And to what dost thou addict thy time to now more than to those antique painted drabs that are still affected of <sup>16</sup> young courtiers, Flattery, Pride, and Veneriy?

FER. I study languages. Who dost think to be the best linguist of our age?

MAL. Phew! the Devil! Let him possess thee: he'll teach thee to speak all lan- [40 guages most readily and strangely; and great reason, marry: he's travel'd greatly i' the world, and is everywhere.

FER. Save i' th' court.

MAL. Ay, save i' th' court.—(to BILIOSO) And how does my old muckhill, overspread with fresh snow? Thou half a man, half a goat, all a beast! How does thy young wife, old huddle? <sup>17</sup>

BIL. Out, you improvident rascal! 50

MAL. Do, kick, thou hugely-horn'd Old Duke's ox, good Master Make-pleas.

PIETRO. How dost thou live nowadays, Malevole?

MAL. Why, like the knight, Sir Patrick Penlolians,<sup>18</sup> with killing o' spiders for my lady's monkey.

PIETRO. How dost spend the night? I hear thou never sleep'st.

MAL. Oh, no; but dream the most [60 fantastical! O Heaven! O fubbery,<sup>19</sup> fubbery!

PIETRO. Dream! What dream'st?

MAL. Why, methinks I see that signior pawn his footcloth,<sup>20</sup> that metrezza <sup>21</sup> her plate; this madam takes physic that tother monsieur may minister to her; here is a pander jewel'd; there <is> a fellow in shift of satin this day, that could not shift a shirt tother night; here a Paris supports that Helen; [70 there's a Lady Guinever bears up that Sir Lancelot. Dreams, dreams, visions, fantasies, chimaeras, imaginations, tricks, conceits!—(to PREPASSO) Sir Tristram Trimtram, come aloft, Jackanapes, with a whim-wham; <sup>22</sup> here's a knight of the land of Catito shall play at trap <sup>23</sup> with any page in Europe; do the sword dance with any morris dancer in Christendom; ride at the ring <sup>24</sup> till the fin <sup>25</sup> of his eyes look as blue as the welkin; [80 and run the wild-goose chase even with Pompey the Huge.

PIETRO. You run!

MAL. To the Devil.—Now, Sign[il]or Guer-rino, that thou from a most pitied prisoner shouldst grow a most loath'd flatterer!—Alas, poor Celso, thy star's oppress'd; thou art an honest lord: 't is pity.

EQUATO. Is 't pity?

MAL. Ay, marry is 't, philosophical [90 Equato; and 't is pity that thou, being so excellent a scholar by art, shouldst be so ridic-

Ereunt all saving PIETRO and MALEVOLE.

Now, sir, what is't?

MAL. Duke, thou art a becco,<sup>26</sup> a cornuto.<sup>27</sup>

PIETRO. How?

MAL. Thou art a cuckold. 100

PIETRO. Speak, unshale<sup>28</sup> him quick.

MAL. With most tumbler-like nimbleness.

PIETRO. Who? By whom? I burst with desire.

MAL. Mendoza is the man makes thee a horn'd beast; Duke, 't is Mendoza cornutes thee.

PIETRO. What conformance? <sup>29</sup> Relate; short, short.

MAL. As a lawyer's beard. 110

There is an old crone in the court, her name is Maquerelle;

She is my mistress, sooth to say, and she doth ever tell me.

Blirt<sup>30</sup> a' rhyme, blirt a' rhyme! Maquerelle is a cunning bawd; I am an honest villain; thy wife is a close drab;<sup>31</sup> and thou art a notorious cuckold. Farewell, Duke.

PIETRO. Stay, stay.

MAL. Dull, dull Duke, can lazy patience make lame revenge? O God, for a woman to make a man that which God never [120 created, never made!

PIETRO. What did God never make?

MAL. A cuckold! To be made a thing that's hoodwink'd with kindness, whilst every rascal fillips his brows; to have a coxcomb with egregious horns pinn'd to a lord's back, every page sporting himself with delightful laughter, whilst he must be the last must know it. Pistols and poniards! pistols and poniards! 130

In fair proportion both of limb and soul;

To take her from austerer check of parents,

To make her his by most devoutful rites, 140

Make her commandress of a better essence

Than is the gorgeous world, even of a man;

To hug her with as rais'd an appetite

As usurers do their delv'd-up treasury,

Thinking none tells<sup>34</sup> it but his private self;

To meet her spirit in a nimble kiss,

Distilling panting ardor to her heart;

True to her sheets, nay, diets strong his blood,

To give her height of hymeneal sweets, —

PIETRO. O God! 150

MAL. Whilst she lisps, and gives him some court-quelquechose,<sup>35</sup>

Made only to provoke, not satiate:

And yet, even then, the thaw of her delight

Flows from lewd heat of apprehension,<sup>36</sup>

Only from strange imagination's rankness,

That forms the adulterer's presence in her soul

And makes her think she clips<sup>37</sup> the foul knave's loins.

PIETRO. Affliction to my blood's root!

MAL. Nay, think, but think what may proceed of this;

Adultery is often the mother of incest. 160

PIETRO. Incest!

MAL. Yes, incest; mark: — Mendoza of his wife begets perchance a daughter; Mendoza dies, his son marries this daughter. Say you? Nay, 't is frequent; not only probable, but no question often acted; whilst ignorance, fearless ignorance, clasps his own seed.

PIETRO. Hideous imagination! 169

MAL. Adultery! Why, next to the sin of simony, 't is the most horrid transgression under the cope of salvation.<sup>38</sup>

PIETRO. Next to simony!

MAL. Ay, next to simony, in which our men in next age shall not sin.

PIETRO. Not sin? why?

MAL. Because, thanks to some churchmen, our age will leave them nothing to sin with. But adultery, O dulness! [should show] <sup>39</sup> [179 exemplary punishment, that intemperate bloods may freeze but to think it.] I would damn him and all his generation: my own hands should do it; ha, I would not trust Heaven with my vengeance anything.

spirit holds. Farewell; remember I forget thee not; farewell. Exit PIETRO.

<<sup>40</sup> MAL. Farewell.

Lean thoughtfulness, a sallow meditation, [190 Suck thy veins dry! Distemperance rob thy sleep!

The heart's disquiet is revenge most deep:
He that gets blood, the life of flesh but spills,
But he that breaks heart's peace, the dear soul kills. —

Well, this disguise doth yet afford me that Which kings do seldom hear, or great men
use —

Free speech; and though my state's usurp'd,
Yet this affected strain gives me a tongue
As fetterless as is an emperor's.

I may speak foolishly, ay, knavishly, 200
Always carelessly, yet no one thinks it fashion
To poise <sup>41</sup> my breath; for he that laughs and strikes

Is lightly felt, or seldom struck again.
Duke, I'll torment thee now: my just revenge
From thee than crown a richer gem shall part:
Beneath God, naught's so dear as a calm
heart.>

SCENE IV <sup>42</sup>

Enter CELSO.

CELSO. My honor'd Lord, —

MAL. Peace, speak low, peace! O Celso, constant lord,

Thou to whose faith I only rest discovered,
Thou, one of full ten millions of men,
That lovest virtue only for itself;
Thou in whose hands old Ops may put her
soul,

Behold forever-banish'd Altofront,
This Genoa's last year's duke. O truly noble!
I wanted those old instruments of state,<sup>43</sup>

Dissemblance and suspect: I could not time
it, Celso; 10

My throne stood like a point in midst of a circle,

To all of equal nearness; bore with none;
Rein'd all alike; so slept in fearless virtue,
Suspectless, too suspectless; till the crowd,
Still likerous of <sup>44</sup> untried novelties,

Impatient with severer government,
Made strong with Florence, banish'd Altofront.

CELSO. Strong with Florence! ay, thence your mischief rose;

For when the daughter of the Florentine
Was matched once with this Pietro, now duke,
No stratagem of state untri'd was left, 21
Till you of all —

MAL. Of all was quite bereft.
Alas, Maria too, close prisoned,
My true faith'd duchess, i' the citadel!

CELSO. I'll still adhere; let's mutiny and
die.

MAL. Oh, <no,> climb not a falling tower, Celso;

'Tis well held desperation, no zeal,
Hopeless to strive with fate. Peace! Tem-porize!

Hope, hope, that never forsak'st the wretched'st man, 29

Yet bidd'st me live, and lurk in this disguise!
What, play I well the free-breath'd discontent?
Why,<sup>45</sup> man, we are all philosophical monarchs

Or natural fools. Celso, the court's afire;
The Duchess' sheets will smoke for't ere it be long:

Impure Mendoza, that sharp-nos'd lord, that
made

The cursed match link'd Genoa with Florence,

Now broad-horns the Duke, which he now
knows.

Discord to malcontents is very manna;
When the ranks are burst, then scuffle, Alto-front.

CELSO. Ay, but durst, — 40

MAL. 'Tis gone; 'tis swallowed like a mineral;

Some way 't will work; phewt, I'll not shrink:
He's resolute who can no lower sink. —

<sup>46</sup> <BILIOSO entering, MALEVOLE shifteth his speech.

O the father of Maypoles! Did you never see a fellow whose strength consisted in his breath, respect in his office, religion on his lord, and love in himself, why, then, behold!

BIL. Signior, —

MAL. My right worshipful Lord, your court nightcap makes you have a passing high [50 forehead.

BIL. I can tell you strange news, but I am sure you know them already: the Duke speaks much good of you.

MAL. Go to, then; and shall you and I now enter into a strict friendship?

BIL. Second one another?

MAL. Yes.

BIL. Do one another good offices?

MAL. Just! What though I call'd [60 thee old ox, egregious wittol, broken-bellied coward, rotten mummy? Yet, since I am in favor —

BIL. Words of course, terms of disport. His Grace presents you by me a chain, as his grateful remembrance for — I am ignorant for what; marry, ye may impart: yet howsoever — come — dear friend, dost know my son?

MAL. Your son! 70

BIL. He shall eat woodcocks, dance jigs, make possets, and play at shuttlecock with any young lord about the court: he has as sweet a lady, too. Dost know her little bitch?

MAL. 'T is a dog, man.

BIL. Believe me, a she-bitch. Oh, 't is a good creature! Thou shalt be her servant.<sup>47</sup> I'll make thee acquainted with my young wife too: what! I keep her not at court for nothing. 'T is grown to supper-time; come [80 to my table: that, anything I have, stands open to thee.

MAL. ([aside] to CELSO) How smooth to him that is in state of grace, How servile is the rugged'st courtier's face! What profit, nay, what nature would keep down,

Are heav'd to them are minions to a crown. Envious ambition never sates his thirst, Till, sucking all, he swells and swells, and bursts.

BIL. I shall now leave you with my always-best wishes; only let's hold betwixt us a [90 firm correspondence, a mutual friendly-reciprocal kind of a steady-unanimous-heartily-leagued —

MAL. Did your Signiorship ne'er see a pigeon-house that was smooth, round, and white without, and full of holes and stink within? Ha' ye not, old courtier?

BIL. O, yes, 't is the form, the fashion of them all.

MAL. Adieu, my true court-friend; 100 farewell, my dear Castilio.<sup>48</sup>

Exit BILIOSO.>

CELSO. Yonder's Mendoza.

MAL. (descries MENDOZA.) True, the privy key.

CELSO. I take my leave, sweet lord.

MAL. 'T is fit; away! Exit CELSO.

SCENE V <sup>49</sup>

Enter MENDOZA with three or four Suitors.

MEN. Leave your suits with me; I can and will. Attend my secretary; leave me.

[Exeunt Suitors.]

MAL. Mendoza, hark ye, hark ye. You are a treacherous villain — God b' wi' ye!

MEN. Out, you baseborn rascal!

MAL. We are all the sons of Heaven, though a tripe-wife were our mother. Ah, you whore-son, hot-rein'd he-marmoset! Aegisthus!<sup>50</sup> didst ever hear of one Aegisthus?

MEN. Gisthus? 10

MAL. Ay, Aegisthus: he was a filthy incontinent fleshmonger, such a one as thou art.

MEN. Out, grumbling rogue!

MAL. Orestes,<sup>51</sup> beware Orestes!

MEN. Out, beggar!

MAL. I once shall rise!

MEN. Thou rise!

MAL. Ay, at the resurrection.

No vulgar seed but once may rise and shall; No king so huge but 'fore he die may fall. [20

Exit.

MEN. Now, good Elysium! what a delicious heaven is it for a man to be in a prince's favor! O sweet God! O pleasure! O fortune! O all thou best of life! What should I think, what say, what do? To be a favorite, a minion! To have a general timorous respect observe<sup>52</sup> a man, a stateful silence in his presence, solitariness in his absence, a confused hum and busy murmur of obsequious suitors training<sup>53</sup> him; the cloth held up, and way-proclaim'd [30 before him; petitionary vassels licking the pavement with their slavish knees, whilst some odd palace-lampreels<sup>54</sup> that engender with snakes, and are full of eyes on both sides, with a kind of insinuated humbleness, fix all their delights<sup>55</sup> upon his brow. Sweet women! most sweet ladies! nay, angels! by Heaven, he is more accursed than [40 a devil that hates you, or is hated by you; and happier than a god that loves you, or is beloved by you. You preservers of mankind, lifeblood of society, who would live, nay, who can live, without you? O paradise! how majestic is your austerer presence! how imperiously chaste is your more modest face! but, oh, how full of ravishing attraction is your pretty, petulant, languishing, lasciviously-composed countenance! these amorous smiles, those [50 soul-warming sparkling glances, ardent as those flames that singed the world by heedless Phaëthon! in body how delicate, in soul how witty, in discourse how pregnant, in life, how wary, in favors how judicious, in day how sociable, and in night how — O pleasure unutterable! indeed, it is most certain, one man cannot deserve only to enjoy a beauteous woman — but a duchess! In despite of Phoebus, I'll write a sonnet instantly in praise of her. Exit. [60

SCENE VI <sup>56</sup>

Enter FERNEZE ushering AURELIA, EMILIA and MAQUERELLE bearing up her train, BIANCA attending; all go out but AURELIA, MAQUERELLE, and FERNEZE.

AUREL. And is 't possible? Mendoza slight me! Possible?

FER. Possible!

What can be strange in him that's drunk with favor,
Grows insolent with grace? — Speak, Maquerelle, speak.

MAQ. To speak feelingly, more, more richly in solid sense than worthless words, give me those jewels of your ears to receive my enforced duty. As for my part, 't is well known I can put [up] <sup>57</sup> anything (FERNEZE privately [10 feeds MAQUERELLE's hands with jewels during this speech], can bear patiently with any man; but when I heard he wronged your precious sweetness, I was enforced to take deep offence. 'T is most certain he loves Emilia with high appetite; and, as she told me (as you know we women impart our secrets one to another), when she repulsed his suit, in that he was possessed with your endeared grace, Mendoza most ingrately renounced all faith to you.

FER. Nay, call'd you — Speak, Maquerelle, speak. 20

MAQ. By Heaven, witch, dri'd biscuit; and contested blushlessly he lov'd you but for a spurt or so.

FER. For maintenance.

MAQ. Advancement and regard.

AUREL. O villain! O impudent Mendoza!

MAQ. Nay, he is the rustiest[-jaw'd], <sup>58</sup> the foulest mouth'd knave in railing against our sex; he will rail against women —

AUREL. How? how? 30

MAQ. I am asham'd to speak 't, I.

AUREL. I love to hate him: speak.

MAQ. Why, when Emilia scorn'd his base unsteadiness, the black-throated rascal scolded, and said —

AUREL. What?

MAQ. Troth, 't is too shameless.

AUREL. What said he?

MAQ. Why, that, at four, women were fools; at fourteen, drabs; at forty, bawds; [40 at fourscore, witches; and a hundred, cats.

AUREL. O unlimited impudency!

FER. But as for poor Ferneze's fixed heart, Was never shadeless meadow drier parch'd Under the scorching heat of heaven's dog, Than is my heart with your enforcing eyes.

MAQ. A hot simile.

FER. Your smiles have been my Heaven, your frowns my hell.

Oh, pity, then! grace should with beauty dwell.

MAQ. Reasonable perfect, by'r lady. 50

AUREL. I will love thee, be it but in despite Of that Mendoza: — witch! Ferneze, witch! — Ferneze, thou art the Duchess' favorite: Be faithful, private — but 't is dangerous.

FER. His love is lifeless that for love fears breath:

The worst that's due to sin, oh, would 't were death!

AUREL. Enjoy my favor. I will be sick instantly and take physic; therefore in depth of night visit. 59

MAQ. Visit her chamber, but conditionally you shall not offend her bed — by this diamond!

FER. By this diamond.

Gives it to MAQUERELLE.

MAQ. Nor tarry longer than you please — by this ruby!

FER. By this ruby. Gives again.

MAQ. And that the door shall not creak.

FER. And that the door shall not creak.

MAQ. Nay, but swear.

FER. By this purse. Gives her his purse.

<sup>58</sup> Q<sub>1</sub> jads.

MAQ. Go to ; I'll keep your oaths for [70
you : remember, visit.

Enter MENDOZA, reading a sonnet.

AUREL. Dri'd biscuit ! — Look where the base wretch comes.

MEN. "Beauty's life, Heaven's model, love's queen," —

MAQ. That's his Emilia.

MEN. "Nature's triumph, best on <sup>59</sup>
earth," —

MAQ. Meaning Emilia.

MEN. "Thou only wonder that the world hath seen," —

MAQ. That's Emilia.

AUREL. Must I, then, hear her prais'd ? —
Mendoza ! 80

MEN. Madam, your Excellency is graciously encount'ed : I have been writing passionate flashes in honor of — Exit FERNEZE.

AUREL. Out, villain, villain !
O judgment, where have been my eyes ? —
What

Bewitched election made me dote on thee ?
What sorcery made me love thee ? But be-
gone ;

Bury thy head. O, that I could do more
Than loathe thee ! — hence, worst of ill !
No reason ask ; our reason is our will. <sup>60</sup> 90

Exit with MARQUERELLE.

MEN. Women ! nay, Furies ; nay, worse ;
for they torment only the bad, but women good and bad. Damnation of mankind !
Breath, hast thou prais'd them for this ? and is't you, Ferneze, are wriggled into smockgrace ? Sit sure. Oh that I could rail against these monsters in nature, models of hell, curse of the earth, women ! that dare attempt anything, and what they attempt they care not how they accomplish ; without all premed- [100 itation or prevention ; rash in asking, desperate in working, impatient in suffering, extreme in desiring, slaves unto appetite, mistresses in dissembling, only constant in unconstancy, only perfect in counterfeiting ; their words are feigned, their eyes forged, their sights <sup>61</sup> dissembled, their looks counterfeited, their hair false, their given hopes deceitful, their very breath artificial ; their blood <sup>62</sup> is their only god ; bad clothes and old age are only [110 the devils they tremble at. That I could rail
now !

SCENE VII <sup>63</sup>

Enter PIETRO, his sword drawn.

PIETRO. A mischief fill thy throat, thou foul-jaw'd slave !

Say thy prayers.

MEN. I ha' forgot 'em.

PIETRO. Thou shalt die.

MEN. So shalt thou. I am heart-mad.

PIETRO. I am horn-mad.

MEN. Extreme mad.

PIETRO. Monstrously mad.

MEN. Why ?

PIETRO. Why ! thou, thou hast dishonored
my bed.

MEN. I ! Come, come, [sir] <sup>64</sup> ; here's my bare heart to thee,

As steady as is this centre to the glorious
world. —

And yet, hark, thou art a cornuto — but by
me ?

PIETRO. Yes, slave, by thee.

MEN. Do not, do not with tart and spleenful breath 10

Lose him can lose thee. I offend my duke !
Bear record, O ye dumb and raw-air'd nights,
How vigilant my sleepless eyes have been
To watch the traitor ! Record, thou spirit of truth,

With what debasement I ha' thrown myself
To under offices, only to learn

The truth, the party, time, the means, the place,

By whom, and when, and where thou wert dis-
grac'd !

And am I paid with "slave" ? Hath my intrusion

To places private and prohibited, 20

Only to observe the closer passages,

Heaven knows with vows of revelation,

Made me suspected, made me deem'd a villain ?

What rogue hath wronged us ?

PIETRO. Mendoza, I may err.

MEN. Err ! 't is too mild a name ; but err
and err,

Run giddy with suspect, 'fore through me thou
know

That which most creatures, save thyself, do
know.

Nay, since my service hath so loath'd reject,
'Fore I'll reveal, shalt find them clipp'd together. 20

<sup>64</sup> Old eds. sic. (Dyce's suggestion.)

PIETRO. Mendoza, thou know'st I am a most plain-breasted man.

MEN. The fitter to make a cuckold ; would your brows were most plain too !

PIETRO. Tell me — indeed, I heard thee rail —

MEN. At women, true. Why, what cold phlegm could choose,

Knowing a lord so honest, virtuous,
So boundless loving, bounteous, fair-shap'd,
sweet,

To be contemn'd, abus'd, defam'd, made cuckold?

Heart ! I hate all women for 't — sweet sheets, wax lights, antique bedposts, cambric [40 smocks, villainous curtains, arras pictures, oil'd hinges, and all the tongue-ti'd lascivious witnesses of great creatures' wantonness — what salvation can you expect?

PIETRO. Wilt thou tell me?

MEN. Why, you may find it yourself ; observe, observe.

PIETRO. I ha' not the patience. Wilt thou deserve me, tell, give it.

MEN. Take 't : why, Ferneze is the man, [50 Ferneze. I'll prove 't ; this night you shall take him in your sheets. Will 't serve?

PIETRO. It will ; my bosom's in some peace ; till night —

MEN. What?

PIETRO. Farewell.

MEN. God ! how weak a lord are you ! Why, do you think there is no more but so ?

PIETRO. Why?

MEN. Nay, then, will I presume to counsel you :

It should be thus. You with some guard upon the sudden Break into the Princess' chamber. I stay behind,

Without the door, through which he needs must pass. 60

Ferneze flies : let him. To me he comes ; he's kill'd

By me, observe, by me. You follow ; I rail, And seem to save the body. Duchess comes, On whom, respecting her advanced birth, And your fair nature, I know, nay, I do know, No violence must be used ; she comes. I storm,

I praise, excuse Ferneze, and still maintain The Duchess' honor ; she for this loves me. I honor you ; shall know her soul, you mine : Then naught shall she contrive in vengeance (As women are most thoughtful in revenge) [71

Of her Ferneze, but you shall sooner know 't Than she can think 't. Thus shall his death come sure,

Your duchess brain-caught : so your life secure.

PIETRO. It is too well ; my bosom and my heart

When nothing helps, cut off the rotten part.

Exit.

MEN. Who cannot feign friendship can ne'er produce the effects of hatred. Honest fool Duke ! subtle lascivious Duchess ! silly novice Ferneze ! I do laugh at ye. My [80 brain is in labor till it produce mischief, and I feel sudden throes, proofs sensible the issue is at hand.

As bears shape young, so I'll form my device, Which grown proves horrid ; vengeance makes men wise. [Exit.]

<[SCENE VIII] 65

Enter MALEVOLE and PASSARELLO.

MAL. Fool, most happily encount' red. Canst sing, fool?

PASS. Yes, I can sing, fool, if you'll bear the burden ; and I can play upon instruments, scurvily, as gentlemen do. Oh, that I had been gelded ! I should then have been a fat fool for a chamber, a squeaking fool for a tavern, and a private fool for all the ladies.

MAL. You are in good case since you came to court, fool : what, guarded,<sup>66</sup> guarded ! [10

PASS. Yes, faith, even as footmen and bawds wear velvet, not for an ornament of honor, but for a badge of drudgery ; for, now the Duke is discontented, I am fain to fool him asleep every night.

MAL. What are his griefs?

PASS. He hath sore eyes.

MAL. I never observed so much.

PASS. Horrible sore eyes ; and so hath every cuckold, for the roots of the horns spring in [20 the eyeballs, and that's the reason the horn of a cuckold is as tender as his eye, or as that growing in the woman's forehead, twelve years since, that could not endure to be touch'd.<sup>67</sup> The Duke hangs down his head like a columbine.

MAL. Passarello, why do great men beg fools? 68

<sup>68</sup> Apply to the king for the guardianship of idiots (in order to have the use of their property).

PASS. As the Welshman stole rushes when there was nothing else to filch ; only to [30 keep begging in fashion.

MAL. Pooh, thou givest no good reason ; thou speakest like a fool.

PASS. Faith, I utter small fragments, as your knight courts your city widow with jingling of his gilt spurs, advancing his bush-colored beard, and taking tobacco ; this is all the mirror of their knightly complements.<sup>69</sup> Nay, I shall talk when my tongue is a-going once ; 't is like a citizen on horseback, evermore in [40 a false gallop.

MAL. And how doth Maquerelle fare nowadays ?

PASS. Faith, I was wont to salute her as our English women are at their first landing in Flushing :<sup>70</sup> I would call her whore. But now that antiquity leaves her as an old piece of plastic t' work by,<sup>71</sup> I only ask her how her rotten teeth fare every morning, and so leave her. She was the first that ever invented [50 perfum'd smocks for the gentlewomen, and woolen shoes, for fear of creaking, for the visitant. She were an excellent lady, but that her face peebleth like Muscovy glass.<sup>72</sup>

MAL. And how doth thy old lord, that hath wit enough to be a flatterer, and conscience enough to be a knave ?

PASS. Oh, excellent ; he keeps beside me fifteen jesters, to instruct him in the art of fooling, and utters their jests in private to the [60 Duke and Duchess. He'll lie like to your Switzer or lawyer ; he'll be of any side for most money.

MAL. I am in haste : be brief.

PASS. As your fiddler when he is paid. — He'll thrive, I warrant you, while your young courtier stands like Good Friday in Lent : men long to see it, because more fatting days come after it ; else he's the leanest and pitifullest actor in the whole pageant. Adieu, Malevole. 71

MAL. O world most vile, when thy loose vanities, Taught by this fool, do make the fool seem wise !

PASS. You'll know me again, Malevole.

MAL. O, ay, by that velvet.

PASS. Ay, as a pettifogger by his buckram bag. I am as common in the court as an hostess's lips in the country ; knights, and clowns, and knaves, and all share me ; the court cannot possibly be without me. Adieu, Malevole. [Exeunt.]>

ACT II — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter MENDOZA, with a sconce,<sup>2</sup> to observe FERNEZE's entrance, who, whilst the act is playing, enter unbraced, two Pages before him with lights ; is met by MAQUERELLE and conveyed in. The Pages are sent away.

MEN. He's caught, the woodcock's head is i' th' noose.

Now treads Ferneze in dangerous path of lust, Swearing his sense is merely<sup>3</sup> deified :

The fool grasps clouds, and shall beget Centaurs ;

And now, in strength of panting faint delight, The goat bids Heaven envy him. — Good goose,

I can afford thee nothing

But the poor comfort of calamity, pity.

Lust's like the plummets hanging on clock-lines —

Will ne'er ha' done till all is quite undone ; 10
Such is the course salt, sallow lust doth run,
Which thou shalt try. I'll be reveng'd.

Duke, thy suspect ;

Duchess, thy disgrace ; Ferneze, thy rivalry ;
Shall have swift vengeance. Nothing so holy,

No band of nature so strong,

No law of friendship so sacred,

But I'll profane, burst, violate, 'fore I'll

Endure disgrace, contempt, and poverty.

Shall I, whose very "hum" struck all heads bare,

Whose face made silence, creaking of whose shoe 20

Fore'd the most private passages fly ope,

Scrape like a servile dog at some latch'd door ?

Learn now to make a leg, and cry " Beseech ye,

Pray ye, is such a lord within ? " be aw'd

At some odd usher's scoff'd formality ?

First sear my brains ! Unde cadis non quo, refert ;<sup>4</sup>

My heart cries, "Perish all!" How! how!
 what fate
 Can once avoid revenge, that's desperate?
 I'll to the Duke; if all should ope — If? tush!
 Fortune still dotes on those who cannot blush. [Exit.] 30

SCENE II <sup>5</sup>

Enter MALEVOLE at one door; BIANCA, EMILIA, and MAQUERELLE at the other door.

MAL. Bless ye, cast <sup>6</sup> a' ladies! — Ha, Dipsas! <sup>7</sup> how dost thou, old coal?

MAQ. Old coal!

MAL. Ay, old coal; methinks thou liest like a brand under [these] <sup>8</sup> billets of green wood. He that will inflame a young wench's heart, let him lay close to her an old coal that hath first been fir'd, a pand'ress, my half-burnt lint, who though thou canst not flame thyself, yet art able to set a thousand virgins' ta- [10
 pers afire. — And how doth Janivere thy husband, my little periwinkle? Is he troubled with the cough of the lungs still? Does he hawk a-nights still? He will not bite.

BIAN. No, by my troth, I took him with his mouth empty of old teeth.

MAL. And he took thee with thy belly full of young bones; marry, he took his maim by the stroke of his enemy.

BIAN. And I mine by the stroke of my [20
 friend.

MAL. The close stock! <sup>9</sup> O mortal wench!
 Lady, ha' ye now no restoratives for your de-cayed Jasons? Look ye, crab's guts bak'd, distill'd ox-pith, the pulverized hairs of a lion's upper lip, jelly of cock-sparrows, he-monkey's marrow, or powder of fox stones? — And whither are [all] <sup>10</sup> you ambling now?

BIAN. [Why.] <sup>10</sup> to bed, to bed.

MAL. Do your husbands lie with ye? 30

BIAN. That were country fashion, i' faith.

MAL. Ha' ye no foregoers about you?
 Come, whither in good deed, la now?

[MAQ.] <sup>11</sup> In good indeed, law, now, to eat the most miraculously, admirably, astonish-able-compos'd posset with three curds, without any drink. Will ye help me with a he-fox? — Here's the Duke. The Ladies go out.

<MAL. (to BIANCA) Fri'd frogs are very good, and Frenchlike too.> 40

<sup>11</sup> So Q1; Qs. gives speech to Bianca.

SCENE III <sup>12</sup>

Enter DUKE PIETRO, COUNT CELSO, COUNT
 EQUATO, BILIOSO, FERRARDO, and MEN-DOZA.

PIETRO. The night grows deep and foul;
 what hour is't?

CELSO. Upon the stroke of twelve.

MAL. Save ye, Duke!

PIETRO. From thee! Begone! I do not love thee! Let me see thee no more; we are dis-pleas'd.

MAL. Why, God be with thee! Heaven hear my curse: may thy wife and thee live long together! 10

PIETRO. Begone, sirrah!

MAL. "When Arthur first in court began" — Agamemnon — Menelaus <sup>13</sup> — was ever any duke a cornuto?

PIETRO. Begone! hence!

MAL. What religion wilt thou be of next?

MEN. Out with him!

MAL. With most servile patience. — Time will come

When wonder of thy error will strike dumb
 Thy bezzl'd <sup>14</sup> senses. — 20

Slaves! ay, favor! <sup>15</sup> ay, marry, shall he rise!
 Good God! how subtle hell doth flatter vice!
 Mounts him aloft, and makes him seem to fly,
 As fowl the tortoise mock'd, who to the sky
 The ambitious shellfish rais'd! Th' end of all
 Is only, that from height he might dead fall.

 begone, ye rascal!

MAL. I shall now leave ye with all my best wishes. 30

BIL. Out, ye cur!

MAL. Only let's hold together a firm correspondence.

BIL. Out!

MAL. A mutual-friendly-reciprocal-perpetual kind of steady-unanimous-heartilyleagued —

BIL. Hence, ye gross-jaw'd, peasantly — out, go!

MAL. Adieu, pigeon-house; thou burr, [40 that only stickest to nappy fortunes. The ser-pigo, <sup>18</sup> the strangury, an eternal uneffectual priapism seize thee! .

 added by Qs.

<sup>18</sup> Ringworm.

BIL. Out, rogue !

MAL. Mayest thou be a notorious wittolly pander to thine own wife, and yet get no office, but live to be the utmost misery of mankind, a beggarly cuckold ! > Exit.

PIETRO. It shall be so.

MEN. It must be so, for where great states revenge, 50

'T is requisite the parts [which] <sup>19</sup> piety
And [soft] <sup>20</sup> respect forbears, be closely dogg'd :

Lay one into his breast shall sleep with him,
Feed in the same dish, run in self <sup>21</sup> faction,
Who may discover any shape of danger ;
For once disgrac'd, displayed in offence,
It makes man blushless, and man is, all confess,

More prone to vengeance than to gratefulness.
Favors are writ in dust ; but stripes we feel Depraved nature stamps in lasting steel. 60

PIETRO. You shall be leagu'd with the Duchess.

EQUATO. The plot is very good.

[PIETRO.] <sup>22</sup> You shall both kill, and seem the corse to save.

FER. A most fine brain-trick.

CELSE. [aside] Of a most cunning knave.

PIETRO. My Lords, the heavy action we intend

Is death and shame, two of the ugliest shapes
That can confound a soul ; think, think of it.
I strike, but yet, like him that 'gainst stone walls

Directs, his shafts rebounds in his own face ; [69
My lady's shame is mine, O God, 't is mine !
Therefore I do conjure all secrecy ;
Let it be as very little as may be,

Pray ye, as may be ;
Make frightless entrance, salute her with soft
eyes,

Stain away with blood ; only Ferneze dies,
But not before her brows. O gentlemen, God knows I love her ! Nothing else, but this : —

I am not well ; if grief, that sucks veins dry,
Rivels <sup>23</sup> the skin, casts ashes in men's faces, [79
Be-dulls the eye, unstrengthens all the blood,
Chance to remove me to another world,
As sure I once must die, let him succeed :
I have no child ; all that my youth begot
Hath been your loves, which shall inherit me ;

Which as it ever shall, I do conjure it,
Mendoza may succeed ; he's noble born ;
With me of much desert.

CELSE. [aside] Much !

PIETRO. Your silence answers, " Ay."

I thank you. Come on now. Oh, that I might die 90
Before her shame's display'd ! Would I were forc'd

To burn my father's tomb, [unhill] <sup>24</sup> his bones
And dash them in the dirt, rather than this !
This both the living and the dead offends :
Sharp surgery where naught but death amends.

Exit with the others.

SCENE IV <sup>25</sup>

Enter MAQUERELLE, EMILIA, and BIANCA, with a posset.

MAQ. Even here it is, three curds in three regions individually distinct, most methodical according to art compos'd, without any drink.

BIAN. Without any drink !

MAQ. Upon my honor. Will ye sit and eat ?

EMIL. Good ; the composure, the receipt,
how is 't ?

MAQ. 'T is a pretty pearl ; by this pearl (how does 't with me ? <sup>26</sup>) thus it is : seven-and-thirty yolks of Barbary hens' eggs ; eight- [10 een spoonfuls and a half of the juice of cock-sparrow bones ; one ounce, three drams, four scruples and one-quarter of the syrup of Ethiopian dates ; sweet'ned with three-quarters of a pound of pure candied Indian eryngoes ;
strewed over with the powder of pearl of America, amber of Cataia, <sup>27</sup> and lamb stones of Muscovia.

BIAN. Trust me, the ingredients are very cordial, and, no question, good, and most [20 powerful in restoration.

MAQ. I know not what you mean by restoration ; but this it doth : it purifieth the blood, smootheth the skin, enliveneth the eye, strengtheneth the veins, mundifieth <sup>28</sup> the teeth, comforteth the stomach, fortifieth the back, and quickeneth the wit ; that's all.

EMIL. By my troth, I have eaten but two spoonfuls, and methinks I could discourse most swiftly and wittily already. 30

MAQ. Have you the art to seem honest ? <sup>29</sup>

BIAN. I thank advice and practice.

<sup>19</sup> Old eds. with.

other old eds. left.

holly root, valued as an aphrodisiac.

MAQ. Why, then, eat me o' this posset, quicken your blood, and preserve your beauty. Do you know Doctor Plaster-face? By this curd, he is the most exquisite in forging of veins, spright'ning of eyes, dyeing of hair, sleeking of skins, blushing of cheeks, surphling<sup>30</sup> of breasts, blanching and bleaching of teeth, that ever made an old lady gracious [40 by torchlight; by this curd, law.

BIAN. Well, we are resolved, what God has given us we'll cherish.

MAQ. Cherish anything saving your husband; keep him not too high, lest he leap the pale. But, for your beauty, let it be your saint: bequeath two hours to it every morning in your closet. I ha' been young, and yet, in my conscience, I am not above five-and-twenty; but, believe me, preserve and use [50 your beauty; for youth and beauty once gone, we are like beehives without honey, out-a'-fashion apparel that no man will wear; therefore use me your beauty.

EMIL. Ay, but men say —

MAQ. Men say! let men say what they will! Life a' woman! they are ignorant of your wants. The more in years, the more in perfection they grow: if they lose youth and beauty, they gain wisdom and discretion; [60 but when our beauty fades, good night with us. There cannot be an uglier thing to see than an old woman; from which, O pruning, pinching, and painting, deliver all sweet beauties!

BIAN. Hark! music!

MAQ. Peace, 't is i' the Duchess' bed-chamber. Good rest, most prosperously-grac'd ladies.

EMIL. Good night, sentinel.

BIAN. Night, dear Maquerelle. 70
Exeunt all but MAQUERELLE.

MAQ. May my posset's operation send you my wit and honesty; and me, your youth and beauty; the pleasing'st rest! Exit.

SCENE V<sup>31</sup>

A Song [within].

Whilst the song is singing, enter MENDOZA with his sword drawn, standing ready to murder FERNEZE as he flies from the Duchess' chamber.

ALL. [within] Strike, strike!

AUR. [within] Save my Ferneze! Oh, save my Ferneze!

<sup>30</sup> Beautifying with cosmetics.

<sup>31</sup> The same.

Enter FERNEZE in his shirt, and is receiv'd upon Mendoza's sword.

ALL. [within] Follow, pursue.

AUR. [within] Oh, save Ferneze!

MEN. Pierce, pierce! — Thou shallow fool, drop there!

He that attempts a princess' lawless love
Must have broad hands, close heart, with Argus' eyes,
And back of Hercules, or else he dies.

Thrusts his rapier in FERNEZE.

Enter AURELIA, DUKE PIETRO, FERRARDO, BILIOSO, CELSO, and EQUATO.

ALL. Follow, follow!

MEN. Stand off, forbear, ye most uncivil lords!

PIETRO. Strike!

MEN. Do not; tempt not a man resolv'd.

Would you, inhuman murderers, more than death? 10

AUR. O poor Ferneze!

MEN. Alas, now all defence too late!

AUR. He's dead.

PIETRO. I am sorry for our shame. — Go to your bed;

Weep not too much, but leave some tears to shed

When I am dead.

AUR. What, weep for thee! my soul no tears shall find.

PIETRO. Alas, alas, that women's souls are blind!

MEN. Betray such beauty!

Murder such youth! Contemn civility!

He loves him not that rails not at him. 20

PIETRO. Thou canst not move us; we have blood enough. —

And please you, lady, we have quite forgot

All your defects; if not, why, then —

AUR. Not.

PIETRO. Not! The best of rest; good-night.

Exit PIETRO, with other Courtiers.

AUR. Despite go with thee!

MEN. Madam, you ha' done me foul disgrace; you have wrong'd him much loves you too much. Go to; your soul knows you have.

AUR. I think I have.

MEN. Do you but think so?

AUR. Nay, sure, I have; my eyes have [30 witnessed thy love; thou hast stood too firm for me.

MEN. Why, tell me, fair-cheek'd lady, who even in tears art powerfully beauteous, what unadvised passion struck ye into such a violent heat against me? Speak, what mischief wrong'd us? What devil injur'd us? Speak.

AUR. The thing ne'er worthy of the name of man, Ferneze.

Ferneze swore thou lov'st Emilia ;
Which to advance, with most reproachful
breath 40
Thou both didst blemish and denounce my love.

MEN. Ignoble villain! did I for this bestride
Thy wounded limbs? [for this, rank opposite
Even to my sovereign?] 32 for this, O God, for this,
Sunk all my hopes, and with my hopes my life?
Ripp'd bare my throat unto the hangman's axe? —

Thou most dishonor'd trunk! — Emilia!
By life, I know her not. — Emilia! —
Did you believe him?

AUR. Pardon me, I did.

MEN. Did you? And thereupon you graced him? 50

AUR. I did.

MEN. Took him to favor, nay even clasp'd

With him?

AUR. Alas, I did!

MEN. This night?

AUR. This night.

MEN. And in your lustful twines the Duke took you?

AUR. A most sad truth.

MEN. O God, O God! how we dull honest
souls,

Heavy-brain'd men, are swallowed in the bogs
Of a deceitful ground, whilst nimble bloods, Light-jointed spirits, [speed], 33 cut good men's throats,

And scape! Alas, I am too honest for this age,

Too full of phlegm and heavy steadiness; 60
Stood still whilst this slave cast a noose about
me;

Nay, then to stand in honor of him and her,
Who had even slic'd my heart!

AUR. Come, I did err,
And am most sorry I did err.

MEN. Why, we are both but dead: the Duke hates us;

And those whom princes do once groundly 34
hate,

Let them provide to die, as sure as fate.

Prevention 35 is the heart of policy.

AUR. Shall we murder him?

MEN. Instantly? 70

AUR. Instantly; before he casts a plot,
Or further blaze my honor's much-known blot,
Let's murder him.

MEN. I would do much for you. Will ye marry me?

AUR. I'll make thee duke. We are of Med-icis;

Florence our friend; in court my faction
Not meanly strengthful; the Duke then dead,
We well prepar'd for change, the multitude
Irresolutely reeling, we in force,
Our party seconded, the kingdom maz'd,
No doubt of 36 swift success all shall be
grac'd. 80

MEN. You do confirm me; we are resolute;
To-morrow look for change; rest confident.
'T is now about the immodest waste of night:
The mother of moist dew with pallid light Spreads gloomy shades about the numbed
earth.

Sleep, sleep, whilst we contrive our mischief's birth.

This man I'll get inhum'd. Farewell; to bed.
Ay, kiss the pillow; dream the Duke is dead.
So, so; good night. Exit AURELIA.

— How fortune dotes on impudence!

I am in private the adopted son 90
Of yon good prince.

I must be duke; why, if I must, I must.
Most silly lord, name me! O Heaven! I see God made honest fools to maintain crafty knaves.

The Duchess is wholly mine too, must kill her
husband

To quit her shame. Much! then marry her!
Ay.

Oh, I grow proud in prosperous treachery!
As wrestlers clip, so I'll embrace you all,
Not to support, but to procure your fall.

Enter MALEVOLE.

MAL. God arrest thee! 100

MEN. At whose suit?

MAL. At the Devil's. Ah, you treacherous, damnable monster, how dost? how dost, thou treacherous rogue? Ah, ye rascal! I am banish'd the court, sirrah.

32 So Q1; om. Q2.

33 Emend. Dodale; Q1 pent; Q2 spent.

34 Profoundly.

35 With.

36 Forestalling.

MEN. Prithee, let's be acquainted ; I do love thee, faith.

MAL. At your service, by the Lord, law : shall's go to supper ? Let's be once drunk together and so unite a most virtuously- [110 strength'ned friendship : shall's, Huguenot ? <sup>37</sup> shall's ?

MEN. Wilt fall upon my chamber to-morrow morn ?

MAL. As a raven to a dunghill. They say there's one dead here, prick'd for the pride of the flesh.

MEN. Ferneze : there he is ; prithee, bury him.

MAL. O, most willingly ; I mean to turn pure Rochelle churchman, I.<sup>38</sup> 120

MEN. Thou churchman ! Why, why ?

MAL. Because I'll live lazily, rail upon authority, deny kings' supremacy in things indifferent, and be a pope in mine own parish.

MEN. Wherefore dost thou think churches were made ?

MAL. To scour ploughshares : I ha' seen oxen plough up altars ; et nunc seges ubi Sion <sup>39</sup> fuit.

MEN. Strange ! 130

MAL. Nay, monstrous ! I ha' seen a sumptuous steeple turned to a stinking privy ; more beastly, the sacredest place made a dogs' kennel ; nay, most inhuman, the stoned coffins of long-dead Christians burst up, and made hogs' troughs : hic finis Priami.<sup>40</sup> Shall I ha' some sack and cheese at thy chamber ? Good night, good mischievous incarnate devil ; good night, Mendoza ; ah, you inhuman villain, good night ! night, fub.<sup>41</sup> 140

MEN. Good night : to-morrow morn ? Exit.

MAL. Ay, I will come, friendly damnation, I will come. — I do descry cross-points ; honesty and courtship <sup>42</sup> straddle as far asunder as a true Frenchman's legs.

FER. Oh !

MAL. Proclamations ! more proclamations !

FER. Oh ! a surgeon !

MAL. Hark ! lust cries for a surgeon. — What news from Limbo ? How doeth the [150 grand cuckold, Lucifer ?

FER. Oh help, help ! conceal and save me.

FERNEZE stirs, and MALEVOLE helps him up and conveys him away.

MAL. Thy shame more than thy wounds do grieve me far :

Thy wounds but leave upon thy flesh some scar ;

But fame <sup>43</sup> ne'er heals, still rankles worse and worse ;

Such is of uncontrolled lust the curse.

Think what it is in lawless sheets to lie ;

But, oh Ferneze, what in lust to die !

Then thou that shame respects, oh, fly converse 159

With women's eyes and lispings wantonness !

Stick candles 'gainst a virgin wall's white back,

If they not burn, yet at the least they'll black.

Come, I'll convey thee to a private port,

Where thou shalt live (O happy man !) from court.

The beauty of the day begins to rise,

From whose bright form night's heavy shadow flies.

Now 'gins close plots to work ; the scene grows full,

And craves his eyes who hath a solid skull.

Exeunt.

ACT III — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter PIETRO THE DUKE, MENDOZA, COUNT EQUATO, and BILIOSO.

PIETRO. 'Tis grown to youth of day.

How shall we waste this light ?

My heart's more heavy than a tyrant's crown. Shall we go hunt ? Prepare for field.

Exit EQUATO.

MEN. Would ye could be merry !

PIETRO. Would God I could ! Mendoza, bid 'em haste. Exit MENDOZA.

I would fain shift place ; O vain relief !

Sad souls may well change place, but not change grief ;

As deer, being struck, fly thorough many soils,<sup>2</sup>

Yet still the shaft sticks fast, so —

BIL. A good old simile, my honest Lord. 10

PIETRO. I am not much unlike to some sick man

That long desired hurtful drink · at last

Swills in and drinks his last, ending at once

Both life and thirst. Oh, would I ne'er had known

<sup>2</sup> Stretches of water in which the deer's scent may be lost.

My own dishonor! Good God, that men should desire
 To search out that, which, being found, kills
 all
 Their joy of life! to taste the tree of knowledge,
 And then be driven from out paradise! —
 Canst give me some comfort?

BIL. My Lord, I have some books which [20 have been dedicated to my honor, and I ne'er read 'em, and yet they had very fine names, Physic for Fortune, Lozenges of Sanctified Sin- cerity: very pretty works of curates, scribes, and schoolmasters. Marry, I remember one Seneca, Lucius Annaeus Seneca —

PIETRO. Out upon him! he writ of temperance and fortitude, yet lived like a voluptuous epicure, and died like an effeminate coward. —
 Haste thee to Florence. 30

Here, take our letters; see 'em seal'd; away!
 Report in private to the honor'd Duke
 His daughter's forc'd disgrace; tell him at length

We know too much; due compliments advance.

There's naught that's safe and sweet but ignorance. Exit.

<sup>3</sup> < Enter BIANCA.

BIL. Madam, I am going ambassador for Florence; 't will be great charges to me.

BIAN. No matter, my Lord, you have the lease of two manors come out <sup>4</sup> next Christmas;
 you may lay your tenants on the greater [40
 rack for it; and when you come home again, I'll teach you how you shall get two hundred pounds a year by your teeth.

BIL. How, madam?

BIAN. Cut off so much from housekeeping:
 that which is saved by the teeth, you know, is got by the teeth.

BIL. 'Fore God, and so I may; I am in wondrous credit, lady.

BIAN. See the use of flattery; I did [50 ever counsel you to flatter greatness, and you have profited well. Any man that will do so shall be sure to be like your Scotch barnacle, now a block,<sup>5</sup> instantly a worm, and presently a great goose: <sup>6</sup> this it is to rot and putrefy in the bosom of greatness.

BIL. Thou art ever my politician. Oh,

<sup>6</sup> A common superstition. The anser scoticus was first an excrescence on a tree; it fell into the water and eventually became a goose.

how happy is that old lord that hath a politician to his young lady! I'll have fifty gentlemen shall attend upon me; marry, [60 the most of them shall be farmers' sons, because they shall bear their own charges; and they shall go apparell'd thus: — in sea-water-green suits, ash-color cloaks, watchet<sup>7</sup> stockings, and popinjay-green feathers. Will not the colors do excellent?

BIAN. Out upon 't! they'll look like citizens riding to their friends at Whitsuntide;
 their apparel just so many several parishes.

BIL. I'll have it so; and Passarello, my [70 fool, shall go along with me; marry, he shall be in velvet.

BIAN. A fool in velvet!

BIL. Ay, 't is common for your fool to wear satin; I'll have mine in velvet.

BIAN. What will you wear, then, my Lord?

BIL. Velvet too; marry, it shall be embroidered, because I'll differ from the fool somewhat. I am horribly troubled with the gout; nothing grieves me, but that my [80 doctor hath forbidden me wine, and you know your ambassador must drink. Didst thou ask thy doctor what was good for the gout?

BIAN. Yes; he said ease, wine, and women were good for it.

BIL. Nay, thou hast such a wit! What was good to cure it, said he?

BIAN. Why, the rack. All your empirics could never do the like cure upon the gout the rack did in England, or your Scotch boot.<sup>8</sup> [90
 The French harlequin will instruct you.

BIL. Surely, I do wonder how thou, having for the most part of thy lifetime been a country body, shouldest have so good a wit.

BIAN. Who, I? Why, I have been a courtier thrice two months.

BIL. So have I this twenty year, and yet there was a gentleman usher called me cox-comb tother day, and to my face too. Was 't not a backbiting rascal? I would I were [100 better travell'd, that I might have been better acquainted with the fashions of several countrymen; but my secretary, I think, he hath sufficiently instructed me.

BIAN. How, my Lord?

BIL. "Marry, my good Lord," quoth he,
 "your Lordship shall ever find amongst a hundred Frenchmen forty hot-shots;<sup>9</sup>

<sup>8</sup> An instrument of torture used in Scotland and France. The rest of the speech = "Any empiric's sany can tell you."

amongst a hundred Spaniards, threescore braggarts; amongst a hundred Dutchmen [110] fourscore drunkards; amongst an hundred Englishmen, fourscore and ten madmen; and amongst an hundred Welshmen" —

BIAN. What, my Lord?

BIL. "Fourscore and nineteen gentlemen." <sup>10</sup>

BIAN. But since you go about a sad embassy, I would have you go in black, my Lord.

BIL. Why, dost think I cannot mourn [120] unless I wear my hat in cypress, <sup>11</sup> like an alderman's heir? That's vile, very old, in faith.

BIAN. I'll learn of you shortly. Oh, we should have a fine gallant of you, should not I instruct you! How will you bear yourself when you come into the Duke of Florence' court?

BIL. Proud enough, and 't will do well enough. As I walk up and down the [130] chamber, I'll spit frowns about me, have a strong perfume in my jerkin, let my beard grow to make me look terrible, salute no man beneath the fourth button; and 't will do excellent.

BIAN. But there is a very beautiful lady there; how will you entertain her?

BIL. I'll tell you that, when the lady hath entertain'd me; but to satisfy thee, here comes the fool. 140

Enter PASSARELLO.

Fool, thou shalt stand for the fair lady.

PASS. Your fool will stand for your lady most willingly and most uprightly.

BIL. I'll salute her in Latin.

PASS. Oh, your fool can understand no Latin.

BIL. Ay, but your lady can.

PASS. Why, then, if your lady take down your fool, your fool will stand no longer for your lady. 150

BIL. A pestilent fool! 'fore God, I think the world be turn'd upside down too.

PASS. Oh, no, sir; for then your lady and all the ladies in the palace should go with their heels upward, and that were a strange sight, you know.

BIL. There be many will repine at my preferment.

PASS. Oh, ay, like the envy of an elder sister, that hath her younger made a lady [160] before her.

BIL. The Duke is wondrous discontented.

PASS. Ay, and more melancholic than a usurer having all his money out at the death of a prince.

BIL. Didst thou see Madam Floria to-day?

PASS. Yes, I found her repairing her face to-day; the red upon the white showed as if her cheeks should have been served in for two dishes of barberries in stewed broth, and [170] the flesh to them a woodcock.

BIL. A bitter fool! <sup>12</sup> Come, madam, this night thou shalt enjoy me freely, and to-morrow for Florence.

Exit [with BIANCA].

PASS. What a natural fool is he that would be a pair of bodies <sup>13</sup> to a woman's petticoat, to be truss'd and pointed to them! Well, I'll dog my Lord; and the word is proper: for when I fawn upon him, he feeds me; when I snap him by the fingers, he spits in my [180] mouth. If a dog's death were not strangling, I had rather be one than a serving man; for the corruption of coin is either the generation of a usurer or a lousy beggar.

[Exit PASSARELLO.] >

SCENE II. <sup>14</sup>

Enter MALEVOLE in some frieze gown, whilst BILIOSO [who also enters] <sup>15</sup> reads his patent.

MAL. I cannot sleep; my eyes' ill-neighboring lids

Will hold no fellowship. O thou pale sober night,

Thou that in sluggish fumes all sense dost steep;

Thou that gives all the world full leave to play,

Unbend'st the feeble veins of sweaty labor! The galley-slave, that all the toilsome day

Tugs at his oar against the stubborn wave,

Straining his rugged veins, snores fast;

The stooping scythe-man, that doth barb <sup>16</sup> the field,

Thou mak'st wink <sup>17</sup> sure; in night all creatures sleep; 10

Only the malcontent, that 'gainst his fate

Repines and quarrels — alas he's Goodman
Tell-clock!

His sallow jaw-bones sink with wasting moan;
Whilst others' beds are down, his pillow's
stone.

BIL. Malevole!

MAL. Elder of Israel, thou honest defect of wicked nature and obstinate ignorance, when did thy wife let thee lie with her?

BIL. I am going ambassador to Florence.

MAL. Ambassador! Now, for thy [20 country's honor, prithee, do not put up mutton and porridge i' thy cloak-bag. Thy young lady wife goes to Florence with thee too, does she not?

BIL. No; I leave her at the palace.

MAL. At the palace! Now, discretion shield, man! For God's love, let's ha' no more cuckolds! Hymen begins to put off his saffron robe: keep thy wife i' the state of grace. Heart a' truth, I would sooner [30 leave my lady singled in a bordello than in the Genoa palace:

Sin there appearing in her sluttish shape,
Would soon grow loathsome, even to blushes'
sense;

Surfeit would [choke] <sup>18</sup> intemperate appetite,
Make the soul scent the rotten breath of lust.
When in an Italian lascivious palace,

A lady guardianless,
Left to the push of all allurements,
The strongest incitements to immodesty, 40
To have her bound, incensed with wanton sweets,

Her veins fill'd high with heating delicates,
Soft rest, sweet music, amorous masquerers,
Lascivious banquets, sin itself gilt o'er,
Strong fantasy tricking up strange delights,
Presenting it dressed pleasingly to sense,
Sense leading it unto the soul, confirm'd
With potent example, impudent custom,
Entic'd by that great bawd, Opportunity —
Thus being prepar'd, clap to her easy ear 50
Youth in good clothes, well-shap'd, rich, Fair-spoken, promising, noble, ardent, blood-full,

Witty, flattering, — Ulysses absent,
O Ithacan, can chastest Penelope hold out?

BIL. Mass, I'll think on't. Farewell.

MAL. Farewell. Take thy wife with thee.

Farewell. —

Exit BILIOSO.

To Florence; um! it may prove good, it
may!

And we may once unmask our brows.

<sup>18</sup> So Dyce; old eds. cloake, cloke.

SCENE III <sup>19</sup>

Enter COUNT CELSO.

CELSO. My honor'd Lord —,

MAL. Celso, peace! How is't? Speak
low: pale fears

Suspect that hedges, walls, and trees have ears.

Speak; how runs all?

CELSO. I' faith, my Lord, that beast with many heads,

The staggering multitude, recoils apace:
Though thorough great men's envy, most men's malice,

Their much-intemperate heat hath banish'd
you,

Yet now they find envy and malice ne'er

Produce faint reformation. 10

The Duke, the too soft Duke, lies as a block,
For which two tugging factions seem to saw;
But still the iron through the ribs they draw.

MAL. I tell thee, Celso, I have ever found
Thy breast most far from shifting cowardice
And fearful baseness; therefore I'll tell thee,
Celso,

I find the wind begins to come about;

I'll shift my suit of fortune.

I know the Florentine, whose only force, <sup>20</sup>

By marrying his proud daughter to this prince, 20

Both banish'd me and made this weak lord
duke,

Will now forsake them all; be sure he will.

I'll lie in ambush for conveniencey,

Upon their severance to confirm myself.

CELSO. Is Ferneze interr'd?

MAL. Of that at leisure — he lives.

CELSO. But how stands Mendoza? How is't with him?

MAL. Faith, like a pair of snuffers, snibs <sup>21</sup> filth in other men, and retains it in itself. [30

CELSO. He does fly from public notice, methinks, as a hare does from hounds; the feet whereon he flies betray him.

MAL. I can track him, Celso.

O, my disguise fools him most powerfully!

For that I seem a desperate malcontent,
He fain would clasp with me; he is the true slave

That will put on the most affected grace
For some vild second cause.

<sup>20</sup> Whose power alone.

<sup>21</sup> Rebukes.

Enter MENDOZA.

CELSO. He's here.

MAL. Give place. [39
Exit CELSO.

Ill, ho, ho, ho! art there, old truepenny?
Where hast thou spent thyself this morning?
I see flattery in thine eyes, and damnation in thy soul. Ha, thou huge rascal!

MEN. Thou art very merry.

MAL. As a scholar, futuens gratis. How doth the devil go with thee now?

MEN. Malevole, thou art an arrant knave.

MAL. Who, I? I have been a sergeant,
man.

MEN. Thou art very poor. 50

MAL. As Job, an alchemist, or a poet.

MEN. The Duke hates thee.

MAL. As Irishmen do bum-cracks.

MEN. Thou has lost his amity.

MAL. As pleasing as maids lose their virginity.

MEN. Would thou wert of a lusty spirit!
Would thou wert noble!

MAL. Why, sure my blood gives me I am noble, sure I am of noble kind; for I find [60 myself possessed with all their qualities: love dogs, dice, and drabs, scorn wit in stuff-clothes; have beat my shoemaker, knock'd my seamstress, cuckold' my 'pothecary, and undone my tailor. Noble! why not? since the stoic <sup>22</sup> said, Neminem servum non ex regibus, neminem regem non ex servis esse oriundum; only busy Fortune touses, and the provident Chances <sup>23</sup> blends them together.
I'll give you a simile. Did you e'er see a [70 well with two buckets: whilst one comes up full to be emptied, another goes down empty to be filled? Such is the state of all humanity.
Why, look you, I may be the son of some duke;
for, believe me, intemperate lascivious bastardy makes nobility doubtful; I have a lusty daring heart, Mendoza.

MEN. Let's grasp; I do like thee infinitely.
Wilt enact one thing for me?

MAL. Shall I get by it? — ([MENDOZA] [80 gives him his purse.) Command me; I am thy slave, beyond death and hell.

MEN. Murder the Duke.

MAL. My heart's wish, my soul's desire, my fantasy's dream, my blood's longing, the only height of my hopes! How, O God, how!
Oh, how my united spirits throng together,
[to] <sup>24</sup> strengthen my resolve!

MEN. The Duke is now a-hunting.

MAL. Excellent, admirable, as the Devil [90 would have it! Lend me, lend me, rapier, pistol, crossbow; so, so, I'll do it.

MEN. Then we agree.

MAL. As Lent and fishmongers. Come,
a-cap-a-pe, how? Inform.

MEN. Know that this weak-brained Duke, who only stands

On Florence' stilts, hath out of witless zeal
Made me his heir, and secretly confirmed
The wreath to me after his life's full point.

MAL. Upon what merit?

MEN. Merit! by Heaven, I horn him.
Only Ferneze's death gave me state's life. [101
Tut, we are politic; he must not live now.

MAL. No reason, marry; but how must he die now?

MEN. My utmost project is to murder the Duke, that I might have his state, because he makes me his heir; to banish the Duchess, that I might be rid of a cunning Lacedaemo-nian, because I know Florence will forsake her;
and then to marry Maria, the banished [110
Duke Altofront's wife, that her friends might strengthen me and my faction: that is all,
law.

MAL. Do you love Maria?

MEN. Faith, no great affection, but as wise men do love great women, to ennoble their blood and augment their revenue. To accomplish this now, thus now. The Duke is in the forest, next the sea; single him, kill him, hurl him i' the main, and proclaim thou [120
sawest wolves eat him.

MAL. Um! Not so good. Methinks,
when he is slain,
To get some hypocrite, some dangerous
wretch

That's muffled [o'er] <sup>25</sup> with feigned holiness,
To swear he heard the Duke on some steep cliff
Lament his wife's dishonor, and, in an agony
Of his heart's torture, hurled his groaning sides
Into the swoln sea, — this circumstance
Well made sounds probable; and hereupon
The Duchess —

MEN. May well be banished. 130
O unpeerable invention! rare!
Thou god of policy! it honeys me.

MAL. Then fear not for the wife of Alto-
front;

I'll close <sup>26</sup> to her.

MEN. Thou shalt, thou shalt. Our Excellency is pleas'd:

<sup>25</sup> Old eds. or.

<sup>26</sup> Conclude matters.

Why wert not thou an emperor? When we Are duke, I'll make thee some great man,
sure.

MAL. Nay. Make me some rich knave, and I'll make myself
Some great man.

MEN. In thee be all my spirit;
Retain ten souls, unite thy virtual powers; 140
Resolve; ha, remember greatness! Heart,
farewell;
The fate of all my hopes in thee doth dwell.

[Exit.]

Re-enter CELSO.

MAL. Celso, didst hear? — O Heaven, didst hear
Such devilish mischief? Sufferest thou the
world
Carouse damnation even with greedy swallow,
And still dost wink, still does thy vengeance slumber?
If now thy brows are clear, when will they thunder? [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV <sup>27</sup>

Enter PIETRO, FERRARDO, PREPASSO, and three Pages.

FER. The dogs are at a fault.

Cornets like horns.

PIETRO. Would God nothing but the dogs were at it! Let the deer pursue <sup>28</sup> safely, the dogs follow the game, and do you follow the dogs; as for me, 't is unfit one beast <sup>29</sup> should hunt another; I ha' one chaseth me; an't please you, I would be rid of you a little.

FER. Would your grief would as soon leave you as we, to quietness!

PIETRO. I thank you. — 10

Exeunt [FERRARDO and PREPASSO].

Boy, what dost thou dream of now?

1 PAGE. Of a dry summer, my Lord; for here's a hot world towards. But, my Lord,
I had a strange dream last night.

PIETRO. What strange dream?

1 PAGE. Why, methought I pleased you with singing, and then I dreamt that you gave me that short sword.

PIETRO. Prettily begg'd: hold thee, I'll prove thy dream true; take 't. 20

[Giving sword.]

1 PAGE. My duty. But still I dreamt on, my Lord; and methought, an't shall please

<sup>27</sup> A forest near the sea.

<sup>29</sup> Alluding to his cuckoldom, which makes him a horned beast.

your Excellency, you would needs out of your royal bounty give me that jewel in your hat.

PIETRO. Oh, thou didst but dream, boy; do not believe it: dreams prove not always true;
they may hold in a short sword, but not in a jewel. But now, sir, you dreamt you had pleased me with singing. Make that true, as I ha' made the other. 30

1 PAGE. Faith, my Lord, I did but dream;
and dreams, you say, prove not always true;
they may hold in a good sword, but not in a good song. The truth is, I ha' lost my voice.

PIETRO. Lost thy voice! How?

1 PAGE. With dreaming, faith; but here's a couple of sirenical rascals shall enchant ye.
What shall they sing, my good Lord?

PIETRO. Sing of the nature of women; and then the song shall be surely full of variety, [40 old crotchets, and most sweet closes <sup>30</sup>; it shall be humorous, grave, fantastic, amorous, melancholy, sprightly, one in all, and all in one.

1 PAGE. All in one!

PIETRO. By'r lady, too many. Sing! my speech grows culpable of unthrifty idleness
— sing!

Song [by 2 and 3 Pages].

SCENE V <sup>31</sup>

Enter MALEVOLE, with crossbow and pistol.

[PIETRO.] Ah, so; so; sing. — I am heavy.<sup>32</sup>
Walk off; I shall talk in my sleep; walk off.

Exeunt Pages.

MAL. Brief, brief! Who? The Duke! Good
Heaven, that fools

Should stumble upon greatness! — Do not sleep, Duke;

Give ye good morrow. You <sup>33</sup> must be brief,
Duke:

I am fee'd to murder thee. — Start not. — Mendoza,

Mendoza hired me; here's his gold, his pistol,
Crossbow, sword: 't is all as firm as earth.

O fool, fool, chok'd with the common maze
Of easy idiots, credulity! 10

Make him thine heir! What, thy sworn mur-derer!

PIETRO. O, can it be?

MAL. Can!

PIETRO. Discovered he not Ferneze?

MAL. Yes, but why? but why? For love to
thee?

Much, much! To be reveng'd upon his rival,

<sup>32</sup> Drowsy.

<sup>33</sup> So Q.; om. Q1.

Who had thrust his jaws awry ;
Who being slain, supposed by thine own hands,
Defended by his sword, made thee most loath-
some,

Him most gracious with thy loose Princess :
Thou, closely yielding egress and regress to her,
Madest him heir ; whose hot unquiet lust [20 Straight tous'd<sup>34</sup> thy sheets, and now would seize thy state.

Politician ! Wise man ! Death ! to be Led to the stake like a bull by the horns ;
To make even kindness cut a gentle throat !
Life, why art thou numb'd ? Thou foggy dul-
ness, speak :

Lives not more faith in a home-thrusting
tongue

Than in those fencing tip-tap courtiers ?

Enter CELSO, with a hermit's gown and beard.

[PIETRO.]<sup>35</sup> Lord Malevole, if this be true—

MAL. If ! Come, shade thee with this disguise. If ! Thou shalt handle it ; he shall [30 thank thee for killing thyself. Come, follow my directions, and thou shalt see strange sleights.

PIETRO. World, whither wilt thou ?

MAL. Why, to the Devil. Come, the morn grows late ;
A steady quickness is the soul of state.<sup>36</sup>

Exeunt.

ACT IV — SCENE I<sup>37</sup>

Enter MAQUERELLE, knocking at the ladies' door.

MAQ. Medam,<sup>38</sup> medam, are you stirring, medam ? If you be stirring, medam, — if I thought I should disturb ye —

[Enter Page.]

PAGE. My lady is up, forsooth.

MAQ. A pretty boy, faith. How old art
thou ?

PAGE. I think fourteen.

MAQ. Nay, an ye be in the teens — are ye a gentleman born ? Do you know me ? My name is Medam Maquerelle ; I lie in the [10 old cunny court.

<sup>37</sup> The palace. An antechamber to the apartments of the ladies in waiting.

<sup>38</sup> Evidently an affected pronunciation.

Enter BIANCA and EMILIA.

[PAGE.] See, here the ladies.

BIAN. A fair day to ye, Maquerelle.

EMIL. Is the Duchess up yet, sentinel ?

MAQ. O ladies, the most abominable mis-chance ! O dear ladies the most piteous disaster ! Ferneze was taken last night in the Duchess' chamber. Alas, the Duke catch'd him and kill'd him !

BIAN. Was he found in bed ? 20

MAQ. Oh, no ; but the villainous certainty is the door was not bolted, the tongue-tied hatch held his peace ; so the naked troth is, he was found in his shirt, whilst I, like an arrant beast, lay in the outward chamber, heard nothing ; and yet they came by me in the dark, and yet I felt them not, like a senseless creature as I was. O beauties, look to your buskpoints ;<sup>39</sup> if not chastely, yet charily : be sure the door be bolted. — Is your lord gone to Florence ? 31

BIAN. Yes, Maquerelle.

MAQ. I hope you'll find the discretion to purchase a fresh gown for his return. — Now, by my troth, beauties, I would ha' ye once wise. He loves ye, pish ! He is witty ; bubble ! Fair-proportioned ; mew ! Nobly-born ; wind ! Let this be still your fix'd position : esteem me every man according to his good gifts, and so ye shall ever remain [40 most dear and most worthy to be most dear
ladies.

EMIL. Is the Duke return'd from hunting
yet ?

MAQ. They say not yet.

BIAN. 'T is now in midst of day.

EMIL. How bears the Duchess with this blemish now ?

MAQ. Faith, boldly ; strongly defies defame, as one that has a duke to her father.
And there's a note to you : be sure of a stout friend in a corner, that may always awe your husband. Mark the havior of the [50
Duchess now : she dares defame ; cries,
" Duke, do what thou canst, I'll quit<sup>40</sup> mine honor ;" nay, as one confirmed in her own virtue against ten thousand mouths that mutter her disgrace, she's presently for dances.

Enter FERRARDO.

BIAN. For dances !

MAQ. Most true.

<sup>39</sup> The tagged laces by which the busk (the upright piece of whalebone in the front of the stays) was fastened.

<sup>40</sup> Acquit.

EMIL. Most strange.

[BIAN.]<sup>41</sup> See, here's my servant, young Ferrardo. How many servants think'st [60 thou I have, Maquerelle?

MAQ. The more, the merrier. 'T was well said, use your servants as you do your smocks: have many, use one, and change often; for that's most sweet and courtlike.

FER. Save ye, fair ladies! Is the Duke return'd?

BIAN. Sweet sir, no voice of him as yet in court.

FER. 'T is very strange.

BIAN. And how like you my servant, Maquerelle?

MAQ. I think he could hardly draw [70 Ulysses' bow; but, by my fidelity, were his nose narrower, his eyes broader, his hands thinner, his lips thicker, his legs bigger, his feet lesser, his hair blacker, and his teeth whiter, he were a tolerable sweet youth, i' faith. An he will come to my chamber, I will read him the fortune of his beard.

Cornets sound.

FER. Not yet, return'd! I fear — but the Duchess approacheth.

SCENE II<sup>42</sup>

Enter MENDOZA supporting the DUCHESS, [and] GUERRINO: the Ladies that are on the stage rise: FERRARDO ushers in the DUCHESS, and then takes a Lady to tread a measure.<sup>43</sup>

AUR. We will dance. Music! — we will dance.

GUER. Les quanto,<sup>44</sup> lady, Pensez bien, Passa regis, or Bianca's brawl?

AUR. We have forgot the brawl.

FER. [aside] So soon? 'T is wonder.

GUER. Why, 't is but two singles on the left, two on the right, three doubles forward, a traverse of six round; do this twice, three singles side, galliard trick-of-twenty, coranto-pace; [10 a figure of eight, three singles broken down, come up, meet, two doubles, fall back, and then honor.

AUR. O Daedalus, thy maze! I have quite forgot it.

<sup>44</sup> There is a reference (cited by Dyce) in Munday's Banquet of Dainty Concerts to "a courtlie daunce, called Les Quanto."

MAQ. Trust me, so have I, saving the falling back, and then honor.

Enter PREPASSO.

AUR. Music, music!

PREP. Who saw the Duke? the Duke?

Enter EQUATO.

AUR. Music!

20

EQUATO. The Duke? is the Duke returned?

AUR. Music!

Enter CELSO.

CELSO. The Duke is either quite invisible, or else is not.

AUR. We are not pleased with your intrusion upon our private retirement; we are not pleased; you have forgot yourselves.

CELSO. Boy, thy master? Where's the Duke? [29

PAGE. Alas, I left him burying the earth with his spread joyless limbs; he told me he was heavy, would sleep; bid me walk off, for that the strength of fantasy oft made him talk in his dreams. I straight obeyed, nor ever saw him since; but whereso'er he is, he's sad.

AUR. Music, sound high, as is our heart! Sound high!

SCENE III<sup>45</sup>

Enter MALEVOLE, and PIETRO disguised like an hermit.

MAL. The Duke — peace! — the Duke is dead.

AUR. Music!

MAL. Is't music?

MEN. Give proof.

FER. How?

CELSO. Where?

PREP. When?

MAL. Rest in peace, as the Duke does; quietly sit; for my own part, I beheld him [10 but dead; that's all. Marry, here's one can give you a more particular account of him.

MEN. Speak holy father, nor let any brow Within this presence fright thee from the truth;

Speak confidently and freely.

AUR.

We attend.

<sup>45</sup> The same.

PIETRO. Now had the mounting sun's all-ripening wings
Swept the cold sweat of night from earth's dank breast,

When I, whom men call Hermit of the Rock,
Forsook my cell, and clamber'd up a cliff, 19
Against whose base the heady Neptune dash'd
His high-curl'd brows; there 't was I eas'd my limbs.

When, lo! my entrails melted with the moan
Some one, who far 'bove me was climb'd, did
make —

I shall offend.

MEN. Not.

AUR. On.

PIETRO. Methinks I hear him yet: "O female faith!

Go sow the ingrateful sand, and love a woman!
And do I live to be the scoff of men?

To be the wittol-cuckold, even to hug 30
My poison? Thou knowest, O truth!

Sooner hard steel will melt with southern wind,
A seaman's whistle calm the ocean,

A town on fire 46 be extinct with tears,
Than women, vow'd to bluishless impudence,

With sweet behavior and soft minioning 47
Will turn from that where appetite is fix'd.

O powerful blood! how thou dost slave their
soul!

I wash'd an Ethiop, who, for recompense, 39
Sulli'd my name; and must I, then, be forc'd

To walk, to live thus black? Must! must! fie!
He that can bear with 'must,' he cannot die."

With that he sigh'd [so] 48 passionately deep,
That the dull air even groan'd; at last he cries,

"Sink shame in seas, sink deep enough!" so
dies;

For then I viewed his body fall and souse
Into the foamy main. Oh, then I saw,

That which methinks I see, it was the Duke;
Whom straight the nicer-stomach'd sea belch'd

up;
But then — 50

MAL. Then came I in; but, 'las, all was too late!

For even straight he sunk.

PIETRO. Such was the Duke's sad fate.

CELSO. A better fortune to our Duke Mendoza!

OMNES. Mendoza! Cornets flourish.

MEN. A guard, a guard!

Enter a Guard.

We, full of hearty tears,

For our good father's loss,
(For so we well may call him
Who did beseech your loves for our succession),

Cannot so lightly over-jump his death
As leave his woes revengeless. — (to AURELIA)

Woman of shame, 60

We banish thee for ever to the place
From whence this good man comes; nor permit,

On death, unto [thy] 49 body any ornament;
But, base as was thy life, depart away.

AUR. Ungrateful!

MEN. Away!

AUR. Villain, hear me!

PREPASSO and GUERRINO lead away
the DUCHESS.

MEN. Begone! — My Lords,
Address to 50 public council; 't is most fit:
The train of fortune is borne up by wit.

Away! our presence shall be sudden; haste.

All depart saving MENDOZA, MAL-
EVOLE, and PIETRO.

MAL. Now, you egregious devil! Ha, [70
ye murdering politician! How dost, Duke?
How dost look now? Brave Duke, i' faith.

MEN. How did you kill him?

MAL. Slatted his brains out; then sous'd him in the briny sea.

MEN. Brain'd him, and drown'd him too?

MAL. Oh, 't was best, sure work; for he that strikes a great man, let him strike home, or else 'ware, he'll prove no man.
Shoulder not a huge fellow, unless you may [80 be sure to lay him in the kennel.

MEN. A most sound brain-pan! I'll make you both emperors.

MAL. Make us Christians, make us Christians.

MEN. I'll hoist ye, ye shall mount.

MAL. To the gallows, say ye? Come:
praemium incertum petit, certum scelus. 51 How stands the progress?

MEN. Here, take my ring unto the citadel; 90

Have entrance to Maria, the grave duchess
Of hanish'd Altofront. Tell her we love her;
Omit no circumstance to grace our person:
do't.

<sup>46</sup> Dissyllabic.

<sup>47</sup> I.e., being treated as a minion or darling.
(Dyce.)

<sup>51</sup> Uncertain the reward he seeks, certain the guilt. (Seneca, Phoenissae, l. 632.)

MAL. I'll make an excellent pander. Duke, farewell : 'dieu, adieu, Duke.

MEN. Take Maquerelle with thee ; for 't is found None cuts a diamond but a diamond.

Exit MALEVOLE.

Hermit,

Thou art a man for me, my confessor !
O thou selected spirit, born for my good,
Sure thou wouldst make 100
An excellent elder in a deformed <sup>52</sup> church.
Come, we must be inward, <sup>53</sup> thou and I all one.

PIETRO. I am glad I was ordained for ye.

MEN. Go to, then ; thou must know that Malevole is a strange villain ; dangerous, very dangerous. You see how broad 'a speaks
— a gross-jawed rogue. I would have thee poison him. He's like a corn upon my great toe — I cannot go for him ; <sup>54</sup> he must be cored out, he must. Wilt do 't, ha ? 110

PIETRO. Anything, anything.

MEN. Heart of my life ! Thus, then — to the citadel ;
Thou shalt consort with this Malevole ;
There being at supper, poison him. It shall be laid
Upon Maria, who yields love or dies.
Scud quick.

PIETRO. [Like lightning] : <sup>55</sup> good deeds crawl, but mischief flies. Exit PIETRO.

Re-enter MALEVOLE.

MAL. Your Devilship's ring has no virtue :
the buff-captain, the sallow Westphalian gammon-faced zaza <sup>56</sup> cries, "Stand out !" [120 Must have a stiffer warrant, or no pass into the castle of comfort.

MEN. Command our sudden letter. —
Not enter ! sha't <sup>57</sup> ; what place is there in Genoa but thou shalt ? into my heart, into my very heart : come, let's love ; we must love,
we two, soul and body.

MAL. How didst like the hermit ? A strange hermit, sirrah.

MEN. A dangerous fellow, very peril- [130
ous. He must die.

MAL. Ay, he must die.

MEN. Thou 'st <sup>58</sup> kill him. We are wise ;
we must be wise.

<sup>54</sup> I cannot walk on account of him.

<sup>56</sup> ? Low German Sasse = Saxon. (Conj. Prof.
William Kurrelmeyer.)

<sup>58</sup> Thou must.

MAL. And provident.

MEN. Yea, provident : beware an hypocrite ;

A churchman once corrupted, oh, avoid !

A fellow that makes religion his stalking-horse. <sup>59</sup>

He breeds a plague.

Thou shalt poison him.

MAL. Ho, 't is wondrous necessary : how ?

MEN. You both go jointly to the citadel ;
There sup, there poison him ; and Maria, [141
Because she is our opposite, <sup>60</sup> shall bear
The sad suspect ; <sup>61</sup> on which she dies or loves us.

MAL. I run.

Exit MALEVOLE.

MEN. We that are great, our sole self-good still moves us.

They shall die both, for their deserts crave
more

Than we can recompense : their presence still Imbraids <sup>62</sup> our fortunes with beholdingness, Which we abhor ; like deed, not doer. Then conclude,

They live not to cry out "Ingratitude !" [150
One stick burns tother ; steel cuts steel alone :
'T is good trust few ; but, oh, 't is best trust none ! Exit.

SCENE IV <sup>63</sup>

Enter MALEVOLE and PIETRO, still disguised, at several doors.

MAL. How do you ? How dost, Duke ?

PIETRO. Oh, let
The last day fall ! drop, drop on our cursed heads !

Let Heaven unclasp itself, vomit forth flames.

MAL. Oh, do not [rant], <sup>64</sup> do not turn player ; there's more of them than can well live one by another already. What, art an infidel still ?

PIETRO. I am amaz'd, struck in a swoon with wonder : I am commanded to poison
thee — [10

MAL. I am commanded to poison thee at supper —

PIETRO. At supper !

MAL. In the citadel —

PIETRO. In the citadel !

MAL. Cross-capers ! tricks ! Truth a'
Heaven ! <he> would discharge us as boys

do eldern guns, one pellet to strike out another.
Of what faith art now?

PIETRO. All is damnation; wickedness extreme : [20

There is no faith in man.

MAL. In none but usurers and brokers; they deceive no man: men take 'em for blood-suckers, and so they are. Now, God deliver me from my friends!

PIETRO. Thy friends!

MAL. Yes, from my friends; for from mine enemies I'll deliver myself. Oh, cutthroat friendship is the rankest villainy! Mark this Mendoza; mark him for a villain: but [30 Heaven will send a plague upon him for a rogue.

PIETRO. O world!

MAL. World! 't is the only region of death, the greatest shop of the Devil; the cruellest prison of men, out of the which none pass without paying their dearest breath for a fee; there's nothing perfect in it but extreme, extreme calamity, such as comes yonder.

SCENE V <sup>65</sup>

Enter AURELIA, two Halberts before and two after, supported by CELSO and FERRARDO; AURELIA in base mourning attire.

AUR. To banishment! led on to banishment!

PIETRO. Lady, the blessedness of repentance to you!

AUR. Why? why? I can desire nothing but death,

Nor deserve anything but hell. If Heaven Should give sufficiency of grace to clear My soul, it would make Heaven graceless: My sins would make the stock of mercy poor; Oh, they would tire Heaven's goodness to reclaim them!

Judgment is just, yet from <sup>66</sup> that vast villain; But, sure, he shall not miss sad punishment [10 'Fore he shall rule. — On to my cell of shame!

PIETRO. My cell 't is, lady; where, instead of masks, Music, tilts, tourneys, and such court-like shows,

The hollow murmur of the checkless winds Shall groan again; whilst the unquiet sea Shakes the whole rock with foamy battery. There usherless the air comes in and out: The rheumy vault will force your eyes to weep,

<sup>66</sup> Distant from.

Whilst you behold true desolation.

A rocky barrenness shall pierce <sup>67</sup> your eyes, [20 Where all at once one reaches, where he stands. With brows the roof, both walls with both his hands.

AUR. It is too good. — Blessed spirit of my lord,

Oh, in what orb so'er thy soul is thron'd,

Behold me worthily most miserable!

Oh, let the anguish of my contrite spirit

Entreat some reconciliation!

If not, oh, joy, triumph in my just grief!

Death is the end of woes and tears' relief.

PIETRO. Belike your lord not lov'd you, was unkind.

AUR. O heaven! As the soul [loves] <sup>68</sup> the body, so lov'd he:

'T was death to him to part my presence; Heaven

To see me pleased. Yet I, like a wretch given o'er

To hell, brake all the sacred rites of marriage, To clip a base, ungentle, faithless villain;

O God! a very pagan reprobate —

What should I say? — ungrateful, throws me out,

For whom I lost soul, body, fame, and honor.

But 't is most fit: why should a better fate

Attend on any who forsake chaste sheets, [40

Fly the embrace of a devoted heart,

Join'd by a solemn vow 'fore God and man,

To taste the brackish <sup>69</sup> [flood] <sup>70</sup> of beastly lust In an adulterous touch? — O ravenous immodesty!

Insatiate impudence of appetite!

Look, here's your end; for mark, what sap in dust,

What sin in good, even so much love in lust.

Joy to thy ghost, sweet Lord! pardon to me!

CELSO. 'T is the Duke's pleasure this night you rest in court.

AUR. Soul, lurk in shades; run, shame, from brightsome skies; 50

In night the blind man misseeth not his eyes.

Exit [with CELSO, FERRARDO, and Halberts].

MAL. Do not weep, kind cuckold; take comfort, man; thy betters have been beccos: <sup>71</sup> Agamemnon, emperor of all the merry Greeks, that tickled all the true Trojans, was a cornuto; Prince Arthur, that cut off twelve kings' beards, was a cornuto; Hercules, whose back

bore up heaven, and got forty wenches with child in one night, —

PIETRO. Nay, 't was fifty. 60

MAL. Faith, forty's enow, a' conscience, — yet was a cornuto. Patience; mischief grows proud. Be wise.

PIETRO. Thou pinchest too deep; art too keen upon me.

MAL. Tut, a pitiful surgeon makes a dangerous sore; I'll tent <sup>72</sup> thee to the ground. Thinkest I'll sustain myself by flattering thee, because thou art a prince? I had rather follow a drunkard, and live by licking up his [70 vomit, than by servile flattery.

PIETRO. Yet great men ha' done 't.

MAL. Great slaves fear better than love, born naturally for a coal-basket; <sup>73</sup> though the common usher of princes' presence, Fortune, hath blindly given them better place. I am vowed to be thy affliction.

PIETRO. Prithee, be;

I love much misery, and be thou son to me. [79

MAL. Because you are an usurping duke. —

Enter BILIOSO.

Your Lordship's well return'd from Florence.

BIL. Well return'd, I praise my horse.

MAL. What news from the Florentines?

BIL. I will conceal the Great Duke's pleasure; only this was his charge: his pleasure is that his daughter die, Duke Pietro be banished for [publishing] <sup>74</sup> his blood's dishonor, and that Duke Altofront be reaccepted. This is all; but I hear Duke Pietro is dead.

MAL. Ay, and Mendoza is duke. What [90 will you do?

BIL. Is Mendoza strongest?

MAL. Yet he is.

BIL. Then yet I'll hold with him.

MAL. But if that Altofront should turn straight again?

BIL. Why, then, I would turn straight again.

'T is good run still with him that has most might:

I had rather stand with wrong, than fall with right.

MAL. What religion will you be of now? [100

BIL. Of the Duke's religion, when I know what it is.

MAL. O Hercules!

<sup>72</sup> Probe.

BIL. Hercules! Hercules was the son of Jupiter and Alcmena.

MAL. Your Lordship is a very wit-all.

BIL. Wittol!

MAL. Aye, all-wit.

BIL. Amphitryo[n] was a cuckold.

MAL. Your Lordship sweats; your [110 young lady will get you a cloth for your old Worship's brows. (Exit BILIOSO.) Here's a fellow to be damned; this is his inviolable maxim: flatter the greatest and oppress the least — a whoreson flesh-fly, that still gnaws upon the lean gall'd backs.

PIETRO. Why dost, then, salute him?

MAL. I' faith, as bawds go to church — for fashion sake. Come, be not confounded; thou art but in danger to lose a dukedom. [120 Think this: this earth is the only grave and Golgotha wherein all things that live must rot; 't is but the draught wherein the heavenly bodies discharge their corruption; the very muck-hill on which the sublunary orbs cast their excrements. Man is the slime of this dung pit, and princes are the governors of these men; for, for our souls, they are as free as emperors, all of one piece; there goes but a pair of shears betwixt <sup>75</sup> an emperor and [130 the son of a bagpiper: only the dyeing, dressing, pressing, glossing, makes the difference. Now, what art thou like to lose? A gaoler's office to keep men in bonds, Whilst toil and treason all life's good confounds.

PIETRO. I here renounce for ever regency! O Altofront, I wrong thee to supplant thy right,

To trip thy heels up with a devilish sleight! For which I now from throne am thrown: world-tricks abjure;

For vengeance, though 't comes slow, yet it comes sure. 140

Oh, I am chang'd! for here, 'fore the dread Power,

In true contrition, I do dedicate My breath to solitary holiness, My lips to prayer, and my breast's care shall be Restoring Altofront to regency.

MAL. Thy vows are heard, and we accept thy faith. Undisguiseth himself.

Re-enter FERNEZE and CELSO.

Banish amazement. Come, we four must stand

<sup>75</sup> I.e., from the same cloth are cut.

Full shock of fortune. Be not so wonder-stricken.

PIETRO. Doth Ferneze live?

FER. For your pardon. 150

PIETRO. Pardon and love. Give leave to recollect

My thoughts dispers'd in wild astonishment.
My vows stand fix'd in Heaven, and from hence

I crave all love and pardon.

MAL. Who doubts of Providence,
That sees this change? A hearty faith to all!
He needs must rise [who]<sup>76</sup> can no lower fall.
For still impetuous vicissitude
Touseth the world; then let no maze intrude
Upon your spirits: wonder not I rise; 160
For who can sink that close can temporize?
The time grows ripe for action: I'll detect
My privat'st plot, lest ignorance fear suspect.
Let's close to counsel, leave the rest to fate:
Mature discretion is the life of state. Exeunt.

ACT V — <SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter BILIOSO and PASSARELLO.

BIL. Fool, how dost thou like my calf in a long stocking?

PASS. An excellent calf, my Lord.

BIL. This calf hath been a reveller this twenty year. When Monsieur Gundi lay here ambassador, I could have carried a lady up and down at arm's end in a platter; and I can tell you, there were those at that time who, to try the strength of a man's back and his arm, would be coister'd.<sup>2</sup> I have measured calves with most of the palace, and they come nothing near me; besides, I think there be not many armors in the arsenal will fit me, especially for the headpiece. I'll tell thee —

PASS. What, my Lord?

BIL. I can eat stew'd broth as it comes seething off the fire, or a custard as it comes reeking out of the oven; and I think there are not many lords can do it. A good pomander,<sup>3</sup> a little decayed in the scent: but six [20 grains of musk, ground with rose-water and temper'd with a little civet, shall fetch her<sup>4</sup> again presently.

PASS. Oh, ay, as a bawd with aqua-vitae.

BIL. And, what, dost thou rail upon the ladies as thou wert wont?

PASS. I were better roast a live cat, and might do it with more safety. I am as secret to [them]<sup>5</sup> as their painting. There's Maquerelle, oldest bawd and a perpetual beggar — [30 did you never hear of her trick to be known in the city?

BIL. Never.

PASS. Why, she gets all the picture-makers to draw her picture; when they have done, she most courtly finds fault with them one after another, and never fetcheth them. They, in revenge of this, execute her in pictures as they do in Germany, and hang her in their shops. By this means is she better [40 known to the stinkards<sup>6</sup> than if she had been five times carted.<sup>7</sup>

BIL. 'Fore God, an excellent policy.

PASS. Are there any revels to-night, my Lord?

BIL. Yes.

PASS. Good my Lord, give me leave to break a fellow's pate that hath abused me.

BIL. Whose pate?

PASS. Young Ferrardo, my Lord. 50

BIL. Take heed: he's very valiant; I have known him fight eight quarrels in five days, believe it.

PASS. Oh, is he so great a quarreller? Why, then, he's an arrant coward.

BIL. How prove you that?

PASS. Why, thus: he that quarrels seeks to fight; and he that seeks to fight seeks to die; and he that seeks to die seeks never to fight more; and he that will quarrel, [60 and seeks means never to answer a man more, I think he's a coward.

BIL. Thou canst prove anything.

PASS. Anything but a rich knave; for I can flatter no man.

BILL. Well, be not drunk, good fool. I shall see you anon in the presence.

[Exeunt.]>

SCENE [II]<sup>8</sup>

Enter MALEVOLE and MAQUERELLE, at several doors opposite, singing.

MAL. "The Dutchman for a drunkard," —

MAQ. "The Dane for golden locks," —

<sup>8</sup> Before the citadel.

MAL. "The Irishman for usquebaugh," —

MAQ. "The Frenchman for the ( )."<sup>9</sup>

MAL. Oh, thou art a blessed creature! Had I a modest woman to conceal, I would put her to thy custody; for no reasonable creature would ever suspect her to be in thy company. Ha, thou art a melodious Maquerelle — thou picture of a woman, and substance of a beast!

MAQ. O fool, will ye be ready anon to go with me to the revels? The hall will be so pest' red<sup>11</sup> anon.

PASS. Ay, as the country is with attorneys.

MAL. What hast thou there, fool?

PASS. Wine; I have learned to drink since I went with my Lord Ambassador; I'll drink to the health of Madam Maquerelle.

MAL. Why, thou wast wont to rail [20 upon her.

PASS. Ay; but since I borrow'd money of her; I'll drink to her health now, as gentlemen visit brokers, or as knights send venison to the City, either to take up more money, or to procure longer forbearance.

MAL. Give me the bowl. I drink a health to Altofront, our deposed Duke.

PASS. I'll take it [drinks]: — so! Now I'll begin a health to Madam Maquerelle. [30 [Drinks.]

MAL. Pew! I will not pledge her.

PASS. Why, I pledg'd your lord.

MAL. I care not.

PASS. Not pledge Madam Maquerelle! Why, then, will I spew up your lord again with this fool's finger.

MAL. Hold; I'll take it. [Drinks.]

MAQ. Now thou hast drunk my health, fool, I am friends with thee.

PASS. Art? art? 40

"When Griffon<sup>12</sup> saw the reconciled quean Offering about his neck her arms to cast, He threw off sword and heart's malignant [spleen],<sup>13</sup>

And lovely her below the loins embrac'd." — Adieu, Madam Maquerelle. Exit.>

MAL. And how dost thou think a' this transformation of state now?

<sup>9</sup> So in old eds. The missing word is, of course, "pox."

MAQ. Verily, very well; for we women always note the falling of the one is the rising of the other; some must be fat, some must [50 be lean; some must be fools, and some must be lords; some must be knaves, and some must be officers; some must be beggars, some must be knights; some must be cuckolds, and some must be citizens. As for example, I have two court-dogs, the most fawning curs, the one called Watch, th' other Catch. Now I, like Lady Fortune, sometimes love this dog, sometimes raise that dog, sometimes favor Watch, most commonly fancy Catch. [60 Now, that dog which I favor I feed; and he's so ravenous that what I give he never chaws it, gulps it down whole, without any relish of what he has, but with a greedy expectation of what he shall have. The other dog now —

MAL. No more dog, sweet Maquerelle, no more dog. And what hope hast thou of the Duchess Maria? Will she stoop to the Duke's lure? <sup>14</sup> Will she come, think'st?

MAQ. Let me see, where's the sign now? [70 Ha' ye e'er a calendar? Where's the sign, throw you?

MAL. Sign! why is there any moment in that?

MAQ. O, believe me, a most secret power: look ye, a Chaldean or an Assyrian, I am sure 't was a most sweet Jew, told me, court any woman in the right sign, you shall not miss. But you must take her in the right vein then; as, when the sign is in Pisces, a [80 fishmonger's wife is very sociable; in Cancer, a precisian's <sup>15</sup> wife is very flexible; in Capricorn, a merchant's wife hardly holds out; in Libra, a lawyer's wife is very tractable, especially if her husband be at the term; only in Scorpio 't is very dangerous meddling. Has the Duke sent any jewel, any rich stones?

Enter Captain.

MAL. Ay, I think those are the best signs to take a lady in.<sup>16</sup> By your favor, signior, I must discourse with the Lady [90 Maria, Altofront's Duchess; I must enter for the Duke.

CAPT. She here shall give you interview. I received the guardship of this citadel from the good Altofront, and for his use I'll keep 't, till I am of no use.

MAL. Wilt thou? O Heavens, that a Christian should be found in a buff-jerkin!

Captain Conscience, I love thee, captain. We attend. (Exit Captain.) And what [100 hope hast thou of this Duchess' easiness?

MAQ. 'T will go hard; she was a cold creature ever. She hated monkeys, fools, jesters, and gentlemen ushers extremely; she had the vild trick on 't, not only to be truly modestly honorable in her own conscience, but she would avoid the least wanton carriage that might incur suspect; as, God bless me, she had almost brought bed-pressing out of fashion. I could scarce get a fine<sup>17</sup> [110 for the lease of a lady's favor once in a fortnight.

MAL. Now, in the name of immodesty, how many maidenheads hast thou brought to the block?

MAQ. Let me see — Heaven forgive us our misdeeds! — Here's the Duchess.

SCENE [III] <sup>18</sup>

Enter MARIA and Captain.

MAL. God bless thee, lady!

MARIA. Out of thy company!

MAL. We have brought thee tender of a husband.

MARIA. I hope I have one already.

MAQ. Nay, by mine honor, madam, as good ha' ne'er a husband as a banish'd husband; he's in another world now. I'll tell ye, lady, I have heard of a sect that maintained when the husband was asleep the [10 wife might lawfully entertain another man, for then her husband was as dead; much more when he is banished.

MARIA. Unhonest creature!

MAQ. Pish, honesty is but an art to seem so. Pray ye, what's honesty, what's constancy, But fables feigned, odd old fools' chat, devis'd By jealous fools to wrong our liberty?

MAL. Molly, he that loves thee is a duke, Mendoza; he will maintain thee royally, [20 love thee ardently, defend thee powerfully, marry thee sumptuously, and keep thee in despite of Rosicler or Donzel del Phoebo.<sup>19</sup> There's jewels: if thou wilt, so; if not, so.

MARIA. Captain, for God's sake, save poor wretchedness

From tyranny of lustful insolence!

† Enforce me in the deepest dungeon dwell,
Rather than here; here round about is hell. —
O my dear'st Altofront! where'er thou breathe,

Let my soul sink into the shades beneath, [30 Before I stain thine honor! This thou hast, And long as I can die, I will live chaste.

MAL. 'Gainst him that can enforce how vain is strife!

MARIA. She that can be enforc'd has ne'er a knife!

She that through force her limbs with lust enrolls,

Wants Cleopatra's asps and Portia's coals.

God amend you!

Exit with Captain.

MAL. Now, the fear of the Devil for ever go with thee! — Maquerelle, I tell thee, I have found an honest woman! Faith, I per- [40 ceive, when all is done, there is of women, as of all other things, some good, most bad; some saints, some sinners. For as nowadays no courtier but has his mistress, no captain but has his cockatrice,<sup>20</sup> no cuckold but has his horns, and no fool but has his feather; even so, no woman but has her weakness and feather too, no sex but has his — I can hunt the letter no farder. — [aside] O God, how loathsome this toying is to me! That a [50 duke should be forc'd to fool it! Well, stultorum plena sunt omnia.<sup>21</sup> better play the fool lord than be the fool lord. — Now, where's your sleights, Madam Maquerelle?

MAQ. Why, are ye ignorant that 't is said a squeamish, affected niceness is natural to women, and that the excuse of their yielding is only, forsooth, the difficult obtaining? You must put her to 't; women are flax, and will fire in a moment. 60

MAL. Why, was the flax put into thy mouth, and yet thou —

Thou set fire, thou inflame her!

MAQ. Marry, but I'll tell ye now, you were too hot.

MAL. The fitter to have inflamed the flax, woman.

MAQ. You were too boisterous, spleeny, for indeed —

MAL. Go, go, thou art a weak pand'ress; now I see,

Sooner earth's fire Heaven itself shall waste,
Than all with heat can melt a mind that's chaste.

Go; thou the Duke's lime-twigg! <sup>22</sup> I'll make the Duke turn thee out of thine office. [70 What, not get one touch of hope, and had her at such advantage!

<sup>22</sup> Snare.

MAQ. Now, a' my conscience, now I think in my discretion, we did not take her in the right sign; the blood was not in the true vein, sure. Exit.

[SCENE] IV <sup>23</sup>

< Enter BILIOSO.

BIL. Make way there! The Duke returns from the enthronement. — Malevole —

MAL. Out, rogue!

BIL. Malevole, —

MAL. "Hence, ye gross-jaw'd, peasantly — out, go!"

BIL. Nay, sweet Malevole, since my return I hear you are become the thing I always prophesied would be — an advanced virtue, a worthily-employed faithfulness, a man a' [10 grace, dear friend. Come; what! Si quoties peccant homines <sup>24</sup> — if as often as courtiers play the knaves, honest men should be angry — why, look ye, we must colloque <sup>25</sup> sometimes, forswear sometimes.

MAL. Be damn'd sometimes.

BIL. Right: nemo omnibus horis sapit: "no man can be honest at all hours;" necessity often depraves virtue.

MAL. I will commend thee to the Duke. [20

BIL. Do: let us be friends, man.

MAL. And knaves, man.

BIL. Right: let us prosper and purchase; <sup>26</sup> our lordships shall live, and our knavery be forgotten.

MAL. He that by any ways gets riches, his means never shames him.

BIL. True.

MAL. For impudency and faithlessness are the mainstays to greatness. 30

BIL. By the Lord, thou art a profound lad.

MAL. By the Lord, thou art a perfect knave: out, ye ancient damnation!

BIL. Peace, peace! an thou wilt not be a friend to me as I am a knave, be not a knave to me as I am thy friend, and disclose me. Peace! cornets! >

Enter PREPASSO and FERRARDO, two Pages with lights, CELSO and EQUATO, MENDOZA in duke's robes, and GUERRINO.

MEN. On, on; leave us, leave us.

Exeunt all saving MALEVOLE [and MENDOZA].

Stay, where is the hermit? 40

MAL. With Duke Pietro, with Duke Pietro.

MEN. Is he dead? Is he poisoned?

MAL. Dead — as the Duke is.

MEN. Good, excellent; he will not blab: secureness lives in secrecy. Come hither, come hither.

MAL. Thou hast a certain strong villainous scent about thee my nature cannot endure.

MEN. Scent, man! What returns Maria, what answer to our suit? 50

MAL. Cold, frosty; she is obstinate.

MEN. Then she's but dead; 't is resolute, she dies:

Black deed only through black deed safely flies.

MAL. Pew! per scelera semper sceleribus tutum est iter. <sup>27</sup>

MEN. What, art a scholar? Art a politician? Sure, thou art an arrant knave.

MAL. Who, I? I ha' been twice an under-sheriff, man. <sup>28</sup>

< Well, I will go rail upon some great man, [60 that I may purchase the bastinado, or else go marry some rich Genoan lady, and instantly go travel.

MEN. Travel, when thou art married?

MAL. Ay, 't is your young lord's fashion to do so, though he was so lazy, being a bachelor, that he would never travel so far as the university: yet, when he married her, tale's off, <sup>29</sup> and, Catso, for England!

MEN. And why for England? 70

MAL. Because there is no brothel-houses there.

MEN. Nor courtesans?

MAL. Neither; your whore went down with the stews, and your punk came up with your Puritan. >

MEN. Canst thou empoison? Canst thou empoison?

MAL. Excellently; no Jew, 'pothecary, or politician better. Look ye, here's a [80 box. Whom wouldst thou empoison? Here's a box [giving it], which, opened and the fume taken up in conduits thorough which

Mal. As your scriuener to your vreur I have delt about taking of this commoditie, but shes could-frosty. Well, I will go raile, &c.

These lines are probably a stage condensation, perhaps written on the margin of the prompt copy and erroneously incorporated by the scribe or compositor. Ll. 60-76 are added by Q.

the brain purges itself, doth instantly for twelve hours' space bind up all show of life in a deep senseless sleep. Here's another [giving it], which, being opened under the sleeper's nose, chokes all the [pores]<sup>30</sup> of life, kills him suddenly.

MEN. I'll try experiments; 't is good [90 not to be deceived. — So, so; catso!

Seems to poison MALEVOLE, [who falls].

"Who would fear that may destroy?
Death hath no teeth or tongue;
And he that's great, to him are slaves,
Shame, murder, fame, and wrong." —
Celso!

Enter CELSO.

CELSO. My honored Lord?

MEN. The good Malevole, that plain-tongu'd man,
Alas, is dead on sudden, wondrous strangely!
He held in our esteem good place. Celso, [100 See him buried, see him buried.

CELSO. I shall observe ye.

MEN. And, Celso, prithee, let it be thy care to-night

To have some pretty show, to solemnize
Our high instalment — some music, mas-query.

We'll give fair entertain unto Maria,
The duchess to the banish'd Altofront:
Thou shalt conduct her from the Citadel
Unto the Palace. Think on some masquery.

CELSO. Of what shape, sweet Lord?

MEN. [What]<sup>31</sup> shape! Why, any quick-done fiction; 110

As some brave spirits of the Genoan dukes,
To come out of Elysium, forsooth,
Led in by Mercury, to gratulate
Our happy fortune; some such anything,
Some far-fet trick good for ladies, some stale
toy

Or other, no matter, so't be of our devising.
Do thou prepare't; 't is but for a fashion
sake.

Fear not, it shall be grac'd, man, it shall take.

CELSO. All service.

MEN. All thanks; our hand shall not be close<sup>32</sup> to thee; farewell. — 120

[aside] Now is my treachery secure, nor can we fall;

Mischief that prospers, men do virtue call.

I'll trust no man; he that by tricks gets wreaths

Keeps them with steel; no man securely breathes

Out of deserved ranks; the crowd will mutter
"fool!"

Who cannot bear with spite, he cannot rule.

The chiefest secret for a man of state

Is to live senseless of a strengthless hate.

[Exit.]

MAL. [starts up and speaks.] Death of the damn'd thief! I'll make one i' the [130 masque; thou shalt ha' some brave spirits of the antique dukes.

CELSO. My Lord, what strange delusion?

MAL. Most happy, dear Celso, poison'd with an empty box. I'll give thee all, anon.
My lady comes to court; there is a whirl of fate comes tumbling on; the castle's captain stands for me, the people pray for me, and the great Leader of the just stands for me:
then courage, Celso; 140

For no disastrous chance can ever move him
That leaveth nothing but a God above him.

Exeunt.

[SCENE V]<sup>33</sup>

Enter PREPASSO and BILIOSO, two Pages
before them; MAQUERELLE, BIANCA, and EMILIA.

BIL. Make room there, room for the ladies!
Why, gentlemen, will not ye suffer the ladies to be ent'rd in the great chamber? Why, gallants! and you, sir, to drop your torch where the beauties must sit too?

PRE. And there's a great fellow plays the knave; why dost not strike him?

BIL. Let him play the knave, a' God's name; think'st thou I have no more wit than to strike a great fellow? — The music! [10 more lights! revelling-scaffolds! do you hear? Let there be oaths enow ready at the door, swear out the Devil himself. Let's leave the ladies, and go see if the lords be ready for them.

All save the Ladies depart.

MAQ. And, by my troth, beauties, why do you not put you into the fashion? This is a stale cut; you must come in fashion: look ye, you must be all felt, felt and feather, a felt upon your bare hair. Look ye, these [20 tiring things are justly out of request now;
and, do ye hear? you must wear falling-

bands,<sup>34</sup> you must come into the falling fashion; there is such a deal a' pinning these ruffs, when the fine clean fall is worth all; and again, if you should chance to take a nap in the afternoon, your falling-band requires no potting-stick<sup>35</sup> to recover his form — believe me, no fashion to<sup>36</sup> the falling, I say.

BIAN. And is not Signior St. Andrew a [30 gallant fellow now?

MAQ. By my maidenhead, la, honor and he agrees as well together as a satin suit and woolen stockings.

EMILIA. But is not Marshal Make-room, my servant in reversion, a proper gentleman?

MAQ. Yes, in reversion, as he had his office; as, in truth, he hath all things in reversion: he has his mistress in reversion, his clothes in reversion, his wit in reversion; [40 and, indeed, is a suitor to me for my dog in reversion. But, in good verity, la, he is as proper a gentleman in reversion as — and, indeed, as fine a man as may be, having a red beard and a pair of warp'd legs.

BIAN. But, i' faith, I am most monstrously in love with Count Quidlibet-in-quodlibet: is he not a pretty, dapper, unidle gallant?

MAQ. He is even one of the most busy-fingered lords; he will put the beauties [50 to the squeak most hideously.

[Re-enter BILIOSO.]

BIL. Room! make a lane there! the Duke is ent'ring: stand handsomely for beauty's sake: take up the ladies there! So, cornets, cornets!

SCENE [VI]<sup>37</sup>

Enter PREPASSO, joins to BILIOSO; [enter] two Pages and lights, FERRARDO, [and] MEN-DOZA; at the other door, two Pages with lights, and the Captain leading in MARIA; the DUKE meets MARIA and closeth with her; the rest fall back.

MEN. Madam, with gentle ear receive my suit;
A kingdom's safety should o'erpeise<sup>38</sup> slight rites;
Marriage is merely nature's policy.
Then, since unless our royal beds be join'd
Danger and civil tumults frights the state,
Be wise as you are fair: give way to fate.

<sup>34</sup> Flat collars (instead of ruffs).

<sup>38</sup> Outweigh.

MARIA. What wouldst thou, thou affliction to our house?

Thou ever-devil, 't was thou that banished'st
My truly noble lord!

MEN. I! 10

MARIA. Ay, by thy plots, by thy black stratagems:

Twelve moons have suff'ed change since I beheld

The loved presence of my dearest lord.

O thou far worse than Death! He parts but soul

From a weak body; but thou soul from soul
Disseverest that which God's own hand did knit;

Thou scant of honor, full of devilish wit!

MEN. We'll check your too intemperate lavishness!

I can and will.

MARIA. What canst? 20

MEN. Go to; in banishment thy husband dies.

MARIA. He ever is at home that's ever wise.

MEN. You 'st<sup>39</sup> ne'er meet more; reason should love control.

MARIA. Not meet!

She that dear loves, her love's still in her soul.

MEN. You are but a woman, lady, you must yield.

MARIA. Oh, save me, thou innated bashfulness,

Thou only ornament of woman's modesty!

MEN. Modesty! Death, I'll torment<sup>40</sup> thee.

MARIA. Do, urge all torments, all afflictions try; 30

I'll die my lord's as long as I can die.

MEN. Thou obstinate, thou shalt die. — Captain, that lady's life

Is forfeited to justice; we have examined her, And we do find she hath empoisoned

The reverend hermit; therefore we command Severest custody. — [to MARIA] Nay, if you 'll do's no good,

You 'st do's no harm; a tyrant's peace is blood.

MARIA. Oh, thou art merciful; O gracious devil,

Rather by much let me condemned be
For seeming murder than be damn'd for thee!
I'll mourn no more; come, girt my brows with flowers; 41

<sup>40</sup> Torture.

Revel and dance, soul, now thy wish thou hast ;
Die like a bride, poor heart, thou shalt die chaste.

Enter AURELIA in mourning habit.

AUR. " Life is a frost of cold felicity,
And death the thaw of all our vanity : " <sup>41</sup>
Was 't not an honest priest that wrote so ?

MEN. Who let her in ?

BIL. Forbear !

PRE. Forbear !

AUR. Alas, calamity is everywhere ; 50
Sad misery, despite your double doors,
Will enter even in court.

BIL. Peace !

AUR. I ha' done. One word, —

[PRE.] <sup>42</sup> Take heed !

AUR. I ha' done.

Enter MERCURY with loud music.

MER. Cyllenian Mercury, the god of ghosts
From gloomy shades that spread the lower coasts, <sup>43</sup>

Calls four high-famed Genoan dukes to come,
And make this presence their Elysium, 60
To pass away this high triumphal night
With song and dances, court's more soft delight.

AUR. Are you god of ghosts ? I have a suit pending in hell betwixt me and my conscience ; I would fain have thee help me to an advocate.

BIL. Mercury shall be your lawyer, lady.

AUR. Nay, faith, Mercury has too good a face to be a right lawyer.

PRE. Peace, forbear ! Mercury presents
the masque. 70

Cornets: the song to the cornets, which playing, the masque enters ; MALEVOLE, PIETRO, FERNEZE, and CELSO, in white robes, with duke's crowns upon laurel wreaths, pistolets and short swords under their robes.

MEN. Celso, Celso, [court] <sup>44</sup> Maria for our love. —

Lady, be gracious, yet grace.

MARIA. With me, sir ?

MAL. Yes, more loved than my breath,
With you I'll dance.

MARIA. Why, then, you dance with death.
But, come, sir, I was ne'er more apt to mirth.
Death gives eternally a glorious breath ;

Oh, to die honor'd, who would fear to die ?

MAL. They die in fear who live in vil-
lainy.

MEN. Yes, believe him, lady, and be rul'd
by him. 80

PIETRO. Madam, with me ?

PIETRO takes his wife, AURELIA, to dance.

AUR. Wouldst, then, be miserable ?

PIETRO. I need not wish.

AUR. Oh, yet forbear my hand ! away !
fly ! fly !

Oh, seek not her that only seeks to die !

PIETRO. Poor loved soul !

AUR. What, wouldst court misery ?

PIETRO. Yes.

AUR. She'll come too soon. — Oh, my griev'd heart !

PIETRO. Lady, ha' done, ha' done ;
Come, let 's dance : be once from sorrow free.

AUR. Art a sad man ?

PIETRO. Yes, sweet.

AUR. Then we'll agree.

*FERNEZE takes MAQUERELLE ; and CELSE, BIANCA : then the cornets sound the measure, one change and
rest.*

FER. (to BIANCA) Believe it, lady ; shall I [90 swear ? Let me enjoy you in private, and I'll marry you, by my soul.

BIAN. I had rather you would swear by your body ; I think that would prove the more regarded oath with you.

FER. I'll swear by them both, to please
you.

BIAN. Oh, damn them not both to please me, for God's sake !

FER. Faith, sweet creature, let me en- [100 joy you to-night, and I'll marry you to-morrow fortnight, by my troth, la.

MAQ. On his troth, la ! believe him not ;
that kind of cony-catching <sup>45</sup> is as stale as Sir Oliver Anchovy's perfum'd jerkin : promise of matrimony by a young gallant, to bring a virgin lady into a fool's paradise, make her a great woman, and then cast her off — 't is as common [and] <sup>46</sup> natural to a courtier, as jealousy to a citizen, gluttony to a Puritan, [110 wisdom to an alderman, pride to a tailor, or an empty handbasket to one of these six-

MARIA. O my Altofront!

PIETRO. [to AURELIA] A tyrant's jealousies Are very nimble; you receive it all?

AUR. (to PIETRO) My heart, though not my knees, doth 'umbly fall 120
Low as the earth, to thee.

[MAL.]<sup>50</sup> Peace! next change; no words.

MARIA. Speech to such, ay, oh, what will affords!

Cornets sound the measure over again; which danced, they unmask.

MEN. Malevole!

They environ MENDOZA, bending their pistols on him.

MAL. No.

MEN. Altofront! Duke Pietro! Ferneze! ha!

ALL. Duke Altofront! Duke Altofront!
Cornets, a flourish. — They seize upon MENDOZA.

MEN. Are we surpris'd? What strange delusions mock

Our senses? Do I dream? or have I dreamt This two days' space? Where am I?

MAL. Where an arch-villain is.

MEN. Oh, lend me breath till I am fit to die! 131

For peace with Heaven, for your own souls' sake,

Vouchsafe me life!

PIETRO. Ignoble villain! whom neither Heaven nor hell,

Goodness of God or man, could once make good!

MAL. Base, treacherous wretch! what grace canst thou expect,

That hast grown impudent in gracelessness?

MEN. Oh, life!

MAL. Slave, take thy life.

Wert thou defenced, through blood and wounds, 140

The sternest horror of a civil fight, Would I achieve thee; but prostrate at my feet,

I scorn to hurt thee: 't is the heart of slaves

That deigns to triumph over peasants' graves; For such thou art, since birth doth ne'er enroll

A man 'mong monarchs, but a glorious soul. <sup>51</sup><Oh, I have seen strange accidents of state!

When they observe not Heaven's impos'd conditions,

They are no kings, but forfeit their commissions. 159

MAQ. O good my Lord, I have lived in the court this twenty year; they that have been old courtiers, and come to live in the city, they are spited at, and thrust to the walls like apri-cocks, good my Lord.

BIL. My Lord, I did know your Lordship in this disguise; you heard me ever say, if Altofront did return I would stand for him; besides, 't was your Lordship's pleasure to call me wittol and cuckold: you must not [169 think, but that I knew you, I would have put it up so patiently.>

MAL. (to PIETRO and AURELIA) You o'er-joy'd spirits, wipe your long-wet eyes.

Hence with this man (kicks out MENDOZA): an eagle takes not flies. —

(to PIETRO and AURELIA) You to your vows. — (to MAQUERELLE) And thou into the suburbs.<sup>53</sup> —

(to BILIOSO) You to my worst friend I would hardly give:

Thou art a perfect old knave. — (to CELSO and the Captain) All-pleased live

You two unto my breast. — (to MARIA) Thou to my heart.

The rest of idle actors idly part; And as for me, I here assume my right, To which I hope all's pleas'd: to all, good night. 180

AN IMPERFECT ODE, BEING BUT

SPOKEN BY THE PROLOGUE

To wrest each hurtless thought to private sense

Is the foul use of ill-bred impudence :

Immodest censure now grows wild,

All overrunning.

Let innocence be ne'er so chaste,

Yet at the last

She is defil'd

With too nice-brained cunning.

O you of fairer soul,

Control

With an Herculean arm

This harm ;

And once teach all old freedom of a pen,

Which still must write of fools, whiles 't writes of men !

EPILOGUS

YOUR modest silence, full of heedful stillness,
Makes me thus speak : a voluntary illness

Is merely <sup>54</sup> senseless ; but unwilling error,
Such as proceeds from too rash youthful fervor,

May well be call'd a fault, but not a sin :

Rivers take names from founts where they begin.

Then let not too severe an eye peruse

The slighter bracks <sup>55</sup> of our reformed Muse,

Who could herself herself of faults detect,

But that she knows 't is easy to correct, 10

Though some men's labor : troth, to err is fit,

As long as wisdom's not profess'd, but wit.

Then till another's <sup>56</sup> happier Muse appears,

Till his Thalia feast your learned ears,

To whose desertful lamps pleas'd Fates impart

Art above nature, judgment above art,

Receive this piece, which hope nor fear yet
daunteth :

He that knows most knows most how much he wanteth.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

THE proverbial phrase which forms the title of Heywood's masterpiece emphasizes its most extraordinary feature; for here is an Elizabethan tragedy which reaches its pathetic end without shedding the blood of any important character. The prose Shakespeare, as Charles Lamb called him, was not a great poet; but neither was he, despite his enormous productivity, merely a hack. Only Shakespeare surpasses him in tenderness; both men must have been great lovers of human nature.

In the play before us we have a domestic tragedy, the main plot of which is thoroughly sentimental in the best sense of that maligned adjective, while the subplot is equally sentimental, in the worst of all possible senses. For Heywood is deeply interested in the sentiments of his characters: affection, delicacy, sensitiveness, consideration, high-mindedness — these are no empty terms to him, nor is their expression anything but noble. We may justly cavil at the fantastic honor of Sir Charles Mountford and at the bungling portrait of Wendoll as villain. The latter would seem less preposterous on the stage, where until recent times rascality has been taken for granted without elaborate motivation; the former, in all likelihood, would be even less plausible in the theatre than it is to the reader. And the sudden reversal of Sir Francis Acton is almost as absurd as the resolution of The Two Gentlemen of Verona. These are serious flaws, and there are others; yet, given the current conceptions of marriage and the technical conventions of the Elizabethan stage, the play is a masterpiece, and the author far ahead of his time in perceiving that vital human relationships do not need the panoply of war and politics and high estate to be poignantly affecting in the theatre.

Heywood received his fee for this play in February and March, 1603. It was performed by the Earl of Worcester's Men, who soon afterwards came under the patronage of Queen Anne. Though literary sources have been suggested, there is no reason to suppose that the simple structure of the main plot is not Heywood's own. As for the subplot, it is ultimately derived from an early sixteenth-century Sienese novella, which appears in Bandello and in Belleforest, and in English translation was available to Heywood in both William Painter's Palace of Pleasure (II, 30) and Sir Geoffrey Fenton's Tragicall Discourses (where it stands first).

The play was thrice printed in quarto, but only the first and last of these editions are extant, those of 1607 and 1617. The standard modern edition of Heywood is still the unsatisfactory Pearson reprint (1874). The best separate edition of A Woman Killed with Kindness is that of Katharine Lee Bates (1917), in the Belles-Lettres Series (with The Fair Maid of the West). Like the present text, it is based on the Second (extant) Quarto, instead of on the badly printed editio princeps. A number of the readings of the First Quarto have, nevertheless, been adopted by the present Editor. For these, though the text has been collated throughout with the Pearson reprint of Q1, the Editor has found Miss Bates's textual notes more useful.

THE PROLOGUE

[ACT I — SCENE I] <sup>2</sup>

I COME but as a harbinger, being sent
To tell you what these preparations mean.
Look for no glorious state: our Muse is bent
Upon a barren subject, a bare scene.
We could afford this twig a timber-tree,
Whose strength might boldly on your favors build;
Our russet, tissue; drone, a honey-bee;
Our barren plot, a large and spacious field;
Our coarse fare, banquets; our thin water,
wine;
Our brook, a sea; our bat's eyes, eagle's
sight; 10
Our poet's dull and earthy Muse, divine;
Our ravens, doves; our crows' black feathers,
white.
But gentle thoughts, when they may give the foil,<sup>1</sup> Save them that yield, and spare where they may spoil.
<sup>1</sup> Can defeat.

Enter MASTER JOHN FRANKFORD, MISTRESS
[FRANKFORD],<sup>3</sup> SIR FRANCIS ACTON, SIR CHARLES MOUNTFORD, MASTER MALBY, MASTER WENDOLL, and MASTER CRAN-
WELL.

SIR F. Some music, there! None lead the bride a dance?

SIR C. Yes, would she dance The Shaking of the Sheets!<sup>4</sup>

But that's the dance her husband means to lead her!

WEN. That's not the dance that every man must dance,
According to the ballad.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> "Make ready then your winding-sheet
And see how you can bestir your feet,
For death is the man that all must meet."

SIR F.

Music, ho !

By your leave, Sister, — by your husband's leave,
I should have said, — the hand that but this day

Was given you in the church I'll borrow. — Sound !

This marriage music hoists me from the ground.

FRANK. Ay, you may caper ; you are light and free. 10

Marriage hath yok'd my heels ; pray, pardon me.

SIR F. I'll have you dance too, Brother !

SIR C. Master Frankford,

Y' are a happy man, sir, and much joy
Succeed your marriage mirth ; you have a wife
So qualified, and with such ornaments
Both of the mind and body. First, her birth
Is noble, and her education such
As might become the daughter of a prince ;
Her own tongue speaks all tongues, and her own hand
Can teach all strings to speak in their best grace, 20
From the shrill'st <sup>6</sup> treble to the hoarsest bass.
To end her many praises in one word,
She's Beauty and Perfection's eldest daughter,
Only found by yours, though many a heart hath sought her.

FRANK. But that I know your virtues and chaste thoughts,

I should be jealous of your praise, Sir Charles.

CRAN. He speaks no more than you approve.

MAL. Nor flatters he that gives to her her due.

MRS. F. I would your praise could find a fitter theme

Than my imperfect beauty <sup>7</sup> to speak on ! 30
Such as they be, if they my husband please,
They suffice me now I am married.

His sweet content is like a flatt'ring glass,
To make my face seem fairer to mine eye ;
But the least wrinkle from his stormy brow
Will blast the roses in my cheeks that grow.

SIR F. A perfect wife already, meek and patient.

How strangely the word " husband " fits your mouth,

Not married three hours since. Sister, 't is good ; 39

You that begin betimes thus must needs prove

Pliant and duteous in your husband's love. — Godamercies,<sup>8</sup> Brother ! Wrought her to 't already :

" Sweet husband," and a curtsy, the first day ?
Mark this, mark this, you that are bachelors,
And never took the grace of honest man ; <sup>9</sup>
Mark this, against <sup>10</sup> you marry, this one phrase :

In a good time that man both wins and woos
That takes his wife down in her wedding shoes.<sup>11</sup>

FRANK. Your sister takes not after you,
Sir Francis ;

All his wild blood your father spent on you : 50
He got her in his age, when he grew civil.
All his mad tricks were to his land entail'd,
And you are heir to all ; your sister, she Hath to her dow'r her mother's modesty.

SIR C. Lord, sir, in what a happy state live you :

This morning, which to many seems a burden,
Too heavy to bear, is unto you a pleasure.
This lady is no clog, as many are ;
She doth become you like a well-made suit,
In which the tailor hath us'd all his art ; 60
Not like a thick coat of unseason'd frieze,
Fore'd on your back in summer. She's no chain

To tie your neck, and curb ye to the yoke ;
But she's a chain of gold to adorn your neck :
You both [adore]<sup>12</sup> each other, and your hands,
Methinks, are matches.<sup>13</sup> There's equality
In this fair combination ; y' are both Scholars, both young, both being descended nobly.

There's music in this sympathy ; it carries
Consort and expectation of much joy, 70
Which God bestow on you from this first day
Until your dissolution, that's for aye !

SIR F. We keep you here too long, good Brother Frankford.

Into the hall ; away, go cheer your guests.
What, bride and bridegroom both withdrawn
at once !

If you be miss'd, the guests will doubt their welcome,
And charge you with unkindness.

FRANK. To prevent it,
I'll leave you here, to see the dance within.

<sup>13</sup> I.e., you are excellent matches for each other.

MRS. F. And so will I.

[Exeunt MASTER AND MISTRESS
FRANKFORD.]

SIR F. To part you it were sin. —
Now, gallants, while the town musicians 80
Finger their frets<sup>14</sup> within, and the mad lads
And country lasses, every mother's child,
With nosegays and bride-laces<sup>15</sup> in their hats,
Dance all their country measures, rounds, and jigs,
What shall we do? Hark! They are all on the hoigh;<sup>16</sup>
They toil like mill-horses, and turn as round,— Marry, not on the toe! Ay, and they caper, But<sup>17</sup> without cutting; you shall see, tomorrow,
The hall-floor peck'd and dinted like a mill-
stone,
Made with their high shoes. Though their skill be small, 90
Yet they tread heavy where their hobnails
fall.

SIR C. Well, leave them to their sports! —
Sir Francis Acton,
I'll make a match with you. Meet me tomorrow
At Chevy Chase; I'll fly my hawk with
yours.

SIR F. For what? For what?

SIR C. Why, for a hundred pound.

SIR F. Pawn me some gold of that.

SIR C. Here are ten angels;<sup>18</sup>
I'll make them good a hundred pound to-morrow
Upon my hawk's wing.

SIR F. 'T is a match; 't is done.
Another hundred pound upon your dogs —
Dare ye, Sir Charles?

SIR C. I dare! Were I sure to lose, [100
I durst do more than that; here 's my
hand,
The first course<sup>19</sup> for a hundred pound.

SIR F. A match.

WEN. Ten angels on Sir Francis Acton's hawk,
As much upon his dogs.

CRAN. I am for Sir Charles Mountford; I have seen

<sup>14</sup> The ridges across the finger board for stopping the strings.

<sup>17</sup> So Pearson and both copies of Q; collated for the present ed. Miss Bates Not.

<sup>18</sup> Gold coins worth about $2.50 each.

<sup>19</sup> Run.

His hawk and dog both tri'd. What, clap ye hands,<sup>20</sup>

Or is 't no bargain?

WEN. Yes, and stake them down.

Were they five hundred, they were all my own.

SIR F. Be stirring early with the lark tomorrow;

I'll rise into my saddle ere the sun 110
Rise from his bed.

SIR C. If there you miss me, say
I am no gentleman. I'll hold my day.

SIR F. It holds on all sides. — Come, tonight let's dance;

Early to-morrow let's prepare to ride —

We had need be three hours up before the bride. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE II]<sup>21</sup>

Enter NICK and JENKIN, JACK SLIME, ROGER BRICKBAT, with Country Wenches, and two or three Musicians.

JEN. Come, Nick, take you Joan Miniver, to trace withal; Jack Slime, traverse you with Cicely Milkpail; I will take Jane Trubkin, and Roger Brickbat shall have Is'bel Motley.
And now that they are busy in the parlor, come, strike up; we'll have a crash<sup>22</sup> here in the yard.

NICK. My humor is not compendious:
dancing I possess not, though I can foot it;
yet, since I am fall'n into the hands of [10
Cicely Milkpail,<sup>23</sup> I consent.

SLIME. Truly, Nick, though we were never brought up like serving courtiers, yet we have been brought up with serving creatures — ay, and God's creatures, too; for we have been brought up to serve sheep, oxen, horses, hogs, and such like; and, though we be but country fellows, it may be in the way of dancing we can do the horse-trick as well as the serving men. 20

BRICK. Ay, and the cross-point<sup>24</sup> too.

JEN. O Slime, O Brickbat, do not you know that comparisons are odious? Now we are odious ourselves, too; therefore there are no comparisons to be made betwixt us.

NICK. I am sudden, and not superfluous;

<sup>20</sup> Are you going to shake hands?

<sup>23</sup> Since Jenkin had assigned her to Slime, we must suppose that during Nick's speech she has indicated a preference for him.

<sup>24</sup> A dance step.

I am quarrelsome, and not seditious ;
I am peaceable, and not contentious ;
I am brief, and not compendious.

SLIME. Foot it quickly. If the music [30 overcome not my melancholy, I shall quarrel ; and if they suddenly do not strike up, I shall presently strike thee down.

JEN. No quarrelling, for God's sake !
Truly, if you do, I shall set a knave between
ye.

SLIME. I come to dance, not to quarrel.
Come, what shall it be? Rogero?<sup>24</sup>

JEN. Rogero? no ; we will dance The Be- ginning of the World.<sup>24</sup> 40

CICELY. I love no dance so well as John
Come Kiss Me Now.<sup>24</sup>

NICK. I that have ere now deserv'd a cushion, call for the Cushion-dance.<sup>25</sup>

BRICK. For my part, I like nothing so well as Tom Tyler.<sup>24</sup>

JEN. No ; we'll have The Hunting of the Fox.<sup>26</sup>

SLIME. The Hay,<sup>27</sup> The Hay! There's nothing like The Hay. 50

NICK. I have said, I do say, and I will say
again —

JEN. Every man agree to have it as Nick says.

ALL. Content.

NICK. It hath been, it now is, and it shall be —

CICELY. What, Master Nicholas? What?

NICK. Put on your Smock a' Monday.<sup>24</sup>

JEN. So the dance will come cleanly off. [60 Come, for God's sake, agree of something ; if you like not that, put it to the musicians ; or let me speak for all, and we'll have Sellenger's
Round.<sup>28</sup>

ALL. That, that, that.

NICK. No, I am resolv'd thus it shall be ;
First take hands, then take you to your heels.

JEN. Why, would ye have us run away?

NICK. No ; but I would have you shake your heels. — Music, strike up. 70

They dance ; NICK, dancing, speaks stately and scurvily ;<sup>29</sup> the rest after the country fashion.

JEN. Hey ! Lively, my lasses ! Here's a turn for thee ! [Exeunt.]

<sup>24</sup> The name of a well-known tune.

<sup>25</sup> In which the chosen partner knelt on a cushion and was kissed.

<sup>29</sup> Sourly.

[SCENE III]<sup>30</sup>

Wind horns. Enter SIR CHARLES [MOUNT-
FORD], SIR FRANCIS [ACTON], MALBY, CRAN-
WELL, WENDOLL, Falconers, and Huntsmen.

SIR C. So ; well cast off ! Aloft, aloft !
Well flown !

Oh, now she takes her at the souse,<sup>31</sup> and strikes her

Down to th' earth, like a swift thunderclap.

WEN. She hath struck ten angels out of my way.

SIR F. A hundred pound from me.

SIR C. What, falconer !

FALC. At hand, sir.

SIR C. Now she hath seiz'd the fowl and 'gins to plume<sup>32</sup> her,

[Rebuke] her not ; rather stand still and [cherk] her.<sup>33</sup>

So, seize her gets,<sup>34</sup> her jesses,<sup>35</sup> and her bells !
Away !

SIR F. My hawk kill'd, too.

SIR C. Ay, but 't was at the querre,<sup>36</sup>
Not at the mount like mine.

SIR F. Judgment, my masters ! [10

CRAN. Yours miss'd her at the ferre.<sup>37</sup>

WEN. Ay, but our merlin first hath plum'd
the fowl,

And twice renew'd her<sup>38</sup> from the river too.
Her bells, Sir Francis, had not both one weight,
Nor was one semi-tune above the other.

Methinks, these Milan bells do sound too full,
And spoil the mounting of your hawk.

SIR C. 'T is lost.

SIR F. I grant it not. Mine likewise seiz'd
a fowl

Within her talons, and you saw her paws
Full of the feathers ; both her petty singles [20
And her long singles<sup>39</sup> grip'd her more than
other ;

<sup>33</sup> Emend. Bates ; old eds. Rebecke . . . checke her. Heywood, as Miss Bates shows, is following the instructions of treatises on hawking, which advise the falconer, in order to avoid the hawk's flying up into a tree with the quarry, not to "rebuke" her but, when she begins "pluming", to advance toward her "cherking", i.e., chirping, or whistling to her when she seems alarmed.

<sup>34</sup> Not precisely identified, but evidently something attached to the jesses.

<sup>36</sup> Defined in the Boke of St. Albans (1486, et seq.)
as = before the quarry rose from the ground.
(Bates.)

<sup>38</sup> Driven her by a fresh attack.

<sup>39</sup> The "uttermost" claws and the claws "that are upon the middle stretchers." (Boke of St. Albans, cited by Bates.)

The terrials<sup>40</sup> of her legs were stain'd with blood :

Not of the fowl only she did discomfit
Some of her feathers, but she brake away.
Come, come ; your hawk is but a riffer.<sup>41</sup>

SIR C. How?

SIR F. Ay, and your dogs are trindle-tails<sup>42</sup> and curs.

SIR C. You stir my blood.
You keep not a good hound in all your kennel,
Nor one good hawk upon your perch.

SIR F. How, knight!

SIR C. So, knight. You will not swagger,<sup>43</sup>
sir? 30

SIR F. Why, say I did?

SIR C. Why, sir,
I say you would gain as much by swagg'ring
As you have got by wagers on your dogs.
You will come short in all things.

SIR F. Not in this!
Now I'll strike home. [Strikes SIR CHARLES.]

SIR C. Thou shalt to thy long home,
Or I will want my will.

SIR F. All they that love Sir Francis, follow
me.

SIR C. All that affect SIR CHARLES, draw on my part.

CRAN. On this side heaves my hand.

WEN. Here goes my heart.

They divide themselves. SIR CHARLES,
CRANWELL, Falconer, and Huntsman fight against SIR FRANCIS, WENDOLL, his Falconer, and Huntsman ; and SIR CHARLES hath the better, and beats them away, killing both<sup>44</sup> of SIR FRAN-CIS his men.<sup>45</sup> [Exeunt all but SIR CHARLES MOUNTFORD.]

SIR C. My God, what have I done? What have I done? 40

My rage hath plung'd into a sea of blood,
In which my soul lies drown'd. Poor innocents,<sup>46</sup>

For whom we are to answer. Well, 't is done,

<sup>40</sup> Not certainly identified. Perhaps the talons that tore the quarry; perhaps, misprinted, the "terriets", the loops that tied the bells to the hawk's legs. (Bates.)

the feathers; . . . such Hawkes be called Riflers." (Boke of St. Albans, cited by Bates.)

<sup>43</sup> Behave like a bully. Hawking was notorious as an "extreme stirrer up of passions." See Mod. Lang.
Notes, xlv. 514, 515, for W. L. Ustick's citation from King James's Instructions to Prince Henry.

And I remain the victor. A great conquest,
When I would give this right hand, nay, this
head,

To breathe in them new life whom I have
slain.—

Forgive me, God. 'T was in the heat of
blood,

And anger quite removes me from myself.

It was not I, but rage, did this vile murder ;
Yet I, and not my rage, must answer it. 50

Sir Francis Acton, he is fled the field ;
With him all those that did partake his quarrel ;

And I am left alone with sorrow dumb,
And in my height of conquest overcome.

Enter SUSAN.<sup>47</sup>

SUSAN. O God! My brother wounded
'mong the dead :

Unhappy jests, that in such earnest ends! —
The rumor of this fear stretch'd to my ears,
And I am come to know if you be wounded.

SIR C. O Sister, Sister, wounded at the
heart.

SUSAN. My God forbid! 60

SIR C. In doing that thing which he forbade,

I am wounded, Sister.

SUSAN. I hope, not at the heart.

SIR C. Yes, at the heart.

SUSAN. O God! A surgeon, there.

SIR C. Call me a surgeon, Sister, for my
soul ;

The sin of murder, it hath pierc'd my heart
And made a wide wound there ; but for these scratches,

They are nothing, nothing.

SUSAN. Charles, what have you done?
Sir Francis hath great friends, and will pursue
you

Unto the utmost danger<sup>48</sup> of the law.

SIR C. My conscience is become mine enemy, 70

And will pursue me more than Acton can.

SUSAN. Oh, fly, sweet Brother.

SIR C. Shall I fly from thee?

Why, Sue,<sup>49</sup> art weary of my company?

SUSAN. Fly from your foe.

SIR C. You, Sister, are my friend,
And flying you, I shall pursue my end.

SUSAN. Your company is as my eyeball
dear ;

Being far from you, no comfort can be near.

Yet fly to save your life ; what would I care
To spend my future age in black despair,
So you were safe ? And yet to live one week Without my brother Charles, through every cheek 81
My streaming tears would downwards run so rank,<sup>80</sup>

Till they could set on either side a bank,
And in the midst a channel ; so my face
For two salt-water brooks shall still find place.

SIR C. Thou shall not weep so much ; for I will stay,

In spite of danger's teeth. I'll live with thee,
Or I'll not live at all. I will not sell
My country and my father's patrimony,
No[r] thy sweet sight, for a vain hope of life. [90

Enter Sheriff, with Officers.

SHER. Sir Charles, I am made the unwilling instrument

Of your attach<sup>81</sup> and apprehension.
I'm sorry that the blood of innocent men
Should be of you exacted. It was told me
That you were guarded with a troop of friends,
And therefore came arm'd.

SIR C. Oh, Master Sheriff,
I came into the field with many friends,
But see, they all have left me ; only one
Clings to my sad misfortune, my dear sister.
I know you for an honest gentleman ; 100
I yield my weapons, and submit to you.
Convey me where you please.

SHER. To prison, then,
To answer for the lives of these dead men.

SUSAN. O God ! O God !

SIR C. Sweet Sister, every strain
Of sorrow from your heart augments my pain ;
Your grief abounds,<sup>82</sup> and hits against my breast.

SHER. Sir, will you go ?

SIR C. Even where it likes you best.
[Exeunt.]

[ACT II — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter MASTER FRANKFORD in a study.

FRANK. How happy am I amongst other
men,
That in my mean<sup>2</sup> estate embrace content.
I am a gentleman, and by my birth
Companion with a king ; a king's no more.

I am possess'd of many fair revenues,<sup>3</sup>
Sufficient to maintain a gentleman.
Touching my mind, I am studied in all arts ;
The riches of my thoughts and of my time
Have been a good proficient ;<sup>4</sup> but, the chief
Of all the sweet felicities on earth, 10
I have a fair, a chaste, and loving wife :
Perfection all, all truth, all ornament.
If man on earth may truly happy be,
Of these at once possess'd, sure, I am he.

Enter NICHOLAS.

NICH. Sir, there's a gentleman attends without
To speak with you.

FRANK. On horseback ?

NICH. Ay, on horseback.

FRANK. Entreat him to alight ; and I'll attend him.

Know'st thou him, Nick ?

NICH. Know him ? Yes his name's Wendoll.
It seems he comes in haste : his horse is booted
Up to the flank in mire, himself all spotted [20
And stain'd with plashing. Sure, he rid in fear,

Or for a wager. Horse and man both sweat ;
I ne'er saw two in such a smoking heat.

FRANK. Entreat him in ; about it instantly !

[Exit NICHOLAS.]

This Wendoll I have noted, and his carriage
Hath pleas'd me much ; by observation
I have noted many good deserts in him :
He's affable, and seen<sup>5</sup> in many things,
Discourses well, a good companion,
And though of small means yet a gentleman [30
Of a good house, somewhat press'd by want.
I have preferr'd him to a second place
In my opinion and my best regard.

Enter WENDOLL, MISTRESS FRANKFORD, and NICK.

MRS. F. O, Master Frankford, Master
Wendoll here
Brings you the strangest news that e'er you heard.

FRANK. What news, sweet Wife ? — What news, good Master Wendoll ?

WEN. You knew the match made 'twixt
Sir Francis Acton
And Sir Charles Mountford.

FRANK. True ; with their hounds and hawks.

<sup>4</sup> I.e., I have improved my time intellectually.

<sup>5</sup> Well-versed.

WEN. The matches were both play'd.

FRANK. Ha! and which won?

WEN. Sir Francis, your wife's brother, had the worst, 40
And lost the wager.

FRANK. Why, the worse his chance;
Perhaps the fortune of some other day
Will change his luck.

MRS. F. Oh, but you hear not all.
Sir Francis lost, and yet was loth to yield.
In brief, the two knights grew to difference,
From words to blows, and so to banding sides;<sup>6</sup>
Where valorous Sir Charles slew, in his spleen,
Two of your brother's men, — his falc'ner
And his good huntsman, whom he lov'd so
well.

More men were wounded, no more slain out-
right. 50

FRANK. Now, trust me, I am sorry for the knight.

But is my brother safe?

WEN. All whole and sound,
His body not being blemish'd with one wound.
But poor Sir Charles is to the prison led,
To answer at th' assize for them that's dead.

FRANK. I thank your pains, sir. Had the news been better,
Your will was to have brought it, Master Wen-
doll. —

Sir Charles will find hard friends; his case is heinous

And will be most severely censur'd on.<sup>7</sup>

I'm sorry for him. — Sir, a word with you. 60
I know you, sir, to be a gentleman
In all things, your possibility<sup>8</sup> but mean;
Please you to use my table and my purse;
They are yours.

WEN. O Lord, sir! I shall never deserve it.

FRANK. O sir, disparage not your worth too much;

You are full of quality<sup>9</sup> and fair desert.
Choose of my men which shall attend you, sir,
And he is yours. I will allow you, sir,
Your man, your gelding, and your table, all
At my own charge; be my companion. 70

WEN. Master Frankford, I have oft been bound to you

By many favors; this exceeds them all,
That I shall never merit your least favor.

But when your last remembrance I forget,
Heaven at my soul exact that weighty debt. ✓

FRANK. There needs no protestation; for I know you

Virtuous, and therefore grateful. — Prithee,
Nan,

Use him with all thy loving'st courtesy.

MRS. F. As far as modesty may well extend,
It is my duty to receive your friend. 80

FRANK. To dinner! Come, sir, from this present day,

Welcome to me for ever! Come, away!

Exit [FRANKFORD with MISTRESS FRANKFORD and WENDOLL].

NICH. I do not like this fellow by no means;
I never see him but my heart still earns.<sup>10</sup>

Zounds, I could fight with him, yet know not why;

The Devil and he are all one in my eye.

Enter JENKIN.

JEN. O Nick, what gentleman is that comes to lie at our house? My master allows him one to wait on him, and I believe it will fall to thy lot. 90

NICH. I love my master; by these hilts,<sup>11</sup> I
do;

But rather than I'll ever come to serve him,
I'll turn away my master.

Enter CICELY.

CIC. Nich'las! where are you, Nich'las?
You must come in, Nich'las, and help the gentleman<sup>12</sup> off with his boots.

NICH. If I pluck off his boots, I'll eat the spurs,
And they shall stick fast in my throat like burrs.

CIC. Then, Jenkin, come you.

JEN. Nay, 't is no boot for me to deny it. [100
My master hath given me a coat here, but he takes pains himself to brush it once or twice a day with a holly wand.

CIC. Come, come, make haste, that you may wash your hands again, and help to serve in dinner.

JEN. [to the audience] You may see, my masters, though it be afternoon with you, 't is but early days with us, for we have not din'd
yet. Stay a little; I'll but go in and [110 help to bear up the first course, and come to you again presently. [Exeunt.]

<sup>11</sup> Evidently Nick wears a sword or dagger;
cf. II. iii, 174-177.

<sup>12</sup> Q, young gentleman.

[SCENE II]<sup>13</sup>Enter MALBY and CRANWELL.

MAL. This is the sessions day; pray can you tell me
How young Sir Charles hath sped? Is he acquit,
Or must he try the law's strict penalty?

CRAN. He's clear'd of all, spite of his enemies,
Whose earnest labor was to take his life.
But in this suit of pardon he hath spent<sup>14</sup>
All the revenues that his father left him;
And he is now turn'd a plain countryman,
Reform'd<sup>15</sup> in all things. See, sir, here he comes.

Enter SIR [CHARLES] and his Keeper.

KEEP. Discharge your fees, and you are then at freedom. 10

SIR C. Here, Master Keeper, take the poor remainder
Of all the wealth I have. My heavy foes
Have made my purse light; but, alas, to me
'T is wealth enough that you have set me free.

MAL. God give you joy of your delivery.
I am glad to see you abroad, Sir Charles.

SIR C. The poorest knight in England,
Master Malby.
My life hath cost me all the patrimony
My father left his son. Well, God forgive them
That are the authors of my penury. 20

Enter SHAFTON.

SHAFT. Sir Charles! A hand, a hand! At liberty?
Now, by the faith I owe, I am glad to see it.
What want you? Wherein may I pleasure you?

SIR C. O me! O most unhappy gentleman!
I am not worthy to have friends stirr'd up,
Whose hands may help me in this plunge of want.
I would I were in Heaven, to inherit there
Th' immortal birthright which my Savior keeps,
And by no unthrift can be bought and sold;
For here on earth what pleasures should we trust? 30

<sup>13</sup> Unlocated; perhaps before the jail.<sup>14</sup> In gifts to influential persons.<sup>15</sup> Transformed.

SHAFT. To rid you from these contemplations,
Three hundred pounds you shall receive of me;
Nay, five for fail.<sup>16</sup> Come, sir, the sight of gold
Is the most sweet receipt for melancholy,
And will revive your spirits. You shall hold law
With your proud adversaries. Tush! let Frank Acton
Wage, [with]<sup>17</sup> his knighthood, like expense with me,
And 'a will sink, he will. Nay, good Sir Charles,
Applaud your fortune and your fair escape
From all these perils.

SIR C. O sir, they have undone me. [40
Two thousand and five hundred pound a year
My father at his death possess'd me of;
All which the envious<sup>18</sup> Acton made me spend;
And, notwithstanding all this large expense,
I had much ado to gain my liberty;
And I have only now a house of pleasure,
With some five hundred pounds reserved,
Both to maintain me and my loving sister.

SHAFT. [aside] That must I have; it lies convenient for me.

If I can fasten but one finger on him, 50
With my full hand I'll gripe him to the heart.
'T is not for love I proffer'd him this coin,
But for my gain and pleasure. — Come, Sir Charles,

I know you have need of money; take my offer.

SIR C. Sir, I accept it, and remain indebted
Even to the best of my unable<sup>19</sup> power.
Come, gentlemen, and see it tend'red down! 20
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE III]<sup>21</sup>Enter WENDOLL, melancholy.

WEN. I am a villain, if I apprehend<sup>22</sup>
But such a thought; then, to attempt the deed,
Slave, thou art damn'd without redemption. —
I'll drive away this passion with a song.
A song! Ha, ha! A song! as if, fond<sup>23</sup>
man,
Thy eyes could swim in laughter, when thy soul
Lies drench'd and drowned in red tears of blood.

<sup>16</sup> If necessary (to avoid failure).<sup>17</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub>; Q<sub>2</sub>: Wage his Knight-hood-like.<sup>18</sup> Malicious. <sup>19</sup> Feeble. <sup>20</sup> Paid.<sup>21</sup> A room in Frankford's house.<sup>22</sup> Conceive.<sup>23</sup> Foolish.

I'll pray, and see if God within my heart Plant better thoughts. — Why, prayers are meditations,
And when I meditate (oh, God forgive me) [10
It is on her divine perfections.
I will forget her; I will arm myself
Not t' entertain a thought of love to her;
And, when I come by chance into her presence,
I'll hale<sup>24</sup> these balls, until my eye-strings
crack,
From being pull'd and drawn to look that
way.

Enter, over the stage, FRANKFORD, his Wife, and NICK [and exeunt].

O God, O God! with what a violence
I'm hurried to my own destruction.
There goest thou, the most perfect's[t] man
That ever England bred a gentleman; 20
And shall I wrong his bed? — Thou God of
thunder,
Stay, in thy thoughts of vengeance and of wrath,
Thy great, almighty, and all-judging hand
From speedy execution on a villain,
A villain and a traitor to his friend.

Enter JENKIN.

JEN. Did your Worship call?

WEN. He doth maintain me; he allows me largely
Money to spend.

JEN. [aside] By my faith, so do not you me;
I cannot get a cross<sup>25</sup> of you.

WEN. My gelding, and my man. 30

JEN. [to the audience] That's Sorrel and I.

WEN. This kindness grows of no alliance<sup>26</sup>
'twixt us.

JEN. [aside] Nor is my service of any great acquaintance.

WEN. I never bound him to me by desert.

Of a mere stranger, a poor gentleman,
A man by whom in no kind he could gain,
And he hath plac'd me in his highest thoughts,
Made me companion with the best and chiefest
In Yorkshire. He cannot eat without me,
Nor laugh without me; I am to his body 40
As necessary as his digestion,
And equally do make him whole or sick.
And shall I wrong this man? Base man!
Ingrate!

<sup>24</sup> Constrain.

<sup>25</sup> Originally a coin stamped with a cross, and then any coin.

<sup>26</sup> Relationship.

Hast thou the power, straight with thy gory
hands,

To rip thy image from his bleeding heart,
To scratch thy name from out the holy book
Of his remembrance, and to wound his name That holds thy name so dear? Or rend his
heart

To whom thy heart was knit and join'd together? 49

And yet I must. Then, Wendoll, be content;
Thus villains, when they would, cannot repent.

JEN. [aside] What a strange humor is my new master in. Pray God he be not mad;
if he should be so, I should never have any mind to serve him in Bedlam. It may be he is mad for missing of me.

WEN. What, Jenkin; where's your mistress?

JEN. Is your Worship married?

WEN. Why dost thou ask? 60

JEN. Because you are my master; and if I have a mistress, I would be glad, like a good servant, to do my duty to her.

WEN. I mean Mistress Frankford.

JEN. Marry, sir, her husband is riding out of town, and she went very lovingly to bring him on his way to horse. Do you see, sir?
Here she comes, and here I go.

WEN. Vanish. [Exit JENKIN.]

Enter MISTRESS FRANKFORD.

MRS. F. Y'are well met, sir; now, in troth,
my husband, 70

Before he took horse, had a great desire
To speak with you; we sought about the
house,

Halloo'd into the fields, sent every way,
But could not meet you. Therefore, he enjoin'd me

To do unto you his most kind commends.

Nay, more, he wills you, as you prize his
love,

Or hold in estimation his kind friendship,
To make bold in his absence, and command
Even as himself were present in the house; [79
For you must keep his table, use his servants,
And be a present Frankford in his absence.

WEN. I thank him for his love. —

[aside] Give me a name, you, whose infectious tongues

Are tipp'd with gall and poison: as you would Think on a man that had your father slain, Murd'ered your<sup>27</sup> children, made your wives base strumpets,

<sup>27</sup> So Q.: thy.

So call me, call me so; print in my face
The most stigmatic<sup>28</sup> title of a villain,
For hatching treason to so true a friend.

Mrs. F. Sir, you are much beholding<sup>29</sup> to my husband; 90

You are a man most dear in his regard.

WEN. I am bound unto your husband, and you too.

[aside] I will not speak to wrong a gentleman
Of that good estimation, my kind friend.

I will not; zounds, I will not. I may choose,
And I will choose. Shall I be so misled?

Or shall I purchase to<sup>30</sup> my father's crest
The motto of a villain? If I say

I will not do it, what thing can enforce me?

What can compel me? What sad destiny Hath such command upon my yielding
thoughts? 101

I will not. Ha! some Fury pricks me on;
The swift Fates drag me at their chariot wheel.

And hurry me to mischief. Speak I must;
Injure myself, wrong her, deceive his trust.

Mrs. F. Are you not well, sir, that you seem thus troubled?

There is sedition in your countenance!

WEN. And in my heart, fair angel, chaste and wise!

I love you! Start not, speak not, answer not;
I love you! Nay, let me speak the rest; [110
Bid me to swear, and I will call to record
The host of Heaven.

Mrs. F. The host of Heaven forbid
Wendoll should hatch such a disloyal thought!

WEN. Such is my fate; to this suit<sup>31</sup> was I
born,

To wear rich pleasure's crown, or fortune's
scorn.

Mrs. F. My husband loves you. ✓

WEN. I know it.

Mrs. F. He esteems you, ✓
Even as his brain, his eyeball, or his heart.

WEN. I have tried it.

Mrs. F. His purse is your exchequer, and ✓ his table 119

Doth freely serve you.

WEN. So I have found it.

Mrs. F. Oh, with what face of brass, what brow of steel,

Can you, unblushing, speak this to the face

Of the espous'd wife of so dear a friend?

It is my husband that maintains your state.

Will you dishonor him? I am his wife ✓

That in your power hath left his whole affairs:
It is to me you speak!

WEN.

Oh, speak no more;

For more than this I know, and have recorded
Within the red-leav'd table<sup>32</sup> of my heart.

Fair, and of all belov'd, I was not fearful [130
Bluntly to give my life into your hand,

And at one hazard all my earthly means.

Go, tell your husband; he will turn me off,

And I am then undone. I care not, I:

'T was for your sake. Perchance in rage he'll kill me;

I care not: 't was for you. Say I incur

The general name of villain through the
world,

Of traitor to my friend; I care not, I.

Beggary, shame, death, scandal, and reproach, 139

For you I'll hazard all. Why,<sup>33</sup> what care I?

For you I'll live, and in your love I'll die.

Mrs. F. You move me, sir, to passion and to pity.<sup>34</sup>

The love I bear my husband is as precious
As my soul's health.

WEN.

I love your husband, too,
And for his love I will engage my life.

Mistake me not; the augmentation

Of my sincere affection borne to you

Doth no whit lessen my regard to him.

I will be secret, lady, close as night; 149

And not the light of one small glorious star
Shall shine here in my forehead, to bewray<sup>35</sup>

That act of night.

Mrs. F. [aside] What shall I say?

My soul is wand'ring, and hath lost her way. —
Oh, Master Wendoll! Oh!

WEN.

Sigh not, sweet saint;
For every sigh you breathe draws from my

heart

A drop of blood.<sup>36</sup>

Mrs. F.

I ne'er offended yet!

My fault, I fear, will in my<sup>37</sup> brow be writ.

Women that fall, not quite bereft of grace,

Have their offences noted in their face. 160

I blush, and am asham'd. Oh, Master Wen-
doll,

Pray God I be not born to curse your tongue,
That hath enchanted me. This maze I am

in

I fear will prove the labyrinth of sin.

<sup>32</sup> It was supposed that every sigh cost the sinner's heart a drop of blood. Wendoll is gracefully asserting that his heart is hers.

Enter NICK [behind].

WEN. The path of pleasure and the gate to bliss,
Which on your lips I knock at with a kiss.

NICH. I'll kill the rogue.

WEN. Your husband is from home; your bed's no blab.
Nay, look not down and blush.

[Exeunt WENDOLL and MISTRESS FRANKFORD.]

NICH. Zounds, I'll stab.
Ay, Nick, was it thy chance to come just in the nick? 170

I love my master, and I hate that slave;
I love my mistress, but these tricks I like not.
My master shall not pocket up this wrong;
I'll eat my fingers first. What say'st thou, metal?

Does not the rascal Wendoll go on legs
That thou must cut off? Hath he not ham-strings

That thou must hock? Nay, metal, thou shalt stand

To all I say. I'll henceforth turn a spy,
And watch them in their close conveyances.<sup>38</sup>
I never look'd for better of that rascal, 180
Since he came miching<sup>39</sup> first into our house.
It is that Satan hath corrupted her,
For she was fair and chaste. I'll have an eye

In all their gestures. Thus I think of them,
If they proceed as they have done before:
Wendoll's a knave, my mistress is a —

Exit.

[ACT III — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter [SIR] CHARLES [MOUNTFORD] and SUSAN [in rustic attire].

SIR C. Sister, you see we are driven to hard shift,
To keep this poor house we have left unsold.
I'm now enforc'd to follow husbandry,
And you to milk; and do we not live well?
Well, I thank God.

SUSAN. Oh, Brother, here's a change,
Since old Sir Charles died in our father's house.

SIR C. All things on earth thus change,
some up, some down;
Content's a kingdom, and I wear that crown.

<sup>1</sup> Before Sir Charles Mountford's house.

Enter SHAFTON, with a Sergeant.

SHAFT. God morrow, morrow, Sir Charles.
What, with your sister,
Plying your husbandry? — Sergeant, stand off. — 10

You have a pretty house here, and a garden,
And goodly ground about it. Since it lies
So near a lordship that I lately bought,
I would fain buy it of you. I will give you —

SIR C. Oh, pardon me; this house successively

Hath long'd<sup>2</sup> to me and my progenitors
Three hundred years. My great-great-grand-father,

He in whom first our gentle style<sup>3</sup> began,
Dwelt here, and in this ground increas'd this mole-hill

Unto that mountain which my father left me.
Where he, the first of all our house, begun [21
I now, the last, will end, and keep this house,
This virgin title, never yet deflow'r'd
By any unthrift of the Mountfords' line.

In brief, I will not sell it for more gold
Than you could hide or pave the ground withal.

SHAFT. Ha, ha! a proud mind and a beggar's purse!

Where's my three hundred pounds, beside the use? <sup>4</sup>

I have brought it to an execution 29
By course of law. What, is my monies ready?

SIR C. An execution, sir, and never tell me
You put my bond in suit? You deal extremely.<sup>5</sup>

SHAFT. Sell me the land, and I'll acquit you straight.

SIR C. Alas, alas! 'T is all trouble hath left me

To cherish me and my poor sister's life.
If this were sold, our [names] <sup>6</sup> should <sup>7</sup> then be quite Raz'd from the beadroll <sup>8</sup> of gentility.

You see what hard shift we have made to keep it

Allied still to our own name. This palm you see,
Labor hath glow'd within; her silver brow, [40
That never tasted a rough winter's blast
Without a mask or fan, doth with a grace
Defy cold winter, and his storms outface.

SUSAN. Sir, we feed sparing, and we labor hard;

We lie uneasy, to reserve to us
And our succession this small spot of ground.

SIR C. I have so bent my thoughts to husbandry
That I protest I scarcely can remember
What a new fashion is, how silk or satin 49
Feels in my hand. Why, pride is grown to us
A mere, mere stranger. I have quite forgot
The names of all that ever waited on me.
I cannot name ye any of my hounds,
Once from whose echoing mouths I heard all music
That e'er my heart desired. What should I say?
To keep this place, I have chang'd myself away.

SHAFT. Arrest him at my suit. — Actions and actions
Shall keep thee in continual bondage fast ;
Nay, more, I'll sue thee by a late appeal,<sup>9</sup>
And call thy former life in question.<sup>10</sup> 60
The keeper is my friend ; thou shalt have irons,
And usage such as I'll deny to dogs !
Away with him.

SIR C. Ye are too timorous ;<sup>11</sup> but trouble is my master,
And I will serve him truly. — My kind Sister,
Thy tears are of no use to mollify
This flinty man. Go to my father's brother,
My kinsmen, and allies ; entreat them for me
To ransom me from this injurious man
That seeks my ruin.

SHAFT. Come, irons, irons ! Come away ! 70
I'll see thee lodg'd far from the sight of day.

Exeunt [all but SUSAN].

SUSAN. My heart's so hard'ned with the frost of grief,
Death cannot pierce it through. Tyrant too fell !

So lead the fiends condemned souls to hell.

Enter [SIR FRANCIS] ACTON and MALBY.

SIR F. Again to prison ! Malby, hast thou seen
A poor slave better tortur'd ? Shall we hear
The music of his voice cry from the grate,<sup>12</sup>
" Meat, for the Lord sake ? " No, no, yet I am not Thoroughly reveng'd. They say, he hath a pretty wench

To his sister ; shall I, in my mercy sake 80
To him and to his kindred, bribe the fool
To shame herself by lewd, dishonest lust ?
I'll proffer largely ; but, the deed being done,
I'll smile to see her base confusion.

MAL. Methinks, Sir Francis, you are full reveng'd

For greater wrongs than he can proffer you.
See where the poor sad gentlewoman stands.

SIR. F. Ha, ha ! Now will I flout her poverty,

Deride her fortunes, scoff her base estate ; [89
My very soul the name of Mountford hate.

But stay, my heart ! [Oh,]<sup>13</sup> what a look did fly

To strike my soul through with thy piercing eye.

I am enchanted ; all my spirits are fled ;
And with one glance my envious spleen<sup>14</sup> struck dead.

SUSAN. Acton, that seeks our blood !

Runs away.

SIR F. O chaste and fair !

MAL. Sir Francis. Why, Sir Francis, in a trance ?

Sir Francis, what cheer, man ? Come, come, how is 't ?

SIR F. Was she not fair ? Or else this judging eye

Cannot distinguish beauty.

MAL. She was fair. 99

SIR F. She was an angel in a mortal's shape,
And ne'er descended from old Mountford's line.

But soft, soft, let me call my wits together.
A poor, poor wench, to my great adversary
Sister, whose very souls denounce stern war
One against other ! How now, Frank, turn'd fool

Or madman, whether ? But no ! Master of My perfect senses and directest wits.

Then why should I be in this violent humor
Of passion and of love ? And with a person
So different every way, and so oppos'd 110

In all contractions<sup>15</sup> and still-warring actions ?
Fie, fie ! How I dispute against my soul !

Come, come ; I'll gain her, or in her fair quest
Purchase my soul free and immortal rest.

[Exeunt.]

<sup>9</sup> Charge.

<sup>10</sup> I.e., put in jeopardy the life which you formerly saved.

<sup>15</sup> Malicious rage.

[SCENE II] <sup>16</sup>

Enter three or four Serving Men, [among them SPIGOT the butler, and NICHOLAS]; one with a volder <sup>17</sup> and a wooden knife, to take away; another the salt and bread; another the table-cloth and napkins; another the carpet; <sup>18</sup> JENKIN with two lights after them.

JEN. So; march in order, and retire in battle array. My master and the guests have supp'd already; all's taken away. Here, now spread for the serving men in the hall! — Butler, it belongs to your office.

BUT. I know it, Jenkin. What d' ye call the gentleman that supp'd there to-night?

JEN. Who? my master?

BUT. No, no; Master Wendoll, he's a daily guest. I mean the gentleman that [10 came but this afternoon.

JEN. His name is Master Cranwell. God's light! Hark, within there; my master calls to lay more billets <sup>19</sup> upon the fire. Come, come! Lord, how we that are in office <sup>20</sup> here in the house are troubled! One spread the carpet in the parlor, and stand ready to snuff the lights; the rest be ready to prepare their stomachs. <sup>21</sup> More lights in the hall, there! Come, Nich'las.

Exeunt [all but NICHOLAS].

NICH. I cannot eat; but had I Wendoll's heart, <sup>20</sup>
I would eat that. The rogue grows impudent; Oh, I have seen such vild, notorious tricks, Ready to make my eyes dart from my head. I'll tell my master; by this air, I will; Fall what may fall, I'll tell him. Here he comes.

Enter MASTER FRANKFORD, as it were brushing the crumbs from his clothes with a napkin, as newly risen from supper.

FRANK. Nich'las, what make you here?
Why are not you
At supper in the hall among your fellows?

NICH. Master, I stay'd your rising from the board,
To speak with you.

FRANK. Be brief then, gentle Nich'las; [29 My wife and guests attend <sup>22</sup> me in the parlor. Why dost thou pause? Now, Nich'las, you want money,
And, unthrift-like, would eat into your wages

Ere you have earn'd it. Here, sir, 's half a crown;

Play the good husband, <sup>23</sup> and away to supper.

NICH. [aside] By this hand, an honorable gentleman. I will not see him wrong'd. —

Sir, I have serv'd you long; you entertain'd me <sup>24</sup>

Seven years before your beard. You knew me, sir,

Before you knew my mistress.

FRANK. What of this, good Nich'las?

NICH. I never was a make-bate <sup>25</sup> or a knave; <sup>40</sup>

I have no fault but one: I'm given to quarrel —

But not with women. I will tell you, Master, That which will make your heart leap from your breast,

Your hair to startle from your head, your ears to tingle.

FRANK. What preparation's this to dismal news?

NICH. 'Sblood, sir, I love you better than your wife.

I'll make it good.

FRANK. Y'are a knave, and I have much ado

With wonted patience to contain my rage, [49 And not to break thy pate. Th' art a knave. I'll turn you, with your base comparisons, Out of my doors.

NICH. Do, do; there is not room For Wendoll and me too both in one house.

O Master, Master, that Wendoll is a villain.

FRANK. Ay, saucy?

NICH. Strike, strike, do strike; yet hear me. I am no fool;

I know a villain, when I see him act Deeds of a villain. Master, Master, that base slave Enjoys my mistress, and dishonors you.

FRANK. Thou hast kill'd me with a weapon whose sharp point <sup>60</sup>

Hath prick'd quite through and through my shiv'ring heart.

Drops of cold sweat sit dangling on my hairs,

Like morning's dew upon the golden flowers, And I am plung'd into strange agonies.

What didst thou say? If any word that touch'd

His credit, or her reputation,

<sup>17</sup> Tray or basket for clearing the table.

<sup>22</sup> Are waiting for.

It is as hard to enter my belief,
As Dives into Heaven.

NICH. I can gain nothing ;
They are two that never wrong'd me. I knew before

'T was but a thankless office, and perhaps [70
As much as my service, or my life
Is worth. All this I know ; but this, and
more,
More by a thousand dangers, could not hire me
To smother such a heinous wrong from you.
I saw, and I have said.

FRANK. [aside] 'T is probable. Though blunt, yet he is honest.
Though I durst pawn my life, and on their faith

Hazard the dear salvation of my soul,
Yet in my trust I may be too secure. 79
May this be true? Oh, may it? Can it be?
Is it by any wonder possible?

Man, woman, what thing mortal can we trust,
When friends and bosom wives prove so unjust? —

What instance <sup>26</sup> hast thou of this strange report?

NICH. Eyes, master, eyes.<sup>27</sup>

FRANK. Thy eyes may be deceiv'd, I tell
thee ;

For should an angel from the Heavens drop
down,

And preach this to me that thyself hast told,
He should have much ado to win belief,

In both their loves I am so confident. 90

NICH. Shall I discourse the same by circumstance? <sup>28</sup>

FRANK. No more! To supper, and command your fellows

To attend us and the strangers. Not a word,
I charge thee, on thy life! Be secret then ;
For I know nothing.

NICH. I am dumb ; and, now that I have eas'd my stomach,<sup>29</sup>

I will go fill my stomach. Exit.

FRANK. Away ; begone! —
She is well born, descended nobly ;
Virtuous her education ; her repute
Is in the general voice of all the country [100
Honest and fair ; her carriage, her demeanor,
In all her actions that concern the love
To me her husband, modest, chaste, and godly.
Is all this seeming gold plain copper?

But he, that Judas that hath borne my purse,
And sold me for a sin! O God! O God!

<sup>29</sup> Anger.

Shall I put up <sup>30</sup> these wrongs? No! Shall I trust

The bare report of this suspicious groom,
Before the double-gilt, the well-hatch[<sup>31</sup> d] <sup>ore <sup>32</sup></sup>
Of their two hearts? No, I will loose these
thoughts ; 110

Distraction I will banish from my brow,
And from my looks exile sad discontent.
Their wonted favors in my tongue shall
flow ;

Till I know all, I'll nothing seem to know. —
Lights and a table there! Wife, Master
Wendoll,

And gentle Master Cranwell!

Enter MISTRESS FRANKFORD, MASTER WEN-DOLL, MASTER CRANWELL, NICK, and JENKIN, with cards, carpets, stools, and other necessaries.

FRANK. Oh, Master Cranwell, you are a stranger here,
And often balk <sup>33</sup> my house ; faith, y' are a churl! —

Now we have supp'd, a table, and to cards.

JEN. A pair <sup>34</sup> of cards, Nich'las, and a [120 carpet to cover the table! Where's Cicely, with her counters and her box? Candles and candlesticks, there! Fie! We have such a household of serving creatures! Unless it be Nick and I, there's not one amongst them all that can say bo to a goose. — Well said,<sup>35</sup>
Nick!

They spread a carpet, set down lights and cards.

MRS. F. Come, Master Frankford, who shall take my part? <sup>36</sup>

FRANK. Marry, that will I, sweet wife.

WEN. No, by my faith, sir, when you [130 are together, I sit out. It must be Mistress
Frankford and I, or else it is no match.

FRANK. I do not like that match.

NICH. [aside] You have no reason, marry, knowing all.

FRANK. 'T is no great matter, neither. — Come, Master Cranwell, shall you and I take them up? <sup>37</sup>

CRAN. At your pleasure, sir.

FRANK. I must look to you, Master Wendoll, for you'll be playing false. Nay, [140 so will my wife, too.

NICH. [aside] Ay, I will be sworn she will.

<sup>37</sup> Take them on, play against them.

MRS. F. Let them that are taken false, forfeit the set.

FRANK. Content ; it shall go hard but I'll take you.

CRAN. Gentlemen, what shall our game be ?

WEN. Master Frankford, you play best at noddy.<sup>38</sup>

FRANK. You shall not find it so ; indeed, you shall not.

MRS. F. I can play at nothing so well as double-ruff.<sup>39</sup>

FRANK. If Master Wendoll and my wife be together, there's no playing against them [150 at double-hand.

NICH. I can tell you, sir, the game that Master Wendoll is best at.

WEN. What game is that, Nick ?

NICH. Marry, sir, knave out of doors.

WEN. She and I will take you at lodam.<sup>40</sup>

MRS. F. Husband, shall we play at saint ?<sup>41</sup>

FRANK. [aside] My saint's turn'd devil. —
No, we'll none of saint.

You're best at new-cut,<sup>42</sup> wife, you'll play at that.

WEN. If you play at new-cut, I'm [150
soonest hitter of any here, for a wager.

FRANK. [aside] 'Tis me they play on. —
Well, you may draw out,

For all your cunning ; 't will be to your shame ;
I'll teach you, at your new-cut, a new game.
Come, come.

CRAN. If you cannot agree upon the game,
To post and pair !<sup>43</sup>

WEN. We shall be soonest pairs ; and my good host,
When he comes late home, he must kiss the post.<sup>43</sup>

FRANK. Whoever wins, it shall be to thy cost. 170

CRAN. Faith, let it be vide-ruff,<sup>39</sup> and let's make honors.

FRANK. If you make honors, one thing let me crave :

Honor the king and queen ; except the knave.

WEN. Well, as you please for that. — Lift,<sup>44</sup> who shall deal.

MRS. F. The least in sight. What are you,
Master Wendoll ?

<sup>38</sup> A game similar to cribbage. Frankford plays on noddy = fool.

<sup>41</sup> How cent was played is unknown ; the winning sum of points was one hundred.

<sup>42</sup> Apparently a relatively simple game, though how it was played is not known.

<sup>44</sup> Cut (to determine).

WEN. I am a knave.

NICH. [aside] I'll swear it.

MRS. F. I a queen.

FRANK. [aside] A quean,<sup>45</sup> thou shouldst say. — Well, the cards are mine ;

They are the grossest pair<sup>46</sup> that e'er I felt.

MRS. F. Shuffle ; I'll cut ; would I had never dealt !

FRANK. I have lost my dealing.

WEN. Sir, the fault's in me ; 180
This queen I have more than mine own, you
see.

Give me the stock !<sup>46</sup>

FRANK. My mind's not on my game.
Many a deal I have lost ; the more's your shame.

You have serv'd me a bad trick, Master Wen-
doll.

WEN. Sir, you must take your lot. To end
this strife,

I know I have dealt better with your wife.

FRANK. Thou hast dealt falsely, then.

MRS. F. What's trumps ?

WEN. Hearts. Partner, I rub.<sup>47</sup>

FRANK. [aside] Thou robb'st me of my soul, of her chaste love ; 190

In thy false dealing thou hast robb'd my
heart. —

Booty you play ;<sup>48</sup> I like a loser stand,
Having no heart, or here or in my hand.

I will give o'er the set ; I am not well.

Come, who will hold my cards ?

MRS. F. Not well, sweet Master Frankford ?

Alas, what ail you ? 'Tis some sudden qualm.

WEN. How long have you been so, Master
Frankford ?

FRANK. Sir, I was lusty, and I had my health,

But I grew ill when you began to deal. — 200
Take hence this table ! — Gentle Master Cran-
well,

You are welcome ; see your chamber at your
pleasure.

I am sorry that this megrim takes me so,

I cannot sit and bear you company. —

Jenkin, some lights, and show him to his chamber !

[Exeunt CRANWELL and JENKIN.]

<sup>46</sup> Pack.

<sup>47</sup> Probably = "ruff", i.e., take the four cards not distributed by the dealer ; they went to the holder of the ace of trumps. (Ward.)

<sup>48</sup> You are playing in league with a confederate to victimize another player.

MRS. F. A nightgown<sup>49</sup> for my husband, quickly there.
It is some rheum or cold.

WEN. Now, in good faith,
This illness you have got by sitting late
Without your gown.

FRANK. I know it, Master Wendoll.
Go, go to bed, lest you complain like me. —
Wife, prithee, Wife, into my bedchamber. [211
The night is raw and cold, and rheumatic.<sup>50</sup>
Leave me my gown and light ; I'll walk away my fit.

WEN. Sweet sir, good night.

FRANK. My self, good night.

[Exit WENDOLL.]

MRS. F. Shall I attend you, Husband?

FRANK. No, gentle Wife, thou 't catch cold in thy head.

Prithee, begone, sweet ; I'll make haste to bed.

MRS. F. No sleep will fasten on mine eyes,
• you know,

Until you come. Exit.

FRANK. Sweet Nan, I prithee, go ! —
I have bethought me : get me by degrees [220
The keys of all my doors, which I will mold
In wax, and take their fair impression,
To have by them new keys. This being com-
pass'd,

At a set hour a letter shall be brought me,
And when they think they may securely
play,
They nearest are to danger. — Nick, I must rely

Upon thy trust and faithful secrecy.

NICH. Build on my faith.

FRANK. To bed, then, not to rest ;
Care lodges in my brain, grief in my breast,

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE III] <sup>51</sup>

Enter Sir Charles his sister [SUSAN], OLD MOUNTFORD, SANDY, RODER, and TIDY.

OLD MOUNT. You say my nephew is in great distress :
Who brought it to him but his own lewd
life?

I cannot spare a cross. I must confess,
He was my brother's son ; why, Niece, what
then?

This is no world in which to pity men.

<sup>51</sup> Unlocated ; perhaps before old Mountford's
house.

SUSAN. I was not born a beggar, though his extremes<sup>52</sup>

Enforce this language from me, I protest
No fortune of mine own<sup>53</sup> could lead my tongue
To this base key. I do beseech you, Uncle,
For the name's sake, for Christianity, — 10
Nay, for God's sake, to pity his distress.
He is deny'd the freedom of the prison,
And in the hole<sup>54</sup> is laid with men condemn'd ;
Plenty he hath of nothing but of irons,
And it remains in you to free him thence.

OLD MOUNT. Money I cannot spare ; men should take heed.

He lost my kindred when he fell to need. [Exit.]

SUSAN. Gold is but earth ; thou earth enough shalt have,

When thou hast once took measure of thy grave. —

You know me, Master Sandy, and my suit. [20
SANDY. I knew you, lady, when the old man liv'd ;

I knew you ere your brother sold his land.
Then you were Mistress Sue, trick'd up in jewels ;

Then you sung well, play'd sweetly on the lute ;<sup>55</sup>

But now I neither know you nor your suit.

[Exit.]

SUSAN. You, Master Roder, was my brother's tenant ;
Rent-free he plac'd you in that wealthy farm,
Of which you are possess'd.

RODER. True, he did ;
And have I not there dwelt still for his sake ?
I have some business now ; but, without doubt, 30

They that have hurl'd him in will help him out. Exit.

SUSAN. Cold comfort still. What say you, cousin Tidy?

TIDY. I say this comes of roisting,<sup>56</sup> swagg'ring.

Call not me cousin ; each man for himself !
Some men are born to mirth, and some to sorrow :

I am no cousin unto them that borrow. Exit.

SUSAN. O Charity, why art thou fled to Heaven,

And left all things on this earth uneven ?
Their scoffing answers I will ne'er return,
But to myself his grief in silence mourn. 40

<sup>54</sup> One of the worst apartments in the Counter ;
hence = worst sort of prison-cell.

<sup>56</sup> Bullying.

Enter SIR FRANCIS and MALBY.

[ACT IV — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

SIR F. She is poor ; I'll therefore tempt her with this gold. —

Go, Malby, in my name deliver it,
And I will stay thy answer.

[MAL.] Fair mistress, as I understand your grief

Doth grow from want, so I have here in store

A means to furnish you, a bag of gold,
Which to your hands I freely tender you.

SUSAN. I thank you, Heavens. I thank you, gentle sir.

God make me able to requite this favor.

MAL. This gold Sir Francis Acton sends by me, 50

And prays you —

SUSAN. Acton? O God! That name I'm born to curse.

Hence, bawd; hence, broker! See, I spurn his gold.

My honor never shall for gain be sold. ¶

SIR F. Stay, lady, stay!

SUSAN. From you I'll posting hie,
Even as the doves from feather'd eagles fly.

Exit.

SIR F. She hates my name, my face; how should I woo?

I am disgrac'd in every thing I do.

The more she hates me, and disdains my love,

The more I am rapt<sup>57</sup> in admiration 60
Of her divine and chaste perfections.

Woo her with gifts I cannot, for all gifts
Sent in my name she spurns; with looks I can not,

For she abhors my sight; nor yet with letters,

For none she will receive. How then? how then?

Well, I will fasten such a kindness on her
As shall o'ercome her hate and conquer it.

Sir Charles, her brother, lies in execution<sup>58</sup>
For a great sum of money; and, besides,

The appeal is sued still for my huntsmen's<sup>59</sup>
death, 70

Which only I have power to reverse.

In her I'll bury all my hate of him. —

Go seek the keeper, Malby; bring me to him.

To save his body, I his debts will pay;

To save his life, I his appeal will stay. [Exeunt.]

<sup>59</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub>; Q<sub>1</sub> huntsmans.

Enter SIR CHARLES [MOUNTFORD] in prison, with irons, his feet bare, his garments all ragged and torn.

SIR C. Of all on the earth's face most miserable,

Breathe in this hellish dungeon thy laments!
Thus like a slave ragg'd, like a felon gyv'd.

O unkind uncle! O my friends ingrate!<sup>2</sup>
That hurls thee headlong to this base estate. —

Unthankful kinsmen! Mountfords all too base,

To let thy name lie fetter'd in disgrace.

A thousand deaths here in this grave I die;
Fear, hunger, sorrow, cold, all threat my death,

And join together to deprive my breath. 10
But that which most torments me, my dear sister

Hath left<sup>3</sup> to visit me, and from my friends
Hath brought no hopeful answer; therefore I

Divine they will not help my misery.
If it be so, shame, scandal, and contempt

Attend their covetous thoughts; need make their graves.

Usurers they live, and may they die like slaves!

Enter Keeper.

KEEP. Knight, be of comfort, for I bring thee freedom

From all thy troubles.

SIR C. Then I am doom'd to die;
Death is the end of all calamity. 20

KEEP. Live! Your appeal is stay'd; the execution

Of all your debts discharg'd; your creditors
Even to the utmost penny satisfied.

In sign whereof your shackles I knock off.

You are not left so much indebted to us

As for your fees; all is discharg'd; all paid.

Go freely to your house, or where you please;
After long miseries, embrace your ease.

SIR C. Thou grumblest out the sweetest music to me

That ever organ play'd. — Is this a dream? 30
Or do my waking senses apprehend

The pleasing taste of these applausive<sup>4</sup> news?
Slave that I was, to wrong such honest friends,

My loving kinsmen, and my near allies.

Tongue, I will bite thee for the scandal breath
Against such faithful kinsmen; they are all

Compos'd of pity and compassion,
Of melting charity and of moving ruth.
That which I spake before was in my rage ;
They are my friends, the mirrors of this age, 40
Bounteous and free. The noble Mountfords' race
Ne'er bred a covetous thought or humor base.

Enter SUSAN.

SUSAN. [aside] I cannot longer stay from visiting
My woful brother. While I could, I kept
My hapless tidings from his hopeful ear.
SIR C. Sister, how much am I indebted to
thee
And to thy travail !

SUSAN. What, at liberty ?

SIR C. Thou seest I am, thanks to thy industry.

Oh, unto which of all my courteous friends Am I thus bound ? My uncle Mountford, he Even of an infant lov'd me ; was it he ? 51
So did my cousin Tidy ; was it he ?
So Master Roder, Master Sandy, too.

Which of all these did this high kindness do ?

SUSAN. Charles, can you mock me in your poverty,
Knowing your friends deride your misery ?
Now, I protest I stand so much amaz'd,
To see your bonds free, and your irons knock'd
off,

That I am rapt <sup>5</sup> into a maze of wonder ;
The rather for I know not by what means [60
This happiness hath chanc'd.

SIR C. Why, by my uncle,
My cousins, and my friends ; who else, I pray,
Would take upon them all my debts to pay ?

SUSAN. Oh, Brother ! they are men all of flint,

Pictures of marble, <sup>6</sup> and as void of pity
As [chafed] <sup>7</sup> bears. I begg'd, I sued, I kneel'd, Laid open all your griefs and miseries,

Which they derided ; more than that, deni'd us
A part in their alliance ; but, in pride,
Said that our kindred with our plenty di'd. [70

SIR C. Drudges too much, <sup>8</sup> what did they ?
Oh, known evil !

[Rich fly the poor, as good men shun the Devil.
Whence should my freedom come ? Of whom alive,

Saving of those, have I deserved so well ?

Guess, Sister, call to mind, remember <sup>9</sup> me.
These I have rais'd, they follow the world's
guise :

Whom rich in <sup>10</sup> honor, they in woe despise.
SUSAN. My wits have lost themselves ; let's ask the keeper.

SIR C. Jailer.

KEEP. At hand, sir. 80

SIR C. Of courtesy resolve me one demand.
What was he took the burthen of my debts,
From off my back, stay'd my appeal to death,
Discharg'd my fees, and brought me liberty ?

KEEP. A courteous knight, one call'd Sir
Francis Acton.

SIR C. Ha ! Acton ! O me, more distress'd in this

Than all my troubles. Hale me back,
Double my irons, and my sparing meals
Put into halves, and lodge me in a dungeon
More deep, more dark, more cold, more com-fortless. 90

By Acton freed ! Not all thy manacles
Could fetter so my heels, as this one word Hath thrall'd my heart ; and it must now lie bound

In more strict prison than thy stony gaol.

I am not free, I go but under bail.

KEEP. My charge is done, sir, now I have my fees.

As we get little, we will nothing leese. <sup>11</sup> [Exit.]

SIR C. By Acton freed, my dangerous opposite ! <sup>12</sup>

Why, to what end ? On what occasion ? Ha !
Let me forget the name of enemy, 100
And with indifference balance <sup>13</sup> this high favor !

Ha !

SUSAN. [aside] His love to me ; upon my soul, 't is so !

That is the root from whence these strange things grow.

SIR C. Had this proceeded from my father,
he

That by the law of Nature is most bound
In offices of love, it had deserv'd

My best employment to requite that grace.

Had it proceeded from my friends, or him,
From them this action had deserv'd my
life — 110

And from a stranger more, because from such
There is less execution <sup>14</sup> of good deeds.
But he, nor father, nor ally, nor friend,

<sup>14</sup> Collier unnecessarily proposes expectation.

More than a stranger, both remote in blood,
And in his heart oppos'd my enemy,
That this high bounty should proceed from
him —

Oh, there I lose myself. What should I say,
What think, what do, his bounty to repay?

SUSAN. You wonder, I am sure, whence this strange kindness

Proceeds in Acton. I will tell you, Brother.
He dotes on me, and oft hath sent me gifts,
Letters, and tokens; I refus'd them all.

SIR C. I have enough, though poor; my heart is set,

In one rich gift to pay back all my debt.

Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>15</sup>

Enter FRANKFORD and NICK, with keys and a letter in his hand.

FRANK. This is the night that I must play
my part,<sup>16</sup>

To try two seeming angels. — Where's my keys?

NICH. They are made according to your mold in wax.

I bade the smith be secret, gave him money,
And here they are. The letter, sir.

FRANK. True, take it, there it is;
And when thou seest me in my pleasant's[t] vein,

Ready to sit to supper, bring it me.

NICH. I'll do 't; make no more question but I'll do 't. Exit.

Enter MISTRESS FRANKFORD, CRANWELL, WENDOLL, and JENKIN.

MRS. F. Sirrah, 't is six a'clock already struck; <sup>10</sup>

Go bid them spread the cloth, and serve in supper.

JEN. It shall be done, forsooth. Mistress, where's Spigot, the butler, to give us our <sup>17</sup>
salt and trenchers?

WEN. We that have been a-hunting all the day

Come with prepared stomachs. — Master
Frankford,

We wish'd you at our sport.

FRANK. My heart was with you, and my mind was on you. —

Fie, Master Cranwell; you are still thus
sad. —

<sup>16</sup> Q<sub>1</sub>: and I must play the trick.

<sup>17</sup> Q<sub>1</sub>: out.

A stool, a stool! Where's Jenkin, and where's Nick? <sup>20</sup>

'T is supper time at least an hour ago. —

What's the best news abroad?

WEN. I know none good.

FRANK. [aside] But I know too much bad.

*Enter [SPIGOT the] butler and JENKIN, with a tablecloth, bread, trenchers, and salt; [then
exeunt].*

CRAN. Methinks, sir, you might have that interest

In <sup>18</sup> your wife's brother, to be more remiss <sup>19</sup>

In this hard dealing against poor Sir Charles,
Who, as I hear, lies in York Castle, needy
And in great want.

FRANK. Did not more weighty business of mine own

Hold me away, I would have labor'd peace <sup>30</sup> Betwixt them with all care; indeed I would,
sir.

MRS. F. I'll write unto my brother earnestly
In that behalf.

WEN. A charitable deed,
And will beget the good opinion
Of all your friends that love you, Mistress <sup>20</sup>
Frankford.

FRANK. That's you, for one; I know you love Sir Charles,
And my wife, too, well.

WEN. He deserves the love
Of all true gentlemen; be yourselves judge.

FRANK. But supper, ho! — Now, as thou lov'st me, Wendoll, <sup>39</sup>

Which I am sure thou doest, be merry, pleasant,
And frolic it to-night. — Sweet Master Cran-
well,

Do you the like. — Wife, I protest, my heart
Was ne'er more bent on sweet alacrity.<sup>21</sup>

Where be those lazy knaves to serve in supper?

Enter NICK.

NICH. Sir, here's a letter.

FRANK. Whence comes it, and who brought it?

NICH. A stripling that below attends your answer,

And, as he tells me, it is sent from York.

FRANK. Have him into the cellar; let him taste

A cup of our March beer; go, make him drink.

NICH. I'll make him drunk, if he be a Trojan.<sup>22</sup> 50

FRANK. My boots and spurs! Where's Jenkin? God forgive me,
How I neglect my business! — Wife, look here;

I have a matter to be tri'd to-morrow
By eight a'clock; and my attorney writes me
I must be there betimes with evidence,
Or it will go against me. Where's my boots?

Enter JENKIN, with boots and spurs.

MRS. F. I hope your business craves no such dispatch,
That you must ride to-night.

WEN. [aside] I hope it doth.

FRANK. God's me! No such dispatch? —
Jenkin, my boots! Where's Nick? Saddle my roan, 60
And the grey dapple for himself. — Content ye;

It much concerns me. — Gentle Master Cranwell,

And Master Wendoll, in my absence use
The very ripest pleasures of my house.

WEN. Lord, Master Frankford, will you ride to-night?

The ways are dangerous.

FRANK. Therefore will I ride
Appointed<sup>23</sup> well; and so shall Nick, my man.

MRS. F. I'll call you up by five a'clock to-morrow.

FRANK. No, by my faith, wife, I'll not trust to that;

'Tis not such easy rising in a morning 70
From one I love so dearly. No, by my faith,
I shall not leave so sweet a bedfellow,
But with much pain. You have made me a sluggard

Since I first knew you.

MRS. F. Then, if you needs will go
This dangerous evening, Master Wendoll,
Let me entreat you bear him company.

WEN. With all my heart, sweet mistress. —
My boots, there!

FRANK. Fie, fie, that for my private business
I should disease<sup>24</sup> my friend, and be a trouble
To the whole house. — Nick!

NICH. Anon,<sup>25</sup> sir. [80

FRANK. Bring forth my gelding. — As you love me, sir,

Use no more words. — A hand, good Master Cranwell.

CRAN. Sir, God be your good speed.

FRANK. Good night, sweet Nan; nay, nay, a kiss, and part. — [aside] Dissembling lips, you suit not with my heart.

Exit [with NICHOLAS].

WEN. [aside] How business, time, and hours
all gracious prove,
And are the furtherers to my newborn love! —
I am husband now in Master Frankford's place,
And must command the house. My pleasure is

We will not sup abroad so publicly, 90
But in your private chamber, Mistress Frankford.

MRS. F. [aside to WENDOLL] Oh, sir! you are too public in your love,
And Master Frankford's wife —

CRAN. Might I crave favor,
I would entreat you I might see my chamber.
I am on the sudden grown exceeding ill,
And would be spar'd from supper.

WEN. Light there, ho! —
See you want nothing, sir, for if you do,
You injure that good man, and wrong me too.

CRAN. I will make bold; good night.

Exit.

WEN. How all conspire
To make our bosom<sup>26</sup> sweet, and full entire.

Come, Nan, I prythee, let us sup within. [101
MRS. F. Oh! what a clog unto the soul is sin!

We pale offenders are still full of fear;
Every suspicious eye brings danger near;
When they whose clear heart from offence are free

Despise report, base scandals do<sup>27</sup> outface,
And stand at mere defiance with disgrace.

WEN. Fie, fie! You talk too like a Puritan.

MRS. F. You have tempted me to mischief,
Master Wendoll;

I have done I know not what. Well, you plead custom; 110

That which for want of wit I granted erst,
I now must yield through fear. Come, come,
let's in;

Once o'er shoes, we are straight o'er head in
sin.

WEN. My jocund soul is joyful beyond measure;

I'll be profuse in Frankford's richest treasure.

<sup>26</sup> Intimacy.

<sup>27</sup> So Q.; Q. 1. to.

[SCENE III] <sup>28</sup>

Enter CICELY, JENKIN, [SPIGOT the] butler, and other Serving Men.

JEN. My mistress and Master Wendoll, my master, sup in her chamber to-night. Cicely, you are prefer'd<sup>28</sup> from being the cook, to be chambermaid. Of all the loves betwixt thee and me, tell me what thou think'st of this?

CIC. Mum; there's an old proverb: when the cat's away, the mouse may play.

JEN. Now you talk of a cat, Cicely, I smell a rat.

CIC. Good words, Jenkin, lest you be [10 call'd to answer them.

JEN. Why, God make my mistress an honest<sup>30</sup> woman! Are not these good words? Pray God my new master play not the knave with my old master! Is there any hurt in this? God send no villainy intended; and if they do sup together, pray God they do not lie together! God make my mistress chaste, and make us all His servants! What harm is there in all this? Nay, more; here is my hand, [20 thou shalt never have my heart, unless thou say, Amen.

CIC. Amen, I pray God, I say.

Enter Serving Man.

SERVING MAN. My mistress sends that you should make less noise, to lock up the doors, and see the household all got to bed. You, Jenkin, for this night are made the porter, to see the gates shut in.

JEN. Thus by little and little I creep into office. Come, to kennel, my masters, to kennel; 't is eleven a'clock already. 31

SERVING MAN. When you have lock'd the gates in, you must send up the keys to my mistress.

CIC. Quickly, for God's sake, Jenkin; for I must carry them. I am neither pillow nor bolster, but I know more than both.

JEN. To bed, good Spigot; to bed, good honest serving creatures; and let us sleep as snug as pigs in pease-straw! 40

Exeunt.

[SCENE IV] <sup>31</sup>

Enter FRANKFORD and NICK.

FRANK. Soft, soft. We have tied our geldings to a tree,

<sup>35</sup> Outside the gate. But it is evident from ll. 8-14, 23, that during the scene Frankford enters the house, and that by line 23 he has reached the chamber door.

Two flight-shoot<sup>32</sup> off, lest by their thundering hoofs

They blab our coming. Hear'st thou no noise?

NICH. Hear? I hear nothing but the owl and you.

FRANK. So; now my watch's hand points upon twelve,

And it is just midnight. Where are my keys?

NICH. Here, sir.

FRANK. This is the key that opes my outward gate;

This is the hall door; this, my withdrawing-chamber;

But this, that door that's bawd unto my shame, 10

Fountain and spring of all my bleeding thoughts,

Where the most hallowed order and true knot Of nuptial sanctity hath been profan'd:

It leads to my polluted bedchamber,

Once my terrestrial Heaven, now my earth's hell,

The place where sins in all their ripeness dwell. —

But I forget myself; now to my gate!

NICH. It must ope with far less noise than Cripple-gate, or your plot's dash'd.

FRANK. So; reach me my dark lantern to the rest.<sup>33</sup> 20

Tread softly, softly.

NICH. I will walk on eggs this pace.

FRANK. A general silence hath surpris'd the house,

And this is the last door. Astonishment, Fear, and amazement beat upon<sup>34</sup> my heart, Even as a madman beats upon a drum.

Oh, keep my eyes, you Heavens, before I enter, From any sight that may transfix my soul;

Or, if there be so black a spectacle,

Oh, strike mine eyes stark blind; or, if not so, Lend me such patience to digest my grief, 30

That I may keep this white and virgin hand From any violent outrage, or red murder.

And with that prayer I enter.

[Exit.]

NICH. Here's a circumstance,<sup>35</sup> indeed! A man may be made a cuckold in the time

He's about it. An the case were mine, As't is my master's, 'sblood! (that he makes me swear!),

I would have plac'd his action,<sup>36</sup> enter'd there; I would, I would!

[Enter FRANKFORD.]

FRANK. Oh! oh!

NICH. Master! 'Sblood! Master, Master!

FRANK. O me unhappy! I have found them lying

Close in each other's arms, and fast asleep. [40
But that I would not damn two precious souls, Bought with my Savior's blood, and send them, laden

With all their scarlet sins upon their backs,
Unto a fearful judgment, their two lives
Had met upon my rapier.

NICH. Master, what, have you left them sleeping still?

Let me go wake 'em.

FRANK. Stay, let me pause awhile. —

O God, O God, that it were possible
To undo things done; to call back yesterday;
That Time could turn up his swift sandy glass,
To untell<sup>37</sup> the days, and to redeem these hours. 51

Or that the sun

Could, rising from the west, draw his coach backward,

Take from th' account of time so many minutes,

Till he had all these seasons call'd again,
Those minutes, and those actions done in them,
Even from her first offence; that I might take
her

As spotless as an angel in my arms.

But, oh! I talk of things impossible,
And cast beyond the moon. God give me patience; 60

For I will in, and wake them.

Exit.

NICH. Here's patience perforce.
He needs must trot afoot that tires his horse.

Enter WENDOLL, running over the stage in a night-gown,<sup>38</sup> [FRANKFORD] after him with his sword drawn; the maid<sup>39</sup> in her smock stays his hand, and clasps hold on him. He pauses for awhile.

FRANK. I thank thee, maid; thou, like an angel's hand,
Hast stay'd me from a bloody sacrifice.<sup>40</sup> —
Go, villain; and my wrongs sit on thy soul
As heavy as this grief doth upon mine.
When thou record'st my many courtesies,

And shalt compare them with thy treacherous
heart.

Lay them together, weigh them equally —
'T will be revenge enough. Go, to thy friend
A Judas; pray, pray, lest I live to see 71
Thee, Judas-like, hang'd on an elder tree.

Enter MISTRESS FRANKFORD in her smock, night-gown, and night-attire.

MRS. F. Oh, by what word, what title, or what name,
Shall I entreat your pardon? Pardon! oh,
I am as far from hoping such sweet grace,
As Lucifer from Heaven. To call you husband,
—

O me, most wretched, I have lost that name;
I am no more your wife.

NICH. 'Sblood, sir, she swoons.<sup>41</sup>

FRANK. Spare thou thy tears, for I will weep for thee;

And keep thy count'nance, for I'll blush for
thee. 80

[Now I protest I think 't is I am tainted,
For I am most asham'd; and 't is more hard
For me to look upon thy guilty face
Than on the sun's clear brow. What, would'st thou speak?

MRS. F. I would I had no tongue, no ears,
no eyes,
No apprehension, no capacity.

When do you spurn me like a dog? when tread
me

Under feet? when drag me by the hair?
Though I deserve a thousand thousand-fold
More than you can inflict — yet, once my
husband, 90

For womanhood, to which I am [a shame],<sup>42</sup> Though once an ornament — even for His
sake,

That hath redeem'd our souls, mark not my face,

Nor hack me with your sword; but let me go
Perfect and undeformed to my tomb.

I am not worthy that I should prevail
In the least suit; no, not to speak to you,
Nor look on you, nor to be in your presence;
Yet, as an abject,<sup>43</sup> this one suit I crave;
This granted, I am ready for my grave. 100

FRANK. My God, with patience arm me. —
Rise, nay, rise,

And I'll debate with thee. Was it for want Thou play'dst the strumpet? Wast thou not suppl'd

<sup>43</sup> Old eds. asham'd.

With every pleasure, fashion, and new toy,
Nay, even beyond my calling? <sup>44</sup>

MRS. F. I was.

FRANK. Was it, then, disability in me;
Or in thine eye seem'd he a properer <sup>45</sup> man?

MRS. F. Oh, no.

FRANK. Did not I lodge thee in my bosom?

Wear thee in my heart?

MRS. F. You did.

FRANK. I did, indeed; witness my tears, I
did. — 110

Go, bring my infants hither. —

[Two Children are brought in.]

O Nan, O Nan,

If neither <sup>46</sup> fear of shame, regard of honor,
The blemish of my house, nor my dear love,
Could have withheld thee from so lewd a fact; <sup>47</sup>

Yet for these infants, these young, harmless
souls,

On whose white brows thy shame is character'd,
And grows in greatness as they wax in years —
Look but on them, and melt away in tears! —
Away with them; lest, as her spotted body Hath stain'd their names with stripe of bastardy, 120

So her adulterous breath may blast their spirits

With her infectious thoughts. Away with them. [The Children are taken out.]

MRS. F. In this one life, I die ten thousand deaths.

FRANK. Stand up, stand up; I will do nothing rashly.

I will retire awhile into my study,
And thou shalt hear thy sentence presently.

Exit.

MRS. F. 'T is welcome, be it death. O me, base strumpet,

That, having such a husband, such sweet children,

Must enjoy neither! Oh, to redeem my
honor,

I would have this hand cut off, these my breasts sear'd; 130

Be rack'd, strappado'd, put to any torment.

Nay, to whip but this scandal out, I would hazard

The rich and dear redemption of my soul.

He cannot be so base as to forgive me,

Nor I so shameless to accept his pardon.

O, women, women, you that yet have kept

<sup>47</sup> Dead.

Your holy matrimonial vow unstain'd,
Make me your instance; <sup>48</sup> when you tread
awry,
Your sins, like mine, will on your conscience
lie.

Enter CICELY, SPIGOT, all the Serving Men, and JENKIN, as newly come out of bed.

ALL. O, Mistress, Mistress! What have you done, Mistress? 140

NICH. What a caterwauling keep you here.

JEN. O Lord, Mistress, how comes this to pass? My master is run away in his shirt, and never so much as call'd me to bring his clothes after him.

MRS. F. See what guilt is! Here stand I
in this place,

Asham'd to look my servants in the face.

Enter MASTER FRANKFORD and CRANWELL; whom seeing, she falls on her knees.

FRANK. My words are regist'red in Heaven already.

With patience hear me. I'll not martyr thee,
Nor mark thee for a strumpet; but with usage
Of more humility torment thy soul, 151
And kill thee even with kindness.

CRAN. Master Frankford —

FRANK. Good Master Cranwell. — Woman, hear thy judgment.

Go make thee ready in thy best attire;
Take with thee all thy gowns, all thy apparel;
Leave nothing that did ever call thee mistress,
Or by whose sight, being left here in the house,
I may remember such a woman by.

Choose thee a bed and hangings for thy
chamber;

Take with thee every thing which hath thy mark, 161

And get thee to my manor seven mile off,
Where live; 't is thine; I freely give it thee.
My tenants by <sup>49</sup> shall furnish thee with wains
To carry all thy stuff within two hours;
No longer will I limit <sup>50</sup> thee my sight.

Choose which of all my servants thou lik'st best,

And they are thine to attend thee.

MRS. F. A mild sentence.

FRANK. But, as thou hop'st for Heaven, as thou believ'st

Thy name's recorded in the book of life, 170
I charge thee never after this sad day
To see me, or to meet me; or to send,

By word or writing, gift or otherwise,
To move me, by thyself, or by thy friends ;
Nor challenge <sup>a</sup> any part in my two children.
So farewell, Nan ; for we will henceforth be
As we had never seen, ne'er more shall see.

MRS. F. How full my heart is, in my eyes appears ;

What wants in words, I will supply in tears.

FRANK. Come, take your coach, your stuff ;
all must along. 180

Servants and all make ready ; all begone. —
It was thy hand cut two hearts out of one.

[Exeunt.]

[ACT V — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter SIR CHARLES [MOUNTFORD], gentleman-like, and [SUSAN] his sister, gentlewoman-like.

SUSAN. Brother, why have you trick'd <sup>2</sup> me like a bride,

Bought me this gay attire, these ornaments ?
Forget you our estate, our poverty ?

SIR C. Call me not brother, but imagine
me

Some barbarous outlaw, or uncivil kern ; <sup>3</sup>
For if thou shutt'st thy eye, and only hear'st
The words that I shall utter, thou shalt judge
me

Some staring <sup>4</sup> ruffian, not thy brother Charles.
Oh, Sister —

SUSAN. Oh, Brother, what doth this strange language mean ? 10

SIR C. Dost love me, Sister ? Wouldst thou see me live

' A bankrupt beggar in the world's disgrace,
And die indebted to my enemies ?
Wouldst thou behold me stand like a huge beam
In the world's eye, a byword and a scorn ?
It lies in thee of these to acquit me free,
And all my debt I may outstrip by thee.

SUSAN. By me ! Why, I have nothing, nothing left ;

I owe even for the clothes upon my back ;
I am not worth —

SIR C. O Sister, say not so ; 20
It lies in you my downcast state to raise,
To make me stand on even points with the world.

Come, Sister, you are rich ; indeed you are !
And in your pow'r you have, without delay
Acton's five hundred pound back to repay.

SUSAN. Till now I had thought y' had lov'd me. By my honor,

Which I have <sup>5</sup> kept as spotless as the moon,
I ne'er was mistress of that single doit <sup>6</sup>

Which I reserv'd not to supply your wants !
And d'y'e think that I would hoard from
you ? 30

Now, by my hopes in Heaven, knew I the means

To buy you from the slavery of your debts,
Especially from Acton, whom I hate,
I would redeem it with my life or blood.

SIR C. I challenge it, and, kindred set
apart,

Thus, ruffian-like, I lay siege to your heart.
What do I owe to Acton ?

SUSAN. Why, some five hundred pounds ;
towards which, I swear,

In all the world I have not one denier. <sup>7</sup>

SIR C. It will not prove so. Sister, now resolve <sup>8</sup> me : 40

What do you think (and speak your conscience)

Would Acton give, might he enjoy your bed ?

SUSAN. He would not shrink to spend a thousand pound

To give the Mountfords' name so deep a wound.

SIR C. A thousand pound ! I but five hundred owe :

Grant him your bed, he's paid with int'rest
so.

SUSAN. Oh, Brother !

SIR C. Oh, Sister, only this one way,
With that rich jewel you my debts may pay.

In speaking this my cold heart shakes with
shame ;

Nor do I woo you in a brother's name, 50
But in a stranger's. Shall I die in debt

To Acton, my grand foe, and you still wear
The precious jewel that he holds so dear ?

SUSAN. My honor I esteem as dear and precious

As my redemption. <sup>9</sup>

SIR C. I esteem you, Sister,
As dear, for so dear prizing it.

SUSAN. Will Charles
Have me cut off my hands, and send them
Acton ?

Rip up my breast, and with my bleeding heart
Present him as a token ?

<sup>5</sup> So Q.; Q<sub>1</sub> had.

SIR C.

Neither, Sister ;<sup>10</sup>

But hear me in my strange assertion. 60

Thy honor and my soul are equal in my regard ;

Nor will thy brother Charles survive thy shame.

His kindness, like a burden, hath surcharged me,

And under his good deeds I stooping go,
Not with an upright soul. Had I remain'd
In prison still, there doubtless I had died.Then unto him that freed me from that prison
Still do I owe that life. What mov'd my foe
To enfranchise me? 'T was, Sister, for your love ;

With full five hundred pounds he bought your love ; 70

And shall he not enjoy it? Shall the weight
Of all this heavy burden lean on me,
And will not you bear part? You did partakeThe joy of my release ; will you not stand
In joint-bond bound to satisfy the debt?
Shall I be only charg'd?

SUSAN.

But that I know

These arguments come from an honor'd mind,
As in your most extremity of needScorning to stand in debt to one you hate, —
Nay, rather would engage your unstain'd honor, 80Than to be held ingrate, — I should condemn
you.

I see your resolution, and assent ;

So Charles will have me, and I am content.

SIR C. For this I trick'd you up.

SUSAN.

But here's a knife,

To save mine honor, shall slice out my life.

SIR C. I know thou pleasest me a thousand timesMore in that resolution than thy grant. —
Observe her love ; to soothe [them in]<sup>11</sup> my suit,
Her honor she will hazard, though not lose ;
To bring me out of debt, her rigorous hand [90
Will pierce her heart. O wonder! that will choose,

Rather than stain her blood, her life to lose.

Come, you sad sister to a woful brother,
This is the gate. I'll bear him such a present,
Such an acquittance for the knight to seal,
As will amaze his senses, and surpriseWith admiration<sup>12</sup> all his fantasies.<sup>13</sup><sup>10</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub> ; Q<sub>1</sub> Jane.<sup>11</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub> ; Q<sub>1</sub> to sooth it to.<sup>12</sup> Wonder.<sup>13</sup> All his powers of apprehension.

Enter [SIR FRANCIS] ACTON and MALBY.

SUSAN. Before his unchaste thoughts shall seize on me,

'T is here shall my imprison'd soul set free.

SIR F. How! Mountford with his sister, hand in hand. 100

What miracle's afoot?

MAL.

It is a sight

Begets in me much admiration.

SIR C. Stand not amaz'd to see me thus attended.Acton, I owe thee money, and, being unable To bring thee the full sum in ready coin,
Lo! for thy more assurance, here's a pawn —
My sister, my dear sister, whose chaste honor
I prize above a million. Here! nay, take her ;
She's worth your money, man ; do not forsake her.

SIR F. I would he were in earnest. 110

SUSAN. Impute it not to my immodesty.

My brother, being rich in nothing else
But in his interest that he hath in me,
According to his poverty hath brought you
Me, all his store ; whom, howsoe'er you prize,
As forfeit to your hand, he values highly,
And would not sell, but to acquit your debt,
For any emperor's ransom.

SIR F. Stern heart, relent ;

Thy former cruelty at length repent.

Was ever known, in any former age, 120
Such honorable wrested<sup>14</sup> courtesy?Lands, honors, life,<sup>15</sup> and all the world forego, Rather than stand engag'd to such a foe.SIR C. Acton, she is too poor to be thy bride,

And I too much oppos'd to be thy brother.

There, take her to thee ; if thou hast the heartTo seize her as a rape or lustful prey,
To blur our house, that never yet was stain'd,
To murder her that never meant thee harm,
To kill me now, whom once thou sav'dst from death, 130Do them at once ; on her all these rely,
And perish with her spotted chastity.SIR F. You overcome me in your love, Sir
Charles.I cannot be so cruel to a lady
I love so dearly. Since you have not spar'd
To engage your reputation to the world,
Your sister's honor, which you prize so dear,
Nay, all the comfort which you hold on earth,
To grow out of my debt, being your foe, —<sup>14</sup> Forced (i.e., motivated) by honor.<sup>15</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub> ; Q<sub>1</sub> lives.

Your honor'd thoughts, lo, thus I recompense.
Your metamorph[o]s'd foe receives your gift
In satisfaction of all former wrongs. 142

This jewel I will wear here in my heart ;
And where<sup>16</sup> before I thought her, for her wants,

Too base to be my bride ; to end all strife,
I seal you my dear brother, her my wife.

SUSAN. You still exceed us. I will yield to
fate,

And learn to love, where I till now did hate.

SIR C. With that enchantment you have charm'd my soul

And made me rich even in those very words.
I pay no debt, but am indebted more ; 151
Rich in your love, I never can be poor.

SIR F. All's<sup>17</sup> mine is yours ; we are alike in state ;

Let's knit in love what was oppcs'd in hate.
Come, for our nuptials we will straight provide,
Blest only in our brother and fair bride.

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE II]<sup>18</sup>

Enter CRANWELL, FRANKFORD, and NICK.

CRAN. Why do you search each room about your house,
Now that you have dispatch'd your wife
away ?

FRANK. Oh, sir, to see that nothing may be left

That ever was my wife's. I lov'd her dearly ;
And when I do but think of her unkindness,
My thoughts are all in hell ; to avoid which torment,

I would not have a bodkin or a cuff,
A bracelet, necklace, or rabato<sup>19</sup> wire,
Nor anything that ever was call'd hers
Left me, by which I might remember her. — [10
Seek round about.

NICK. 'Sblood ! Master, here's her lute flung in a corner.

FRANK. Her lute ! O God, upon this instrument

Her fingers have ran<sup>20</sup> quick division,<sup>21</sup> Sweeter than that which now divides our hearts.

These frets have made me pleasant,<sup>22</sup> that have now

Frets of my heart-strings made. Oh, Master
Cranwell,

Oft hath she made this melancholy wood,
Now mute and dumb for her disastrous chance,
Speak sweetly many a note, sound many a strain 20

To her own ravishing voice ; which being well strung,

What pleasant strange airs have they jointly rung !<sup>23</sup> —

Post with it after her. — Now nothing's left ;
Of her and hers I am at once bereft.

NICK. I'll ride and overtake her ; do my message,

And come back again. [Exit.]

CRAN. Meantime, sir, if you please,
I'll to Sir Francis Acton, and inform him
Of what hath pass'd betwixt you and his sister.

FRANK. Do as you please. — How ill am I bestead,

To be a widower ere my wife be dead. 30
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE III]<sup>24</sup>

Enter MISTRESS FRANKFORD, with JENKIN, her maid CICELY, her Coachman, and three Carters.

MRS. F. Bid my coach stay. Why should
I ride in state,

Being hurl'd so low down by the hand of fate ?
A seat like to my fortunes let me have :
Earth for my chair, and for my bed a grave !

JEN. Comfort, good Mistress ; you have watered your coach with tears already. You have but two mile now to go to your manor.
A man cannot say by my old master Frankford as he may say by me, that he wants manors ; for he hath three or four, of [10 which this is one that we are going to now.

CIC. Good mistress, be of good cheer.
Sorrow, you see, hurts you, but helps you not ;
we all mourn to see you so sad.

CARTER. Mistress, I see one of my landlord's men

Come riding post ;<sup>25</sup> 't is like he brings some news.

MRS. F. Comes he from Master Frankford,
he is welcome ;

So is his news, because they come from him.

Enter NICK.

NICK. There.

MRS. F. I know the lute. Oft have I sung to thee ; 20

We both are out of tune, both out of time.

NICH. Would that had been the worst instrument that e'er you played on. My master commends him unto ye ;<sup>26</sup> there's all he can find that was ever yours ; he hath nothing left that ever you could lay claim to<sup>27</sup> but his own heart — an he could afford you that ! All that I have to deliver you is this : he prays you to forget him ; and so he bids [you]<sup>28</sup> farewell. 30

Mrs. F. I thank him ; he is kind, and ever was.

All you that have true feeling of my grief,
That know my loss, and have relenting hearts,
Gird me about, and help me with your tears
To wash my spotted sins ! My lute shall groan ;

It cannot weep, but shall lament my moan.

[She plays.]

Enter WENDOLL [behind].

WEN. Pursu'd with horror of a guilty soul,
And with the sharp scourge of repentance
lash'd,

I fly from mine own shadow. O my stars !
What have my parents in their lives de-serv'd, 40

That you should lay this penance on [their]<sup>29</sup>
son ?

When I but think of Master Frankford's love,
And lay it to my treason, or compare
My murdering him for his relieving me,
It strikes a terror like a lightning's flash,
To scorch my blood up. Thus I, like the owl,
Asham'd of day, live in these shadowy woods,
Afraid of every leaf or murmuring blast,
Yet longing to receive some perfect knowledge
How he hath dealt with her. — [seeing MIS-

TRESS FRANKFORD] O my sad fate ! [50

Here, and so far from home, and thus attended.

O God, I have divorc'd the truest turtles<sup>30</sup>

That ever liv'd together, and, being divided,

In several places make their several moan ;

She in the fields laments, and he at home.

So poets write that Orpheus made the trees

And stones to dance to his melodious harp,

Meaning the rustic and the barbarous hinds,

That had no understanding part in them ;

So she from these rude carters tears extracts,

Making their flinty hearts with grief to rise, [61

And draw down<sup>31</sup> rivers from their rocky
eyes.

<sup>31</sup> Q<sub>1</sub> omits down.

Mrs. F. [to NICHOLAS] If you return unto [your]<sup>32</sup> master, say

(Though not from me, for I am all unworthy
To blast his name so<sup>33</sup> with a strumpet's
tongue)

That you have seen me weep, wish myself dead.

Nay, you may say, too, for my vow is pass'd,<sup>34</sup>

Last night you saw me eat and drink my last.

This to your master you may say and swear ;

For it is writ in Heaven, and decreed here. [70

NICH. I'll say you wept ; I'll swear you made me sad.

Why, how now, eyes ? what now ? what's here to do ?

I'm gone, or I shall straight turn baby too.

WEN. I cannot weep ; my heart is all on fire.

Curs'd be the fruits of my unchaste desire.

Mrs. F. Go break this lute upon<sup>35</sup> my coach's wheel,

As the last music that I e'er shall make ;
Not as my husband's gift, but my farewell
To all earth's joy ; and so your master tell.

NICH. If I can for crying.

WEN. Grief, have done ; [80
Or, like a madman, I shall frantic run.

Mrs. F. You have beheld the woful'st wretch on earth,

A woman made of tears ; would you had
words

To express but what you see. My inward grief

No tongue can utter ; yet unto your power<sup>36</sup>

You may describe my sorrow, and disclose
To thy sad master my abundant woes.

NICH. I'll do your commendations.<sup>37</sup>

Mrs. F. Oh, no.
I dare not so presume ; nor to my children.

I am disclaim'd in both ; alas, I am. 90

Oh, never teach them, when they come to speak,

To name the name of mother ; chide their
tongue,

If they by chance light on that hated word ;

Tell them 't is naught ;<sup>38</sup> for when that word
they name,

Poor, pretty souls, they harp on their own
shame.

WEN. To recompense her wrongs, what canst thou do ?

<sup>32</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub> ; Q<sub>2</sub> my. <sup>33</sup> Q<sub>1</sub> omits so. <sup>34</sup> Made.

<sup>37</sup> Present your compliments, deliver your greetings.

<sup>38</sup> Wicked.

Thou hast made her husbandless, and childless too.

MRS. F. I have no more to say. — Speak not for me ;

Yet you may tell your master what you see.

NICH. I'll do't. Exit. [100

WEN. I'll speak to her, and comfort her in grief.

Oh, but her wound cannot be cur'd with words. No matter, though ; I'll do my best good will To work a cure on her whom I did kill.

MRS. F. So, now unto my coach, then to my home,

So to my deathbed ; for from this sad hour, I never will nor eat, nor drink, nor taste Of any cates<sup>39</sup> that may preserve my life. I never will nor smile, nor sleep, nor rest ; But when my tears have wash'd my black soul white, 110

Sweet Savior, to thy hands I yield my sprite.

WEN. (advancing) Oh, Mistress Frankford !

MRS. F. Oh, for God's sake, fly !

The Devil doth come to tempt me, ere I die. — My coach ! — This sin, that with an angel's face

Conjur'd<sup>40</sup> mine honor, till he sought my wrack,

In my repentant eye seems ugly, black.

Exeunt all (except WENDOLL and JENKIN), the Carters whistling.<sup>41</sup>

JEN. What, my young master, that fled in his shirt ! How come you by your clothes again ? You have made our house in a sweet pickle, ha' ye not, think you ? What, [120 shall I serve you still, or cleave to the old house ?

WEN. Hence, slave ; away, with thy unseason'd<sup>42</sup> mirth !

Unless thou canst shed tears, and sigh, and howl,

Curse thy sad fortunes, and exclaim on fate, Thou art not for my turn.

JEN. Marry, an you will not, another will ; farewell, and be hang'd. Would you had never come to have kept this coil<sup>43</sup> within our doors. We shall ha' you run away like [130 a sprite again. (Exit.)

WEN. She's gone to death ; I live to want and woe,

Her life, her sins, and all upon my head. And I must now go wander, like a Cain, In foreign countries and remotest climes,

Where the report of my ingratitude Cannot be heard. I'll over first to France, And so to Germany and Italy ; Where, when I have recovered, and by travel Gotten those perfect tongues,<sup>44</sup> and that<sup>45</sup> these rumors 140

May in their height abate, I will return.

And I divine, however now dejected,

My worth and parts being by some great man prais'd,

At my return I may in court be rais'd.

Exit.

[SCENE IV]<sup>46</sup>

Enter SIR FRANCIS [ACTON], SIR CHARLES [MOUNTFORD], CRANWELL, and SUSAN.

SIR F. Brother, and now my wife, I think these troubles

Fall on my head by justice of the Heavens, For being so strict to you in your extremities ; But we are now aton'd.<sup>47</sup> I would my sister Could with like happiness o'ercome her griefs As we have ours.

SUSAN. You tell us, Master Cranwell, wondrous things

Touching the patience of that gentleman, With what strange virtue he demeans<sup>48</sup> his grief.

CRAN. I told you what I was witness of ; [10 It was my fortune to lodge there that night.

SIR F. Oh, that same villain, Wendoll !

'T was his tongue

That did corrupt her ; she was of herself Chaste and devoted well.<sup>49</sup> Is this the house ?

CRAN. Yes, sir ; I take it, here your sister lies.<sup>50</sup>

SIR F. My brother Frankford show'd too mild a spirit

In the revenge of such a loathed crime.

Less than he did, no man of spirit could do.

I am so far from blaming his revenge,

That I commend it. Had it been my case, [20 Their souls at once had from their breasts been freed ;

Death to such deeds of shame is the due meed.

Enter JENKIN [and CICELY].

JEN. Oh, my mistress, mistress, my poor mistress !

CICELY. Alas ! that ever I was born ; what shall I do for my poor mistress ?

SIR C. Why, what of her?

JEN. Oh, Lord, sir, she no sooner heard that her brother and his friends were come to see how she did, but she, for very shame of her [30 guilty conscience, fell into such a swoon, that we had much ado to get life in her.

SUSAN. Alas, that she should bear so hard a fate;

Pity it is repentance comes too late.

SIR F. Is she so weak in body?

JEN. Oh, sir, I can assure you there's no hope of life in her, for she will take no sustenance; she hath plainly starv'd herself, and now she's as lean as a lath. She ever looks for the good hour. Many gentlemen and gentlewomen of the country are come to comfort her.

[SCENE V] <sup>51</sup>

[To SIR CHARLES MOUNTFORD, SIR FRANCIS ACTON, CRANWELL, SUSAN, JENKIN, and CICELY,] enter MISTRESS FRANKFORD in her bed [with MALBY at the bedside].

MAL. How fare you, Mistress Frankford?

MRS. F. Sick, sick, oh, sick. Give me some air, I pray [you]. <sup>52</sup>

Tell me, oh, tell me, where's Master Frankford?

Will not [he] <sup>53</sup> deign to see me ere I die?

MAL. Yes, Mistress Frankford; divers gentlemen,

Your loving neighbors, with that just request Have mov'd, and told him of your weak estate Who, though with much ado to get belief, Examining of the general circumstance, Seeing your sorrow and your penitence, And hearing therewithal the great desire You have to see him ere you left the world, He gave to us his faith to follow us, And sure he will be here immediately. 10

MRS. F. You have half reviv'd me with the pleasing news;

Raise me a little higher in my bed. —

Blush I not, Brother Acton? <sup>54</sup> Blush I not, Sir Charles?

Can you not read my fault writ in my cheek? Is not my crime there, tell me, gentlemen?

SIR C. Alas, good mistress, sickness hath not left you 20
Blood in your face enough to make you blush.

<sup>53</sup> So Q.; Q. maister Frankford.

MRS. F. Then, sickness, like a friend, my fault would hide. —

Is my husband come? My soul but tarries His arrive, then I am fit for Heaven.

SIR F. I came to chide you, but my words of hate

Are turn'd to pity and compassionate grief. I came to rate you, but my brawls, <sup>54</sup> you see, Melt into tears, and I must weep by thee.

SIR C. Here's Master Frankford now.

Enter FRANKFORD.

FRANK. Good morrow, Brother; morrow, gentlemen. 30

God, that hath laid this cross upon our heads, Might, had He pleas'd, have made our cause of meeting

On a more fair and more contented ground; But He that made us made us to this woe.

MRS. F. And is he come? Methinks, that voice I know.

FRANK. How do you, woman?

MRS. F. Well, Master Frankford, well; but shall be better,

I hope within this hour. Will you vouchsafe, Out of your grace and your humanity, To take a spotted strumpet by the hand? 40

FRANK. That hand once held my heart in faster bonds

Than now 't is gripp'd by me. God pardon them

That made us first break hold.

MRS. F. Amen, amen.

Out of my zeal to Heaven, whither I'm now bound,

I was so impudent to wish you here;

And once more beg your pardon. O good man,

And father to my children, pardon me.

Pardon, oh, pardon me. My fault so heinous is,

That if you in this world forgive it not, Heaven will not clear it in the world to come. Faintness hath so usurp'd upon my knees 51 That kneel I cannot; but on my heart's knees My prostrate soul lies thrown down at your feet,

To beg your gracious pardon. Pardon, oh, pardon me.

FRANK. As freely, from the low depth of my soul,

As my Redeemer hath forgiven His death, I pardon thee. I will shed tears for thee; pray with thee;

<sup>54</sup> Scoldings.

And, in mere pity of thy weak estate,
I'll wish to die with thee.

ALL. So do we all.

NICH. [aside] So will not I ; 60
I'll sigh and sob, but, by my faith, not die.

SIR F. Oh, Master Frankford, all the near alliance

I lose by her, shall be suppli'd in thee.
You are my brother by the nearest way ;
Her kindred hath fallen off, but yours doth stay.

FRANK. Even as I hope for pardon, at that
day

When the great Judge of Heaven in scarlet sits,
So be thou pardon'd. Though thy rash offence

Divorc'd our bodies, thy repentant tears
Unite our souls.

SIR C. Then comfort, Mistress Frankford ;
You see your husband hath forgiven your
fall ; 71

Then rouse your spirits, and cheer your fainting soul !

SUSAN. How is it with you ?

SIR F. How d' ye feel yourself ?

MRS. F. Not of this world.

FRANK. I see you are not, and I weep to see
it.

My wife, the mother to my pretty babes —
Both those lost names I do restore thee
back,

And with this kiss I wed thee once again.
Though thou art wounded in thy honor'd
name,

And with that grief upon thy deathbed liest,
Honest in heart, upon my soul, thou diest. [81

MRS. F. Pardon'd on earth, soul, thou in Heaven art free ;

Once more thy wife,<sup>55</sup> dies thus embracing thee. [Dies.]

FRANK. New-married, and new-widow'd ;
oh, she's dead,

And a cold grave must be her nuptial bed.

SIR C. Sir, be of good comfort, and your heavy sorrow

Part equally amongst us ; storms divided Abate their force, and with less rage are guided.

<sup>55</sup> A squinting construction : (1) once more (I am) thy wife ; (2) thy wife dies.

CRAN. Do, Master Frankford ; he that hath least part,

Will find enough to drown one troubled heart.

SIR F. Peace with thee, Nan. — Brothers and gentlemen, 91

All we that can plead interest in her grief,
Bestow upon her body funeral tears.

Brother, had you with threats and usage bad
Punish'd her sin, the grief of her offence

Had not with such true sorrow touch'd her
heart.

FRANK. I see it had not ; therefore, on her grave

Will I bestow this funeral epitaph,
Which on her marble tomb shall be engrav'd.
In golden letters shall these words be fill'd : <sup>56</sup>
Here lies she whom her husband's kindness

THE EPILOGUE

AN honest crew, disposed to be merry,
Came to a tavern by,<sup>57</sup> and call'd for wine.

The drawer brought it, smiling like a cherry,
And told them it was pleasant, neat,<sup>58</sup> and fine.

"Taste it," quoth one. He did so. "Fie !"
quoth he,

"This wine was good ; now't runs too near the lee."

Another sipp'd, to give the wine his due,
And said unto the rest it drunk too flat ;

The third said, it was old ; the fourth, too new ;
"Nay," quoth the fifth, "the sharpness likes me not." 10

Thus, gentlemen, you see how, in one hour,
The wine was new, old, flat, sharp, sweet, and sour.

Unto this wine we do allude <sup>59</sup> our play,
Which some will judge too trivial, some too
grave.

You as our guests we entertain this day,
And bid you welcome to the best we have.
Excuse us, then ; good wine may be disgrac'd,
When every several mouth hath sundry taste.

<sup>56</sup> I.e., the engraved letters shall be filled in with gold.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

ORIGINALLY produced by the Admiral's Men in 1599, this favorite comedy is based on several tales about shoemakers in Thomas Deloney's prose tract, The Gentle Craft, published in 1598. Here may be found, with unhistorical embellishments, the story though not the character of that early fifteenth-century worthy Sir Simon Eyre, from the hiring of the new foreign workman to the feasting of the apprentices. Here also are the Enoch Arden return, in this case of a wife supposed to be dead; and the legend of St. Crispin, who, in his adoption of the gentle craft and his clandestine marriage, is emulated by Lacy.

These materials are deftly interwoven by Dekker, and highly colored from his own intimate and ardent acquaintance with London life. True, the rise of Eyre is pretty rapid, even for a romantic comedy. Nor is the dramatist critical, like Jonson, as he surveys the contemporary scene. This is a play of romantic plot curiously allied with realistic manners, the first so charming and the second depicted with a gusto so nearly Chaucerian that the combination is irresistible. Simon Eyre wins every reader's heart as easily as he wins the King's. And it is the heart, not the mind, that Dekker, on the threshold of his career, addresses in this play.

The first edition appeared, in quarto, in 1600 (reprinted 1610, 1618, 1624, 1631, 1657). Dekker's authorship is indicated by a note in Henslowe's "Diary." The standard edition of his plays is still the inadequate Pearson reprint (1873). Among separate editions of The Shoemakers' Holiday are those of Karl Warnke and Ludwig Proescholdt (1886), and A. F. Lange in Gayley's Representative English Comedies, vol. III (1914). The present text is based on the Quarto of 1600, with occasional corrections from the subsequent Quartos.

THE PROLOGUE

As it was pronounced before the Queen's Majesty

As wretches in a storm, expecting day,
With trembling hands and eyes cast up to Heaven,
Make prayers the anchor of their conquer'd hopes,
So we, dear Goddess, wonder of all eyes,
Your meanest vassals, through mistrust and fear
To sink into the bottom of disgrace
By our imperfect pastimes, prostrate thus
On bended knees, our sails of hope do strike,
Dreading the bitter storms of your dislike.
Since then, unhappy men, our hap is such 10
That to ourselves ourselves no help can bring,
But needs must perish, if your saint-like ears,
Locking the temple where all mercy sits,
Refuse the tribute of our begging tongues;
Oh, grant, bright mirror of true chastity,
From those life-breathing stars, your sun-like eyes,
One gracious smile; for your celestial breath
Must send us life, or sentence us to death.

[ACT I]<sup>1</sup>Enter LORD MAYOR [and the EARL OF] LINCOLN.

LINC. My Lord Mayor, you have sundry times

Feasted myself and many courtiers more ;
Seldom or never can we be so kind
To make requital of your courtesy.
But leaving this, I hear my cousin<sup>2</sup> Lacy
Is much affected to<sup>3</sup> your daughter Rose.

L. MAYOR. True, my good Lord, and she loves him so well

That I mislike her boldness in the chase.

LINC. Why, my Lord Mayor, think you it then a shame,

To join a Lacy with an Oateley's name? 10

L. MAYOR. Too mean is my poor girl for his high birth ;

Poor citizens must not with courtiers wed,
Who will in silks and gay apparel spend
More in one year than I am worth, by far ;
Therefore your Honor need not doubt<sup>4</sup> my girl.

LINC. Take heed, my Lord, advise you what you do !

A verier unthrift lives not in the world,
Than is my cousin ; for I'll tell you what :
'Tis now almost a year since he requested
To travel countries for experience. 20

I furnish'd him with coin, bills of exchange,
Letters of credit, men to wait on him,
Solicited my friends in Italy

Well to respect him. But, to see the end,
Scant had he journeyed through half Germany,
But all his coin was spent, his men cast off,
His bills embezzl'd,<sup>5</sup> and my jolly coz,<sup>6</sup>

Asham'd to show his bankrupt presence here,
Became a shoemaker in Wittenberg,

A goodly science for a gentleman 30
Of such descent ! Now judge the rest by this :
Suppose your daughter have a thousand pound,

He did consume me more in one half year ;
And make him heir to all the wealth you have,
One twelvemonth's rioting will waste it all.
Then seek, my Lord, some honest citizen
To wed your daughter to. *

L. MAYOR. I thank your Lordship. —
[aside] Well, fox, I understand your subtlety. —

<sup>1</sup> A street in London.<sup>2</sup> Nephew. (Used of anyone collaterally related, except a brother or sister.)<sup>3</sup> Fond of.<sup>4</sup> Be apprehensive concerning.<sup>5</sup> Squandered. <sup>6</sup> Cousin, nephew.

As for your nephew, let your Lordship's eye
But watch his actions, and you need not fear,
For I have [sent]<sup>7</sup> my daughter far enough. [41
And yet your cousin Rowland might do well,
Now he hath learn'd an occupation. —

[aside] And yet I scorn to call him son-in-law.

LINC. Ay, but I have a better trade for him.
I thank his Grace,<sup>8</sup> he hath appointed him
Chief colonel of all those companies
Must'red in London and the shires about,
To serve his Highness in those wars of France.
See where he comes ! —

Enter LOVELL, LACY, and ASKEW.

Lovell, what news with you ?

LOVELL. My Lord of Lincoln, 'tis his Highness' will, 51

That presently<sup>9</sup> your cousin ship for France
With all his powers ;<sup>10</sup> he would not for a million

But they should land at Dieppe within four days.

LINC. Go certify his Grace it shall be done.

Exit LOVELL.

Now, Cousin Lacy, in what forwardness
Are all your companies ?

LACY. All well prepar'd.

The men of Hertfordshire lie at Mile End ;
Suffolk and Essex train in Tothill Fields ;
The Londoners and those of Middlesex, 60
All gallantly prepar'd in Finsbury,
With frolic spirits long for their parting hour.

L. MAYOR. They have their impest,<sup>11</sup> coats, and furniture ;<sup>12</sup>

And, if it please your cousin Lacy come
To the Guildhall, he shall receive his pay ;
And twenty pounds besides my brethren<sup>13</sup>
Will freely give him, to approve our loves
We bear unto my Lord, your uncle here.

LACY. I thank your Honor.

LINC. Thanks, my good Lord Mayor.

L. MAYOR. At the Guildhall we will expect<sup>14</sup> your coming. Exit. [70

LINC. To approve your loves to me ? No, subtlety !

Nephew, that twenty pound he doth bestow
For joy to rid you from his daughter Rose.
But, Cousins both, now here are none but friends,

I would not have you cast an amorous eye
Upon so mean a project as the love
Of a gay, wanton, painted citizen.

<sup>7</sup> Om. Q. 1.<sup>8</sup> The King.<sup>9</sup> At once.<sup>10</sup> Troops.<sup>11</sup> Advance pay.<sup>12</sup> Equipment.<sup>13</sup> Trisyllabic.<sup>14</sup> Await.

I know this churl even in the height of scorn
Doth hate the mixture of his blood with thine.
I pray thee, do thou so ! Remember, Coz, [80
What honorable fortunes wait on thee.

Increase the King's love, which so brightly shines,

And gilds thy hopes. I have no heir but
thee —

And yet not thee, if with a wayward spirit
Thou start from the true bias <sup>15</sup> of my love.

LACY. My Lord, I will for honor, not desire
Of land or livings, or to be your heir,
So guide my actions in pursuit of France,
As shall add glory to the Lacys' name.

LINC. Coz, for those words here's thirty Portuguese, <sup>16</sup> 90

And, Nephew Askew, there's a few for you.
Fair Honor, in her loftiest eminence,
Stays in France for you, till you fetch her thence.

Then, Nephews, clap swift wings on your designs.

Begone, begone ; make haste to the Guildhall ;
There presently I'll meet you. Do not stay ;
Where honor [beckons] <sup>17</sup> shame attends delay.

Exit.

ASKEW. How gladly would your uncle have you gone !

LACY. True, Coz, but I'll o'erreach his policies. 99

I have some serious business for three days,
Which nothing but my presence can dispatch.
You, therefore, Cousin, with the companies, Shall haste to Dover ; there I'll meet with
you.

Or, if I stay past my prefixed time,
Away for France ; we'll meet in Normandy.
The twenty pounds my Lord Mayor gives to
me

You shall receive, and these ten Portuguese,
Part of mine uncle's thirty. Gentle Coz,
Have care to our great charge ; I know your wisdom

Hath tri'd itself in higher consequence. 110

ASKEW. Coz, all myself am yours ; yet have this care,

To lodge in London with all secrecy.
Our uncle Lincoln hath, besides his own,
Many a jealous eye, that in your face
Stares only to watch means for your disgrace.

LACY. Stay, Cousin, who be these ?

Enter SIMON EYRE, his wife [MARGERY], HODGE, FIRK, JANE, and RALPH <sup>18</sup> with a piece. <sup>19</sup>

EYRE. Leave whining, leave whining !
Away with this whim'ring, this puling, these blubb'ring tears, and these wet eyes ! I'll get thy husband discharg'd, I warrant thee, sweet Jane ; go to ! 121

HODGE. Master, here be the captains.

EYRE. Peace, Hodge ; husht, ye knave, husht !

FIRK. Here be the cavaliers and the colonels, Master.

EYRE. Peace, FirK ; peace, my fine FirK !
Stand by with your pishery-pashery, <sup>20</sup> away !
I am a man of the best presence ; I'll speak to them, an they were popes. — Gentlemen, [130 captains, colonels, commanders ! Brave men, brave leaders, may it please you to give me audience. I am Simon Eyre, the mad shoemaker of Tower Street ; this wench with the mealy mouth <sup>21</sup> that will never tire, is my wife,
I can tell you ; here's Hodge, my man and my foreman ; here's FirK, my fine firking <sup>22</sup> journeyman, and this is blubbered Jane. All we come to be suitors for this honest Ralph.
Keep him at home, and as I am a true [140
shoemaker and a gentleman of the gentle craft, buy spurs yourself, and I'll find ye boots these seven years.

MARG. Seven years, husband ?

EYRE. Peace, midriff, <sup>23</sup> peace ! I know what I do. Peace !

FIRK. Truly, master cormorant, <sup>24</sup> you shall do God good service to let Ralph and his wife stay together. She's a young new-married woman ; if you take her husband [150 away from her a-night, you undo her ; she may beg in the daytime ; for he's as good a workman at a prick and an awl as any is in our trade.

JANE. O let him stay, else I shall be undone.

FIRK. Ay, truly, she shall be laid at one side like a pair of old shoes else, and be occupied <sup>25</sup> for no use.

LACY. Truly, my friends it lies not in my power ;

<sup>18</sup> Old eds. Rafe or Raph, throughout.

<sup>19</sup> Probably = musket ; possibly, as Lange thinks,
= piece of work ; i.e., the shoes for Jane.

matters. (N.E.D.) <sup>22</sup> Frisking.

<sup>23</sup> Diaphragm ; probably a slighting allusion to Margery's corpulence.

The Londoners are press'd,<sup>26</sup> paid, and set forth 160

By the Lord Mayor; I cannot change a man.

HODGE. Why, then you were as good be a corporal as a colonel, if you cannot discharge one good fellow; and I tell you true, I think you do more than you can answer, to press a man within a year and a day of his marriage.<sup>27</sup>

EYRE. Well said, melancholy Hodge; grammarcy, my fine foreman.

MARG. Truly, gentlemen, it were ill [170 done for such as you, to stand so stiffly against a poor young wife, considering her case, she is new-married; but let that pass. I pray, deal not roughly with her; her husband is a young man, and but newly ent'red;<sup>28</sup> but let that pass.

EYRE. Away with your pishery-pashery, your pols and your edipols!<sup>29</sup> Peace, midriff; silence, Cicely Bumtrinket!<sup>30</sup> Let your head<sup>31</sup> speak. 180

FIRK. Yea, and the horns<sup>32</sup> too, Master.

EYRE. Too soon,<sup>33</sup> my fine Firk, too soon! Peace, scoundrels!—See you this man? Captains, you will not release him? Well, let him go; he's a proper shot; let him vanish! Peace, Jane, dry up thy tears; they'll make his powder dankish. Take him, brave men; Hector of Troy was an hackney to him, Hercules and Termagant<sup>34</sup> scoundrels, Prince Arthur's Round Table—by the Lord of Ludgate<sup>35</sup> [190—ne'er fed such a tall,<sup>36</sup> such a dapper swordman; by the life of Pharaoh, a brave resolute swordman! Peace, Jane! I say no more, mad knaves.

FIRK. See, see, Hodge, how my master raves in commendation of Ralph!

HODGE. Ralph, th'art a gull,<sup>37</sup> by this hand, an thou goest.<sup>38</sup>

<sup>34</sup> A blustering character in the moralities and interludes; he was supposed to be a Mohammedan deity.

<sup>38</sup> Q 1631 and mod. eds. add not; but a humorous reversal may be intended in ll. 208, ff.

ASKEW. I am glad, good Master Eyre, it is my hap

To meet so resolute a soldier. 200

Trust me, for your report and love to him, A common slight regard shall not respect<sup>39</sup> him.

LACY. Is thy name Ralph?

RALPH. Yes, sir.

LACY. Give me thy hand; Thou shalt not want, as I am a gentleman.

Woman, be patient; God, no doubt, will send Thy husband safe again; but he must go: His country's quarrel says it shall be so.

HODGE. Th'art a gull, by my stirrup,<sup>40</sup> if thou dost not go. I will not have thee strike thy gimlet into these weak vessels; prick thine enemies, Ralph. 211

Enter DODGER.

DODGER. My Lord, your uncle on the Tower Hill

Stays with the Lord Mayor and the aldermen, And doth request you, with all speed you may, To hasten thither.

ASKEW. Cousin, let's go.

LACY. Dodger, run you before; tell them we come. — Exit DODGER.

[aside to ASKEW] This Dodger is mine uncle's parasite,

The arrant'st varlet that e'er breath'd on earth;

He sets more discord in a noble house 219 By one day's broaching of his pickthank tales,<sup>41</sup>

Than can be salv'd<sup>42</sup> again in twenty years; And he, I fear, shall go with us to France, To pry into our actions.

ASKEW. Therefore, Coz,

It shall behove you to be circumspect.

LACY. Fear not, good Cousin. — Ralph, hie to your colors.

[Exeunt LACY and ASKEW.]

RALPH. I must, because there's no remedy; But, gentle Master and my loving dame, As you have always been a friend to me, So in mine absence think upon my wife.

JANE. Alas, my Ralph.

MARG. She cannot speak for weeping.

EYRE. Peace, you crack'd groats,<sup>43</sup> you [231

<sup>39</sup> Regard; give heed to.

JANE. Ay, ay, you bid him go; what shall I do

When he is gone?

FIRK. Why, be doing with me or my fellow Hodge; be not idle.

EYRE. Let me see thy hand, Jane. This fine hand, this white hand, these pretty fingers must spin, must card, must work; work, [240 you bombast cotton-candle<sup>45</sup> quean;<sup>46</sup> work for your living, with a pox to you. — Hold thee, Ralph, here's five sixpences for thee; fight for the honor of the gentle craft, for the gentlemen shoemakers, the courageous cordwainers, the flower of St. Martin's,<sup>47</sup> the mad knaves of Bedlam, Fleet Street, Tower Street, and Whitechapel; crack me the crowns of the French knaves, a pox on them, crack them; fight, by the Lord of Ludgate; fight, my [250 fine boy!

FIRK. Here, Ralph, here's three two-pences: two carry into France; the third shall wash our souls at parting, for sorrow is dry. For my sake, firK<sup>48</sup> the Basa-mon-cues.<sup>49</sup>

HODGE. Ralph, I am heavy<sup>50</sup> at parting; but here's a shilling for thee. God send<sup>51</sup> thee to cram thy slops<sup>52</sup> with French crowns, and thy enemies' bellies with bullets.

RALPH. I thank you, Master, and I thank you all. — 260

Now, gentle Wife, my loving lovely Jane, Rich men, at parting, give their wives rich gifts,

Jewels and rings, to grace their lily hands.

Thou know'st our trade makes rings for women's heels:

Here take this pair of shoes, cut out by Hodge, Stitch'd by my fellow FirK, seam'd by myself, Made up and pink'd<sup>53</sup> with letters for thy name.

Wear them, my dear Jane, for thy husband's sake,

And every morning when thou pull'st them on,

Make much of them; for I have made them so
That I can know them from a thousand mo.

Sound drum. Enter LORD MAYOR, [the EARL OF] LINCOLN, LACY, ASKEW, DODGER, and Soldiers. They pass over the stage; RALPH falls in amongst them; FIRK and the rest cry "Farewell," etc., and so exeunt.

[ACT II — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter ROSE, alone, making a garland.

ROSE. Here sit thou down upon this flow'ry bank

And make a garland for thy Lacy's head.
These pinks, these roses, and these violets,
These blushing gilliflowers, these marigolds,
The fair embroidery of his coronet,
Carry not half such beauty in their cheeks,
As the sweet count'nance of my Lacy doth.
O my most unkind father! O my stars,
Why low'r'd you so at my nativity,
To make me love, yet live robb'd of my love?
Here as a thief am I imprisoned 11
For my dear Lacy's sake within those walls,
Which by my father's cost were builded up
For better purposes. Here must I languish
For him that doth as much lament, I know,
Mine absence, as for him I pine in woe.

Enter SYBIL.

SYBIL. Good morrow, young Mistress. I am sure you make that garland for me, against I shall be Lady of the Harvest.

ROSE. Sybil, what news at London? 20

SYBIL. None but good; my Lord Mayor, your father, and Master Philpot, your uncle, and Master Scott, your cousin, and Mistress Frigbottom by Doctors' Commons,<sup>2</sup> do all, by my troth, send you most hearty commendations.<sup>3</sup>

ROSE. Did Lacy send kind greetings to his love?

SYBIL. Oh yes, out of cry,<sup>4</sup> by my troth. I scant knew him; here 'a wore [a] scarf, and here a scarf, here a bunch of feathers, and [30 here precious stones and jewels, and a pair of garters — oh, monstrous! like one of our yellow silk curtains at home here in Old Ford House here, in Master Bellymount's chamber. I stood at our door in Cornhill, look'd at him, he at me indeed, spake to him, but he not to me, not a word; marry gup<sup>5</sup> thought I, with a wanion!<sup>6</sup> He pass'd by me as proud — Marry, foh! are you grown humorous?<sup>7</sup> thought I; and so shut the door, and in I [40 came.

ROSE. Oh, Sybil, how dost thou my Lacy wrong!

My Rowland is as gentle as a lamb,
No dove was ever half so mild as he.

SYBIL. Mild? yea, as a bushel of stamp'd crabs.<sup>8</sup> He look'd upon me as sour as verjuice.<sup>9</sup> Go thy ways, thought I; thou mayst be much in my gaskins,<sup>10</sup> but nothing in my netherstocks.<sup>11</sup> This is your fault, Mistress, to love him that loves not you; he thinks [50 scorn to do as he's done to; but if I were as you, I'd cry, "Go by, Jeronimo, go by!"<sup>12</sup> I'd set mine old debts against my new driblets, And the hare's foot against the goose giblets;<sup>13</sup> For if ever I sigh, when sleep I should take, Pray God I may lose my maidenhead when I wake.

ROSE. Will my love leave me then, and go to France?

SYBIL. I know not that, but I am sure I see him stalk before the soldiers. By my troth, he is a proper<sup>14</sup> man; but he is proper that [60 proper doth. Let him go snick up,<sup>15</sup> young Mistress.

ROSE. Get thee to London, and learn perfectly

Whether my Lacy go to France, or no.
Do this, and I will give thee for thy pains
My cambric apron and my Romish gloves,
My purple stockings and a stomacher.
Say, wilt thou do this, Sybil, for my sake?

SYBIL. Will I, quoth 'a? At whose suit?
By my troth, yes, I'll go. A cambric apron, [70 gloves, a pair of purple stockings, and a

ROSE. Do so, good Sybil. — Meantime wretched I

Will sit and sigh for his lost company. Exit.

[SCENE II]<sup>17</sup>

Enter ROWLAND LACY, like a Dutch shoemaker.

LACY. How many shapes have gods and kings devis'd,

Thereby to compass their desired loves!

It is no shame for Rowland Lacy, then,

To clothe his cunning with the gentle craft,

That, thus disguis'd, I may unknown possess

The only happy presence of my Rose.

For her have I forsook my charge in France,

Incurr'd the King's displeasure, and stirr'd up

Rough hatred in mine uncle Lincoln's breast.

O love, how powerful art thou, that canst

change <sup>10</sup>

High birth to [baseness,]<sup>18</sup> and a noble mind

To the mean semblance of a shoemaker!

But thus it must be; for her cruel father,

Hating the single union of our souls,

Has secretly convey'd my Rose from London,

To bar me of her presence; but I trust

Fortune and this disguise will further me

Once more to view her beauty, gain her sight.

Here in Tower Street with Eyre the shoemaker

Mean I awhile to work; I know the trade: [20

I learnt it when I was in Wittenberg.

Then cheer thy hoping spirits, be not dismay'd;

Thou canst not want: do Fortune what she can,

The gentle craft is living for a man. Exit.

[SCENE III]<sup>19</sup>

Enter EYRE, making himself ready.

EYRE. Where be these boys, these girls. these drabs, these scoundrels? They wallow in the fat brewis<sup>20</sup> of my bounty, and lick up the crumbs of my table, yet will not rise to see my walks cleansed. — Come out, you powder-beef<sup>21</sup> queans! What, Nan! what, Madge Mumble-crust! Come out, you fat

Enter FIRK.

FIRK. O Master, is't you that speak bandog<sup>23</sup> and Bedlam this morning? I was in a dream, and mused what madman was got into the street so early. Have you drunk this morning that your throat is so clear?

EYRE. Ah, well said, Firk; well said, Firk. To work, my fine knave, to work! Wash thy face, and thou'lt be more blest. 20

FIRK. Let them wash my face that will eat it. Good master, send for a souse-wife,<sup>24</sup> if you'll have my face cleaner.

Enter HODGE.

EYRE. Away, sloven! avaunt, scoundrel! — Good morrow, Hodge; good morrow, my fine foreman.

HODGE. O Master, good morrow; y' are an early stirrer. Here's a fair morning. — Good morrow, Firk. I could have slept this hour. Here's a brave day towards.<sup>25</sup> 30

EYRE. Oh, haste to work, my fine foreman, haste to work.

FIRK. Master, I am dry as dust to hear my fellow Roger talk of fair weather; let us pray for good leather, and let clowns<sup>26</sup> and plough-boys and those that work in the fields pray for brave days. We work in a dry shop; what care I if it rain?

Enter Eyre's wife [MARGERY].

EYRE. How now, Dame Margery, can you see to rise? Trip and go; call up the [40 drabs, your maids.

MARG. See to rise? I hope 't is time enough; 't is early enough for any woman to be seen abroad. I marvel how many wives in Tower Street are up so soon. Gods me, 't is not noon, — here 's a yawling!<sup>27</sup>

EYRE. Peace, Margery, peace! Where's Cicely Bumtrinket, your maid? She has a privy fault: she farts in her sleep. Call the quean up; if my men want shoe-thread, [50 I'll swinge<sup>28</sup> her in a stirrup.

FIRK. Yet, that's but a dry beating; here's still a sign of drought.

Enter LACY [disguised], singing.

LACY. *Der was een bore van Gelderland,
Frolick si[e] byen;
He was als dronck he cold nyet stand,
Upsolce si[e] byen.
Tap eens de canneken,
Drincke, scho[n]e mannekin.<sup>29</sup>*

FIRK. Master, for my life, yonder's a [60 brother of the gentle craft; if he bear not Saint Hugh's bones,<sup>30</sup> I'll forfeit my bones; he's some uplandish<sup>31</sup> workman. Hire him, good Master, that I may learn some gibble-gabble; 't will make us work the faster.

EYRE. Peace, Firk! A hard world! Let him pass, let him vanish; we have journey-men enow. Peace, my fine Firk!

MARG. Nay, nay, y' are best follow your man's counsel; you shall see what will [70 come on 't. We have not men enow, but we must entertain every butter-box;<sup>32</sup> but let that pass.

HODGE. Dame, 'fore God, if my master follow your counsel, he'll consume little beef. He shall be glad of men an he can catch them.

FIRK. Ay, that he shall.

HODGE. 'Fore God, a proper man, and I warrant, a fine workman. — Master, farewell; Dame, adieu; if such a man as he cannot [80 find-work, Hodge is not for you. Offer to go.

EYRE. Stay, my fine Hodge.

FIRK. Faith, an your foreman go, Dame, you must take a journey to seek a new journey-man; if Roger remove, Firk follows. If Saint Hugh's bones shall not be set a-work, I may prick mine awl in the walls, and go play. Fare ye well, Master; God buy, Dame.

EYRE. Tarry, my fine Hodge, my brisk foreman! Stay, Firk! — [to MARGERY] [90 Peace, pudding-broth! — By the Lord of Ludgate, I love my men as my life. Peace, you gallimaufry!<sup>33</sup> Hodge, if he want work, <sup>29</sup> There was a boor from Gelderland,

Merry they be;

He was so drunk he could not stand,

[Dead drunk] they be.

<sup>30</sup> According to Deloney, St. Hugh was befriended by journeymen shoemakers, "in requital of which kindness he called them Gentlemen of the Gentle Craft" and bequeathed them his bones. After his martyrdom they secretly secured his skeleton, which they made into the tools of their trade, "which ever since have been called S. Hugh's bones."

FIRK. Nails,<sup>35</sup> if I should speak after him without drinking, I should choke. — And you, friend Oak, are you of the gentle craft?

LACY. Yaw, yaw, ik bin den skomawker. [100

FIRK. Den skomaker, quoth 'a! And hark you, skomaker, have you all your tools, a good rubbing-pin, a good stopper, a good dresser, your four sorts of awls, and your two balls of wax, your paring knife, your hand and thumb leathers, and good St. Hugh's bones to smooth up your work?

LACY. Yaw, yaw; be niet vorveard.<sup>36</sup> Ik hab all de dingen voour mack schoes groot and cleane.<sup>37</sup> 110

FIRK. Ha, ha! Good master, hire him; he'll make me laugh so that I shall work more in mirth than I can in earnest.

EYRE. Hear ye, friend, have ye any skill in the mystery<sup>38</sup> of cordwainers?

LACY. Ik weet niet wat yow seg; ich ve[r]staw you niet.<sup>39</sup>

FIRK. Why, thus, man! [imitating by gesture a shoemaker at work] — Ich verste u niet, quoth 'a. 120

LACY. Yaw, yaw, yaw; ick can dat wel doen.

FIRK. Yaw, yaw! He speaks yawing like a jackdaw that gapes to be fed with cheese-curd. Oh, he'll give a villainous pull at a can of double-beer; but Hodge and I have the vantage: we must drink first, because we are the eldest journeyman.

EYRE. What is thy name?

LACY. Hans — Hans Meulter.

EYRE. Give me thy hand; th'art wel- [130 come. — Hodge, entertain him; Firk, bid him welcome; come, Hans. Run, wife, bid your maids, your trullibubs,<sup>40</sup> make ready my fine men's breakfasts. To him, Hodge!

HODGE. Hans, th'art welcome; use thyself friendly, for we are good fellows; if not, thou shalt be fought with, wert thou bigger than a giant.

FIRK. Yea, and drunk with, wert thou Gargantua. My master keeps no cowards, I [140 tell thee. — Ho, boy, bring him an heel-block; <sup>41</sup> here's a new journeyman.

<sup>34</sup> Good-day, master, and you, goodwife, also.

LACY. O, ich wersto you; ich moet een halve dossen cans betaelen; here, boy, nempt dis skill-ing, tap eens freeclicke.<sup>42</sup> Exit Boy.

EYRE. Quick, snipper-snapper, away! Firk, scour thy throat; thou shalt wash it with Castilian liquor.

Enter Boy.

Come, my last of the fives,<sup>43</sup> give me a can. Have to thee, Hans; here, Hodge; here, [150 Firk; drink, you mad Greeks, and work like true Trojans, and pray for Simon Eyre, the shoemaker. — Here, Hans, and th'art welcome.

FIRK. Lo, Dame, you would have lost a good fellow that will teach us to laugh. This beer came hopping in well.

MARG. Simon, it is almost seven.

EYRE. Is't so, Dame Clapper-dudgeon? <sup>44</sup> is't seven a'clock, and my men's breakfast not ready? Trip and go, you sous'd conger,<sup>45</sup> [160 away! Come, you mad Hyperboreans; <sup>46</sup> follow me, Hodge; follow me, Hans; come after, my fine Firk; to work, to work awhile, and then to breakfast. Exit.

FIRK. Soft! Yaw, yaw, good Hans, though my master have no more wit but to call you afore me, I am not so foolish to go behind you, I being the elder journeyman. Exeunt.

[SCENE IV] <sup>47</sup>

Hollowing <sup>48</sup> within. Enter WARNER and HAMMON, like hunters.

HAM. Cousin, beat every brake; the game's not far;

This way with winged feet he fled from death, Whilst the pursuing hounds, scenting his steps, Find out his highway to destruction. Besides, the miller's boy told me even now, He saw him take soil,<sup>49</sup> and he halloaed him, Affirming him [to have been]<sup>50</sup> so emboss'd <sup>51</sup> That long he could not hold.

<sup>42</sup> Oh, I understand you; I must pay for half a dozen cans; here boy, take this shilling; draw once freely.

<sup>51</sup> Exhausted.

WARN. If it be so,
 'T is best we trace these meadows by Old Ford.

A noise of Hunters within. Enter a Boy.

HAM. How now, boy? Where's the deer?
 speak! saw'st thou him? 10

BOY. Oh yea; I saw him leap through a hedge, and then over a ditch, then at my Lord Mayor's pale; over he skipp'd me, and in he went me, and "holla" the hunters cri'd, and "there, boy; there, boy!" But there he is, a' mine honesty.

HAM. Boy, God-a-mercy.<sup>52</sup> Cousin, let's away;
 I hope we shall find better sport to-day.

Exeunt.

[SCENE V] <sup>53</sup>

Hunting within. Enter ROSE and SYBIL.

ROSE. Why, Sybil, wilt thou prove a forester?

SYBIL. Upon some,<sup>54</sup> no. Forester? Go by; no, faith, Mistress. The deer came running into the barn through the orchard and over the pale; I wot well I look'd as pale as a new cheese to see him. But whip, says Goodman Pinclose, up with his flail, and our Nick with a prong, and down he fell, and they upon him, and I upon them. By my troth, we had such sport; and in the end we ended him; [10 his throat we cut, flay'd him, unhorn'd him, and my Lord Mayor shall eat of him anon, when he comes. Horns sound within.

ROSE. Hark, hark, the hunters come; y'
 are best take heed:
 They'll have a saying to you for this deed.

Enter HAMMON, WARNER, Huntsmen, and Boy.

HAM. God save you, fair ladies.

SYBIL. Ladies! Oh, gross! <sup>55</sup>

WARN. Came not a buck this way?

ROSE. No, but <sup>56</sup> two does.

HAM. And which way went they? Faith, we'll hunt at those.

SYBIL. At those? Upon some, no. When, can you tell?

WARN. Upon some, ay.

SYBIL. Good Lord!

WARN. Wounds! <sup>57</sup> Then farewell! [20
 HAM. Boy, which way went he?

BOY. This way, sir, he ran.

HAM. This way he ran indeed, fair Mistress
 Rose;

Our game was lately in your orchard seen.

WARN. Can you advise which way he took his flight?

SYBIL. Follow your nose; his horns will guide you right.

WARN. Th'art a mad wench.

SYBIL. Oh, rich!

ROSE. Trust me, not I
 It is not like [that] <sup>58</sup> the wild forest deer
 Would come so near to places of resort;
 You are deceiv'd; he fled some other way.

WARN. Which way, my sugar-candy, can you show? 30

SYBIL. Come up, good honeysops, upon some, no.

ROSE. Why do you stay, and not pursue your game?

SYBIL. I'll hold my life, their hunting nags be lame.

HAM. A deer more dear is found within this place.

ROSE. But not the deer, sir, which you had in chase.

HAM. I chas'd the deer, but this dear
 chaseth me.

ROSE. The strangest hunting that ever I see.
 But where's your park? (She offers to go away.)

HAM. 'T is here. Oh, stay!

ROSE. Impale <sup>59</sup> me, and then I will not stray.

WARN. They wrangle, wench; we are more kind than they. 40

SYBIL. What kind of hart is that dear heart you seek?

WARN. A hart, dear heart.

SYBIL. Who ever saw the like?

ROSE. To lose your heart, is't possible you can?

HAM. My heart is lost.

ROSE. Alack, good gentleman!

HAM. This poor lost heart would I wish you might find.

ROSE. You, by such luck, might prove your hart a hind.<sup>60</sup>

HAM. Why Luck had horns, so have I heard some say.

ROSE. Now, God, an't be his will, send Luck into your way.

<sup>60</sup> A doe.

Enter LORD MAYOR and Servants.

L. MAYOR. What, Master Hammon? Welcome to Old Ford!

SYBIL. Gods pittikins,<sup>61</sup> hands off, sir! Here's my Lord. 50

L. MAYOR. I hear you had ill luck, and lost your game.

HAM. 'T is true, my Lord.

L. MAYOR. I am sorry for the same. What gentleman is this?

HAM. My brother-in-law.

L. MAYOR. Y' are welcome both; sith<sup>62</sup> Fortune offers you

Into my hands, you shall not part from hence, Until you have refresh'd your wearied limbs. Go, Sybil, cover the board! You shall be guest

To no good cheer, but even a hunter's feast.

HAM. I thank your Lordship. — Cousin, on my life,

For our lost venison I shall find a wife. 60
Exeunt [all but MAYOR].

L. MAYOR. In gentlemen; I'll not be absent long. —

This Hammon is a proper gentleman,
A citizen by birth, fairly allied;
How fit an husband were he for my girl!
Well, I will in, and do the best I can
To match my daughter to this gentleman.

Exit.

[ACT III — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter LACY [as HANS], Skipper, HODGE, and FIRK.

FIRK. Wat seggen de reggen de copen, slopen — laugh, Hodge, laugh!

seggen yow, broder Firk? Doot<sup>9</sup> it, Hodge. — Come, skipper. Exeunt [LACY and Skipper].

FIRK. Bring him, quod you? Here's no knavery, to bring my master to buy a ship worth the lading of two or three hundred thousand pounds. Alas, that's nothing; a trifle, a bauble, Hodge.

HODGE. The truth is, Firk, that the [20] merchant owner of the ship dares not show his head, and therefore this skipper that deals for him, for the love he bears to Hans, offers my master Eyre a bargain in the commodities. He shall have a reasonable day of payment; he may sell the wares by that time, and be an huge gainer himself.

FIRK. Yea, but can my fellow Hans lend my master twenty porpentines as an earnest penny? [30]

HODGE. Portuguese, thou wouldst say; here they be, Firk; hark, they jingle in my pocket like St. Mary Overy's<sup>10</sup> bells.

Enter EYRE and his wife [MARGER].

FIRK. Mum, here comes my dame and my master. She'll scold, on my life, for loitering this Monday; but all's one: let them all say what they can, Monday's our holiday.

MARG. You sing, Sir Sauce, but I beshrew your heart:

I fear for this your singing we shall smart. [39]

FIRK. Smart for me, dame; why, dame, why?

HODGE. Master, I hope you'll not suffer my dame to take down your journeymen.

FIRK. If she take me down, I'll take her up; yea, and take her down too, a buttonhole lower.

EYRE. Peace, Firk; not I, Hodge; by the life of Pharaoh, by the Lord of Ludgate, by this beard, every hair whereof I value at a king's ransom, she shall not meddle with [50] you. — Peace, you bombast cotton-candle quean; away, queen of clubs;<sup>11</sup> quarrel not with me and my men, with me and my fine Firk; I'll firk<sup>12</sup> you, if you do.

MARG. Yea, yea, man, you may use me as you please; but let that pass.

EYRE. Let it pass, let it vanish away; peace! Am I not Simon Eyre? Are not these my brave men, brave shoemakers, all gentlemen of the gentle craft? Prince am [60]

I none, yet am I nobly born, as being the sole son of a shoemaker.<sup>13</sup> Away, rubbish! vanish, melt; like kitchen-stuff.<sup>14</sup>

MARG. Yea, yea, 'tis well; I must be call'd rubbish, kitchen-stuff, for a sort<sup>15</sup> of knaves.

FIRK. Nay, Dame, you shall not weep and wail in woe for me. Master, I'll stay no longer; here's an [i]nventory of my shop tools. Adieu, Master; Hodge, farewell. 70

HODGE. Nay, stay, Firk; thou shalt not go alone.

MARG. I pray, let them go; there be no maids than Mawkin, more men than Hodge, and more fools than Firk.

FIRK. Fools? Nails! if I tarry now, I would my guts might be turn'd to shoe-thread.

HODGE. And if I stay, I pray God I may be turn'd to a Turk, and set in Finsbury<sup>16</sup> for boys to shoot at. — Come, Firk. 80

EYRE. Stay, my fine knaves, you arms of my trade, you pillars of my profession. What, shall a tittle-tattle's words make you forsake Simon Eyre? — Avaunt, kitchen-stuff! Rip,<sup>17</sup> you brown-bread<sup>18</sup> Tannikin;<sup>19</sup> out of my sight! Move me not! Have not I ta'en you from selling tripes in Eastcheap, and set you in my shop, and made you hail-fellow with Simon Eyre, the shoemaker? And now do you deal thus with my journeymen? [90 Look, you powder-beef quean, on the face of Hodge, here's a face for a lord.

FIRK. And here's a face for any lady in Christendom.

EYRE. Rip, you chitterling,<sup>20</sup> avaunt! Boy! [Enter Boy.] Bid the tapster of the Boar's Head fill me a dozen cans of beer for my journeymen.

FIRK. A dozen cans? O, brave! Hodge, now I'll stay. 100

EYRE. [aside to the Boy] An the knave fills any more than two, he pays for them. [Exit Boy.] — A dozen cans of beer for my journeymen. [Re-enter Boy.] Here,<sup>21</sup> you mad Mesopotamians, wash your livers with this liquor. Where be the odd ten? — No more, Madge, no more. — Well said.<sup>22</sup> Drink and to work! — What work dost thou, Hodge? What work? 109

HODGE. I am a making a pair of shoes for my Lord Mayor's daughter, Mistress Rose.

FIRK. And I a pair of shoes for Sybil, my Lord's maid. I deal with her.

EYRE. Sybil? Fie, defile not thy fine workmanly fingers with the feet of kitchen-stuff and basting-ladles. Ladies of the court, fine ladies, my lads, commit their feet to our apparelling; put gross work to Hans. Yark<sup>23</sup> and seam, yark and seam!

FIRK. For yarking and seaming let me [120 alone, an I come to 't.

HODGE. Well, master, all this is from the bias.<sup>24</sup> Do you remember the ship my fellow Hans told you of? The skipper and he are both drinking at the Swan. Here be the Portuguese to give earnest. If you go through with it, you cannot choose but be a lord at least.

FIRK. Nay, dame, if my master prove not a lord, and you a lady, hang me. 130

MARG. Yea, like enough, if you may loiter and tittle thus.

FIRK. Tittle, dame? No, we have been bargaining with Skellum<sup>25</sup> Skanderbag<sup>26</sup> Can-you-Dutch-spreaken<sup>27</sup> for a ship of silk cypress, laden with sugar-candy.

Re-enter the Boy with a velvet coat and an alderman's gown. EYRE puts it on.

EYRE. Peace, Firk; silence, Tittle-tattle! Hodge, I'll go through with it. Here's a seal-ring, and I have sent for a guarded<sup>28</sup> gown and a damask cassock. See where [140 it comes; look here, Maggy; help me, Firk; apparel me, Hodge; silk and satin, you mad Philistines, silk and satin.

FIRK. Ha, ha, my master will be as proud as a dog in a doublet, all in beaten<sup>29</sup> damask and velvet.

EYRE. Softly, Firk, for rearing<sup>30</sup> of the nap, and wearing threadbare my garments. How

<sup>27</sup> Old eds. have no punctuation between we and spreaken but the last phrase is evidently part of the name Firk gives the skipper.

dost thou like me, Firk? How do I look, my fine Hodge? 150

HODGE. Why, now you look like yourself, Master. I warrant you, there's few in the city but will give you the wall,<sup>31</sup> and come upon you with<sup>32</sup> the Right Worshipful.

FIRK. Nails, my master looks like a thread-bare cloak new turn'd and dress'd. Lord, Lord, to see what good raiment doth! Dame, dame, are you not enamored?

EYRE. How say'st thou, Maggy, am I not brisk? Am I not fine? 160

MARG. Fine? By my troth, sweetheart, very fine! By my troth, I never lik'd thee so well in my life, sweetheart; but let that pass. I warrant there be many women in the city have not such handsome husbands, but only for their apparel; but let that pass too.

Re-enter [LACY as] HANS, and Skipper.

HANS. Godden day, mester. Dis be de skipper dat heb de skip van marchandise; de commodity ben good; nempt it, master, nempt it. 170

EYRE. God-a-mercy, Hans; welcome, skipper. Where lies this ship of merchandise?

SKIP. De skip ben in rovere;<sup>33</sup> dor be van sugar, civet, almonds, cambricke, and a towsand, towsand tings, Gotz sacrament; nempt it, mester: yo sal het good copen.

FIRK. To him, Master! O sweet Master! O sweet wares! Prunes, almonds, sugar-candy, carrot-roots, turnips, O brave fattening meat! Let not a man buy a nutmeg [180 but yourself.

EYRE. Peace, Firk! Come, skipper, I'll go [aboard]<sup>34</sup> with you. — Hans, have you made him drink?

SKIP. Yaw, yaw, ic heb veale gedrunck.<sup>35</sup>

EYRE. Come, Hans, follow me. Skipper, thou shalt have my countenance in the city.

Exeunt [EYRE, LACY, and Skipper.]

FIRK. Yaw heb veale gedrunck, quoth 'a. They may well be called butter-boxes, when they drink fat veal and thick beer too. [190 But come, Dame, I hope you'll chide us no more.

MARG. No, faith, Firk; no, perdy,<sup>36</sup> Hodge. I do feel honor creep upon me, and which is more, a certain rising in my flesh; but let that pass.

FIRK. Rising in your flesh do you feel, say you? Ay, you may be with child; but why should not my master feel a rising in his flesh, having a gown and a gold ring on? But [200 you are such a shrew, you'll soon pull him down.

MARG. Ha, ha! prithee, peace! Thou mak'st my Worship laugh; but let that pass. Come, I'll go in; Hodge, prithee, go before me; Firk, follow me.

FIRK. Firk doth follow: Hodge, pass out in state. Exeunt.

[SCENE II]<sup>37</sup>

Enter [the EARL OF] LINCOLN and DODGER.

LINC. How now, good Dodger; what's the news in France?

DODGER. My Lord, upon the eighteen day of May

The French and English were prepar'd to fight;

Each side with eager fury gave the sign

Of a most hot encounter. Five long hours

Both armies fought together; at the length

The lot of victory fell on our sides.

Twelve thousand of the Frenchmen that day di'd,

Four thousand English, and no man of name

But Captain Hyam and young Ardington, [10 Two gallant gentlemen, I knew them well.

LINC. But Dodger, prithee, tell me, in this fight

How did my cousin Lacy bear himself?

DODGER. My Lord, your cousin Lacy was not there.

LINC. Not there?

DODGER. No, my good Lord.

LINC. Sure, thou mistakest.

I saw him shipp'd, and a thousand eyes beside Were witnesses<sup>38</sup> of the farewells which he gave,

When I, with weeping eyes, bid him adieu.

Dodger, take heed.

DODGER. My Lord, I am advis'd<sup>39</sup> That what I spake is true; to prove it so, [20 His cousin Askew, that suppli'd his place, Sent me for him from France, that secretly He might convey himself hither.<sup>40</sup>

LINC. Is't even so? Dares he so carelessly venture his life

<sup>32</sup> Approach you with the title of. — Eyre is disguising himself as a magnate in order to induce the skipper to sell him the cargo. In Deloney much more is made of this trick.

Upon the indignation of a king?

Hath he despis'd my love, and spurn'd those favors

Which I with prodigal hand pour'd on his head?

He shall repent his rashness with his soul;

Since of my love he makes no estimate,

I'll make him wish he had not known my hate. 30

Thou hast no other news?

DODGER. None else, my Lord.

LINC. None worse I know thou hast. —

Procure the King

To crown his giddy brows with ample honors,

Send him chief colonel,<sup>41</sup> and all my hope

Thus to be dash'd! But 'tis in vain to grieve;

One evil cannot a worse relieve.

Upon my life, I have found out his plot;

That old dog, Love, that fawn'd upon him so,

Love to that puling girl, his fair-cheek'd Rose,

The Lord Mayor's daughter, hath distracted him; 40

And in the fire of that love's lunacy

Hath he burnt up himself, consum'd his credit,

Lost the King's love, yea, and I fear, his life,

Only to get a wanton to his wife;

Dodger, it is so.

DODGER. I fear so, my good Lord.

LINC. It is so — nay, sure it cannot be!

I am at my wits' end, Dodger!

DODGER. Yea, my Lord.

LINC. Thou art acquainted with my nephew's haunts; 48

Spend this gold for thy pains: go seek him out.

Watch at my Lord Mayor's — there if he live,

Dodger, thou shalt be sure to meet with him.

Prithee, be diligent. — Lacy, thy name

Liv'd once in honor; now ['t is] <sup>42</sup> dead in shame. —

Be circumspect.

Exit.

DODGER. I warrant you, my Lord. Exit.

[SCENE III] <sup>43</sup>

Enter LORD MAYOR and MASTER SCOTT.

L. MAYOR. Good Master Scott, I have been bold with you

To be a witness to a wedding knot

Betwixt young Master Hammon and my daughter.

Oh, stand aside; see where the lovers come.

Enter HAMMON and ROSE.

ROSE. Can it be possible you love me so?

No, no; within those eyeballs I espy

Apparent likelihoods of flattery.

Pray now, let go my hand.

HAM. Sweet Mistress Rose, Misconstrue not my words, nor misconceive Of my affection, whose devoted soul 10 Swears that I love thee dearer than my heart.

ROSE. As dear as your own heart? I judge it right,

Men love their hearts best when th'are out of sight.

HAM. I love you, by this hand.

ROSE. Yet hands off now! If flesh be frail, how weak and frail's your vow!

HAM. Then by my life I swear.

ROSE. Then do not brawl; One quarrel loseth wife and life and all.

Is not your meaning thus?

HAM. In faith, you jest.

ROSE. Love loves to sport; therefore leave love, y'are best.

L. MAYOR. [aside to SCOTT] What? square <sup>44</sup> they, Master Scott?

SCOTT. [aside to MAYOR] Sir, never doubt, 20

Lovers are quickly in, and quickly out.

HAM. Sweet Rose, be not so strange in fancying me.

Nay, never turn aside, shun not my sight;

I am not grown so fond, to fond <sup>45</sup> my love

On any that shall quit <sup>46</sup> it with disdain;

If you will love me, so; — if not, farewell.

L. MAYOR. [advancing] Why, how now, lovers, are you both agreed?

HAM. Yes, faith, my Lord.

L. MAYOR. 'T is well, give me your hand; Give me yours, Daughter. — How now, both pull back!

What means this, girl?

ROSE. I mean to live a maid. [30

HAM. (aside) But not to die one; pause, ere that be said.

L. MAYOR. Will you still cross me, still be obstinate?

HAM. Nay, chide her not, my Lord, for doing well;

If she can live an happy virgin's life, 'T is far more blessed than to be a wife.

<sup>46</sup> Requite.

ROSE. Say, sir, I cannot; I have made a vow,
Whoever be my husband, 't is not you.

L. MAYOR. Your tongue is quick; but Master Hammon, know
I bade you welcome to another end.

HAM. What, would you have me pule and pine and pray, 40
With "lovely lady," "mistress of my heart," "Pardon your servant;" and the rhymer
play,

Railing on Cupid and his tyrant's-dart;
Or shall I undertake some martial spoil,
Wearing your glove at tourney and at tilt,
And tell how many gallants I unhors'd —
Sweet, will this pleasure you?

ROSE. Yea, when wilt begin?
What, love rhymes, man? Fie on that deadly sin!

L. MAYOR. If you will have her, I'll make her agree.

HAM. Enforced love is worse than hate to
me. — 50
[aside] There is a wench keeps shop in the Old Change,

To her will I (it is not wealth I seek;
I have enough) and will prefer her love
Before the world. — My good Lord Mayor, adieu;

Old love for me: I have no luck with new.

Exit.

L. MAYOR. Now, mammet,<sup>47</sup> you have well
behav'd yourself;
But you shall curse your coyness if I live. — Who's within there? See you convey your mistress

Straight to th' Old Ford! — I'll keep you straight <sup>48</sup> enough. — 59

'Fore God, I would have sworn the puling girl
Would willingly accepted Hammon's love;
But banish him, my thoughts! — Go, minion,
in! — Exit ROSE.

Now tell me, Master Scott, would you have thought

That Master Simon Eyre, the shoemaker,
Had been of wealth to buy such merchandise?

SCOTT. 'T was well, my Lord, your Honor and myself

Grew partners with him; for your bills of lading

Show that Eyre's gains in one commodity
Rise at the least to full three thousand pound,
Besides like gain in other merchandise. 70

<sup>48</sup> In order.

L. MAYOR. Well, he shall spend some of his thousands now,
For I have sent for him to the Guildhall.

Enter EYRE.

See, where he comes. — Good morrow, Master
Eyre.

EYRE. Poor Simon Eyre, my Lord, your shoemaker.

L. MAYOR. Well, well, it likes <sup>49</sup> yourself to term you so. —

Enter DODGER.

Now Master Dodger, what's the news with
you?

DODGER. I'd gladly speak in private to
your Honor.

L. MAYOR. You shall, you shall. — Master
Eyre and Master Scott,
I have some business with this gentleman;
I pray, let me entreat you to walk before 80
To the Guildhall; I'll follow presently.

Master Eyre, I hope ere noon to call you sheriff.

EYRE. I would not care, my Lord, if you might call me

King of Spain. — Come, Master Scott.

[Exeunt EYRE and SCOTT.]

L. MAYOR. Now, Master Dodger, what's the news you bring?

DODGER. The Earl of Lincoln by me greets your Lordship,
And earnestly requests you if you can Inform him where his nephew Lacy keeps.

L. MAYOR. Is not his nephew Lacy now in France?

DODGER. No, I assure your Lordship, but disguis'd 90
Lurks here in London.

L. MAYOR. London? Is't even so?
It may be; but upon my faith and soul,
I know not where he lives, or whether he lives.
So tell my Lord of Lincoln. Lurk in London?
Well, Master Dodger, you perhaps may start
him;

Be but the means to rid him into France,
I'll give you a dozen angels <sup>50</sup> for your pains;
So much I love his Honor, hate his nephew.
And, prithee, so inform thy lord from me.

DODGER. I take my leave. Exit DODGER.

L. MAYOR. Farewell, good Master
Dodger. — 100

Lacy in London? I dare pawn my life,

<sup>49</sup> Is pleasing to.

<sup>50</sup> Gold coins worth about $2.50 each.

My daughter knows thereof, and for that cause Deni'd young Master Hammon in his love. Well, I am glad I sent her to Old Ford. (Gods Lord, ' is late ! to Guildhall I must hie ; I know my brethren stay <sup>61</sup> my company. Exit.

[SCENE IV] <sup>62</sup>

Enter FIRK, Eyre's wife [MARGERY, LACY as] HANS, and ROGER.

MARG. Thou goest too fast for me, Roger. — Oh, Firk.

FIRK. Ay, forsooth.

MARG. I pray thee, run — do you hear? — run to Guildhall, and learn if my husband, Master Eyre, will take that worshipful vocation of Master Sheriff upon him. Hie thee, good Firk.

FIRK. Take it? Well, I go ; an he should not take it, Firk swears to forswear him. [10 Yes, forsooth, I go to Guildhall.

MARG. Nay, when? <sup>63</sup> Thou art too compendious and tedious.

FIRK. O rare ! your excellence is full of eloquence ; how like a new cart-wheel my dame speaks, and she looks like an old musty ale-bottle <sup>64</sup> going to scalding.

MARG. Nay, when? Thou wilt make me melancholy.

FIRK. God forbid your Worship should [20 fall into that humor — I run. Exit.

MARG. Let me see now, Roger and Hans.

HODGE. Ay, forsooth, Dame — Mistress, I should say, but the old term so sticks to the roof of my mouth, I can hardly lick it off.

MARG. Even what thou wilt, good Roger ; dame is a fair name for any honest Christian ; but let that pass. How dost thou, Hans?

HANS. Mee tanck you, vro. <sup>65</sup>

MARG. Well, Hans and Roger, you see [30 God hath bless'd your master ; and, perdy, if ever he comes to be Master Sheriff of London — as we are all mortal — you shall see, I will have some odd thing or other in a corner for you : I will not be your backfriend ; <sup>66</sup> but let that pass. — Hans, pray thee, tie my shoe.

HANS. Yaw, ic sal, vro.

MARG. Roger, thou know'st the length of my foot : as it is none of the biggest, so I thank God, it is handsome enough ; prithee, let [40 me have a pair of shoes made, cork, <sup>67</sup> good Roger, wooden heel too.

HODGE. You shall.

MARG. Art thou acquainted with never a farthingale-maker, nor a French-hood-maker? I must enlarge my bum, ha, ha ! How shall I look in a hood, I wonder ! Perdy, oddly I think.

HODGE. [aside] As a cat out of <sup>68</sup> a pillory. — Very well, I warrant you, Mistress. 50

MARG. Indeed, all flesh is grass ; and, Roger, canst thou tell where I may buy a good hair?

HODGE. Yes, forsooth, at the poulterer's in Gracious <sup>69</sup> Street.

MARG. Thou art an ungracious wag ; perdy, I mean a false hair for my periwig.

HODGE. Why, Mistress, the next time I cut my beard, you shall have the shavings of it ; but they are all true hairs. 60

MARG. It is very hot ; I must get me a fan or else a mask.

HODGE. [aside] So you had need, to hide your wicked face.

MARG. Fie upon it, how costly this world's calling is ; perdy, but that it is one of the wonderful works of God, I would not deal with it. — Is not Firk come yet? — Hans, be not so sad, let it pass and vanish, as my husband's Worship says. 70

HANS. Ick bin vrolicke ; lot see yow soo. <sup>69</sup>

HODGE. Mistress, will you drink <sup>71</sup> a pipe of tobacco?

MARG. Oh, fie upon it, Roger, perdy ! These filthy tobacco pipes are the most idle slaving baubles that ever I felt. Out upon it ! God bless us, men look not like men that use them.

Enter RALPH [with a crutch] being lame.

HODGE. What, fellow Ralph? — Mistress, look here, Jane's husband ! — Why, how [80 now, <sup>72</sup> lame? Hans, make much of him ; he's a brother of our trade, a good workman, and a tall <sup>73</sup> soldier.

HANS. You be welcome, broder.

MARG. Perdy, I knew him not. — How dost thou, good Ralph? I am glad to see thee well.

RALPH. I would [to] <sup>64</sup> God you saw me, dame, as well

As when I went from London into France. [89]

MARG. Trust me, I am sorry, Ralph, to see thee impotent. Lord, how the wars have made him sunburnt! The left leg is not well; 't was a fair gift of God the infirmity took not hold a little higher, considering thou camest from France; <sup>65</sup> but let that pass.

RALPH. I am glad to see you well, and I rejoice

To hear that God hath bless'd my master so Since my departure.

MARG. Yea, truly, Ralph, I thank my Maker; but let that pass. 100

HODGE. And, sirrah Ralph, what news, what news in France?

RALPH. Tell me, good Roger, first, what news in England?

How does my Jane? When didst thou see my wife?

Where lives my poor heart? She'll be poor indeed,

Now I want limbs to get whereon to feed.

HODGE. Limbs? Hast thou not hands, man? Thou shalt never see a shoemaker want bread, though he have but three fingers on a hand. 110

RALPH. Yet all this while I hear not of my Jane.

MARG. Oh, Ralph, your wife — perdy, we know not what's become of her. She was here a while, and because she was married, grew more stately than became her; I check'd her, and so forth; away she flung, never returned, nor said bye nor bah; and, Ralph, you know, "ka me, ka thee." <sup>66</sup> And, so as I tell ye — Roger, is not Firk come yet?

HODGE. No, forsooth. 120

MARG. And so, indeed, we heard not of her; but I hear she lives in London; but let that pass. If she had wanted, she might have opened her case to me or my husband, or to any of my men; I am sure, there's not any of them, perdy, but would have done her good to his power. — Hans, look if Firk be come.

HANS. Yaw, [ik] <sup>67</sup> sal, vro. Exit HANS.

MARG. And so, as I said — but, Ralph, why dost thou weep? Thou knowest that naked we came out of our mother's womb, and [131 naked we must return; and, therefore, thank God for all things.

HODGE. No, faith, Jane is a stranger here; but, Ralph, pull up a good heart; I know thou hast one. Thy wife, man, is in London; one told me, he saw her awhile ago very brave <sup>68</sup> and neat; we'll ferret her out, an London hold her.

MARG. Alas, poor soul, he's overcome [140 with sorrow; he does but as I do, weep for the loss of any good thing. — But, Ralph, get thee in, call for some meat and drink; thou shalt find me worshipful towards thee.

RALPH. I thank you, dame; since I want limbs and lands,

I'll [trust] <sup>69</sup> to God, my good friends, and to these my hands. Exit.

Enter [LACY as] HANS and FIRK, running.

FIRK. Run, good Hans! O Hodge, O Mistress! Hodge, heave up thine ears; Mistress, smug up <sup>70</sup> your looks; on with your best apparel; my master is chosen, my [150 master is called, nay, condemn'd by the cry of the country, to be sheriff of the city for this famous year now to come. And, time now being, a great many men in black gowns were ask'd for their voices <sup>71</sup> and their hands, and my master had all their fists about his ears presently, and they cried "Ay, ay, ay, ay," — and so I came away —

Wherefore without all other grieve

I do salute you, Mistress Shrieve. <sup>72</sup> [160

HANS. Yaw, my mester is de groot man, de shrieve.

HODGE. Did not I tell you, Mistress? Now I may boldly say, "Good morrow to your Worship."

MARG. Good morrow, good Roger. — I thank you, my good people all. — Firk, hold up thy hand: here's a threepenny piece for thy tidings.

FIRK. 'T is but three halfpence, I think. Yes, 't is threepence, I smell the rose. <sup>73</sup>

HODGE. But, Mistress, be rul'd by me, and do not speak so pulingly.

FIRK. 'T is her Worship speaks so, and not she. No, faith, Mistress, speak me in the old key: "To it, Firk;" "there, good Firk;" "ply your business, Hodge;" "Hodge, with a

Enter SIMON EYRE wearing a gold chain.

HANS. See, myn liever broder, heer compt [180 my meester.

MARG. Welcome home, Master Shrieve ; I pray God continue you in health and wealth.

EYRE. See here, my Maggy, a chain, a gold chain for Simon Eyre. I shall make thee a lady ; here's a French hood for thee ; on with it, on with it ! dress thy brows with this flap of a shoulder of mutton, to make thee look lovely. — Where be my fine men ? — [190 Roger, I'll make over my shop and tools to thee ; Firk, thou shalt be the foreman ; Hans thou shalt have an hundred for twenty.<sup>74</sup> Be as mad knaves as your master Sim Eyre hath been, and you shall live to be sheriffs of London. — How dost thou like me, Margery ? — Prince am I none, yet am I princely born. — Firk, Hodge, and Hans !

ALL THREE. Ay, forsooth, what says your Worship, Mistress <sup>75</sup> Sheriff ? 200

EYRE. Worship and honor, you Babylonian knaves, for the gentle craft. But I forgot myself ; I am bidden by my Lord Mayor to dinner to Old Ford : he's gone before ; I must after. — Come, Madge, on with your trinkets ! — Now, my true Trojans, my fine Firk, my dapper Hodge, my honest Hans, some device, some odd crotchets, some morris, or such like, for the honor of the gentle <sup>76</sup> shoemakers. Meet me at Old Ford ; you know my mind. — Come, Madge, away. Shut up the shop, knaves, and make holiday. 212

Exeunt [EYRE and MARGERY].

FIRK. O rare ! O brave ! Come, Hodge ; follow me, Hans ; We'll be with them for a morris dance.

Exeunt.

[SCENE V] <sup>77</sup>

Enter LORD MAYOR, [ROSE,] EYRE, his wife [MARGERY] in a French hood, <sup>78</sup> SYBIL, and other Servants.

L. MAYOR. Trust me, you are as welcome to Old Ford As I myself.

MARG. Truly, I thank your Lordship.

L. MAYOR. Would our bad cheer were worth the thanks you give.

EYRE. Good cheer, my Lord Mayor, fine cheer !

A fine house, fine walls, all fine and neat.

L. MAYOR. Now, by my troth, I'll tell thee, Master Eyre,

It does me good, and all my brethren,
That such a madcap fellow as thyself

Is ent'ed into our society.

MARG. Ay, but, my Lord, he must learn now to put on gravity. 10

EYRE. Peace, Maggy ; a fig for gravity ! When I go to Guildhall in my scarlet gown, I'll look as demurely as a saint, and speak as gravely as a justice of peace ; but now I am here at Old Ford, at my good Lord Mayor's house, let it go by, vanish, Maggy ; I'll be merry ; away with flip-flap, these fooleries, these gulleries. What, honey ? Prince am I none, yet am I princely born. What says my Lord Mayor ? 20

L. MAYOR. Ha, ha, ha ! I had rather than a thousand pound, I had an heart but half so light as yours.

EYRE. Why, what should I do, my Lord ? A pound of care pays not a dram of debt. Hum, let's be merry, whiles we are young ; old age, sack and sugar will steal upon us, ere we be aware.

THE FIRST THREE-MAN'S SONG <sup>79</sup>

Oh, the month of May, the merry month of May,
So frolic, so gay, and so green, so green, so green ! 30

Oh, and then did I unto my true love say,
" Sweet Peg, thou shalt be my summer's queen

" Now the nightingale, the pretty nightingale,
The sweetest singer in all the forest's choir,
Entreats thee, sweet Peggy, to hear thy true love's tale ;

Lo, yonder she sitteth, her breast against a brier.

" But oh, I spy the cuckoo, the cuckoo, the cuckoo ;
See where she sitteth — come away, my joy ;
Come away, I prithee ! I do not like the cuckoo
Should sing where my Peggy and I kiss and toy." 40

Oh, the month of May, the merry month of May,
So frolic, so gay, and so green, so green, so green !
And then did I unto my true love say,

" Sweet Peg, thou shalt be my summer's queen ! "

L. MAYOR. It's well done. — Mistress Eyre, pray, give good counsel to my daughter.

MARG. I hope Mistress Rose will have the grace to take nothing that's bad.

<sup>79</sup> Both songs are printed before the play in the old eds., which fail to indicate when they were sung.

L. MAYOR. Pray God she do ; for i' faith,
Mistress Eyre,
I would bestow upon that peevish <sup>80</sup> girl 50
A thousand marks more than I mean to give her,
Upon condition she'd be rul'd by me.
The ape still crosseth me. There came of late
A proper gentleman of fair revenues,
Whom gladly I would call son-in-law :
But my fine cockney would have none of
him. —

You'll prove a coxcomb for it, ere you die ;
A courtier, or no man, must please your eye.

EYRE. Be rul'd, sweet Rose ; th'art ripe for a man. Marry not with a boy that [60 has no more hair on his face than thou hast on thy cheeks. A courtier, wash,<sup>81</sup> go by ; stand not upon pishery-pashery <sup>82</sup> : those silken fellows are but painted images, outsides, outsides, Rose ; their inner linings are torn. No, my fine mouse, marry me with a gentleman grocer like my Lord Mayor, your father ; a grocer is a sweet trade — plums, plums. Had I a son or daughter should marry out of the generation and blood of the shoemakers, [70 he should pack. What, the gentle trade is a living for a man through Europe, through the world.

A noise within of a tabor and a pipe.

L. MAYOR. What noise is this ?

EYRE. O my Lord Mayor, a crew of good fellows that for love to your Honor are come hither with a morris dance. — Come in, my Mesopotamians,<sup>83</sup> cheerily.

Enter HODGE, [LACY as] HANS, RALPH, FIRK, and other Shoemakers, in a morris ; after a little dancing, the LORD MAYOR speaks.

L. MAYOR. Master Eyre, are all these shoe-
makers? 80

EYRE. All cordwainers, my good Lord
Mayor.

ROSE. [aside] How like my Lacy looks yond
shoemaker !

HANS. [aside] Oh, that I durst but speak unto my love !

L. MAYOR. Sybil, go fetch some wine to make these drink. — You are all welcome.

ALL. We thank your Lordship.

ROSE takes a cup of wine and goes to HANS.

as in I, i, 128.

<sup>83</sup> Presumably Eyre uses this and other names from the geography of the Near East because he likes the sound of them.

ROSE. For his sake whose fair shape thou represent'st,
Good friend, I drink to thee.

HANS. Ik bedancke, good frister.<sup>84</sup> 90

MARG. I see, Mistress Rose, you do not want judgment ; you have drunk to the properest <sup>85</sup> man I keep.

FIRK. Here be some have done their parts to be as proper as he.

L. MAYOR. Well, urgent business calls me back to London.

Good fellows, first go in and taste our cheer ;
And to make merry as you homeward go,
Send these two angels in beer at Stratford-Bow.

EYRE. To these two, my mad lads, [100
Sim Eyre adds another ; then cheerily, FirK ; tickle it, Hans, and all for the honor of shoe-
makers.

All [the Shoemakers] go dancing out.

L. MAYOR. Come, Master Eyre, let's have your company.

Exeunt [MAYOR, EYRE, and MARGERY.]

ROSE. Sybil, what shall I do ?

SYBIL. Why, what's the matter ?

ROSE. That Hans the shoemaker is my love
Lacy,

Disguis'd in that attire to find me out.

How should I find the means to speak with
him ?

SYBIL. What, Mistress, never fear ; I dare venture my maidenhead to nothing, and [110
that's great odds, that Hans the Dutchman, when we come to London, shall not only see and speak with you, but in spite of all your father's policies steal you away and marry you.
Will not this please you ?

ROSE. Do this, and ever be assured of my
love.

SYBIL. Away, then, and follow your father to London, lest your absence cause him to suspect something :

To-morrow, if my counsel be obey'd, 120
I'll bind you prentice to the gentle trade.

[Exeunt.]

[ACT IV — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter JANE in a seamster's shop, working ; and HAMMON, muffled, at another door ; he stands aloof.

HAM. Yonder 's the shop,<sup>2</sup> and there my fair love sits.

She's fair and lovely, but she is not mine.
 Oh, would she were! Thrice have I courted
 her,
 Thrice hath my hand been moist'ned with her
 hand,
 Whilst my poor famish'd eyes do feed on that
 Which made them famish. I am unfortunate :
 I still love one, yet nobody loves me.
 I muse in other men what women see
 That I so want! Fine Mistress Rose was coy,
 And this too curious!<sup>3</sup> Oh, no, she is chaste ;
 And for<sup>4</sup> she thinks me wanton, she denies [11
 To cheer my cold heart with her sunny eyes.
 How prettily she works! O pretty hand!
 O happy work! It doth me good to stand
 Unseen to see her. Thus I oft have stood
 In frosty evenings, a light burning by her,
 Enduring biting cold, only to eye her.
 One only look hath seem'd as rich to me
 As a king's crown ; such is love's lunacy.
 Muffled I'll pass along, and by that try 20
 Whether she know me.

JANE. Sir, what is't you buy?
 What is't you lack, sir, calico, or lawn,
 Fine cambric shirts, or bands, what will you buy?

HAM. [aside] That which thou wilt not sell.
 Faith, yet I'll try. —
 How do you sell this handkerchief?

JANE. Good cheap.<sup>5</sup>

HAM. And how these ruffs?

JANE. Cheap too.

HAM. And how this band?

JANE. Cheap too.

HAM. All cheap ; how sell you then this
 hand?

JANE. My hands are not to be sold.

HAM. To be given then !

Nay, faith, I come to buy.

JANE. But none knows when.

HAM. Good sweet, leave work a little while ;
 let's play. 30

JANE. I cannot live by keeping holiday.

HAM. I'll pay you for the time which shall be lost.

JANE. With me you shall not be at so much cost.

HAM. Look, how you wound this cloth, so you wound me.

JANE. It may be so.

HAM. 'T is so.

JANE. What remedy?

HAM. Nay, faith, you are too coy.

JANE. Let go my hand.

<sup>3</sup> Fastidious. <sup>4</sup> Because. <sup>5</sup> At a bargain.

HAM. I will do any task at your command ;
 I would let go this beauty, were I not
 In mind to disobey you by a power
 That controls kings : I love you !

JANE. So ; now part. [40

HAM. With hands I may, but never with my heart.

In faith, I love you.

JANE. I believe you do.

HAM. Shall a true love in me breed hate in
 you?

JANE. I hate you not.

HAM. Then you must love?

JANE. I do.

What are you better now? I love not you.

HAM. All this, I hope, is but a woman's fray,
 That means, "Come to me," when she cries,
 "Away!"

In earnest, mistress, I do not jest,
 A true chaste love hath ent'red in my breast.
 I love you dearly, as I love my life ; 50
 I love you as a husband loves a wife ;
 That, and no other love, my love requires.
 Thy wealth, I know, is little ; my desires Thirst not for gold. Sweet, beauteous Jane, what's mine

Shall, if thou make myself thine, all be thine.
 Say, judge, what is thy sentence, life or death?
 Mercy or cruelty lies in thy breath.

JANE. Good sir, I do believe you love me
 well ;

For 't is a silly conquest, silly pride
 For one like you — I mean a gentleman — [60
 To boast that by his love-tricks he hath brought

Such and such women to his amorous lure.
 I think you do not so ; yet many do,
 And make it even a very trade to woo.
 I could be coy, as many women be,
 Feed you with sunshine smiles and wanton
 looks,

But I detest witchcraft ; say that I
 Do constantly believe you, constant have —

HAM. Why dost thou not believe me?

JANE. I believe you ; [69

But yet, good sir, because I will not grieve you
 With hopes to taste fruit which will never fall,
 In simple truth this is the sum of all :
 My husband lives, at least, I hope he lives.
 Press'd was he to these bitter wars in France ;
 Bitter they are to me by wanting him.

I have but one heart, and that heart's his due.
 How can I then bestow the same on you?
 Whilst he lives, his I live, be it ne'er so poor,
 And rather be his wife than a king's whore.

HAM. Chaste and dear woman, I will not abuse thee, 80
Although it cost my life, if thou refuse me.
Thy husband, press'd for France, what was his name?

JANE. Ralph Dampport.

HAM. Dampport? — Here's a letter sent From France to me, from a dear friend of mine,
A gentleman of place; here he doth write
Their names that have been slain in every fight.

JANE. I hope death's scroll contains not my love's name.

HAM. Cannot you read?

JANE. I can.

HAM. Peruse the same.
To my remembrance such a name I read
Amongst the rest. — See here.

JANE. Ay me, he's dead! [90
He's dead! If this be true, my dear heart's slain!

HAM. Have patience, dear love.

JANE. Hence, hence!

HAM. Nay, sweet Jane,
Make not poor sorrow proud with these rich tears.
I mourn thy husband's death, because thou mourn'st.

JANE. That bill is forg'd; 't is sign'd by forgery.

HAM. I'll bring thee letters sent besides to many,
Carrying the like report; Jane, 't is too true.
Come, weep not; mourning, though it rise from love,
Helps not the mourned, yet hurts them that mourn.

JANE. For God's sake, leave me.

HAM. Whither dost thou turn? [100
Forget the defa[d], love them that are alive;
His love is faded, try how mine will thrive.

JANE. 'T is now no time for me to think on love.

HAM. 'T is now best time for you to think on love,
Because your love lives not.

JANE. Though he be dead,
My love to him shall not be buried;
For God's sake, leave me to myself alone.

HAM. 'T would kill my soul, to leave thee drown'd in moan.

Answer me to my suit, and I am gone;
Say to me yea or no.

JANE. No.

HAM. Then farewell! — [110
One farewell will not serve; I come again.
Come dry these wet cheeks; tell me, faith,
sweet Jane,
Yea or no, once more.

JANE. Once more I say no;
Once more begone, I pray; else will I go.

HAM. Nay, then I will grow rude, by this white hand,
Until you change that cold "no"; here I'll stand
Till by your hard heart —

JANE. Nay, for God's love, peace!
My sorrows by your presence more increase.
Not that you thus are present, but all grief
Desires to be alone; therefore in brief 120
Thus much I say, and saying bid adieu:
If ever I wed man, it shall be you.

HAM. O blessed voice! Dear Jane, I'll urge no more;
Thy breath hath made me rich.

JANE. Death makes me poor.
Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>6</sup>

Enter HODGE, at his shop-board, RALPH, FIRK, [LACY as] HANS, and a Boy, at work.

ALL. Hey, down a down, down derry.

HODGE. Well said, my hearts; ply your work to-day; we loit' red yesterday; to it pell-mell, that we may live to be lord mayors, or aldermen at least.

FIRK. Hey, down a down, derry.

HODGE. Well said, i' faith! How say'st thou, Hans, doth not Firck tickle it?

HANS. Yaw, mester.

FIRK. Not so neither, my organ-pipe [10
squeaks this morning for want of liquoring.
Hey, down a down, derry!

HANS. Forwar[e], Firck, tow best un jolly youngster. Hort 'ee, mester; ic bid yo cut me un pair vampres <sup>8</sup> vor Mester Jeffre's boots.

HODGE. Thou shalt, Hans.

FIRK. Master!

HODGE. How now, boy?

FIRK. Pray, now you are in the cutting vein, cut me out a pair of counterfeits, <sup>9</sup> or else [20 my work will not pass current; hey, down a down!

<sup>9</sup> I.e., patterns; "counterfeits" is used for the sake of the pun. (Kittredge.)

HODGE. Tell me, sirs, are my cousin Mistress Priscilla's shoes done?

FIRK. Your cousin? No, master; one of your aunts,<sup>10</sup> hang her; let them alone.

RALPH. I am in hand with them; she gave charge that none but I should do them for her.

FIRK. Thou do for her? Then 't will be a lame doing, and that she loves not. Ralph, [30 thou might'st have sent her to me; in faith, I would have yark'd and firkd'd your Priscilla. Hey, down a down, derry. This gear will not hold.

HODGE. How say'st thou, Firke, were we not merry at Old Ford?

FIRK. How, merry! Why, our buttocks went jiggy-joggy like a quagmire. Well, Sir Roger Oatmeal, if I thought all meal of that nature, I would eat nothing but bag- [40 puddings.

RALPH. Of all good fortunes my fellow Hans had the best.

FIRK. 'T is true, because Mistress Rose drank to him.

HODGE. Well, well, work apace. They say seven of the aldermen be dead, or very sick.

FIRK. I care not; I'll be none.

RALPH. No, nor I; but then my Master Eyre will come quickly to be lord mayor. 50

Enter SYBIL.

FIRK. Whoop, yonder comes Sybil.

HODGE. Sybil, welcome, i' faith; and how dost thou, mad wench?

FIRK. Syb, where, welcome to London.

SYBIL. Godamercy, sweet Firke; good Lord, Hodge, what a delicious shop you have got! You tickle it, i' faith.

RALPH. Godamercy, Sybil, for our good cheer at Old Ford.

SYBIL. That you shall have, Ralph. 60

FIRK. Nay, by the mass, we had tickling cheer, Sybil; and how the plague dost thou and Mistress Rose and my Lord Mayor? — I put the women in first.

SYBIL. Well, Godamercy; but God's me, I forget myself, where's Hans the Fleming?

FIRK. Hark, butter-box, now you must yelp out some spreken.

HANS. Wat begaie [y]ou? Vat vod [y]ou, Frister? <sup>70</sup>

SYBIL. Marry, you must come to my young mistress, to pull on her shoes you made last.

HANS. Vare ben your [edle]<sup>12</sup> fro, vare ben your mistris?

SYBIL. Marry, here at our London house in [Cornhill.] <sup>13</sup>

FIRK. Will nobody serve her turn but Hans?

SYBIL. No, sir. — Come, Hans, I stand upon needles. 80

HODGE. Why then, Sybil, take heed of pricking.

SYBIL. For that let me alone. I have a trick in my budget. Come, Hans.

HANS. Yaw, yaw, ic sall meete yo gane.<sup>14</sup>

Exeunt HANS and SYBIL.

HODGE. Go, Hans, make haste again. — Come, who lacks work?

FIRK. I, Master, for I lack my breakfast; 't is munching-time, and past.

HODGE. Is't so? — Why, then leave [90 work, Ralph. — To breakfast! — Boy, look to the tools. — Come, Ralph; come, Firke.

Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>15</sup>

Enter a Serving Man.

SERV. Let me see now, the sign of the Last in Tower Street. Mass, yonder's the house. What, haw! Who's within?

Enter RALPH

RALPH. Who calls there? What want you, sir?

SERV. Marry, I would have a pair of shoes made for a gentlewoman against to-morrow morning. What, can you do them?

RALPH. Yes, sir, you shall have them. But what length's her foot? 10

SERV. Why you must make them in all parts like this shoe; but, at any hand, fail not to do them, for the gentlewoman is to be married very early in the morning.

RALPH. How? by this shoe must it be made? By this? Are you sure, sir, by this?

SERV. How, by this? am I sure, by this? — Art thou in thy wits? I tell thee, I must have a pair of shoes — dost thou mark me? A pair of shoes, two shoes, made by this very shoe, [20 this same shoe, against to-morrow morning by four a'clock. Dost understand me? Canst thou do't?

RALPH. Yes, sir, yes — I — I — I can do't. By this shoe, you say? I should know this

shoe. Yes, sir, yes, by this shoe, I can do't. Four a'clock. Well! Whither shall I bring them?

SERV. To the sign of the Golden Ball in Watling Street; inquire for one Master [30 Hammon, a gentleman, my master.

RALPH. Yea, sir; by this shoe, you say?

SERV. I say, Master Hammon at the Golden Ball; he's the bridegroom, and those shoes are for his bride.

RALPH. They shall be done by this shoe. Well, well, Master Hammon at the Golden Shoe — I would say, the Golden Ball; very well, very well. But I pray you, sir, where must Master Hammon be married? 40

SERV. At Saint Faith's Church, under Paul's.<sup>16</sup> But what's that to thee? Prithee, dispatch those shoes, and so farewell. Exit.

RALPH. By this shoe, said he. How am I amaz'd

At this strange accident! Upon my life, This was the very shoe I gave my wife, When I was press'd for France; since when, alas!

I never could hear of her. It is the same, And Hammon's bride no other but my Jane.

Enter FIRK.

FIRK. 'Snails,'<sup>17</sup> Ralph, thou hast lost [50 thy part of three pots a countryman of mine gave me to breakfast.

RALPH. I care not; I have found a better thing.

FIRK. A thing? Away! Is it a man's thing, or a woman's thing?

RALPH. FirK, dost thou know this shoe?

FIRK. No, by my troth; neither doth that know me! I have no acquaintance with it, 't is a mere stranger to me. 60

RALPH. Why, then I do; this shoe, I durst be sworn,

Once covered the instep of my Jane.

This is her size, her breadth, thus trod my love;

These true-love knots I prick'd. I hold my life,

By this old shoe I shall find out my wife.

FIRK. Ha, ha! Old shoe, that wert new! How a murrain came this ague-fit of foolishness upon thee?

RALPH. Thus, FirK: even now here came a serving man;

By this shoe would he have a new pair made [70

Against to-morrow morning for his mistress, That's to be married to a gentleman.

And why may not this be my sweet Jane?

FIRK. And why mayst not thou be my sweet ass? Ha, ha!

RALPH. Well, laugh and spare not! But the truth is this:

Against to-morrow morning I'll provide

A lusty crew of honest shoemakers,

To watch the going of the bride to church.

If she prove Jane, I'll take her in despite

From Hammon and the Devil, were he by. 80

If it be not my Jane, what remedy?

Hereof am I sure, I shall live till I die

Although I never with a woman lie.

Exit [RALPH].

FIRK. Thou lie with a woman to build nothing but Cripplegates! Well, God sends fools fortune, and it may be, he may light upon his matrimony by such a device; for wedding and hanging goes by destiny. Exit.

[SCENE IV]<sup>18</sup>

Enter [LACY as] HANS and ROSE, arm in arm.

HANS. How happy am I by embracing thee!

Oh, I did fear such cross mishaps did reign That I should never see my Rose again.

ROSE. Sweet Lacy, since fair opportunity Offers herself to further our escape, Let not too over-fond esteem of me Hinder that happy hour. Invent the means, And Rose will follow thee through all the world.

HANS. Oh, how I surfeit with excess of joy, Made happy by thy rich perfection! 10

But since thou pay'st sweet interest to my hopes,

Redoubling love on love, let me once more Like to a bold-fac'd debtor crave of thee This night to steal abroad, and at Eyre's house, Who now by death of certain aldermen Is mayor of London, and my master once, Meet thou thy Lacy, where in spite of change, Your father's anger, and mine uncle's hate, Our happy nuptials will we consummate.

Enter SYBIL.

SYBIL. O God, what will you do, mistress? Shift for yourself, your father is at hand! He's coming, he's coming! Master Lacy, hide yourself in my mistress! For God's sake, shift for yourselves!

HANS. Your father come! Sweet Rose, what shall I do?

Where shall I hide me? How shall I escape?

ROSE. A man, and want wit in extremity?
Come, come, be Hans still; play the shoemaker;

Pull on my shoe.

Enter LORD MAYOR.

HANS. Mass, and that's well rememb'ed.

SYBIL. Here comes your father. 30

HANS. Forware,<sup>19</sup> metresse, 't is un good skow; it sal vel dute,<sup>20</sup> or ye sal neit betallen.<sup>21</sup>

ROSE. O God, it pincheth me; what will you do?

HANS. [aside] Your father's presence pinch-eth, not the shoe.

LORD MAYOR. Well done; fit my daughter well, and she shall please thee well.

HANS. Yaw, yaw, ick weit<sup>22</sup> dat well; for-ware, 't is un good skoo, 't is gimait van neils leither: se ever, mine here.<sup>23</sup>

Enter a Prentice.

L. MAYOR. I do believe it. — What's the news with you? 40

PRENTICE. Please you, the Earl of Lincoln at the gate

Is newly lighted,<sup>24</sup> and would speak with you.

L. MAYOR. The Earl of Lincoln come speak with me?

Well, well, I know his errand. — Daughter
Rose,

Send hence your shoemaker; dispatch, have
done!

Syb, make things handsome! Sir Boy, follow me. Exit [with the Prentice].

HANS. Mine uncle come! Oh, what may this portend?

Sweet Rose, this of our love threatens an end.

ROSE. Be not dismay'd at this; whate'er befall, 49

Rose is thine own. To witness I speak truth,
Where thou appoints the place, I'll meet with thee.

I will not fix a day to follow thee,

But presently<sup>25</sup> steal hence. Do not reply;

Love, which gave strength to bear my father's hate,

Shall now add wings to further our escape.

Exeunt.

[SCENE V] <sup>26</sup>

Enter LORD MAYOR and [the EARL OF] LIN-COLN.

L. MAYOR. Believe me, on my credit, I speak truth:

Since first your nephew Lacy went to France
I have not seen him. It seem'd strange to me,
When Dodger told me that he stay'd behind,
Neglecting the high charge the King imposed.

LINCOLN. Trust me, Sir Roger Oateley, I did think

Your counsel had given head to this attempt,
Drawn to it by the love he bears your child.

Here I did hope to find him in your house;

But now I see mine error, and confess 10
My judgment wrong'd you by conceiving so.

L. MAYOR. Lodge in my house, say you?
Trust me, my Lord,

I love your nephew Lacy too too dearly,
So much to wrong his honor; and he hath done so,

That first gave him advice to stay from France.

To witness I speak truth, I let you know

How careful I have been to keep my daughter

Free from all conference or speech of him;

Not that I scorn your nephew, but in love

I bear your Honor, lest your noble blood 20

Should by my mean worth be dishonored.

LINCOLN. [aside] How far the churl's tongue wanders from his heart! —

Well, well, Sir Roger Oateley, I believe you,

With more than many thanks for the kind love

So much you seem to bear me. But, my Lord,

Let me request your help to seek my nephew,

Whom if I find, I'll straight embark for France.

So shall [your] <sup>27</sup> Rose be free, [my] thoughts at
rest,

And much care die which now [lies] <sup>28</sup> in my breast.

Enter SYBIL.

SYBIL. Oh Lord! Help, for God's sake! [30
My mistress; oh, my young mistress!

L. MAYOR. Where is thy mistress? What's become of her?

SYBIL. She's gone; she's fled!

L. MAYOR. Gone! Whither is she fled?

SYBIL. I know not; forsooth; she's fled out of doors with Hans the shoemaker; I saw them scud, scud, scud, apace, apace!

<sup>27</sup> Transposed with my in Qq 1, 2.

L. MAYOR. Which way? — What, John! Where be my men? — Which way? 40
SYBIL. I know not, an it please your Worship.

L. MAYOR. Fled with a shoemaker? Can this be true?

SYBIL. Oh Lord, sir, as true as God's in Heaven.

LINCOLN. Her love turn'd shoemaker? — [aside] I am glad of this.

L. MAYOR. A Fleming butter-box, a shoemaker!

Will she forget her birth, requite my care
With such ingratitude? Scorn'd she young Hammon

To love a honniken,<sup>29</sup> a needy knave?

Well, let her fly; I'll not fly after her: 50
Let her starve, if she will — she's none of mine.

LINCOLN. Be not so cruel, sir.

Enter FIRK with shoes.

SYBIL. [aside] I am glad she's scap'd.

L. MAYOR. I'll not account of her as of my child.

Was there no better object for her eyes,
But a foul drunken lubber, swill-belly,
A shoemaker? That's brave!

FIRK. Yea, forsooth; 't is a very brave shoe, and as fit as a pudding.

L. MAYOR. How now, what knave is this? 60
From whence comest thou?

FIRK. No knave, sir. I am Firk the shoemaker, lusty Roger's chief lusty journeyman, and I have come hither to take up the pretty leg of sweet Mistress Rose, and thus hoping your Worship is in as good health as I was at the making hereof, I bid you farewell, yours — Firk.

L. MAYOR. Stay, stay, Sir Knave!

LINCOLN. Come hither, shoemaker!

FIRK. 'T is happy the knave is put before the shoemaker, or else I would not have [70 vouchsafed to come back to you. I am moved, for I stir.

L. MAYOR. My Lord, this villain calls us knaves by craft.

FIRK. Then 't is by the gentle craft, and to call one knave gently, is no harm. Sit your Worship merry! Syb, your young mistress — [aside] I'll so bob<sup>30</sup> the[m], now my master, Master Eyre, is Lord Mayor of London.

L. MAYOR. Tell me, sirrah, whose man are you? 80

FIRK. I am glad to see your Worship so merry. I have no maw to this gear,<sup>31</sup> no stomach as yet to a red petticoat.

Pointing to SYBIL.

LINCOLN. He means not, sir, to woo you to his maid,

But only doth demand whose man you are.

FIRK. I sing now to the tune of Rogero.<sup>32</sup> Roger, my fellow, is now my master.

LINCOLN. Sirrah, know'st thou one Hans, a shoemaker?

FIRK. Hans, shoemaker? Oh, yes, stay, yes, I have him. I tell you what, I speak [90 it in secret: Mistress Rose and he are by this time — no, not so, but shortly are to come over one another with,<sup>33</sup> "Can you dance the shaking of the sheets?"<sup>34</sup> It is that Hans — [aside] I'll so gull these diggers!<sup>35</sup>

L. MAYOR. Know'st thou, then, where he is?

FIRK. Yes, forsooth; yea, marry!

LINCOLN. Canst thou, in sadness<sup>36</sup> —

FIRK. No, forsooth, no, marry! 100

L. MAYOR. Tell me, good honest fellow, where he is,

And thou shalt see what I'll bestow of thee.

FIRK. Honest fellow? No, sir; not so, sir; my profession is the gentle craft. I care not for seeing; I love feeling: let me feel it here; aurium tenus, ten pieces of gold; genium tenus, ten pieces of silver;<sup>37</sup> and then Firk is your man — [aside] in a new pair of stretchers.<sup>38</sup>

L. MAYOR. Here is an angel, part of thy reward, 110

Which I will give thee; tell me where he is.

FIRK. No point. Shall I betray my brother? No! Shall I prove Judas to Hans? No! Shall I cry treason to my corporation? No, I shall be firk'd and yerker'd<sup>39</sup> then. But give me your angel; your angel shall tell you.

<sup>37</sup> Aurium tenus = up to the ears; genium tenus = up to the knees. Firk pretends (punningly) that tenus means "ten" and aurium, "pieces of gold." He also alludes to the supposed fondness of shoemakers for feeling the legs of their female customers — they are not satisfied with merely seeing. (Cf. l. 105.) With that in mind, he says genium tenus (of which he and his interlocutor know the real meaning), and then pretends to translate it as "ten pieces of silver." (Kittredge.)

<sup>39</sup> Synonyms, = drubbed.

LINCOLN. Do so, good fellow ; 't is no hurt to thee.

FIRK. Send simpering Syb away.

L. MAYOR. Huswife,<sup>40</sup> get you in.
Exit SYBIL.

FIRK. Pitchers have ears, and maids have wide mouths ; but for Hans Prans,<sup>41</sup> upon [120 my word, to-morrow morning he and young Mistress Rose go to this gear : they shall be married together, by this rush, or else turn FirK to a firkin of butter, to tan leather withal.

L. MAYOR. But art thou sure of this ?

FIRK. Am I sure that Paul's steeple is a handful higher than London Stone,<sup>42</sup> or that the Pissing Conduit<sup>43</sup> leaks nothing but pure Mother Bunch ?<sup>44</sup> Am I sure I am lusty FirK ? God's nails, do you think I am so base to [130 gull you ?

LINCOLN. Where are they married ? Dost thou know the church ?

FIRK. I never go to church, but I know the name of it ; it is a swearing church — stay awhile, 't is — ay, by the mass ; no, no, — 't is, ay, by my troth ; no, nor that ; 't is — ay, by my faith : that, that, 't is, ay, By My Faith's Church under Paul's Cross. There they shall be knit like a pair of stockings in matrimony ; there they'll be inconie.<sup>45</sup> 140

LINCOLN. Upon my life, my nephew Lacy walks

In the disguise of this Dutch shoemaker.

FIRK. Yes, forsooth.

LINCOLN. Doth he not, honest fellow ?

FIRK. No, forsooth ; I think Hans is nobody but Hans, no spirit.

L. MAYOR. My mind misgives me now, 't is so, indeed.

LINCOLN. My cousin speaks the language, knows the trade.

L. MAYOR. Let me request your company, my Lord ;

<sup>44</sup> I.e., water. Mother Bunch's ale was famous, but Nashe (ed. McKerrow, I, 173, 174) calls it "slimie." By the date of our play she was probably dead (see Nashe's Works, ed. McK., IV, 103, 104, and The Weakest Goeth to the Wall, Farmer's facs., and Malone Soc. reprint, sig. Br<sup>o</sup>) ; certainly her name had become a byword. Apparently her ale had lost its reputation, and "Mother Bunch" had come to mean "very thin drink", and hence (as here) "water." (Kittredge.)

<sup>45</sup> A pretty sight.

Your honorable presence may, no doubt, 150
Refrain their headstrong rashness, when myself

Going alone perchance may be o'erborne.
Shall I request this favor ?

LINCOLN. This, or what else.

FIRK. Then you must rise betimes,<sup>46</sup> for they mean to fall to their hey-pass and repass,<sup>47</sup> pindy-pandy,<sup>48</sup> which hand will you have, very early.

L. MAYOR. My care shall every way equal their haste.

This night accept your lodging in my house ;
The earlier shall we stir, and at Saint Faith's
Prevent this giddy hare-brain'd nuptial. 161
This traffic of hot love shall yield cold gains :
They ban<sup>49</sup> our loves, and we'll forbid their banns. [Exit.]

LINCOLN. At Saint Faith's Church thou say'st ?

FIRK. Yes, by their troth.

LINCOLN. Be secret, on thy life. Exit.

FIRK. Yes, when I kiss your wife !
Ha, ha, here's no craft in the gentle craft. I came hither of purpose with shoes to Sir Roger's Worship, whilst Rose, his daughter, be cony-catch'd<sup>50</sup> by Hans. Soft now ; these two gulls will be at Saint Faith's Church to-morrow [170 morning, to take Master Bridegroom and Mistress Bride napping, and they, in the meantime, shall chop up the matter at the Savoy.<sup>51</sup> But the best sport is, Sir Roger Oateley will find my fellow lame Ralph's wife going to marry a gentleman, and then he'll stop her instead of his daughter. Oh brave ! there will be fine tickling sport. Soft now, what have I to do ? Oh, I know ; now a mess of shoemakers meet at the Woolsack<sup>52</sup> in Ivy Lane, to [180 cozen<sup>53</sup> my gentleman of lame Ralph's wife, that's true.

Alack, alack !

Girls, hold out tack !<sup>54</sup>

For now smocks for this jumbling
Shall go to wrack.

[ACT V—SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter EYRE, his wife [MARGERY], [LACY as] HANS, and ROSE.

EYRE. This is the morning, then; stay, my bully, my honest Hans, is it not?

HANS. This is the morning that must make us two

Happy or miserable; therefore, if you—

EYRE. Away with these ifs and ands, Hans, and these et caeteras! By mine honor, Rowland Lacy, none but the King shall wrong thee. Come, fear nothing, am not I Sim Eyre? Is not Sim Eyre Lord Mayor of London?—Fear nothing, Rose: let them [10 all say what they can; dainty, come thou to me—laughest thou?

MARG. Good my Lord, stand her friend in what thing you may.

EYRE. Why, my sweet Lady Madgy, think you Simon Eyre can forget his fine Dutch journeyman? No, vah! Fie, I scorn it; it shall never be cast in my teeth, that I was unthankful. Lady Madgy, thou hadst never cover'd thy Saracen's head<sup>2</sup> with this [20 French flap, nor loaden thy bum with this farthingale, ('t is trash, trumpery, vanity); Simon Eyre had never walk'd in a red petticoat, nor wore a chain of gold; but for my fine journeyman's Portuguese.—And shall I leave him? No! Prince am I none, yet bear a princely mind.

HANS. My Lord, 't is time for us to part from hence.

EYRE. Lady Madgy, Lady Madgy, take two or three of my pie-crust eaters, [30 my buff-jerkin<sup>3</sup> varlets, that do walk in black gowns at Simon Eyre's heels; take them, good Lady Madgy; trip and go, my brown queen of periwigs,<sup>4</sup> with my delicate Rose and my jolly Rowland to the Savoy; see them link'd, countenance the marriage; and when it is done, cling, cling together, you Hamborow<sup>5</sup> turtledoves. I'll bear you out: come to Simon Eyre; come, dwell with me, Hans, thou shalt eat mine d-pies and march- [40 pane.<sup>6</sup>—Rose, away, cricket; trip and go, my Lady Madgy, to the Savoy.—Hans, wed, and to bed; kiss, and away! Go, vanish!

MARG. Farewell, my Lord.

ROSE. Make haste, sweet love.

MARG. She'd fain the deed were done.

HANS. Come, my sweet Rose; faster than deer we'll run. They go out.

EYRE. Go, vanish, vanish! Avaunt, I say! By the Lord of Ludgate, it's a mad life to be a lord mayor; it's a stirring life, a fine life, a velvet life, a careful life. Well, Simon [50 Eyre, yet set a good face on it, in the honor of Saint Hugh. Soft, the King this day comes to dine with me, to see my new buildings; his Majesty is welcome: he shall have good cheer, delicate cheer, princely cheer. This day, my fellow prentices of London come to dine with me too; they shall have fine cheer, gentlemanlike cheer. I promised the mad Cappadocians,<sup>7</sup> when we all served at the Conduit together,<sup>8</sup> that if ever I came to be [60 mayor of London, I would feast them all, and I'll do 't, I'll do 't, by the life of Pharaoh; by this beard, Sim Eyre will be no flincher. Besides, I have procur'd that upon every Shrove-Tuesday, at the sound of the pancake bell, my fine dapper Assyrian lads shall clap up their shop windows, and away. This is the day, and this day they shall do 't, they shall do 't. 69

Boys, that day are you free; let masters care; And prentices shall pray for Simon Eyre. (Exit.)

[SCENE II]<sup>9</sup>

Enter HODGE, FIRK, RALPH, and five or six Shoemakers, all with cudgels or such weapons.

HODGE. Come, Ralph; stand to it, Firk. My masters, as we are the brave bloods of the shoemakers, heirs apparent to Saint Hugh, and perpetual benefactors to all good fellows, thou shalt have no wrong: were Hammon a king of spades, he should not delve in thy close without thy sufferance. But tell me, Ralph, art thou sure 't is thy wife?

RALPH. Am I sure this is Firk? This morning, when I strok'd on her shoes, [10 I look'd upon her, and she upon me, and she sighed, ask'd me if ever I knew one Ralph. Yes, said I. For his sake, said she—tears standing in her eyes—and for thou art somewhat like him, spend this piece of gold. I took it ; my lame leg and my travel beyond sea made me unknown. All is one for that ; I know she's mine.

FIRK. Did she give thee this gold ? O glorious, glittering gold ! She's thine own, [20 't is thy wife, and she loves thee ; for I'll stand to 't, there's no woman will give gold to any man, but she thinks better of him than she thinks of them she gives silver to. And for Hammon, neither Hammon nor hangman shall wrong thee in London ! Is not our old master Eyre, lord mayor ? Speak, my hearts.

ALL. Yes, and Hammon shall know it to his cost.

Enter HAMMON, his Man, JANE, and Others.

HODGE. Peace, my bullies ; yonder [30 they come.

RALPH. Stand to 't, my hearts. Firk, let me speak first.

HODGE. No, Ralph, let me. — Hammon, whither away so early ?

HAM. Unmannerly, rude slave, what's that to thee ?

FIRK. To him, sir ? Yes, sir, and to me, and others. — Good morrow, Jane, how dost thou ? Good Lord, how the world is changed with you ! God be thanked ! 40

HAM. Villains, hands off ! How dare you touch my love ?

ALL. Villains ? Down with them ! Cry clubs <sup>10</sup> for prentices !

HODGE. Hold, my hearts ! — Touch her, Hammon ? Yea, and more than that : we'll carry her away with us. — My masters and gentlemen, never draw your bird-spits ; shoe-makers are steel to the back, men every inch of them, all spirit.

ALL OF HAMMON'S SIDE. Well, and [50 what of all this ?

HODGE. I'll show you. — Jane, dost thou know this man ? 'T is Ralph, I can tell thee ; nay, 't is he in faith, though he be lam'd by the wars. Yet look not strange, but run to him, fold him about the neck and kiss him.

JANE. Lives then my husband ? O God, let me go ;

Let me embrace my Ralph.

HAM. What means my Jane ?

JANE. Nay, what meant you, to tell me he was slain ?

HAM. Pardon me, dear love, for being misled. — 60

<sup>10</sup> The apprentices' call for help from their fellows and their rallying cry.

[To RALPH] 'T was rumor'd here in London thou wert dead.

FIRK. Thou seest he lives. — Lass, go, pack home with him. —

Now, Master Hammon, where's your mistress, your wife ?

SERV. 'Swounds, Master, fight for her ! Will you thus lose her ?

ALL. Down with that creature ! Clubs ! Down with him !

HODGE. Hold, hold !

HAM. Hold, fool ! — Sirs, he shall do no wrong. —

Will my Jane leave me thus, and break her faith ? 70

FIRK. Yea, sir ! She must, sir ! She shall, sir ! What then ? Mend it !

HODGE. Hark, fellow Ralph, follow my counsel : set the wench in the midst, and let her choose her man, and let her be his woman.

JANE. Whom shall I choose ? Whom should my thoughts affect

But him whom Heaven hath made to be my love ?

Thou art my husband, and these humble weeds

Makes thee more beautiful than all his wealth. Therefore, I will but put off his attire, 80 Returning it into the owner's hand, And after ever be thy constant wife.

HODGE. Not a rag, Jane ! The law's on our side : he that sows in another man's ground forfeits his harvest. Get thee home, Ralph ; follow him, Jane ; he shall not have so much as a busk-point <sup>11</sup> from thee.

FIRK. Stand to that, Ralph ; the appurtenances are thine own. — Hammon, look not at her ! 90

SERV. Oh, swounds, no !

FIRK. Blue coat, <sup>12</sup> be quiet ; we'll give you a new livery else ; we'll make Shrove Tuesday Saint George's Day for you. — Look not, Hammon, leer not ! I'll firk you ! For thy head now, one glance, one sheep's eye, anything, at her ! Touch not a rag, lest I and my brethren beat you to clouts.

SERV. Come, Master Hammon, there's no striving here.

<sup>12</sup> Servant ; blue was the usual wear for servants. This one, however, is evidently not in blue, or there would be no point to what follows : "We'll give you a new livery of blue ;" that was the appropriate color for St. George's Day, and Firk apparently means, "We'll beat you (black and) blue."

HAM. Good fellows, hear me speak ; and,
honest Ralph, 100

Whom I have injured most by loving Jane,
Mark what I offer thee : here in fair gold
Is twenty pound ; I'll give it for thy Jane.
If this content thee not, thou shalt have more.

HODGE. Sell not thy wife, Ralph ; make her not a whore.

HAM. Say, wilt thou freely cease thy claim in her,
And let her be my wife ?

ALL. No, do not, Ralph.

RALPH. Sirrah Hammon, Hammon, dost thou think a shoemaker is so base to be a bawd to his own wife for commodity ? [110 Take thy gold ; choke with it ! Were I not lame, I would make thee eat thy words.

FIRK. A shoemaker sell his flesh and blood ?
O, indignity !

HODGE. Sirrah, take up your pelf, and be packing.

HAM. I will not touch one penny, but in lieu

Of that great wrong I offered thy Jane,
To Jane and thee I give that twenty pound.
Since I have fail'd of her, during my life, [120
I vow, no woman else shall be my wife.
Farewell, good fellows of the gentle trade :
Your morning's mirth my mourning day hath
made.

Exeunt [HAMMON and his party].

FIRK. [to the Serving Man] Touch the gold, creature, if you dare ! Y' are best be trudging.
— Here, Jane, take thou it. — Now let's home, my hearts.

HODGE. Stay ! Who comes here ? Jane, on again with thy mask !

Enter [the EARL OF] LINCOLN, LORD MAYOR, and Servants.

LINCOLN. Yonder's the lying varlet mock'd us so. 130

L. MAYOR. Come hither, sirrah !

FIRK. I, sir ? I am sirrah ? You mean me, do you not ?

LINCOLN. Where is my nephew married ?

FIRK. Is he married ? God give him joy ;
I am glad of it. They have a fair day, and the sign is in a good planet, Mars in Venus.

L. MAYOR. Villain, thou told'st me that my daughter Rose
This morning should be married at Saint Faith's ;

We have watch'd there these three hours at the least, 140

Yet see we no such thing.

FIRK. Truly, I am sorry for't ; a bride's a pretty thing.

HODGE. Come to the purpose. Yonder's
the bride and bridegroom you look for, I hope.
Though you be lords, you are not to bar by your authority men from women, are you ?

L. MAYOR. See, see, my daughter's mask'd.

LINCOLN. True, and my nephew,
To hide his guilt, counterfeits him lame.

FIRK. Yea, truly ; God help the poor [150 couple, they are lame and blind.

L. MAYOR. I'll ease her blindness.

LINCOLN. I'll his lameness cure.

FIRK. [aside to the Shoemakers] Lie down, sirs, and laugh ! My fellow Ralph is taken for Rowland Lacy, and Jane for Mistress
Damask Rose. This is all my knavery.

L. MAYOR. What, have I found you, minion ?

LINCOLN. O base wretch !

Nay, hide thy face : the horror of thy guilt Can hardly be wash'd off. Where are thy powers ? <sup>13</sup> 159

What battles have you made ? Oh, yes, I see, Thou fought'st with shame, and shame hath conquer'd thee.

This lameness will not serve.

L. MAYOR. Unmask yourself.

LINCOLN. Lead home your daughter.

L. MAYOR. Take your nephew hence.

RALPH. Hence ! Swounds, what mean you ? Are you mad ? I hope you cannot enforce my wife from me. Where's Hammon ?

L. MAYOR. Your wife ?

LINCOLN. What Hammon ?

RALPH. Yea, my wife ; and, therefore, [170 the proudest of you that lay hands on her first, I'll lay my crutch 'cross his pate.

FIRK. To him, lame Ralph ! Here's brave
sport !

RALPH. Rose call you her ? Why, her name is Jane. Look here else ; do you know her now ?

[JANE unmask's.]

LINCOLN. Is this your daughter ?

L. MAYOR. No, nor this your nephew.
My Lord of Lincoln, we are both abus'd <sup>14</sup>
By this base, crafty varlet. 180

FIRK. Yea, forsooth, no varlet ; forsooth, <sup>15</sup> no base ; forsooth, I am but mean ; no crafty neither, but of the gentle craft.

<sup>14</sup> Deceived.

L. MAYOR. Where is my daughter Rose?
Where is my child?

LINCOLN. Where is my nephew Lacy married?

FIRK. Why, here is good lac'd mutton,<sup>15</sup> as I promis'd you.

LINCOLN. Villain, I'll have thee punish'd for this wrong.

FIRK. Punish the journeyman villain, but not the journeyman shoemaker. 190

Enter DODGER.

DODGER. My Lord, I come to bring unwellcome news.

Your nephew Lacy and your daughter Rose
Early this morning wedded at the Savoy,
None being present but the Lady Mayoress.
Besides, I learnt among the officers,
The Lord Mayor vows to stand in their defence

'Gainst any that shall seek to cross the match.

LINCOLN. Dares Eyre the shoemaker uphold the deed?

FIRK. Yes, sir, shoemakers dare stand in a woman's quarrel, I warrant you, as deep [200 as another, and deeper too.

DODGER. Besides, His Grace to-day dines with the Mayor;

Who on his knees humbly intends to fall
And beg a pardon for your nephew's fault.

LINCOLN. But I'll prevent him! Come, Sir Roger Oateley;

The King will do us justice in this cause.
Howe'er their hands have made them man and wife,

I will disjoin the match, or lose my life.

Exeunt [LINCOLN, MAYOR, DODGER, and Servants.]

FIRK. Adieu, Monsieur Dodger! Farewell, fools!—Ha, ha! Oh, if they had [210 stay'd, I would have so lamb'd<sup>16</sup> them with flouts! O heart, my codpiece-point<sup>17</sup> is ready to fly in pieces every time I think upon Mistress Rose. But let that pass, as my Lady Mayoress says.

HODGE. This matter is answer'd. Come, Ralph; home with thy wife. Come, my fine shoemakers, let's to our master's the new Lord Mayor, and there swagger this Shrove

Tuesday.<sup>18</sup> I'll promise you wine enough, [220 for Madge keeps the cellar.

ALL. O rare! Madge is a good wench.

FIRK. And I'll promise you meat enough, for simp'ring Susan keeps the larder. I'll lead you to victuals, my brave soldiers; follow your captain. Oh, brave! Hark, hark!

Bell rings.

ALL. The pancake bell<sup>19</sup> rings, the pancake bell! Trilill, my hearts!

FIRK. Oh, brave! O sweet bell! O [229 delicate pancakes! Open the doors, my hearts, and shut up the windows! keep in the house, let out the pancakes! Oh, rare, my hearts! Let's march together for the honor of Saint Hugh to the great new hall<sup>20</sup> in Gracious Street corner, which our master, the new Lord Mayor, hath built.

RALPH. O the crew of good fellows that will dine at my Lord Mayor's cost to-day!

HODGE. By the Lord, my Lord Mayor [239 is a most brave man. How shall prentices be bound to pray for him and the honor of the gentlemen shoemakers! Let's feed and be fat with my Lord's bounty.

FIRK. O musical bell, still! O Hodge, O my brethren! There's cheer for the heavens: venison-pasties<sup>21</sup> walk up and down piping hot, like serjeants; beef and brewis<sup>22</sup> comes marching in dry-vats,<sup>23</sup> fritters and pancakes comes trolling<sup>24</sup> in in wheelbarrows; hens and oranges hopping in porters' baskets, [250 collops and eggs in scuttles; and tarts and custards comes quavering in in malt-shovels.

Enter more Prentices.

ALL. Whoop, look here, look here!

HODGE. How now, mad lads, whither away so fast?

1 PRENTICE. Whither? Why, to the great new hall, know you not why? The Lord Mayor hath bidden all the prentices in London to breakfast this morning. 259

ALL. O brave shoemaker, O brave lord of incomprehensible good-fellowship! Whoo! Hark you! The pancake bell rings.

<sup>19</sup> In every parish the bell was rung early on Shrove Tuesday as a reminder of shriving. Pancakes being popular as a substitute for meat, it came to be called the pancake bell, and was the signal for the beginning of the holiday merriment.

FIRK. Nay, more, my hearts! Every Shrove Tuesday is our year of jubilee; and when the pancake bell rings, we are as free as my Lord Mayor; we may shut up our shops, and make holiday; I'll have it call'd Saint Hugh's Holiday.

ALL. Agreed, agreed! Saint Hugh's Holiday. 270

HODGE. And this shall continue for ever.

ALL. Oh, brave! Come, come, my hearts! Away, away!

FIRK. Oh, eternal credit to us of the gentle craft! March fair, my hearts! Oh, rare!

Exeunt.

[SCENE III] 26

Enter [the] KING and his Train over the stage.

KING. Is our Lord Mayor of London such a gallant?

NOBLEMAN. One of the merriest madcaps in your land.

Your Grace will think, when you behold the man,

He's rather a wild ruffian than a mayor.

Yet thus much I'll ensure your Majesty,

In all his actions that concern his state 27

He is as serious, provident, and wise,

As full of gravity amongst the grave,

As any mayor hath been these many years.

KING. I am with child 28 till I behold this huffcap. 29 10

But all my doubt is, when we come in presence, His madness will be dash'd clean out of countenance.

NOBLEMAN. It may be so, my Liege.

KING. Which to prevent,

Let someone give him notice 't is our pleasure That he put on his wonted merriment. —

Set forward!

ALL. On afore! Exeunt.

[SCENE IV] 30

Enter EYRE, HODGE, FIRK, RALPH, and other Shoemakers, all with napkins on their shoulders.

EYRE. Come, my fine Hodge, my jolly gentlemen shoemakers; soft, where be these cannibals, these varlets, my officers? Let them all walk and wait upon my brethren; for my meaning is that none but shoemakers, none but the livery of my company, shall in their satin hoods wait upon the trencher of my sovereign.

FIRK. O my Lord, it will be rare!

EYRE. No more. Firk; come, lively! [10 Let your fellow prentices want no cheer; let wine be plentiful as beer, and beer as water. Hang these penny-pinching fathers, that cram wealth in innocent lamb-skins.<sup>31</sup> Rip, knaves, avaunt! Look to my guests!

HODGE. My Lord, we are at our wits' end for room; those hundred tables will not feast the fourth part of them.

EYRE. Then cover me those hundred tables again, and again, till all my jolly prentices be feasted. Avoid, Hodge! Run, Ralph! Frisk about my nimble Firk! Carouse me fathom-healths to the honor of the shoemakers. Do they drink lively, Hodge? Do they tickle it, Firk?

FIRK. Tickle it? Some of them have taken their liquor standing so long that they can stand no longer; but for meat, they would eat it an they had it.

EYRE. Want they meat? Where's [30 this swag-belly, this greasy kitchen-stuff cook? Call the varlet to me! Want meat? Firk, Hodge, lame Ralph, run, my tall men, beleaguer the shambles,<sup>32</sup> beggar all East-cheap, serve me whole oxen in chargers,<sup>33</sup> and let sheep whine upon the tables like pigs for want of good fellows to eat them. Want meat? Vanish, Firk! Avaunt, Hodge!

HODGE. Your Lordship mistakes my man Firk; he means their bellies want meat, [40 not the boards, for they have drunk so much they can eat nothing.

THE SECOND THREE-MAN'S SONG 34

(This is to be sung at the latter end.)

Cold's the wind, and wet's the rain;
Saint Hugh be our good speed;
Ill is the weather that bringeth no gain,
Nor helps good hearts in need.

Troll 35 the bowl, the jolly nut-brown bowl.
And here, kind mate, to thee;
Let's sing a dirge for Saint Hugh's soul,
And down it 36 merrily. 50

<sup>31</sup> Probably alluding to their use as parchment for recording deeds, transfers, etc.

Down a down, hey down a down,
 Hey derry derry, down a down!
(Close with the tenor boy:)
 Ho, well done; to me let come!
 Ring compass, gentle joy.<sup>37</sup>

Troll the bowl, the nut-brown bowl,
 And here, kind, etc. [Repeat] as often as there be men to drink; at last, when all have drunk, this verse:

Cold's the wind, and wet's the rain;
 Saint Hugh be our good speed;
 Ill is the weather that bringeth no gain,
 Nor helps good hearts in need. 60

Enter [LACY as] HANS, ROSE, and wife [MARGERY.]

MARG. Where is my Lord?

EYRE. How now, Lady Madgy?

MARG. The King's most excellent Majesty is new come; he sends me for thy Honor;
 one of his most worshipful peers bade me tell thou must be merry, and so forth; but let that pass.

EYRE. Is my sovereign come? Vanish, my tall shoemakers, my nimble brethren;
 look to my guests, the prentices. Yet stay [70 a little! How now, Hans? How looks my little Rose?

HANS. Let me request you to remember me.
 I know your Honor easily may obtain
 Free pardon of the King for me and Rose,
 And reconcile me to my uncle's grace.

EYRE. Have done, my good Hans, my honest journeyman; look cheerily! I'll fall upon both my knees, till they be as hard as horn, but I'll get thy pardon. 80

MARG. Good my Lord, have a care what you speak to his Grace.

EYRE. Away, you Islington whitepot!<sup>38</sup> hence, you h[o]pper<sup>39</sup> arse! hence, you barley-pudding, full of maggots! you broiled carbonado!<sup>40</sup> avaunt, avaunt, avoid, Mephistophilus! Shall Sim Eyre [learn]<sup>41</sup> to speak of you, Lady Madgy? Vanish, Mother Miniver<sup>42</sup> cap; vanish, go, trip and go; meddle with your partlets<sup>43</sup> and your pish- [90
 ery-pashery, your flews<sup>44</sup> and your whirligigs; go, rub,<sup>45</sup> out of mine alley! Sim Eyre knows drinks go round. (Kittredge.)

 to Tamburlaine, an he were here; and shall I melt, shall I droop before my sovereign?
 No, come, my Lady Madgy! Follow me,
 Hans! About your business, my frolic freebooters! Firk, frisk about, and about, and about, for the honor of mad Simon Eyre, Lord
 Mayor of London. 100

FIRK. Hey, for the honor of the shoe-makers! Exeunt.

[SCENE V] <sup>47</sup>

A long flourish or two. Enter [the] KING, Nobles, EYRE, his wife [MARGERY], LACY, [and] ROSE. LACY and ROSE kneel.

KING. Well, Lacy, though the fact was very foul

Of your revolting from our kingly love
 And your own duty, yet we pardon you.
 Rise both, and, Mistress Lacy, thank my Lord
 Mayor

For your young bridegroom here.

EYRE. So, my dear Liege, Sim Eyre and my brethren, the gentlemen shoemakers, shall set your sweet Majesty's image cheek by jowl by Saint Hugh for this honor you have done poor Simon Eyre. I beseech your Grace, [10 pardon my rude behavior; I am a handicrafts-man, yet my heart is without craft; I would be sorry at my soul, that my boldness should offend my King.

KING. Nay, I pray thee, good Lord Mayor, be even as merry

As if thou wert among thy shoemakers;
 It does me good to see thee in this humor.

EYRE. Say'st thou me so, my sweet Dioclesian?<sup>48</sup> Then, hump!<sup>49</sup> Prince am I none, yet am I princely born. By the Lord of [20
 Ludgate, my liege, I'll be as merry as a pie.<sup>50</sup>

KING. Tell me, in faith, mad Eyre, how old thou art.

EYRE. My Liege, a very boy, a stripling, a younker; you see not a white hair on my head, not a gray in this beard. Every hair, I assure thy Majesty, that sticks in this beard, Sim Eyre values at the King of Babylon's ransom;
 Tama[r] Cham's<sup>51</sup> beard was a rubbing-brush

Soliman and Perseda, attributed by some to Kyd.

 Dekker's mention of him here.

to 't: yet I'll shave it off, and stuff tennis-balls with it, to please my bully King. 30

KING. But all this while I do not know your age.

EYRE. My Liege, I am six-and-fifty year old, yet I can cry hump! with a sound heart for the honor of Saint Hugh. Mark this old wench, my King: I danc'd the shaking of the sheets with her six-and-thirty years ago, and yet I hope to get two or three young lord mayors, ere I die. I am lusty still, Sim Eyre still. Care and cold lodging brings white hairs. My sweet Majesty, let care van- [40 ish; cast it upon thy nobles; it will make thee look always young like Apollo, and cry hump! Prince am I none, yet am I princely born.

KING. Ha, ha! Say, Cornwall, didst thou ever see his like?

NOBLEMAN. Not I, my Lord.

Enter [the EARL OF] LINCOLN and [the former] LORD MAYOR.

KING. Lincoln, what news with you?

LINCOLN. My gracious Lord, have care unto yourself,

For there are traitors here.

ALL. Traitors? Where? Who?

EYRE. Traitors in my house? God forbid! Where be my officers? I'll spend my soul, ere my King feel harm. 51

KING. Where is the traitor, Lincoln?

LINCOLN. Here he stands.

KING. Cornwall, lay hold on Lacy!—Lincoln, speak,

What canst thou lay unto thy nephew's charge?

LINCOLN. This, my dear Liege: your Grace, to do me honor, Heap'd on the head of this degenerate <sup>82</sup> boy Desertless <sup>83</sup> favors; you made choice of him To be commander over powers in France.

But he——

KING. Good Lincoln, prithee, pause awhile!

Even in thine eyes I read what thou wouldst speak. 60

I know how Lacy did neglect our love, Ran himself deeply, in the highest degree, Into vile treason.

LINCOLN. Is he not a traitor?

KING. Lincoln, he was; now have we pard'ned him.

'T was not a base want of true valor's fire, That held him out of France, but love's desire.

LINCOLN. I will not bear his shame upon my back.

KING. Nor shalt thou, Lincoln; I forgive you both.

LINCOLN. Then, good my Liege, forbid the boy to wed

One whose mean birth will much disgrace his bed. 70

KING. Are they not married?

LINCOLN. No, my Liege.

BOTH.

We are.

KING. Shall I divorce them then? Oh, be it far

That any hand on earth should dare untie The sacred knot, knit by God's Majesty; I would not for my crown disjoin their hands

That are conjoin'd in holy nuptial bands.

How say'st thou, Lacy, wouldst thou lose thy Rose?

LACY. Not for all [India's] <sup>84</sup> wealth, my Sovereign.

KING. But Rose, I am sure, her Lacy would forego.

ROSE. If Rose were ask'd that question, she'd say no. 80

KING. You hear them, Lincoln.

LINCOLN. Yea, my Liege, I do.

KING. Yet canst thou find i' th' heart to part these two?

Who seeks, besides you, to divorce these lovers?

L. MAYOR. I do, my gracious Lord; I am her father.

KING. Sir Roger Oateley, our last mayor, I think?

NOBLEMAN. The same, my Liege.

KING. Would you offend Love's laws? Well, you shall have your wills; you sue to me, To prohibit the match. Soft, let me see—You both are married, Lacy, art thou not?

LACY. I am, dread Sovereign.

KING. Then, upon thy life, [90 I charge thee, not to call this woman wife.

L. MAYOR. I thank your Grace.

ROSE. O my most gracious Lord!

Kneel.

KING. Nay, Rose, never woo me; I tell you true,

Although as yet I am a bachelor, Yet I believe I shall not marry you.

<sup>84</sup> Old eds. Indians.

ROSE. Can you divide the body from the soul,
Yet make the body live?

KING. Yea, so profound?
I cannot, Rose; but you I must divide. —
This <sup>56</sup> fair maid, bridegroom, cannot be your
bride. —

Are you pleas'd, Lincoln? — Oateley. are you
pleas'd? 100

BOTH. Yes, my Lord.

KING. Then must my heart be eas'd;
For, credit me, my conscience lives in pain,
Till these whom I divorce'd, be join'd again.
Lacy, give me thy hand; Rose, lend me thine!
Be what you would be! Kiss now! So, that's fine.

At night, lovers, to bed! — Now, let me see,
Which of you all mislikes this harmony.

L. MAYOR. Will you then take from me my child perforce?

KING. Why tell me, Oateley: shines not Lacy's name 109
As bright in the world's eye as the gay beams
Of any citizen?

LINCOLN. Yea, but, my gracious Lord,
I do mislike the match far more than he;
Her blood is too too base.

KING. Lincoln, no more.
Dost thou not know that love respects no
blood,

Cares not for difference of birth or state?
The maid is young, well born, fair, virtuous,
A worthy bride for any gentleman.
Besides, your nephew for her sake did stoop
To bare necessity, and, as I hear, 119
Forgetting honors and all courtly pleasures,
To gain her love, became a shoemaker.

As for the honor which he lost in France,
Thus I redeem it: Lacy, kneel thee down! —
Arise, Sir Rowland Lacy! Tell me now,
Tell me in earnest, Oateley, canst thou chide,
Seeing thy Rose a lady and a bride?

L. MAYOR. I am content with what your Grace hath done.

LINCOLN. And I, my Liege, since there's no remedy.

KING. Come on, then, all shake hands:
I'll have you friends;
Where there is much love, all discord ends. [130
What says my mad Lord Mayor to all this
love?

EYRE. O my Liege, this honor you have done to my fine journeyman here, Rowland

<sup>56</sup> In old eds. this is transposed to follow "maid."
(Cor. Fritsche.)

Lacy, and all these favors which you have shown to me this day in my poor house, will make Simon Eyre live longer by one dozen of warm summers more than he should.

KING. Nay, my mad Lord Mayor, (that shall be thy name;)

If any grace of mine can length thy life,
One honor more I'll do thee: that new building, 140

Which at thy cost in Cornhill is erected,
Shall take a name from us; we'll have it call'd

The Leadenhall, because in digging it
You found the lead that covereth the same.<sup>56</sup>

EYRE. I thank your Majesty.

MARG. God bless your Grace!

KING. Lincoln, a word with you!

Enter HODGE, FIRK, RALPH, and more Shoe-makers.

EYRE. How now, my mad knaves? Peace, speak softly, yonder is the King.

KING. With the old troop which there we keep in pay,

We will incorporate a new supply. 150
Before one summer more pass o'er my head,
France shall repent England was injured. —
What are all those?

LACY. All shoemakers, my Liege,
Sometimes <sup>57</sup> my fellows; in their companies
I liv'd as merry as an emperor.

KING. My mad Lord Mayor, are all these shoemakers?

EYRE. All shoemakers, my Liege; all gentlemen of the gentle craft, true Trojans, courageous cordwainers; they all kneel to the shrine of holy Saint Hugh. 160

ALL. God save your Majesty! all shoemaker[s]! <sup>58</sup>

KING. Mad Simon, would they anything with us?

EYRE. Mum, mad knaves! Not a word!
I'll do't; I warrant you. — They are all beggars, my Liege; all for themselves, and I for them all on both my knees do entreat that for the honor of poor Simon Eyre and the good of his brethren, these mad knaves, your Grace would vouchsafe some privilege to [170 my new Leadenhall, that it may be lawful

<sup>56</sup> The name actually long antedates the historical Eyre's erection of a public granary in 1419.

for us to buy and sell leather <sup>59</sup> there two days a week.

KING. Mad Sim, I grant your suit; you shall have patent
To hold two market days in Leadenhall,
Mondays and Fridays, those shall be the times.

Will this content you?

ALL. Jesus bless your Grace!

EYRE. In the name of these my poor brethren shoemakers, I most humbly thank your Grace. But before I rise, seeing [180 you are in the giving vein and we in the begging, grant Sim Eyre one boon more.

KING. What is it, my Lord Mayor?

EYRE. Vouchsafe to taste of a poor banquet that stands sweetly waiting for your sweet presence.

KING. I shall undo <sup>60</sup> thee, Eyre, only with feasts;
Already have I been too troublesome;
Say, have I not?

EYRE. O my dear King, Sim Eyre was [190 taken unawares upon a day of shroving,<sup>61</sup>

<sup>59</sup> Leadenhall as a leather market was an Elizabethan institution; the historical Eyre was in fact not a shoemaker at all, but (according to Stowe's Survey) a draper.

which I promis'd long ago to the prentices of London. For, an't please your Highness, in time past, I bare the water-tankard, and my coat sits not a whit the worse upon my back; and then, upon a morning, some mad boys — it was Shrove Tuesday, even as't is now — gave me my breakfast, and I swore then by the stopple of my tankard, if ever I came to be Lord Mayor of London, I would feast all [200 the prentices. This day, my Liege, I did it, and the slaves had an hundred tables five times covered; they are gone home and vanish'd.

Yet add more honor to the gentle trade:

Taste of Eyre's banquet, Simon's happy made.

KING. Eyre, I will taste of thy banquet, and will say

I have not met more pleasure on a day. —

Friends of the gentle craft, thanks to you all;

Thanks, my kind Lady May'ress, for our cheer. — 210

Come, lords, awhile let's revel it at home!

When all our sports and banquetings are done,
Wars must right wrongs which Frenchmen have begun.

Exeunt.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

THE second part of this play is Dekker's masterpiece. A payment recorded by Henslowe in behalf of Prince Henry's Men early in 1604 fixes the date of Part I and also indicates that Thomas Middleton was co-author, though his share is generally believed to be slight. Part II was doubtless written fairly soon after by Dekker alone.

No source for the plot is known; it belongs to the realistic intrigue type of which Middleton is a brilliant exponent. His influence, however, hardly went deeper. It is in response to the dictates of his own maturing genius, and possibly in conscious harmony with the changing temper of the Jacobean era, that Dekker strikes a deeper chord in The Honest Whore. The subplot of humors is perhaps not entirely a concession to the groundlings. The patience of Candido affords a comic parallel to the fortitude of Bellafront; and it is likely that Dekker, thoroughly middle-class in his loyalties, saw this sturdy citizen not only as a figure of fun but also as a bright exemplar of homely virtue.

It is, of course, the main plot that dignifies the play for us. In the five years since The Shoemakers' Holiday the dramatist's experience with life has deepened his art; now he comes more closely to grips with both. This is a soberer, less romantic Dekker, still the virtuoso of the City, still capable of Dickensian humor; but wiser, more critical, a half-disillusioned idealist, a thoughtful observer conscious of his power to penetrate far below the surface of life, an artist sure of every mordant stroke, but still too tender-hearted to be, like Jonson, austere just to his characters at the end, or, like Middleton, to rest merely amused by the spectacle of simpering folly or of vice triumphant. Pity is strangely mixed with irony in this play. The portrait, so terrible and so comic, of Matheo might have been done by either of the great Jacobean masters of realistic comedy; but the portrait of Orlando Friscobaldo, with its whimsy and its heartache, could have been painted by no other than Thomas Dekker. For at his best moments he is one of the greatest of them all; no failure, not even Marlowe's, is sadder than his. The great moments are all too few; and Dekker, though he lived for a quarter of a century after he wrote The Honest Whore, led the miserable existence of a hack, always dogged by debt and sometimes imprisoned for it, and lending his genius out in collaboration with a dozen dramatists who were no such poets at heart as he.

Part I of The Honest Whore was published in 1604 (reprinted n.d., 1605, 1615, 1616, and 1635); Part II was apparently not printed till 1630, though it was entered in the Stationers' Register in 1608. The most useful annotated edition appears in volume III of Dyce's Middleton. The present text is based on the first edition of each part, with, in the case of Part I, a number of corrections from Q 1605 (as cited by Dyce and the Pearson editor) and the undated Quarto. (The Editor has not seen copies of Qq 1605 and 1615.) Q n.d. was printed in part from the same setting of types as Q<sub>1</sub> (1604), but only in part. Its variant readings agree with Dyce's and the Pearson citations from Q 1605. While inferior at many points to Q<sub>1</sub>, it makes a number of further corrections (see, e.g., on I, v, 264, and on II, i, 154), not mentioned in the Pearson notes nor reproduced in the Pearson text, which is based on Q 1605. The Editor became aware of the importance of Q n.d. in time to incorporate the corrections of the Folger copy in proofs of the present text, but not in time to secure photographs of Q 1605 and determine its precise relation to that edition. The Folger copy of Q n.d. lacks leaves A 1 (with title page), I 3, and K 1-4. Its running title, which varies in spelling and typography, is The Converted Courtesan. In the footnotes to the present text "Q<sub>1</sub>" = Q 1604, and "Q<sub>2</sub>" = Q 1605.

ACT I — SCENE I<sup>3</sup>

Enter at one door a funeral, a coronet lying on the hearse, scutcheons and garlands hanging on the sides, attended by GASPARO TREBATZI Duke of Milan, CASTRUCHIO, SINEZI, PIORATTO, FLUELLO, and others. At another door enter HIPPOLITO, in discontented appearance, [and] MATHEO, a gentleman, his friend, laboring to hold him back.

DUKE. Behold, yon comet shows his head again!

Twice hath he thus at cross-turns thrown on us

Prodigious looks; twice hath he troubled The waters of our eyes. See, he's turn'd wild. Go on, in God's name.

ALL. On afore there, ho!

DUKE. Kinsmen and friends, take from your manly sides

Your weapons to keep back the desp'rate boy From doing violence to the innocent dead.

HIP. I prithee, dear Matheo —

<sup>2</sup> So Q n.d., throughout. The other old eds. seen by the Editor, and Pearson, usually Poh, but occasionally Poh.

<sup>3</sup> A street in Milan.

MAT. Come, y' are mad!

HIP. I do arrest thee, murderer! Set down, 10

Villains, set down that sorrow; 't is all mine.

DUKE. I do beseech you all, for my blood's sake

Send hence your milder spirits, and let wrath Join in confederacy with your weapons' points; If he proceed to vex us, let your swords Seek out his bowels: funeral grief loathes words.

ALL. Set on.

HIP. Set down the body!

MAT. O my Lord!

Y' are wrong! I' th' open street? You see she's dead.

HIP. I know she is not dead.

DUKE. Frantic young man, Wilt thou believe these gentlemen? — Pray speak. — 20

Thou dost abuse my child, and mock'st the tears

That here are shed for her. If to behold Those roses withered that set out 'her cheeks, That pair of stars that gave her body light Dark'ned and dim for ever, all those rivers <sup>4</sup> Set off, adorned.

That fed her veins with warm and crimson streams

Frozen and dried up : if these be signs of death,
Then is she dead. Thou unreligious youth,
Art not asham'd to empty all these eyes
Of funeral tears, a debt due to the dead, 30
As mirth is to the living? Sham'st thou not

To have them stare on thee? Hark, thou art curs'd

Even to thy face, by those that scarce can speak.

HIP. My Lord —

DUKE. What wouldst thou have? Is she not dead?

HIP. Oh, you ha' kill'd her by your cruelty.

DUKE. Admit I had, thou kill'st her now again,

And art more savage than a barbarous Moor.

HIP. Let me but kiss her pale and bloodless lip.

DUKE. O fie, fie, fie!

HIP. Or if not touch her, let me look on her.

MAT. As you regard your honor —

HIP. Honor? smoke! [41

MAT. Or if you lov'd her living, spare her now.

DUKE. Ay, well done, sir; you play the gentleman. —

[to the Attendants] Steal hence; — [to MATHEO] 't is nobly done; — [to the Attendants] away; — [to MATHEO] I'll join

My force to yours, to stop this violent torment.<sup>5</sup> —

[to the Attendants] Pass on.

Exeunt, with funeral, [all except the DUKE, HIPPOLITO, and MATHEO].

HIP. Matheo, thou dost wound me more.

MAT. I give you physic,<sup>6</sup> noble friend, not wounds.

DUKE. Oh, well said, well done, a true gentleman!

Alack, I know the sea of lovers' rage
Comes rushing with so strong a tide, it beats [50
And bears down all respects<sup>7</sup> of life, of honor,
Of friends, of foes. Forget her, gallant youth.

HIP. Forget her?

DUKE. Nay, nay, be but patient;
For why<sup>8</sup> death's hand hath sued a strict divorce

'Twixt her and thee. What's beauty but a course?

What but fair sand-dust are earth's purest forms?

Queen's bodies are but trunks to put in worms.

MAT. Speak no more sentences,<sup>9</sup> my good Lord, but slip hence; you see they are but fits; I'll rule him, I warrant ye. Ay, so; tread [60 gingerly; your Grace is here somewhat too long already. [Exit DUKE.] — 'Sblood, the jest were now, if, having ta'en some knocks o' th' pate already, he should get loose again, and like a mad ox, toss my new black cloaks<sup>10</sup> into the kennel.<sup>11</sup> I must humour his Lordship. — My Lord Hippolito, is it in your stomach<sup>12</sup> to go to dinner?

HIP. Where is the body?

MAT. The body, as the Duke spake very [70 wisely, is gone to be worm'd.

HIP. I cannot rest; I'll meet it at next turn.

I'll see how my love looks.

MATHEO holds him in's arms.

MAT. How your love looks? worse than a scarecrow. Wrastle not with me; the great fellow gives the fall for a ducat.

HIP. I shall forget myself.

MAT. Pray, do so; leave yourself behind yourself, and go whither you will. 'Sfoot, do you long to have base rogues, that maintain [80 a Saint Anthony's fire<sup>13</sup> in their noses by nothing but twopenny ale, make ballads of you? If the Duke had but so much mettle in him as is in a cobbler's awl, he would ha' been a vex'd thing; he and his train had blown you up, but that their powder has taken the wet of cowards. You'll bleed three pottles of Ali- [c]lant,<sup>14</sup> by this light, if you follow 'em; and then we shall have a hole made in a wrong place, to have surgeons roll thee up like a [90 baby in swaddling clouts.

HIP. What day is to-day, Matheo?

MAT. Yea, marry, this is an easy question; why to-day is — let me see — Thursday.

HIP. Oh, Thursday.

MAT. Here's a coil<sup>15</sup> for a dead commodity. — 'Sfoot, women when they are alive are but dead commodities, for you shall have one woman lie upon many men's hands.

HIP. She died on Monday then. 100

MAT. And that's the most villainous day of all the week to die in; and she was well, and ate a mess of water-gruel on Monday morning.

<sup>15</sup> Commotion.

HIP. Ay; it cannot be
Such a bright taper should burn out so soon.

MAT. O yes, my Lord. So soon? Why, I ha' known them that at dinner have been as well, and had so much health that they were glad to pledge it, yet before three a'clock have been found dead — drunk. 110

HIP. On Thursday buried! and on Monday died!

Quick haste, byrlady.<sup>16</sup> Sure her winding sheet

Was laid out 'fore her body; and the worms
That now must feast with her were even bespoke,

And solemnly invited like strange guests.

MAT. Strange feeders they are indeed, my Lord, and, like your jester, or young courtier, will enter upon any man's trencher without bidding.

HIP. Curs'd be that day for ever that robb'd her 120

Of breath, and me of bliss! Henceforth let it
stand

Within the wizard's book, the calendar,
Mark'd with a marginal finger,<sup>17</sup> to be chosen
By thieves, by villains, and black murderers,
As the best day for them to labor in.

If henceforth this adulterous, bawdy world
Be got with child with treason, sacrilege, Atheism, rapes, treacherous friendship, perjury,

Slander (the beggar's sin), lies (sin of fools),
Or any other damn'd impieties, 130
On Monday let 'em be delivered.

I swear to thee, Matheo, by my soul,
Hereafter weekly on that day I'll glue Mine eyelids down, because they shall not gaze

On any female cheek. And being lock'd up
In my close<sup>18</sup> chamber, there I'll meditate
On nothing but my Infeliche's end,
Or on a dead man's skull draw out mine own.

MAT. You'll do all these good works now every Monday, because it is so bad; but [140
I hope upon Tuesday morning I shall take you with a wench.

HIP. If ever, whilst frail<sup>19</sup> blood through my veins run,
On woman's beams<sup>20</sup> I throw affection,

Save her that's dead; or that<sup>21</sup> I loosely fly
To th' shore of any other wafting eye,
Let me not prosper, Heaven! I will be true,
Even to her dust and ashes. Could her tomb
Stand whilst I liv'd, so long that it might rot,
That should fall down, but she be ne'er forgot.

MAT. If you have this strange monster, honesty,<sup>22</sup> in your belly, why so jig-makers<sup>23</sup> and chroniclers shall pick something out of [153
you; but an I smell not you and a bawdyhouse out within these ten days, let my nose be as big as an English bag-pudding.<sup>24</sup> I'll follow your Lordship, though it be to the place aforenamed. Exeunt.

[SCENE II]<sup>25</sup>

Enter FUSTIGO in some fantastic sea-suit at one door; a Porter meets him at another.

FUS. How now, porter, will she come?

POR. If I may trust a woman, sir, she will come.

FUS. [giving money] There's for thy pains.
Godamercy, if I ever stand in need of a wench that will come with a wet finger,<sup>26</sup> porter, thou shalt earn my money before any clarissimo<sup>27</sup> in Milan; yet, so God sa' <sup>28</sup> me, she's mine own sister, body and soul, as I am a Christian gentleman. Farewell; I'll ponder till she [10 come. Thou hast been no bawd in fetching this woman. I assure thee.

POR. No matter if I had, sir; better men than porters are bawds.

FUS. O God, sir, many that have borne offices. But, porter, art sure thou went'st into a true<sup>29</sup> house?

POR. I think so, for I met with no thieves.
FUS. Nay, but art sure it was my sister
Viola? 20

POR. I am sure, by all superscriptions, it was the party you ciphered.

FUS. Not very tall?

POR. Nor very low; a middling woman.

FUS. 'T was she, 'faith 't was she. A pretty plump cheek, like mine?

POR. At a blush,<sup>30</sup> a little very much like
you.

<sup>29</sup> I.e., the right one; the porter, however, takes true in the sense of honest.

<sup>16</sup> By Our Lady.

<sup>17</sup> The pointing hand "on the margins of old books to direct the reader's attention to particular passages." (Dyce.)

Fus. Godso, I would not for a ducat she had kick'd up her heels,<sup>31</sup> for I ha' spent an [30] abomination<sup>32</sup> this voyage; marry, I did it amongst sailors and gentlemen. There's a little modicum more, porter, for making thee stay; farewell, honest porter.

Por. I am in your debt, sir; God preserve you.

Exit.

Enter VIOLA.

Fus. Not so, neither, good porter. — God's lid, yonder she comes. — Sister Viola, I am glad to see you stirring. It's news to have me here, is't not, Sister? 40

Vio. Yes, trust me. I wond' red who should be so bold to send for me. You are welcome to Milan, Brother.

Fus. Troth, Sister, I heard you were married to a very rich chuff,<sup>33</sup> and I was very sorry for it, that I had no better clothes, and that made me send; for you know we Milaners love to strut upon Spanish leather. And how does all our friends?

Vio. Very well. You ha' travelled enough now, I trow, to sow your wild oats. 51

Fus. A pox on 'em! Wild oats? I ha' not an oat to throw at a horse. Troth, Sister, I ha' sow'd my oats, and reap'd two hundred ducats, if I had 'em here. Marry, I must entreat you to lend me some thirty or forty till the ship come. By this hand, I'll discharge<sup>34</sup> at my day, by this hand.

Vio. These are your old oaths.

Fus. Why, Sister, do you think I'll [60] forswear my hand?

Vio. Well, well, you shall have them. Put yourself into better fashion, because I must employ you in a serious matter.

Fus. I'll sweat like a horse if I like the matter.

Vio. You ha' cast off all your old swaggering humors?

Fus. I had not sail'd a league in that great fishpond, the sea, but I cast up my very gall.

Vio. I am the more sorry, for I must em- [71] ploy a true swaggerer.

Fus. Nay by this iron, Sister, they shall find I am powder and touch-box,<sup>35</sup> if they put fire once into me.

Vio. Then lend me your ears.

Fus. Mine ears are yours, dear Sister.

<sup>35</sup> Box for touch (priming) powder, carried by musketeers.

Vio. I am married to a man that has wealth enough, and wit enough.

Fus. A linen-draper, I was told, Sister. [80]

Vio. Very true, a grave citizen; I want nothing that a wife can wish from a husband. But here's the spite: he has not all things belonging to a man.

Fus. God's my life, he's a very mandrake,<sup>36</sup> or else (God bless us) one a' these whiblinks,<sup>37</sup> and that's worse; and then all the children that he gets lawfully of your body, Sister, are bastards by a statute.

Vio. O, you run over me too fast, Brother; I have heard it often said, that he who can- [91] not be angry is no man. I am sure my husband is a man in print,<sup>38</sup> for all things else save only in this: no tempest can move him.

Fus. 'Slid, would he had been at sea with us. He should ha' been mov'd, and mov'd again, for I'll be sworn, la, our drunken ship reel'd like a Dutchman.

Vio. No loss of goods can increase in him a wrinkle, no crabbed language make his [100] countenance sour, the stubbornness of no servant shake him; he has no more gall in him than a dove, no more sting than an ant; musician will he never be (yet I find much music in him), but he loves no frets,<sup>39</sup> and is so free from anger that many times I am ready to bite off my tongue, because it wants that virtue which all women's tongues have — to anger their husbands. Brother, mine can by no thunder turn him into a sharpness. 110

Fus. Belike his blood, Sister, is well brew'd then.

Vio. I protest to thee, Fustigo, I love him most affectionately; but I know not — I ha' such a tickling within me — such a strange longing; nay verily I do long.

Fus. Then y' are with child, Sister, by all signs and tokens; nay, I am partly a physician, and partly something else. I ha' read Albertus Magnus<sup>40</sup> and Aristotle's Emblems.<sup>41</sup>

Vio. Y' are wide a' th' bow hand<sup>42</sup> still, [121]

<sup>36</sup> The root of which was supposed to look like the human body; i.e., then he's no man at all.

<sup>41</sup> No such work is known. Dodsley emends to Problems, since a book thus entitled and ascribed to Aristotle "with other philosophers and physicians" appeared in 1595, as Dyce notes.

Brother; my longings are not wanton, but wayward. I long to have my patient husband eat up a whole porcupine, to the intent the bristling quills may stick about his lips like a Flemish mustachio, and be shot at me. I shall be leaner than the new moon, unless I can make him horn-mad.<sup>43</sup>

Fus. 'Sfoot, half a quarter of an hour does that: make him a cuckold. 130

Vio. Pooh, he would count such a cut no unkindness.

Fus. The honest citizen he; then make him drunk and cut off his beard.

Vio. Fie, fie; idle, idle! He's no Frenchman, to fret at the loss of a little scald hair. No, Brother, thus it shall be — you must be secret.

Fus. As your midwife, I protest, Sister, or a barber-surgeon. 140

Vio. Repair to the Tortoise here in St. Christopher's Street; I will send you money; turn yourself into a brave<sup>45</sup> man: instead of the arms of your mistress, let your sword and your military scarf hang about your neck.

Fus. I must have a great horseman's French feather too, Sister.

Vio. Oh, by any means, to show your light head, else your hat will sit like a coxcomb. To be brief, you must be in all points a [50 most terrible wide-mouth'd swaggerer.

Fus. Nay, for swaggering points let me alone.<sup>46</sup>

Vio. Resort then to our shop, and, in my husband's presence, kiss me, snatch rings, jewels, or anything — so you give it back again, Brother, in secret.

Fus. By this hand, Sister.

Vio. Swear as if you came but new from knighting. 160

Fus. Nay, I'll swear after<sup>47</sup> four hundred a year.

Vio. Swagger worse than a lieutenant among freshwater soldiers,<sup>48</sup> call me your love, your ingle,<sup>49</sup> your cousin, or so; but Sister at no hand.

Fus. No, no, it shall be cousin, or rather coz; that's the gulling word between the citizens' wives and their [madcaps]<sup>50</sup> that

man<sup>51</sup> 'em to the garden; to call you one a' mine aunts,<sup>52</sup> Sister, were as good as call [171 you arrant whore; no, no, let me alone to cousin<sup>53</sup> you rarely.

Vio. H'as heard I have a brother, but never saw him; therefore put on a good face.

Fus. The best in Milan, I warrant.

Vio. Take up wares, but pay nothing, rifle my bosom, my pocket, my purse, the boxes, for money to dice withal; but, Brother, you must give all back again in secret. 180

Fus. By this welkin<sup>54</sup> that here roars I will, or else let me never know what a secret is: why, Sister, do you think I'll cony-catch<sup>55</sup> you, when you are my cousin? God's my life, then I were a stark ass. If I fret not his guts, beg me for a fool.<sup>56</sup>

Vio. Be circumspect, and do so then. Farewell.

Fus. The Tortoise, Sister! I'll stay there; forty ducats. Exit.

Vio. Thither I'll send. — This law can none deny: 190

Women must have their longings, or they die. Exit.

[SCENE III] <sup>57</sup>

[Enter] GASPARO the Duke, DOCTOR BENEDICT, [and] two Servants.

DUKE. Give charge that none do enter; lock the doors;

And fellows, what your eyes and ears receive, Upon your lives trust not the gadding air To carry the least part of it. The glass, the hourglass!

DOCT. Here, my Lord.

DUKE. Ah, 't is [near] <sup>58</sup> spent.

But, Doctor Benedict, does your art speak truth?

Art sure the soporiferous stream will ebb, And leave the crystal banks of her white body Pure as they were at first, just at the hour?

<sup>51</sup> Escort. Summer houses in suburban gardens were notorious places of assignation.

<sup>58</sup> Conj. Dyce; old eds. meere, but see l. 18.

DOCT. Just at the hour, my Lord.

DUKE. Uncertain her [10
[INFELICHE is discovered lying on a couch.]

Softly; [see,]<sup>69</sup> doctor, what a coldish heat
Spreads over all her body.

DOCT. Now it works.
The vital spirits that by a sleepy charm
Were bound up fast, and threw an icy rust<sup>60</sup>
On her exterior parts, now 'gin to break;
Trouble her not, my Lord.

DUKE. Some stools! — You call'd
For music, did you not? — Oh ho, it speaks.

[Music.]

It speaks! — Watch, sirs, her waking; note
those sands. —

Doctor, sit down. A dukedom that should weigh

Mine own down twice, being put into one scale,
And that fond<sup>61</sup> desperate boy, Hippolito, [21
Making the weight up, should not at my hands
Buy her i' th' tother, were her state more light
Than hers who makes a dowry up with alms.

Doctor, I'll starve her on the Apennine
Ere he shall marry her. I must confess Hippolito is nobly born; a man —
Did not mine enemies' blood boil in his veins —
Whom I would court to be my son-in-law.
But princes, whose high spleens<sup>62</sup> for empery
swell, 30

Are not with easy art made parallel.<sup>63</sup>

SERVANTS.<sup>64</sup> She wakes, my Lord.

DUKE. Look, Doctor Benedict. —
I charge you on your lives, maintain for truth
What e'er the doctor or myself aver;
For you shall bear her hence to [Bergamo.]<sup>65</sup>

INF. O God, what fearful dreams!

DOCT. Lady.

INF. Ha!

DUKE. Girl.

Why, Infeliche, how is't now, ha? Speak!

INF. I'm well — what makes<sup>66</sup> this doctor here? — I'm well.

DUKE. Thou wert not so even now, sickness' pale hand
Laid hold on thee even in the [mid'tst]<sup>67</sup> of feasting; 40

<sup>65</sup> So Q n.d. and Pearson (and, presumably, Q<sub>2</sub>).
Q<sub>1</sub>, etc., Bergaine.

<sup>67</sup> So Qq; and n.d.; other old eds. deadst.

And when a cup crown'd with thy lover's
health

Had touch'd thy lips, a sensible<sup>68</sup> cold dew
Stood on thy cheeks, as if that death had wept
To see such beauty [alter].<sup>69</sup>

INF. I remember

I sat at banquet, but felt no such change.

DUKE. Thou hast forgot, then, how a messenger

Came wildly in, with this unsavory news:
That he was dead?

INF. What messenger? Who's dead?

DUKE. Hippolito. Alack, wring not thy hands.

INF. I saw no messenger, heard no such
news. 50

DOCT. Trust me you did, sweet lady.

DUKE. La, you now! <sup>70</sup>

SER. Yes, indeed, madam.

DUKE. La, you now. — 'T is well, [good knaves].<sup>71</sup>

INF. You ha' slain him, and now you'll murder me.

DUKE. Good Infeliche, vex not thus thyself.
Of this the bad report before did strike
So coldly to the heart that the swift currents
Of life were all frozen up.

INF. It is untrue,

'T is most untrue; O most unnatural father!

DUKE. And we had much to do by art's best cunning,

To fetch life back again.

DOCT. Most certain, lady. [60

DUKE. Why, la, you now, you'll not believe me. — Friends,

Sweat we not all? Had we not much to do?

SER. Yes, indeed, my Lord, much.

DUKE. Death drew such fearful pictures in thy face

That were Hippolito alive again,

I'd kneel and woo the noble gentleman

To be thy husband. Now I sore repent

My sharpness to him, and his family.

Nay, do not weep for him; we all must die. —

Doctor, this place where she so oft hath seen [70
His lively presence, [hurts]<sup>72</sup> her, does it not?

DOCT. Doubtless, my Lord, it does.

DUKE. It does, it does.

Therefore, sweet girl, thou shalt to Bergamo.

INF. Even where you will; in any place there's woe.

<sup>70</sup> There, you see!

<sup>72</sup> Qq; and n.d. hurts; other old eds. hurts.

DUKE. A coach is ready; Bergamo doth stand
In a most wholesome air; sweet walks, there's deer —

Ay, thou shalt hunt and send us venison,
Which, like some [goddess in the Cyprian] <sup>73</sup>
groves,
Thine own fair hand shall strike. — Sirs, you shall teach her
To stand, and how to shoot; ay, she shall hunt. — 80

Cast off this sorrow. In, girl, and prepare
This night to ride away to Bergamo.

INF. O most unhappy maid! Exit.

DUKE. Follow [her] <sup>74</sup> close.
No words that she was buried, on your lives!
Or that her ghost walks now after she's dead;
I'll hang you if you name a funeral.

1 SER. I'll speak Greek, my Lord, ere I speak that deadly word.

2 SER. And I'll speak Welsh, which is harder than Greek. Exeunt [Servants]. [90]

DUKE. Away, look to her. — Doctor Benedict,
Did you observe how her complexion alt' red
Upon his name and death? Oh, would 't were true.

DOCT. It may, my Lord.

DUKE. May! How? I wish his death.

DOCT. And you may have your wish; say but the word,

And 't is a strong spell to rip up <sup>75</sup> his grave.
I have good knowledge <sup>76</sup> with Hippolito;
He calls me friend; I'll creep into his bosom, <sup>77</sup>
And sting him there to death; poison can do 't.

DUKE. Perform it, I'll create thee half mine heir. 100

DOCT. It shall be done, although the fact <sup>78</sup> be foul.

DUKE. Greatness hides sin; the guilt upon my soul! Exeunt.

[SCENE IV]

Enter CASTRUCHIO, PIORATTO, and FLUELLO.

CAS. Signior Pioratto, Signior Fluello, shall's be merry? Shall's play the wags now?

FLU. Ay, anything that may beget the child of laughter.

CAS. Truth, I have a pretty sportive conceit new crept into my brain, will move excellent mirth.

PIO. Let's ha't, let's ha't; and where shall the scene of mirth lie?

CAS. At Signior Candido's house, the [10 patient man, nay, the monstrous patient man. They say his blood <sup>80</sup> is immoveable, that he has taken all patience from a man, and all constancy from a woman.

FLU. That <sup>81</sup> makes so many whores nowadays.

CAS. Ay, and so many knaves too.

PIO. Well, sir.

CAS. To conclude, the report goes he's so mild, so affable, so suffering, that nothing [20 indeed can move him. Now do but think what sport it will be to make this fellow, the mirror of patience, as angry, as vex'd, and as mad as an English cuckold.

FLU. Oh, 't were admirable mirth, that; but how will 't be done, signior?

CAS. Let me alone; I have a trick, a conceit, a thing, a device, will sting him, i' faith, if he have but a thimbleful of blood in's belly, or a spleen <sup>82</sup> not so big as a tavern token. [30]

PIO. Thou stir him? thou move him? thou anger him? Alas, I know his approved temper. <sup>84</sup> Thou vex him? Why he has a patience above man's injuries; thou mayst sooner raise a spleen in an angel, than rough humor in him. Why, I'll give you instance for it. This wonderfully temper'd Signior Candido upon a time invited home to his house certain Neapolitan lords, of curious <sup>85</sup> taste and no mean palates, conjuring his [40 wife, of all loves, <sup>86</sup> to prepare cheer fitting for such honorable trenchermen. She, just of a woman's nature, covetous to try the uttermost of vexation and thinking at last to get the start of his humor, willingly <sup>87</sup> neglected the preparation, and became unfurnish'd, not only of dainty, but of ordinary dishes. He, according to the mildness of his breast, entertained the lords, and ~~with courtly discourse beguiled the time, as much as a~~ [50 citizen might do. To conclude, they were

hungry lords, for there came no meat in; their stomachs were plainly gull'd, and their teeth deluded, and if anger could have seiz'd a man, there was matter enough i' faith to vex any citizen in the world, if he were not too much made a fool by his wife.

FLU. Ay, I'll swear for't. 'Sfoot, had it been my case, I should ha' play'd mad tricks with my wife and family. First, I would [60 ha' spitted the men, stew'd the maids, and bak'd the mistress, and so served them in.

PIO. Why 't would ha' tempt'd any blood but his;

And thou to vex him? thou to anger him With some poor shallow jest?

CAS. 'Sblood, Signior Pioratto, you that disparage my conceit,<sup>88</sup> I'll wage a hundred ducats upon the head on't, that it moves him, frets him, and galls him.

PIO. Done, 't is a lay; <sup>89</sup> join golls [70 on't. — Witness, Signior Fluello.

CAS. Witness; 't is done.

Come, follow me; the house is not far off. I'll thrust him from his humor, vex his breast, And win a hundred ducats by one jest.

Exeunt.

[SCENE V] <sup>91</sup>

Enter [VIOLA] Candido's wife, GEORGE, and two Prentices in the shop.

VIO. Come, you put up your wares in good order here, do you not, think you? One piece cast this way, another that way! You had need have a patient master indeed.

GEO. [aside] Ay, I'll be sworn, for we have a curst <sup>92</sup> mistress.

VIO. You mumble? do you mumble? I would your master or I could be a note more angry, for two patient folks in a house spoil all the servants that ever shall come under [10 them.

1 PREN. [aside] You patient! Ay, so is the Devil when he is horn-mad.

Enter CASTRUCHIO, FLUELLO, and PIORATTO.

ALL THREE.<sup>93</sup> Gentlemen, what do you lack? <sup>94</sup> What is't you buy? See fine holands, fine cambrics, fine lawns.

<sup>90</sup> Hands.

<sup>91</sup> Candido's shop, represented by the inner stage. Viola, George, and the prentices are discovered there; the outer stage represents the street. The shops in Elizabethan London were open during the day, much like the booths of a fair, though shutters protected them at night.

<sup>94</sup> The characteristic cry of the shopkeeper.

GEO. What is't you lack?

2 PREN. What is't you buy?

CAS. Where's Signior Candido, thy master?

GEO. Faith, signior, he's a little nego- [20 tiated; <sup>95</sup> he'll appear presently.

CAS. Fellow, let's see a lawn, a choice one, sirrah.

GEO. The best in all Milan, gentlemen, and this is the piece. I can fit you gentlemen with fine calicoes, too, for doublets, the only ~~sweet fashion now~~ most delicate and courtly, a meek, gentle calico, cut upon two double affable taffetas — ah, most neat, feat,<sup>96</sup> and unmatched. 30

FLU. A notable voluble-tongu'd villain.

PIO. I warrant this fellow was never begot without much prating.

CAS. What, and is this she, say'st thou?

GEO. Ay, and the purest she that ever you finger'd since you were a gentleman. Look how even she is, look how clean she is, ha! as even as the brow of Cynthia, and as clean as your sons and heirs when they ha' spent all.

CAS. Pooh, thou talk'st; pox on't, [40 't is rough.

GEO. How? Is she rough? But if you bid <sup>97</sup> pox on't, sir, 't will take away the roughness presently.

FLU. Ha, signior; has he fitted your French <sup>98</sup> curse?

GEO. Look you, gentlemen, here's another. Compare them I pray, compara Virgilium cum Homero: compare virgins with harlots.

CAS. Pooh, I ha' seen better, and as [50 you term them, evenor and cleaner.

GEO. You may see further for your mind, but trust me, you shall not find better for your body.

Enter CANDIDO.

CAS. O here he comes; let's make as though we pass. —

Come, come, we'll try in some other shop.

CAND. How now? What's the matter?

GEO. The gentlemen find fault with this lawn, fall out with it, and without a cause too.

CAND. Without a cause? 60 And that makes you to let 'em pass away! — Ah, may I crave a word with you, gentlemen?

FLU. He calls us.

CAS. Makes the better for the jest.

<sup>98</sup> Since syphilis, or the pox, was known as the French disease.

CAND. I pray come near; y' are very welcome, gallants.

Pray pardon my man's rudeness, for I fear me H'as talk'd above a prentice with you. — Lawns!

Look you, kind gentlemen; this — no — ay, this —

Take this upon my honest-dealing faith, To be a true weave, not too hard nor slack, But e'en as far from falsehood as from black.

CAS. Well, how do you rate it? 71

CAND. Very conscionably, eighteen shillings a yard.

CAS. That's too dear. How many yards does the whole piece contain, think you?

CAND. Why, some seventeen yards, I think, or thereabouts.

How much would serve your turn, I pray?

CAS. Why, let me see — would it were better too.

CAND. Truth, 't is the best in Milan, at few words.

CAS. Well, let me have then a whole pennyworth.

CAND. Ha, ha! y' are a merry gentleman.

CAS. A penn'orth, I say. 81

CAND. Of lawn!

CAS. Of lawn? Ay, of lawn, a penn'orth. 'Sblood, dost not hear? A whole penn'orth, are you deaf?

CAND. Deaf? no, sir; but I must tell you, Our wares do seldom meet such customers.

CAS. Nay, an you and your lawns be so squeamish, fare you well.

CAND. Pray stay; a word, pray, signior. For what purpose is it, I beseech you? 91

CAS. 'Sblood, what's that to you? I'll have a pennyworth.

CAND. A pennyworth! Why you shall: I'll serve you presently.<sup>99</sup>

2 PREN. 'S foot, a pennyworth, mistress!

VIO. A pennyworth! Call you these gentlemen?

CAS. No, no; not there.

CAND. What then, kind gentleman? what, at this corner here? 101

CAS. No, nor there neither; I'll have it just in the middle, or else not.

CAND. Just in the middle! ha! you shall too. What,

Have you a single penny?

CAS. Yes, here's one.

CAND. Lend it me, I pray.<sup>100</sup>

<sup>100</sup> To cut a piece of cloth the size of a penny.

FLU. An exc'llent followed jest.

VIO. What, will he spoil the lawn now?

CAND. Patience, good Wife.

VIO. Ay, that patience makes a fool [110] of you. — Gentlemen, you might ha' found some other citizen to have made a kind gall on,<sup>101</sup> besides my husband.

CAND. Pray, gentlemen, take her to be a woman;

Do not regard her language. — Oh, kind soul, Such words will drive away my customers.

VIO. Customers, with a murrain!<sup>102</sup> Call you these customers?

CAND. Patience, good Wife.

VIO. Pax a' your patience. 120

GEO. 'Sfoot, Mistress, I warrant these are some cheating companions.<sup>103</sup>

CAND. Look you, gentleman, there's your ware. I thank you; I have your money here. Pray know my shop; pray let me have your custom.

VIO. Custom, quoth'a!

CAND. Let me take more of your money.

VIO. You had need so.

PIO. [aside to CASTRUCHIO] Hark in [130] thine ear: th'ast lost an hundred ducats.

CAS. [aside to PRIORATTO] Well, well, I know't. Is't possible that homo Should be nor man nor woman? Not once mov'd?

No not at such an injury, not at all!

Sure he's a pigeon, for he has no gall.

FLU. Come, come, y' are angry though you smother it:

Y' are vex'd i' faith; confess.

CAND. Why, gentlemen, Should you conceit<sup>104</sup> me to be vex'd or mov'd?

He has my ware, I have his money for't, And that's no argument I am angry; no, [140] The best logician cannot prove me so.

FLU. Oh, but the hateful name of a penny worth of lawn,

And then cut out i' th' middle of the piece.

Pah, I guess it by myself, [t] would move a lamb,

Were he a linen-draper, 't would, i' faith.

CAND. Well, give me leave to answer you for that.

We [a]re set here to please all customers, Their humors and their fancies, offend none; We get by many, if we leese<sup>105</sup> by one. 149

<sup>105</sup> Lose.

Maybe his mind stood to no more than that ;
A penn'orth serves him ; and 'mongst trades
't is found,

Deny a penn'orth, it may cross a pound.
Oh, he that means to thrive, with patient eye
Must please the Devil, if he come to buy.

FLU. O wondrous man, patient 'bove wrong or woe ;

How blest were men, if women could be so.

CAND. And to express how well my breast is pleas'd,

And satisfied in all, — George, fill a beaker.

Exit GEORGE.

I'll drink unto that gentleman, who lately [159
Bestowed his money with me.

VIO. God's my life,
We shall have all our gains drunk out in beakers,

To make amends for pennyworths of lawn.

Re-enter GEORGE.

CAND. Here, Wife, begin you to the gentle-
man.

VIO. I begin to him ! [Spills the wine.]

CAND. George, fill 't up again. —
'T was my fault ; my hand shook.

Exit GEORGE.

PIO. How strangely this doth show !
A patient man link'd with a waspish shrew.

FLU. [aside] A silver and gilt beaker ; I have a trick

To work upon that beaker ; sure 't will fret
him ;

It cannot choose but vex him. — [aside to
CASTRUCHIO] Signior Castruchio,

In pity to thee I have a conceit, 170
Will save thy hundred ducats yet ; 't will do 't,
And work him to impatience.

CAS. [aside] Sweet Fluello,
I should be bountiful to that conceit.<sup>108</sup>

FLU. Well, 't is enough.

Re-enter GEORGE.

CAND. Here, gentleman, to you ;
I wish your custom ; y' are exceeding welcome.

CAS. I pledge you, Signior Candido —
Here, [to]<sup>107</sup> you that must receive a hundred ducats.

PIO. I'll pledge them deep, i' faith, Cas-truchio. —

Signior Fluello.

FLU. Come, play 't off ; to me —
I am your last man.

<sup>108</sup> I.e., if your notion succeeds, I'll reward you.

<sup>107</sup> Apparently only Q n.d.

CAND. George, supply the cup.

FLU. So, so, good honest George — 181
Here Signior Candido, all this to you.

CAND. O, you must pardon me ; I use it not.<sup>108</sup>

FLU. Will you not pledge me then ?

CAND. Yes, but not that ;
Great love is shown in little.

FLU. Blurt<sup>109</sup> on your sentences !
'Sfoot, you shall pledge me all.

CAND. Indeed I shall not.

FLU. Not pledge me ? 'Sblood, I'll carry away the beaker then.

CAND. The beaker ? Oh ! that at your pleasure, sir.

FLU. Now by this drink I will.

CAS. Pledge him ; he'll do 't else.

FLU. So ; I ha' done you right on my thumb-nail.<sup>110</sup> 190

What, will you pledge me now ?

CAND. You know me, sir ;
I am not of that sin.

FLU. Why, then, farewell ;
I'll bear away the beaker, by this light.

CAND. That's as you please ; 't is very good.

FLU. Nay, it doth please me, and as you
say,

'T is a very good one. Farewell, Signior Candido.

PIO. Farewell, Candido.

CAND. Y' are welcome, gentlemen.

CAS. Heart ! not mov'd yet ?
I think his patience is above our wit.

Exeunt [CASTRUCHIO, FLUELLO carrying off the beaker, and PIO-RATTO].

GEO. I told you before, Mistress, they [200 were all cheaters.

VIO. Why, fool, why, Husband ; why, madman ; I hope you will not let 'em sneak away so with a silver and gilt beaker, the best in the house too. — Go, fellows ; make hue and cry after them.

CAND. Pray let your tongue lie still ; all will be well. —
Come hither, George ; hie to the constable,

<sup>108</sup> I am not accustomed to such drinking ; Candido has already drunk to them, and is unwilling to "pledge" Fluello by drinking the amount he insists on.

<sup>110</sup> Fluello inverts the vessel and allows the remaining liquor to form a drop on his thumb-nail ; since there is only a drop, which does not run, he has "done him right."

And in calm order wish him to attach them.
Make no great stir, because they're gentle-
men, 210

And a thing partly done in merriment.
'Tis but a size above a jest thou know'st;
Therefore pursue it mildly. Go, begone;
The constable's hard by; bring him along;
Make haste again. Exit GEORGE.

VIO. O y' are a goodly patient woodcock,<sup>111</sup> are you not now? See what your patience comes to: every one saddles you and rides you; you'll be shortly the common stone-horse<sup>112</sup> of Milan; a woman's well help'd [220 up with such a meacock.<sup>113</sup> I had rather have a husband that would swaddle<sup>114</sup> me thrice a day, than such a one, that will be gull'd twice in half an hour. Oh, I could burn all the wares in my shop for anger.

CAND. Pray wear a peaceful temper; be my wife,
That is, be patient; for a wife and husband Share but one soul between them: this being
known,
Why should not one soul then agree in one?

VIO. Hang your agreements! but if my beaker be gone — Exit. [231

Re-enter CASTRUCHIO, FLUELLO, PIORATTO, and GEORGE.

CAND. Oh, here they come.

GEO. The constable, sir, let 'em come along with me, because<sup>115</sup> there should be no wond'- ring; he stays at door.

CAS. Constable, Goodman Abram.<sup>116</sup>

FLU. Now Signior Candido; 'sblood, why do you attach us?

CAS. 'Sheart! attach us!

CAND. Nay swear not, gallants;
Your oaths may move your souls, but not move me; 240

You have a silver beaker of my wife's.

FLU. You say not true: 't is gilt.

CAND. Then you say true,
And being gilt, the guilt lies more on you.

CAS. I hope y' are not angry, sir.

CAND. Then you hope right; for I am not angry.

FLU. No, but a little mov'd.

CAND. I mov'd! 'T was you were mov'd;
you were brought hither.

CAS. But you, out of your anger and impatience,
Caus'd us to be attach'd.

CAND. Nay, you misplace it;
Out of my quiet sufferance I did that, 250
And not of any wrath. Had I shown anger,
I should have then pursu'd you with the
law,

And hunted you to shame, as many worldlings

Do build their anger upon feebler grounds,
The more's the pity: many lose their lives
For scarce so much coin as will hide their palm,

Which is most cruel; those have vexed spirits
That pursue lives. In this opinion rest:
The loss of millions could not move my breast.

FLU. Thou art a blest man, and with peace
dost deal; 260

Such a meek spirit can bless a commonweal.

CAND. Gentlemen, now 'tis upon eating-
time;

Pray part not hence, but dine with me to-day.

CAS. I never heard a [courtier]<sup>117</sup> yet say nay
To such a motion. I'll not be the first.

PRO. Nor I.

FLU. Nor I.

CAND. The constable shall bear you company.

George, call him in; let the world say what it
can,

Nothing can drive me from a patient man. 270
Exeunt.

[ACT II — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter ROGER with a stool, cushion, looking-glass, and chafing-dish<sup>2</sup>; those being set down, he pulls out of his pocket a vial with white color in it, and two boxes, one with white, another red, painting; he places all things in order, and a candle by them, singing with the ends of old ballads as he does it. At last BELLA-FRONT, as he rubs his cheek with the colors, whistles within.

ROG. Anon, forsooth.

BELL. [within] What are you playing the rogue about?

<sup>2</sup> For heating the curling-bodkin and the poking stick.

<sup>116</sup> A wandering beggar. Doubtless many such feigned idiocy.

ROG. About you, forsooth; I'm drawing up a hole in your white silk stocking.

BELL. Is my glass there? and my boxes of complexion?

ROG. Yes, forsooth, your boxes of complexion are here, I think; yes, 't is here. Here's your two complexions — [aside] and if I had [10 all the four complexions,<sup>3</sup> I should ne'er set a good face upon 't. Some men, I see, are born under hard-favor'd <sup>4</sup> planets as well as women. Zounds, I look worse now than I did before; and it makes her face glisten most damnably. There's knavery in daubing, I hold my life; or else this is only female pomatum.

Enter BELLAFRONT not full ready, without a gown; she sits down; with her bodkin <sup>5</sup> curls her hair, colors her lips.

BELL. Where's my ruff and poker,<sup>6</sup> you blockhead?

ROG. Your ruff [and] <sup>7</sup> your poker are engaged'rung together upon the cupboard of the court, or the court cupboard.<sup>8</sup>

BELL. Fetch 'em. — Is the pox in your hams, you can go no faster?

ROG. Would the pox were in your fingers, unless you could leave flinging! Catch!<sup>9</sup>

Exit.

BELL. I'll catch you, you dog, by and by. Do you grumble? She sings.

Cupid is a God, as naked as my nail; <sup>29</sup>
I'll whip him with a rod, if he my true love fail.

[Re-enter ROGER with ruff and poker.]

ROG. There's your ruff. Shall I poke it?

BELL. Yes, honest Roger — no, stay; prithee, good boy, hold here.

[Sings. ROGER holds the glass and candle.]

Down, down, down, down, I fall down and arise —
down —
I never shall arise.

ROG. Troth, Mistress, then leave the trade, if you shall never rise.

BELL. What trade, Goodman Abram?

ROG. Why that [of] down and arise, or the falling trade. <sup>40</sup>

BELL. I'll fall <sup>10</sup> with you by and by.

ROG. If you do I know who shall smart <sup>11</sup> for 't.

Troth, Mistress, what do I look like now?

BELL. Like as you are; a panderly six-penny rascal.

ROG. I may thank you for that; in faith, I look like an old proverb, "Hold the candle before the Devil."

BELL. Ud's life, I'll stick my knife in your guts an you prate to me so! — What? <sup>50</sup>

She sings.

Well met, pug,<sup>12</sup> the pearl of beauty; umh, umh.
How now, Sir Knave? you forget your duty; umh, umh.

Marry, muff,<sup>13</sup> sir, are you grown so dainty? fa, la, la, etc.
Is it you, sir? the worst of twenty; fa, la, la, leera, la.

Pox on you; how doest thou hold my glass?

ROG. Why, as I hold your door: with my fingers.

BELL. Nay, pray thee, sweet honey Roger, hold up handsomely.

Sing,<sup>14</sup> pretty wantons, warble, etc. <sup>60</sup>

We shall ha' guests to-day, I lay <sup>15</sup> my little maidenhead, my nose itches so.

ROG. I said so too last night, when our fleas twing'd me.

BELL. So; poke my ruff now; my gown, my gown! Have I my fall? <sup>16</sup> Where's my fall, Roger?

ROG. Your fall, forsooth, is behind.

One knocks.

BELL. God's my pittikins! some fool or other knocks. <sup>70</sup>

ROG. Shall I open to the fool, mistress?

BELL. And all these baubles lying thus? Away with it quickly. — Ay, ay, knock, and be damn'd, whosoever you be! — So; give the fresh salmon line now; let him come ashore. He shall serve for my breakfast, though he go against my stomach.

ROGER fetch in FLUELLO, CASTRUCHIO, and PIORATTO.

FLU. Morrow, coz.

CAS. How does my sweet acquaintance?

<sup>11</sup> As the result of the beating you'll give me; perhaps with a double entente on "smart" = suffer from venereal disease.

<sup>12</sup> Monkey — as a term of endearment.

PIO. Save thee, little marmoset ;<sup>17</sup> how [80
doest thou, good pretty rogue?

BELL. Well, God-a-mercy, good prettyascal.

FLU. Roger, some light, I prithee.

ROG. You shall, signior ; for we that live here in this vale of misery are as dark as hell.

Exit for a candle.

CAS. Good tobacco, Fluello?

FLU. Smell.

PIO. It may be tickling gear,<sup>18</sup> for it plays with my nose already. 90

Re-enter ROGER [with candle].

ROG. Here's another light angel,<sup>19</sup> signior.

BELL. What, you pied curtal ;<sup>20</sup> what's that you are neighing?

ROG. I say God send us the light of Heaven, or some more angels.

BELL. Go fetch some wine, and drink half of it.

ROG. I must fetch some wine, gentlemen, and drink half of it.

FLU. Here, Roger.

CAS. No, let me send, prithee.

FLU. Hold, you cankerworm.

ROG. You shall send both, if you [100
please, signiors.

PIO. Stay, what's best to drink a' mornings?

ROG. Hippocras,<sup>21</sup> sir, for my mistress, if I fetch it, is most dear to her.

FLU. Hippocras ! There, then ; here's a teston<sup>22</sup> for you, you snake.

ROG. Right sir ; here's three shillings sixpence for a pottle<sup>23</sup> and a manchet.<sup>24</sup> Exit.

CAS. Here's most [Herculian]<sup>25</sup> to- [110
bacco ; ha' some, acquaintance?

BELL. Fah, not I ; makes your breath stink like the piss of a fox. Acquaintance, where supp'd you last night?

CAS. At a place, sweet acquaintance, where your health danc'd the canaries,<sup>26</sup> i' faith ; you shou'd ha' been there.

BELL. I there among your punks !<sup>27</sup> Marry, fah, hang 'em ; [I] scorn 't. Will you never leave sucking of eggs in other [120

folk's hens' nests?

CAS. Why, in good troth, if you'll trust me, acquaintance, there was not one hen at the board ; ask Fluello.

FLU. No, faith, coz, none but cocks. Signior
Malavella drunk to thee.

BELL. O, a pure beagle ; that horse-leech
there?

FLU. And the knight, Sir Oliver Lollo, swore he would bestow a taffeta petticoat [130 on thee, but to break his fast with thee.

BELL. With me ! I'll choke him then, hang him, molecatcher !<sup>28</sup> It's the dreaming'st snotty-nose.

PIO. Well, many took that Lollo for a fool ;
but he's a subtle fool.

BELL. Ay, and he has fellows ; of all filthy, dry-fisted<sup>29</sup> knights, I cannot abide that he should touch me.

CAS. Why, wench ? Is he scabbed ?<sup>30</sup> [140

BELL. Hang him, he'll not live to be so honest, nor to the credit to have scabs about him ; his betters have 'em. But I hate to wear out any of his coarse knighthood, because he's made like an alderman's nightgown,<sup>31</sup> fac'd all with cony<sup>32</sup> before, and within nothing but fox. This sweet Oliver will eat mutton<sup>33</sup> till he be ready to burst, but the lean-jaw'd slave will not pay for the scraping of his trencher. 150

PIO. Plague him ; set him beneath the salt, and let him not touch a bit, till every one has had his full cut.

FLU. [Sordello,]<sup>34</sup> the gentleman usher, came in to us too ; marry 't was in our cheese,<sup>35</sup> for he had been to borrow money for his lord, of a citizen.

CAS. What an ass is that lord, to borrow money of a citizen !

BELL. Nay, God's my pity, what an [160 ass is that citizen to lend money [to] a lord !

Enter MATHEO, and HIPPOLITO who, saluting the company as a stranger, walks off.<sup>36</sup>

ROGER comes in sadly behind them, with a pot-tle pot, and stands aloof off.

<sup>26</sup> A lively Spanish dance, with a punning allusion to Canary wine.

<sup>28</sup> A vague term of abuse.

<sup>29</sup> "A moist hand is vulgarly accounted a sign of an amorous constitution." (Reed.)

and Pearson, Lord Ello.

<sup>36</sup> Withdraws to one side or to the rear of the stage.

MAT. Save you, gallants. Signior Fluello, exceedingly well met, as I may say.

FLU. Signior Matheo, exceedingly well met too, as I may say.

MAT. And how fares my little pretty mistress?

BELL. E'en as my little pretty servant;<sup>37</sup> sees three court dishes before her, and not one good bit in them:—How now? Why [170 the devil stand'st thou so? Art in a trance?

ROG. Yes, forsooth.

BELL. Why dost not fill out their wine?

ROG. Forsooth, 't is fill'd out already: all the wine that the signior has bestow'd upon you is cast away; a porter ran a little<sup>38</sup> at me, and so fac'd me down that I had not a drop.

BELL. I'm accurs'd to let such a withered artichoke-faced rascal grow under my nose. Now you look like an old he-cat, going to [180 the gallows. I'll be hang'd if he ha' not put up<sup>39</sup> the money to cony-catch<sup>40</sup> us all.

ROG. No, truly, forsooth; 't is not put up yet.

BELL. How many gentlemen hast thou served thus?

ROG. None but five hundred, besides prentices and serving men.

BELL. Doest think I'll pocket it up<sup>41</sup> at thy hands? 190

ROG. Yes, forsooth, I fear you will pocket it up.<sup>42</sup>

BELL. Fie, fie, cut my lace, good servant; I shall ha' the mother<sup>43</sup> presently, I'm so vex'd at this horse-plum.<sup>44</sup>

FLU. Plague, not for a scald<sup>45</sup> pottle of wine.

MAT. Nay, sweet Bellafront, for a little pig's wash!<sup>46</sup>

CAS. Here Roger, fetch more. [Gives [200 money.] A mischance, i' faith, acquaintance.

BELL. Out of my sight, thou ungodly puritanical creature.

ROG. For the tother pottle? Yes, forsooth.

BELL. Spill that too. [Exit ROGER.]—What gentleman is that, servant? your friend?

MAT. Gods so; a stool, a stool. If you love me, mistress, entertain this gentleman respectively,<sup>47</sup> and bid him welcome. 210

BELL. He's very welcome.—Pray, sir, sit.

HIP. Thanks, lady.

FLU. Count Hippolito, is't not?—Cry you mercy, signior; you walk here all this while, and we not heard you? Let me bestow a stool upon you, beseech you; you are a stranger here; we know the fashions a' th' house.

CAS. Please you be here, my Lord?

[Offers] tobacco.

HIP. No, good Castruchio. 220

FLU. You have abandoned the court, I see, my Lord, since the death of your mistress. Well, she was a delicate piece.—Beseech you, sweet, come, let us serve under the colors of your acquaintance still for all that.—Please you to meet here at [the]<sup>48</sup> lodging of my coz, I shall bestow a banquet upon you.

HIP. I never can deserve this kindness, sir. What may this lady be, whom you call coz?

FLU. Faith, sir, a poor gentlewoman, [230 of passing good carriage;<sup>49</sup> one that has some suits in law, and lies here in an attorney's house.

HIP. Is she married?

FLU. Ha, as all your punks are, a captain's wife, or so. Never saw her before, my Lord?

HIP. Never, trust me; a goodly creature.

FLU. By gad, when you know her as we do, you'll swear she is the prettiest, kindest, sweetest, most bewitching honest ape [240 under the pole. A skin, your satin is not more soft, nor lawn whiter.

HIP. Belike, then, she's some sale<sup>50</sup> courtesan.

FLU. Troth, as all your best faces are; a good wench.

HIP. Great pity that she's a good wench.<sup>51</sup>

MAT. Thou shalt [have, it]<sup>52</sup> i' faith, mistress.—How now, signiors? What, whispering? Did not I lay a wager I should take [250 you, within seven days, in a house of vanity?

HIP. You did; and, I beshrew your heart, you have won.

MAT. How do you like my mistress?

HIP. Well, for such a mistress; better, if

your mistress be not your master. — I must break manners, gentlemen ; fare you well.

MAT. 'Sfoot, you shall not leave us.

BELL. The gentleman likes not the taste of our company. 260

OMN[ES]. Beseech you stay.

HIP. Trust me, my affairs beckon for me ; pardon me,

MAT. Will you call for me half an hour hence here ?

HIP. Perhaps I shall.

MAT. Perhaps ? fah ! I know you can ! swear to me you will.

HIP. Since you will press me, on my word, I will. Exit. [270

BELL. What sullen picture is this, servant ?

MAT. It's Count Hippolito, the brave count.

PIO. As gallant a spirit as any in Milan, you sweet Jew.

FLU. Oh, he's a most essential gentleman, coz.

CAS. Did you never hear of Count Hippolito, acquaintance ?

BELL. Marry, muff a' your counts, an [280 be no more life in 'em.

MAT. He's so malcontent ! Sirrah <sup>a</sup> Bella-front, — an you be honest gallants, let's sup together, and have the Count with us ; — thou shalt sit at the upper end, punk.

BELL. Punk, you sous'd <sup>54</sup> gurnet ? <sup>55</sup>

MAT. King's truce ! <sup>56</sup> Come, I'll bestow the supper to have him but laugh.

CAS. He betrays his youth too <sup>grossly</sup> to that tyrant melancholy. 290

MAT. All this is for a woman.

BELL. A woman ! some whore ! What sweet jewel is 't ?

PIO. Would she heard you.

FLU. Troth, so would I.

CAS. And I, by Heaven.

BELL. Nay, good servant, what woman ?

MAT. Pah.

BELL. Prithee, tell me ; a buss and tell me. I warrant he's an honest fellow, if [300 he take on thus for a wench. Good rogue, who ?

MAT. By th' Lord I will not, must not, faith, mistress. — Is't a match, sirs ? this night, at th' Antelope ; ay, for there's best wine, and good boys.

OMNES. It's done ; at th' Antelope.

BELL. I cannot be there to-night.

MAT. Cannot ? By th' Lord, you shall.

BELL. By the Lady, I will not. Shall ! [310

FLU. Why, then, put it off till Friday ; wu't <sup>57</sup> come then, coz ?

BELL. Well.

Re-enter ROGER.

MAT. Y'are the waspishest ape. — Roger, put your mistress in mind <sup>58</sup> to sup with us on Friday next. Y'are best come like a mad-woman, without a band, in your waistcoat, <sup>59</sup> and the linings of your kirtle outward, like every common hackney <sup>60</sup> that steals out at the back gate of her sweet knight's lodging.

BELL. Go, go, hang yourself ! 321

CAS. It's dinner-time, Matheo ; shall's hence ?

OMNES. Yes, yes. — Farewell, wench.

Exeunt.

BELL. Farewell, boys. — Roger, what wine sent they for ?

ROG. Bastard wine ; <sup>61</sup> for if it had been truly begotten, it would not ha' been asham'd to come in. Here's six shillings, to pay for nursing the bastard.

BELL. A company of rooks ! <sup>62</sup> O good [330 sweet Roger, run to the poulter's, and buy me some fine larks.

ROG. No woodcocks ?

BELL. Yes, faith, a couple, if they be not dear.

ROG. I'll buy but one ; there's one <sup>63</sup> already here. Exit.

Enter HIPPOLITO.

HIP. Is the gentleman, my friend, departed, mistress ?

BELL. His back is but new turn'd, sir.

HIP. Fare you well.

BELL. I can direct you to him.

HIP. Can you ? pray.

BELL. If you please stay, he'll not be absent long. 340

HIP. I care not much.

BELL. Pray sit, forsooth.

<sup>59</sup> A sleeveless garment worn by women under the over-dress. The omission of the latter was a mark of the prostitute.

<sup>63</sup> "Woodcock" was synonymous with "fool."

HIP. I'm hot.
If [I] may use your room, I'll rather walk.

BELL. At your best pleasure. — Whew!
some rubbers <sup>64</sup> there.

HIP. Indeed, I'll none — indeed I will not, thanks.

Pretty fine lodging. I perceive my friend
Is old in your acquaintance.

BELL. Troth, sir, he comes
As other gentlemen, to spend spare hours.
If yourself like our roof, such as it is,
Your own acquaintance may be as old as his.

HIP. Say I did like; what welcome should I find? 350

BELL. Such as my present fortunes can afford.

HIP. But would you let me play Matheo's part?

BELL. What part?

HIP. Why, embrace you, dally with you, kiss.

Faith, tell me, will you leave him and love me?

BELL. I am in bonds to no man, sir.

HIP. Why then,
Y' are free for any man; if any, me.

But I must tell you, lady, were you mine,
You should be all mine; I could brook no
sharers;

I should be covetous, and sweep up all. 359
I should be pleasure's usurer; faith, I should.

BELL. O fate!

HIP. Why sigh you, lady? May I know?

BELL. 'T has never been my fortune yet to single

Out that one man whose love could fellow
mine,

As I have ever wish'd it. O my stars!

Had I but met with one kind gentleman,
That would have purchas'd sin alone to himself,

For his own private use, although scarce proper, <sup>66</sup>

Indifferent handsome, meetly legg'd and thighed,

And my allowance reasonable, i' faith,

According to my body, by my troth, 370
I would have been as true unto his pleasures,
Yea, and as loyal to his afternoons,
As ever a poor gentlewoman could be.

HIP. This were well now to one but newly fledg'd,

And scarce a day old in this subtle world;

'T were pretty art, good bird-lime, cunning net;

<sup>65</sup> Hardly good-looking.

But come, come, faith, confess: how many
men

Have drunk this selfsame protestation,
From that red 'ticing lip?

BELL. Indeed, not any.

HIP. "Indeed!" and blush not!

BELL. No, in truth, not any.

HIP. "Indeed!" "In truth!" — how warily you swear. 381

'T is well, if ill it be not; yet had I
The ruffian in me, and were drawn before you
But in light colors, I do know indeed,

You could not swear "indeed," but thunder oaths

That should shake Heaven, drown the harmonious spheres,

And pierce a soul that lov'd her Maker's
honor

With horror and amazement.

BELL. Shall I swear? —
Will you believe me then?

HIP. Worst then of all;
Our sins by custom seem, at last, but
small. 390

Were I but o'er your threshold, a next man,
And after him a next, and then a fourth,
Should have this golden hook and lascivious bait

Thrown out to the full length. Why, let me tell you,

I ha' seen letters sent from that white hand,
Tuning such music to Matheo's ear.

BELL. Matheo! that's true; but believe it, I

No sooner had laid hold upon your presence,
But straight mine eye convey'd you to my heart. <sup>66</sup>

HIP. Oh, you cannot feign with me. Why
I know, lady, 400

This is the common [fashion] <sup>67</sup> of you all,
To hook in a kind gentleman, and then
Abuse his coin, conveying it to your lover;
And in the end you show him a French trick, <sup>68</sup>
And so you leave him, that a coach may run
Between his legs for breadth.

BELL. Oh, by my soul!
Not I! therein I'll prove an honest whore,
In being true to one, and to no more.

HIP. If any be dispos'd to trust your oath,
Let him; I'll not be he. I know you feign

<sup>66</sup> Q n.d.:

"Matheo! thats true, but if youle beleesue
My honest tongue, my eyes no sooner met you,
But they coueild and lead you to my heart."

<sup>68</sup> Infect him with venereal disease.

All that you speak ; ay, for a mingled <sup>69</sup> harlot
Is true in nothing but in being false. 412
What ! shall I teach you how to loathe yourself ?

And mildly, too, not without sense or reason ?

BELL. I am content ; I would feign loathe myself,

If you not love me.

HIP. Then if your gracious blood
Be not all wasted, I shall assay to do't.

Lend me your silence, and attention. —

You have no soul : that makes you weigh so
light ;

Heaven's treasure bought it. — 420

And half a crown hath sold it ; for your body
Is like the common shore, <sup>70</sup> that still <sup>71</sup> receives

All the town's filth. The sin of many men

Is within you ; and thus much I suppose :

That if all your committers <sup>72</sup> stood in rank,

They'd make a lane, in which your shame
might dwell,

And with their spaces reach from hence to hell.

Nay, shall I urge it more ? There has been known

As many by one harlot maim'd and dismem-b'red

As would ha' stuff'd an hospital. This I might 430

Apply to you, and perhaps do you right.

O y' are as base as any beast that bears :

Your body is e'en hir'd, and so are theirs.

For gold and sparkling jewels, if he can,

You'll let a Jew get you with Christian ;

Be he a Moor, a Tartar, though his face

Look uglier <sup>73</sup> than a dead man's skull ;

Could the Devil put on a human shape,

If his purse shake out crowns, up then he gets :

Whores will be rid to hell with golden bits. [440

So that y' are crueller than Turks, for they Sell Christians only ; you sell yourselves away.

Why, those that love you, hate you, and will term you

Liquorish <sup>74</sup> damnation ; with themselves half sunk

After the sin is laid out, and e'en curse

Their fruitless riot ; for what one begets

Another poisons ; lust and murder hit : <sup>75</sup>

A tree being often shook, what fruit can knit ?

BELL. O me unhappy !

HIP.

I can vex you more. —

A harlot is like Dunkirk, <sup>76</sup> true to none, 450
Swallows both English, Spanish, fulsome

Dutch,

[Back] <sup>77</sup> door'd Italian, last of all the French ;

And he sticks to you — faith, gives you your diet,

Brings you acquainted first with Monsieur
Doctor,

And then you know what follows.

BELL.

Misery.

Rank, stinking, and most loathsome misery.

HIP. Methinks a toad is happier than a
whore ;

That with one poison swells, with thousands
more

The other stocks her veins. Harlot ? fie, fie !

You are the miserablest creatures breathing,

The very slaves of nature. Mark me else :

You put on rich attires, others' eyes wear
them ; 462

You eat, but to supply your blood with sin ;

And this strange curse e'en haunts you to your graves :

From fools you get, and spend it upon slaves.

Like bears and apes, y' are baited and show tricks

For money ; but your bawd the sweetness licks.

Indeed, you are their journeywomen, and do

All base and damn'd works they list set you
to ;

So that you ne'er are rich ; for do but show
me, 470

In present memory or in ages past,

The fairest and most famous courtesan,

Whose flesh was dear'st, that rais'd the price of sin

And held it up, to whose intemperate bosom

Princes, earls, lords — the worst has been a knight,

The mean'st a gentleman — have off' red up

Whole hecatombs of sighs, and rain'd in showers

Handfuls of gold ; yet, for all this, at last

Diseases suck'd her marrow, then grew so poor

That she has begg'd e'en at a beggar's door.

And, wherein Heav'n has a finger, when this idol, 481

From coast to coast, has leap'd on foreign shores,

<sup>72</sup> All those who have committed sin with you.

<sup>76</sup> This important town on the Straits of Dover was long an object of attack and intrigue by various powers.

And had more worship than th' outlandish <sup>78</sup>
whores,

When several nations have gone over her,
When for each several city she has seen
Her maidenhead has been new, and been sold
dear,

Did live well there, and might have di'd unknown

And undefam'd, back comes she to her own,
And there both miserably lives and dies,
Scorn'd even of those that once ador'd her
eyes; 490

As if her fatal-circled life thus ran,
Her pride should end there where it first began. —

What, do you weep to hear your story read?
Nay, if you spoil your cheeks, I'll read no
more.

BELL. O yes, I pray, proceed;
Indeed, 't will do me good to weep, indeed.

HIP. To give those tears a relish, this I add:
Y' are like the Jews, scatter'd, in no place
certain;

Your days are tedious, your hours burden-
some;

And were't not for full suppers, midnight
revels, 500

Dancing, wine, riotous meetings, which do drown

And bury quite in you all virtuous thoughts,
And on your eyelids hang so heavily

They have no power to look so high as Heaven,
You'd sit and muse on nothing but despair,

Curse that devil lust, that so burns up your
blood,

And in ten thousand shivers break your glass
For his temptation. Say you taste delight,

To have a golden gull from rise to set,<sup>79</sup>
To mete<sup>80</sup> you in his hot luxurious<sup>81</sup> arms;

Yet your nights pay for all: I know you dream 511

Of warrants, whips, and beadles, and then start

At a door's windy creak; think every weasel
To be a constable, and every rat

A long-tail'd officer. Are you now not slaves?
Oh, you have damnation without pleasure for
it

Such is the state of harlots. To conclude,
When you are old and can well paint no more,
You turn bawd and are then worse than before.
Make use of this; farewell.

<sup>81</sup> Lustful.

BELL.

Oh, I pray, stay.

HIP. [I]<sup>82</sup> see Matheo comes not; time
hath barr'd me. 521

Would all the harlots in the town had heard
me. Exit.

BELL. Stay yet a little longer. — No! quite
gone!

Curs'd be that minute — for it was no more,
So soon a maid is chang'd into a whore —
Wherein I first fell; be it for ever black.

Yet why should sweet Hippolito shun mine
eyes,

For whose true love I would become pure-
honest,

Hate the world's mixtures,<sup>83</sup> and the smiles of
gold? 529

Am I not fair? Why should he fly me then?
Fair creatures are desir'd, not scorn'd of men.

How many gallants have drunk healths to
me,

Out of their dagger'd arms,<sup>84</sup> and thought them
blest

Enjoying but mine eyes at prodigal feasts!

And does Hippolito detest my love?

Oh, sure their heedless lusts but flatt'ed me;

I am not pleasing, beautiful, nor young.

Hippolito hath spied some ugly blemish,

Eclipsing all my beauties; I am foul.

"Harlot!" Ay, that's the spot that taints
my soul. 540

What! has he left his weapon here behind him
And gone forgetful? O fit instrument<sup>85</sup>

To let forth all the poison of my flesh!

Thy master hates me, 'cause my blood<sup>86</sup> hath rang'd;<sup>87</sup>

But when 't is forth, then he'll believe I'm chang'd.

[As she is about to stab herself] re-enter

HIPPOLITO.

HIP. Mad woman, what art doing?

BELL.

Either love me,

Or split my heart upon<sup>88</sup> thy rapier's point;

Yet do not, neither; for thou then destroy'st

That which I love thee for, thy virtues. Here,
here;

[Gives sword to HIPPOLITO.]

Th' art crueller, and kill'st me with disdain; 550

To die so sheds no blood, yet 't is worse pain.

Exit HIPPOLITO.

Not speak to me! Not bid farewell? A scorn!<sup>89</sup>

Hated! this must not be; some means I'll try.

Would all whores were as honest now as I!

[Exit.]

[ACT III] — SCENE [I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter CANDIDO, his wife [VIOLA], GEORGE, and two Prentices in the shop; FUSTIGO enters, walking by.

GEO. See, gentlemen, what you lack; a fine holland, a fine cambric; see what you buy.

1 PREN. Holland for shirts, cambric for bands; what is 't you lack?

FUS. [aside] 'Sfoot, I lack 'em all; nay, more, I lack money to buy 'em. Let me see, let me look again; mass, this is the shop. — What, Coz! sweet Coz! how dost, i' faith, since last night after candlelight? We had good sport, i' faith, had we not? And [10 when shall's laugh again?

VIO. When you will, Cousin.

FUS. Spoke like a kind Lacedemonian.<sup>2</sup> I see yonder's thy husband.

VIO. Ay, there's the sweet youth, God bless him.

FUS. And how is 't, Cousin? and how, how is 't, thou squall?<sup>3</sup>

VIO. Well, Cousin, how fare you?

FUS. How fare I? Troth, for sixpence [20 a meal, wench, as well as heart can wish, with calves' chawdrons,<sup>4</sup> and chitterlings; besides, I have a punk after supper, as good as a roasted apple.

CAND. Are you my wife's cousin?

FUS. [I] am, sir; what hast thou to do with that?

CAND. Oh, nothing, but y' are welcome.

FUS. The Devil's dung in thy teeth! I'll be welcome whether thou wilt or no, I. [30 — What ring's this, Coz? Very pretty and fantastical, i' faith; let's see it.

VIO. Pooh! nay, you wrench my finger.

FUS. I ha' sworn I'll ha 't, and I hope you will not let my oaths be crack'd in the ring,<sup>5</sup> will you? — I hope, sir, you are not maliciously<sup>6</sup> at this, for all your great looks. Are you angry?

CAND. Angry? Not I, sir; nay, if she can part

So easily with her ring, 't is with my heart. [40 GEO. Suffer this, sir, and suffer all. A whoreson gull, to —

CAND. Peace, George; when she has reap'd what I have sown,

She'll say one grain tastes better of her own Than whole sheaves gather'd from another's land:

Wit's never good, till bought at a dear hand.

GEO. But in the meantime she makes an ass of somebody.

2 PREN. See, see, sir; as you turn your back thee do nothing but kiss. 50

CAND. No matter, let 'em; when I touch her lip,

I shall not feel his kisses, no, nor miss

Any of her lip; no harm in kissing is.

Look to your business, pray; make up your wares.

FUS. Troth, Coz, and well rememb'ed. I would thou wouldst give me five yards of lawn, to make my punk some falling bands a' the fashion: three falling one upon another, for that's the new edition now. She's out of linen horribly, too; troth, sh'as never [60 a good smock to her back neither, but one that has a great many patches in 't, and that I'm fain to wear myself for want of shift, too. Prithee, put me into wholesome napery,<sup>7</sup> and bestow some clean commodities upon us.

VIO. Reach me those cambrics and the lawns hither.

CAND. What to do, wife? to lavish out my goods upon a fool?

FUS. Fool! 'Snails,<sup>8</sup> eat ' the "fool", [70 or I'll so batter your crown that it shall scarce go for five shillings.<sup>10</sup>

2 PREN. Do you hear, sir? Y' are best be quiet, and say a fool tells you so.

FUS. 'Nails, I think so for ' thou tell'st me.

CAND. Are you angry, sir, because I nam'd thee fool?

Trust me, you are not wise in my own house
And to my face to play the antic<sup>12</sup> thus.
If you'll needs play the madman, choose a stage

Of lesser compass, where few eyes may note [80
Your action's error; but if still you miss,
As here you do, for one clap, ten will hiss.

FUS. 'Zwounds, Cousin, he talks to me as if I were a scurvy tragedian.

2 PREN. [aside] Sirrah George, I ha' thought upon a device, how to break his pate, beat him soundly, and ship him away.

GEO. [aside] Do 't.

2 PREN. [aside] I'll go in, pass thorough the house, give some of our fellow prentices [90 the watchword when they shall enter, then come and fetch my master in by a wile, and place one in the hall to hold him in conference, whilst we cudgel the gull out of his coxcomb.

GEO. [aside] Do 't; away, do 't.

[Exit 2 Prentice.]

VIO. Must I call twice for these cambrics and lawns?

CAND. Nay, see, you anger her, George; prithee despatch.

[1] PREN. Two of the choicest pieces [100 are in the warehouse, sir.

CAND. Go fetch them presently.

[Exit 1 Prentice.]

FUS. Ay, do, make haste, sirrah.

CAND. Why were you such a stranger all this while, being my wife's cousin?

FUS. Stranger?<sup>13</sup> No sir, I'm a natural Milaner born.

CAND. I perceive still it is your natural guise to mistake<sup>14</sup> me; but you are welcome, sir; I much wish your acquaintance. 110

FUS. My acquaintance? I scorn that, i' faith; I hope my acquaintance goes in chains of gold three-and-fifty times double; you know who I mean, Coz; the posts of his gate are a-painting, too.<sup>15</sup>

[Re-enter the 2 Prentice.]

2 PREN. Signior Pandulfo the merchant desires conference with you.

CAND. Signior Pandulfo? I'll be with him straight;

<sup>15</sup> I.e., he will soon be sheriff. At the door of that office large posts, on which it was customary to stick proclamations, were always set up. (See evens.)

Attend your mistress and the gentleman.

[Exit.]

VIO. When do you show those pieces? [120

FUS. Ay, when do you show those pieces?

OMNES. [within] Presently, sir, presently; we are but charging<sup>16</sup> them.

FUS. Come, sirrah, you flat-cap,<sup>17</sup> where be these whites?

[Re-enter 1 Prentice with pieces.]

GEO. Flat-cap! [aside to FUSTIGO] Hark in your ear, sir, y' are a flat fool, an ass, a gull, and I'll thrum<sup>18</sup> you. — Do you see this cambric, sir?

FUS. 'Sfoot, Coz, a good jest! did you [130 hear him? He told me in my ear I was a flat fool, an ass, a gull, and I'll thrum you. — Do you see this cambric, sir? <sup>19</sup>

VIO. What, not my men, I hope?

FUS. No, not your men, but one of your men, i' faith.

1 PREN. I pray, sir, come hither; what say you to this? [Here's] <sup>20</sup> an excellent good one.

FUS. Ay, marry, this likes<sup>21</sup> me well; cut me off some half-score yards. 140

2 PREN. [aside to FUSTIGO] Let your whores cut; y' are an impudent coxcomb; you get none, and yet I'll thrum you. — A very good cambric, sir.

FUS. Again, again, as God judge me! — 'Sfoot, Coz, they stand thrumming here with me all day, and yet I get nothing.

1 PREN. [aside to FUSTIGO] A word, I pray, sir; you must not be angry. Prentices have hot bloods, — young fellows. [150 — What say you to this piece? Look you, 't is so delicate, so soft, so even, so fine a thread, that a lady may wear it.

FUS. 'Sfoot, I think so; if a knight marry my punk, a lady shall wear it. Cut me off twenty yards; th' art an honest lad.

1 PREN. [aside to FUSTIGO] Not without money, gull; and I'll thrum you too.

OMNES. [within] Gull, we'll thrum you.

FUS. O Lord, Sister, did you not hear [160 something cry thrum? Zounds, your men here make a plain ass of me.

VIO. What, to my face so impudent?

GEO. Ay, in a cause so honest, we'll not suffer

Our master's goods to vanish moneyless.

VIO. You will not suffer them!

2 PREN. No, and you may blush,

In going about to vex so mild a breast

As is our master's.

VIO. Take away those pieces;
Cousin, I give them freely.

FUS. Mass, and I'll take 'em as freely. [170

OMNES. We'll make you lay 'em down again more freely.

[Enter other Prentices and attack FUSTIGO with their clubs.]

VIO. Help, help! my brother will be murdered.

Re-enter CANDIDO.

CAND. How now, what coil<sup>22</sup> is here?
Forbear I say.

[Exeunt all the Prentices except GEORGE and the 1 and 2.]

GEO. He calls us flat-caps, and abuses us.

CAND. Why, sirs, do such examples flow
from me?

VIO. They are of your keeping, sir. — Alas, poor Brother.

FUS. I 'faith they ha' pepper'd me, Sister; look, does't<sup>23</sup> not spin? Call you these prentices? I'll ne'er play at cards more when clubs is trump. I have a goodly cox-comb,<sup>24</sup> Sister, have I not? 181

CAND. Sister and brother? brother to my wife?

FUS. If you have any skill in heraldry, you may soon know that; break but her pate, and you shall see her blood and mine is all one.

CAND. A surgeon! run, a surgeon! [Exit
1 Prentice.] — Why then wore you that forged name of cousin?

FUS. Because it's a common thing to call coz and ningle<sup>25</sup> nowadays all the world over. 190

CAND. Cousin! A name of much deceit, folly, and sin;

For under that common abused word,
Many an honest-temp'red citizen
Is made a monster,<sup>26</sup> and his wife train'd out<sup>27</sup>
To foul adulterous action, full of fraud.

I may well call that word a city's bawd.

<sup>24</sup> Head, fool's cap, cock's comb.

<sup>25</sup> Mine ingle; my intimate, crony, or darling.

FUS. Troth, Brother, my sister would needs ha' me take upon me to gull your patience a little; but it has made double gules<sup>28</sup> on my coxcomb. 200

VIO. What, playing the woman? blabbing now, you fool?

CAND. Oh, my wife did but exercise a jest upon your wit.

FUS. 'Sfoot, my wit bleeds for 't, methinks.

CAND. Then let this warning more of sense
afford;

The name of cousin is a bloody word.

FUS. I'll ne'er call coz again whilst I live, to have such a coil about it. This should be a coronation day; for my head runs claret<sup>29</sup> [210 lustily. Exit.

Enter an Officer.

CAND. Go, wish<sup>30</sup> the surgeon to have great respect.<sup>31</sup> — [Exit 2 Prentice.] How now, my friend? What, do they sit to-day?

OFFI. Yes, sir; they expect you at the senate-house.

CAND. I thank your pains; I'll not be last man there. — Exit Officer.

My gown, George; go, my gown. [Exit
GEORGE.] A happy land,

Where grave men meet, each cause to understand;

Whose consciences are not cut out in bribes
To gull the poor man's right, but in even scales,

Peize<sup>32</sup> rich and poor, without corruption's
vails.<sup>33</sup> 220

[Re-enter GEORGE.]

Come, where's the gown?

GEO. I cannot find the key, sir.

CAND. Request it of your mistress.

VIO. Come not to me for any key;

I'll not be troubled to deliver it.

CAND. Good Wife, kind Wife, it is a needful trouble,

But for my gown.

VIO. Moths swallow down your gown!
You set my teeth an<sup>34</sup> edge with talking on't.

CAND. Nay, prithee, sweet; I cannot meet without it;

I should have a great fine set on my head.

<sup>28</sup> The heraldic term for red.

<sup>34</sup> On.

VIO. Set on your coxcomb! tush, fine me no fines! 230

CAND. Believe me, sweet, none greets the senate-house

Without his robe of reverence; that's his gown.

VIO. Well, then, y' are like to cross that custom once;

You get nor key nor gown; and so depart. — [aside] This trick will vex him sure, and fret his heart. Exit.

CAND. Stay, let me see; I must have some device.

My cloak's too short; fie, fie, no cloak will do't;

It must be something fashioned like a gown, With my arms out. O George, come hither, George;

I prithee, lend me thine advice. 240

GEO. Troth, sir, were it any but you, they would break open chest.

CAND. Oh, no! break open chest! that's a thief's office.

Therein you counsel me against my blood; 'Twould show impatience, that; any meek means

I would be glad to embrace. Mass, I have got it.

Go, step up, fetch me down one of the carpets,<sup>35</sup>

The saddest<sup>36</sup> color'd carpet, honest George; Cut thou a hole i' th' middle for my neck,

Two for mine arms. Nay, prithee, look not strange. 250

GEO. I hope you do not think, sir, as you mean.

CAND. Prithee, about it quickly; the hour chides me;

Warily, George, softly; take heed of eyes. Exit GEORGE.

Out of two evils he's accounted wise, That can pick out the least; the fine impos'd For an ungowned senator is about Forty crusadoes,<sup>37</sup> the carpet not 'bove four. Thus have I chosen the lesser evil yet, Preserv'd my patience, foil'd her desperate wit.

Re-enter GEORGE.

GEO. Here, sir, here's the carpet. 260

CAND. Oh, well done, George; we'll cut it just i' th' midst. —

[They cut the carpet.]

'T is very well; I thank thee; help it on.

<sup>37</sup> Crusados, Portuguese coins worth about $.75 each.

GEO. It must come over your head, sir, like a wench's petticoat.

CAND. Th' art in the right, good George; it must indeed.

Fetch me a nightcap; for I'll gird it close, As if my health were queasy. 'T will show well

For a rude, careless nightgown,<sup>38</sup> will't not, think'st?

GEO. Indifferent<sup>39</sup> well, sir, for a nightgown, being girt and pleated. 270

CAND. Ay, and a nightcap on my head.

GEO. That's true, sir; I'll run and fetch one, and a staff. Exit GEORGE.

CAND. For thus they cannot choose but conster<sup>40</sup> it:

One that is out of health, takes no delight, Wears his apparel without appetite, And puts on heedless raiment without form. —

Re-enter GEORGE.

So, so, kind George; [putting on nightcap and taking staff] — be secret now; and, prithee, do not laugh at me till I'm out of sight. 280

GEO. I laugh? Not I, sir.

CAND. Now to the senate-house. Methinks, I'd rather wear, without a frown, A patient carpet than an angry gown. Exit.

GEO. Now looks my master just like one of our carpet knights,<sup>41</sup> only he's somewhat the honestest of the two.

Re-enter [VIOLA,] Candido's wife.

VIO. What, is your master gone?

GEO. Yes, forsooth; his back is but new turn'd.

VIO. And in his cloak? Did he not vex and swear?

GEO. [aside] No, but he'll make you swear anon. — 290

No indeed, he went away like a lamb.

VIO. Key, sink to hell! Still patient, patient still!

I am with child<sup>42</sup> to vex him. Prithee, George, If e'er thou look'st for favor at my hands, Uphold one jest for me.

GEO. Against my master?

VIO. 'T is a mere jest, in faith. Say, wilt thou do't?

<sup>42</sup> I long inordinately.

GEO. Well, what is't?

VIO. Here, take this key; thou know'st where all things lie.

Put on thy master's best apparel, gown, 299
Chain, cap, ruff, everything; be like himself;
And, 'gainst<sup>43</sup> his coming home, walk in the shop;

Feign the same carriage, and his patient look;
'T will breed but a jest, thou know'st; speak,
wilt thou?

GEO. 'T will wrong my master's patience.

VIO. Prithce, George.

GEO. Well, if you'll save me harmless, and put me under covert barn,<sup>44</sup> I am content to please you, provided it may breed no wrong against him.

VIO. No wrong at all. Here take the key;
begone.

If any vex him, this; if not this, none. 310
Exeunt.

SCENE [II]<sup>45</sup>

Enter a Bawd [MISTRESS FINGERLOCK] and ROGER.

MRS. F. O Roger, Roger, where's your mistress, where's your mistress? There's the finest, neatest gentleman at my house, but newly come over. Oh, where is she, where is she, where is she?

ROG. My mistress is abroad, but not amongst 'em. My mistress is ~~not the~~ whore now that you take her for.

MRS. F. How? Is she not a whore? Do you go about to take away her good name, [10
Roger? You are a fine pander indeed.

ROG. I tell you, Madonna Fingerlock, I am not sad for nothing; I ha' not eaten one good meal this three-and-thirty days. I had wont to get sixteen pence by fetching a pottle of hippocras; but now those days are past. We had as good things, Madonna Fingerlock, she within doors, and I without, as any poor young couple in Milan.

MRS. F. God's my life, and is she [20
chang'd now?

ROG. I ha' lost by her squeamishness more than would have builded twelve bawdyhouses.

MRS. F. And had she no time to turn honest but now? What a vile woman is this!

Twenty pound a night, I'll be sworn, Roger, in good gold and no silver. Why here was a time! If she should ha' pick'd out a time, it could not be better! gold enough stirring;
choice of men, choice of hair, choice of [30 beards, choice of legs, and choice of every, every, everything. It cannot sink into my head, that she should be such an ass. Roger,
I never believe it.

ROG. Here she comes now.

Enter BELLAFRONT.

MRS. F. O sweet madonna, on with your loose gown,<sup>46</sup> your felt<sup>47</sup> and your feather; there's the sweetest, prop'rest,<sup>48</sup> gallantest gentleman at my house; he smells all of musk and ambergris, his pocket full of crowns, [40 flame-colored doublet, red satin hose,<sup>49</sup> carnation silk stockings, and a leg and a body, oh!

BELL. Hence thou, our sex's monster, poisonous bawd,
Lust's factor,<sup>50</sup> and damnation's orator,
Gossip<sup>51</sup> of hell! Were all the harlots' sins
Which the whole world contains numb'red
together,

Thine far exceeds them all; of all the creatures
That ever were created, thou art basest.

What serpent would beguile thee of thy office?
It is detestable; for thou liv'st 50
Upon the dregs of harlots, guard'st the door,
Whilst couples go to dancing. O coarse devil!
Thou art the bastard's curse — thou brand'st
his birth;

The lecher's French disease, for thou dry-
suck'st him;

The harlot's poison, and thine own confusion.

MRS. F. Marry come up, with a pox!
Have you nobody to rail against but your bawd now?

BELL. And you, knave pander, kinsman to a bawd.

ROG. [to MISTRESS FINGERLOCK] You and
I, madonna, are cousins. 60

BELL. Of the same blood and making, near allied;

Thou, that slave to sixpence, base-metall'd villain!

ROG. Sixpence? Nay, that's not so;
I never took under two shillings fourpence;
I hope I know my fee.

<sup>43</sup> In readiness for.

<sup>44</sup> That he may rob with impunity. "Barn" is a corruption of "baron," and in law a wife is said to be under covert baron, being sheltered by marriage under her husband. (Dyce.)

Scena 8.

BELL. I know not against which most to inveigh ;

For both of you are damn'd so equally.

Thou never spar'st for oaths, swear'st anything,

As if thy soul were made of shoe-leather : 69
" God damn me, gentlemen, if she be within ! "
When in the next room she's found dallying.

ROG. If it be my vocation to swear, every man in his vocation. I hope my betters swear and damn themselves, and why should not I ?

BELL. Roger, you cheat kind gentlemen.

ROG. The more gulls they.

BELL. Slave, I cashier thee.

MRS. F. An you do cashier him, he shall be entertain'd.

ROG. Shall I ? Then blurt a' your service.

BELL. As hell would have it, entertain'd by you !

I dare the Devil himself to match those two. Exit.

MRS. F. Marry, gup,<sup>62</sup> are you grown so holy, so pure, so honest, with a pox ?

ROG. Scurvy honest punk ! But stay, madonna, how must our agreement be now ? For, you know, I am to have all the comings-in at the hall-door, and you at the chamber-door. 90

MRS. F. True, Roger, except my vails.<sup>63</sup>

ROG. Vails ? What vails ?

MRS. F. Why as thus : if a couple come in a coach, and light to lie down a little, then, Roger, that's my fee, and you may walk abroad ; for the coachman himself is their pander.

ROG. Is'a<sup>64</sup> so ? In truth I have almost forgot, for want of exercise. But how if I fetch this citizen's wife to that gull, and that madonna to that gallant, how then ? 101

MRS. F. Why then, Roger, you are to have sixpence a lane ;<sup>65</sup> so many lanes, so many sixpences.

ROG. Is't so ? Then I see we two shall agree, and live together.

MRS. F. Ay, Roger, so long as there be any taverns and bawdyhouses in Milan.

Exeunt.

SCENE [III] <sup>58</sup>

Enter BELLAFRONT with lute, pen, ink, and paper being plac'd before her.

SONG

The courtier's flatt'ring jewels,
Temptation's only fuels ;
The lawyer's ill-got moneys,
That suck up poor bees' honeys ;
The citizen's son's riot,
The gallant[s] costly diet :
Silks and velvets, pearls and ambers,
Shall not draw me to their chambers.
Silks and velvets, &c.

She writes.

Oh, 't is in vain to write ! it will not please ; [10
Ink on this paper would ha' but presented
The foul black spots that stick upon my soul,
And rather make me loathsomer, than wrought
My love's impression in Hippolito's thought.
No, I must turn the chaste leaves of my breast,
And pick out some sweet means to breed my
rest.

Hippolito, believe me, I will be
As true unto thy heart, as thy heart to thee,
And hate all men, their gifts, and company. [19

Enter MATHEO, CASTRUCHIO, FLUELLO, [and] PIORATTO.

MAT. You, goody punk, subaudi<sup>67</sup> cockatrice,<sup>68</sup> oh, y' are a sweet whore of your promise, are you not, think you ? How well you came to supper to us last night ! Mew, a whore, and break her word ! Nay, you may blush, and hold down your head at it well enough. 'Sfoot, ask these gallants if we stay'd not till we were as hungry as sergeants.

FLU. Ay, and their yeom[e]n too.

CAS. Nay, faith, acquaintance, let me tell you, you forgat yourself too much. We [30 had excellent cheer, rare vintage, and were drunk after supper.

PIO. And when we were in our woodcocks,<sup>69</sup> sweet rogue, a brace of gulls, dwelling here in the city, came in, and paid all the shot.

MAT. Pox on her ! let her alone.

BELL. Oh, I pray do, if you be gentlemen ;

I pray, depart the house. Beshrew<sup>70</sup> the door

For being so easily entreated ! Faith,
I lent but little ear unto your talk ; 40
My mind was busied otherwise, in troth,

<sup>62</sup> Go up, get along.

And so your words did unregarded pass.
Let this suffice : I am not as I was.

FLU. I am not what I was ! No, I'll be sworn thou art not ; for thou wert honest at five, and now th' art a punk at fifteen. Thou wert yesterday a simple whore, and now th' art a cunning, cony-catching<sup>61</sup> baggage to-day.

BELL. I'll say I'm worse ; I pray, forsake me then ; 50

I do desire you leave me, gentlemen,
And leave yourselves. Oh, be not what you are,

Spendthrifts of soul and body ;
Let me persuade you to forsake all harlots,
Worse than the deadliest poisons, they are worse,

For o'er their souls hangs an eternal curse.
In being slaves to slaves, their labors perish ;
Th' are seldom blest with fruit ; for, ere it blossoms,

Many a worm confounds it.
They have no issue but foui ugly ones, 60
That run along with them, e'en to their graves ;
For, 'stead of children, they breed rank diseases,

And all you gallants can bestow on them
Is that French infant, which ne'er acts, but speaks.

What shallow son and heir, then, foolish gallant,

Would waste all his inheritance, to purchase
A filthy, loath'd disease, and pawn his body
To a dry evil ? That usury's worst of all,
When th' interest will eat out the principal.

MAT. [aside] 'Sfoot, she gulls 'em the [70 best ! This is always her fashion, when she would be rid of any company that she cares not for, to enjoy mine alone.

FLU. What's here ? instructions, admonitions, and caveats ? Come out, you scab-bard of vengeance.

MAT. Fluello, spurn your hounds when they foist ;<sup>62</sup> you shall not spurn my punk ;
I can tell you my blood is vex'd.

FLU. Pox a' your blood ! make it a [80 quarrel.

MAT. Y' are a slave ! Will that serve turn ?

OMNES. 'Sblood, hold, hold !

CAS. Matheo, Fluello, for shame, put up.<sup>63</sup>

MAT. Spurn my sweet varlet !<sup>64</sup>

<sup>64</sup> This line is omitted by Pearson, and by all qtos. seen by present Ed. except Qq. and n.d.

BELL. Oh, how many thus,
Mov'd with a little folly, have let out
Their souls in brothel-houses, fell down and died

Just at their harlot's foot, as't were in pride.

FLU. Matheo, we shall meet.

MAT. Ay, ay, anywhere, saving at church ; 90

Pray take heed we meet not there.

FLU. Adieu, damnation.

CAS. Cockatrice, farewell.

PRO. There's more deceit in women than in hell.

Exeunt [CASTRUCHIO, FLUELLO, and PIORATTO].

MAT. Ha, ha, thou doest gull 'em so rarely, so naturally ! If I did not think thou hadst been in earnest ! Thou art a sweet rogue for 't, i' faith.

BELL. Why are not you gone too, Signior
Matheo ?

I pray depart my house ; you may believe
me ;

In troth, I have no part of harlot in me. [100

MAT. How 's this ?

BELL. Indeed, I love you not, but hate you worse

Than any man, because you were the first
Gave money for my soul. You brake the ice,
Which after turn'd a puddle ; I was led
By your temptation, to be miserable.

I pray seek out some other that will fall,
Or rather, I pray, seek out none at all.

MAT. Is't possible to be impossible ? An honest whore ! I have heard many hon- [110 est wenches turn strumpets with a wet finger,<sup>65</sup> but for a harlot to turn honest is one of Hercules' labors. It was more easy for him in one night to make fifty queans, than to make one of them honest again in fifty years.
Come, I hope thou dost but jest.

BELL. 'T is time to leave off jesting ; I had almost

Jested away salvation. I shall love you,
If you will soon forsake me.

MAT. God buy thee.<sup>66</sup>

BELL. Oh, tempt no more women ! Shun their weighty curse ! 120

Women, at best, are bad ; make them not worse.

You gladly seek our sex's overthrow,

But not to raise our states. For all your wrongs,

<sup>66</sup> Goodbye.

Will you vouchsafe me but due recompense,
To marry with me?

MAT. How! marry with a punk, a cockatrice, a harlot? Marry, fogh, I'll be burnt thorough the nose first.

BELL. Why, la! these are your oaths! You love to undo <sup>67</sup> us,
To put Heaven from us, whilst our best hours waste ; 130

You love to make us lewd, but never chaste.
MAT. I'll hear no more of this; this ground upon,

Th' art damn'd for alt'ring thy religion.

Exit.

BELL. Thy lust and sin speak so much.
Go thou, my ruin,
The first fall my soul took. By my example I hope few maidens now will put their heads Under men's girdles; who least trusts is most wise :

Men's oaths do cast a mist before our eyes.

My best of wit, be ready; now I go,

By some device to greet Hippolito. 140

[ACT IV] — SCENE [I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter a Servant setting out a table, on which he places a skull, a picture, a book, and a taper.

SER. So; this is Monday morning, and now must I to my huswif'ry. Would I had been created a shoemaker, for all the gentle craft are gentlemen every Monday by their copy,<sup>2</sup> and scorn then to work one true stitch. My master means sure to turn me into a student, for here's my book, here my desk, here my light, this my close chamber, and here my punk; so that this dull, drowsy first day of the week makes me half a priest, half a [10 chandler, half a painter, half a sexton, ay, and half a bawd; for all this day my office is to do nothing but keep the door. To prove it, look you, this good face and yonder gentleman, so soon as ever my back's turn'd, will be naught <sup>3</sup> together.

Enter HIPPOLITO.

HIP. Are all the windows shut?

SER. Close, sir, as the fist of a courtier that hath stood in three reigns.

HIP. Thou art a faithful servant, and observant 20

The calendar both of my solemn vows
And ceremonious sorrow. Get thee gone;
I charge thee on thy life, let not the sound
Of any woman's voice pierce through that door.

SER. If they do, my Lord, I'll pierce some of them.

What will your Lordship have to breakfast?

HIP. Sighs.

SER. What to dinner?

HIP. Tears.

SER. The one of them, my Lord, will fill you too full of wind, the other wet you [30 too much. What to supper?

HIP. That which now thou canst not get me, the constancy of a woman.

SER. Indeed that's harder to come by than ever was Ostend.<sup>4</sup>

HIP. Prithce, away.

SER. I'll make away myself presently, which few servants will do for their lords, but rather help to make them away. Now to my door-keeping; I hope to pick something [40 out of it. Exit.

HIP. [taking the picture] My Infeliche's face, her brow, her eye,

The dimple on her cheek; and such sweet skill

Hath from the cunning workman's pencil flown,

These lips look fresh and lively as her own,
Seeming to move and speak. 'Las! now I see
The reason why fond <sup>5</sup> women love to buy Adulterate complexion! Here, 't is read,
False colors last after the true be dead.

Of all the roses grafted on her cheeks, 50
Of all the graces dancing in her eyes,
Of all the music set upon her tongue,
Of all that was past woman's excellence
In her white bosom — look! a painted board
Circumscribes all. Earth can no bliss afford.
Nothing of her but this? This cannot speak;
It has no lap for me to rest upon,
No lip worth tasting; here the worms will feed,

As in her coffin. Hence, then, idle art;
True love's best pictur'd in a true-love's heart. 60

Here art thou drawn, sweet maid, till this be dead;

So that thou liv'st twice, twice art buried.

<sup>4</sup> After a siege of three years and ten weeks Ostend was captured by the Marquis of Spinola on September 8, 1604.

<sup>5</sup> Foolish.

Thou figure of my friend, lie there. — What's here? [Takes the skull.]

Perhaps this shrewd pate was mine enemy's.
'Las! say it were; I need not fear him now!
For all his braves, his contumelious breath,
His frowns, though dagger-pointed, all his plot,

Though ne'er so mischievous, his Italian pills,
His quarrels, and that common fence, his law,
See, see, they're all eaten out; here's not left one; 70

How clean they're pick'd away! to the bare bone!

How mad are mortals, then, to rear great names

On tops of swelling houses! or to wear out
Their fingers' ends in dirt, to scrape up gold!
Not caring, so 'that sumpter-horse,' the back,
Be hung with gaudy trappings, with what coarse,

Yea, rags most beggarly, they clothe the soul;
Yet, after all, their gayness looks thus foul.
What fools are men to build a garish tomb,
Only to save the carcass whilst it rots, 80
To maintain't long in stinking, make good carrion,

But leave no good deeds to preserve them sound;
For good deeds keep men sweet, long above ground.

And must all come to this? fools, wise, all hither?

Must all heads thus at last be laid together?
Draw me my picture then, thou grave, neat workman,

After this fashion, not like this; 'these colors
In time, kissing but air, will be kiss'd off.

But here's a fellow; that which he lays on Till doomsday alters not complexion. 90
Death's the best painter then; they that draw shapes,

And live by wicked faces, are but God's apes.
They come but near the life, and there they stay.

This fellow draws life too; his art is fuller;
The pictures which he makes are without color.<sup>9</sup>

Re-enter his Servant.

SER. Here's a person would speak with you, sir.

<sup>9</sup> With a pun on "color" = false appearance.

HIP. Ha!

SER. A parson,<sup>10</sup> sir, would speak with you.

HIP. Vicar? 100

SER. Vicar! No, sir; has too good a face to be a vicar yet; a youth, a very youth.

HIP. What youth? Of man or woman?

Lock the doors.

SER. If it be a woman, marrow-bones<sup>11</sup> and potato pies<sup>12</sup> keep me for meddling with her, for the thing has got the breeches; 't is a male-varlet sure, my Lord, for a woman's tailor ne'er measur'd him.

HIP. Let him give thee his message and be gone.

SER. He says he's Signior Matheo's [110 man, but I know he lies.

HIP. How doest thou know it?

SER. 'Cause has ne'er a beard. 'T is his boy, I think, sir, whosoe'er paid for his nursing.

HIP. Send him and keep the door.

How? from Matheo?

BELL. Yes, my Lord.

HIP. Art sick?

BELL. Not all in health, my Lord.

HIP. Keep off.

BELL. I do. —

[aside] Hard fate when women are compell'd to woo.

HIP. This paper does speak nothing.

HIP. Do do; read out.

BELL. I am already out!<sup>13</sup>

Look on my face, and read the strangest story!

SER. Call you, my Lord?

HIP. Thou slave, thou hast let in the Devil.

SER. Lord bless us, where? He's not cloven, my Lord, that I can see! Besides, the Devil goes more like a gentleman than a page. Good my Lord, buon coraggio.<sup>14</sup>

HIP. Thou hast let in a woman in man's shape; 140

And thou art damn'd for 't.

SER. Not damn'd, I hope, For putting in a woman to a lord,

HIP. Fetch me my rapier — do not; I shall kill thee.

Purge this infected chamber of that plague, That runs upon me thus! Slave, thrust her hence.

SER. Alas, my Lord, I shall never be able to thrust her hence without help! — Come, mermaid, you must to sea again.

BELL. Hear me but speak; my words shall be all music;

Hear me but speak. [Knocking within.]

HIP. Another beats the door, [150 Tother she-devil; look.

SER. Why, then, hell's broke loose.

HIP. Hence; guard the chamber; let no more come on; Exit [Servant].

I'll have thee fellows? All are fellows there.

BELL. Be greater than a king; save not a body,

But from eternal shipwreck keep a soul.

If not, and that<sup>16</sup> again sin's path I tread, The grief be mine, the guilt fall on thy head.

HIP. Stay, and take physic for it: read this book;

Ask counsel of this head, what's to be done.<sup>17</sup>

He'll strike it dead, that 't is damnation

If you turn Turk again.<sup>18</sup> Oh, do it not;

The soul that, leaving chastity's white shore, Swims in hot sensual streams, is the Devil's whore. —

Re-enter his Servant.

How now, who comes?

SER. No more knaves, my Lord, that wear smocks. Here's a letter from Doctor Benedict. I would not enter his man, though he had hairs at his mouth, for fear he should [200 be a woman, for some women have beards; marry, they are half witches. Exeunt [HIPPOLITO and Servant].

BELL. The lowest fall can be but into hell.

It does not move him; I must therefore fly

From this undoing<sup>21</sup> city, and with tears [210]
Wash off all anger from my father's brow.

He cannot, sure, but joy, seeing me new born.

A woman honest first, and then turn whore,

Is, as with me, common to thousands more;
But from a strumpet to turn chaste, that sound

Has oft been heard, that woman hardly found.
Exit.

SCENE [II]<sup>22</sup>

Enter FUSTIGO, CRAMBO, and POH.<sup>23</sup>

FUS. Hold up your hands, gentlemen; here's one, two, three [giving money] — nay, I warrant they are sound pistoles, and without flaws; I had them of my sister and I know she uses to put [up]<sup>24</sup> nothing that's crack'd — three, four, five, six, seven, eight, and nine; by this hand, bring me but a piece of his blood, and you shall have nine more. I'll lurk in a tavern not far off, and provide supper to close up the end of the tragedy. The linen- [10] draper's, remember. Stand to't, I beseech you, and play your parts perfectly.

CRAM. Look you, signior, 't is not your gold that we weigh —

FUS. Nay, nay, weigh it and spare not; if it lack one grain of corn, I'll give you a bushel of wheat to make it up.

CRAM. But by your favor, signior, which of the servants is it? because we'll punish justly.

FUS. Marry, 't is the head man; you [20] shall taste him by his tongue; a pretty, tall, prating fellow, with a Tuscalonian<sup>25</sup> beard.

POH. Tuscalonian! very good.

FUS. Cod's life, I was ne'er so thrumm'd since I was a gentleman. My coxcomb was dry-beaten,<sup>26</sup> as if my hair had been hemp.

CRAM. We'll dry-beat some of them.

FUS. Nay, it grew so high, that my sister cried murder out, very manfully. I have her consent, in a manner, to have him [30] pepper'd; else I'll not do 't, to win more than ten cheaters do at a rifling.<sup>27</sup> Break but his pate, or so, only his mazer,<sup>28</sup> because I'll have his head in a cloth as well as mine; he's a linen-draper, and may take enough. I could enter mine action of battery against him, but we may [perhaps]<sup>29</sup> be both dead and rotten before the lawyers would end it.

CRAM. No more to do, but ensconce yourself i' th' tavern; provide no great cheer: [40] [a] couple of capons, some pheasants, plovers, an orangeado<sup>30</sup> pie, or so. But, how bloody so-e'er the day be, sally you not forth.

FUS. No, no; nay, if I stir, somebody shall stink. I'll not budge; I'll lie like a dog in a manger.

CRAM. Well, well, to the tavern; let not our supper be raw, for you shall have blood enough, your bellyful.

FUS. That's all, so God sa' me, I thirst [50] after; blood for blood, bump for bump, nose for nose, head for head, plaster for plaster; and so farewell. What shall I call your names? because I'll leave word, if any such come to the bar.

CRAM. My name is Corporal Crambo.

POH. And mine, Lieutenant Poh.

CRAM. Poh is as tall a man as ever opened oyster; I would not be the Devil to meet Poh. Farewell. 60

FUS. Nor I, by this light, if Poh be such a Poh.
Exeunt.

[SCENE III]<sup>31</sup>

Enter Candido's wife [VIOLA] in her shop, and the two Prentices.

VIO. What's a'clock now?

2 PREN. 'T is almost twelve.

VIO. That's well;

The Senate will leave wording presently.

But is George ready?

2 PREN. Yes, forsooth, he's furbish'd.

VIO. Now, as you ever hope to win my favor,

Throw both your duties and respects on him
With the like awe as if he were your master;
Let not your looks betray it with a smile
Or jeering glance to any customer;

Keep a true settled countenance, and beware You laugh not, whatsoever you hear or see. [10

2 PREN. I warrant you, mistress; let us alone for keeping our countenance; for, if I list, there's never a fool in all Milan shall make me laugh, let him play the fool never so like an ass, whether it be the fat court fool, or the lean city fool.

VIO. Enough, then; call down George.

2 PREN. I hear him coming.

Enter GEORGE [in Candido's apparel].

VIO. Be ready with your legs,<sup>32</sup> then; let me see How court'sy would become him.—Gallantly! Beshrew my blood, a proper seemly man. [20 Of a choice carriage, walks with a good port.

GEO. I thank you, Mistress; my back's broad enough, now my master's gown's on.

VIO. Sure, I should think 't were the least of sin,

To mistake the master, and to let him in.

GEO. 'T were a good comedy of errors that, i' faith.

2 PREN. Whist, whist, my master!

Enter CANDIDO, [dressed as before in the carpet; he stares at GEORGE,] and exit presently.

VIO. You all know your tasks. — God's my life, what's that he has got upon's back? [30 Who can tell?

GEO. [aside] That can I, but I will not.

VIO. Girt about him like a madman. What, has he lost his cloak, too? This is the maddest fashion that e'er I saw. What said he, George, when he pass'd by thee?

GEO. Troth, mistress, nothing; not so much as a bee, he did not hum; not so much as a bawd, he did not hem; not so much as a cuckold, he did not ha; neither hum, [40 hem, nor ha; only star'd me in the face, pass'd along, and made haste in, as if my looks had work'd with him, to give him a stool.<sup>33</sup>

VIO. Sure he's vex'd now; this trick has mov'd his spleen;

He's ang'red now, because he utt'red nothing;

And wordless wrath breaks out more violent. Maybe he'll strive for place, when he comes down;

But if thou lov'st me, George, afford him none.

GEO. Nay, let me alone to play my master's prize,<sup>34</sup> as long as my mistress warrants [50 me. I'm sure I have his best clothes on, and I scorn to give place to any that is inferior in apparel to me; that's an axiom, a principle, and is observ'd as much as the fashion. Let that persuade you, then, that I'll shoulder with him for the upper hand in the shop, as long as this chain will maintain it.

VIO. Spoke with the spirit of a master, though with the tongue of a prentice.

Re-enter CANDIDO like<sup>35</sup> a prentice.

Why how now, madman? What, in your tricksy<sup>36</sup> coats? 60

CAND. O peace, good Mistress.

Enter CRAMBO and POH.

See what you lack! What is't you buy? Pure calicos, fine hollands, choice cambrics, neat lawns! See what you buy! Pray come near; my master will use you well; he can afford you a pennyworth.

VIO. Ay, that he can, out of a whole piece of lawn, i' faith.

CAND. Pray see your choice here, gentlemen. 70

VIO. O fine fool! what, a madman! a patient madman! Who ever heard of the like? Well, sir, I'll fit you and your humor presently. What cross-points? <sup>37</sup> I'll untie 'em all in a trice;

I'll vex you i' faith. Boy, take your cloak, quick, come. Exit [with I Prentice].

CAND. Be covered,<sup>38</sup> George; this chain and welted<sup>39</sup> gown

Bare to this coat? Then the world's upside down.

GEO. Umh, umh, hum.

CRAM. That's the shop, and there's the fellow. 80

POH. Ay, but the master is walking in there.

CRAM. No matter, we'll in.

POH. 'Sblood, doest long to lie in limbo? <sup>40</sup>

CRAM. An <sup>41</sup> limbo be in hell, I care not.

<sup>34</sup> "A quibble. In the art of fencing there were three degrees, — a Master's, a Provost's, and a Scholar's, for each of which a prize was played publicly." (Dyce.)

<sup>40</sup> Jail; but the word also means a region on the borders of hell.

<sup>32</sup> Bows.

<sup>33</sup> I.e., as if my looks had had a cathartic effect on him.

CAND. Look you, gentlemen, your choice. Cambrics?

CRAM. No, sir, some shirting.

CAND. You shall.

CRAM. Have you none of this strip'd canvas for doublets? 90

CAND. None strip'd, sir; but <sup>42</sup> plain.

2 PREN. I think there be one piece strip'd within.

GEO. Step, sirrah, and fetch it; hum, hum, hum.

[Exit CANDIDO <sup>43</sup> and returns with the piece.]

CAND. Look you, gentlemen, I'll make but one spreading; here's a piece of cloth, fine, yet shall wear like iron. 'T is without fault; take this upon my word, 't is without fault.

CRAM. Then 't is better than you, [100 sirrah.

CAND. Ay, and a number more. Oh, that each soul Were but as spotless as this innocent white, And had as few breaks in it.

CRAM. 'T would have some then; There was a fray here last day in this shop.

CAND. There was, indeed, a little flea-bit-ing.

POH. A gentleman had his pate broke; call you that but a flea-biting?

CAND. He had so.

CRAM. Zouns, do you stand in 't? 110

He strikes him.

GEO. 'Sfoot! clubs, clubs! Prentices, down with 'em!

[Enter several Prentices with clubs, who disarm CRAMBO and POH.]

Ah, you rogues; strike a citizen in 's shop?

CAND. None of you stir, I pray; forbear, good George.

CRAM. I beseech you, sir, we mistook our marks; deliver us our weapons.

GEO. Your head bleeds, sir; cry clubs.

CAND. I say you shall not; pray be patient; Give them their weapons. Sirs, you're best be gone;

I tell you here are boys more tough than bears. Hence, ~~for more fate do walk about your ears.~~ 120

BOTH. We thank you, sir. Exeunt.

CAND. You shall not follow them;

Let them alone, pray; this did me no harm. Troth, I was cold, and the blow made me warm;

I thank 'em for 't. Besides, I had decreed <sup>44</sup> To have a vein prick'd; I did mean to bleed; So that there's money sav'd. They are honest men;

Pray use 'em well when they appear again.

GEO. Yes, sir, we'll use 'em like honest men.

CAND. Ay, well said, George, like honest men, though they be arrant knaves, for [13c that's the phrase of the city. Help to lay up these wares.

Re-enter his Wife with Officers.

VIO. Yonder he stands.

[1] OFF. What in a prentice-coat?

VIO. Ay, ay; mad, mad; pray take heed.

CAND. How now! what news with them? What make they <sup>46</sup> with my wife?

Officers, is she attach'd?—Look to your wares.

VIO. He talks to himself; oh, he's much gone indeed.

[1] OFF. Pray, pluck up a good heart; be not so fearful.—

Sirs, hark; we'll gather to him by degrees. 140

VIO. Ay, ay, by degrees, I pray. O me! What makes he with the lawn in his hand? He'll tear all the ware in my shop.

[1] OFF. Fear not; we'll catch him on a sudden.

VIO. You had need do so; pray take heed of your warrant.

[1] OFF. I warrant, mistress. Now, Signior Candido.

CAND. Now, sir, what news with you, sir?

VIO. What news with you? he says; oh, he's far gone! 150

[1] OFF. I pray, fear nothing; let's alone with him.—

Signior, you look not like yourself, methinks;—

Steal you a' tother side;—y' are chang'd, y' are alt' red.

CAND. Chang'd, sir? why true, sir. Is change strange? 'T is not The fashion unless it alter. Monarchs turn To beggars, beggars creep into the nests Of princes, masters serve their prentices, Ladies their serving men, men turn to women.

[1] OFF. And women turn <sup>46</sup> to men.

CAND. Ay, and women turn to men, [160 you say true. Ha, ha, a mad world, a mad world. [Officers seize CANDIDO.]

[1] OFF. Have we caught you, sir?

CAND. Caught me! Well, well, you have caught me.

VIO. He laughs in your faces.

GEO. A rescue, prentices! my master's catch-poll'd.<sup>47</sup>

[1] OFF. I charge you, keep the peace, or have your legs

Gartered with irons! We have from the Duke
A warrant strong enough for what we do.

CAND. I pray, rest quiet; I desire no rescue.

VIO. La, he desires no rescue; 'las, poor
heart, 170

He talks against himself.

CAND. Well, what's the matter?

[1] OFF. Look to that arm. Pray, make sure work; double the cord.

[Officers bind CANDIDO.]

CAND. Why, why?

VIO. Look how his head goes. Should he get but loose,

Oh, 't were as much as all our lives were worth.

[1] OFF. Fear not; we'll make all sure, for our own safety.

CAND. Are you at leisure now? Well, what's the matter?

Why do I enter into bonds thus, ha?

[1] OFF. Because y' are mad, put fear upon your wife. 180

VIO. Oh, ay; I went in danger of my life
every minute.

CAND. What, am I mad, say you, and I not know it?

[1] OFF. That proves you mad, because you know it not.

VIO. Pray talk to him as little as you can;
You see he's too far spent.

CAND. Bound with strong cord —
A sister's thread,<sup>48</sup> i' faith, had been enough
To lead me anywhere. — Wife, do you
long?

You are mad too, or else you do me wrong.

GEO. But are you mad indeed, Master?

CAND. My wife says so; [190
And what she says, George, is all truth, you
know. —

<sup>46</sup> Incline.

<sup>47</sup> Arrested, especially for debt.

<sup>48</sup> There was such a thread; perhaps it got its name from "sister" = nun. Q: Sisters.

And whither now, to Bethlem Monastery,<sup>49</sup>
Ha? whither?

[1] OFF. Faith, e'en to the madmen's pound.

CAND. A' God's name! Still I feel my patience sound. [Exit with Officers.]

GEO. Come, we'll see whither he goes. If the master be mad, we are his servants, and must follow his steps; we'll be madcaps too.
Farewell, Mistress; you shall have us all in Bedlam. Exeunt [GEORGE and Prentices].

VIO. I think I ha' fitted you now, you and your clothes. 200

If this move not his patience, nothing can;
I'll swear then I have a saint, and not a man.
Exit.

SCENE [IV] <sup>50</sup>

Enter DUKE, DOCTOR [BENEDICT], FLUELLO, CASTRUCHIO, [and] PIORATTO.

DUKE. Give us a little leave. —

[Exeunt FLUELLO, CASTRUCHIO, and PIORATTO.]

Doctor, your news.

DOCT. I sent for him, my Lord; at last he came,

And did receive all speech that went from
me,

As gilded pills made to prolong his health.

My credit with him wrought it; for some men
Swallow even empty hooks, like fools that fear
No drowning where 't is deepest, 'cause 't is clear.

In th' end we sat and ate; a health I drank
To Infeliche's sweet departed soul.

This train <sup>51</sup> I knew would take.

DUKE. 'T was excellent. [10

DOCT. He fell with such devotion on his knees,

To pledge the same —

DUKE. Fond, superstitious fool!

DOCT. That had he been inflam'd with zeal of prayer,

He could not pour 't out with more reverence.
About my neck he hung, wept on my cheek,
Kiss'd it, and swore he would adore my lips,
Because they brought forth Infeliche's name.

DUKE. Ha, ha; alack, alack.

<sup>49</sup> London's lunatic asylum.

<sup>50</sup> Not precisely located; presumably the grounds of the Duke's palace; for the scene is continuous, although the Doctor's summoning of the supposedly deceased Hippolito to the very spot where the Duke heard the report of his death would be absurd on a picture-stage. Old eds. Scena 13.

<sup>51</sup> Stratagem.

DOCT. The cup he lifts up high, and thus he said :
" Here, noble maid ! " — drinks, and was poisoned. 20

DUKE. And died ?

DOCT. And died, my Lord.

DUKE. Thou in that word
Hast piec'd mine aged hours out with more years

Than thou hast taken from Hippolito.
A noble youth he was, but lesser branches, Hind'ring the greater's growth, must be lopp'd off

And feed the fire. Doctor, w' are now all thine,

And use us so ; be bold.

DOCT. Thanks, gracious Lord ;
My honored Lord, —

DUKE. Ilmh.

DOCT. I do beseech your Grace to bury deep, 30
This bloody act of mine.

DUKE. Nay, nay, for <sup>52</sup> that,
Doctor, look you to 't, me it shall not move ;
They're curs'd that ill do, not that ill do love.

DOCT. You throw an angry forehead on my face ;

But be you pleas'd backward thus far to look,
That for your good this evil I undertook —

DUKE. Ay, ay, we conster <sup>53</sup> so.

DOCT. And only for your love.

DUKE. Confess'd ; 't is true.

DOCT. Nor let it stand against me as a bar
To thrust me from your presence ; nor believe,
As <sup>54</sup> princes have quick thoughts, that now
my finger 41

Being dipp'd in blood, I will not spare the
hand,

But that for gold — as what can gold not do ? —
I may be hir'd to work the like on you.

DUKE. Which to prevent —

DOCT. 'T is from my heart as far.

DUKE. No matter, doctor ; 'cause I'll fearless sleep,

And that you shall stand clear of that suspicion,

I banish thee for ever from my court.

This principle is old, but true as fate :

Kings may love treason, but the traitor hate.

Exit.

DOCT. Is't so ? Nay then, Duke, your stale principle, 51

With one as stale, the doctor thus shall quit :
He falls himself that digs another's pit.

Enter the Doctor's Man.

How now ! Where is he ? will he meet me ?

MAN. Meet you, sir ? He might have met with three fencers in this time, and have received less hurt than by meeting one doctor of physie. Why, sir, has walk'd under the old abbey wall yonder this hour, till he's more cold than a citizen's country house in [60
January.<sup>55</sup> You may smell him behind, sir ;
la you, yonder he comes.

Enter HIPPOLITO.

DOCT. Leave me.

MAN. I' th' lurch, if you will. Exit.

DOCT. O my most noble friend !

HIP. Few but yourself
Could have entic'd me thus to trust the
air

With my close sighs. You [sent] <sup>56</sup> for me ;
what news ?

DOCT. Come, you must doff this black, dye that pale cheek

Into his <sup>57</sup> own color, go attire yourself Fresh as a bridegroom when he meets his bride. 70

The Duke has done much treason to thy love ;
'T is now revealed ; 't is now to be reveng'd.
Be merry, honor'd friend : thy lady lives.

HIP. What lady ?

DOCT. Infeliche ; she's reviv'd.
Reviv'd ? Alack ! death never had the heart
To take breath from her.

HIP. Umh ; I thank you, sir ;
Physic prolongs life, when it cannot save :
This helps not my hopes ; mine are in their
grave ;

You do some wrong to mock me.

DOCT. By that love
Which I have ever borne you, what I speak [80
Is truth ; the maiden lives ; that funeral, Duke's tears, the mourning, was all counterfeit.

A sleepy draught cozen'd the world and you ;
I was his minister, and then chamb'red up,
To stop discovery.

HIP. O treacherous Duke !

DOCT. He cannot hope so certainly for
bliss,
As he believes that I have poison'd you.

He woo'd me to't; I yielded, and confirm'd
him
In his most bloody thoughts.

HIP. A very devil!

DOCT. Her did he closely coach to Bergamo, 90

And thither —

HIP. Will I ride; stood Bergamo
In the low countries of black hell, I'll to her.

DOCT. You shall to her, but not to Bergamo.

How passion makes you fly beyond yourself!
Much of that weary journey I ha' cut off;
For she by letters hath intelligence

Of your supposed death, her own interment,
And all those plots which that false Duke,
her father,

Has wrought against you; and she'll meet
you —

HIP. Oh, when? 100

DOCT. Nay, see; how covetous are your desires.

Early to-morrow morn.

HIP. Oh, where, good father?

DOCT. At Bethlem Monastery; are you pleas'd now?

HIP. At Bethlem Monastery! The place
well fits;

It is the school where those that lose their wits

Practise again to get them. I am sick
Of that disease; all love is lunatic.

DOCT. We'll steal away this night in some disguise.

Father Anselmo, a most reverend friar,
Expects our coming; before whom we'll lay Reasons so strong that he shall yield <sup>58</sup> in bonds <sup>59</sup> 111

Of holy wedlock to tie both your hands.

HIP. This is such happiness

That to believe it, 't is impossible.

DOCT. Let all your joys then die in misbelief;

I will reveal no more.

HIP. Oh, yes, good father,

I am so well acquainted with despair,
I know not how to hope. I believe all.

DOCT. We'll hence this night. Much must be done, much said;

But if the doctor fail not in his charms, 120
Your lady shall ere morning fill these arms.

HIP. Heavenly physician! far thy fame shall spread,

<sup>58</sup> Consent.

That mak'st two lovers speak when they be dead. Exeunt.

[ACT V — SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter Candido's wife, [VIOLA, with a petition,] and GEORGE. PIORATTO meets them.

VIO. Oh, watch, good George, watch which way the Duke comes.

GEO. Here comes one of the butterflies;
ask him.

VIO. Pray, sir, comes the Duke this way?

PRO. He's upon <sup>2</sup> coming, mistress. Exit.

VIO. I thank you, sir. — George, are there many mad folks where thy master lies?

GEO. Oh, yes, of all countries some; but especially mad Greeks, <sup>3</sup> they swarm. Troth, [10 Mistress, the world is altered with you; you had not wont to stand thus with a paper humbly complaining. But you're well enough serv'd; provender prick'd <sup>4</sup> you, as it does many of our city wives besides.

VIO. Doest think, George, we shall get him
forth?

GEO. Truly, Mistress, I cannot tell; I think you'll hardly get him forth. Why, 't is strange! 'Sfoot, I have known many [20 women that have had mad rascals to their husbands, whom they would belabor by all means possible to keep 'em in their right wits; but of a woman to long to turn a tame man into a madman, why the Devil himself was never us'd so by his dam.

VIO. How does he talk, George? Ha!
good George, tell me.

GEO. Why, you're best go see.

VIO. Alas, I am afraid! 30

GEO. Afraid! you had more need be asham'd. He may rather be afraid of you.

VIO. But, George, he's not stark mad, is he? He does not rave, he's not horn-mad, <sup>5</sup>
George, is he?

GEO. Nay I know not that; but he talks like a justice of peace, of a thousand matters, and to no purpose.

VIO. I'll to the monastery. I shall be mad till I enjoy him <sup>6</sup>; I shall be sick till I see [40

<sup>3</sup> Jovial fellows, boon companions. It also meant sharpers.

<sup>4</sup> Good food spurred; i.e., your whim was the result of high feeding.

<sup>5</sup> Raving mad. George's reply glances at the customary pun on the horns of the cuckold.

<sup>6</sup> Have his company.

him; yet when I do see him, I shall weep out mine eyes.

GEO. Ay, I'd fain see a woman weep out her eyes! That's as true as to say, a man's cloak burns when it hangs in the water. I know you'll weep, mistress; but what says the painted cloth?<sup>7</sup>

Trust not a woman when she cries,
For she'll pump water from her eyes
With a wet finger,<sup>8</sup> and in faster showers 50
Than April when he rains down flowers.

VIO. Ay, but George, that painted cloth is worthy to be hang'd up<sup>9</sup> for lying. All women have not tears at will, unless they have good cause.

GEO. Ay, but Mistress, how easily will they find a cause; and as one of our cheese-trenchers<sup>10</sup> says very learnedly:

As out of wormwood bees suck honey,
As from poor clients lawyers firk<sup>11</sup> money, 60
As parsley from a roasted cony;<sup>12</sup>
So, though the day be ne'er so sunny,
If wives will have it rain, down then it drives,—
The calmest husbands make the storm[i]est wives.

VIO. [True],<sup>13</sup> George; but I ha' done storming now.

GEO. Why that's well done. Good Mistress, throw aside this fashion of your humor; be not so fantastical in wearing it; storm no more, long no more. This longing has [70 made you come short of many a good thing that you might have had from my master. Here comes the Duke.]

Enter DUKE, FLUELLO, PIORATTO, [and] SINEZI.

VIO. Oh, I beseech you, pardon my offence, In that I durst abuse your Grace's warrant; Deliver forth my husband, good my Lord.

DUKE. Who is her husband?

FLU. Candido, my Lord.

DUKE. Where is he?

VIO. He's among the lunatics.

He was a man made up without a gall;
Nothing could move him, nothing could convert 80

His meek blood into fury; yet like a monster, I often beat at the most constant rock Of his unshaken patience, and did long To vex him.

DUKE. Did you so?

VIO. And for that purpose Had warrant from your Grace to carry him To Bethlem Monastery, whence they will not free him Without your Grace's hand<sup>14</sup> that sent him in.

DUKE. You have long'd fair; 't is you are mad, I fear;

It's fit to fetch him thence, and keep you there.

If he be mad, why would you have him forth? 90

GEO. An please your Grace, he's not stark mad, but only talks like a young gentleman, somewhat fantastically, that's all. There's a thousand about your court, city, and country madder than he.

DUKE. Provide a warrant; you shall have our hand.

GEO. Here's a warrant ready drawn, my Lord.

[DUKE.]<sup>15</sup> Get pen and ink, get pen and ink. [Exit GEORGE.]

Enter CASTRUCHIO.

CAS. Where is my Lord the Duke?

DUKE. How now! more madmen?

CAS. I have strange news, my Lord.

DUKE. Of what? of whom? 100

CAS. Of Infeliche, and a marriage.

DUKE. Ha! where? with whom?

CAS. Hippolito.

[Re-enter GEORGE, with pen and ink.]

GEO. Here, my Lord.

DUKE. Hence with that woman. — Void the room.

FLU. Away; the Duke's vex'd.

GEO. Whoop, come, Mistress; the Duke's mad, too. [Exeunt [VIOLETTA and GEORGE].

DUKE. Who told me that Hippolito was dead?

CAS. He that can make any man dead, the doctor. But, my Lord, he's as full of life [110 as wildfire, and as quick. Hippolito, the doctor, and one more rid hence this evening; the inn at which they light is Bethlem Monastery; Infeliche comes from Bergamo and meets them there. Hippolito is mad, for he means this day to be married; the afternoon is the hour, and Friar Anselmo is the knitter.

DUKE. From Bergamo? is't possible? it cannot be.

It cannot be.

CAS. I will not swear, my Lord;
But this intelligence I took from one 120
Whose brains works in the plot.

DUKE. What's he?

CAS. Matheo.

FLU. Matheo knows all.

PRIOR. He's Hippolito's bosom.<sup>16</sup>

DUKE. How far stands Bethlem hence?

OMNES. Six or seven miles.

DUKE. Is't even so? not married till the afternoon, you say? <sup>17</sup>

Stay, stay; let's work out some prevention.
How!

This is most strange; can none but madmen serve

To dress their wedding dinner? All of you Get presently to horse; disguise yourselves
Like country gentlemen,

Or riding citizens, or so; and take 130

Each man a several <sup>18</sup> path, but let us meet

At Bethlem Monastery, some space of time
Being spent between the arrival each of other,
As if we came to see the lunatics.

To horse, away; be secret on your lives.

Love must be punish'd that unjustly thrives.

Exeunt [all but FLUELLO].

FLU. Be secret on your lives! Castruchio,
Y' are but a scurvy spaniel. Honest lord, Good lady! Zounds, their love is just, 't is good,

And I'll prevent you, though I swim in blood. Exit. 140

[SCENE II] <sup>19</sup>

Enter FRIAR ANSELMO, HIPPOLITO, MATHEO, [and] INFELICHE.

HIP. Nay, nay, resolve,<sup>20</sup> good father, or deny.

ANS. You press me to an act both full of danger

And full of happiness; for I behold
Your father's frowns, his threats, nay, perhaps
death

<sup>16</sup> Confidant.

<sup>17</sup> So Qq<sub>1</sub> and n.d. Later qtos. om. even and you say, which may be actor's interpolations.

<sup>20</sup> Make up your mind (to it).

To him that dare do this. Yet, noble Lord,
Such comfortable beams break through these
clouds

By this blest marriage, that your honor'd word
Being pawn'd in my defence, I will tie fast
The holy wedding knot.

HIP. Tush, fear not the Duke.

ANS. O son! wisely to fear is to be free from fear. 10

HIP. You have our words, and you shall have our lives,

To guard you safe from all ensuing danger.

MAT. Ay, ay, chop <sup>21</sup> 'em up, and away.

ANS. Stay; when is't fit for me, safest for
you,

To entertain this business?

HIP. Not till the evening.

ANS. Be't so; there is a chapel stands hard by,

Upon the west end of the abbey wall;

Thither convey yourselves, and when the sun
Hath turn'd his back upon this upper world,
I'll marry you; that done, no thund'ring voice
Can break the sacred bond; yet, lady, here [21
You are most safe.

INF. Father, your love's most dear.

MAT. Ay, well said; lock us into some little room by ourselves, that we may be mad for an hour or two.

HIP. O, good Matheo, no, let's make no noise.

MAT. How? no noise! Do you know where you are? 'Sfoot, amongst all the madcaps in Milan; so that to throw the house out at window will be the better, and no man [30 will suspect that we lurk here to steal mutton.<sup>22</sup>
The more sober we are, the more scurvy <sup>23</sup> 't is.
And though the friar tell us that here we are safest, I'm not of his mind; for if those lay here that had lost their money, none would ever look after them; but here are none but those that have lost their wits; so that if hue and cry be made, hither they'll come; and my reason is, because none goes to be married till he be stark mad. 40

HIP. Muffle yourselves; yonder's Fluello.

Enter FLUELLO.

MAT. Zounds!

FLU. O my Lord, these cloaks are not for this rain. The tempest is too great. I come sweating to tell you of it, that you may get out of it.

<sup>23</sup> I.e., suspicious. (Neilson.)

MAT. Why, what's the matter?

FLU. What's the matter? You have matter'd <sup>24</sup> it fair; the Duke's at hand.

OMNES. The Duke?

FLU. The very Duke.

HIP. Then all our plots

Are turn'd upon our heads, and we are blown up 50

With our own underminings. 'Sfoot, how comes he?

What villain durst betray our being here?

FLU. Castruchio; Castruchio told the Duke, and Matheo here told Castruchio.

HIP. Would you betray me to Castruchio?

MAT. 'Sfoot, he damn'd himself to the pit of hell, if he spake on't again.

HIP. So did you swear to me; so were you damn'd.

MAT. Pox on 'em; and there be no faith in men, if a man shall not believe oaths. He [60 took bread and salt, <sup>25</sup> by this light, that he would never open his lips.

HIP. O God, O God!

ANS. Son, be not desperate; Have patience; you shall trip your enemy Down by his own sleights. <sup>26</sup> — How far is the Duke hence?

FLU. He's but new set out; Castruchio, Pioratto, and Sinezi come along with him. You have time enough yet to prevent <sup>27</sup> them, if you have but courage.

ANS. Ye shall steal secretly into the chapel, 70

And presently <sup>28</sup> be married. If the Duke Abide here still, spite of ten thousand eyes, You shall scape hence like friars.

HIP. O blest [disguise]! <sup>29</sup> O happy man!

ANS. Talk not of Happiness till your clos'd hand

Have her by th' forehead, like the lock of Time.

Be nor too slow nor hasty, now you climb Up to the tow'r of bliss; only be wary And patient, that's all. If you like my plot, Build and dispatch; if not, farewell, then not.

HIP. Oh, yes, we do applaud it. We'll dispute <sup>30</sup> 81

No longer, but will hence and execute.

Fluello, you'll stay here; let us be gone.

The ground that frightened lovers tread upon Is stuck with thorns.

ANS. Come, then, away; 't is meet, To escape those thorns, to put on winged feet.

Exeunt [ANSELMO, HIPPOLITO, and INFELICHE].

MAT. No words, I pray, Fluello, for't stands us upon. <sup>31</sup>

FLU. Oh, sir, let that be your lesson! —

[Exit MATHEO.]

Alas, poor lovers! On what hopes and fears 90

Men toss themselves for women! When she's got,

The best has in her that which pleaseth not.

Enter to FLUELLO, the DUKE, CASTRUCHIO, PIORATTO, and SINEZI from several doors, muffled.

DUKE. Who's there?

CAS. My Lord.

DUKE. Peace; send that "Lord" away. A lordship will spoil all; let's be all fellows. What's he?

CAS. Fluello, or else Sinezi, by his little legs.

OMNES. All friends, all friends.

DUKE. What, met upon the very point of time!

Is this the place?

PIO. This is the place, my Lord.

DUKE. Dream you on lordships? Come no more "Lords," pray. 100

You have not seen these lovers yet?

OMNES. Not yet.

DUKE. Castruchio, art thou sure this wedding feat

Is not till afternoon?

CAS. So 't is given out, my Lord.

DUKE. Nay, nay, 't is like; thieves must observe their hours;

Lovers watch minutes like astronomers.

How shall the interim hours by us be spent?

FLU. Let's all go see the madmen. <sup>32</sup>

OMNES. Mass, content.

Enter a Sweeper. <sup>33</sup>

DUKE. Oh, here comes one; question him, question him.

<sup>31</sup> It is necessary for us (to avoid suspicion). Matheo urges Fluello not to reveal his participation. Fluello retorts that Matheo (judging by the past) is the one who needs to study silence.

<sup>29</sup> Q: disguised.

<sup>30</sup> Discuss.

FLU. How now, honest fellow, dost thou [110 belong to the house?

SWEEP. Yes, forsooth, I am one of the implements; I sweep the madmen's rooms, and fetch straw for 'em, and buy chains to tie 'em, and rods to whip 'em.<sup>34</sup> I was a mad wag myself here, once; but I thank Father Anselmo, he lash'd me into my right mind again.

DUKE. Anselmo is the friar must marry
them;

Question him where he is. 119

CAS. And where is Father Anselmo now?

SWEEP. Marry, he's gone but e'en now.

DUKE. Ay, well done. — Tell me, whither is he gone?

SWEEP. Why, to God a'mighty.

FLU. Ha, ha! this fellow's a fool, talks idly.

PIO. Sirrah, are all the mad folks in Milan brought hither?

SWEEP. How, all! There's a wise question indeed! Why if all the mad folks in Milan should come hither, there would not be [130 left ten men in the city.

DUKE. Few gentlemen or courtiers here, ha?

SWEEP. Oh, yes, abundance, abundance!
Lands no sooner fall into their hands but straight they run out a' their wits. Citizens' sons and heirs are free of the house by their fathers' copy.<sup>35</sup> Farmers' sons come hither like geese, in flocks; and when they ha' sold all their cornfields, here they sit and pick the straws. 140

SIN. Methinks you should have women here as well as men.

SWEEP. Oh, ay, a plague on 'em; there's no ho<sup>36</sup> with them; they are madder than March hares.

FLU. Are there no lawyers here amongst you?

SWEEP. Oh, no, not one; never any lawyer.
We dare not let a lawyer come in, for he'll make 'em mad faster than we can recover
'em. 150

DUKE. And how long is't ere you recover any of these?

SWEEP. Why, according to the quantity of the moon that's got into 'em. An alderman's son will be mad a great while, a very great while, especially if his friends left him well. A whore will hardly come to her wits again. A Puritan, there's no hope of him, unless he may pull down the steeple, and hang himself i' th'

bell-ropes. 160

FLU. I perceive all sorts of fish come to your net.

SWEEP. Yes, in truth, we have blocks<sup>37</sup> for all heads; we have good store of wild oats here; for the courtier is mad at the citizen, the citizen is mad at the countrym[a]n; the shoemaker is mad at the cobbler, the cobbler at the carman;<sup>38</sup> the punk is mad that the merchant's wife is no whore; the merchant's wife is mad that the punk is so common a [170 whore. Gods so, here's Father Anselmo; pray say nothing that I tell tales out of the school. Exit.

Re-enter ANSELMO [and Servants].

OMNES. God bless you, father.

ANS. Thank you, gentlemen.

CAS. Pray, may we see some of those wretched souls

That here are in your keeping?

ANS. Yes, you shall;

But gentlemen, I must disarm you then.

There are of mad men, as there are of tame,
All humor'd not alike. We have here some,
So apish and fantastic, play with a feather, [180
And, though 't would grieve a soul to see God's image

So blemish'd and defac'd, yet do they act
Such antic<sup>39</sup> and such pretty lunacies,
That spite of sorrow they will make you smile.
Others again we have like hungry lions,
Fierce as wild bulls, untamable as flies,
And these have oftentimes from strangers'
sides

Snatch'd rapiers suddenly, and done much harm;

Whom if you'll see, you must be weaponless.

OMNES. With all our hearts.

[ANSELMO takes their weapons.]

ANS. Here, take these weapons in. — 190

[Exit Servant with weapons.]

Stand off a little, pray; so, so; 't is well.

I'll show you here a man that was sometimes<sup>40</sup>
A very grave and wealthy citizen;
Has serv'd a prenticeship to this misfortune,
Been here seven years,<sup>41</sup> and dwelt in Bergamo.

DUKE. How fell he from his wits?

the cry to stop.

ANS. By loss at sea.
I'll stand aside ; question him you alone,
For if he spy me he'll not speak a word,
Unless he's thoroughly vex'd.

Discovers <sup>42</sup> an Old Man, wrapp'd in a net.

FLU. Alas, poor soul !

CAS. A very old man. 200

DUKE. God speed, father.

1 MAD. God speed the plow ; <sup>43</sup> thou shalt not speed me.

PIO. We see you, old man, for all you dance in a net.<sup>44</sup>

1 MAD. True, but thou wilt dance in a halter, and I shall not see thee.

ANS. Oh, do not vex him, pray.

CAS. Are you a fisherman, father ?

1 MAD. No, I'm neither fish nor flesh. [210

FLU. What do you with that net, then ?

1 MAD. Doest not see, fool ? There's a fresh salmon in 't ; if you step one foot further, you'll be over shoes, for you see I'm over head and ear <sup>45</sup> in the salt water ; and if you fall into this whirlpool where I am, y' are drown'd, y' are a drown'd rat. I am fishing here for five ships, but I cannot have a good draught, for my net breaks still, and breaks ; but I'll break some of your necks an I catch you in my [220 clutches. Stay, stay, stay, stay, stay ; where's the wind ? where's the wind ? where's the wind ? where's the wind ? Out, you gulls, you goose-caps,<sup>46</sup> you gudgeon-eaters ! <sup>47</sup> Do you look for the wind in the heavens ? Ha, ha, ha, ha ! no, no ! Look there, look there, look there ! the wind is always at that door ; hark how it blows, pooff, pooff, pooff !

OMNES. Ha, ha, ha !

1 MAD. Do you laugh at God's creatures ? Do you mock old age, you rogues ? Is this gray beard and head counterfeit, that you cry ha, ha, ha ? Sirrah, art not thou my eldest son ?

PIO. Yes, indeed, father.

1 MAD. Then th' art a fool ; for my eldest son had a polt-foot,<sup>48</sup> crooked legs, a verjuice <sup>49</sup> face, and a pear-color'd <sup>50</sup> beard. I made

him a scholar, and he made himself a fool. — Sirrah, thou there, hold out thy hand. [240

DUKE. My hand ? Well, here 't is.

1 MAD. Look, look, look, look ! Has he not long nails, and short hair ?

FLU. Yes, monstrous short hair, and abominable long nails.

1 MAD. Tenpenny nails, are they not ?

FLU. Yes, tenpenny nails.

1 MAD. Such nails had my second boy. Kneel down, thou varlet, and ask thy father blessing. Such nails had my middle- [250 most son, and I made him a promoter ; <sup>51</sup> and he scrap'd, and scrap'd, and scrap'd, till he got the devil and all ; but he scrap'd thus, and thus, and thus, and it went under his legs, till at length a company of kites, taking him for carrion, swept up all, all, all, all, all, all. If you love your lives, look to yourselves ; see, see, see, the Turks' galleys are fighting with my ships. Bounce,<sup>52</sup> goes the guns ! Oooh ! cry the men ! Rumble, rumble, go [260 the waters ! Alas, there ; 't is sunk, 't is sunk ! I am undone, I am undone ; you are the damn'd pirates have undone me ; you are, by the Lord, you are, you are ! — Stop 'em ! — you are !

ANS. Why, how now, sirrah ! Must I fall to tame you ?

1 MAD. Tame me ! No, I'll be madder than a roasted cat. See, see, I am burnt with gunpowder — these are our close fights !

ANS. I'll whip you, if you grow unruly [270 thus.

1 MAD. Whip me ? Out you toad ! Whip me ! What justice is this, to whip me because I'm a beggar ? Alas ! I am a poor man, a very poor man ! I am starv'd, and have had no meat, by this light, ever since the great flood ; I am a poor man.

ANS. Well, well, be quiet, and you shall have meat.

1 MAD. Ay, ay, pray do ; for, look you, here be my guts : these are my ribs — you may look through my ribs — see how my guts come [280 out ! These are my red guts, my very guts, oh, oh !

ANS. Take him in there.

[Servants remove 1 Madman.]

OMNES.

A very piteous sight.

CAS. Father, I see you have a busy charge.

ANS. They must be us'd like children, pleas'd with toys,

And anon whipp'd for their unruliness.
I'll show you now a pair quite different From him that's gone. He was all words;
and these,

Unless you urge 'em, seldom spend their speech, 289

But [save]<sup>53</sup> their tongues.

[Opens a door, from which enter 2 and
3 Madmen.]

La, you; this hithermost
Fell from the happy quietness of mind
About a maiden that he lov'd, and died.
He followed her to church, being full of tears,
And as her body went into the ground,
He fell stark mad. This is a married man,
Was jealous of a fair, but, as some say,
A very virtuous, wife; and that spoil'd
him.

3 MAD.<sup>54</sup> All these are whoremongers, and lay with my wife; whore, whore, whore, whore, whore! 300

FLU. Observe him.

3 MAD. Gaffer shoemaker, you pull'd on my wife's pumps, and then crept into her pan-totes; <sup>55</sup> lie there, lie there! — This was her tailor. You cut out her loose-bodied gown, and put in a yard more than I allowed her; lie
there by the shoemaker. — O master doctor!
are you here? You gave me a purgation, and then crept into my wife's chamber to feel her pulses, and you said, and she said, and her [310 maid said, that they went pit-a-pat, pit-a-pat, pit-a-pat. Doctor, I'll put you anon into my wife's urinal. — Heigh, come aloft, Jack! <sup>56</sup>
This was her schoolmaster, and taught her to play upon the virginals; and still his jacks <sup>57</sup> leap'd up, up. You prick'd her out <sup>58</sup> nothing but bawdy lessons; but I'll prick you all, fiddler, doctor, tailor, shoemaker; shoemaker, fiddler, doctor, tailor! So! lie with my wife again, now! 320

CAS. See how he notes the other, now he feeds.

3 MAD. Give me some porridge.

2 MAD. I'll give thee none.

3 MAD. Give me some porridge.

2 MAD. I'll not give thee a bit.

3 MAD. Give me that flapdragon.<sup>59</sup>

2 MAD. I'll not give thee a spoonful. Thou liest, it's no dragon; 't is a parrot that I bought for my sweetheart, and I'll keep it.

3 MAD. Here's an almond for parrot.<sup>60</sup> [330

2 MAD. Hang thyself!

3 MAD. Here's a rope for parrot.<sup>60</sup>

2 MAD. Eat it, for I'll eat this.

3 MAD. I'll shoot at thee, an thou't give me none.

2 MAD. Wu't thou?

3 MAD. I'll run a tilt at thee, an thou't give me none.

2 MAD. Wu't thou? Do an thou dar'st.

3 MAD. Bounce! <sup>61</sup> 340

2 MAD. Oh, oh! I am slain! Murder, murder, murder! I am slain; my brains are beaten out!

ANS. How now, you villains! Bring me whips; I'll whip you.

2 MAD. I am dead! I am slain! ring out the bell, for I am dead!

DUKE. How will you do now, sirrah? You ha' kill'd him.

3 MAD. I'll answer't at sessions; he was eating of almond-butter, and I long'd for't.
The child had never been delivered out [350 of my belly, if I had not kill'd him. I'll an-swer't at sessions, so my wife may be burnt i'
th' hand, too.

ANS. Take 'em in both; bury him, for he's dead.

2 MAD. Ay, indeed, I am dead; put me, I pray, into a good pit-hole.

3 MAD. I'll answer't at sessions.

[Servants remove 2 and 3 Madmen.]

Enter BELLAFRONT mad.

ANS. How now, huswife,<sup>62</sup> whither gad you?

BELL. A-nutting, forsooth. How do you, gaffer? How do you, gaffer? There's [360
a French cur[t]sey for you, too.

FLU. 'T is Bellafront.

PIO. 'T is the punk, by th' Lord.

DUKE. Father, what's she, I pray?

ANS. As yet I know not;
She came but in this day, talks little idly,
And therefore has the freedom of the house.

BELL. Do not you know me? — nor you? — nor you? — nor you?

<sup>59</sup> A burning raisin floating on a cup of liquor and swallowed flaming. Needless to say, it exists here only in the lunatic's imagination.

<sup>60</sup> A common expression.

<sup>61</sup> Bang! Mod. eds. unnecessarily add "Strikes

<sup>62</sup> Hussy, wench.

<sup>54</sup> Old eds. transpose speech-tags for 2 and 3
Madmen.

<sup>57</sup> The double ententes in this speech are obvious.
"Jacks" were part of the wooden mechanism of the virginal, a small spinet. When the key was struck the jack was raised.

<sup>58</sup> Wrote down in musical notation.

OMNES. No, indeed.

BELL. Then you are an ass, — and you [370 an ass, — and you are an ass, — for I know you.

ANS. Why, what are they? Come, tell me, what are they?

BELL. They're fish-wives; will you buy any gudgeons? <sup>63</sup>

God's santy! <sup>64</sup> yonder come friars; I know them, too. —

Enter HIPPOLITO, MATHEO, and INFELICHE, disguis'd in the habits of friars.

How do you, friar?

ANS. Nay, nay, away; you must not trouble friars. —

[aside to HIPPOLITO and his companions] The Duke is here; speak nothing.

BELL. Nay, indeed, you shall not go; we'll run at barley-break <sup>65</sup> first, and you shall [380 be in hell.

MAT. [aside] My punk turn'd mad whore, as all her fellows are!

HIP. [aside to INFELICHE and MATHEO] Say nothing; but steal hence, when you spy time.

ANS. I'll lock you up, if y'are unruly; fie!

BELL. Fie! Marry, so; they shall not go indeed, till I ha' told 'em their fortunes.

DUKE. Good father, give her leave.

BELL. Ay, pray, good father, and I'll give you my blessing.

ANS. Well then, be brief; but if you are thus unruly, <sup>390</sup>

I'll have you lock'd up fast.

PIO. Come, to their fortunes.

BELL. Let me see; one, two, three, and four. I'll begin with the little friar <sup>66</sup> first. Here's a fine hand, indeed; I never saw friar have such a dainty hand; here's a hand for a lady. Here's your fortune:

You love a friar better than a nun;
Yet long you'll love no friar, nor no friar's son.
Bow a little, the line of life is out, yet I'm afraid,

For all you're holy, you'll not die a maid. [400 God give you joy! — Now to you, Friar Tuck.<sup>67</sup>

<sup>65</sup> A country game, played by couples, one of which was in "hell" and was obliged to catch the other players.

MAT. God send me good luck.

BELL. You love one, and one loves you; You are a false knave, and she's a Jew; <sup>68</sup> Here is a dial that false ever goes —

MAT. Oh, your wit drops!

BELL. Troth, so does your nose! — Nay, let's shake hands with you, too; pray open, here's a fine hand!

Ho friar, ho! God be here!
So He had need. You'll keep good cheer; [410 Here's a free table,<sup>69</sup> but a frozen breast;
For you'll starve those that love you best.<sup>70</sup>
Yet you have good fortune, for if I am no liar,
Then you are no friar; nor you, nor you no friar!

Ha, ha, ha, ha! Discovers them.

DUKE. Are holy habits cloaks for villainy? Draw all your weapons.

HIP. Do, draw all your weapons.

DUKE. Where are your weapons? Draw.

OMNES. The friar has gull'd us of 'em.

MAT. O rare trick! [420 You ha' learn'd one mad point of arithmetic.

HIP. Why swells your spleen <sup>71</sup> so high? Against what bosom

Would you your weapons draw? Her's? 'T is your daughter's.

Mine? 'T is your son's.

DUKE. Son?

MAT. Son, by yonder sun.

HIP. You cannot shed blood here but 't is your own;

To spill your own blood were damnation.

Lay smooth that wrinkled brow, and I will throw

Myself beneath your feet;

Let it <sup>72</sup> be rugged still and flinted o'er,<sup>73</sup>

What can come forth but sparkles, that will burn <sup>430</sup>

Yourself and us? She's mine; my claim's most good;

She's mine by marriage, though she's yours by blood.

[ANS., kneeling] <sup>74</sup> I have a hand, dear Lord, deep in this act,

For I foresaw this storm, yet willingly

Put forth to meet it. Oft have I seen a father

Washing the wounds of his dear son in tears,

A son to curse the sword that struck his father,
Both slain i' th' quarrel of your families.

Those scars are now ta'en off; and I beseech
you

To seal our pardon! All was to this end: [440
To turn the ancient hates of your two houses
To fresh green friendship, that your loves might look

Like the spring's forehead, comfortably sweet,
And your vex'd souls in peaceful union meet.
Their blood will now be yours, yours will be theirs,

And happiness shall crown your silver hairs.

FLU. You see, my Lord, there's now no remedy.

OMNES. Beseech your Lordship!

DUKE. You beseech fair; you have me in in place fit

To bridle me. — Rise, friar; you may be glad
You can make madmen tame, and tame men
mad. 451

Since Fate hath conquered, I must rest content;

To strive now would but add new punishment.
I yield unto your happiness; be blest;
Our families shall henceforth breathe in rest.

OMNES. O happy change!

DUKE. Yours now is my conf[t]ent;
I throw upon your joys my full consent.

BELL. Am not I a good girl, for finding "The Friar in the Well?"<sup>75</sup> Gods so, you are a brave man! Will not you buy [460 me some sugarplums, because I am so good a fortune-teller?

DUKE. Would thou hadst wit, thou pretty soul, to ask,
As I have will to give.

BELL. Pretty soul? A pretty soul is better than a pretty body. Do not you know my pretty soul? I know you. Is not your name Matheo?

MAT. Yes, lamb.

BELL. Baa, lamb! there you lie, for [470
I am mutton. — Look, fine man! he was mad for me once, and I was mad for him once, and he was mad for her once, and were you never mad? Yes, I warrant; I had a fine jewel once, a very fine jewel, and that naughty man stole it away from me, a very fine [and a rich]<sup>76</sup> jewel.

DUKE. What jewel, pretty maid?

BELL. Maid? Nay, that's a lie. Oh,

't was a very rich jewel, call'd a maidenhead;
and had not you it, leerer? 481

MAT. Out, you mad ass! away!

DUKE. Had he thy maidenhead?
He shall make thee amends, and marry thee.

BELL. Shall he? O brave Arthur of Bradley,<sup>77</sup> then!

DUKE. An if he bear the mind of a gentleman, I know he will.

MAT. I think I rifled her of some such paltry jewel.

DUKE. Did you? Then marry her; you see the wrong 490

Has led her spirits into a lunacy.

MAT. How? marry her, my Lord? 'Sfoot, marry a madwoman? Let a man get the tam-est wife he can come by, she'll be mad enough afterward, do what he can.

DUKE. Nay then, Father Anselmo here shall do his best

To bring her to her wits; and will you then?

MAT. I cannot tell; I may choose.

DUKE. Nay, then, law shall compel. I tell you, sir,

So much her hard fate moves me, you should not breathe 500

Under this air, unless you married her.

MAT. Well, then, when her wits stand in their right place,

I'll marry her.

BELL. I thank your Grace. — Matheo, thou art mine!

I am not mad, but put on this disguise

Only for you, my Lord; for you can tell

Much wonder of me. But you are gone; fare-
well. —

Matheo, thou didst first turn my soul black;
Now make it white again. I do protest,
I'm pure as fire now, chaste as Cynthia's
breast. 510

HIP. I durst be sworn, Matheo, she's indeed.

MAT. Cony-catch'd, gull'd! Must I sail in your fly-boat,<sup>78</sup>

Because I help'd to rear your mainmast first?
Plague 'found<sup>79</sup> you for 't; 't is well.

The cuckold's stamp goes current in all nations;

Some men have horns given them at their creations.

If I be one of those, why so; 't is better

<sup>75</sup> The title of a popular tale and ballad, in which a virtuous maid plays a trick on a would-be seducer.

<sup>77</sup> The ballads about this popular character deal largely with his marriage.

To take a common wench, and make her good,
Than one that simpers, and at first will scarce
Be tempted forth over the threshold door, [520
Yet in one se'nnight, zounds, turns arrant
whore.

Come wench, thou shalt be mine ; give me thy golls,<sup>80</sup>

We'll talk of legs<sup>81</sup> hereafter. — See, my Lord, God give us joy !

OMNES. God give you joy !

Enter Candido's wife [VIOLA] and GEORGE.

GEO. Come Mistress, we are in Bedlam now ; mass, and see, we come in pudding-time,<sup>82</sup> for here's the Duke.

VIO. My husband, good my Lord !

DUKE. Have I thy husband ? 530

CAST. It's Candido, my Lord ; he's here among the lunatics. Father Anselmo, pray fetch him forth. [Exit ANSELMO.] This mad woman is his wife ; and though she were not with child, yet did she long most spitefully to have her husband mad ; and because she would be sure he should turn Jew, she plac'd him here in Bethlem. Yonder he comes.

Enter CANDIDO with ANSELMO.

DUKE. Come hither, signior ; are you mad ?

CAND. You are not mad. 540

DUKE. Why, I know that.

CAND. Then may you know I am not mad, that know

You are not mad, and that you are the Duke.
None is mad here but one. — How do you,
Wife ?

What do you long for now ? — Pardon, my
Lord :

She had lost her child's nose else. I did cut out

Pennyworths of lawn ; the lawn was yet mine
own.

A carpet was<sup>83</sup> my gown ; yet 't was mine own.
I wore my man's coat, yet the cloth mine own.
Had a crack'd crown — the crown was yet
mine own. 550

She says for this I'm mad ; were her words
true,

I should be mad indeed. O foolish skill !<sup>84</sup>
Is patience madness ? I'll be a madman still.

<sup>80</sup> Hands.

<sup>81</sup> Bows. Evidently Bellafront has started to kneel or to curtsy in gratitude.

<sup>82</sup> In good time. Dinner often began with pudding. (Skeat.)

<sup>84</sup> Reason.

VIO. [kneeling] Forgive me, and I'll vex your spirit no more.

DUKE. Come, come ; we'll have you friends ; join hearts, join hands.

CAND. See, my Lord, we are even. —

[to VIOLA] Nay, rise ; for ill deeds kneel unto none but Heaven.

DUKE. Signior, methinks patience has laid on you

Such heavy weight that you should loathe it.

CAND. Loathe it !

DUKE. For he whose breast is tender, blood so cool, 560

That no wrongs heat it, is a patient fool.

What comfort do you find in being so calm ?

CAND. That which green wounds receive from sovereign balm.

Patience, my Lord ! why, 't is the soul of
peace ;

Of all the virtues, 't is near'st kin to Heaven.
It makes men look like gods. The best of men
That e'er wore earth about him was a sufferer,
A soft, meek, patient, humble, tranquil spirit,
The first true gentleman that ever breath'd.

The stock of patience, then, cannot be poor ;

All it desires, it has ; what monarch mote<sup>85</sup> ?
It is the greatest enemy to law

That can be ; for it doth embrace all wrongs,
And so chains up lawyers' and women's tongues.

'T is the perpetual prisoner's liberty,
His walks and orchards. 'T is the bond slave's
freedom,

And makes him seem proud of each iron chain,
As though he wore it more for state than pain.

It is the beggars' music, and thus sings, [579
Although their bodies beg, their souls are kings.

O my dread Liege ! it is the sap of bliss,
Rears us aloft, makes men and angels kiss.

And last of all, to end a household strife,
It is the honey 'gainst a waspish wife.

DUKE. Thou giv'st it lively colors ; who dare say

He's mad, whose words march in so good array ?
'T were sin all women should such husbands
have,

For every man must then be his wife's slave.
Come, therefore ; you shall teach our court to shine ;

So calm a spirit is worth a golden mine. [590
Wives with meek husbands that to vex them
long,

In Bedlam must they dwell, else dwell they wrong. Exeunt.

THE SCENE — Milan.]

ACT I — SCENE I <sup>1</sup>

Enter, at one door, BERALDO, CAROLO, FONTINELL, [and] ASTOLFO, with Serving Men, or Pages, attending on them; at another door, enter LODOVICO, meeting them.

Lod. Good day, gallants.

Omnes. Good morrow, sweet Lodovico.

Lod. How doest thou, Carolo?

Car. Faith, as physicians do in a plague : see the world sick, and am well myself.

Fon. Here's a sweet morning, gentlemen.

Lod. Oh, a morning to tempt Jove from his ningle,<sup>2</sup> Ganymede ; which is but to give dairymenches green gowns<sup>3</sup> as they are going a-milking. What, is thy lord stirring yet? [10

Ast. Yes, he will not be hors'd this hour, sure.

Ber. My lady swears he shall, for she longs to be at court.

Car. Oh, we shall ride switch and spur ; would we were there once.

Enter BRYAN, the footman.

Lod. How now, is thy lord ready?

Bry. No, so crees sa'<sup>4</sup> me ; my lady will have some little ting in her pelly first.

Car. Oh, then they'll to breakfast. 20

Lod. Footman, does my Lord ride i' th' coach with my Lady, or on horseback?

Bry. No, foot,<sup>5</sup> la ; my Lady will have me Lord sheet wid her, my Lord will sheet in de one side, and my Lady sheet in de toder side.

[Exit.]

Lod. My Lady sheet in de toder side ! Did you ever hear a rascal talk so like a pagan ? Is't not strange that a fellow of his star should be seen here so long in Italy, yet speak so from<sup>6</sup> a Christian? 30

Enter ANTONIO GEORGIO, a poor scholar.

Ast. An Irishman in Italy ! that so strange ? Why, the nation have running heads !

Exchange walk.<sup>7</sup>

Lod. Nay, Carolo, this is more strange ; I ha' been in France — there's few of them. Marry, England they count a warm chimney corner, and there they swarm like crickets to the crevice of a brew-house ; but sir, in England I have noted one thing.

OMNES. What's that, what's that of England? 40

LOD. Marry this, sir — what's he yonder?

BER. A poor fellow would speak with my Lord.

LOD. In England, sir — troth, I ever laugh when I think on't: to see a whole nation should be mark'd i' th' forehead, as a man may say, with one iron — why, sir, there all costermongers<sup>8</sup> are Irishmen.

CAR. Oh, that's to show their antiquity, as coming from Eve, who was an apple-wife; [50 and they take after the mother.

OMNES. Good, good! ha, ha!

LOD. Why, then, should all your chimney-sweepers likewise be Irishmen? Answer that now; come, your wit.

CAR. Faith, that's soon answered; for St. Patrick, you know, keeps purgatory: he makes the fire, and his countrymen could do nothing, if they cannot sweep the chimneys.

OMNES. Good again. 60

LOD. Then, sir, have you many of them, like this fellow, especially those of his hair,<sup>9</sup> footmen to noblemen and others, and the knaves are very faithful where they love. By my faith, very proper<sup>10</sup> men, many of them, and as active as the clouds, — whirr, hah!

OMNES. Are they so?

LOD. And stout!<sup>11</sup> exceeding stout; why, I warrant, this precious wild villain, if he were put to 't, would fight more desperately [70 than sixteen Dunkirks.<sup>12</sup>

AST. The women, they say, are very fair.

LOD. No, no, our country<sup>13</sup> bona-robas,<sup>14</sup> oh! are the sug'rest, delicious rogues!

AST. Oh, look, he has a feeling of them!

LOD. Not I, I protest. There's a saying when they commend nations. It goes, the Irishman for his hand, [the] Welshman for a leg, the Englishman for a face, the Dutchman for a beard. 80

FON. I' faith, they may make swabbers<sup>15</sup> of them.

LOD. The Spaniard, — let me see, — for a little foot, I take it, the Frenchman, — what a pox hath he?<sup>16</sup> And so of the rest. Are they at breakfast yet? Come walk.

AST. This Lodovico is a notable tongued fellow.

FON. Discourses well.

BER. And a very honest gentleman. 90

AST. Oh! he's well valued by my Lord.

Enter BELLAFRONT, with a petition.

FON. How now, how now, what's she?

BER. Let's make towards her.

BELL. Will it be long, sir, ere my Lord come forth?

AST. Would you speak with my Lord?

LOD. How now, what's this, a nurse's bill? Hath any here got thee with child and now will not keep it? 99

BELL. No, sir, my business is unto my Lord.

LOD. He's about his own wife[s] now; he'll hardly dispatch two causes in a morning.

AST. No matter what he says, fair lady; he's a knight — there's no hold to be taken at his words.

FON. My Lord will pass this way presently.

BER. A pretty, plump rogue.

AST. A good lusty, bouncing baggage.

BER. Do you know her?

LOD. A pox on her, I was sure her name [110 was in my table-book<sup>17</sup> once. I know not of what cut her die is now, but she has been more common than tobacco; this is she that had the name of the Honest Whore.

OMNES. Is this she?

LOD. This is the blackamoor that by washing was turned white; this is the birding-piece<sup>18</sup> new scoured; this is she that, if any of her religion can be saved, was saved by my Lord Hippolito. 120

AST. She has been a goodly creature.

LOD. She has been! that's the epitaph of all whores. I'm well acquainted with the poor gentleman her husband. Lord! what fortunes that man has overreached! She knows not me, yet I have been in her company; I scarce know her, for the beauty of her cheek hath, like the moon, suff'red strange eclipses since I beheld it: but women are like medlars, — no sooner ripe but rotten: [130 A woman last was made, but is spent first; Yet man is oft proved in performance worst.

OMNES. My Lord is come.

Enter HIPPOLITO, INFELICHE, and two Waiting Women.

HIP. We ha' wasted half this morning. Morrow, Lodovico.

LOD. Morrow, madam.

<sup>16</sup> The answer is, of course, the pox! i.e., syphilis.

HIP. Let's away to horse.

OMNES. Ay, ay, to horse, to horse.

BELL. I do beseech your Lordship, let your eye<sup>19</sup>

Read o'er this wretched paper.

HIP. I'm in haste ;
Pray thee, good woman, take some apter time.

INF. Good woman, do. 141

BELL. Oh, 'las ! it does concern a poor man's life.

HIP. Life ! — Sweetheart, seat yourself ;
I'll but read this and come.

LOD. What stockings have you put on this morning, madam ? If they be not yellow,<sup>20</sup> change them ; that paper is a letter from some wench to your husband. 148

INF. Oh sir, that cannot make me jealous.<sup>21</sup>

Exeunt [all except HIPPOLITO, BELLAFRONT, and ANTONIO].

HIP. Your business, sir ? To me ?

ANT. Yes, my good Lord.

HIP. Presently, sir. — Are you Matheo's wife ?

BELL. That most unfortunate woman.

HIP. I'm sorry
These storms are fallen on him ; I love Matheo,
And any good shall do him ; he and I Have sealed two bonds of friendship, which are strong

In me, however Fortune does him wrong.<sup>22</sup>

He speaks here he's condemned. Is't so ?

BELL. Too true.

HIP. What was he whom he killed ? Oh, his name's here —

Giacomo, son to the Florentine<sup>23</sup> 160

Old Giacomo, a dog, that, to meet profit,
Would to the very eyelids wade in blood
Of his own children. Tell Matheo
The Duke, my father, hardly shall deny
His signed pardon. 'T was fair fight, yes,
If rumor's tongue go true ; so writes he
here. —

To-morrow morning I return from court ;
Pray be you here then. — [to ANTONIO] I'll have done, sir, straight : —

But in troth say, are you Matheo's wife ?
You have forgot me.

BELL. No, my Lord.

HIP. Your turner, [170
That made you smooth to run an even bias ;<sup>24</sup>
You know I loved you when your very soul
Was full of discord. Art not a good wench still ?

BELL. Umph, when I had lost my way to Heaven, you showed it ;
I was new born that day.

Re-enter LODOVICO.

LOD. 'Sfoot, my Lord, your lady asks if you have not left your wench yet ? When you get in once, you never have done. Come, come, come, pay your old score, and send her packing ; come. 180

HIP. Ride softly<sup>25</sup> on before ; I'll o'ertake
you.

LOD. Your lady swears she'll have no riding on before, without ye.

HIP. Prithee, good Lodovico.

LOD. My Lord, pray hasten.

HIP. I come. [Exit LODOVICO.]

To-morrow let me see you ; fare you well ;
Commend me to Matheo. Pray one word
more :

Does not your father live about the court ?

BELL. I think he does, but such rude spots of shame 190
Stick on my cheek that he scarce knows my
name.

HIP. Orlando Friscobaldo, is't not ?

BELL. Yes, my Lord.

HIP. What does he for you ?

BELL. All he should ; when children
From duty start, parents from love may swerve.

He nothing does, for nothing I deserve.

HIP. Shall I join him unto you, and restore
you

To wanted grace ?

BELL. It is impossible.

HIP. It shall be put to trial ; fare you well.

Exit BELLAFRONT.

The face I would not look on !<sup>26</sup> Sure then
't was rare, 199

When, in despite of grief, 't is still thus fair. —
Now, sir, your business with me.

ANT. I am bold
To express my love and duty to your Lordship
In these few leaves.

<sup>26</sup> In Part I.

HIP. A book!

ANT. Yes, my good Lord.

HIP. Are you a scholar?

ANT. Yes, my Lord, a poor one.

HIP. Sir, you honor me.

Kings may be scholars' patrons; but, faith, tell me,

To how many hands besides hath this bird flown,

How many partners share with me? <sup>27</sup>

ANT. Not one,

In troth, not one; your name I held more dear.

I'm not, my Lord, of that low character. [210

HIP. Your name, I pray?

ANT. Antonio Georgio.

HIP. Of Milan?

ANT. Yes, my Lord,

HIP. I'll borrow leave

To read you o'er, and then we'll talk; till then Drink up this gold; good wits should love good wine;

This of your loves, the earnest that of mine. —

Re-enter BRYAN.

How now, sir, where's your lady? not gone yet?

BRY. I fart di lady is run away from dee, a mighty deal of ground; she sent me back for dine own sweet face. I pray dee come, my Lord, away; wu't tow go now? 220

HIP. Is the coach gone? Saddle my horse, the sorrel.

BRY. A pox a' de horse's nose, he is a lousy, rascally fellow. When I came to gird his belly, his scurvy guts rumbled; di horse farted in my face, and dow knowest an Irishman cannot abide a fart. But I have saddled de hobbyhorse,<sup>28</sup> di fine hobby is ready. I pray dee, my good sweet Lord, wi't tow go now, and I will run to de devil before dee?

HIP. Well, sir. — I pray let's see you, Master Scholar. 230

BRY. Come, I pray dee; wu't come, sweet face? Go. Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>29</sup>

Enter LODOVICO, CAROLO, ASTOLFO, [and] BERALDO.

LOD. Godso, gentlemen, what do we forget?

OMNES. What?

<sup>27</sup> Books were often dedicated to several patrons.

LOD. Are not we all enjoined as this day — Thursday, is't not? ay — as that day to be at the linen-draper's house at dinner?

CAR. Signior Candido, the patient man.

AST. Afore Jove, true; upon this day he's married.

BER. I wonder that, being so stung with a wasp before, he dares venture again to [10 come about the eaves amongst bees.

LOD. Oh, 't is rare sucking a sweet honey-comb! Pray Heaven his old wife be buried deep enough, that she rise not up to call for her dance! The poor fiddlers' instruments would crack for it; she'd tickle them. At any hand, let's try what mettle is in his new bride; if there be none, we'll put in some. Troth, it's a very noble citizen; I pity he should marry again. I'll walk along, for it is a good old [20 fellow.

CAR. I warrant the wives of Milan would give any fellow twenty thousand ducats, that could but have the face to beg of the Duke that all the citizens in Milan might be bound to the peace of patience, as the linen-draper is.

LOD. Oh, fie upon 't! 't would undo all us that are courtiers; we should have no whoe <sup>30</sup> with the wenches then.

Enter HIPPOLITO.

OMNES. My Lord's come. 30

HIP. How now, what news?

OMNES. None.

LOD. Your lady is with the Duke, her father.

HIP. And we'll to them both presently — Who's that?

Enter ORLANDO FRISCOBALDO.

ALL. Signior Friscobaldo.

HIP. Friscobaldo, oh, pray call him, and leave me; we two have business.

CAR. Ho, Signior! Signior Friscobaldo! The Lord Hippolito. 40

Exeunt [all but HIPPOLITO and FRISCOBALDO].

ORL. My noble Lord: my Lord Hippolito! the Duke's son! his brave daughter's brave husband! how does your honor'd Lordship! Does your nobility remember so poor a gentleman as Signior Orlando Friscobaldo? old, mad Orlando?

HIP. Oh, sir, our friends! they ought to be unto us as our jewels, as dearly valued, being locked up and unseen, as when we wear them in our hands. I see, Friscobaldo, age hath [50 not command of your blood ; for all Time's sickle has gone over you, you are Orlando still.

<sup>30</sup> See on Part I, V, ii, 144.

ORL. Why, my Lord, are not the fields mown and cut down, and stripp'd bare, and yet wear they not pi'd coats again? Though my head be like a leek, white, may not my heart be like the blade, green?

HIP. Scarce can I read the stories on your brow,
Which age hath writ ; there you look youthful still.

ORL. I eat snakes,<sup>31</sup> my Lord, I eat [60 snakes. My heart shall never have a wrinkle in it, so long as I can cry " Hem," with a clear voice.

HIP. You are the happier man, sir.

ORL. Happy man? I'll give you, my Lord, the true picture of a happy man. I was turning leaves over this morning, and found it ; an excellent Italian painter drew it ; if I have it in the right colors, I'll bestow it on your Lordship. 70

HIP. I stay for it.

ORL. He that makes gold his wife but not his whore,

He that at noonday walks by a prison door,
He that i' th' sun is neither beam nor mote,
He that's not mad after a petticoat,
He for whom poor men's curses dig no grave,
He that is neither lord's nor lawyer's slave,
He that makes this his sea, and that his shore,
He that in 's coffin is richer than before,
He that counts youth his sword and age his staff, 80

He whose right hand carves his own epitaph,
He that upon his deathbed is a swan,
And dead no crow — he is a happy man.

HIP. It's very well ; I thank you for this picture.

ORL. After this picture, my Lord, do I strive to have my face drawn ; for I am not covetous, am not in debt, sit neither at the Duke's side, nor lie at his feet. Wenching and I have done ;
no man I wrong, no man I fear, no man I fee ;
I take heed how far I walk, because I know [90 yonder's my home ; I would not die like a rich man, to carry nothing away save a winding sheet, but like a good man, to leave Orlando behind me. I sowed leaves in my youth, and I reap now books in my age. I fill this hand, and empty this ; and when the bell shall toll for me, if I prove a swan, and go singing to my <sup>31</sup> "A supposed receipt for restoring youth."

(Dyce.)

nest, why so ! If a crow, throw me out for carrion, and pick out mine eyes. May not old Friscobaldo, my Lord, be merry now? [100
ha?

HIP. You may ; would I were partner in your mirth.

ORL. I have a little, have all things. I have nothing ; I have no wife, I have no child, have no chick ; and why should not I be in my jo-cundary? <sup>32</sup>

HIP. Is your wife then departed?

ORL. She's an old dweller in those high countries, yet not from <sup>33</sup> me. Here, she's here ; but, before me, when a knave and a [110 quean are married, they commonly walk like serjeants together ; but a good couple are seldom parted.

HIP. You had a daughter, too, sir, had you
not?

ORL. O my Lord ! this old tree had one branch, and but one branch growing out of it.
It was young, it was fair, it was straight ; I pru[n]d it daily, dress'd it carefully, kept it from the wind, help'd it to the sun ; yet for all my skill in planting, it grew crooked, [120 it bore crabs. I hewed it down ; what's become of it I neither know, nor care.

HIP. Then I can tell you what's become
of it ;

That branch is wither'd.

ORL. So 't was long ago.

HIP. Her name I think was Bellafront ;
she's dead.

ORL. Ha? dead?

HIP. Yes ; what of her was left, not worth the keeping,

Even in my sight was thrown into a grave.

ORL. Dead ! my last and best peace go with her ! I see Death's a good trencherman ; [130 he can eat coarse homely meat, as well as the daintiest.

HIP. Why, Friscobaldo, was she homely?

ORL. O my Lord ! a strumpet is one of the Devil's vines ; all the sins, like so many poles, are stuck upright out of hell, to be her props, that she may spread upon them. And when she's ripe, every slave has a pull at her ; then must she be press'd. The young, beautiful grape sets the teeth of lust on edge, yet to [140 taste that lick'rish <sup>34</sup> wine is to drink a man's own damnation. Is she dead?

<sup>34</sup> Tempting ; with a play on the meaning "lustful."

HIP. She's turned to earth.

ORL. Would she were turn'd to Heaven!
Umh, is she dead? I am glad the world has lost one of his idols; no whoremonger will at midnight beat at the doors. In her grave sleep all my shame, and her own; and all my sorrows, and all her sins!

HIP. I'm glad you are wax, not marble;
you are made 150
Of man's best temper; there are now good hopes

That all these heaps of ice about your heart,
By which a father's love was frozen up,
Are thawed in these sweet showers, fetch'd
from your eyes:

We are ne'er like angels till our passion
dies.

She is not dead, but lives under worse fate;
I think she's poor; and, more to clip her wings,

Her husband at this hour lies in the jail,
For killing of a man. To save his blood, Join all your force with mine (mine shall be shown): 160

The getting of his life preserves your own.

ORL. In my daughter, you will say! Does she live then? I am sorry I wasted tears upon a harlot; but the best is I have a handkercher to drink them up; soap can wash them all out again. Is she poor?

HIP. Trust me, I think she is.

ORL. Then she's a right strumpet; I ne'er knew any of their trade rich two years together. Sieves can hold no water, no[r] 170 harlots hoard up money; they have many vents, too many sluices to let it out; taverns, tailors, bawds, panders, fiddlers, swaggerers, fools, and knaves do all wait upon a common harlot's trencher. She is the gallipot to which these drones fly, not for love to the pot, but for the sweet sucket<sup>36</sup> within it, her money, her money.

HIP. I almost dare pawn my word, her bosom gives warmth to no such snakes. [180
When did you see her?

ORL. Not seventeen summers.

HIP. Is your hate so old?

ORL. Older; it has a white head, and shall never die till she be buried; her wrongs shall be my bedfellow.

HIP. Work yet his life, since in it lives her fame.

ORL. No let him hang, and half her infamy departs out of the world. I hate him for her;

<sup>36</sup> Confection.

he taught her first to taste poison. I hate [190 her for herself, because she refused my physic.

HIP. Nay, but Friscobaldo!

ORL. I detest her, I defy<sup>36</sup> both; she's not mine, she's —

HIP. Hear her but speak.

ORL. I love no mermaids; I'll not be caught with a quail-pipe.<sup>37</sup>

HIP. Y' are now beyond all reason.

ORL. I am then a beast. Sir, I had rather be a beast, and not dishonor my creation, [200 than be a doting father and, like Time, be the destruction of mine own brood.

HIP. Is't dotage to relieve your child, being poor?

ORL. Is't fit for an old man to keep a
whore?

HIP. 'T is charity, too.

ORL. 'T is foolery; relieve her!

Were her cold limbs stretch'd out upon a bier,
I would not sell this dirt under my nails
To buy her an hour's breath, nor give this hair,
Unless it were to choke her. 210

HIP. Fare you well, for I'll trouble you no more. Exit.

ORL. And fare you well, sir.— Go thy ways; we have few lords of thy making, that love wenches for their honesty.— 'Las my girl! art thou poor? Poverty dwells next door to despair; there's but a wall between them. Despair is one of hell's catchpoles; and lest that devil arrest her, I'll to her. Yet she shall not know me; she shall drink of my wealth, as beggars do of running water, [220 freely, yet never know from what fountain's head it flows. Shall a silly bird pick her own breast to nourish her young ones, and can a father see his child starve? That were hard;
the pelican does it, and shall not I? Yes, I will victual the camp for her, but it shall be by some stratagem. That knave there, her husband, will be hanged, I fear; I'll keep his neck out of the noose if I can, he shall not know how.

Enter two Serving Men.

How now, knaves? Whither wander [230
you?

1 SERV. To seek your Worship.

ORL. Stay, which of you has my purse?
What money have you about you?

2 SERV. Some fifteen or sixteen pounds, sir.

ORL. Give it me.— I think I have some gold about me; yes, it's well. Leave my lodging at court, and get you home. Come, sir, though I never turned any man out of doors, yet I'll be so bold as to pull your [240 coat over your ears.

[ORLANDO exchanges his cloak for the servant's coat.]

1 SER. What do you mean to do, sir?

ORL. Hold thy tongue, knave; take thou my cloak. I hope I play not the paltry merchant in this bart'ring. Bid the steward of my house sleep with open eyes in my absence, and to look to all things. Whatsoever I command by letters to be done by you, see it done. So, does it sit well?

2 SER. As if it were made for your [250 Worship.

ORL. You proud varlets, you need not be ashamed to wear blue,<sup>38</sup> when your master is one of your fellows. Away, do not see me.

BOTH. This is excellent. Exeunt.

ORL. I should put on a worse suit, too; perhaps I will. My vizard is on; now to this masque. Say I should shave off this honor of an old man, or tie it up shorter. Well, I will spoil a good face for once. My beard being off, how should I look? Even like 261
A winter cuckoo, or unfeather'd owl;
Yet better lose this hair, than lose her soul.

Exit.

[SCENE III]<sup>39</sup>

Enter CANDIDO, LODOVICO, CAROLO, [ASTOLFO], other Guests, and Bride, with [LUKE and other] Prentices.

CAND. O gentlemen, so late! Y' are very welcome; pray sit down.

LOD. Carolo, didst e'er see such a nest of caps? <sup>40</sup>

AST. Methinks it's a most civil and most comely sight.

LOD. What does he i' th' middle look like?

AST. Troth, like a spire steeple in a country village overpeering so many thatch'd houses.

LOD. It's, rather, a long pikestaff [10 against so many bucklers without pikes; <sup>41</sup> they sit for all the world like a pair of organs,<sup>42</sup> and he's the tall great roaring pipe i' th' midst.

AST. Ha, ha, ha, ha!

CAND. What's that you laugh at, signiors?

<sup>39</sup> A room in Candido's house. — Dyce inquires, "Ought not Beraldo to be of the party?"

LOD. Troth, shall I tell you, and aloud I'll tell it;

We laugh to see, yet laugh we not in scorn,
Amongst so many caps that long hat worn.

[1 GUEST.] Mine is as tall a felt <sup>43</sup> as any is this day in Milan, and therefore I love it; for the block <sup>44</sup> was cleft out for my head, and [20 fits me to a hair.

CAND. Indeed you are good observers; it shows strange.

But gentlemen, I pray neither contemn,
Nor yet deride a civil ornament;
I could build so much in the round cap's praise
That 'bove this high roof I this flat <sup>45</sup> would raise.

LOD. Prithee, sweet bridegroom, do 't.

CAND. So <sup>46</sup> all these guests will pardon me, I'll do 't.

OMNES. With all our hearts.

CAND. Thus, then, in the cap's honor: [30 To every sex and state, both nature, time,
The country's laws, yea, and the very clime,
Do allot distinct habits; the spruce courtier
Jets <sup>47</sup> up and down in silk; the warrior
Marches in buff; the clown plods on in gray;
But for these upper garments thus I say:
The seaman has his cap, par'd without brim;
The gallant's head is feather'd — that fits him;
The soldier has his morion,<sup>48</sup> women ha' tires;<sup>49</sup>

Beasts have their headpieces, and men ha' theirs. 40

LOD. Proceed.

CAND. Each degree has his fashion; it's fit then,
One should be laid by for the citizen;
And that's the cap, which you see swells not high,

For caps are emblems of humility.

It is a citizen's badge, and first was worn
By th' Romans; for when any bondman's turn

Came to be made a freeman, thus 't was said,
He to the cap was call'd, that is, was made
Of Rome a freeman; but was first close shorn;
And so a citizen's hair is still short worn. [51

LOD. That close shaving made barbers a company, and now every citizen uses it.

CAND. Of geometric figures the most rare,
And perfect'st, are the circle and the square;
The city and the school much build upon
These figures, for both love proportion.

The city cap is round, the scholar's square,
 To show that government and learning are
 The perfect'st limbs i' th' body of a state; [60
 For without them, all's disproportionate.
 If the cap had no honor, this might rear it:
 The reverend fathers of the law do wear it.
 It's light for summer, and in cold it sits
 Close to the skull, [a] warm house for the wits;
 It shows the whole face boldly, 't is not made
 As if a man to look [out] <sup>60</sup> were afraid,
 Nor like a draper's shop with broad dark shed,
 For he's no citizen that hides his head.
 Flat caps as proper are to city gowns 70
 As to armors helmets, or to kings their crowns.
 Let then the city cap by none be scorn'd,
 Since with it princes' heads have been adorn'd.
 If more the round cap's honor you would know,
 How would this long gown with this steeple <sup>61</sup> show?

ALL. Ha, ha, ha! most vile, most ugly.

CAND. Pray, signior, pardon me; 't was done in jest.

BRIDE. A cup of claret wine there.

1 [PREN.] Wine? yes, forsooth, wine for the bride.

CAR. You ha' well set out the cap, sir. 80

LOD. Nay, that's flat.

CAND. A health!

LOD. Since his cap's round, that shall go round. Be bare,
 For in the cap's praise all of you have share.

[All uncover and drink. As he offers the cup to her] the Bride hits the Prentice <sup>82</sup> on the lips.

The bride's at cuffs.

CAND. Oh, peace, I pray thee; thus <sup>83</sup> far off I stand —

I spied the error of my servants;
 She call'd for claret, and you fill'd out sack.
 That cup give me — 't is for an old man's
 back,

And not for hers. Indeed, 't was but mistaken; 90

Ask all these else.

OMNES. No faith, 't was but mistaken.

1 [PREN.] Nay, she took it right enough.

CAND. Good Luke, reach her that glass of claret. Here Mistress Bride, pledge me there.

BRIDE. Now I'll none. Exit Bride.

CAND. How now?

LOD. Look what your mistress ails.

1 [PREN.] Nothing, sir, but about filling a wrong glass — a scurvy trick. 99

CAND. I pray you, hold your tongue. — My servant there tells me she is not well.

OMNES. Step to her, step to her.

LOD. A word with you: do ye hear? This wench, your new wife, will take you down in your wedding shoes, unless you hang her up in her wedding garters!

CAND. How, hang her in her garters!

LOD. Will you be a tame pigeon still?
 Shall your back be like a tortoise shell, to let carts go over it, yet not to break? This [110 she-cat will have more lives than your last puss had, and will scratch worse, and mouse you worse; look to 't.

CAND. What would you have me do, sir?

LOD. What would I have you do! Swear, swagger, brawl, fling! for fighting it's no matter; we ha' had knocking pusses <sup>84</sup> enow already. You know that a woman was made of the rib of a man, and that rib was crooked.
 The moral of which is that a man must [120 from his beginning be crooked to his wife.
 Be you like an orange to her: let her cut you never so fair, be you sour as vinegar.
 Will you be ruled by me?

CAND. In anything that's civil, honest, and just.

LOD. Have you ever a prentice's suit will fit me?

CAND. I have the very same which myself wore. 130

LOD. I'll send my man for 't within this half hour, and within this two hours I'll be your prentice. The hen shall not overcrow the cock; I'll sharpen your spurs.

CAND. It will be but some jest, sir?

LOD. Only a jest; farewell. — Come, Ca-rolo.

Exeunt [LODOVICO, CAROLO, and AS-TOLFO].

OMNES. We'll take our leaves, sir, too.

CAND. Pray conceit not ill
 Of my wife's sudden rising. This young
 knight,

Sir Lodovico, is deep seen in physic, 140
 And he tells me, the disease, call'd the mother, <sup>85</sup>
 Hangs on my wife; it is a vehement heaving
 And beating of the stomach, and that swelling
 Did with the pain thereof cramp up her arm,
 That hit his lips, and brake the glass — no
 harm;
 It was no harm!

OMNES. No, signior, none at all.

CAND. The straightest arrow may fly wide by chance.
But come, we'll close this brawl up in some dance. Exeunt.

[ACT II — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter BELLAFRONT and MATHEO.

BELL. O my sweet husband! wert thou in thy grave and art alive again? Oh, welcome, welcome!

MAT. Doest know me? My cloak, prithee, lay 't up. Yes, faith, my winding sheet was taken out of lavender, to be stuck with rosemary:<sup>2</sup> I lack'd but the knot<sup>3</sup> here, or here; yet if I had had it, I should ha' made a wry mouth at the world like a plaice.<sup>4</sup> But, sweetest villain, I am here now, and I will [10 talk with thee soon.

BELL. And glad am I th' art here.

MAT. Did these heels caper in shackles? Ah! my little plump rogue, I'll bear up for all this, and fly high. Catso, catso!<sup>5</sup>

BELL. Matheo.

MAT. What sayest, what sayest? O brave fresh air! A pox on these grates and jingling of keys, and rattling of iron. I'll bear up; I'll fly high, wench; hang 't off.<sup>6</sup> 20

BELL. Matheo, prithee, make thy prison thy glass,
And in it view the wrinkles and the scars
By which thou wert disfigured; viewing them, mend them.

MAT. I'll go visit all the mad rogues now, and the good roaring boys.<sup>7</sup>

BELL. Thou doest not hear me?

MAT. Yes, faith, do I.

BELL. Thou hast been in the hands of misery,
And ta'en strong physic; prithee now be sound.

MAT. Yes. 'Sfoot, I wonder how the [30 inside of a tavern looks now. Oh, when shall I bizzle, bizzle.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>8</sup> Bezzle, drink to excess.

BELL. Nay, see, th' art thirsty still for poison! Come,
I will not have thee swagger.

MAT. Honest ape's face!

BELL. 'T is that sharp'ned an axe to cut thy throat.

Good love, I would not have thee sell thy substance

And time, worth all, in those damned shops of hell,

Those dicing houses, that stand never well
But when they stand most ill; that four-squar'd sin<sup>9</sup>

Has almost lodg'd us in the beggar's inn. 40
Besides, to speak which even my soul does grieve,

A sort<sup>10</sup> of ravens have hung upon thy sleeve,
And fed upon thee. Good Mat, if you please,
Scorn to spread wing amongst so base as these;

By them thy fame is speckled, yet it shows
Clear amongst them; so crows are fair with crows.

Custom in sin gives sin a lovely dye;
Blackness in Moors is no deformity.

MAT. Bellafront, Bellafront, I protest to thee, I swear, as I hope my soul, I will [50 turn over a new leaf. The prison I confess has bit me; the best man that sails in such a ship may be lousy.

BELL. One knocks at door.

MAT. I'll be the porter. They shall see a jail cannot hold a brave spirit; I'll fly high. Exit.

BELL. How wild is his behavior! Oh, I fear
He's spoil'd by prison; he's half damned comes there.

But I must sit all storms. When a full sail
His fortunes spread, he lov'd me; being now poor, 60
I'll beg for him, and no wife can do more.

Re-enter MATHEO, with ORLANDO like a serving man.

MAT. Come in, pray! Would you speak with me, sir?

ORL. Is your name Signior Matheo?

MAT. My name is Signior Matheo.

ORL. Is this gentlewoman your wife, sir?

MAT. This gentlewoman is my wife, sir.

ORL. The Destinies spin a strong and even thread of both your loves! — The mother's own face, I ha' not forgot that. — I'm [70 an old man, sir, and am troubled with a whoreson salt rheum, that I cannot hold my water. — Gentlewoman, the last man I served was your father.

BELL. My father? Any tongue that sounds his name

Speaks music to me; welcome, good old man! How does my father? lives he? has he health?

How does my father? — I so much do shame him,

So much do wound him, that I scarce dare name him.

ORL. I can speak no more. 80

MAT. How, old lad, what, doest cry?

ORL. The rheum still, sir, nothing else; I should be well season'd,<sup>11</sup> for mine eyes lie in brine. Look you, sir, I have a suit to you.

MAT. What is 't, my little white-pate?

ORL. Troth, sir, I have a mind to serve your Worship.

MAT. To serve me? Troth, my friend, my fortunes are, as a man may say —

ORL. Nay, look you, sir, I know, when [90 all sins are old in us and go upon crutches, that covetousness does but then lie in her cradle; <sup>12</sup> 't is not so with me. Lechery loves to dwell in the fairest lodging, and covetousness in the oldest buildings, that are ready to fall; but my white head, sir, is no inn for such a gossip.<sup>13</sup> If a serving man at my years be not stored with biscuit enough, that has sailed about the world, to serve him the voyage out of his life, and to bring him east [100 home, ill pity but all his days should be fasting days. I care not so much for wages, for I have scraped a handful of gold together. I have a little money, sir, which I would put into your Worship's hands, not so much to make it more —

MAT. No, no, you say well, thou sayest well; but I must tell you — how much is the money, sayest thou?

ORL. About twenty pound, sir. 110

MAT. Twenty pound? Let me see; that shall bring thee in, after <sup>14</sup> ten per centum per annum —

ORL. No, no, no, sir, no; I cannot abide to have money engender; fie upon this silver lechery, fie! If I may have meat to my mouth, and rags to my back, and a flock-bed <sup>15</sup> to snort <sup>16</sup> upon, when I die the longer liver take all.

MAT. A good old boy, i' faith! If thou [120 servest me, thou shalt eat as I eat, drink as I drink, lie as I lie, and ride as I ride.

ORL. [aside] That's if you have money to hire horses.

MAT. Front, what doest thou thin. on't? This good old lad here shall serve me.

BELL. Alas, Matheo, wilt thou load a back That is already broke?

MAT. Peace, pox on you, peace. There's a trick in't; I fly high; it shall be so, [130 Front, as I tell you. — Give me thy hand; thou shalt serve me i' faith: welcome. As for your money —

ORL. Nay, look you, sir, I have it here.

MAT. Pish, keep it thyself, man, and then th'art sure 't is safe.

ORL. Safe! an't were ten thousand ducats, your Worship should be my cash-keeper. I have heard what your Worship is — [aside] an excellent dunghill cock, to scatter all [140 abroad; but I'll venture twenty pounds on's head. [Gives money to MATHEO.]

MAT. And didst thou serve my worshipful father-in-law, Signior Orlando Friscobaldo, that madman, once?

ORL. I served him so long till he turned me out of doors.

MAT. It's a notable chuff; <sup>17</sup> I ha' not seen him many a day.

ORL. No matter an you ne'er see him; [150 it's an arrant grandee, a churl, and as damn'd a cutthroat.

BELL. Thou villain, curb thy tongue!

Thou art a Judas,

To sell thy master's name to slander thus.

MAT. Away, ass! He speaks but truth, thy father is a — BELL. Gentleman.

MAT. And an old knave. There's more deceit in him than in sixteen 'pothecaries; it's a devil. Thou mayst beg, starve, hang, [160 damn! does he send thee so much as a cheese?

ORL. Or so much as a gammon of bacon? he'll give it his dogs first.

MAT. A jail, a jail.

ORL. A Jew, a Jew, sir.

MAT. A dog!

ORL. An English mastiff, sir.

MAT. Pox rot out his old stinking garbage!

BELL. Art not ashamed to strike an absent man thus? 170

Art not ashamed to let this vild <sup>18</sup> dog bark,
And bite my father thus? I'll not endure it.
Out of my doors, base slave!

MAT. Your doors, a vengeance? I shall live to cut that old rogue's throat, for all you take his part thus.

ORL. [aside] He shall live to see thee hang'd first.

Enter HIPPOLITO.

MAT. Gods so, my Lord, your Lordship is most welcome;

I'm proud of this, my Lord.

HIP. Was bold to see you. [180]

Is that your wife?

MAT. Yes, sir.

HIP. I'll borrow her lip.

[Kisses BELLAFRONT and takes her aside.]

MAT. With all my heart, my Lord.

ORL. Who's this, I pray, sir.

MAT. My Lord Hippolito; what's thy name?

ORL. Pacheco.

MAT. Pacheco, fine name; thou seest, Pacheco, I keep company with no scoundrels, nor base fellows.

HIP. Came not my footman to you?

BELL. Yes, my Lord.

HIP. I sent by him a diamond and a letter. Did you receive them?

BELL. Yes, my Lord, I did.

HIP. Read you the letter?

BELL. O'er and o'er 't is read. [190]

HIP. And, faith, your answer?

BELL. Now the time's not fit; You see, my husband's here.

HIP. I'll now then leave you, And choose mine hour; but ere I part away, Hark you, remember I must have no nay. — Matheo, I will leave you.

MAT. A glass of wine.

HIP. Not now; I'll visit you at other times.

Y' are come off well, then?

MAT. Excellent well, I thank your Lordship. I owe you my life, my Lord; and will pay my best blood in any service of yours. [200]

HIP. I'll take no such dear payment. Hark you, Matheo, I know the prison is a gulf.<sup>19</sup> If money run low with you, my purse is yours: call for it.

MAT. Faith, my Lord, I thank my stars, they send me down some; I cannot sink, so long as these bladders hold.

HIP. I will not see your fortunes ebb; pray, try.

To starve in full barns were fond <sup>20</sup> modesty.

MAT. Open the door, sirrah. 210

HIP. [aside to FRISCOBALDO] Drink this, and anon, I pray thee, give thy mistress this.

[HIPPOLITO gives FRISCOBALDO money and] exit.

ORL. O noble spirit, if no worse guests here dwell,

My blue coat sits on my old shoulders well.

MAT. The only royal fellow; he's bounteous as the Indies. What's that he said to thee, Bellafront?

BELL. Nothing.

MAT. I prithee, good girl.

BELL. Why, I tell you, nothing. 220

MAT. Nothing? It's well. Tricks! That I must be beholden to a scald,<sup>21</sup> hot-liver'd,<sup>22</sup> goatish <sup>23</sup> gallant, to stand with my cap in my hand, and vail <sup>24</sup> bonnet, when I ha' spread as lofty sails as himself. Would I had been hanged. Nothing? Pacheco, brush my cloak.

ORL. Where is't, sir?

MAT. Come, we'll fly high.

Nothing? There's a whore still in thine eye. Exit.

ORL. [aside] My twenty pounds flies high.

O wretched woman! 231

This varlet's able to make Lucrece common. —

How now, mistress?

Has my master dy'd you into this sad color?

BELL. Fellow, begone I pray thee; if thy tongue

Itch after talk so much, seek out thy master.

Th' art a fit instrument for him.

ORL. Zouns, I hope he will not play upon me!

BELL. Play on thee? No, you two will fly together,

Because you're roving arrows <sup>25</sup> of one feather. Would thou wouldst leave my house; thou ne'er shalt please me! 241

Weave thy nets ne'er so high, Thou shalt be but a spider in mine eye.

<sup>25</sup> I.e., high fliers. See on Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay, I, ii, 80.

Th' art rank with poison ; poison temper'd
well
Is food for health, but thy black tongue doth
swell

With venom, to hurt him that gave thee bread.
To wrong men absent is to spurn the dead ;
And so didst thou thy master, and my father.

ORL. You have small reason to take his part ; for I have heard him say five hun- [250]
dred times you were as arrant a whore as ever stiff'ned tiffany<sup>26</sup> neckcloths in water-starch upon a Saturday i' th' afternoon.

BELL. Let him say worse. When, for the earth's offence,
Hot vengeance through the marble clouds is driven,
Is't fit earth shoot again those darts at
heaven ?

ORL. And so if your father call you whore you'll not call him old knave. — [aside] Friscobaldo, she carries thy mind up and down ;
she's thine own flesh, blood, and bone. — [260]
Troth, Mistress, to tell you true, the fireworks that ran from me upon lines against my good old master, your father, were but to try how my young master, your husband, loved such squibs ; but it's well known I love your father as myself : I'll ride for him at midnight, run for you by owl-light ; I'll die for him, drudge for you ; I'll fly low, and I'll fly high, as my master says, to do you good,
if you'll forgive me. 270

BELL. I am not made of marble ; I forgive
thee.

ORL. Nay, if you were made of marble, a good stone-cutter might cut you. I hope the twenty pound I delivered to my master is in a sure hand.

BELL. In a sure hand, I warrant thee — for spending.

ORL. I see my young master is a madcap, and a bonus socius.<sup>27</sup> I love him well, Mistress ; yet as well as I love him, I'll not play the knave with you. Look you, I could [280] cheat you of this purse full of money ; but I am an old lad, and I scorn to cony-catch. Yet
I ha' been dog at a cony in my time.

[Gives purse.]

BELL. A purse ? where hadst it ?

ORL. The gentleman that went away whisper'd in mine ear, and charged me to give it
you.

BELL. The Lord Hippolito ?

ORL. Yes, if he be a lord, he gave it me.

<sup>26</sup> Thin silk or muslin.      <sup>27</sup> Boon companion.

BELL. 'T is all gold. 290

ORL. 'T is like so. It may be he thinks you want money, and therefore bestows his alms bravely, like a lord.

BELL. He thinks a silver net can catch the poor ;
Here's bait to choke a nun, and turn her
whore.

Wilt thou be honest to me ?

ORL. As your nails to your fingers, which I think never deceived you.

BELL. Thou to this lord shalt go ; commend me to him,

And tell him this : the town has held out long, Because within 't was rather true than strong ; 301

To sell it now were base. Say 't is no hold<sup>28</sup>
Built of weak stuff, to be blown up with gold.
He shall believe thee by this token, or this ;
If not, by this.

[Giving purse, ring, and letters.]

ORL. Is this all ?

BELL. This is all.

ORL. [aside] Mine own girl still !

BELL. A star may shoot, not fall.

Exit BELLAFRONT.

ORL. A star ? nay, thou art more than the moon, for thou hast neither changing quarters, nor a man standing in thy circle with a bush of thorns. Is't possible the Lord [310] Hippolito, whose face is as civil as the outside of a dedicatory book, should be a muttonmonger ?<sup>29</sup> A poor man has but one ewe, and this grandee sheep-biter<sup>29</sup> leaves whole flocks of fat wethers, whom he may knock down, to devour this. I'll trust neither lord nor butcher with quick<sup>30</sup> flesh for this trick ;
the cuckoo, I see now, sings<sup>31</sup> all the year, though every man cannot hear him ; but I'll spoil his notes. Can neither love letters, [320] nor the Devil's common picklocks, gold nor precious stones, make my girl draw up her percullis ?<sup>32</sup> Hold out still, wench.

All are not bawds, I see now, that keep doors, Nor all good wenches that are mark'd for whores. Exit.

[SCENE II]<sup>33</sup>

Enter CANDIDO, [and] LODOVICO like a prentice.

LOD. Come, come, come, what do ye lack,
sir ? What do ye lack, sir ? What is't ye

lack, sir? Is not my Worship well suited? Did you ever see a gentleman better disguised?

CAND. Never, believe me, signior.

LOD. Yes, but when he has been drunk. There be prentices would make mad gallants, for they would spend all, and drink, and whore, and so forth; and I see we gallants could [10 make mad prentices. How does thy wife like me? Nay, I must not be so saucy; then I spoil all. Pray you how does my mistress like me?

CAND. Well; for she takes you for a very simple fellow.

LOD. And they that are taken for such are commonly the arrantest knaves; but to our comedy, come.

CAND. I shall not act it; chide, you say, and fret, 20 And grow impatient: I shall never do't.

LOD. 'Sblood, cannot you do as all the world does, counterfeit?

CAND. Were I a painter, that should live by drawing

Nothing but pictures of an angry man, I should not earn my colors; I cannot do't.

LOD. Remember y' are a linen-draper, and that if you give your wife a yard, she'll take an ell; give her not therefore a quarter of your yard, not a nail.<sup>34</sup> 30

CAND. Say I should turn to ice and nip her love, Now't is but in the bud.

LOD. Well, say she's nipp'd.

CAND. It will so overcha[r]ge her heart with grief

That, like a cannon, when her sighs go off, She in her duty either will recoil, Or break in pieces and so die; her death By my unkindness might be counted murder.

LOD. Die? never, never. I do not bid you beat her, nor give her black eyes, nor pinch her sides; but cross her humors. Are not [40 bakers' arms the scales of justice? Yet is not their bread light? And may not you, I pray, bridle her with a sharp bit, yet ride her gently?

CAND. Well, I will try your pills. Do you your faithful service, and be ready Still at a pinch to help me in this part, Or else I shall be out clean.<sup>35</sup>

LOD. Come, come, I'll prompt you.

CAND. I'll call her forth now, shall I?

LOD. Do, do, bravely.

CAND. Luke, I pray, bid your mistress to come hither.

LOD.<sup>36</sup> Luke, I pray, bid your mistress to come hither. 50

CAND. Sirrah, bid my wife come to me; why, when! <sup>37</sup>

LUKE. (within) Presently, sir, she comes.

LOD. La, you, there's the echo: she comes!

[Enter] Bride.

BRIDE. What is your pleasure with me?

CAND. Marry, Wife, I have intent, and you see this stripling here; He bears good will and liking to my trade, And means to deal in linen.

LOD. Yes, indeed, sir, I would deal in linen, if my mistress like me so well as I like her.

CAND. I hope to find him honest; pray, good wife, 60 Look that his bed and chamber be made ready.

BRIDE. Y' are best to let him hire me for his maid.

I look to his bed? Look to't yourself.

CAND. Even so?

I swear to you a great oath —

LOD. [aside] Swear; cry "Zounds!" —

CAND. I will not — go to, wife — I will not —

LOD. [aside] That your great oath?

CAND. Swallow these gudgeons! <sup>38</sup>

LOD. [aside] Well said!

BRIDE. Then fast; then you may choose.

CAND. You know at table What tricks you played, swagger'd, broke glasses, fie! 70

Fie, fie, fie! and now before my prentice here, You make an ass of me, thou — what shall I call thee?

BRIDE. Even what you will.

LOD. [aside] Call her arrant whore.

CAND. [aside] Oh, fie, by no means! then she'll call me cuckold. —

Sirrah, go look to th' shop. — How does this show?

LOD. [aside] Excellent well. — I'll go look to the shop, sir. —

Fine cambrics, lawns; what do you lack?

Exit LODOVICO [into the shop].<sup>39</sup>

CAND. A curst <sup>40</sup> cow's milk I ha' drunk once before,

<sup>35</sup> Completely at a loss.

And 't was so rank in taste I'll drink no more.
Wife, I'll tame you.

BRIDE. You may, sir, if you can ;
But at a wrastling I have seen a fellow 81
Limb'd like an ox, thrown by a little man.

CAND. And so you'll throw me? — Reach me, knaves, a yard !

LOD. A yard for my master.

[LODOVICO returns from the shop with a yardstick and followed by Prentices.]

1 PREN. My master is grown valiant.

CAND. I'll teach you fencing tricks.

OMNES. Rare, rare ! a prize !<sup>41</sup>

LOD. What will you do, sir?

CAND. Marry, my good prentice,
Nothing but breathe<sup>42</sup> my wife.

BRIDE. Breathe me with your yard?

LOD. No, he'll but measure you out, forsooth.

BRIDE. Since you'll needs fence, handle your weapon well ;
For if you take a yard, I'll take an ell. — 90
Reach me an ell !

LOD. An ell for my mistress. —
[Brings one from the shop.]

Keep the laws of the noble science, sir, and measure weapons with her ; your yard is a plain heathenish weapon. 'Tis too short ;
she may give you a handful, and yet you'll not reach her.

CAND. Yet I ha' the longer arm. — Come,
fall to 't roundly,
And spare not me, Wife, for I'll lay 't on soundly ;

If o'er husbands their wives will needs be masters, 99

We men will have a law to win 't at wasters.<sup>43</sup>

LOD. 'Tis for the breeches,<sup>44</sup> is 't not?

CAND. For the breeches !

BRIDE. Husband, I am for you ; I'll not strike in jest.

CAND. Nor I.

BRIDE. But will you sign to one request?

CAND. What's that?

BRIDE. Let me give the first blow.

CAND. The first blow, Wife? — [aside to LOD.] Shall I? Prompt !

LOD. Let her ha 't ;
If she strike hard, in to her and break her pate.

CAND. A bargain ; strike !

BRIDE. Then guard you from this blow ;
For I play all at legs, but 't is thus low.

She kneels.

Behold, I am such a cunning fencer grown, [10<sup>a</sup>
I keep my ground, yet down I will be thrown
With the least blow you give me ; I disdain
The wife that is her husband's sovereign.
She that upon your pillow first did rest,
They say, the breeches wore, which I detest :
The tax which she imposed upon you, I abate
you ;

If me you make your master, I shall hate you.
The world shall judge who offers fairest play ;
You win the breeches, but I win the day.

CAND. Thou winn'st the day indeed ; give me thy hand ;

I'll challenge thee no more. My patient
breast 120

Play'd thus the rebel only for a jest.

Here's the rank rider that breaks colts ; 't is
he

Can tame the mad folks, and curst wives.

BRIDE. Who? your man?

CAND. My man ! my master, though his head be bare ;

But he's so courteous he'll put off his hair.

LOD. Nay, if your service be so hot a man cannot keep his hair on, I'll serve you no longer. [Takes off his false hair.]

BRIDE. Is this your schoolmaster? 129

LOD. Yes, faith, wench ; I taught him to take thee down. I hope thou canst take him down without teaching.

You ha' got the conquest, and you both are
friends.

CAND. Bear witness else.

LOD. My prenticeship then ends.

CAND. For the good service you to me have
done,

I give you all your years.<sup>45</sup>

LOD.

I thank you, Master.

I'll kiss my mistress now, that she may say,
" My man was bound and free, all in one day."

Exeunt.

[ACT III — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter ORLANDO [as PACHECO], and INFELICHE.

INF. From whom, sayest thou?

ORL. From a poor gentlewoman, madam, whom I serve.

INF. And what's your business?

ORL. This, madam : my poor mistress has a waste piece of ground, which is her own by

inheritance, and left to her by her mother. There's a lord now that goes about, not to take it clean from her, but to enclose it to himself, and to join it to a piece of his [10 Lordship's.

INF. What would she have me do in this?

ORL. No more, madam, but what one woman should do for another in such a case. My honorable Lord, your husband, would do anything in her behalf, but she had rather put herself into your hands, because you, a woman, may do more with the Duke, your father.

INF. Where lies this land? 20

ORL. Within a stone's cast of this place. My mistress, I think, would be content to let him enjoy it after her decease, if that would serve his turn, so <sup>2</sup> my master would yield too ; but she cannot abide to hear that the lord should meddle with it in her lifetime.

INF. Is she then married? Why stirs not her husband in it?

ORL. Her husband stirs in it underhand ; but because the other is a great rich man, [30 my master is loth to be seen in it too much.

INF. Let her in writing draw the cause at large,
And I will move the Duke.

ORL. 'Tis set down, madam, here in black and white already. Work it so, madam, that she may keep her own without disturbance, grievance, molestation, or meddling of any other ; and she bestows this purse of gold on your Ladyship.

INF. Old man, I'll plead for her, but take no fees. 40
Give lawyers them, I swim not in that flood ; I'll touch no gold till I have done her good.

ORL. I would all proctors' clerks were of your mind ; I should law more amongst them than I do, then. Here, madam, is the survey, not only of the manor itself, but of the grange-house, with every meadow, pasture, plough-land, cony-burrow, fish-pond, hedge, ditch, and bush, that stands in it. [Gives a letter.]

INF. My husband's name and hand and seal at arms <sup>3</sup> 50
To a love letter? Where hadst thou this writing?

ORL. From the foresaid party, madam, that would keep the foresaid land out of the fore-said lord's fingers.

INF. My lord turn'd ranger now?

ORL. Y'are a good huntress, lady ; you ha' found your game already. Your lord would fain be a ranger, but my mistress requests you to let him run a course in your own park. If you'll not do't for love, then do't for [60 money! She has no white money,<sup>4</sup> but there's gold ; or else she prays you to ring him by this token, and so you shall be sure his nose will not be rooting other men's pastures. [Gives purse and ring.]

INF. This very purse was woven with mine own hands ;
This diamond, on that very night when he

Untied my virgin girdle, gave I him ;
And must a common harlot share in mine?
Old man, to quit thy pains, take thou the gold. 70

ORL. Not I, madam ; old serving men want no money.

INF. Cupid himself was sure his secretary ; These lines are even the arrows love let flies ; The very ink dropp'd out of Venus' eyes.

ORL. I do not think, madam, but he fetch'd off some poet or other for those lines ; for they are parlous hawks to fly at wenches.

INF. Here's honied poison ! To me he ne'er thus writ ;
But lust can set a double edge on wit. 80

ORL. Nay, that's true, madam ; a wench will whet anything, if it be not too dull.

INF. Oaths, promises, preferments, jewels, gold,
What snares should break, if all these cannot hold?

What creature is thy mistress?

ORL. One of those creatures that are contrary to man : a woman.

INF. What manner of woman?

ORL. A little tiny woman, lower than your ladyship by head and shoulders, but as [90 mad a wench as ever unlaced a petticoat ; these things should I indeed have delivered to my Lord, your husband.

INF. They are delivered better. Why should she Send back these things?

ORL. 'Ware, 'ware, there's knavery.

INF. Strumpets, like cheating gamsters, will not win

At first ; these are but baits to draw him in.
How might I learn his hunting hours?

ORL. The Irish footman can tell you all his hunting hours, the park he hunts in, the [100 doe he would strike ; that Irish shackatory <sup>5</sup> beats the bush for him, and knows all ; he brought that letter, and that ring ; he is the carrier.

INF. Knowest thou what other gifts have pass'd between them ?

ORL. Little Saint Patrick knows all.

INF. Him I'll examine presently.

ORL. Not whilst I am here, sweet madam.

INF. Begone then, and what lies in me command. Exit ORLANDO.

Enter BRYAN.

INF. Come hither, sirrah ; how much cost those satins 110
And cloth of silver, which my husband sent By you to a low gentlewoman yonder ?

BRY. Faat satins, faat silvers, faat low gentlefolks ? Dow pratest dow knowest not what, i' faat, la.

INF. She there, to whom you carried letters.

BRY. By dis hand and bod dow say'st true, if I did so, oh how ? I know not a letter a' de book, i' faat, la.

INF. Did your lord never send you with a ring, sir, 120
Set with a diamond ?

BRY. Never, sa crees sa' me, never ! He may run at a towсанд rings <sup>6</sup> i' faat, and I never hold his stirrup, till he leap into de saddle. By St. Patrick, madam, I never touch my Lord's diamond, nor ever had to do, i' faat, la, with any of his precious stones.

Enter HIPPOLITO.

INF. Are you so close, <sup>7</sup> you bawd, you pand'ring slave ? [Strikes BRYAN.]

HIP. How now ? Why, Infeliche, what's your quarrel ?

INF. Out of my sight, base varlet ! get thee gone. 130

HIP. Away, you rogue !

BRY. Slawne loot, <sup>8</sup> fare de well, fare de well. Ah marragh frofat boddah breen ! <sup>9</sup> Exit.

HIP. What, grown a fighter ? Prithee what's the matter ?

INF. If you'll needs know, it was about the clock.

<sup>9</sup> ? I m-bárach fromhtha bodach bréan ; on the day after a feast a churl is fetid.

How works the day, my Lord, pray, by your watch ?

HIP. Lest you cuff me, I'll tell you presently ; <sup>10</sup>

I am near two.

INF. How, two ? I'm scarce at one.

HIP. One of us then goes false.

INF. Then sure 't is you ;

Mine goes by heaven's dial, the sun, and it goes true. 140

HIP. I think, indeed, mine runs somewhat too fast.

INF. Set it to mine at one then.

HIP. One ? 't is past ;

'T is past one by the sun.

INF. Faith, then, belike

Neither your clock nor mine does truly strike ; And, since it is uncertain which goes true, Better be false at one, than false at two.

HIP. Y' are very pleasant, madam.

INF. Yet not merry.

HIP. Why, Infeliche, what should make you sad ?

INF. Nothing, my Lord, but my false watch. Pray, tell me —

You see, my clock or yours is out of frame ; 150

Must we upon the workman lay the blame, Or on ourselves that keep them ?

HIP. Faith, on both.

He may by knavery spoil them, we by sloth.

But why talk you all riddle thus ? I read Strange comments in those margins <sup>11</sup> of your looks.

Your cheeks of late are, like bad printed books, So dimly charact'ed, I scarce can spell

One line of love in them. Sure all's not well.

INF. All is not well indeed, my dearest Lord ;

Lock up thy gates of hearing, that no sound 160

Of what I speak may enter.

HIP. What means this ?

INF. Or if my own tongue must myself betray,

Count it a dream, or turn thine eyes away, And think me not thy wife. She kneels.

HIP. Why do you kneel ?

INF. Earth is sin's cushion ; when the sick soul feels Herself growing poor, then she turns beggar, cries,

<sup>11</sup> Commentary used to be printed, not at the foot of the page, but in the margin.

And kneels for help. Hippolito, for husband
I dare not call thee, I have stol'n that jewel
Of my chaste honor, which was only thine,
And given it to a slave.

HIP. Ha?

INF. On thy pillow
Adultery and lust have slept; thy groom [171
Hath climbed the unlawful tree, and pluck'd
the sweets;

A villain hath usurped a husband's sheets.

HIP. 'Sdeath, who? — a cuckold! — who?

INF. This Irish footman.

HIP. Worse than damnation! a wild kerne,<sup>12</sup> a frog,

A dog; whom I'll scarce spurn. Longed you for shamrock?

Were it my father's father, heart,<sup>13</sup> I'll kill
him,

Although I take him on his deathbed gasping
'Twixt Heaven and hell! A shag-hair'd cur!

Bold strumpet,

Why hangest thou on me? Think'st I'll be a bawd 180

To a whore, because she's noble?

INF. I beg but this,
Set not my shame out to the world's broad
eye;

Yet let thy vengeance, like my fault, soar high,
So it be in dark'ned clouds.

HIP. Dark'ned! my horns
Cannot be dark'ned, nor shall my revenge.

A harlot to my slave? The act is base;
Common, but foul; so shall<sup>14</sup> thy disgrace.

Could not I feed your appetite? O women,
You were created angels, pure and fair;

But since the first fell, tempting devils you
are. 190

You should be men's bliss, but you prove their
rods;

Were there no women, men might live like
gods.

You ha' been too much down already; rise,
Get from my sight, and henceforth shun my
bed;

I'll with no strumpet's breath be poisoned.

As for your Irish lubrican,<sup>15</sup> that spirit

Whom by prepost'rous charms thy lust hath raised

In a wrong circle, him I'll damn more black
Than any tyrant's soul.

INF. Hippolito!

<sup>14</sup> Mod. eds., perhaps rightly, insert not. See
I. 212.

<sup>15</sup> Leprechaun; the pigmy sprite of Ireland.

HIP. Tell me, didst thou bait [hooks]<sup>16</sup> to draw him to thee, 200
Or did he bewitch thee?

INF. The slave did woo me.

HIP. Tu-whoos<sup>17</sup> in that screech-owl's language! Oh, who would trust

Your cork-heel'd<sup>18</sup> sex? I think to sate your lust

You would love a horse, a bear, a croaking toad,
So your hot itching veins might have their
bound.

Then the wild Irish dart was thrown?<sup>19</sup>

Come, how?

The manner of this fight?

INF. 'T was thus: he gave me this battery
first. — Oh, I

Mistake — believe me, all this in beaten gold;
Yet I held out, but at length th[us] was charm'd. [Gives letter, purse, and ring.]

What, change your diamond, wench? The act is base, 211

Common, but foul, so shall not your disgrace.

Could not I feed your appetite? O men,

You were created angels, pure and fair,

But since the first fell, worse than devils you
are.

You should our shields be, but you prove our
rods.

Were there no men, women might live like
gods.

Guilty, my Lord?

HIP. Yes, guilty, my good Lady.

INF. Nay, you may laugh, but henceforth shun my bed;

With no whore's leavings I'll be poisoned.

Exit.

HIP. O'erreached so finely! 'T is the very diamond 221

And letter which I sent. This villainy

Some spider closely weaves, whose poison'd bulk

I must let forth. Who's there without?

SER. (within) My Lord calls.

HIP. Send me the footman.

SER. [within] Call the footman to my Lord.

— Bryan, Bryan!

Re-enter BRYAN.

HIP. It can be no man else, that Irish Judas,

wanton.

<sup>19</sup> An allusion to the darts carried by the Irish running footmen. (Dyce.)

Bred in a country where no venom prospers
But in the nation's blood, hath thus betray'd
me. — 230

Slave, get you from your service.

BRY. Faat meanest thou by this now?

HIP. Question me not, nor tempt my fury,
villain!

Couldst thou turn all the mountains in the land

To hills of gold, and to give me, here thou stayest not.

BRY. I' faat, I care not.

HIP. Prate not, but get thee gone; I shall send else.<sup>20</sup>

BRY. Ay, do prey; I had rather have these make a scabbard of my guts, and let out all de Irish puddings<sup>21</sup> in my poor belly, [240 den to be a false knave to de, i' faat! I will never see dine own sweet face more. A mawhid deer a gra,<sup>22</sup> fare de well, fare de well;
I will go steal cows again in Ireland. Exit.

HIP. He's damn'd that rais'd this whirlwind, which hath blown
Into her eyes this jealousy; yet I'll on,
I'll on, stood armed devils staring in my face.
To be pursued in flight, quickens the race.
Shall my blood-streams by a wife's lust be barr'd?

Fond<sup>23</sup> woman, no; iron grows by strokes
more hard; 250

Lawless desires are seas scorning all bounds,
Or sulphur, which being ramm'd up, more
confounds;

Struggling with madmen madness nothing
tames;

Winds wrastling with great fires incense the flames. Exit.

[SCENE II]<sup>24</sup>

Enter BELLAFRONT, and ORLANDO [as PACHECO], [and] MATHEO, [who stands aside].

BELL. How now, what ails your master?

ORL. Has taken a younger brother's purge, forsooth, and that works with him.

BELL. Where is his cloak and rapier?

ORL. He has given up his cloak, and his rapier is bound to the peace. If you look a little higher, you may see that another hath ent'red into hatband for him too. Six and four<sup>25</sup> have put him into this sweat.

<sup>25</sup> I.e., dicing.

BELL. Where's all his money? 10

ORL. 'Tis put over<sup>26</sup> by exchange; his doublet was going to be translated, but for me. If any man would ha' lent but half a ducat on his beard, the hair of it had stuff'd a pair of breeches by this time. I had but one poor penny, and that I was glad to niggle out,<sup>27</sup> and buy a holly wand to grace him thorough the street. As hap was, his boots were on, and the[m] I dustied, to make people think he had been riding, and I had run [20
by him.

BELL. O me! — How does my sweet Ma-theo?

MAT. Oh, rogue, of what devilish stuff are these dice made of — of the parings of the Devil's corns of his toes, that they run thus damnably.

BELL. I prithee, vex not.

MAT. If any handicrafts-man was ever suff'ed to keep shop in hell, it will be a dice-maker; he's able to undo more souls than [30
the Devil; I play'd with mine own dice, yet lost. Ha' you any money?

BELL. 'Las, I ha' none.

MAT. Must have money, must have some,
must have a cloak, and rapier, and things.
Will you go set your lime-twigs, and get me
some birds, some money?

BELL. What lime-twigs should I set?

MAT. You will not then? Must have cash and pictures, do ye hear, frailty? Shall I [40 walk in a Plymouth cloak,<sup>28</sup> that's to say, like a rogue, in my hose<sup>29</sup> and doublet, and a crabtree cudgel in my hand, and you swim in your satins? Must have money, come!

[Taking off her gown.]

ORL. Is't bedtime, master, that you undo my mistress?

BELL. Undo<sup>30</sup> me? Yes, yes, at these riflings I
Have been too often.

MAT. Help to flay, Pacheco.

ORL. Flaying call you it?

MAT. I'll pawn you, by th' Lord, to your very eyebrows.

BELL. With all my heart, since Heaven will have me poor; 50
As good be drown'd at sea, as drown'd at shore.

<sup>26</sup> Transferred.

a voyager would often land at Plymouth minus wherewithal to purchase clothing, and cut himself a stick instead of buying a cloak. "Pictures" (l. 40) = coins.

<sup>30</sup> Ruin.

ORL. Why, hear you, sir? I' faith, do not make away her gown.

MAT. Oh! it's summer, it's summer; your only fashion for a woman now is to be light, to be light.

ORL. Why, pray sir, employ some of that money you have of mine.

MAT. Thine? I'll starve first, I'll beg first; when I touch a penny of that, let [60 these fingers' ends rot.

ORL. [aside] So they may, for that's past touching. I saw my twenty pounds fly high.

MAT. Knowest thou never a damn'd broker about the city?

ORL. Damn'd broker? Yes, five hundred.

MAT. The gown stood me in <sup>31</sup> above twenty ducats; borrow ten of <sup>32</sup> it. Cannot live without silver.

ORL. I'll make what I can of it, sir; [70 I'll be your broker, —

[Aside] But not your damn'd broker. O thou scurvy knave!

What makes a wife turn whore, but such a slave?

Exit [with Bellafront's gown].

MAT. How now, little chick, what ailest? Weeping for a handful of tailor's shreds? Pox on them, are there not silks enow at mercer's?

BELL. I care not for gay feathers, I.

MAT. What doest care for then? Why doest grieve?

BELL. Why do I grieve? A thousand sorrows strike <sup>80</sup>

At one poor heart, and yet it lives. Matheo, Thou art a gamester; prithee, throw at all, Set all upon one cast. We kneel and pray, And struggle for life, yet must be cast away. Meet misery quickly then, split <sup>33</sup> all, sell all, And when thou hast sold all, spend it; but, I beseech thee, Build not thy mind on me to coin thee more; To get it wouldst thou have me play the whore?

MAT. 'T was your profession before I married you. <sup>90</sup>

BELL. Umh? It was indeed. If all men should be branded For sins long since laid up, who could be saved?

The quarter-day's at hand. How will you do To pay the rent, Matheo?

MAT. Why, do as all of our occupation do against <sup>34</sup> quarter-days: break up house, remove, shift your lodgings; pox a' your quarters!

Enter Lodovico.

LOD. Where's this gallant?

MAT. Signior Lodovico? how does my [100 little Mirror of Knighthood? <sup>35</sup> This is kindly done, i' faith; welcome, by my troth.

LOD. And how dost, frolic? — Save you fair lady. —

Thou lookest smug <sup>36</sup> and bravely, noble Mat.

MAT. Drink and feed, laugh and lie warm.

LOD. Is this thy wife?

MAT. A poor gentlewoman, sir, whom I make use of a' nights.

LOD. Pay custom to your lips, sweet lady.

[Kisses her.]

MAT. [aside to BELLAFRONT] Borrow [110 some shells <sup>37</sup> of him. — Some wine, sweet-heart.

LOD. I'll send for 't then, i' faith.

MAT. You send for 't! — Some wine, I prithee.

BELL. [aside to MATHEO] I ha' no money.

MAT. [aside to BELLAFRONT] 'Sblood, nor I. — What wine love you, signior?

LOD. Here! [offering money] or I'll not stay, I protest; trouble the gentlewoman too [120 much?

Exit BELLAFRONT.

And what news flies abroad, Matheo?

MAT. Troth, none. Oh, signior, we ha' been merry in our days.

LOD. And no doubt shall again.

The divine powers never shoot darts at men Mortal, to kill them.

MAT. You say true.

LOD. Why should we grieve at want? Say the world made thee

Her minion, that thy head lay in her lap, [130 And that she danc'd thee on her wanton knee: She could but give thee a whole world; that's all,

And that all's nothing; the world's greatest part

Cannot fill up one corner of thy heart.

Say the three corners were all fill'd, alas!

Of what art thou possess'd? a thin blown glass,

Such as by boys is puff'd into the air!

Were twenty kingdoms thine, thou 'dst live in care:

Thou couldst not sleep the better, nor live longer, 139

Nor merrier be, nor healthfuller, nor stronger. If, then, thou want'st, thus make that want thy pleasure ;

No man wants all things, nor has all in measure.

MAT. I am the most wretched fellow ; sure some left-handed priest christ'ned me, I am so unlucky ; I am never out of one puddle or another, still falling.

Re-enter BELLAFRONT [with wine] and ORLANDO.

Fill out wine to my little finger. — With my heart, i' faith.

LOD. Thanks, good Matheo. To your own sweet self. 150

ORL. All the brokers' hearts, sir, are made of flint. I can with all my knocking strike but six sparks of fire out of them ; here's six ducats, if you'll take them.

MAT. Give me them ! An evil conscience gnaw them all ! Moths and plagues hang upon their lousy wardrobes !

LOD. Is this your man, Matheo ? An old serving man ! 159

ORL. You may give me tother half too, sir ; that's the beggar.

LOD. What hast there — gold ?

MAT. A sort <sup>38</sup> of rascals are in my debt, God knows what, and they feed me with bits, with crumbs, a pox choke them.

LOD. A word, Matheo ; be not angry with me :

Believe it that I know the touch of time, And can part copper, though it be gilded o'er,

From the true gold. The sails which thou doest spread, 169

Would show well if they were not borrowed. The sound of thy low fortunes drew me hither ; I give myself unto thee ; prithee, use me.

I will bestow on you a suit of satin, And all things else to fit a gentleman, Because I love you.

MAT. Thanks, good, noble knight !

LOD. Call on me when you please ; till then farewell. Exit.

MAT. Hast angled ? Hast cut up this fresh salmon ?

BELL. Wouldst have me be so base ?

MAT. It's base to steal, it's base to be a whore ; 180

Thou 'lt be more base : I'll make thee keep a door. <sup>39</sup> Exit.

ORL. I hope he will not sneak away with all the money, will he ?

BELL. Thou seest he does.

ORL. Nay, then, it's well. I set my brains upon an upright last ; <sup>40</sup> though my wits be old, yet they are like a wither'd pippin, wholesome. Look you, Mistress, I told him I had but six ducats of the knave broker, but I had eight, and kept these two for you. 190

BELL. Thou shouldst have given him all.

ORL. What, to fly high ?

BELL. Like waves, my misery drives on misery. Exit.

ORL. Sell his wife's clothes from her back ? Does any poulterer's wife pull chickens alive ? He riots all abroad, wants all at home ; he dices, whores, swaggers, swears, cheats, borrows, pawns. I'll give him hook and line, a little more for all this ; 198
Yet sure i' th' end he'll delude all my hopes, And show me a French trick danc'd on the ropes. <sup>41</sup> Exit.

[SCENE III] <sup>42</sup>

Enter at one door LODOVICO and CAROLO ; at another BOTS and MISTRESS HORSELEECH. CANDIDO and his Wife appear in the shop.

LOD. Hist, hist, Lieutenant Bots ! How dost, man ?

CAR. Whither are you ambling, Madam Horseleech ?

MIS. H. About wordly profit, sir ; how do your Worships ?

BOTS. We want tools, gentlemen, to furnish the trade ; they wear out day and night, they wear out till no metal <sup>43</sup> be left in their back. We hear of two or three new [10] wenches are come up <sup>44</sup> with a carrier, and your old goshawk here is flying at them.

LOD. And, faith, what flesh have you at home ?

MIS. H. Ordinary dishes ; by my troth, sweet men, there's few good i' th' city. I am as well furnish'd as any, and, though I say it, as well custom'd.

BOTS. We have meats of all sorts of dressing ; we have stew'd meat for your French- [20

<sup>43</sup> Mettle ; the words were undistinguished in spelling.

man, pretty light picking meat for your Italian, and that which is rotten roasted for Don Spaniarido.

LOD. A pox on 't.

BOTS. We have poulterer's ware for your sweet bloods, as dove, chicken, duck, teal, woodcock, and so forth; and butcher's meat for the citizen; yet muttons <sup>46</sup> fall very bad this year.

LOD. Stay, is not that my patient linen- [30 draper yonder, and my fine young smug mistress, his wife?

CAR. Sirrah <sup>46</sup> grannam, I'll give thee for thy fee twenty crowns, if thou canst but procure me the wearing of yon velvet cap.

MIS. H. You'd wear another thing besides the cap. Y' are a wag.

BOTS. Twenty crowns? We'll share, and I'll be your pully to draw her on.

LOD. Do 't presently; we'll ha' some [40 sport.

MIS. H. Wheel you about, sweet men; do you see? I'll cheapen <sup>47</sup> wares of the man, whilst Bots is doing with his wife.

LOD. To 't; if we come into the shop, to do you grace, we'll call you madam.

BOTS. Pox a' your old face, give it the badge of all scurvy faces, a mask.

[MISTRESS HORSELEECH puts on a mask.]

CAND. What is 't you lack, gentlewoman? Cambric or lawns, or fine hollands? Pray [50 draw near; I can sell you a pennyworth.

BOTS. Some cambric for my old lady.

CAND. Cambric? you shall, the purest thread in Milan.

LOD. and CAR. Save you, Signior Candido.

LOD. How does my noble master? How my fair mistress?

CAND. My worshipful good servant. — View it well, for 't is both fine and even.

[Shows cambric.]

CAR. Cry you mercy, madam; though [60 mask'd, I thought it should be you by your man. — Pray, signior, show her the best, for she commonly deals for good ware.

CAND. Then this shall fit her. — This is for your Ladyship.

BOTS. [to Bride] A word, I pray. There is a waiting gentlewoman of my lady's — her name is Ruyna — says she's your kinswoman, and that you should be one of her aunts.

BRIDE. One of her aunts? Troth, sir, I [70 know her not.

BOTS. If it please you to bestow the poor labor of your legs at any time, I will be your convoy thither.

BRIDE. I am a snail, sir, seldom leave my house. If 't please her to visit me, she shall be welcome.

BOTS. Do you hear? The naked truth is, my lady hath a young knight, her son, who loves you; y' are made, if you lay hold [80 upon 't; this jewel he sends you.

BRIDE. Sir, I return his love and jewel with scorn. Let go my hand, or I shall call my husband. You are an arrant knave. Exit.

LOD. What, will she do?

BOTS. Do? They shall all do if Bots sets upon them once. She was as if she had profess'd the trade, squeamish at first; at last I showed her this jewel, said a knight sent it her. 90

LOD. Is 't gold, and right stones?

BOTS. Copper, copper; I go a-fishing with these baits. She nibbled, but would not swallow the hook, because the conger-head, <sup>48</sup> her husband, was by; but she bids the gentleman name any afternoon, and she'll meet him at her garden house, <sup>49</sup> which I know.

LOD. Is this no lie now?

BOTS. Damn me, if —

LOD. Oh, prithee, stay <sup>50</sup> there. 100

BOTS. The twenty crowns, sir.

LOD. Before he has his work done? — But on my knightly word he shall pay 't thee.

Enter ASTOLFO, BERALDO, FONTINELL, and the Irish footman [BRYAN].

AST. I thought thou hadst been gone into thine own country.

BRY. No, faat, la; I cannot go dis four or tree days.

BER. Look thee, yonder's the shop, and that's the man himself.

FON. Thou shalt but cheapen, and do [110 as we told thee, to put a jest upon him, to abuse his patience.

BRY. I' faat, I doubt my pate shall be knocked; but, sa crees sa' me, for your shakes, I will run to any linen-draper in hell. Come, preddy.

OMNES. Save you, gallants.

LOD. and CAR. Oh, well met!

CAND. You'll give no more, you say? I cannot take it.

<sup>46</sup> Formerly used to both sexes.

Mrs. H. Truly, I'll give no more.

CAND. It must not fetch it. [120]
What would you have, sweet gentlemen?

AST. Nay, here's the customer.

Exeunt Bots and [MISTRESS] HORSE-LEECH.

LOD. The garden house, you say? We'll bolt <sup>51</sup> out your roguery.

CAND. I will but lay these parcels by — my men

Are all at customhouse unloading wares.
If cambric you would deal in, there's the best ;
All Milan cannot sample <sup>52</sup> it.

LOD. Do you hear? one, two, three, — 'sfoot, there came in four gallants! Sure your wife is slipp'd up, <sup>53</sup> and the fourth [130] man, I hold my life, is grafting your warden <sup>54</sup> tree.

CAND. Ha, ha, ha! you gentlemen are full of jest ;
If she be up, she's gone some wares to show ;
I have above as good wares as below.

LOD. Have you so? Nay, then —

CAND. Now, gentlemen, is 't cambrics?

BRY. I predee now, let me have de best wares.

CAND. What's that he says, pray, gentle-
men? 140

LOD. Marry, he says we are like to have the best wars.

CAND. The best wars? All are bad, yet wars do good,

And, like to surgeons, let sick kingdoms blood.

BRY. Faat a devil pratest tow so? a pox on dee! I preddee, let me see some hollen, to make linen shirts, for fear my body be lousy.

CAND. Indeed, I understand no word he speaks.

CAR. Marry, he says that at the siege in Holland 150

There was much bawdry used among the soldiers,

Though they were lousy.

CAND. It may be so ; that's likely. — True,
indeed ;

In every garden, sir, does grow that weed.

BRY. Pox on de gardens, and de weeds, and de fool's cap dere, and de clouts! Here, doest make a hobbyhorse of me?

[Tearing the cambric.]

OMNES. Oh, fie! he has torn [the] cambric.

CAND. 'Tis no matter.

<sup>54</sup> A kind of pear.

AST. It frets me to the soul.

CAND. So does 't not me.

My customers do oft for remnants call : 160
These are two remnants, now, no loss at all.

But let me tell you, were my servants here,
It would ha' cost more. — Thank you, gentle-
men ;

I use you well, — pray know my shop again.

Exit.

OMNES. Ha, ha, ha! come, come, let's go, let's go. Exeunt.

[ACT IV — SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter MATHEO, brave,<sup>2</sup> and BELLAFRONT.

MAT. How am I suited, Front? Am I not gallant, ha?

BELL. Yes, sir, you are suited well.

MAT. Exceeding passing well, and to the time.<sup>3</sup>

BELL. The tailor has play'd his part with
you.

MAT. And I have play'd a gentleman's part with my tailor, for I owe him for the making of it.

BELL. And why did you so, sir? 10

MAT. To keep the fashion ; it's your only fashion now, of your best rank of gallants, to make their tailors wait for their money ; neither were it wisdom indeed to pay them upon the first edition of a new suit ; for commonly the suit is owing for when the linings are worn out, and there's no reason, then, that the tailor should be paid before the mercer.

BELL. Is this the suit the knight bestowed upon you? 20

MAT. This is the suit, and I need not shame to wear it, for better men than I would be glad to have suits <sup>4</sup> bestowed on them. It's a generous fellow ; but — pox on him — we whose pericranions are the very limbecks and stillatories of good wit, and fly high, must drive liquor out of stale gaping oysters. Shallow knight, poor squire Tinacheo! <sup>5</sup> I'll make a wild Cataian <sup>6</sup> of forty such! hang him, he's an ass — he's always sober! 30

1605.)

<sup>6</sup> Dyce quotes Reed: "i.e., forty such shallow knights, &c. would go to the composition of a dexterous thief;" and adds: "A Cataian came to signify a sharper, because the people of Cataia (China) were famous for their thieving."

BELL. This is your fault to wound your friends still.

MAT. No, faith, Front; Lodovico is a noble Slavonian:<sup>7</sup> it's more rare to see him in a woman's company than for a Spaniard to go into England and to challenge the English fencers there. — One knocks, — see. [Exit BELLAFRONT.] — La, fa, sol, la, fa, la, rustle in silks and satins! There's music in this, and a taffety petticoat; it makes both fly [40 high! Catso!

Re-enter BELLAFRONT; after her ORLANDO, like himself, with four Men after him.

BELL. Matheo! 't is my father!

MAT. Ha! father? It's no matter, he finds no tatter'd prodigals here.

ORL. Is not the door good enough to hold your blue coats? Away, knaves. — [Exeunt Servants.] — Wear not your clothes threadbare at knees for me; beg Heaven's blessing, not mine. — Oh, cry your Worship mercy, sir; was somewhat bold to talk to this gentle- [50 woman, your wife here.

MAT. A poor gentlewoman, sir.

ORL. Stand not, sir, bare to me; I ha' read oft That serpents who creep low belch ranker
poison
Than winged dragons do that fly aloft.

MAT. If it offend you, sir, 't is for my pleasure.

ORL. Your pleasure be 't, sir. Umh, is this your palace?

BELL. Yes, and our kingdom, for 't is our content.

ORL. It's a very poor kingdom then; what, are all your subjects gone a-sheepshear- [60 ing? Not a maid? not a man? not so much as a cat? You keep a good house belike, just like one of your profession: every room with bare walls, and a half-headed bed to vault upon, as all your bawdyhouses are. Pray who are your upholsters? Oh, the spiders, I see; they bestow hangings upon you.

MAT. Bawdyhouse! Zounds, sir —

BELL. Oh sweet Matheo, peace. — Upon my knees 70
I do beseech you, sir, not to arraign me
For sins which Heaven, I hope, long since hath pardoned!
Those flames, like lightning flashes, are so spent

<sup>7</sup> As meaningless as Simon Eyre's Near-Eastern epithets.

The heat no more remains than where ships went,

Or where birds cut the air, the print remains.

MAT. Pox on him, kneel to a dog.

BELL. She that's a whore,
Lives gallant, fares well, is not, like me, poor.
I ha' now as small acquaintance with that sin,
As if I had never known it, that never bean.<sup>8</sup>

ORL. No acquaintance with it? What [80 maintains thee then? How doest live then? Has thy husband any lands, any rents coming in, any stock going, any plows jogging, any ships sailing? Hast thou any wares to turn,<sup>9</sup> so much as to get a single penny by? Yes thou hast ware to sell;

Knaves are thy chapmen, and thy shop is hell.

MAT. Do you hear, sir?

ORL. So, sir, I do hear, sir, more of you than you dream I do. 90

MAT. You fly a little too high, sir.

ORL. Why, sir, too high?

MAT. I ha' suffered your tongue, like a barr'd cater-tray,<sup>10</sup> to run all this while, and ha' not stopp'd it.

ORL. Well, sir, you talk like a gamester.

MAT. If you come to bark at her because she's a poor rogue, look you, here's a fine path, sir, and there, there, the door.

BELL. Matheo! 100

MAT. Your blue-coats<sup>11</sup> stay for you, sir. I love a good, honest roaring-boy, and so —

ORL. That's the devil.

MAT. Sir, sir, I'll ha' no Joves in my house to thunder avault. She shall live and be maintained when you, like a keg of musty sturgeon, shall stink. Where? in your coffin. How? be a musty fellow, and lousy.

ORL. I know she shall be maintained, but how? She like a quean, thou like a [110 knave; she like a whore, thou like a thief.

MAT. Thief? Zounds! thief?

BELL. Good, dearest Mat! — Father!

MAT. Pox on you both! I'll not be braved. New satin scorns to be put down with bare bawdy velvet. Thief!

ORL. Ay, thief; th'art a murderer, a cheater, a whoremonger, a pot-hunter, a borrower, a beggar —

BELL. Dear Father — 120

MAT. An old ass, a dog, a churl, a chuff, an usurer, a villain, a moth, a mangy mule, with an old velvet footcloth on his back, sir.

<sup>8</sup> Or as if the sin had never existed.

<sup>11</sup> Servants.

BELL. Oh me!

ORL. Varlet, for this I'll hang thee.

MAT. Ha, ha, alas!

ORL. Thou keepest a man of mine here, under my nose.

MAT. Under thy beard. 129

ORL. As arrant a smell-smock, for an old muttonmonger<sup>12</sup> as thyself.

MAT. No, as yourself.

ORL. As arrant a purse-taker as ever cried, "Stand!" yet a good fellow, I confess, and valiant; but he'll bring thee to th' gallows. You both have robb'd of late two poor country peddlers.

MAT. How's this? how's this? Doest thou fly high? Rob peddlers? — Bear witness, Front — rob peddlers? My man and [140 I a thief?

BELL. Oh, sir, no more.

ORL. Ay, knave, two peddlers. Hue and cry is up, warrants are out, and I shall see thee climb a ladder.<sup>13</sup>

MAT. And come down again as well as a bricklayer or a tiler. — [aside] How the vengeance knows he this? — If I be hanged, I'll tell the people I married old Friscobaldo's daughter; I'll frisco you, and your old carcass.

ORL. Tell what you canst; if I stay [151 here longer, I shall be hang'd too, for being in thy company; therefore, as I found you, I leave you —

MAT. [aside to BELLAFRONT] Kneel, and get money of him.

ORL. A knave and a quean, a thief and a strumpet, a couple of beggars, a brace of baggages.

MAT. [aside to BELLAFRONT] Hang [160 upon him. — Ay, ay, sir, fare you well; we are so. — [aside] Follow close. — We are beggars — in satin. — [aside] To him.

BELL. Is this your comfort, when so many years

You ha' left me frozen to death?

ORL. Freeze still, starve still!

BELL. Yes, so I shall; I must; I must and will.

If, as you say, I'm poor, relieve me then;

Let me not sell my body to base men.

You call me strumpet; Heaven knows I am none.

Your cruelty may drive me to be one; 170

Let not that sin be yours; let not the shame Of common whore live longer than my name.

That cunning bawd, Necessity, night and day

Plots to undo me; drive that hag away, Lest being at lowest ebb, as now I am, I sink for ever.

ORL. Lowest ebb, what ebb?

BELL. So poor, that, though to tell it be my shame,

I am not worth a dish to hold my meat;

I am yet poorer: I want bread to eat.

ORL. It's not seen by your cheeks. 180

MAT. [aside] I think she has read an homily to tickle to the old rogue.

ORL. Want bread! There's satin: bake that.

MAT. 'Sblood, make pasties of my clothes?

ORL. A fair new cloak, stew that; an excellent gilt rapier.

MAT. Will you eat that, sir?

ORL. I could feast ten good fellows with those hangers.<sup>14</sup>

MAT. The pox, you shall! 190

ORL. I shall not, till thou beggest, think thou art poor;

And when thou beggest I'll feed thee at my door,

As I feed dogs, with bones; till then beg, borrow,

Pawn, steal, and hang, turn bawd, when th' art no whore. —

[aside] My heartstrings sure would crack, were they strain'd more. Exit.

MAT. This is your father, your damn'd — Confusion light upon all the generation of you! He can come bragging hither with four white herrings at's tail in blue coats, without roes in their bellies; but I may starve ere he give me so much as a cob.<sup>15</sup> 201

BELL. What tell you me of this? alas!

MAT. Go, trot after your dad; do you capitulate; I'll pawn not for you; I'll not steal to be hanged for such an hypocritical, close, common harlot. Away, you dog! — Brave, i' faith! Udsfoot, give me some meat.

BELL. Yes, sir. Exit.

MAT. Goodman slave, my man, too, is gallop'd to the Devil a' the tother [210 side; Pacheco, I'll checo you. — Is this your dad's day? England, they say, is the only hell for horses, and only paradise for women; pray get you to that paradise, because y' are called an honest whore; there they live none but honest whores, with a pox. Marry, here in our city, all [y]our sex are but foot-cloth

nags: <sup>16</sup> the master no sooner lights but the man leaps into the saddle.

Re-enter BELLAFRONT [with meat and drink].

BELL. Will you sit down, I pray, sir? [220

MAT. [sitting down] I could tear, by th' Lord, his flesh, and eat his midriff in salt, as I eat this. — Must I choke? <sup>17</sup> — My father Friscobaldo, I shall make a pitiful hog-louse of you, Orlando, if you fall once into my fingers — Here's the savorest meat! I ha' got a stomach with chafing. <sup>18</sup> What rogue should tell him of those two peddlers? A plague choke him, and gnaw him to the bare bones! — Come, fill. 230

BELL. Thou sweatest with very anger, good sweet. Vex not, 'las; 't is no fault of mine.

MAT. Where didst buy this mutton? I never felt better ribs.

BELL. A neighbor sent it me.

Re-enter ORLANDO [as PACHECO].

MAT. Ha! neighbor! Foh, my mouth stinks! You whore, do you beg victuals for me? Is this satin doublet to be bombasted <sup>19</sup> with broken meat?

Takes up the stool.

ORL. What will you do, sir? 240

MAT. Beat out the brains of a beggarly —

ORL. Beat out an ass's head of your own. — Away, Mistress! (Erit BELLAFRONT.) Zounds, do but touch one hair of her, and I'll so quilt your cap with old iron, <sup>20</sup> that your coxcomb shall ache the worse these seven years for 't. Does she look like a roasted rabbit, that you must have the head for <sup>21</sup> the brains?

MAT. Ha, ha! Go out of my doors, you rogue! Away, four marks; <sup>22</sup> trudge. 250

ORL. Four marks? No, sir; my twenty pound that you ha' made fly high, and I am gone.

MAT. Must I be fed with chippings? You're best get a clapdish, <sup>23</sup> and say y' are proctor to some spittle-house. <sup>24</sup> — Where hast thou been, Pacheco? Come hither my little turkey-cock.

<sup>16</sup> Comparing women, in their long dresses, to horses in long housings that nearly touched the ground.

ORL. I cannot abide, sir, to see a woman wrong'd, not I. 260

MAT. Sirrah, here was my father-in-law to-day.

ORL. Pish, then y' are full of crowns.

MAT. Hang him! he would ha' thrust crowns upon me, to have fall'n in <sup>25</sup> again; but I scorn cast clothes, or any man's gold.

ORL. [aside] — But mine. — How did he brook that, sir?

MAT. Oh, swore like a dozen of drunken tinkers; at last growing foul in words, he [270 and four of his men drew upon me, sir.

ORL. In your house? Would I had been by!

MAT. I made no more ado, but fell to my old lock, <sup>26</sup> and so thrashed my blue-coats and old crab-tree-face my father-in-law, and then walk'd like a lion in my grate. <sup>27</sup>

ORL. O noble master!

MAT. Sirrah, he could tell me of the robbing the two peddlers, and that warrants [280 are out for us both.

ORL. Good sir, I like not those crackers. <sup>28</sup>

MAT. Crackhalter, <sup>29</sup> won't <sup>30</sup> set thy foot to mine?

ORL. How, sir? at drinking?

MAT. We'll pull that old crow my father, rob thy master. I know the house, thou the servants; the purchase <sup>31</sup> is rich, the plot to get it easy; the dog will not part from a bone. 290

ORL. Pluck't out of his throat, then. I'll snarl for one, if this <sup>32</sup> can bite.

MAT. Say no more, say no more, old coal; <sup>33</sup> meet me anon at the sign of the Shipwrack.

ORL. Yes, sir.

MAT. And, dost hear, man? — the Shipwrack. Erit.

ORL. Th' art at the shipwrack now, and like a swimmer, Bold, but unexpert, with those waves doest play,

Whose dalliance, whorelike, is to cast thee away. —

Enter HIPPOLITO and BELLAFRONT.

And here's another vessel, better fraught, [300 But as ill-mann'd; her sinking will be wrought,

If rescue come not. Like a man-of-war

<sup>33</sup> Loot.

I'll therefore bravely out ; somewhat I'll do,
And either save them both or perish, too.

Exit.

HIP. It is my fate to be bewitched by those eyes.

BELL. Fate? your folly.

Why should my face thus mad you? 'Las,
those colors

Are wound up long ago, which beauty spread ;
The flow'rs that once grew here, are withered.
You turn'd my black soul white, made it look new ; 310

And, should I sin, it ne'er should be with you.

HIP. Your hand ; I'll offer you fair play.

When first

We met i' th' lists together, you remember
You were a common rebel ; with one parley
I won you to come in.

BELL. You did.

HIP. I'll try

If now I can beat down this chastity
With the same ordnance. Will you yield this fort,

If with the power of argument now, as then,
I get of you the conquest : as before
I turn'd you honest, now to turn you
whore, 320

By force of strong persuasion?

BELL. If you can,

I yield.

HIP. The alarm's struck up ; I'm your man.

BELL. A woman gives defiance.

HIP. Sit.

BELL. Begin ;

'T is a brave battle to encounter sin.

HIP. You men that are to fight in the same war

To which I'm press'd, and plead at the same
bar,

To win a woman, if you would have me speed,<sup>34</sup>
Send all your wishes !

BELL. No doubt y' are heard ;<sup>35</sup> proceed.

HIP. To be a harlot, that you stand upon,<sup>36</sup>
The very name's a charm to make you one.

Harlot[ta]<sup>37</sup> was a dame of so divine 331

And ravishing touch<sup>38</sup> that she was concu-bine

To an English king ; her sweet, bewitching
eye

Did the king's heartstrings in such love knots tie

That even the coyest was proud when she could hear

Men say, " Behold, another Harlot there ! "

And after her all women that were fair

Were harlots call'd, as to this day some are.

Besides, her dalliance she so well does mix,
That she's in Latin call'd the meretrix. 340

Thus for the name ; for<sup>39</sup> the profession, this :
Who lives in bondage, lives lac'd ; the chief
bliss

This world below can yield is liberty :

And who, than whores, with looser wings dare fly?

As Juno's proud bird<sup>40</sup> spreads the fairest tail,
So does a strumpet hoist the loftiest sail.

She's no man's slave ; men are her slaves.
Her eye

Moves not on wheels screw'd up with jealousy ;
She, hors'd or coach'd, does merry journeys
make,

Free as the sun in his gilt zodiac ; 350

As bravely does she shine, as fast she's driven,
But stays not long in any house of heaven,

But shifts from sign to sign, her amorous
prizes

More rich being when she's down, than when she rises.

In brief, gentlemen haunt them, soldiers fight
for them,

Few men but know them, few or none abhor
them.

Thus for sport's sake speak I, as to a woman Whom, as the worst ground, I would turn to common ;

But you I would enclose<sup>41</sup> for mine own bed.

BELL. So should a husband be dishonored.

HIP. Dishonored? Not a whit ; to fall to
one 361

Besides your husband is to fall to none,

For one no number is.

BELL. Faith, should you take

One in, your bed, would you that reckoning
make?

'T is time you sound retreat.

HIP. Say, have I won?

Is the day ours?

BELL. The battle's but half done ;

None but yourself have yet sounded alarms ;
Let us strike too, else you dishonor arms.

<sup>34</sup> Succeed. <sup>35</sup> By some in the audience.

father of William the Conqueror. The derivation is, however, fanciful.

<sup>40</sup> The peacock.

<sup>41</sup> The figure is from the practice of enclosing for private use land formerly common. It was a cause, of much complaint.

HIP. If you can win the day, the glory's yours.

BELL. To prove a woman should not be a whore : 370

When she was made, she had one man, and no more ;

Yet she was tied to laws then, for even than,<sup>42</sup>

'T is said, she was not made for men, but man.

Anon,<sup>43</sup> t' increase earth's brood, the law was varied,

Men should take many wives ; and, though they married

According to that act, yet 't is not known

But that those wives were only tied to one.

New parliaments were since ;<sup>44</sup> for now one woman

Is shared between three hundred, nay she's common,

Common ! as spotted leopards, whom for sport 380

Men hunt to get the flesh, but care not for 't.

So spread they nets of gold, and tune their calls,

To enchant silly women to take falls ;

Swearing they are angels, which, that they may win,

They'll hire the Devil to come with false dice in.

Oh Sirens' subtle tunes ! yourselves you flatter,

And our weak sex betray : so men love water ; It serves to wash their hands, but being once foul,

The water down is pour'd, cast out of doors ; And even of such base use do men make whores. 390

A harlot, like a hen, more sweetness reaps,

To pick men one by one up, than in heaps ;

Yet all feeds but confounding.<sup>45</sup> Say<sup>46</sup> you should taste me ;

I serve but for the time, and when the day

Of war is done, am cashier'd out of pay ;

If like lame soldiers I could beg, that's all ;

And there's lust's rendezvous, an hospital.

Who then would be a man's slave, a man's woman ?

She's half starv'd the first day that feeds in common.

HIP. You should not feed so, but with me alone. 400

BELL. If I drink poison by stealth, is't not all one ?

Is't not rank poison still ? with you alone !

Nay, say you spi'd a courtesan, whose soft side To touch you'd sell your birthright, for one kiss

Be rack'd ; she's won, y' are sated : what follows this ?

Oh, then you curse that bawd that toll'd<sup>47</sup> you in,

The night ; you curse your lust, you loathe the sin,

You loathe her very sight ; and, ere the day Arise, you rise glad when y' are stol'n away.

Even then when you are drunk with all her sweets, 410

There's no true pleasure in a strumpet's sheets.

Women whom lust so prostitutes to sale,

Like dancers upon ropes, once seen, are stale.

HIP. If all the threads of harlots' lives are spun

So coarse as you would make them, tell me why

You so long loved the trade ?

BELL. If all the threads Of harlot's lives be fine as you would make them,

Why do not you persuade your wife turn whore,

And all dames else to fall before that sin ? [419

Like an ill husband, though I knew the same

To be my undoing, followed I that game.

Oh, when the work of lust had earn'd my bread,

To taste it how I trembled, lest each bit,

Ere it went down, should choke me chewing it !

My bed seem'd like a cabin hung in hell ;

The bawd, hell's porter ; and the lickerish<sup>48</sup> wine

The pander fetch'd was like an easy fine,<sup>49</sup>

For which, methought, I leas'd away my soul ;

And oftentimes, even in my quaffing bowl,

Thus said I to myself, I am a whore, 430

And have drunk down thus much confusion more.

HIP. It is a common rule, and 't is most true,

Two of one trade never love ; no more do you.

Why are you sharp 'gainst that you once profess'd ?

BELL. Why dote you on that which you did once detest ?

I cannot, seeing she's woven of such bad stuff, Set colors on a harlot base enough.

Nothing did make me, when I loved them best,

<sup>44</sup> There has been new legislation since then.

To loathe them more than this : when in the street

A fair young modest damsel I did meet, 440
She seem'd to all a dove, when I pass'd by,
And I to all a raven ; every eye
That followed her went with a bashful glance,
At me each bold and jeering countenance
Darted forth scorn ; to her as if she had been Some tower unvanquished, would they vail ;<sup>50</sup>
'Gainst me swoln rumor hoisted every sail ;
She, crown'd with reverend praises, pass'd by them ;

I, though with face mask'd, could not scape the " Hem ! "

For, as if Heaven had set strange marks on whores, 450

Because they should be pointing-stocks<sup>51</sup> to man,

Dress'd up in civilest shape, a courtesan —
Let her walk saint-like, noteless,<sup>52</sup> and unknown —

Yet she's betray'd by some trick of her own.
Were harlots therefore wise, they'd be sold dear ;

For men account them good but for one year,

And then, like almanacs whose dates are gone,

They are thrown by and no more look'd upon.

Who'll therefore backward fall, who will launch forth 459

In seas so foul, for ventures no more worth ?
Lust's voyage hath, if not this course, this cross :

Buy ne'er so cheap, your ware comes home with loss.

What, shall I sound retreat ? The battle's done ;

Let the world judge which of us two have won.

HIP. I !

BELL. You ? nay then, as cowards do in fight,

What by blows cannot, shall be saved by flight. Exit.

HIP. Fly to earth's fixed centre, to the caves

Of everlasting horror, I'll pursue thee,
Though loaden with sins, even to hell's brazen doors. 469

Thus wisest men turn fools, doting on whores. Exit.

<sup>52</sup> Giving no occasion for attention.

[SCENE II] <sup>53</sup>

Enter the DUKE, LODOVICO, and ORLANDO
[as PACHECO] ; after them INFELICHE, CAROLO, ASTOLFO, BERALDO, [and] FONTINELL.

ORL. I beseech your Grace, though your eye be so piercing as under a poor blue coat to cull out an honest father from an old serving man, yet, good my Lord, discover not the plot to any, but only this gentleman that is now to be an actor in our ensuing comedy.

DUKE. Thou hast thy wish, Orlando ; pass unknown ;

Sforsa shall only go along with thee,

To see that warrant served upon thy son.<sup>54</sup>

LOD. To attach him upon felony, for [10 two peddlers ; is't not so ?

ORL. Right, my noble knight. Those peddlers were two knaves<sup>55</sup> of mine ; he fleec'd the men before, and now he purposes to flay the master. He will rob me ; his teeth water to be nibbling at my gold ; but this shall hang him by th' gills, till I pull him on shore.

DUKE. Away ; ply you the business.

ORL. Thanks to your Grace ; but, my good Lord, for my daughter — 20

DUKE. You know what I have said.

ORL. And remember what I have sworn. She's more honest,<sup>56</sup> on my soul, than one of the Turk's wenches, watch'd by a hundred eunuchs.

LOD. So she had need, for the Turks make them whores.

ORL. He's a Turk that makes any woman a whore ; he's no true Christian, I'm sure. I commit your Grace.<sup>57</sup> 30

DUKE. Infeliche.

INF. Here, sir.

[DUKE and INFELICHE step aside.]

LOD. Signior Friscobaldo.

ORL. Frisking again ? Pacheco !

LOD. Uds so, Pacheco ! We'll have some sport with this warrant ; 't is to apprehend all suspected persons in the house. Besides, there's one Bots, a pander, and one Madam Horseleech, a bawd, that have abus'd my friend<sup>58</sup> ; those two conies will we ferret [40 into the pursenet.<sup>59</sup>

ORL. Let me alone for dabbling<sup>60</sup> them o' th' neck. Come, come.

<sup>60</sup> Striking.

LOD. Do ye hear, gallants? Meet me anon at Matheo's.

OMNES. Enough.

Exeunt LODOVICO and ORLANDO.

DUKE. Th' old fellow sings that note thou didst before,

Only his tunes are that she is no whore,
But that she sent his letters and his gifts,
Out of a noble triumph o'er his lust, 50
To show she trampled his assaults in dust.

INF. 'T is a good, honest servant, that old
man.

DUKE. I doubt no less.

INF. And it may be my husband ;
Because, when once this woman was unmask'd,
He levell'd all her thoughts and made them fit,
Now he'd mar all again, to try his wit.

DUKE. It may be so, too ; for to turn a harlot

Honest, it must be by strong antidotes ;
'T is rare, as to see panthers change their spots.
And when she's once a star fixed and shines
bright, 60

Though 't were impiety then to dim her light,
Because we see such tapers seldom burn,
Yet 't is the pride and glory of some men
To change her to a blazing star again ;
And it may be Hippolito does no more. —
It cannot be but y' are acquainted all
With that same madness of our son-in-law,
That dotes so on a courtesan.

OMNES. Yes, my Lord.

CAR. All the city thinks he's a whore-monger. 70

AST. Yet I warrant he'll swear no man marks<sup>a</sup> him.

BER. 'T is like so, for when a man goes awenching, is as if he had a strong stinking breath ; every one smells him out, yet he feels it not, though it be ranker than the sweat of sixteen bearwarders.

DUKE. I doubt then you have all those stinking breaths ;
You might be all smelt out.

CAR. Troth, my Lord, I think we are all [so as you ha' been in your youth when you went a-maying ; we all love to hear the cuckoo sing upon other men's trees.<sup>b</sup>

DUKE. It's well [that] <sup>c</sup> you confess. But, girl, thy bed
Shall not be parted <sup>d</sup> with a courtesan.

<sup>a</sup> Observes.

'T is strange !

No frown of mine ; no frown of the poor
lady,

My abus'd child, his wife ; no care of fame,
Of honor, Heaven, or hell ; no not that name
Of common strumpet ; can affright, or woo
him 90

To abandon her ; the harlot does undo
him ;

She has bewitched him, robb'd him of his shape,

Turn'd him into a beast ; his reason's lost ;
You see he looks wild, does he not ?

CAR. I ha' noted
New moons in's face, my Lord, all full of change.

DUKE. He's no more like unto Hippolito
Than dead men are to living — never sleeps,
Or if he do, it's dreams ; and in those dreams
His arms work ; and then cries, " Sweet — what's-her-name."

What's the drab's name ?

AST. In troth, my Lord, I know not ;
I know no drabs, not I.

DUKE. Oh, Bellafront ! — [101
And, catching her fast, cries, " My Bella-
front !"

CAR. A drench that's able to kill a horse cannot kill this disease of smock-smelling, my Lord, if it have once eaten deep.

DUKE. I'll try all physic, and this med'cine
first :

I have directed warrants strong and peremp-tory

To purge our city Milan, and to cure
The outward parts, the suburbs, for the attaching <sup>e</sup>

Of all those women, who, like gold, want weight ; 110

Cities, like ships, should have no idle freight.

CAR. No, my Lord ; and light wenches are no idle freight. But what's your Grace's reach <sup>f</sup> in this ?

DUKE. This, Carolo : if she whom my son dotes on,

Be in that m[u]ster-book enroll'd, he'll shame
Ever t' approach one of such noted name.

CAR. But say she be not ?

DUKE. Yet on harlots' heads
New laws shall fall so heavy, and such blows
Shall give to those that haunt them, that Hippolito 120

If not for fear of law, for love to her,
If he love truly, shall her bed forbear.

CAR. Attach all the light heels i' th' city and clap 'em up? Why, my Lord, you dive into a well unsearchable. All the whores within the walls, and without the walls? I would not be he should meddle with them for ten such dukedoms; the army that you speak on is able to fill all the prisons within this city, and to leave not a drinking-room in any tavern besides. 131

DUKE. Those only shall be caught that are of note;

Harlots in each street flow.

The fish being thus i' th' net, ourself will sit, And with eye most severe dispose of it.

Come, girl. [Exeunt DUKE and INFELICHE.]

CAR. Arraign the poor whore!

AST. I'll not miss that sessions.

FONT. Nor I. 139

BER. Nor I, though I hold up my hand <sup>67</sup> there myself. Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>68</sup>

Enter MATHEO, LODOVICO, and ORLANDO [as PACHECO].

MAT. Let who will come, my noble chevalier; I can but play the kind host, and bid 'em welcome.

LOD. We'll trouble your house, Matheo, but as Dutchmen do in taverns: drink, be merry, and be gone.

ORL. Indeed, if you be right Dutchmen, if you fall to drinking you must be gone. <sup>69</sup>

MAT. The worst is, my wife is not at home; but we'll fly high, my generous knight, for [10 all that. There's no music when a woman is in the consort. <sup>70</sup>

ORL. No; for she's like a pair of virginals, <sup>71</sup> Always with jacks at her tail.

Enter ASTOLFO, CAROLO, BERALDO, [and] FONTINELL.

LOD. See, the covey is sprung.

OMNES. Save you, gallants.

MAT. Happily encounter'd, sweet bloods.

LOD. Gentlemen, you all know Signior Candido, the linen-draper, he that's more patient than a brown baker upon the day when he [20 heats his oven, and has forty scolds about him.

OMNES. Yes, we know him all; what of him?

<sup>71</sup> Cf. "a pair of organs" = a single instrument. For "jacks" see on Part I, V, ii, 315.

LOD. Would it not be a good fit of mirth, to make a piece of English cloth of him, and to stretch him on the tenters, <sup>72</sup> till the threads of his own natural humor <sup>73</sup> crack, by making him drink healths, tobacco, <sup>74</sup> dance, sing bawdy songs, or to run any bias <sup>75</sup> according as we think good to cast him?

CAR. 'T were a morris dance worth the seeing. 31

AST. But the old fox is so crafty we shall hardly hunt [him] <sup>76</sup> out of his den.

MAT. To that train I ha' given fire already; and the hook to draw him hither is to see certain pieces of lawn, which I told him I have to sell, and indeed have such; fetch them down, Pacheco.

ORL. Yes, sir; I'm your water-spaniel, and will fetch anything. — [aside] But I'll [40 fetch one dish of meat anon shall turn your stomach, and that's a constable. Exit.

Enter BOTS, ushering MISTRESS HORSELEECH.

OMNES. How now? how now?

CAR. What galley-foist <sup>77</sup> is this?

LOD. Peace, two dishes of stewed prunes <sup>78</sup>: a bawd and a pander. — My worthy Lieutenant Bots! why, now I see thou'rt a man of thy word; welcome. — Welcome Mistress Horseleech. — Pray, gentlemen, salute this reverend matron. 50

MIS. H. Thanks to all your Worships.

LOD. I bade a drawer send in wine, too; did none come along with thee, grannam, but the Lieutenant?

MIS. H. None came along with me but Bots, if it like your Worship.

BOTS. Who the pox should come along with you but Bots?

Enter two Vintners.

OMNES. Oh brave! march fair!

LOD. Are you come? That's well. 60

MAT. Here's ordnance able to sack <sup>79</sup> a city.

LOD. Come, repeat, read this inventory.

1 VINT. Imprimis, a pottle <sup>80</sup> of Greek wine,

<sup>72</sup> A frame on which cloth is stretched on hooks to ensure its drying square and without shrinking.

a pottle of Peter-sameene,<sup>81</sup> a pottle of Char-n[e]co,<sup>82</sup> and a pottle of [Leatica].<sup>83</sup>

Lod. Y' are paid?

2 VINT. Yes, Sir. Exeunt Vintners.

MAT. So shall some of us be anon, I fear.

BOTS. Here's a hot day<sup>84</sup> towards; <sup>85</sup> but, zounds, this is the life out of which a soldier [70 sucks sweetness! When this artillery goes off roundly, some must drop to the ground: cannon,<sup>86</sup> demi-cannon, saker,<sup>87</sup> and basilisk.<sup>88</sup>

Lod. Give fire, Lieutenant.

BOTS. So, so; must I venture first upon the breach? — To you all, gallants; Bots sets upon you all.<sup>89</sup> [Drinks.]

OMNES. It's hard, Bots, if we pepper not you as well as you pepper us.

Enter CANDIDO.

Lod. My noble linen-draper! — Some [80 wine! — Welcome, old lad!

MAT. Y' are welcome, signior.

CAND. These lawns, sir?

MAT. Presently; my man is gone for them. We ha' rigged a fleet, you see here, to sail about the world.

CAND. A dangerous voyage, sailing in such ships.

BOTS. There's no casting<sup>90</sup> overboard yet.

Lod. Because you are an old lady, I will have you be acquainted with this grave [90 citizen. Pray bestow your lips upon him, and bid him welcome.

Mis. H. Any citizen shall be most welcome to me. — I have used to buy ware at your shop.

CAND. It may be so, good madam.

Mis. H. Your prentices know my dealings well; I trust your good wife be in good case. If it please you, bear her a token from my lips, by word of mouth. [Kisses him.] 100

CAND. I pray, no more; forsooth, 't is very well;

Indeed I love no sweetmeats. — [aside] Sh 'as a breath

Stinks worse than fifty polecats. — Sir, a word, Is she a lady?

Lod. A woman of a good house, and an ancient: she's a bawd.

CAND. A bawd! Sir, I'll steal hence, and see your lawns

Some other time.

MAT. Steal out of such company? Pacheco, my man, is but gone for 'em. — [110 Lieutenant Bots, drink to this worthy old fellow, and teach him to fly high.

OMNES. Swagger; and make him do't on his knees.

CAND. How, Bots? Now bless me, what do I with Bots?

No wine in sooth, no wine, good Master Bots.

BOTS. Graybeard, goat's pizzle,<sup>91</sup> 't is a health; have this in your guts, or this, there [touching his sword]. I will sing a bawdy song, sir, because your verjuice<sup>92</sup> face is melan- [120 choly, to make liquor go down glib. Will you fall on your marrowbones, and pledge this health? 'T is to my mistress, a whore.

CAND. Here's ratsbane upon ratsbane; Master Bots,

I pray, sir, pardon me. You are a soldier;

Press me not to this service. I am old,

And shoot not in such pot-guns.<sup>93</sup>

BOTS. Cap,<sup>94</sup> I'll teach you.

CAND. To drink healths is to drink sickness. — Gentlemen,

Pray rescue me.

BOTS. Zounds, who dare? 130

OMNES. We shall ha' stabbing then?

CAND. I ha' reckonings to cast up,<sup>95</sup> good Master Bots.

BOTS. This will make you cast 'em up<sup>96</sup> better.

Lod. Why does your hand shake so?

CAND. The palsy, signiors, danceth in my blood.

BOTS. Pipe,<sup>97</sup> with a pox, sir, then, or I'll make your blood dance —

CAND. Hold, hold, good Master Bots, I drink. [Kneels.]

OMNES. To whom?

CAND. To the old Countess there. [Drinks.]

Mis. H. To me, old boy? [140 This is he that never drunk wine! Once again to 't.

CAND. [aside] With much ado the poison is got down,

<sup>95</sup> Figure up. <sup>96</sup> See on l. 88. <sup>97</sup> Drink.

Though I can scarce get up ; never before
Drank I a whore's health, nor will never more.

Re-enter ORLANDO with lawns.

MAT. Hast been at gallows?

ORL. Yes, sir, for I make account to suffer
today.

MAT. Look, signior ; here's the commodity.

CAND. Your price? 150

MAT. Thus.<sup>98</sup>

CAND. No, too dear ; thus.

MAT. No. O fie, you must fly higher. Yet take 'em home ; trifles shall not make us quarrel ; we'll agree ; you shall have them, and a pennyworth. I'll fetch money at your shop.

CAND. Be it so, good signior ; send me going.

MAT. Going? A deep bowl of wine for Signior Candido.

ORL. He would be going. 160

CAND. I'll rather stay than go so ; stop your bowl.

Enter Constable and Billmen.

LOD. How now?

BOTS. Is't Shrove Tuesday, that these ghosts walk? <sup>99</sup>

MAT. What's your business, sir?

CONST. From the Duke ; you are the man we look for, signior. I have warrant here from the Duke, to apprehend you upon felony for robbing two peddlers. I charge you i' th'
Duke's name, go quickly. 170

MAT. Is the wind turn'd? Well, this is that old wolf, my father-in-law. — Seek out your mistress, sirrah.

ORL. Yes, sir. — [aside] As shafts by piecing are made strong,
So shall thy life be straight'ned by this wrong.

Exit.

OMNES. In troth, we are sorry.

MAT. Brave men must be cross'd ; pish, it's but Fortune's dice roving against me. Come, sir, pray use me like a gentleman ; let me not be carried through the streets like a pag- [180
eant.

CONST. If these gentlemen please, you shall go along with them.

OMNES. Be't so ; come.

CONST. What are you, sir?

BOTS. I, sir? Sometimes a figure, sometimes a cipher, as the State has occasion to cast up her accounts. I'm a soldier.

CONST. Your name is Bots, is't not?

BOTS. Bots is my name ; Bots is known [190 to this company.

CONST. I know you are, sir ; what's she?

BOTS. A gentlewoman, my mother.

CONST. Take 'em both along.

BOTS. Me, sir?

BILLMEN. [Ay,]<sup>100</sup> sir !

CONST. If he swagger, raise the street.

BOTS. Gentlemen, gentlemen, whither will you drag us?

LOD. To the garden house.<sup>101</sup> Bots, [200 are we even with you?

CONST. To Bridewell with 'em.

BOTS. You will answer this.

CONST. Better than a challenge. I have warrant for my work, sir.

Exeunt [Billmen with BOTS and MIS-TRESS HORSELEECH].

LOD. We'll go before.

CONST. Pray do. —

Exeunt [MATHEO, and LODOVICO, AS-TOLFO, CARLO, BERALDO, and FON-TINELL.]

Who? Signior Candido? a citizen
Of your degree consorted thus, and revelling
In such a house?

CAND. Why, sir? what house, I pray? [210

CONST. Lewd, and defam'd.

CAND. Is't so? Thanks, sir ; I'm gone.

CONST. What have you there?

CAND. Lawns which I bought, sir, of the gentleman
That keeps the house.

CONST. And I have warrant here
To search for such stol'n ware ; these lawns are stol'n,

CAND. Indeed !

CONST. So he's the thief, you the receiver !
I'm sorry for this chance ; I must commit
you.

CAND. Me, sir, for what?

CONST. These goods are found upon you,
And you must answer't.

CAND. Must I so?

CONST. Most certain.

CAND. I'll send for bail.

CONST. I dare not ; yet, because [220
You are a citizen of worth, you shall not

<sup>98</sup> "Probably . . . displaying the fingers."
(Rhys.)

<sup>99</sup> On that day the authorities made a search for brothels, and the apprentices went about wrecking
them.

<sup>100</sup> Q. And.

<sup>101</sup> At which Bots had asserted that Candido's wife would meet Carolo (III, iii).

Be made a pointing-stock, but without guard
Pass only with myself.

CAND. To Bridewell too?

CONST. No remedy.

CAND. Yes, patience. Being not mad,
They had me once to Bedlam; now I'm drawn
To Bridewell, loving no whores.

CONST. You will buy lawn! Exeunt.

[ACT V — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter at one door HIPPOLITO; at another, LODOVICO, ASTOLFO, CAROLO, BERALDO, [and] FONTINELL.

LOD. Yonder's the Lord Hippolito; by any means leave him and me together. Now will I turn him to a madman.

OMNES. Save you, my Lord.

Exeunt [all but HIPPOLITO and LODOVICO].

LOD. I ha' strange news to tell you.

HIP. What are they?

LOD. Your mare's i' th' pound.

HIP. How's this?

LOD. Your nightingale is in a lime-bush.

HIP. Ha? <sup>10</sup>

LOD. Your puritanical "honest whore" sits in a blue gown.<sup>2</sup>

HIP. Blue gown!

LOD. She'll chalk out your way to her now; she beats chalk.<sup>3</sup>

HIP. Where? who dares? —

LOD. Do you know the brick house of castigation, by the river side that runs by Milan — the school where they pronounce no letter well but O? <sup>20</sup>

HIP. I know it not.

LOD. Any man that has borne office of constable, or any woman that has fall'n from a horse-load to a cart-load,<sup>4</sup> or like an old hen that has had none but rotten eggs in her nest, can direct you to her; there you shall see your punk amongst her backfriends.<sup>5</sup> There you may have her at your will, For there she beats chalk, or grinds in the mill; With a whip deedle, deedle, deedle, deedle; [30 Ah, little monkey!

HIP. What rogue durst serve that warrant, knowing I loved her?

LOD. Some worshipful rascal, I lay ' my life.

HIP. I'll beat the lodgings down about their ears

That are her keepers.

LOD. So you may bring an old house over her head.

HIP. I'll to her —

I'll to her, stood armed fiends to guard the doors.

Exit.

LOD. O me! what monsters are men made by whores!

If this false fire do kindle him, there's one [40 faggot more to the bonfire. Now to my Bridewell birds; what song will they sing?

Exit.

[SCENE II]<sup>7</sup>

Enter DUKE, CAROLO, ASTOLFO, BERALDO, FONTINELL, three or four Masters of Bridewell, [and] INFELICHE.

DUKE. Your Bridewell? that the name?

For beauty, strength,
Capacity and form of ancient building,
Besides the river's neighborhood, few houses
Wherein we keep our court can better it.

1 MAST. Hither from foreign courts have princes come,

And with our duke did acts of state commence.
Here that great cardinal had first audience,
The grave Campayne; that duke dead, his son,
That famous prince,<sup>8</sup> gave free possession

Of this, his palace, to the citizens, <sup>10</sup>
To be the poor man's warehouse, and endowed it

With lands to th' value of seven hundred mark,

With all the bedding and the furniture, once proper,<sup>9</sup>

As the lands then were, to an hospital Belonging to a duke of Savoy. Thus Fortune can toss the world; a prince's court
Is thus a prison now.

DUKE. 'T is Fortune's sport.
These changes common are; the wheel of fate
Turns kingdoms up, till they fall desolate.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>8</sup> It is really, of course, the London Bridewell that is here described. The cardinal, duke, and prince are Campeius, Henry VIII, and Edward VI.

<sup>10</sup> To the rim of Fortune's wheel the fates of kingdoms are attached, and they rise or fall in accordance with its revolutions.

But how are these seven hundred marks by th' year 20

Employ'd in this your workhouse?

1 MAST. War and peace
Feed both upon those lands; when the iron doors

Of wars burst open, from this house are sent
Men furnish'd in all martial complement.
The moon hath thorough her bow scarce drawn to th' head,

Like to twelve silver arrows, all the months,
Since sixteen hundred soldiers went aboard.
Here providence and charity play such parts
The house is like a very school of arts;
For when our soldiers, like ships driven from sea, 30

With ribs all broken and with tatter'd sides,
Cast anchor here again, their ragged backs
How often do we cover! that, like men,
They may be sent to their own homes again.
All here are but one swarm of bees, and strive
To bring with wearied thighs honey to the hive.
The sturdy beggar, and the lazy loon,<sup>11</sup>
Gets here hard hands, or lac'd correction.<sup>12</sup>
The vagabond grows staid and learns t' obey;
The drone is beaten well, and sent away. 40
As other prisons are, some for the thief,
Some by which undone credit gets relief
From bridled debtors, others for the poor,
So this is for the bawd, the rogue, and whore.

CAR. An excellent team of horse!

1 MAST. Nor is it seen That the whip draws blood here, to cool the spleen

Of any rugged<sup>13</sup> bench; <sup>14</sup> nor does offence
Feel smart<sup>15</sup> on spiteful or rash evidence;
But pregnant<sup>16</sup> testimony forth must stand,
Ere justice leave them in the beadle's hand. [50
As iron on the anvil are they laid,
Not to take blows alone, but to be made
And fashioned to some charitable use.

DUKE. Thus wholsom'st laws spring from the worst abuse.

Enter ORLANDO, [as PACHECO,] before BELLAFRONT.

BELL. Let mercy touch your heartstrings, gracious Lord,
That it may sound like music in the ear
Of a man desperate, being i' th' hands of law.

DUKE. His name?

BELL. Matheo.

<sup>16</sup> Cogent, clear.

DUKE. For a robbery?

Where is [he] <sup>17</sup>?

BELL. In this house.

DUKE. Fetch you him hither. —

[Exeunt] BELLAFRONT and one of the Masters of Bridewell.

Is this the party? 60

ORL. This is the hen, my Lord, that the cock with the lordly comb, your son-in-law, would crow over and tread.<sup>18</sup>

DUKE. Are your two servants ready?

ORL. My two peddlers are pack'd together,
my good Lord.

DUKE. 'T is well; this day in judgment shall be spent.

Vice, like a wound lanc'd, mends by punishment.

INF. Let me be gone, my Lord, or stand unseen;

'T is rare when a judge strikes and that none
die,

And 't is unfit then women should be by. 70

1 MAST. We'll place you, lady, in some private room.

INF. Pray do so.

Exit [with a Master].

ORL. Thus nice dames swear it is unfit their eyes

Should view men carv'd up for anatomies; <sup>19</sup>
Yet they'll see all, so <sup>20</sup> they may stand unseen;
Many women sure will sin behind a screen.

Enter LODOVICO.

Lod. Your son, the Lord Hippolito, is ent'red.

DUKE. Tell him we wish his presence. — A word, Sforza:

On what wings flew he hither?

Lod. These: — I told him his lark [80 whom he loved was a Bridewell-bird; he's mad that this cage should hold her, and is come to let her out.

DUKE. 'T is excellent; away, go call him hither.

Exit LODOVICO.

*Re-enter one of the Governors of the House;
BELLAFRONT after him with MATHEO; after him the Constable. Enter at another door LODOVICO and HIPPOLITO. ORLANDO steps forth and brings in two [Servants disguised as] Peddlers.*

DUKE. You are to us a stranger, worthy lord;
'T is strange to see you here.

<sup>20</sup> Provided that.

HIP. It is most fit
That where the sun goes, atomies <sup>21</sup> follow it.

DUKE. Atomies neither shape nor honor
bear : 89

Be you yourself, a sunbeam to shine clear.—
Is this the gentleman? Stand forth and hear
Your accusation.

MAT. I'll hear none; I fly high in that:
rather than kites shall seize upon me and pick out mine eyes to my face, I'll strike my talons thorough mine own heart first, and spit my blood in theirs. I am here for shriving those two fools of their sinful pack. When those jackdaws have caw'd over me, then must I cry guilty, or not guilty. The law has [100 work enough already and therefore I'll put no work of mine into his hands; the hangman shall ha't first. I did pluck those ganders, did rob them.

DUKE. 'T is well done to confess.

MAT. Confess and be hanged, and then I fly high, is 't not so? That for that! A gallows is the worst rub <sup>22</sup> that a good bowler can meet with; I stumbled against such a post, else this night I had play'd the part of a true son in [110 these days, undone my father-in-law; with him would I ha' run at leap-frog, and come over his gold, though I had broke his neck for 't; but the poor salmon-trout is now in the net.

HIP. And now the law must teach you to fly
high.

MAT. Right, my Lord, and then may you fly low; <sup>23</sup> no more words — a mouse, mum;
you are stopp'd.

BELL. Be good to my poor husband, dear my Lords. 120

MAT. Ass!

Why shouldst thou pray them to be good to me,
When no man here is good to one another?

DUKE. Did any hand work in this theft but
yours?

MAT. O yes, my Lord, yes. The hangman has never one son at a birth; his children always come by couples. Though I cannot give the old dog, my father, a bone to gnaw, the daughter shall be sure of a choke-pear. <sup>24</sup> —
Yes, my Lord, there was one more that [130 fiddled my fine peddlers, and that was my wife.

BELL. Alas, I?

ORL. [aside] O everlasting, supernatural, superlative villain!

<sup>24</sup> I.e., something that can hardly be swallowed.

OMNES. Your wife, Matheo?

HIP. Sure it cannot be.

MAT. Oh, sir, you love no quarters of mutton that hang up, you love none but whole mutton. <sup>25</sup> She set <sup>26</sup> the robbery, I perform'd it; she spur'd me on, I gallop'd away. 140

ORL. My Lords, —

BELL. My Lords, — fellow, give me speech,
— if my poor life

May ransom thine, I yield it to the law.

Thou hurt'st thy soul, yet wipest off no offence,
By casting blots upon my innocence.

Let not these spare me, but tell truth; [now] <sup>27</sup>
see

Who slips his neck out of the misery,

Though not out of the mischief. Let thy servant

That shared in this base act accuse me here.

Why should my husband perish, he go
clear? 150

ORL. [aside] A good child: hang thine own
father!

DUKE. Old fellow, was thy hand in too?

ORL. My hand was in the pie, my Lord, I confess it. My mistress, I see, will bring me to the gallows, and so leave me; but I'll not leave her so. I had rather hang in a woman's company than in a man's; because if we should go to hell together, I should scarce be letten in,
for all the devils are afraid to have any [160 women come amongst them. As I am true thief, she neither consented to this felony, nor knew of it.

DUKE. What fury prompts thee on to kill thy wife?

MAT. It is my humor, sir; 't is a foolish bagpipe that I make myself merry with. Why should I eat hemp-seed at the hangman's thirteen-pence halfpenny <sup>28</sup> ordinary, <sup>29</sup> and have this whore laugh at me, as I swing, as I totter?

DUKE. Is she a whore? 170

MAT. A sixpenny mutton pasty, for any to cut up.

ORL. [aside] Ah, toad, toad, toad.

MAT. A barber's cittern <sup>30</sup> for every serving man to play upon; that lord, your son, knows
it.

HIP. I, sir? Am I her bawd then?

MAT. No, sir; but she's your whore then.

<sup>28</sup> $27, the hangman's fee.

<sup>30</sup> A cittern or lute was part of the appointment of a barber's shop. (Rhys.)

ORL. [aside] Yea, spider; doest catch at great flies?

HIP. My whore? 180

MAT. I cannot talk, sir, and tell of your rems and your rees<sup>31</sup> and your whirligigs and devices; but, my Lord, I found 'em like sparrows in one nest, billing together, and bulling<sup>32</sup> of me. I took 'em in bed, was ready to kill him, was up to stab her —

HIP. Close thy rank jaws! — [to the DUKE]

Pardon me, I am vexed. —

Thou art a villain, a malicious devil;
Deep as the place where thou art lost, thou liest.

Since I am thus far got into this storm, 190
I'll thorough, and thou shalt see I'll thorough untouch'd,

When thou shalt perish in it.

Re-enter INFELICHE.

INF. 'T is my cue

To enter now. — Room! let my prize be play'd;

I ha' lurk'd in clouds, yet heard what all have said;

What jury more can prove she has wrong'd my bed,

Than her own husband? She must be punished.

I challenge law, my Lord; letters and gold
And jewels from my lord that woman took.

HIP. Against that black-mouth'd devil, against letters and gold,

And against a jealous wife, I do uphold 200
Thus far her reputation; I could sooner
Shake th' Appenine and crumble rocks to dust
Than, though Jove's show'r<sup>33</sup> rain'd down, tempt her to lust.

BELL. What shall I say?

ORL. (discovers himself.) Say thou art not a whore, and that's more than fifteen women amongst five hundred dare swear without lying! This shalt thou say — no, let me say 't for thee: — thy husband's a knave; this lord's an honest man; thou art no punk; [210 this lady's a right lady. Pacheco is a thief as his master is, but old Orlando is as true a man as thy father is. I ha' seen you fly high, sir, and I ha' seen you fly low, sir; and to keep you from the gallows, sir, a blue coat have I worn, and a thief did I turn. Mine own men

are the peddlers. My twenty pound did fly high, sir; your wife's gown did fly low, sir: whither fly you now, sir? You ha' scap'd the gallows; to the Devil you fly next, sir. [220
Am I right, my Liege?

DUKE. Your father has the true physician play'd.

MAT. And I am now his patient.

HIP. And be so still;
'T is a good sign when our cheeks blush at ill.

CONST. The linen-draper, Signior Candido,
He whom the city terms the patient man,
Is likewise here for buying of those lawns
The peddlers lost.

INF. Alas, good Candido!

DUKE. Fetch him; and when these payments up are cast, Exit Constable.
Weigh out your light gold; <sup>34</sup> but let's have them last. 230

Enter CANDIDO and Constable, [who presently goes out].

DUKE. In Bridewell, Candido?

CAND. Yes, my good Lord.

DUKE. What make <sup>35</sup> you here?

CAND. My Lord, what make you here?

DUKE. I'm here to save right, and to drive wrong hence.

CAND. And I to bear wrong here with patience.

DUKE. You ha' bought stol'n goods.

CAND. So they do say, my Lord;
Yet bought I them upon a gentleman's word,
And I imagine now, as I thought then,
That there be thieves, but no thieves gentlemen.

HIP. Your credit's <sup>36</sup> crack'd, being here.

CAND. No more than gold,
Being crack'd, which does his <sup>37</sup> estimation
hold. 240

I was in Bedlam once, but was I mad?

They made me pledge whores' healths, but am
I bad

Because I'm with bad people?

DUKE. Well, stand by;
If you take wrong, we'll cure the injury.

Re-enter Constable; after him BOTS, after them two Beadles, one with hemp, the other with a beetle.<sup>38</sup>

DUKE. Stay, stay, what's he? a prisoner?

CONST. Yes, my Lord.

<sup>38</sup> A heavy mallet. Q transposes him and them.

HIP. He seems a soldier.

BOTS. I am what I seem, sir, one of Fortune's bastards, a soldier and a gentleman, and am brought in here with Master Constable's band of billmen, because they face me <sup>39</sup> [250 down that I live, like those that keep bowling alleys, by the sins of the people, in being a squire of the body.<sup>40</sup>

HIP. Oh, an apple-squire.<sup>41</sup>

BOTS. Yes, sir, that degree of scurvy squires; and that I am maintained by the best part that is commonly in a woman, by the worst players of those parts; but I am known to all this company.

LOD. My Lord, 't is true, we all know [260 him; 't is Lieutenant Bots.

DUKE. Bots; and where ha' you served, Bots?

BOTS. In most of your hottest services in the Low Countries: at the Groyne I was wounded in this thigh, and halted upon 't,<sup>42</sup> but 't is now sound. In Cleveland <sup>43</sup> I miss'd but little, having the bridge of my nose broken down with two great stones,<sup>44</sup> as I was scaling a fort. I ha' been tried, sir, too, in Gelder- [270 land, and scap'd hardly there from being blown up at a breach: I was fired,<sup>45</sup> and lay i' th' surgeon's hands for 't, till the fall of the leaf following.

HIP. All this may be, and yet you no soldier.

BOTS. No soldier, sir? I hope these are services that your proudest commanders do venture upon, and never come off sometimes.

DUKE. Well, sir, because you say you are a soldier,

I'll use you like a gentleman. — Make room there; 280

Plant him amongst you. We shall have anon Strange hawks fly here before us. If none light

On you, you shall with freedom take your flight; But if you prove a bird of baser wing,

We'll use you like such birds: here you shall sing.

BOTS. I wish to be tried at no other weapon.

DUKE. Why is he furnish'd with those implements?

1 MASTER. The pander is more dangerous to a state

<sup>39</sup> I.e., confront me and put me down, with the charge.

Than is the common thief; and though our laws

Lie heavier on the thief, yet that the pander May know the hangman's ruff should fit him too, 291

Therefore he's set to beat hemp.

DUKE. This does savor Of justice; basest slaves to basest labor. Now, pray, set open hell, and let us see The she-devils that are here.

INF. Methinks this place Should make e'en Lais <sup>46</sup> honest.

1 MASTER. Some it turns good; But as some men, whose hands are once in blood,

Do in a pride spill more, so some going hence Are, by being here, lost in more impudence.

Let it not to them, when they come, appear That anyone does as their judge sit here; [301 But that as gentlemen you come to see, And then perhaps their tongues will walk more free.

DUKE. Let them be marshall'd in. — [Exeunt Masters, Constable, and Beadles.] — Be cover'd all;

Fellows, now to make the scene more comical.

CAR. Will not you be smelt out, Bots?

BOTS. No, your bravest <sup>47</sup> whores have the worst noses.<sup>48</sup>

Re-enter two of the Masters; a Constable after them, then DOROTHEA TARGET, brave; <sup>49</sup> after her two Beadles, th' one with a wheel, the other with a blue gown.

LOD. Are not you a bride, forsooth?

DOR. Say ye?

CAR. He would know if these be not [310 your bridemen.

DOR. Uuh! yes, sir; and, look ye, do you see? the bride-laces that I give at my wedding will serve to tie rosemary to both your coffins when you come from hanging — scab! <sup>50</sup>

ORL. Fie,<sup>51</sup> punk, fie, fie, fie!

DOR. Out, you stale, stinking head of garlic; foh, at my heels.

ORL. My head's cloven.

HIP. O, let the gentlewoman alone; [320 she's going to shrift.

AST. Nay, to do penance.

CAR. Ay, ay, go, punk, go to the cross and be whipp'd.

<sup>51</sup> An exclamation of strong reproach, regularly employed by the virtuous on such occasions.

DOR. Marry, mew, marry muff,<sup>52</sup> marry, hang you, Goodman Dog. Whipp'd? do ye take me for a base, spital-whore? <sup>53</sup> — In troth, gentlemen, you wear the clothes of gentlemen, but you carry not the minds of gentlemen, to abuse a gentlewoman of my fashion. 330

LOD. Fashion! Pox a' your fashions! Art not a whore?

DOR. Goodman Slave.

DUKE. O fie, abuse her not; let us two talk. What mought I call your name, pray?

DOR. I'm not ashamed of my name, sir; my name is Mistress Doll Target, a Western gentlewoman.

LOD. Her target against any pike in Milan.

DUKE. Why is this wheel borne after her? 340

1 MAST. She must spin.

DOR. A coarse thread it shall be, as all threads are.

AST. If you spin, then you'll earn money here too?

DOR. I had rather get half-a-crown abroad, than ten crowns here.

ORL. Abroad? I think so.

INF. Doest thou not weep now thou art here?

DOR. Say ye? weep? Yes, forsooth, as you did when you lost your maidenhead. Do you not hear how I weep? Sings. [350

LOD. Farewell, Doll.

DOR. Farewell, dog. Exit [with Beadles].

DUKE. Past shame, past penitence! — Why is that blue gown?

1 MAST. Being stripp'd out of her wanton loose attire, That garment she puts on, base to the eye,

Only to clothe her in humility.

DUKE. Are all the rest like this?

1 MAST. No, my good Lord. You see this drab swells with a wanton rein; <sup>54</sup>

The next that enters has a different strain.

DUKE. Variety is good; let's see the rest. 360

Exit [1] Master [with other Officials].

BOTS. Your Grace sees I'm sound yet, and no bullets hit me.

DUKE. Come off so, and 't is well.

OMNES. Here's the second mess.<sup>55</sup>

Re-enter the two Masters; after them, the Constable; after him, PENELOPE WHOREHOUND, like a citizen's wife; after her two Beadles, one with a blue gown, another with chalk and a mallet.

PEN. I ha' worn many a costly gown, but I was never thus guarded <sup>56</sup> with blue coats, and beadles, and constables, and —

CAR. Alas, fair mistress, spoil not thus your eyes.

PEN. Oh, sweet sir, I feel the spoiling of other places about me that are dearer than [370 my eyes; if you be gentlemen, if you be men, or ever came of a woman, pity my case! Stand to me, stick to me, good sir; you are an old man.

ORL. Hang not on me, I prithee; old trees bear no such fruit.

PEN. Will you bail me, gentlemen?

LOD. Bail thee? Art in for debt?

PEN. No; [God] <sup>57</sup> is my judge, sir, I am in for no debts; I paid my tailor, for this [380 gown, the last five shillings a week that was behind, yesterday.

DUKE. What is your name, I pray?

PEN. Penelope Whorehound; I come of the Whorehounds. — How does Lieutenant Bots?

OMNES. Aha, Bots!

BOTS. A very honest woman, as I'm a soldier! — A pox Bots <sup>58</sup> ye.

PEN. I was never in this pickle before; and yet, if I go amongst citizens' wives, they [390 jeer at me; if I go among the loose-bodied gowns,<sup>59</sup> they cry a pox on me because I go civilly attired, and swear their trade was a good trade till such as I am took it out of their hands. Good Lieutenant Bots, speak to these captains to bail me.

1 MAST. Begging for bail still? You are a trim gossip.<sup>60</sup> — Go give her the blue gown, set her to her chare.<sup>61</sup> Work, huswife, for your bread, away. 400

PEN. Out, you dog! — A pox on you all! — Women are born to curse thee! — But I shall live to see twenty such flat-caps <sup>62</sup> shaking dice for a pennyworth of pippins. — Out, you blue-eyed rogue! Exit [with Beadles].

OMNES. Ha, ha, ha!

DUKE. Even now she wept, and pray'd ;
now does she curse ?

1 MAST. Seeing me ; if still she had stay'd, this had been worse.

HIP. Was she ever here before ?

1 MAST. Five times at least ;
And thus, if men come to her, have her
eyes 410
Wrung, and wept out her bail.

OMNES. Bots, you know her ?

BOTS. Is there any gentleman here that knows not a whore, and is he a hair the worse for that ?

DUKE. Is she a city dame ? She's so attired.

1 MAST. No, my good Lord ; that's only but the veil

To her loose body. I have seen her here
In gayer masking suits ; as several saucers
Give one dish several tastes, so change of habits
In whores is a bewitching art. To-day 420
She's all in colors to besot gallants ; then
In modest black, to catch the citizen :
And this from their examination's drawn.
Now shall you see a monster, both in shape
And nature quite from these, that sheds no tear
Nor yet is nice ; 't is a plain ramping bear ;
Many such whales are cast upon this shore.

OMNES. Let's see her.

1 MAST. Then behold a swaggering whore.

Exit [Master and Officials].

ORL. Keep your ground, Bots. 429

BOTS. I do but traverse <sup>63</sup> to spy advantage how to arm myself.

*Re-enter the two Masters first ; after them the Constable ; after them a Beadle beating a basin,<sup>64</sup> then CATHERINA BOUNTINALL, with MISTRESS HORSELEECH ; after them another
Beadle with a blue head <sup>65</sup> guarded with yellow.*

CAT. Sirrah, when I cry, "Hold your hands," hold, you rogue-catcher, hold.—
Bawd, are the French chilblains in your heels, that you can come no faster ? Are not you, bawd, a whore's ancient,<sup>66</sup> and must not I follow my colors ?

Mrs. H. O Mistress Catherine, you do me wrong to accuse me here as you do, before the right Worshipful. I am known for a [440 motherly, honest woman, and no bawd.

<sup>63</sup> March along.

<sup>64</sup> Alluding "to the custom of old, when bawds and other infamous persons were carted. A mob of people used to precede them, beating basins."
(Whalley, cited by Dyce.)

<sup>66</sup> Ensign.

CAT. Marry, foh, honest ? Burnt <sup>67</sup> at fourteen, seven times whipp'd, six times carted, nine times duck'd, search'd by some hundred and fifty constables, and yet you are honest ?
Honest Mistress Horseleech, is this world a world to keep bawds and whores honest ?
How many times hast thou given gentlemen a quart of wine in a gallon pot ? How many twelvepenny fees, nay two-shillings fees, [450 nay, when any ambassadors ha' been here, how many half-crown fees hast thou taken ? How many carriers hast thou bribed for country wenches ? How often have I rins'd your lungs in aqua vitae ? <sup>68</sup> And yet you are honest !

DUKE. And what were you the whilst ?

CAT. Marry hang you, Master Slave ; who made you an examiner ?

Lod. Well said ! belike this devil spares no
man. 460

CAT. [to BOTS] What art thou, prithee ?

BOTS. Nay, what art thou, prithee ?

CAT. A whore ; art thou a thief ?

BOTS. A thief, no ; I defy <sup>69</sup> the calling ; I am a soldier, have borne arms in the field, been in many a hot skirmish, yet come off sound.

CAT. Sound, with a pox to ye, ye abominable rogue ! You a soldier ? You in skirmishes ? Where ? Amongst pottle-pots in a bawdyhouse ? Look, here, you Madam [470
Worm-eaten, do you not know him ?

Mrs. H. Lieutenant Bots ! where have ye been this many a day ?

BOTS. [aside to MISTRESS HORSELEECH] Old bawd, do not discredit me ; seem not to know
me.

Mrs. H. Not to know ye, Master Bots ?
As long as I have breath, I cannot forget thy sweet face.

DUKE. Why, do you know him ? He says he is a soldier. 480

CAT. He a soldier ? A pander, a dog that will lick up sixpence. Do ye hear, you Master Swine's-snout, how long is 't since you held the door for me. and cried, "To 't again ; nobody comes !" ye rogue, you ?

OMNES. Ha, ha, ha ! y' are smelt out again,
Bots.

BOTS. Pox ruin her nose for 't ! An I be not revenged for this.—um, ye bitch ! 489

Lod. D' ye hear ye, madam ? Why does your Ladyship swagger thus ? Y' are very brave, methinks.

CAT. Not at your cost, Master Cod's-head ;<sup>70</sup>

Is any man here blear-eyed to see me brave ?

AST. Yes, I am ; because good clothes upon a whore's back is like fair painting upon a rotten wall.

CAT. Marry muff, Master Whoremaster ; you come upon me with sentences.<sup>71</sup> 499

BER. By this light, has small sense for 't.

LOD. O fie, fie, do not vex her ! And yet methinks a creature of more scurvy conditions should not know what a good petticoat were.

CAT. Marry, come out ; y' are so busy about my petticoat, you'll creep up to my placket,<sup>72</sup> an ye could but attain the honor ; but, an the outsides offend your Rogue-ships, look o' the lining — 't is silk.

DUKE. Is 't silk 't is lined with, then ? 509

CAT. Silk ? Ay, silk, Master Slave ! You would be glad to wipe your nose with the skirt upon 't. This 't is to come among a company of cod's-heads that know not how to use a gentlewoman.

DUKE. Tell her the Duke is here.

1 MAST. Be modest, Kate, the Duke is here.

CAT. If the Devil were here, I care not. Set forward, ye rogues, and give attendance according to your places ! Let bawds and whores be sad, for I'll sing an the Devil [520 were a-dying.

[Exit with MISTRESS HORSELEECH and Beadles.]

DUKE. Why before her does the basin ring ?

1 MAST. It is an emblem of their revealing.

The whips we use lets forth their wanton blood,

Making them calm ; and, more to calm their pride,

Instead of coaches they in carts do ride.

Will your Grace see more of this bad ware ?

DUKE. No, shut up shop ; we'll now break up the fair.

Yet ere we part — you, sir, that take upon ye

The name of soldier, that true name of worth,

Which action, not vain boasting, best sets forth ; 531

To let you know how far a soldier's name Stands from your title, and to let you see

Soldiers must not be wrong'd where princes be,

This be your sentence : —

OMNES. Defend yourself, Bots.

DUKE. First, all the private sufferance that the house

Inflicts upon offenders, you, as the basest, Shall undergo it double ; after which 539 You shall be whipp'd sir, round about the city, Then banish'd from the land.

BOTS. Beseech, your Grace !

DUKE. Away with him ; see it done. — Panders and whores

Are city plagues, which, being kept alive, Nothing that looks like goodness ere can thrive. —

Now good Orlando, what say you to your bad son-in-law ?

ORL. Marry this, my Lord : he is my son-in-law, and in law will I be his father ; for if law can pepper him, he shall be so par- [550 boil'd that he shall stink no more i' th' nose of the commonwealth.

BELL. Be yet more kind and merciful, good Father.

ORL. Doest thou beg for him, thou precious man's meat, thou ? Has he not beaten thee, kick'd thee, trod on thee ; and doest thou fawn on him like his spaniel ? Has he not pawn'd thee to thy petticoat, sold thee to thy smock, made ye leap at a crust, yet wouldst have me save him ? 560

BELL. Oh, yes, good sir ; women shall learn of me

To love their husbands in greatest misery ; Then show him pity, or you wrack myself.

ORL. Have ye eaten pigeons, that y' are so kindhearted to your mate ? Nay, y' are a couple of wild bears ; I'll have ye both baited at one stake. But as for this knave, the gallows is thy due, and the gallows thou shalt have. I'll have justice of the Duke ; the law shall have thy life. — What, doest thou [570 hold him ? Let go his hand. If thou doest not forsake him, a father's everlasting blessing fall upon both your heads ! Away, go, kiss out of my sight ; play thou the whore no more, nor thou the thief again ; my house shall be thine, my meat shall be thine, and so shall my wine ; but my money shall be mine, and yet when I die, so thou doest not fly high, take all.

Yet, good Matheo, mend. 579 Thus for joy weeps Orlando, and doth end.

DUKE. Then hear, Matheo : all your woes are stayed

<sup>72</sup> The slit in a skirt or petticoat.

By your good father-in-law ; all your ills
Are clear purged from you by his working pills. —

Come, Signior Candido, these green young
wits,

We see by circumstance, this plot hath laid
Still to provoke thy patience, which they find

A wall of brass ; no armor's like the mind.
Thou hast taught the city patience ; now our
court

Shall be thy sphere, where, from thy good report, 589

Rumors this truth unto the world shall sing :
A patient man's a pattern for a king. Exeunt.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

ALMOST everything about this play is a subject of debate except the undisputed fact of its being among the most charming of the Jacobean comedies. It is, indeed, the earliest first-rate and full-length burlesque (or, more strictly, mock heroic) piece of the English stage; and it has remained unequaled in its kind until our own time, save by The Rehearsal and, possibly, The Critic. Yet the original production was a failure. Perhaps the satire on their critical attainments was resented by the citizens. Perhaps a more sophisticated clientele assembled at the Cockpit in Drury Lane when, in 1635, the play was successfully revived. It was also acted under the Restoration, when the trend of English comedy was aristocratic; but the stages of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries knew it not.

In a prefatory epistle Walter Burre, its first publisher, declares that the piece was written in eight days and "exposed to the wide world, who . . . utterly rejected it." It was evidently performed by a company of boys, probably the children of the Queen's Revels at the Blackfriars, but exactly when is uncertain. References to other plays agree on the whole with the statement in the induction that "this seven years there hath been plays at this house"; which apparently fixes the date in 1607. But the injunction in IV, i, 77, to read Heywood's play of The Four Prentices of London, is troublesome, since its earliest known edition appeared in 1615. There is an entry, however, in the Stationers' Register for 1594 which probably refers to Heywood's play; it may have been available to readers in 1607.

The publisher's epistle mentions the obvious resemblance between Don Quixote and The Knight of the Burning Pestle, which he calls the "elder above a year." Don Quixote was originally published in 1605; there was an edition at Brussels in 1607, on which Shelton's English translation was based. This was not printed till 1612, though it was entered in the Stationers' Register on January 19, 1611, and the preface states that it was actually made five or six years earlier. 1607 seems on the whole a more probable date for The Knight than 1610, which some students of the play have argued for. As for its relation to Don Quixote, the adventure with the barber and the mistaking of the inn for a castle, as well as the general tone of the satire on the romantic drama, indicate that if Beaumont had not actually read Cervantes he had probably heard a good deal about his book.

The earliest edition of the play fails to mention the author's name; the second and third ascribe it to Beaumont and Fletcher. Recent opinion is strongly inclined to regard it as almost wholly Beaumont's alone. For an elaborate attempt to distinguish the work of the collaborators see E. H. C. Oliphant's The Plays of Beaumont and Fletcher (1927). The standard collected editions, none of them very satisfactory, are those of A. Glover and A. R. Waller (1905-1912), A. H. Bullen, general editor (1904-1912 — this does not include The Knight of the Burning Pestle), and A. Dyce (1843-1846). The Knight of the Burning Pestle has been separately edited by R. M. Alden (with A King and No King — 1910), H. S. Murch (1908), and F. W. Moorman (1909). The first edition appeared, in quarto, in 1613 (twice reprinted in 1635). The play is not included in the earliest collected edition of Beaumont and Fletcher, the First Folio, of 1647; it appears in the Second Folio, of 1679. The present text is based on the First Quarto, with a few corrections from the subsequent editions.

INDUCTION

[Several Gentlemen sitting on stools upon the stage. The Citizen, his Wife, and RALPH sitting below among the audience.]

Enter PROLOGUE.

PROL. From all that's near the court, from
all that's great,
Within the compass of the city walls
We now have brought our scene —

Citizen [mounts the stage].

CIT. Hold your peace, Goodman Boy!

PROL. What do you mean, sir?

CIT. That you have no good meaning: this seven years there hath been plays at this house, I have observed it, you have still<sup>3</sup> girds at citizens; and now you call your play
"The London Merchant." Down with [10 your title,<sup>4</sup> boy! down with your title!

PROL. Are you a member of the noble city?

CIT. I am.

PROL. And a freeman?<sup>5</sup>

CIT. Yea, and a grocer.<sup>6</sup>

PROL. So, grocer, then, by your sweet favor, we intend no abuse to the city.

CIT. No, sir! yes, sir! If you were not resolv'd to play the Jacks,<sup>7</sup> what need you study for new subjects, purposely to abuse [20

<sup>1</sup> Not in Q<sub>1</sub>; based on Q<sub>2</sub>, which also contains an address to readers, and a prologue transcribed from the Blackfriars' prologue of Lyly's Sapho and Phao.

<sup>2</sup> Old eds. Raph or Rafe, throughout, the latter indicating the pronunciation.

<sup>4</sup> The title of the play was announced on a placard.

one of the most important.

your betters? Why could not you be contented, as well as others, with "The Legend of Whittington,"<sup>8</sup> or "The Life and Death of Sir Thomas Gresham, with the Building of the Royal Exchange,"<sup>9</sup> or "The Story of Queen Eleanor, with the Rearing of London Bridge upon Woolsacks?"<sup>10</sup>

PROL. You seem to be an understanding man; what would you have us do, sir?

CIT. Why present something notably in [30 honor of the commons of the city.

PROL. Why, what do you say to "The Life and Death of Fat Drake, or the Repairing of Fleet Privies?"<sup>11</sup>

CIT. I do not like that; but I will have a citizen, and he shall be of my own trade.

PROL. Oh, you should have told us your mind a month since; our play is ready to begin now.

CIT. 'Tis all one for that;<sup>12</sup> I will [40 have a grocer, and he shall do admirable things.

PROL. What will you have him do?

CIT. Marry, I will have him —

WIFE. (below) Husband, husband!

RALPH. (below) Peace, Mistress.

WIFE. (below) Hold thy peace, Ralph; I know what I do, I warrant t'ee.<sup>14</sup> — Husband, husband!

CIT. What say'st thou, cony? <sup>50</sup>

WIFE. (below) Let him kill a lion with a pestle, husband! Let him kill a lion with a pestle!

CIT. So he shall. — I'll have him kill a lion with a pestle.

WIFE. (below) Husband! shall I come up, husband?

CIT. Ay, cony. — Ralph, help your mistress this way. — Pray, gentlemen, make her a little room. — I pray you, sir, lend me [60 your hand to help up my wife; I thank you, sir. — So.

[Wife comes on the stage.]

WIFE. By your leave, gentlemen all; I'm something<sup>16</sup> troublesome. I'm a stranger here; I was ne'er at one of these plays, as <sup>8</sup> Entered in the Stationers' Register in 1605, but without mentioning the author. Apparently it was never printed.

<sup>9</sup> If You Know Not Me, You Know Nobody, by Thomas Heywood, 1606.

they say, before; but I should have seen<sup>17</sup> "Jane Shore"<sup>18</sup> once; and my husband hath promised me, any time this twelvemonth, to carry me to "The Bold Beauchamps,"<sup>19</sup> but in truth he did not. I pray you, bear [70 with me.

CIT. Boy, let my wife and I have a couple [of]<sup>20</sup> stools and then begin; and let the grocer do rare things. [Stools are brought.]

PROL. But, sir, we have never a boy to play him: every one hath a part already.

WIFE. Husband, husband, for God's sake, let Ralph play him! Beshrew me, if I do not think he will go beyond them all.

CIT. Well rememb'ed, Wife. — Come [80 up, Ralph. — I'll tell you, gentlemen; let them but lend him a suit of reparel<sup>21</sup> and necessaries, and, by gad, if any of them all blow wind in the tail on him,<sup>22</sup> I'll be hang'd.

[RALPH comes on the stage.]

WIFE. I pray you, youth, let him have a suit of reparel! — I'll be sworn, gentlemen, my husband tells you true. He will act you sometimes at our house, that<sup>23</sup> all the neighbors cry out on him; he will fetch you up a couraging part so in the garret, that we [90 are all as fear'd, I warrant you, that we quake again: we'll fear<sup>24</sup> our children with him; if they be never so unruly, do but cry, "Ralph comes, Ralph comes!" to them, and they'll be as quiet as lambs. — Hold up thy head, Ralph; show the gentlemen what you canst do; speak a huffing<sup>25</sup> part; I warrant you, the gentlemen will accept of it.

CIT. Do, Ralph, do.

RALPH. "By Heaven, methinks, it were an easy leap <sup>100</sup>
To pluck bright honor from the pale-fac'd moon;
Or dive into the bottom of the sea,
Where never fathom-line touch'd any ground,
And pluck up drowned honor from the lake of hell."<sup>26</sup>

CIT. How say you, gentlemen, is it not as I told you?

WIFE. Nay, gentlemen, he hath play'd

before, my husband says, "Mucedorus,"<sup>27</sup> before the wardens of our company.

CIT. Ay, and he should have play'd [110 Jeronimo<sup>28</sup> with a shoemaker for a wager.

PROL. He shall have a suit of apparel, if he will go in.

CIT. In, Ralph, in, Ralph; and set out the grocery in their kind,<sup>29</sup> if thou lov'st me.

[Exit RALPH.]

WIFE. I warrant, our Ralph will look finely when he's dress'd.

PROL. But what will you have it call'd?

CIT. "The Grocer's Honor."

PROL. Methinks "The Knight of the [120 Burning Pestle" were better.

WIFE. I'll be sworn, Husband, that's as good a name as can be.

CIT. Let it be so. — Begin, begin; my wife and I will sit down.

PROL. I pray you, do.

CIT. What stately music have you? You have shawms?<sup>30</sup>

PROL. Shawms? No.

CIT. No! I'm a thief if my mind did [130 not give me so. Ralph plays a stately part, and he must needs have shawms. I'll be at the charge of them myself, rather than we'll be without them.

PROL. So you are like to be.

CIT. Why, and so I will be: there's two shillings; [giving money] let's have the waits<sup>31</sup> of Southwark; they are as rare fellows as any are in England; and that will fetch them all o'er the water<sup>32</sup> with a vengeance, as if [140 they were mad.

PROL. You shall have them. Will you sit down then?

CIT. Ay. — Come, Wife.

WIFE. Sit you merry all, gentlemen; I'm bold to sit amongst you for my ease.

[Citizen and Wife sit down.]

PROL. From all that's near the court, from
all that's great,
Within the compass of the city walls
We now have brought our scene. Fly far from hence
All private taxes,<sup>33</sup> immodest phrases, 150

<sup>33</sup> Personal censures.

Whate'er may but show like vicious!
For wicked mirth never true pleasure brings,
But honest minds are pleas'd with honest
things. —

Thus much for that we do; but for Ralph's part you must answer for yourself.

CIT. Take you no care for Ralph; he'll discharge himself, I warrant you.

[Exit PROLOGUE.]

WIFE. I' faith, gentlemen, I'll give my word for Ralph.

ACT I — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter Merchant<sup>2</sup> [VENTUREWELL] and JASPER, his prentice.

[VENT.] Sirrah, I'll make you know you are my prentice,
And whom my charitable love redeem'd
Even from the fall of fortune, gave thee heat
And growth to be what now thou art, new-cast
thee,

Adding the trust of all I have at home,
In foreign staples,<sup>3</sup> or upon the sea,
To thy direction, ti'd the good opinions
Both of myself and friends to thy endeavors:
So fair were thy beginnings. But with these,
As I remember, you had never charge 10
To love your master's daughter, and even<sup>4</sup>
then

When I had found a wealthy husband for her —

I take it, sir, you had not; but, however,
I'll break the neck of that commission,
And make you know you are but a merchant's factor.<sup>5</sup>

JASP. Sir, I do liberally confess I am yours,
Bound both by love and duty to your service,
In which my labor hath been all my profit;
I have not lost in bargain, nor delighted
To wear your honest gains upon my back; [20
Nor have I given a pension to my blood,<sup>6</sup>
Or lavishly in play<sup>7</sup> consum'd your stock;
These, and the miseries that do attend them,
I dare with innocence proclaim are strangers
To all my temperate actions. For<sup>8</sup> your
daughter,

<sup>1</sup> Not precisely located; presumably a room in Venturewell's house.

If there be any love to my deservings
 Borne by her virtuous self, I cannot stop it !
 Nor am I able to refrain <sup>9</sup> her wishes.
 She's private to herself, and best of knowledge <sup>10</sup>

Whom she 'll make so happy as to sigh
 for ; 30

Besides, I cannot think you mean to match
 her

Unto a fellow of so lame a presence,<sup>11</sup>

One that hath little left of nature in him.

VENT. 'T is very well, sir ; I can tell your wisdom

How all this shall be cur'd.

JASP. Your care becomes you.

VENT. And thus it must be, sir : I here discharge you

My house and service ; take your liberty ;
 And when I want a son, I'll send for you.

Exit.

JASP. These be the fair rewards of them that love !

Oh, you that live in freedom, never prove <sup>12</sup> [40
 The travail of a mind led by desire !

Enter LUCE.

LUCE. Why, how now, friend ? Struck with my father's thunder ?

JASP. Struck, and struck dead, unless the remedy

Be full of speed and virtue ; <sup>13</sup> I am now,
 What I expected long, no more your father's.

LUCE. But mine.

JASP. But yours, and only yours, I am ;
 That's all I have to keep me from the statute.<sup>14</sup>
 You dare be constant still ?

LUCE. Oh, fear me not ! <sup>15</sup>
 In this I dare be better than a woman :

Nor shall his anger nor his offers move me, <sup>50</sup>
 Were they both equal to a prince's power.

JASP. You know my rival ?

LUCE. Yes, and love him dearly —
 Even as I love an ague or foul weather !
 I prithee, Jasper, fear him not.

JASP. Oh, no !
 I do not mean to do him so much kindness.
 But to our own desires ; you know the plot
 We both agreed on.

<sup>12</sup> Know from your own experience. <sup>13</sup> Efficacy.

<sup>14</sup> I.e., to keep me from the penalties provided in the Statute of Apprentices (1563) for apprentices who left their masters. (Alden.)

<sup>15</sup> Don't fear on my account.

LUCE. Yes, and will perform
 My part exactly.

JASP. I desire no more.

Farewell, and keep my heart ; 't is yours.

LUCE. I take it ;
 He must do miracles makes me forsake it. [60
Exeunt.

CIT. Fie upon 'em, little infidels ! what a matter's here now ! Well, I'll be hang'd for a halfpenny, if there be not some abomination knavery in this play. Well ; let 'em look to't ; Ralph must come, and if there be any tricks a-brewing —

WIFE. Let 'em brew and bake too, Husband, a' God's name ; Ralph will find all out,
 I warrant you, an they were older than they are. — [Enter a Boy.] — I pray, my pretty [70 youth, is Ralph ready ?

Boy. He will be presently.

WIFE. Now, I pray you, make my commendations unto him, and withal carry him this stick of licorice. Tell him his mistress sent it him ; and bid him bite a piece ;
 't will open his pipes the better, say.

[Exit Boy.]

[SCENE II] <sup>16</sup>

Enter Merchant [VENTUREWELL] and MASTER HUMPHREY.

VENT. Come, sir, she's yours ; upon my faith, she's yours ;

You have my hand : for other idle lets <sup>17</sup>
 Between your hopes and her, thus with a wind
 They are scattered and no more. My wanton prentice,

That like a bladder blew himself with love,
 I have let out, and sent him to discover
 New masters yet unknown.

HUM. I thank you, sir,
 Indeed, I thank you, sir ; and, ere I stir,
 It shall be known, however you do deem,
 I am of gentle blood and gentle seem.<sup>18</sup> <sup>10</sup>

VENT. Oh, sir, I know it certain.

HUM. Sir, my friend,
 Although, as writers say, all things have end,
 And that we call a pudding <sup>19</sup> hath his two,
 Oh, let it not seem strange, I pray, to you,
 If in this bloody simile I put My love, more endless than frail things or gut ! <sup>20</sup>

<sup>17</sup> Hindrances.

WIFE. Husband, I prithee, sweet lamb, tell me one thing; but tell me truly. — Stay, youths, I beseech you, till I question my husband. 20

CIT. What is it, mouse? <sup>21</sup>

WIFE. Sirrah, didst thou ever see a prettier child? How it behaves itself, I warrant ye, and speaks and looks, and perts up the head! — I pray you, brother, with your favor, were you never none of Master Monkester's <sup>22</sup> scholars?

CIT. Chicken, I prithee heartily, contain thyself: the childer are pretty childer; but when Ralph comes, lamb — 30

WIFE. Ay, when Ralph comes, cony! — Well, my youth, you may proceed.

VENT. Well, sir, you know my love, and rest, I hope, Assur'd of my consent; get but my daughter's, And wed her when you please. You must be bold, And clap in close unto her; come, I know You have language good enough to win a wench.

WIFE. A whoreson tyrant! h'as been an old stringer <sup>23</sup> in 's days, I warrant him.

HUM. I take your gentle offer, and withal Yield love again for love reciprocal. 41

VENT. What, Luce! within there!

Enter LUCE.

LUCE. Call'd you, sir?

VENT. I did: Give entertainment to this gentleman; And see you be not froward <sup>24</sup> — To her, sir; My presence will but be an eyesore to you.

Exit.

HUM. Fair Mistress Luce, how do you do? Are you well?

Give me your hand, and then I pray you tell How doth your little sister and your brother; And whether you love me or any other.

LUCE. Sir, these are quickly answered.

HUM. So they are, [50 Where women are not cruel. But how far Is it now distant from the place we are in, Unto that blessed place, your father's warren?

LUCE. What makes you think of that, sir?

HUM. Even that face; For, stealing rabbits whilom <sup>25</sup> in that place, God Cupid, or the keeper, I know not whether, <sup>26</sup>

Unto my cost and charges brought you thither,

And there began —

LUCE. Your game, sir.

HUM. Let no game, Or anything that tendeth to the same, Be evermore rememb'red, thou fair killer, [60 For whom I sat me down, and brake my tiller. <sup>27</sup>

WIFE. There's a kind gentleman, I warrant you; when will you do as much for me, George?

LUCE. Beshrew me, sir, I am sorry for your losses; But, as the proverb says, I cannot cry. I would you had not seen me!

HUM. So would I, Unless you had more maw <sup>28</sup> to do me good.

LUCE. Why, cannot this strange passion be withstood?

Send for a constable, and raise the town. 70 HUM. Oh, no! my valiant love will batter down

Millions of constables, and put to flight Even that great watch of Midsummer Day at night. <sup>29</sup>

LUCE. Beshrew me, sir, 't were good I yielded, then;

Weak women cannot hope, where valiant men Have no resistance.

HUM. Yield, then; I am full Of pity, though I say it, and can pull Out of my pocket thus a pair of gloves. Look, Lucy, look; the dog's tooth nor the dove's

Are not so white as these; and sweet they be, 80

And whipp'd <sup>30</sup> about with silk, as you may see. If you desire the price, [shoot] <sup>31</sup> from your eye A beam to this place, and you shall espy F S, <sup>32</sup> which is to say, my sweetest honey, They cost me three <sup>33</sup> and twopence, or no money.

<sup>22</sup> Richard Mulcaster, formerly headmaster of the Merchant Tailors' School, and at the time of our play of St. Paul's School, whose boys he trained to act.
<sup>23</sup> Libertine. <sup>24</sup> Obstinate, adverse.

LUCE. Well, sir, I take them kindly, and I thank you!

What would you more?

HUM. Nothing.

LUCE. Why, then, farewell.

HUM. Nor so, nor so; for, lady, I must tell,
Before we part, for what we met together —
God grant me time and patience and fair weather! 90

LUCE. Speak, and declare your mind in terms so brief.

HUM. I shall: then, first and foremost, for relief

I call to you, if that you can afford it;
I care not at what price, for, on my word, it Shall be repaid again, although it cost me
More than I'll speak of now; for love hath toss'd me

In furious blanket like a tennis-ball,
And now I rise aloft, and now I fall.

LUCE. Alas, good gentleman, alas the day!

HUM. I thank you heartily; and, as I say, 100

Thus do I still continue without rest,
I' th' morning like a man, at night a beast,
Roaring and bellowing mine own disquiet,
That much I fear forsaking of my diet
Will bring me presently to that quandary,
I shall bid all adieu.

LUCE. Now, by St. Mary,
That were great pity!

HUM. So it were, beshrew me;
Then, ease me, lusty Luce, and pity show me.

LUCE. Why, sir, you know my will is nothing worth

Without my father's grant; get his consent,
And then you may with assurance try me. [111

HUM. The Worshipful your sire will not deny me;

For I have ask'd him, and he hath repli'd,
"Sweet Master Humphrey, Luce shall be thy bride."

LUCE. Sweet Master Humphrey, then I am content.

HUM. And so am I, in truth.

LUCE. Yet take me with you; <sup>24</sup>
There is another clause must be annex'd,
And this it is: I swore, and will perform it,
No man shall ever joy <sup>25</sup> me as his wife
But he that stole me hence. If you dare venture, 120

I am yours — you need not fear: my father loves you —

If not, farewell for ever!

<sup>24</sup> Understand me.

<sup>25</sup> Enjoy.

HUM. Stay, nymph, stay;
I have a double gelding, color'd bay,
Sprung by his father from Barbarian <sup>26</sup> kind;
Another for myself, though somewhat blind,
Yet true as trusty tree.

LUCE. I am satisfied;
And so I give my hand. Our course must lie Through Waltham Forest, <sup>27</sup> where I have a friend

Will entertain us. So, farewell, Sir Humphrey,

And think upon your business. Exit LUCE.

HUM. Though I die, [130
I am resolv'd to venture life and limb
For one so young, so fair, so kind, so trim.

Exit HUMPHREY.

WIFE. By my faith and troth, George, and as I am virtuous, it is e'en the kindest young man that ever trod on shoe-leather. — Well, go thy ways; if thou hast her not, 't is not thy fault, 'faith.

CIT. I prithee, mouse, be patient; 'a shall have her, or I'll make some of 'em smoke
for 't. 140

WIFE. That's my good lamb, George. — Fie, this stinking tobacco kills [me]! <sup>28</sup> would there were none in England! — Now, I pray, gentlemen, what good does this stinking tobacco do you? Nothing, I warrant you:
make chimneys a' your faces! — Oh, Husband, Husband, now, now! there's Ralph, there's Ralph.

[SCENE III]

Enter RALPH, like a grocer in's shop, with two Prentices [TIM and GEORGE], reading "Palmerin of England." <sup>29</sup>

CIT. Peace, fool! let Ralph alone. — Hark you, Ralph; do not strain yourself too much at the first. — Peace! — Begin, Ralph.

RALPH. "Then Palmerin and Trineus, snatching their lances from their dwarfs and clasping their helmets, gallop'd amain after the giant; and Palmerin, having gotten a sight of him, came posting amain, saying, 'Stay, traittorous thief! for thou mayst not so carry away

<sup>26</sup> I.e., of Barbary, or northern Africa.

<sup>27</sup> Or Epping Forest; it extended nearly to the northern gates of the city.

<sup>29</sup> Both this Spanish (originally Portuguese)
romance and its predecessor, Palmerin d' Oliva, were popular in English translation. The passage Ralph reads is from Palmerin d' Oliva, condensed and slightly garbled.

her that is worth the greatest lord in the [10 world; and, with these words, gave him a blow on the shoulder, that he struck him besides <sup>40</sup> his elephant. And Trineus, coming to the knight that had Agricola behind him, set him soon besides his horse, with his neck broken in the fall; so that the Princess, getting out of the throng, between joy and grief, said, 'All-happy knight, the mirror of all such as follow arms, now may I be well assured of the love thou bearest me.' — I wonder why the [20 kings do not raise an army of fourteen or fifteen hundred thousand men, as big as the army that the Prince of Portigo brought against Rosicleer,<sup>41</sup> and destroy these giants; they do much hurt to wand'ring damsels, that go in quest of their knights.

WIFE. Faith, Husband, and Ralph says true; for they say the King of Portugal cannot sit at his meat, but the giants and the ettins <sup>42</sup> will come and snatch it from him. [30

CIT. Hold thy tongue. — On, Ralph!

RALPH. And certainly those knights are much to be commended, who, neglecting their possessions, wander with a squire and a dwarf through the deserts to relieve poor ladies.

WIFE. Ay, by my faith, are they, Ralph; let 'em say what they will, they are indeed. Our knights neglect their possessions well enough, but they do not the rest.

RALPH. There are no such courteous [40 and fair, well-spoken knights in this age: they will call one "the son of a whore" that Palmerin of England would have called "fair sir;" and one that Rosicleer would have call'd "right beauteous damsel" they will call "damn'd bitch."

WIFE. I'll be sworn will they, Ralph; they have call'd me so an hundred times about a scurvy pipe of tobacco.

RALPH. But what brave spirit could be [50 content to sit in his shop, with a flappet of wood <sup>43</sup> and a blue apron before him, selling mithridatum <sup>44</sup> and dragon's-water <sup>45</sup> to visited <sup>46</sup> houses, that might pursue feats of arms, and, through his noble achievements, procure such a famous history to be written of his heroic prowess?

CIT. Well said, Ralph; some more of those words, Ralph!

WIFE. They go finely, by my troth. 60

RALPH. Why should not I, then, pursue this course, both for the credit of myself and our Company? For amongst all the worthy books of achievements, I do not call to mind that I yet read of a grocer-errant. I will be the said knight. — Have you heard of any that hath wand'ring unfurnished of his squire and dwarf? My elder prentice Tim shall be my trusty squire, and little George my dwarf. Hence, my blue apron! Yet, in remembrance of [70 my former trade, upon my shield shall be portray'd a Burning Pestle, and I will be call'd the Knight o' th' Burning Pestle.<sup>46</sup>

WIFE. Nay, I dare swear thou wilt not forget thy old trade; thou wert ever meek.

RALPH. Tim!

TIM. Anon.

RALPH. My beloved squire, and George my dwarf, I charge you that from henceforth you never call me by any other name but "the [80 right courteous and valiant Knight of the Burning Pestle"; and that you never call any female by the name of a woman or wench, but "fair lady", if she have her desires, if not, "distressed damsel"; that you call all forests and heaths "deserts", and all horses "pal-freys."

WIFE. This is very fine, faith. — Do the gentlemen like Ralph, think you, Husband?

CIT. Ay, I warrant thee; the players would give all the shoes in their shop for him. 91

RALPH. My beloved squire Tim, stand out. Admit this were a desert, and over it a knight-errant pricking,<sup>47</sup> and I should bid you inquire of his intents, what would you say?

TIM. Sir, my master sent me to know whither you are riding.

RALPH. No, thus: — Fair sir, the right courteous and valiant Knight of the Burning Pestle commanded me to inquire upon [100 what adventure you are bound, whether to relieve some distressed damsels, or otherwise.

CIT. Whoreson blockhead, cannot remember!

WIFE. I' faith, and Ralph told him on't before; all the gentlemen heard him. — Did he not, gentlemen? Did not Ralph tell him on't?

GEORGE. Right courteous and valiant Knight of the Burning Pestle, here is a distressed damsel to have a halfpenny-worth of pepper. 111

WIFE. That's a good boy! See, the little boy can hit it; by my troth, it's a fine child.

RALPH. Relieve her, with all courteous language. Now shut up shop; no more my prentice, but my trusty squire and dwarf. I must bespeak my shield and arming<sup>48</sup> pestle.

[Exeunt TIM and GEORGE.]

CIT. Go thy ways, Ralph! As I'm a true<sup>49</sup> man, thou art the best on 'em all.

WIFE. Ralph, Ralph! 120

RALPH. What say you, Mistress?

WIFE. I prithee, come again quickly, sweet Ralph.

RALPH. By and by.<sup>50</sup> Exit RALPH.

[SCENE IV]<sup>51</sup>

Enter JASPER and his mother, MISTRESS MERRYTHOUGHT.

MIST. MER. Give thee my blessing? No, I'll ne'er give thee my blessing; I'll see thee hang'd first; it shall ne'er be said I gave thee my blessing. Th' art thy father's own son, of the right blood of the Merrythoughts. I may curse the time that e'er I knew thy father; he hath spent all his own and mine too; and when I tell him of it, he laughs, and dances, and sings, and cries, "A merry heart lives long-a." And thou art a wastethrift, and art run [10 away from thy master that lov'd thee well, and art come to me; and I have laid up a little for my younger son Michael, and thou think'st to bezzle<sup>52</sup> that, but thou shalt never be able to do it. — Come hither, Michael!

Enter MICHAEL.

Come, Michael, down on thy knees; thou shalt have my blessing.

MICH. I pray you, Mother, pray to God to bless me.

MIST. MER. God bless thee! but Jasper [20 shall never have my blessing; he shall be hang'd first; shall he not, Michael? How say'st thou?

MICH. Yes, forsooth, Mother, and grace of God.

MIST. MER. That's a good boy!

WIFE. I' faith, it's a fine-spoken child.

JASP. Mother, though you forget a parent's love,

I must preserve the duty of a child.

I ran not from my master, nor return 30
To have your stock maintain my idleness.

WIFE. Ungracious child, I warrant him; hark, how he chops logic with his mother! — Thou hadst best tell her she lies; do tell her she lies.

CIT. If he were my son, I would hang him up by the heels, and flay him, and salt him, whoreson haltersack.<sup>53</sup>

JASP. My coming only is to beg your love, Which I must ever, though I never gain it; [40 And, howsoever you esteem of me, There is no drop of blood hid in these veins But, I remember well, belongs to you That brought me forth, and would be glad for you

To rip them all again, and let it out.

MIST. MER. I' faith, I had sorrow enough for thee, God knows; but I'll hamper thee well enough. Get thee in, thou vagabond, get thee in, and learn of thy brother Michael.

[Exeunt JASPER and MICHAEL.]

MER. (within)

Nose, nose, jolly red nose, 50
And who gave thee this jolly red nose? <sup>54</sup>

MIST. MER. Hark, my husband! he's singing and hoiting; <sup>55</sup> and I'm fain to cark <sup>56</sup> and care, and all little enough. — Husband! Charles! Charles Merrythought!

Enter old MERRYTHOUGHT.

MER.

Nutmegs and ginger, cinnamon and cloves;
And they gave me this jolly red nose.

MIST. MER. If you would consider your state, you would have little list to sing, iwis.

MER. It should never be considered, [60 while it were an estate, if I thought it would spoil my singing.

MIST. MER. But how wilt thou do, Charles? Thou art an old man, and thou canst not work, and thou hast not forty shillings left, and thou eatest good meat, and drinkest good drink, and laughest!

MER. And will do.

MIST. MER. But how wilt thou come by it, Charles? 70

MER. How! why, how have I done hitherto this forty years? I never came into my dining-room, but, at eleven and six a'clock,<sup>67</sup> I found excellent meat and drink a' th' table; my clothes were never worn out but next morning a tailor brought me a new suit; and without question it will be so ever; use makes perfectness. If all should fail, it is but a little straining myself extraordinary, and laugh myself to death. 80

WIFE. It's a foolish old man this: is not he, George?

CIT. Yes, cony.

WIFE. Give me a penny i' th' purse while I live, George.

CIT. Ay, by Lady,<sup>68</sup> cony, hold thee there.<sup>69</sup>

MIST. MER. Well, Charles; you promis'd to provide for Jasper, and I have laid up for Michael. I pray you, pay Jasper his portion; he's come home, and he shall not consume [90 Michael's stock; he says his master turn'd him away, but, I promise you truly, I think he ran away.

WIFE. No, indeed, Mistress Merrythought; though he be a notable gallows,<sup>70</sup> yet I'll assure you his master did turn him away, even in this place. 't was; i' faith, within this half-hour, about his daughter; my husband was by.

CIT. Hang him, rogue! he serv'd him well enough: love his master's daughter! By [100 my troth, cony, if there were a thousand boys, thou wouldst spoil them all with taking their parts; let his mother alone with him.

WIFE. Ay, George; but yet truth is truth.

MER. Where is Jasper? He's welcome, however. Call him in; he shall have his portion. Is he merry?

MIST. MER. Ay, foul chive him, <sup>71</sup> he is too merry! — Jasper! Michael!

Re-enter JASPER and MICHAEL.

MER. Welcome, Jasper! though thou [110 runn'st away, welcome! God bless thee! 'T is thy mother's mind thou shouldst receive thy portion; thou hast been abroad,<sup>72</sup> and I hope hast learn'd experience enough to govern it; thou art of sufficient years. Hold thy hand — one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, there's ten shillings for thee. Thrust thyself into the world with that, and take some settled course. If fortune cross thee, thou hast a retiring place; come home to me; [120 I have twenty shillings left. Be a good husband; <sup>73</sup> that is, wear ordinary clothes, eat the best meat, and drink the best drink; be merry, and give to the poor, and, believe me, thou hast no end of thy goods.

JASP. Long may you live free from all thought of ill,

And long have cause to be thus merry still!

But, Father —

MER. No more words, Jasper; get thee gone.

Thou hast my blessing; thy father's spirit upon thee! 130

Farewell, Jasper! [Sings.]

But yet, or ere you part (oh, cruel!)

Kiss me, kiss me, sweeting, mine own dear jewel! <sup>74</sup>

So, now begone; no words. Exit JASPER.

MIST. MER. [aside] So, Michael, now get thee gone, too.

MICH. [aside] Yes, forsooth, Mother; but I'll have my father's blessing first.

MIST. MER. [aside] No, Michael; 't is no matter for his blessing; thou hast my [140 blessing; begone. I'll fetch my money and jewels, and follow thee; I'll stay no longer with him, I warrant thee. [Exit MICHAEL.] — Truly, Charles, I'll be gone too.

MER. What! you will not?

MIST. MER. Yes, indeed will I.

MER. [sings.]

Heigh-ho, farewell, Nan!

I'll never trust wench more again, if I can.<sup>75</sup>

MIST. MER. You shall not think, when all your own is gone, to spend that I have [150 been scraping up for Michael.

MER. Farewell, good Wife ; I expect it not ; all I have to do in this world is to be merry ; which I shall, if the ground be not taken from me ; and if it be, [Sings.]

When earth and seas from me are reft,
The skies aloft for me are left.<sup>65 a</sup>

Exeunt.

WIFE. I'll be sworn he's a merry old gentleman for all that. (Music.) Hark, hark, husband, hark ! fiddles, fiddles ! now [160 surely they go finely. They say 't is present death for these fiddlers, to tune their rebecks<sup>66</sup> before the great Turk's Grace ; is't not, George ? (Boy danceth.) But, look, look ! here's a youth dances ! — Now, good youth, do a turn a' th' toe. — Sweetheart, i' faith, I'll have Ralph come and do some of his gambols. — He'll ride the wild mare,<sup>67</sup> gentlemen, 't would do your hearts good to see him. — I thank you, kind youth ; pray, bid Ralph [170 come.

CIT. Peace, cony ! — Sirrah, you scurvy boy, bid the players send Ralph ; or, by God's — an they do not, I'll tear some of their periwigs beside their heads : this is all ruff-raff.<sup>68</sup> [Exit Boy.]

ACT II — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter Merchant [VENTUREWELL] and HUMPHREY.

VENT. And how, faith, how goes it now, son Humphrey ?

HUM. Right worshipful, and my beloved friend

And father dear, this matter's at an end.

VENT. 'T is well ; it should be so. I'm glad the girl is found so tractable.

HUM. Nay, she must whirl From hence (and you must wink,<sup>2</sup> for so, I say, The story tells,) to-morrow before day.

WIFE. George, dost thou think, in thy conscience now, 't will be a match ? Tell me but what thou think'st, sweet rogue. Thou [10 seest the poor gentleman, dear heart, how it labors and throbs, I warrant you, to be at rest ! I'll go move the father for't.

CIT. No, no ; I prithee, sit still, honey-suckle ; thou 'lt spoil all. If he deny him, I'll bring half-a-dozen good fellows myself, and in the shutting<sup>3</sup> of an evening, knock 't up,<sup>4</sup> and there's an end.

WIFE. I'll buss<sup>5</sup> thee for that, i' faith, boy. Well, George, well, you have been a wag in [20 your days, I warrant you ; but God forgive you, and I do with all my heart.

VENT. How was it, son ? You told me that to-morrow

Before daybreak you must convey her hence.

HUM. I must, I must ; and thus it is agreed :

Your daughter rides upon a brown-bay steed, I on a sorrel, which I bought of Brian, The honest host of the Red roaring Lion, In Waltham situate. Then, if you may, Consent in seemly sort ; lest, by delay, [30 The Fatal Sisters come, and do the office, And then you'll sing another song.

VENT. Alas, Why should you be thus full of grief to me, That do as willing as yourself agree To anything, so it be good and fair ? Then, steal her when you will, if such a pleasure Content you both ; I'll sleep and never see it, To make your joys more full. But tell me why You may not here perform your marriage ?

WIFE. God's blessing a' thy soul, old man ! I' faith, thou art loth to part true hearts. [41 I see 'a has her, George ; and I'm as glad on't ! — Well, go thy ways, Humphrey, for a fair-spoken man ; I believe thou hast not thy fellow within the walls of London ; an I should say the suburbs too, I should not lie. — Why dost not rejoice with me, George ?

CIT. If I could but see Ralph again, I were as merry as mine host, i' faith.

HUM. The cause you seem to ask, I thus declare — [50 Help me, O Muses nine ! Your daughter swear

A foolish oath, and more it was the pity ; Yet none but myself within this city Shall dare to say so, but a bold defiance Shall meet him, were he of the noble science ; [6 And yet she swear, and yet why did she swear ?

<sup>6</sup> I.e., an expert fencer.

Truly, I cannot tell, unless it were
For her own ease; for, sure, sometimes an oath,

Being sworn thereafter, is like cordial broth;
And this it was she swore, never to marry [60
But such a one whose mighty arm could carry
(As meaning me, for I am such a one)
Her bodily away, through stick and stone,
Till both of us arrive, at her request,
Some ten miles off, in the wild Waltham Forest.

VENT. If this be all, you shall not need to fear

Any denial in your love: proceed;
I'll neither follow, nor repent the deed.

HUM. Good night, twenty good nights, and twenty more, 69
And twenty more good nights — that makes three-score! Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>7</sup>

Enter MISTRESS MERRYTHOUGHT and her son MICHAEL.

MIST. MER. Come, Michael; art thou not weary, boy?

MICH. No, forsooth, Mother, not I.

MIST. MER. Where be we now, child?

MICH. Indeed, forsooth, Mother, I cannot tell, unless we be at Mile End.<sup>8</sup> Is not all the world Mile End, Mother?

MIST. MER. No, Michael, not all the world, boy; but I can assure thee, Michael, Mile End is a goodly matter: there has been a pitch- [10 field,<sup>9</sup> my child, between the naughty Spaniels<sup>10</sup> and the Englishmen; and the Spaniels ran away, Michael, and the Englishmen followed. My neighbor Coxstone was there, boy, and kill'd them all with a birding-piece.<sup>11</sup>

MICH. Mother, forsooth —

MIST. MER. What says my white boy? <sup>12</sup>

MICH. Shall not my father go with us too?

MIST. MER. No, Michael, let thy father go snick-up; <sup>13</sup> he shall never come between a [20 pair of sheets with me again while he lives; let him stay at home and sing for his supper, boy.
Come, child, sit down, and I'll show my boy fine knacks, indeed. [They sit down, and she takes out a casket.] Look here, Michael; here's a ring, and here's a brooch, and here's a

<sup>8</sup> A mile beyond Aldgate. The London train-bands drilled there.

<sup>9</sup> Evidently the train-bands had recently staged a sham battle.

<sup>13</sup> Darling, pet.

bracelet, and here's two rings more, and here's money and gold by th' eye,<sup>14</sup> my boy.

MICH. Shall I have all this, Mother?

MIST. MER. Ay, Michael, thou shalt [30 have all, Michael.

CIT. How lik'st thou this, wench?

WIFE. I cannot tell; I would have Ralph,
George; I'll see no more else, indeed, law;
and I pray you, let the youths understand so much by word of mouth; for, I tell you truly, I'm afraid a' my boy. Come, come, George,
let's be merry and wise: the child's a fatherless child; and say they should put him into a strait pair of gaskins,<sup>15</sup> 't were worse than [40 knot-grass; <sup>16</sup> he would never grow after it.

Enter RALPH, Squire [TIM], and Dwarf [GEORGE].

CIT. Here's Ralph, here's Ralph!

WIFE. How do you, Ralph? you are welcome, Ralph, as I may say. It's a good boy; hold up thy head, and be not afraid; we are thy friends, Ralph; the gentlemen will praise thee, Ralph, if thou play'st thy part with audacity. Begin, Ralph, a' God's name!

RALPH. My trusty squire, unlace my helm;
give me my hat.

Where are we, or what desert may this be? [50

GEORGE. Mirror of knighthood, this is, as I take it, the perilous Waltham Down; <sup>17</sup> in whose bottom stands the enchanted valley.

MIST. MER. Oh, Michael, we are betray'd, we are betray'd! Here be giants! Fly, boy!
fly, boy, fly! Exeunt Mother and MICHAEL.

RALPH. Lace on my helm again. What noise is this?

A gentle lady, flying the embrace Of some uncourteous knight! I will relieve
her.

Go, squire, and say the knight that wears this pestle 60

In honor of all ladies, swears revenge
Upon that recreant coward that pursues her;
Go, comfort her, and that same gentle squire
That bears her company.

TIM. I go, brave knight. [Exit.]

RALPH. My trusty dwarf and friend, reach me my shield;

<sup>15</sup> A pair of breeches too tight for him.

<sup>16</sup> An infusion of which was supposed to retard growth.

<sup>17</sup> Upland.

And hold it while I swear. First, by my knighthood ;

Then by the soul of Amadis de Gaul,<sup>18</sup>
My famous ancestor ; then by my sword
The beauteous Brionella<sup>19</sup> girt about me ;
By this bright burning pestle, of mine honor
The living trophy ; and by all respect 71
Due to distressed damsels ; here I vow
Never to end the quest of this fair lady
And that forsaken squire till by my valor
I gain their liberty !

GEORGE. Heaven bless the knight
That thus relieves poor errant gentlemen !

[Exeunt.]

WIFE. Ay, marry, Ralph, this has some savor in 't ; I would see the proudest of them all offer to carry his books after him.<sup>20</sup> But, George, I will not have him go away so [so soon ; I shall be sick if he go away, that I shall.
Call Ralph again, George, call Ralph again ; I prithee, sweetheart, let him come fight before me, and let's ha' some drums and some trumpets, and let him kill all that comes near him, an thou lov'st me, George !

CIT. Peace a little, bird ; he shall kill them all, an they were twenty more on 'em than there are.

Enter JASPER.

JASP. Now, Fortune, if thou beest not only ill, 90
Show me thy better face, and bring about Thy desperate wheel, that I may climb at length,

And stand. This is our place of meeting,
If love have any constancy. O age
Where only wealthy men are counted happy !
How shall I please thee, how deserve thy smiles,

When I am only rich in misery ?
My father's blessing and this little coin
Is my inheritance ; a strong revenue !<sup>21</sup> 99
From earth thou art, and to the earth I give thee : [Throws away the money.]

There grow and multiply, whilst fresher air
Breeds me a fresher fortune. — How ! illusion ?

Spies the casket.

What, hath the Devil coin'd himself before me ?
'T is metal good, it rings well ; I am waking —

<sup>18</sup> The hero of the romance so entitled. Originally Portuguese, it came to England from Spain, and was the most famous of its kind.

And taking too, I hope. Now, God's dear blessing

Upon his heart that left it here ! 'T is mine ;
These pearls, I take it, were not left for swine.
Exit.

WIFE. I do not like that this unthrifty youth should embezzle away the money ; the poor gentlewoman his mother will have a heavy heart for it, God knows. 111

CIT. And reason good, sweetheart.

WIFE. But let him go ; I'll tell Ralph a tale in's ear shall fetch him again with a wanion,<sup>22</sup> I warrant him, if he be above ground ;
and besides, George, here are a number of sufficient<sup>23</sup> gentlemen can witness, and myself, and yourself, and the musicians, if we be call'd in question. But here comes Ralph, George ; thou shalt hear him speak an<sup>24</sup> he were an emperial.<sup>25</sup> 121

[SCENE III]<sup>26</sup>

Enter RALPH and Dwarf [GEORGE].

RALPH. Comes not Sir Squire again ?

GEORGE. Right courteous knight,
Your squire doth come, and with him comes the lady,

Enter MISTRESS MERRYTHOUGHT and MICHAEL and Squire [TIM].

For and<sup>27</sup> the squire of damsels, as I take it.

RALPH. Madam, if any service or devoir
Of a poor errant knight may right your
wrongs —

Command it ; I am prest<sup>28</sup> to give you succor ;
For to that holy end I bear my armor.

MIST. MER. Alas, sir, I am a poor gentlewoman, and I have lost my money in this forest ! 10

RALPH. Desert, you would say, lady ; and not lost

Whilst I have sword and lance. Dry up your tears,

Which ill befits the beauty of that face,
And tell the story, if I may request it,
Of your disastrous fortune.

MIST. MER. Out, alas ! I left a thousand pound, a thousand pound, e'en all the money I had laid up for this youth, upon the sight of your Mastership, you look'd so grim, and, as I may say it, saving your presence, more like a giant than a mortal man. 21

RALPH. I am as you are, lady ; so are they ;
All mortal. But why weeps this gentle squire ?

MIST. MER. Has he not cause to weep, do you think, when he hath lost his inheritance ?

RALPH. Young hope of valor, weep not ; I am here
That will confound thy foe, and pay it dear
Upon his coward head that dares deny
Distressed squires and ladies equity.
I have but one horse, on which shall ride [30
This lady fair behind me, and before
This courteous squire ; fortune will give us
more
Upon our next adventure. Fairly speed
Beside us, squire and dwarf, to do us need !

Exeunt.

CIT. Did not I tell you, Nell, what your man would do ? By the faith of my body, wench, for clean action and good delivery, they may all cast their caps at him.<sup>29</sup>

WIFE. And so they may, i' faith ; for I dare speak it boldly, the twelve companies<sup>30</sup> of [40
London cannot match him, timber for timber.<sup>31</sup>
Well, George, an he be not inveigled by some of these paltry players, I ha' much marvel ;
but, George, we ha' done our parts, if the boy have any grace to be thankful.

CIT. Yes, I warrant thee, duckling.

[SCENE IV]<sup>32</sup>

Enter HUMPHREY and LUCE.

HUM. Good Mistress Luce, however I in fault am
For your lame horse, you're welcome unto Waltham ;
But which way now to go, or what to say,
I know not truly, till it be broad day.

LUCE. Oh, fear not, Master Humphrey ;
I am guide
For this place good enough.

HUM. Then, up and ride ;
Or, if it please you, walk, for your repose ;
Or sit ; or, if you will, go pluck a rose ;<sup>33</sup>
Either of which shall be indifferent
To your good friend and Humphrey, whose consent 10

Is so entangled ever to your will,
As the poor, harmless horse is to the mill.

LUCE. Faith, an you say the word, we'll e'en sit down,
And take a nap.

HUM. 'T is better in the town,
Where we may nap together ; for, believe me,
To sleep without a snatch<sup>34</sup> would mickle grieve me.

LUCE. You're merry, Master Humphrey.

HUM. So I am,
And have been ever merry from my dam.

LUCE. Your nurse had the less labor.

HUM. Faith, it may be,
Unless it were by chance I did betray me.<sup>35</sup> [20

Enter JASPER.

JASP. Luce ! dear friend Luce !

LUCE. Here, Jasper.

JASP. You are mine.

HUM. If it be so, my friend, you use me fine.
What do you think I am ?

JASP. An arrant noddy.<sup>36</sup>

HUM. A word of obloquy ! Now, by God's body,
I'll tell thy master ; for I know thee well.

JASP. Nay, an you be so forward for to tell,
Take that, and that ; and tell him, sir, I gave
it ;

And say I paid you well. [Beats him.]

HUM. Oh, sir, I have it,
And do confess the payment ! Pray, be quiet.

JASP. Go, get [you]<sup>37</sup> to your nightcap and the diet, 30
To cure your beaten bones.

LUCE. Alas, poor Humphrey ; Get thee some wholesome broth, with sage and comfrey ;<sup>38</sup>

A little oil of roses and a feather
To 'noint thy back withal.

HUM. When I came hither,
Would I had gone to Paris with John Dory !<sup>39</sup>

LUCE. Farewell, my pretty nump ;<sup>40</sup> I am very sorry

I cannot bear thee company.

HUM. Farewell ;
The devil's dam was ne'er so bang'd in hell.

Exeunt [LUCE and JASPER].

<sup>38</sup> A plant used in cough mixtures.

<sup>39</sup> Salute him as superior. (Moorman.)
<sup>40</sup> They were the Mercers, Grocers, Drapers, Fishmongers, Goldsmiths, Skinners, Merchant Tailors, Haberdashers, Salters, Ironmongers, Vintners, and Clothworkers.

<sup>43</sup> Defecate.

<sup>39</sup> In the song so entitled (preserved in Ravenscroft's Deuteronomia) the hero is captured while on his way to present a captive English crew to the King of France. (Alden.)

<sup>40</sup> Punning on Numps = Humphrey, and =
blockhead. (Murch.)

WIFE. This young Jasper will prove me another things, a' my conscience, an he [40 may be suffered. George, dost not see, George, how 'a swaggers, and flies at the very heads a' folks, as he were a dragon? Well, if I do not do his lesson <sup>41</sup> for wronging the poor gentleman, I am no true woman. His friends that brought him up might have been better occupied, I wis, than ha' taught him these fegaries; <sup>42</sup> he's e'en in the highway to the gallows, God bless him!

CIT. You're too bitter, cony; the [50 young man may do well enough for all this.

WIFE. Come hither, Master Humphrey; has he hurt you? Now, beshrew his fingers for't! Here, sweetheart, here's some green <sup>43</sup> ginger for thee. Now, beshrew my heart, but 'a has peppernel <sup>44</sup> in's head, as big as a pullet's egg! Alas, sweet lamb, how thy temples beat! Take the peace on him, <sup>45</sup> sweetheart, take the peace on him.

Enter a Boy.

CIT. No, no; you talk like a foolish [60 woman; I'll ha' Ralph fight with him, and swinge <sup>46</sup> him up well-favor'dly. <sup>47</sup> — Sirrah boy, come hither. Let Ralph come in and fight with Jasper.

WIFE. Ay, and beat him well; he's an unhappy <sup>48</sup> boy.

Boy. Sir, you must pardon us; the plot of our play lies contrary; and 't will hazard the spoiling of our play.

CIT. Plot me no plots! I'll ha' Ralph [70 come out; I'll make your house too hot for you else.

Boy. Why, sir, he shall; but if anything fall out of order, the gentlemen must pardon us.

CIT. Go your ways, Goodman Boy! [Exit Boy.] I'll hold <sup>49</sup> him a penny, he shall have his bellyful of fighting now. Ho, here comes Ralph! No more! <sup>50</sup>

[SCENE V] <sup>51</sup>

HUMPHREY [remains]. Enter RALPH, MISTRESS MERRYTHOUGHT, MICHAEL, Squire [TIM], and Dwarf [GEORGE].

RALPH. What knight is that, squire? Ask him if he keep

<sup>45</sup> Force him to give a bond to keep the peace.

<sup>50</sup> Silence.

<sup>51</sup> The same.

The passage, bound by love of lady fair,
Or else but prickant. <sup>52</sup>

HUM. Sir, I am no knight,
But a poor gentleman, that this same night
Had stol'n from me, on yonder green,
My lovely wife, and suffered (to be seen
Yet extant on my shoulders) such a greeting,
That whilst I live I shall think of that meeting.

WIFE. Ay, Ralph, he beat him unmercifully, Ralph; an thou spar'st him, [10 Ralph, I would thou wert hang'd.

CIT. No more, wife, no more.

RALPH. Where is the caitiff-wretch hath done this deed? —

Lady, your pardon, that I may proceed
Upon the quest of this injurious knight. —
And thou, fair squire, repute me not the worse,
In leaving the great venture of the purse
And the rich casket, till some better leisure.

Enter JASPER and LUCE.

HUM. Here comes the broker <sup>53</sup> hath purloin'd my treasure.

RALPH. Go, squire, and tell him I am here,
An errant knight at arms, to crave delivery
Of that fair lady to her own knight's arms. [22
If he deny, bid him take choice of ground,
And so defy him.

TIM. From the knight that bears
The golden pestle, I defy thee, knight,
Unless thou make fair restitution
Of that bright lady.

JASP. Tell the knight that sent thee
He is an ass; and I will keep the wench,
And knock his headpiece.

RALPH. Knight, thou art but dead
If thou recall not thy uncourteous terms. [30

WIFE. Break's pate, Ralph; break's pate,
Ralph, soundly!

JASP. Come, knight; I am ready for you.
Now your pestle

Snatches away his pestle.
Shall try what temper, sir, your mortar's of.
"With that he stood upright in his stirrups, and gave the knight of the calfskin such a knock [knocking RALPH down] that he forsook his horse, and down he fell; and then he leaped upon him, and plucking off his helmet — " <sup>54</sup>

<sup>54</sup> "Quoted or parodied from some romance."
(Dyce.)

HUM. Nay, an my noble knight be down so soon,
Though I can scarcely go,<sup>55</sup> I needs must run.
Exeunt HUMPHREY and RALPH.

WIFE. Run, Ralph, run, Ralph ; run for thy life, boy ; Jasper comes, Jasper comes !

JASP. Come Luce, we must have other arms for you ;
Humphrey, and Golden Pestle, both adieu !
Exeunt.

WIFE. Sure the Devil (God bless us !) is in this springald !<sup>56</sup> Why, George, didst ever see such a fire-drake ?<sup>57</sup> I am afraid my boy's miscarried ;<sup>58</sup> if he be, though he [50 were Master Merrythought's son a thousand times, if there be any law in England, I'll make some of them smart for't.

CIT. No, no ; I have found out the matter, sweetheart ; Jasper is enchanted ; as sure as we are here, he is enchanted : he could no more have stood in Ralph's hands than I can stand in my Lord Mayor's. I'll have a ring to discover all enchantments, and Ralph shall beat him yet. Be no more vex'd, for it [60 shall be so.

[SCENE VI]<sup>59</sup>

Enter RALPH, Squire [TIM], Dwarf [GEORGE], MISTRESS MERRYTHOUGHT, and MICHAEL.

WIFE. Oh, Husband, here's Ralph again !— Stay, Ralph, let me speak with thee. How dost thou, Ralph ? Art thou not shrewdly<sup>60</sup> hurt ?— The foul great lungies<sup>61</sup> laid unmercifully on thee. There's some sugar-candy for thee. Proceed ; thou shalt have another bout with him.

CIT. If Ralph had him at the fencing school, if he did not make a puppy of him, and drive him up and down the school, he should [10 ne'er come in my shop more.

MIST. MER. Truly Master Knight of the Burning Pestle, I am weary.

MICH. Indeed, law, Mother, and I am very hungry.

RALPH. Take comfort, gentle dame, and you fair squire ;

<sup>61</sup> Long, slim fellow ; lout.

For in this desert there must needs be plac'd
Many strong castles held by courteous knights ;

And till I bring you safe to one of those,
I swear by this my order ne'er to leave you. [20

WIFE. Well said, Ralph !— George, Ralph was ever comfortable,<sup>62</sup> was he not ?

CIT. Yes, duck.

WIFE. I shall ne'er forget him. When we had lost our child, (you know it was stray'd almost, alone, to Puddle Wharf,<sup>63</sup> and the criers were abroad for it, and there it had drown'd itself but for a sculler,<sup>64</sup> Ralph was the most comfortablest to me : " Peace, Mistress," says he, " let it go ; I'll get you [30 another as good." Did he not, George, did he not say so ?

CIT. Yes, indeed did he, mouse.

GEORGE. I would we had a mess of pottage and a pot of drink, squire, and were going to bed !

TIM. Why, we are at Waltham town's end, and that's the Bell Inn.

GEORGE. Take courage, valiant knight, damsel, and squire !

I have discovered, not a stone's cast off, 40
An ancient castle, held by the old knight
Of the most holy order of the Bell,
Who gives to all knights-errant entertain.
There plenty is of food, and all prepar'd
By the white hands of his own lady dear.
He hath three squires that welcome all his guests ;

The first hight<sup>65</sup> Chamberlino, who will see
Our beds prepar'd, and bring us snowy sheets,
Where never footman stretch'd his butter'd hams ;<sup>66</sup>

The second hight Tapstero, who will see [50
Our pots full filled, and no froth therein ;
The third, a gentle squire, Ostlero hight,
Who will our palfreys slick with wisps of
straw,

And in the manger put them oats enough,
And never grease their teeth with candle-snuff.<sup>67</sup>

WIFE. That same dwarf's a pretty boy, but the squire's a groutnol.<sup>68</sup>

<sup>68</sup> Blockhead.

RALPH. Knock at the gates, my squire, with stately lance.

Enter TAPSTER.

TAP. Who's there? — You're welcome, gentlemen; will you see a room? 60

GEORGE. Right courteous and valiant Knight of the Burning Pestle, this is the Squire Tapstero.

RALPH. Fair Squire Tapstero, I, a wand'r-ing knight,
Hight of the Burning Pestle, in the quest
Of this fair lady's casket and wrought <sup>69</sup> purse,
Losing myself in this vast wilderness,
Am to this castle well by fortune brought;
Where, hearing of the goodly entertain
Your knight of holy order of the Bell 70
Gives to all damsels and all errant knights,
I thought to knock, and now am bold to enter.

TAP. An't please you see a chamber, you are very welcome. Exeunt.

WIFE. George, I would have something done, and I cannot tell what it is.

CIT. What is it, Nell?

WIFE. Why, George, shall Ralph beat nobody again? Prithee, sweetheart, let him.

CIT. So he shall, Nell; and if I join [so with him, we'll knock them all.

[SCENE VII] <sup>70</sup>

*Enter HUMPHREY and Merchant [VENTURE-
WELL].*

WIFE. Oh, George, here's Master Humphrey again now, that lost Mistress Luce, and Mistress Lucie's father. Master Humphrey will do somebody's errand, <sup>71</sup> I'll warrant him.

HUM. Father, it's true in arms I ne'er shall clasp her;
For she is stol'n away by your man Jasper.

WIFE. I thought he would tell him.

VENT. Unhappy that I am, to lose my child!
Now I begin to think on Jasper's words,
Who oft hath urg'd to me thy foolishness. [10
Why didst thou let her go? Thou lov'st her
not,

<sup>71</sup> Errand; i.e., attend to Jasper's affairs for him.

That wouldst bring home thy life, and not bring her.

HUM. Father, forgive me. Shall I tell you
true?

Look on my shoulders: they are black and blue.

Whilst to and fro fair Luce and I were wind-
ing,

He came and basted me with a hedge-bind-
ing. <sup>72</sup>

VENT. Get men and horses straight; we will be there

Within this hour. You know the place again?

HUM. I know the place where he my loins did swaddle; <sup>73</sup>

I'll get six horses, and to each a saddle. 20

VENT. Meantime I'll go talk with Jasper's father. Exeunt.

WIFE. George, what wilt thou lay with me now, that Master Humphrey has not Mistress Luce yet? Speak, George, what wilt thou lay with me?

CIT. No, Nell; I warrant thee Jasper is at Puckeridge <sup>74</sup> with her by this.

WIFE. Nay, George, you must consider Mistress Lucie's feet are tender; and besides
't is dark; and, I promise you truly, I do [30 not see how he should get out of Waltham Forest with her yet.

CIT. Nay, cony, what wilt thou lay with me, that Ralph has her not yet?

WIFE. I will not lay against Ralph, honey, because I have not spoken with him. But look, George, peace! here comes the merry old gentleman again.

[SCENE VIII] <sup>75</sup>

Enter old MERRYTHOUGHT.

MER. [sings.]

When it was grown to dark midnight,
And all were fast asleep,
In came Margaret's grimly ghost,
And stood at William's feet. <sup>76</sup>

I have money, and meat, and drink beforehand, till to-morrow at noon; why should I be sad? Methinks I have half-a-dozen jovial spirits within me! [Sings.]

I am three merry men, and three merry men! <sup>77</sup>

<sup>76</sup> From the ballad of "Fair Margaret and Sweet William."

<sup>77</sup> From a popular song.

To what end should any man be sad in [10 this world? Give me a man who when he goes to hanging cries,

Troll the black bowl to me! <sup>78</sup> and a woman that will sing a catch in her travail! I have seen a man come by my door with a serious face, in a black cloak, without a hatband, carrying his head as if he look'd for pins in the street; I have look'd out of my window half a year after, and have spi'd that man's head upon London Bridge. <sup>79</sup> 'Tis [20 vile: never trust a tailor that does not sing at his work; his mind is of nothing but filching.

WIFE. Mark this, George; 'tis worth noting: Godfrey my tailor, you know, never sings, and he had fourteen yards to make this gown; and I'll be sworn, Mistress Penistone
the draper's wife had one made with twelve.

MER. [sings.]

'Tis mirth that fills the veins with blood,
More than wine, or sleep, or food;
Let each man keep his heart at ease: 30
No man dies of that disease.
He that would his body keep
From diseases, must not weep;
But whoever laughs and sings,
Never he his body brings
Into fevers, gout, or rheums,
Or ling'ringly his [l]ungs consumes,
Or meets with aches <sup>80</sup> in the bone,
Or catarrhs or griping stone;
But contented lives for aye; 40
The more he laughs, the more he may. <sup>81</sup>

WIFE. Look, George; how say'st thou by this, George? Is't not a fine old man? —
Now, God's blessing a' thy sweet lips! —
When wilt thou be so merry, George? Faith, thou art the frowning'st little thing, when thou art angry, in a country.

Enter Merchant [VENTUREWELL].

CIT. Peace, cony; thou shalt see him taken down too, I warrant thee. Here's Luce's father come now. 50

MER. [sings.]

As you came from Walsingham,
From that holy <sup>82</sup> land,
There met you not with my true love
By the way as you came? <sup>83</sup>

<sup>78</sup> From a popular song. — "Troll" = circulate, pass.

<sup>80</sup> Dissyllabic.

<sup>81</sup> Unidentified; very likely, as Alden suggests, written for the play.

<sup>82</sup> There was a famous shrine of the Virgin in this Norfolk town. <sup>83</sup> From a well-known ballad.

VENT. Oh, Master Merrythought, my daughter's gone!

This mirth becomes you not; my daughter's
gone!

MER. [sings.]

Why, an if she be, what care I?
Or let her come, or go, or tarry. <sup>84</sup>

VENT. Mock not my misery; it is your
son

(Whom I have made my own, when all forsook him) 60

Has stol'n my only joy, my child, away.

MER. [sings.]

He set her on a milk-white steed,
And himself upon a gray;
He never turn'd his face again,
But he bore her quite away. <sup>85</sup>

VENT. Unworthy of the kindness I have shown

To thee and thine! too late I well perceive
Thou art consenting to my daughter's loss.

MER. Your daughter! what a stir's here wee' yer daughter! Let her go, think no [70 more on her, but sing loud. If both my sons were on the gallows, I would sing,

Down, down, down they fall;
Down, and arise they never shall. <sup>86</sup>

VENT. Oh, might I behold her once again,
And she once more embrace her aged sire!

MER. Fie, how scurvily this goes! "And she once more embrace her aged sire?"
You'll make a dog <sup>87</sup> on her, will ye? She cares much for her aged sire, I warrant [80
you. [Sings.]

She cares not for her daddy, nor
She cares not for her mammy;
For she is, she is, she is, she is
My lord of Lowgave's lassy. <sup>88</sup>

VENT. For this thy scorn I will pursue that
son

Of thine to death.

MER. Do; and when you ha' kill'd him,
[Sings.]

Give him flowers enow, palmer, give him flowers
enow;
Give him red, and white, and blue, green, and yellow. <sup>89</sup>

Songs and Airs* (1600).

<sup>85</sup> This may be from a variant of the ballad of "The Douglas Tragedy", or of "The Knight and Shepherd's Daughter."

<sup>86</sup> Dyce found these verses in an unprinted masque.

<sup>87</sup> Since we speak of a dog's "sire."

<sup>88</sup> Unidentified; Child suggests that we probably have here a fragment of an old ballad.

VENT. I'll fetch my daughter — 90

MER. I'll hear no more a' your daughter;
it spoils my mirth.

VENT. I say, I'll fetch my daughter.

MER. [sings.]

Was never man for lady's sake,
Down, down,
Tormented as I, poor Sir Guy,
De derry down,
For Lucy's sake, that lady bright,
Down, down,
As ever men beheld with eye, 100
De derry down.<sup>90</sup>

VENT. I'll be reveng'd, by Heaven!

Exeunt.

Music.

WIFE. How dost thou like this, George?

CIT. Why, this is well, cony; but if Ralph were hot once, thou shouldst see more.

WIFE. The fiddlers go again, husband.

CIT. Ay, Nell; but this is scurvy music. I gave the whoreson gallows<sup>90</sup> money, and I think he has not got me the waits of Southwark. If I hear 'em not anon, I'll twinge him by the ears. — You musicians, play Baloo! <sup>91</sup>

WIFE. No, good George, let's ha' Lach-rymae! <sup>92</sup> 112

CIT. Why, this is it, cony.

WIFE. It's all the better, George. Now, sweet lamb, what story is that painted upon the cloth? <sup>93</sup> The Confutation of St. Paul?

CIT. No, lamb; that's Ralph and Lucrece. <sup>94</sup>

WIFE. Ralph and Lucrece! Which Ralph?
Our Ralph? 120

CIT. No, mouse; that was a Tartarian. <sup>95</sup>

WIFE. A Tartarian! Well, I would the fiddlers had done, that we might see our Ralph again!

ACT III — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter JASPER and LUCE.

JASP. Come, my dear dear; though we have lost our way,
We have not lost ourselves. Are you not weary

<sup>94</sup> A cheap substitute for tapestry; it served to curtain off the inner stage.

<sup>1</sup> Thief; perhaps the Citizen's blunder for Tar-quin.

With this night's wand'ring, broken from your
rest,

And frightened with the terror that attends
The darkness of this wild unpeopled place?

LUCE. No, my best friend; I cannot either
fear

Or entertain a weary thought, whilst you,
The end of all my full desires, stand by me.
Let them that lose their hopes, and live to languish

Amongst the number of forsaken lovers, 10
Tell<sup>2</sup> the long weary steps, and number time,
Start at a shadow, and shrink up their blood,
Whilst I, possess'd with all content and quiet,
Thus take my pretty love, and thus embrace
him.

JASP. You have caught me, Luce, so fast that, whilst I live,
I shall become your faithful prisoner
And wear these chains for ever. Come, sit down,

And rest your body, too, too delicate
For these disturbances. — So; will you sleep?
Come, do not be more able than you are; [20
I know you are not skilful in these watches,
For women are no soldiers. Be not nice,<sup>3</sup>
But take it; <sup>4</sup> sleep, I say.

LUCE. I cannot sleep;
Indeed, I cannot, friend.

JASP. Why, then we'll sing,
And try how that will work upon our senses.

LUCE. I'll sing, or say, or anything but sleep.

JASP. Come, little mermaid, rob me of my
heart

With that enchanting voice.

LUCE. You mock me, Jasper.

SONG

JASP. Tell me, dearest, what is love?

LUCE. 'T is a lightning from above; 30

'T is an arrow, 't is a fire,

'T is a boy they call Desire;

'T is a smile

Doth beguile

JASP. The poor hearts of men that prove.<sup>5</sup>

Tell me more, are women true?

LUCE. Some love change, and so do you.

JASP. Are they fair and never kind?

LUCE. Yes, when men turn with the wind.

JASP. Are they froward?

LUCE. Ever toward, 40

Those that love, to love anew.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Those that love are ever disposed to turn to a new love. This song, as Alden observes, is probably original.

JASP. Dissemble it no more ; I see the god
Of heavy sleep lay on his heavy mace
Upon your eyelids.

LUCE. I am very heavy.<sup>7</sup> [Sleeps.]

JASP. Sleep, sleep ; and quiet rest crown thy sweet thoughts !
Keep from her fair <sup>a</sup> blood distempers, start-
ings,
Horrors, and fearful shapes ! Let all her dreams

Be joys, and chaste delights, embraces, wishes,
And such new pleasures as the ravish'd soul [50 Gives to the senses !— So ; my charms have took. —

Keep her, you powers divine, whilst I contemplate

Upon the wealth and beauty of her mind !
She is only fair and constant, only kind,
And only to thee, Jasper. Oh, my joys !
Whither will you transport me ? Let not ful-
ness

Of my poor buried hopes come up together
And overcharge my spirits ! I am weak.
Some say, however ill, the sea and women [59
Are govern'd by the moon ; both ebb and
flow,

Both full of changes ; yet to them that know,
And truly judge, these but opinions are,
And heresies, to bring on pleasing war Between our tempers, that without these were Both void of af[ter]-love and present fear ;
Which are the best of Cupid. O thou child,
Bred from despair, I dare not entertain thee,
Having a love without the faults of women,
And greater in her perfect goods than men !
Which to make good, and please myself the stronger, 70

Though certainly I am certain of her love,
I'll try her, that the world and memory
May sing to aftertimes her constancy. —

[Draws his sword.]

Luce ! Luce ! awake !

LUCE. Why do you fright me, friend,
With those distempered looks ? What makes <sup>a</sup> your sword
Drawn in your hand ? Who hath offended
you ?

I prithee, Jasper, sleep ; thou art wild with watching.<sup>10</sup>

JASP. Come, make your way to Heaven, and bid the world,
With all the villainies that stick upon it,
Farewell ; you're for another life.

LUCE.

Oh, Jasper, [80

How have my tender years committed evil,
Especially against the man I love,
Thus to be cropp'd untimely ?

JASP.

Foolish girl,

Canst thou imagine I could love his daughter
That flung me from my fortune into nothing ?
Discharged me his service, shut the doors
Upon my poverty, and scorn'd my prayers,
Sending me, like a boat without a mast,
To sink or swim ? Come ; by this hand you
die ;

I must have life and blood, to satisfy 90
Your father's wrongs.

WIFE. Away, George, away ! raise the watch at Ludgate, and bring a mittimus <sup>11</sup> from the justice for this desperate villain ! — Now, I charge you, gentlemen, see the King's peace kept ! — Oh, my heart, what a varlet's this to offer manslaughter upon the harmless gen-tlewoman !

CIT. I warrant thee, sweetheart, we'll have him hampered.<sup>12</sup> 100

LUCE.

Oh, Jasper, be not cruel !

If thou wilt kill me, smile, and do it quickly,
And let not many deaths appear before me.

I am a woman, made of fear and love,
A weak, weak woman ; kill not with thy eyes :
They shoot me through and through. Strike,

I am ready ;

And, dying, still I love thee.

Enter Merchant [VENTUREWELL], HUMPHREY, and his Men.

VENT.

Whereabouts ?

JASP. [aside] No more of this ; now to myself again.

HUM. There, there he stands, with sword,
like martial knight,

Drawn in his hand ; therefore beware the fight, 110

You that be wise ; for, were I good Sir Bevis,<sup>13</sup>
I would not stay <sup>14</sup> his coming, by your leaves.

VENT. Sirrah, restore my daughter !

JASP.

Sirrah, no.

VENT. Upon him, then !

[*They attack JASPER, and force LUCE
from him.*]

WIFE. So ; down with him, down with him, down with him ! Cut him i' th' leg, boys, cut him i' th' leg !

<sup>11</sup> Warrant for arrest.

<sup>14</sup> Await.

VENT. Come your ways, minion ; I'll provide a cage
For you, you're grown so tame. — Horse her away.

HUM. Truly, I'm glad your forces have the day. Exeunt [all except] JASPER.

JASP. They are gone, and I am hurt ; my love is lost, 121

Never to get again. Oh, me unhappy !
Bleed, bleed and die ! I cannot. O my folly,
Thou hast betray'd me ! Hope, where art thou fled ?

Tell me, if thou beest anywhere remaining,
Shall I but see my love again ? Oh, no !
She will not deign to look upon her butcher,
Nor is it fit she should ; yet I must venture.
O Chance, or Fortune, or whate'er thou art,
That men adore for powerful, hear my cry, [130
And let me loving live, or losing die ! Exit.

WIFE. Is 'a gone, George ?

CIT. Ay, cony.

WIFE. Marry, and let him go, sweetheart.
By the faith a' my body, 'a has put me into such a fright that I tremble, as they say, as 't were an aspen-leaf. Look a' my little finger, George, how it shakes. Now i' truth, every member of my body is the worse for 't.

CIT. Come, hug in mine arms, sweet mouse ; he shall not fright thee any more. [141
Alas, mine own dear heart, how it quivers !

[SCENE II] <sup>15</sup>

Enter MISTRESS MERRYTHOUGHT, RALPH, MICHAEL, Squire [TIM], Dwarf [GEORGE],
Host, and a Tapster.

WIFE. Oh, Ralph ! how dost thou, Ralph ?
How hast thou slept to-night ? <sup>16</sup> Has the knight us'd thee well ?

CIT. Peace, Nell ; let Ralph alone.

TAP. Master, the reckoning is not paid.

RALPH. Right courteous knight, who, for the order's sake
Which thou hast ta'en, hang'st out the holy Bell,

As I this flaming pestle bear about,
We render thanks to your puissant <sup>17</sup> self,
Your beauteous lady, and your gentle squires,
For thus refreshing of our wearied limbs, <sup>11</sup>
Stiff'ned with hard achievements in wild desert.

<sup>16</sup> Last night. <sup>17</sup> Tri syllabic.

TAP. Sir, there is twelve shillings to pay.

RALPH. Thou merry Squire Tapstero, thanks to thee

For comforting our souls with double jug ;
And, if advent'rous fortune prick thee forth,
Thou jovial squire, to follow feats of arms,
Take heed thou tender every lady's cause,
Every true knight, and every damsel fair ;
But spill the blood of treacherous Saracens, [20
And false enchanters that with magic spells
Have done to death full many a noble knight.

HOST. Thou valiant Knight of the Burning Pestle, give ear to me ; there is twelve shillings to pay, and, as I am a true knight, I will not bate a penny.

WIFE. George, I pray thee, tell me, must Ralph pay twelve shillings now ?

CIT. No, Nell, no ; nothing but the old knight is merry with Ralph. 30

WIFE. Oh, is 't nothing else ? Ralph will be as merry as he.

RALPH. Sir Knight, this mirth of yours becomes you well ;

But, to requite this liberal courtesy,
If any of your squires will follow arms,
He shall receive from my heroic hand
A knighthood, by the virtue of this pestle.

HOST. Fair knight, I thank you for your noble offer ;

Therefore, gentle knight,
Twelve shillings you must pay, or I must cap <sup>18</sup> you. 40

WIFE. Look, George ! did not I tell thee as much ? The knight of the Bell is in earnest.
Ralph shall not be beholding to him : give him his money, George, and let him go snick up. <sup>19</sup>

CIT. Cap Ralph ? No. — Hold your hand,
Sir Knight of the Bell ; there's your money ;
have you anything to say to Ralph now ?
Cap Ralph !

WIFE. I would you should know it, Ralph has friends that will not suffer him to be [50 capp'd for ten times so much, and ten times to the end of that. — Now take thy course, Ralph.

MIST. MER. Come, Michael ; thou and I will go home to thy father ; he hath enough left to keep us a day or two, and we'll set fellows abroad to cry our purse and our casket ;
shall we, Michael ?

MICH. Ay, I pray, Mother; in truth my feet are full of chilblains with travelling. 60

WIFE. Faith, and those chilblains are a foul trouble. — Mistress Merrythought, when your youth comes home, let him rub all the soles of his feet, and the heels, and his ankles, with a mouse-skin; or, if none of your people can catch a mouse, when he goes to bed let him roll his feet in the warm embers, and, I warrant you, he shall be well; and you may make him put his fingers between his toes, and smell to them; it's very sovereign for his head, if [70 he be costive.

MIST. MER. Master Knight of the Burning Pestle, my son Michael and I bid you farewell; I thank your Worship heartily for your kindness.

RALPH. Farewell, fair lady, and your tender squire.

If, pricking through these deserts, I do hear Of any traitorous knight, who through his guile

Hath light upon your casket and your purse, I will despoil him of them, and restore them.

MIST. MER. I thank your Worship. 81

Exit with MICHAEL.

RALPH. Dwarf, bear my shield; squire, elevate my lance:—

And now farewell, you Knight of holy Bell.

CIT. Ay, ay, Ralph, all is paid.

RALPH. But yet, before I go, speak, worthy knight,

If aught you do of sad <sup>20</sup> adventures know, Where errant knight <sup>21</sup> may through his prowess win

Eternal fame, and free some gentle souls From endless bonds of steel and ling'ring pain.

HOST. Sirrah, go to Nick the barber, [90 and bid him prepare himself, as I told you before, quickly.

TAP. I am gone, sir. Exit Tapster.

HOST. Sir Knight, this wilderness affordeth none

But the great venture, where full many a knight

Hath tri'd his prowess, and come off with shame;

And where I would not have you lose your life Against no man, but furious fiend of hell.

<sup>21</sup> Cor. ed. 1711; old eds. Knights.

RALPH. Speak on, Sir Knight, tell what he is and where;

For here I vow, upon my blazing badge, 100 Never to blaze a day in quietness,

But bread and water will I only eat, And the green herb and rock shall be my couch,

Till I have quell'd <sup>22</sup> that man, or beast, or fiend,

That works such damage to all errant knights.

HOST. Not far from hence, near to a craggy cliff,

At the north end of this distressed town,

There doth stand a lowly house,

Ruggedly builded, and in it a cave

In which an ugly giant now doth wone, <sup>23</sup> 110

He shakes a naked lance of purest steel,

With sleeves turn'd up; and him before he wears

A motley garment, to preserve his clothes

From blood of those knights which he massacres,

And ladies gent. <sup>25</sup> Without his door doth hang

A copper basin on a prickant <sup>26</sup> spear;

At which no sooner gentle knights can knock,

But the shrill sound fierce Barbaroso hears,

And rushing forth, brings in the errant knight 120

And sets him down in an enchanted chair;

Then with an engine, which he hath prepar'd,

With forty teeth, he claws his courtly crown;

Next makes him wink, <sup>27</sup> and underneath his chin

He plants a brazen piece of mighty bord <sup>28</sup>

And knocks his bullets <sup>29</sup> round about his cheeks;

Whilst with his fingers, and an instrument

With which he snaps his hair off, he doth fill

The wretch's ears with a most hideous noise.

Thus every knight-adventurer he doth trim,

And now no creature dares encounter him. [131

RALPH. In God's name, I will fight him.

Kind sir,

Go but before me to this dismal cave,

Where this huge giant Barbaroso dwells,

And, by that virtue that brave Rosicleer

That damned brood of ugly giants slew,

And Palmerin Frannarco<sup>30</sup> overthrew,
I doubt not but to curb this traitor foul,
And to the Devil send his guilty soul.

HOST. Brave-sprighted knight, thus far I will perform 140

This your request : I'll bring you within sight
Of this most loathsome place, inhabited
By a more loathsome man ; but dare not stay,
For his main force swoops all he sees away.

RALPH. Saint George, set on before !
March squire and page ! Exeunt.

WIFE. George, dost think Ralph will confound the giant ?

CIT. I hold<sup>31</sup> my cap to a farthing he does.
Why, Nell, I saw him wrestle with the great
Dutchman,<sup>32</sup> and hurl him. 150

WIFE. Faith, and that Dutchman was a goodly man, if all things were answerable to his bigness. And yet they say there was a Scotchman higher than he, and that they two and a knight<sup>33</sup> met, and saw one another for nothing. But of all the sights that ever were in London, since I was married, methinks the little child that was so fair grown about the members<sup>34</sup> was the prettiest ; that and the hermaphrodite. 160

CIT. Nay, by your leave, Nell, Niniv<sup>35</sup> was better.

WIFE. Ninivie ! Oh, that was the story of Jone and the wall,<sup>36</sup> was it not, George ?

CIT. Yes, lamb.

[SCENE III]<sup>37</sup>

Enter MISTRESS MERRYTHOUGHT.

WIFE. Look, George, here comes Mistress
Merrythought again ! and I would have Ralph come and fight with the giant ; I tell you true,
I long to see 't.

CIT. Good Mistress Merrythought, begone,
I pray you, for my sake ; I pray you, forbear a little ; you shall have audience presently ;<sup>38</sup> I have a little business.

WIFE. Mistress Merrythought, if it please you to refrain your passion a little, till [10

<sup>32</sup> Stowe mentions a gigantic Dutchman in his Annals.

<sup>33</sup> Dyce suggests that "and a knight" may have been erroneously transposed from a place directly after Scotchman.

<sup>36</sup> Jonah and the whale.

<sup>37</sup> Unlocated. When Mrs. Merrythought is able at last to play her scene, it is before her husband's house. <sup>38</sup> Soon.

Ralph have despatch'd the giant out of the way, we shall think ourselves much bound to you. I shall thank you, good Mistress Merry-
thought.

Exit MISTRESS MERRYTHOUGHT.

Enter a Boy.

CIT. Boy, come hither. Send away Ralph and this whoreson giant quickly.

BOY. In good faith, sir, we cannot ; you'll utterly spoil our play, and make it to be hiss'd ;
and it cost money ; you will not suffer us to go on with our plot. — I pray, gentlemen, [20 rule him.

CIT. Let him come now and despatch this,
and I'll trouble you no more.

BOY. Will you give me your hand of that ?

WIFE. Give him thy hand, George, do ;
and I'll kiss him. I warrant thee, the youth means plainly.

BOY. I'll send him to you presently.<sup>39</sup>

WIFE. [Kissing him] I thank you, little youth. (Exit Boy.) Faith, the child hath [30 a sweet breath, George ; but I think it be troubled with the worms ; carduus benedictus<sup>40</sup> and mare's milk were the only thing in the world for 't.

[SCENE IV]<sup>41</sup>

Enter RALPH, Host, Squire [TIM], and Dwarf [GEORGE].

WIFE. Oh, Ralph's here, George ! — God
send thee good luck, Ralph !

HOST. Puissant knight, yonder his mansion is.

Lo, where the spear and copper basin are !
Behold that string, on which hangs many a tooth,

Drawn from the gentle jaw of wand'ring
knights !

I dare not stay to sound ; he will appear.

Exit Host.

RALPH. Oh, faint not, heart ! Susan, my lady dear,

The cobbler's maid in Milk Street,<sup>42</sup> for whose sake 9

I take these arms, oh, let the thought of thee
Carry thy knight through all adventurous deeds ;

And, in the honor of thy beauteous self,
May I destroy this monster Barbaroso! —
Knock, squire, upon the basin, till it break
With the shrill strokes, or till the giant speak.

Enter Barber.

WIFE. Oh, George, the giant, the giant! —
Now, Ralph for thy life!

BAR. What fond <sup>43</sup> unknowing wight is this,
that dares
So rudely knock at Barbaros[o]'s cell,
Where no man comes but leaves his fleece behind? 20

RALPH. I, traitorous caitiff, who am sent by fate
To punish all the sad enormities <sup>44</sup>
Thou hast committed against ladies gent
And errant knights. Traitor to God and men, Prepare thyself! This is the dismal hour
Appointed for thee to give strict account
Of all thy beastly treacherous villainies.

BAR. Foolhardy knight, full soon thou shalt aby <sup>45</sup>

This fond reproach: thy body will I bang; [29
He takes down his pole.

And, lo, upon that string thy teeth shall hang!
Prepare thyself, for dead soon shalt thou be.

RALPH. Saint George for me! They fight.

BAR. Gargantua <sup>46</sup> for me!

WIFE. To him, Ralph, to him! hold up the giant; set out thy leg before, Ralph!

CIT. Falsify a blow, <sup>47</sup> Ralph, falsify a blow!
The giant lies open on the left side.

WIFE. Bear't off, <sup>48</sup> bear't off still! there, boy! — Oh, Ralph's almost down, Ralph's almost down!

RALPH. Susan, inspire me! Now have up
again. 40

WIFE. Up, up, up, up! so, Ralph!
down with him, down with him, Ralph!

CIT. Fetch him o'er the hip, boy!
[RALPH knocks down the Barber.]

WIFE. There, boy! kill, kill, kill, kill, kill,
Ralph!

CIT. No, Ralph; get all <sup>49</sup> out of him first.

RALPH. Presumptuous man, see to what desperate end

Thy treachery hath brought thee! The just
gods,

Who never prosper those that do despise them,
For all the villainies which thou hast done
To knights and ladies, now have paid thee
home 50

By my stiff arm, a knight adventurous.
But say, vile wretch, before I send thy soul
To sad Avernus, <sup>50</sup> whither it must go,
What captives holdst thou in thy sable cave?

BAR. Go in, and free them all; thou hast
the day.

RALPH. Go, squire and dwarf, search in this dreadful cave,
And free the wretched prisoners from their bonds. [Exeunt] Squire and Dwarf.

BAR. I crave for mercy, as thou art a
knight,
And scorn'st to spill the blood of those that beg.

RALPH. Thou show'st no mercy, nor shalt thou have any; 60
Prepare thyself, for thou shalt surely die.

Re-enter Squire [TIM], leading one winking, <sup>51</sup> with a basin under his chin.

TIM. Behold, brave knight, here is one prisoner,
Whom this wild man hath used as you see.

WIFE. This is the first wise word I heard the squire speak.

RALPH. Speak what thou art, and how thou hast been us'd,
That I may give him condign punishment.

I KN. I am a knight that took my journey post

Northward from London; and in courteous
wise
This giant train'd <sup>52</sup> me to his loathsome
den,

Under pretence of killing of the itch; 71
And all my body with a powder strew'd,
That smarts and stings; and cut away my beard,

And my curl'd locks wherein were ribands ti'd;
And with a water wash'd my tender eyes,
Whilst up and down about me still he skipp'd;
Whose virtue is, that, till my eyes be wip'd
With a dry cloth, for this my foul disgrace, <sup>53</sup>
I shall not dare to look a dog i' th' face.

<sup>50</sup> The lake near Naples which was supposed to be an entrance to Hades.

WIFE. Alas, poor knight! — Relieve [so him, Ralph; relieve poor knights, whilst you live.

RALPH. My trusty squire, convey him to the town,
Where he may find relief. — Adieu, fair knight.
Exit Knight.

Re-enter Dwarf [GEORGE], leading one with a patch o'er his nose.<sup>64</sup>

GEORGE. Puissant Knight, of the Burning Pestle hight,
See here another wretch, whom this foul beast Hath scorch'd<sup>65</sup> and scor'd in this inhuman wise.

RALPH. Speak me thy name, and eke thy place of birth,
And what hath been thy usage in this cave.

2 KN. I am a knight, Sir Pockhole<sup>66</sup> is my name,
And by my birth I am a Londoner,
Free by my copy,<sup>67</sup> but my ancestors Were Frenchmen<sup>68</sup> all; and riding hard this way

Upon a trotting horse, my bones did ache;<sup>69</sup>
And I, faint knight, to ease my weary limbs, Light<sup>60</sup> at this cave; when straight this furious fiend,
With sharpest instrument of purest steel,
Did cut the gristle of my nose away,
And in the place this velvet plaster stands. [99
Relieve me, gentle knight, out of his hands!

WIFE. Good Ralph, relieve Sir Pockhole, and send him away; for in truth his breath stinks.

RALPH. Convey him straight after the other knight. —
Sir Pockhole, fare you well.

2 KN. Kind sir, good night. Exit.

MAN. Deliver us! Cries within.

WOMAN. Deliver us!

WIFE. Hark, George, what a woeful cry there is! I think some woman lies-in there.

MAN. [within] Deliver us! 110

WOMAN. [within] Deliver us!

<sup>67</sup> I.e., he has a certificate of his receiving the freedom of the city.

RALPH. What a ghastly noise is this?
Speak Barbaroso,
Or, by this blazing steel, thy head goes off!

BAR. Prisoners of mine, whom I in diet<sup>61</sup> keep.

Send lower down into the cave,
And in a tub that's heated smoking hot,<sup>62</sup>
There may they find them, and deliver them.

RALPH. Run, squire and dwarf; deliver them with speed.

Exeunt Squire and Dwarf.

WIFE. But will not Ralph kill this giant?
Surely I am afeard, if he let him go, he will [120
do as much hurt as ever he did.

CIT. Not so, mouse, neither, if he could convert him.

WIFE. Ay, George, if he could convert him; but a giant is not so soon converted as one of us ordinary people. There's a pretty tale of a witch, that had the devil's mark<sup>63</sup> about her (God bless us!), that had a giant to her son, that was call'd Lob-lie-by-the-fire; didst never hear it, George? 130

Re-enter Squire [TIM], leading a Man, with a glass of lotion in his hand, and the Dwarf [GEORGE], leading a Woman, with diet-bread and drink.

CIT. Peace, Nell, here comes the prisoners.

GEORGE. Here be these pined wretches, manful knight,
That for this six weeks have not seen a wight.

RALPH. Deliver<sup>64</sup> what you are, and how you came To this sad cave, and what your usage was.

MAN. I am an errant knight that followed arms
With spear and shield; and in my tender years

I stricken was with Cupid's fiery shaft,
And fell in love with this my lady dear,
And stole her from her friends in Turnbull Street,<sup>64</sup> 140

And bore her up and down from town to town,

Where we did eat and drink, and music hear;
Till at the length at this unhappy town

<sup>64</sup> Notorious for its prostitutes.

We did arrive, and coming to this cave,
This beast us caught, and put us in a tub,
Where we this two months sweat, and should have done

Another month, if you had not reliev'd us.

WOMAN. This bread and water hath our diet been,

Together with a rib cut from a neck
Of burned mutton; hard hath been our fare. 150

Release us from this ugly giant's snare!

MAN. This hath been all the food we have receiv'd;

But only twice a day, for novelty,
He gave a spoonful of this hearty broth
To each of us, through this same slender quill.

Pulls out a syringe.

RALPH. From this infernal monster you shall go,

That useth knights and gentle ladies so! —
Convey them hence.

Exeunt Man and Woman.

CIT. Cony, I can tell thee, the gentlemen like Ralph. 160

WIFE. Ay, George, I see it well enough. — Gentlemen, I thank you all heartily for gracing my man Ralph; and I promise you you shall see him oft'ner.

BAR. Mercy, great knight! I do recant my
ill,

And henceforth never gentle blood will spill.

RALPH. I give thee mercy; but yet shalt thou swear

Upon my burning pestle to perform
Thy promise utter'd.

BAR. I swear and kiss.

RALPH. Depart, then, and amend. — [170

[Exit Barber.]

Come, squire and dwarf; the sun grows towards his set,

And we have many more adventures yet.

Exeunt.

CIT. Now Ralph is in this humor, I know he would ha' beaten all the boys in the house, if they had been set on him.

WIFE. Ay, George, but it is well as it is. I warrant you, the gentlemen do consider what it is to overthrow a giant. But, look, George; here comes Mistress Merrythought, and her son Michael. — Now you are welcome, [180 Mistress Merrythought; now Ralph has done, you may go on.

[SCENE V] <sup>65</sup>

Enter MISTRESS MERRYTHOUGHT and MICHAEL.

MIST. MER. Mick, my boy!

MICH. Ay, forsooth, Mother.

MIST. MER. Be merry, Mick; we are at home now, where, I warrant you, you shall find the house flung out at the windows.
[Music within.] Hark! hey, dogs, hey! this is the old world,<sup>66</sup> i' faith, with my husband.
If I get in among 'em, I'll play 'em such a lesson, that they shall have little list to come scraping <sup>67</sup> hither again. — Why, Master [10 Merrythought! Husband! Charles Merry-
thought!

MER. [appearing above, and singing]

If you will sing, and dance, and laugh,
And holloa, and laugh again,
And then cry, "There, boys, there!" why, then,
One, two, three, and four,
We shall be merry within this hour.<sup>68</sup>

MIST. MER. Why, Charles, do you not know your own natural wife? I say, open the door, and turn me out those mangy [20 companions; <sup>69</sup> 't is more than time that they were fellow and fellow-like with you. You are a gentleman, Charles, and an old man,
and father of two children; and I myself, (though I say it) by my mother's side niece to a worshipful gentleman and a conductor; <sup>70</sup> he has been three times in his Majesty's service at Chester, and is now the fourth time, God bless him and his charge, upon his journey.<sup>71</sup> 30

MER.

Go from my window, love, go;
Go from my window, my dear!
The wind and the rain
Will drive you back again;
You cannot be lodged here.<sup>72</sup>

Hark you, Mistress Merrythought, you that walk upon adventures, and forsake your husband because he sings with never a penny in his purse; what, shall I think myself the worse? Faith, no, I'll be merry. You [40 come not here; here's none but lads of mettle, lives of a hundred years and upwards; care never drunk their bloods, nor want made
'em warble "Heigh-ho, my heart is heavy."

<sup>70</sup> Commander.

<sup>71</sup> The point is that his service has not been overseen.

<sup>72</sup> Evidently a popular song, since it is elsewhere quoted.

MIST. MER. Why, Master Merrythought, what am I, that you should laugh me to scorn thus abruptly? Am I not your fellow-feeler, as we may say, in all our miseries? your comforter in health and sickness? Have I not brought you children? Are they not like [50 you, Charles? look upon thine own image, hard-hearted man! and yet for all this —

MER.

Begone, begone, my juggy, my puggy,
Begone, my love, my dear!
The weather is warm,
'T will do thee no harm;
Thou canst not be lodged here. —

Be merry, boys! some light music, and more wine! [Exit above.]

WIFE. He's not in earnest, I hope, [60 George, is he?

CIT. What if he be, sweetheart?

WIFE. Marry, if he be, George, I'll make bold to tell him he's an ingrant <sup>73</sup> old man to use his bedfellow so scurvily.

CIT. What! how does he use her, honey?

WIFE. Marry, come up, sir saucebox! I think you'll take his part, will you not? Lord, how hot you are grown! You are a fine man, an you had a fine dog; <sup>74</sup> it be- [70 comes you sweetly!

CIT. Nay, prithee, Nell, chide not; for, as I am an honest man and a true Christian grocer, I do not like his doings.

WIFE. I cry you mercy, <sup>75</sup> then, George! you know we are all frail and full of infirmities. — D'ee hear, Master Merrythought? May I crave a word with you?

MER. [appearing above] Strike up lively, lads! 80

WIFE. I had not thought, in truth, Master Merrythought, that a man of your age and discretion, as I may say, being a gentleman, and therefore known by your gentle conditions, <sup>76</sup> could have used so little respect to the weakness of his wife; for your wife is your own flesh, the staff of your age, your yoke-fellow, with whose help you draw through the mire of this transitory world; nay, she's your own rib; and again — 90

MER.

I come not hither for thee to teach,
I have no pulpit for thee to preach,

<sup>77</sup> Ignorant.

<sup>78</sup> I.e., it would take the possession of a fine dog to mark you as a fine man; no one would size you up as one by yourself alone.

<sup>80</sup> Character.

I would thou hadst kiss'd me under the breech,
As thou art a lady gay.<sup>77</sup>

WIFE. Marry, with a vengeance! I am heartily sorry for the poor gentlewoman; but if I were thy wife, i' faith, greybeard, i' faith —

CIT. I prithee, sweet honeysuckle, be content.

WIFE. Give me such words, that am a [100 gentlewoman born! Hang him, hoary rascal! Get me some drink,<sup>78</sup> George; I am almost molten with fretting; now, beshrew his knave's heart for it!

MER. Play me a light lavolta.<sup>79</sup> Come, be frolic. Fill the good fellows wine.

MIST. MER. Why, Master Merrythought, are you disposed to make me wait here? You'll open, I hope; I'll fetch them that shall open else. 110

MER. Good woman, if you will sing, I'll give you something; if not —

SONG

You are no love for me, Marg'ret,
I am no love for you. — <sup>80</sup>

Come aloft,<sup>81</sup> boys, aloft! [Exit above.]

MIST. MER. Now a churl's fart in your teeth, sir! — Come, Mick, we'll not trouble him; 'a shall not ding us i' th' teeth with his bread and his broth, that he shall not. Come, boy; I'll provide for thee, I warrant thee. [120 We'll go to Master Venturewell's, the merchant; I'll get his letter to mine host of the Bell in Waltham; there I'll place thee with the tapster: will not that do well for thee, Mick? And let me alone for that old cuckoldly knave your father; I'll use him in his kind,<sup>82</sup> I warrant ye. [Exeunt.]

WIFE. Come, George, where's the beer?

CIT. Here, love.

WIFE. This old fornicating fellow will [130 not out of my mind yet. — Gentlemen, I'll begin to you all; and I desire more of your acquaintance with all my heart. [Drinks.] Fill the gentlemen some beer, George.

Music. Boy danceth.

<sup>78</sup> Along with fruit and other refreshments, it was sold in the house.

ACT IV — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

WIFE. Look, George, the little boy's come again : methinks he looks something like the Prince of Orange in his long stocking, if he had a little harness<sup>2</sup> about his neck. George, I will have him dance Fading. — Fading is a fine jig, I'll assure you, gentlemen. — Begin, brother. — Now 'a capers, sweetheart ! — Now a turn a' th' toe, and then tumble ! cannot you tumble, youth ?

Boy. No, indeed, forsooth. 10

WIFE. Nor eat fire ?

Boy. Neither.

WIFE. Why, then, I thank you heartily ; there's twopence to buy you points<sup>3</sup> withal.

[Exit Boy.]

Enter JASPER and Boy.

JASP. There, boy, deliver this ; [giving a letter] but do it well.

Hast thou provided me four lusty fellows, Able to carry me ? and art thou perfect In all thy business ?

Boy. Sir, you need not fear ; I have my lesson here, and cannot miss it ; The men are ready for you, and what else [20 Pertains to this employment.

JASP. There, my boy ; Take it, but buy no land. [Gives money.]

Boy. Faith, sir, 't were rare To see so young a purchaser. I fly, And on my wings carry your destiny. Exit.

JASP. Go and be happy ! Now, my latest hope, Forsake me not, but fling thy anchor out, And let it hold ! Stand fix'd, thou rolling stone, Till I enjoy my dearest ! Hear me, all You powers, that rule in men, celestial ! Exit.

WIFE. Go thy ways ; thou art as [30 crooked a sprig as ever grew in London. I warrant him, he'll come to some naughty end or other ; for his looks say no less. Besides, his father, you know, George, is none of the best ; you heard him take me up like a flirt-gill,<sup>4</sup> and sing bawdy songs upon me ; but i' faith, if I live, George —

CIT. Let me alone, sweetheart ; I have a trick in my head shall lodge him in the Arches<sup>5</sup>

for one year, and make him sing peccavi [40 ere I leave him ; and yet he shall never know who hurt him neither.

WIFE. Do, my good George, do !

CIT. What shall we have Ralph do now, boy ?

Boy. You shall have what you will, sir.

CIT. Why, so, sir ; go and fetch me him, then, and let the Sophy of Persia come and christen him a child.<sup>6</sup>

Boy. Believe me, sir, that will not do so [50 well ; 't is stale ; it has been had before at the Red Bull.<sup>7</sup>

WIFE. George, let Ralph travel over great hills, and let him be very weary and come to the King of Cracovia's<sup>8</sup> house, covered with velvet ; and there let the king's daughter stand in her window, all in beaten gold,<sup>9</sup> combing her golden locks with a comb of ivory ; and let her spy Ralph, and fall in love with him, and come down to him, and [60 carry<sup>10</sup> him into her father's house ; and then let Ralph talk with her.

CIT. Well said, Nell ; it shall be so. — Boy, let's ha't done quickly.

Boy. Sir, if you will imagine all this to be done already, you shall hear them talk together ; but we cannot present a house covered with black velvet, and a lady in beaten gold.

CIT. Sir boy, let's ha't as you can, then. [70

Boy. Besides, it will show ill-favoredly to have a grocer's prentice to court a king's daughter.

CIT. Will it so, sir ? You are well read in histories !<sup>11</sup> I pray you, what was Sir Dagonet ?<sup>12</sup> Was not he prentice to a grocer in London ? Read the play of The Four Prentices of London,<sup>13</sup> where they toss their pikes so. I pray you, fetch him in, sir, fetch him in. 80

Boy. It shall be done. — It is not our fault, gentlemen. Exit.

<sup>6</sup> In The Travels of the Three English Brothers (1607), by Day, Rowley, and Wilkins, the Sophy agrees to further the baptism of the child of his English son-in-law.

<sup>12</sup> King Arthur's fool ; but aside from his appearance in the exhibitions of a society of archers, no connection is known between him and the London citizens.

<sup>13</sup> See introductory note.

WIFE. Now we shall see fine doings, I warrant t'ee, George.

[SCENE II] <sup>14</sup>

Enter RALPH, and the Lady [POMPIONA], Squire [TIM], and Dwarf [GEORGE].

WIFE. Oh, here they come. How prettily the King of Cracovia's daughter is dress'd!

CIT. Ay, Nell, it is the fashion of that country, I warrant t'ee.

POMP. Welcome, Sir Knight, unto my father's court,
King of Moldavia, unto me Pompiona,
His daughter dear! But, sure, you do not like

Your entertainment, that will stay with us
No longer but a night.

RALPH. Damsel right fair,
I am on many sad adventures bound, <sup>10</sup>
That call me forth into the wilderness;
Besides, my horse's back is something gall'd,
Which will enforce me ride a sober pace.
But many thanks, fair lady, be to you
For using errant knight with courtesy!

POMP. But say, brave knight, what is your name and birth?

RALPH. My name is Ralph; I am an Englishman,
As true as steel, a hearty Englishman,
And prentice to a grocer in the Strand
By deed indent, <sup>15</sup> of which I have one part; [20]
But fortune calling me to follow arms,
On me this holy order I did take
Of Burning Pestle, which in all men's eyes
I bear, confounding ladies' enemies.

POMP. Oft have I heard of your brave countrymen,
And fertile soil, and store of wholesome food;
My father oft will tell me of a drink
In England found, and nipitato <sup>16</sup> call'd,
Which driveth all the sorrow from your hearts.

RALPH. Lady, 't is true; you need not lay your lips <sup>30</sup>
To better nipitato than there is.

POMP. And of a wild fowl he will often speak,
Which powd' red <sup>17</sup> beef-and-mustard called is:

<sup>14</sup> A room in the palace of the King of Moldavia. The prince of this country, now included in Roumania, but at one time a dependency of Poland, was in London in 1607.

For there have been great wars 'twixt us and you;

But truly, Ralph, it was not 'long of me.
Tell me then, Ralph, could you contented be
To wear a lady's favor in your shield?

RALPH. I am a knight of religious order,
And will not wear a favor of a lady's <sup>39</sup>
That trusts in Antichrist and false traditions.

CIT. Well said, Ralph! convert her, if thou canst.

RALPH. Besides, I have a lady of my own
In merry England, for whose virtuous sake
I took these arms; and Susan is her name,
A cobbler's maid in Milk Street; whom I vow
Ne'er to forsake whilst life and pestle last.

POMP. Happy that cobbling dame, whose'er she be,

That for her own, dear Ralph, hath gotten thee!

Unhappy I, that ne'er shall see the day <sup>50</sup>
To see thee more, that bear'st my heart away!

RALPH. Lady, farewell; I needs must take my leave.

POMP. Hard-hearted Ralph, that ladies dost deceive!

CIT. Hark thee, Ralph: there's money for thee;
give something in the King of Cracovia's house;
be not beholding to him.

RALPH. Lady, before I go, I must remember
Your father's officers, who, truth to tell,
Have been about me very diligent.
Hold up thy snowy hand, thou princely maid!
There's twelpence for your father's chamberlain; <sup>61</sup>

And another shilling for his cook,
For, by my troth, the goose was roasted well;
And twelpence for your father's horse-keeper,

For nointing my horse' back, and for his butter <sup>18</sup>

There is another shilling; to the maid
That wash'd my boot-hose <sup>19</sup> there's an English groat,

And twopence to the boy that wip'd my boots;

And last, fair lady, there is for yourself
Threepence, to buy you pins at Bumbo <sup>20</sup>
Fair. <sup>70</sup>

<sup>20</sup> Apparently a jocose invention; "bumbo" = a drink made of rum, sugar, water, and nutmeg.

POMP. Full many thanks ; and I will keep them safe

Till all the heads be off, for thy sake, Ralph.

RALPH. Advance, my squire and dwarf ! I cannot stay.

POMP. Thou kill'st my heart in parting thus away. Exeunt.

WIFE. I commend Ralph yet, that he will not stoop to a Cracovian ; there's properer<sup>21</sup> women in London than any are there, iwis. But here comes Master Humphrey and his love again now, George.

CIT. Ay, cony ; peace. 80

[SCENE III]<sup>22</sup>

Enter Merchant [VENTUREWELL], HUMPHREY, LUCE, and a Boy.

VENT. Go, get you up ;<sup>23</sup> I will not be entreated ;

And, gossip mine,<sup>24</sup> I'll keep you sure hereafter

From gadding out again with boys and unthrifths.

Come, they are women's tears ; I know your fashion. —

Go, sirrah, lock her in, and keep the key Safe as you love your life. —

[Exeunt] LUCE and Boy.

Now, my son Humphrey, You may both rest assured of my love In this, and reap your own desire.

HUM. I see this love you speak of, through your daughter, Although the hole be little ; and hereafter [10 Will yield the like in all I may or can, Fitting a Christian and a gentleman.

VENT. I do believe you, my good son, and thank you ; For 't were an impudence to think you flattered.

HUM. It were, indeed : but shall I tell you why ?

I have been beaten twice about the lie.<sup>25</sup>

VENT. Well, son, no more of compliment.<sup>26</sup> My daughter Is yours again : appoint the time and take her.

<sup>23</sup> Upstairs.

We'll have no stealing for it ; I myself And some few of our friends will see you married. 20

HUM. I would you would, i' faith ! for, be it known,

I ever was afraid to lie alone.

VENT. Some three days hence, then.

HUM. Three days ! let me see ;

'T is somewhat of the most ;<sup>27</sup> yet I agree, Because I mean against<sup>28</sup> the appointed day To visit all my friends in new array.

Enter Servant.

SERV. Sir, there's a gentlewoman without would speak with your Worship.

VENT. What is she ?

SERV. Sir, I ask'd her not. 30

VENT. Bid her come in. [Exit Servant.]

Enter MISTRESS MERRYTHOUGHT and MICHAEL.

MIST. MER. Peace be to your Worship ! I come as a poor suitor to you, sir, in the behalf of this child.

VENT. Are you not wife to Merrythought ?

MIST. MER. Yes, truly. Would I had ne'er seen his eyes ! He has undone me and himself and his children ; and there he lives at home, and sings and hoits<sup>29</sup> and revels among his drunken companions ! but, I warrant you, [40 where to get a penny to put bread in his mouth he knows not : and therefore, if it like your Worship, I would entreat your letter to the honest host of the Bell in Waltham, that I may place my child under the protection of his tapster, in some settled course of life.

VENT. I'm glad the Heavens have heard my prayers. Thy husband, When I was ripe in sorrows, laugh'd at me ; Thy son, like an unthankful wretch, I having Redeem'd him from his fall, and made him mine, 50

To show his love again first stole my daughter, Then wrong'd this gentleman, and, last of all, Gave me that grief had almost brought me down

Unto my grave, had not a stronger hand Reliev'd my sorrows. Go, and weep as I did, And be unpitied ; for I here profess An everlasting hate to all thy name.

MIST. MER. Will you so, sir ? how say you by that ? — Come, Mick ; let him keep his wind to cool his porridge. We'll go to [60 thy nurse's, Mick : she knits silk stockings, boy ; and we'll knit too, boy, and be beholding to none of them all.

Exeunt MICHAEL and Mother.

Enter a Boy with a letter.

BOY. Sir, I take it you are the master of this house.

VENT. How then, boy?

BOY. Then to yourself, sir, comes this letter.

VENT. From whom, my pretty boy?

BOY. From him that was your servant ; but no more

Shall that name ever be, for he is dead ;

Grief of your purchas'd anger<sup>30</sup> broke his heart.

I saw him die, and from his hand receiv'd
This paper, with a charge to bring it hither :
Read it, and satisfy yourself in all.

VENT. [reads.] "Sir, that I have wronged your love I must confess ; in which I have purchas'd to myself, besides mine own undoing, the ill opinion of my friends. Let not your anger, good sir, outlive me, but suffer me to rest in peace with your forgiveness ; let my body, if a dying man may so much prevail [80 with you, be brought to your daughter, that she may truly know my hot flames are now buried, and withal receive a testimony of the zeal I bore her virtue. Farewell for ever, and be ever happy !"
JASPER."

God's hand is great in this. I do forgive him ;
Yet I am glad he's quiet, where I hope
He will not bite again. — Boy, bring the body,
And let him have his will, if that be all.

BOY. 'Tis here without, sir.

VENT. So, sir ; if you please, [80
You may conduct it in ; I do not fear it.

HUM. I'll be your usher, boy ; for, though
I say it,
He ow'd me something once, and well did pay it.

Exeunt.

[SCENE IV]<sup>31</sup>

Enter LUCE alone.

LUCE. If there be any punishment inflicted Upon the miserable, more than yet I feel,
Let it together<sup>32</sup> seize me and at once
Press down my soul ! I cannot bear the pain
Of these delaying tortures. — Thou that art

The end of all, and the sweet rest of all,
Come, come, O Death ! bring me to thy peace,
And blot out all the memory I nourish
Both of my father and my cruel friend ! —
O wretched maid, still living to be wretched, [10
To be a say<sup>33</sup> to Fortune in her changes,
And grow to number times and woes together !
How happy had I been, if, being born,
My grave had been my cradle !

Enter Servant.

SERV. By your leave,
Young Mistress ; here's a boy hath brought a coffin.

What 'a would say, I know not ; but your
father

Charg'd me to give you notice. Here they come.

[Exit.]

Enter Two bearing a coffin, JASPER in it.

LUCE. For me I hope 't is come, and 't is most welcome.

Box. Fair Mistress, let me not add greater grief

To that great store you have already. Jasper,
That whilst he liv'd was yours, now dead [21
And here enclos'd, commanded me to bring
His body hither, and to crave a tear
From those fair eyes, though he deserv'd not pity,

To deck his funeral ; for so he bid me
Tell her for whom he di'd.

LUCE. He shall have many. —
Good friends, depart a little, whilst I take
My leave of this dead man, that once I lov'd. —

Exeunt Coffin-carrier and Boy.

Hold yet a little, life ! and then I give thee
To thy first Heavenly being. Oh, my friend !<sup>34</sup> Hast thou deceiv'd me thus, and got before me ?

31

I shall not long be after. But, believe me,
Thou wert too cruel, Jasper, 'gainst thyself,
In punishing the fault I could have pardoned,
With so untimely death ; thou didst not wrong me,

But ever wert most kind, most true, most loving ;

And I the most unkind, most false, most cruel !
Didst thou but ask a tear ? I'll give thee all,
Even all my eyes can pour down, all my sighs,
And all myself, before thou goest from me. [40
There<sup>35</sup> are but sparing rites ; but if thy soul
Be yet about this place, and can behold

<sup>35</sup> Ed. 1711 these, perhaps rightly.

And see what I prepare to deck thee with,
It shall go up, borne on the wings of peace,
And satisfied. First will I sing thy dirge,
Then kiss thy pale lips, and then die myself,
And fill one coffin and one grave together.

SONG

Come, you whose loves are dead,
And, whiles I sing,
Weep, and wring
Every hand, and every head 50
Bind with cypress and sad yew;
Ribands black and candles blue
For him that was of men most true!

Come with heavy [moaning],<sup>36</sup>
And on his grave
Let him have
Sacrifice of sighs and groaning;
Let him have fair flowers enow,
White and purple, green and yellow, 60
For him that was of men most true!<sup>37</sup>

Thou sable cloth, sad cover of my joys,
I lift thee up, and thus I meet with death.

[Removes the cloth, and JASPER rises out of the coffin.]

JASP. And thus you meet the living.

LUCE. Save me, Heaven!

JASP. Nay, do not fly me, fair; I am no
spirit;

Look better on me; do you know me yet?

LUCE. Oh thou dear shadow of my friend!

JASP. Dear substance!

I swear I am no shadow; feel my hand:
It is the same it was; I am your Jasper,
Your Jasper that's yet living, and yet lov-
ing. 70

Pardon my rash attempt, my foolish proof<sup>38</sup>
I put in practice of your constancy;
For sooner should my sword have drunk my
blood

And set my soul at liberty, than drawn
The least drop from that body; for which boldness

Doom me to anything; if death, I take it,
And willingly.

LUCE. This death I'll give you for it;
[Kisses him.]

So; now I am satisfied: you are no spirit,
But my own truest, truest, truest friend.
Why do you come thus to me?

JASP. First, to see you; 80
Then, to convey you hence.

LUCE. It cannot be;
For I am lock'd up here, and watch'd at all
hours,
That 't is impossible for me to scape.

<sup>36</sup> Cor. ed. 1750; old eds. mourning.

<sup>38</sup> Test.

JASP. Nothing more possible. Within this coffin

Do you convey yourself. Let me alone;<sup>39</sup>
I have the wits of twenty men about me;
Only I crave the shelter of your closet
A little, and then fear me not.<sup>40</sup> Creep in,
That they may presently convey you hence;
Fear nothing, dearest love; I'll be your second; 90

[LUCE lies down in the coffin, and

JASPER covers her with the cloth.]

Lie close;<sup>41</sup> so; all goes well yet. — Boy!

[Re-enter Boy and Coffin-carrier.]

BOY. At hand, sir.

JASP. Convey away the coffin, and be wary.

BOY. 'T is done already.

JASP. Now must I go conjure.

Exit [into a closet].

Enter Merchant [VENTUREWELL].

VENT. Boy, boy!

BOY. Your servant, sir.

VENT. Do me this kindness, boy; hold,
here's a crown;

Before thou bury the body of this fellow,
Carry it to his old merry father, and salute
him

From me, and bid him sing; he hath cause.<sup>42</sup>

BOY. I will, sir.

VENT. And then bring me word what tune
he is in, 100

And have another crown; but do it truly. —
I have fitted him a bargain now will vex him.

BOY. God bless your Worship's health, sir!

VENT. Farewell, boy! Exeunt.

[SCENE V]<sup>43</sup>

Enter MERRYTHOUGHT.

WIFE. Ah, old Merrythought, art thou there again? Let's hear some of thy songs.

MER.

Who can sing a merrier note
Than he that cannot change a groat?<sup>44</sup>

Not a denier left, and yet my heart leaps. I do wonder yet, as old as I am, that any man will follow a trade, or serve, that may sing and laugh, and walk the streets. My wife and both my sons are I know not where; I have

<sup>39</sup> Leave it to me.

nothing left, nor know I how to come by [10 meat to supper; yet am I merry still, for I know I shall find it upon the table at six a'clock; therefore, hang thought!

I would not be a serving man
To carry the cloak-bag <sup>46</sup> still,
Nor would I be a falconer
The greedy hawks to fill;
But I would be in a good house,
And have a good master too;
But I would eat and drink of the best, 20
And no work would I do.<sup>46</sup>

This is it that keeps life and soul together, — mirth; this is the philosopher's stone that they write so much on, that keeps a man ever young.

Enter a Boy.

Boy. Sir, they say they know all your money is gone, and they will trust you for no more drink.

MER. Will they not? let 'em choose! The best is, I have mirth at home, and need [30 not send abroad for that; let them keep their drink to themselves.

For Jillian of Berry, she dwells on a hill,
And she hath good beer and ale to sell,
And of good fellows she thinks no ill;
And thither will we go now, now, now, now,
And thither will we go now.

And when you have made a little stay,
You need not ask what is to pay,
But kiss your hostess, and go your way; 40
And thither, &c.<sup>46</sup>

Enter another Boy.

2 Boy. Sir, I can get no bread for supper.

MER. Hang bread and supper! Let's preserve our mirth, and we shall never feel hunger, I'll warrant you. Let's have a catch;
boy, follow me, come. Sing this catch.

Ho, ho, nobody at home!
Meat, nor drink, nor money ha' we none.
Fill the pot, Eedy,
Never more need I.<sup>46</sup> 50

MER. So, boys; enough. Follow me;
let's change our place, and we shall laugh afresh. Exeunt.

WIFE. Let him go, George; 'a shall not have any countenance from us, nor a good word from any i' th' company, if I may strike stroke <sup>47</sup> in't.

CIT. No more 'a sha' not, love. But, Nell,
I will have Ralph do a very notable matter

Pammelia (1609). (Dyce.)

<sup>47</sup> If I have anything to say about it.

now, to the eternal honor and glory of [60 all grocers. — Sirrah! you there, boy! Can none of you hear?

[Enter a Boy.]

Boy. Sir, your pleasure?

CIT. Let Ralph come out on May Day in the morning, and speak upon a conduit,<sup>48</sup> with all his scarfs about him, and his feathers, and his rings, and his knacks.

Boy. Why, sir, you do not think of our plot; what will become of that, then?

CIT. Why, sir, I care not what become [70 on't; I'll have him come out, or I'll fetch him out myself; I'll have something done in honor of the city. Besides, he hath been long enough upon adventures. Bring him out quickly; or, if I come in amongst you —

Boy. Well, sir, he shall come out; but if our play miscarry, sir, you are like to pay for't.

CIT. Bring him away then! Exit Boy.

WIFE. This will be brave, i' faith! George, shall not he dance the morris too, for the [80
credit of the Strand?

CIT. No, sweetheart, it will be too much for the boy. Oh, there he is, Nell! he's reasonable well in repara; but he has not rings
enough.

[SCENE VI]

Enter RALPH.

RALPH. London, to thee I do present the merry month of May;

Let each true subject be content to hear me
what I say;

For from the top of conduit-head, as plainly may appear,

I will both tell my name to you, and wherefore
I came here.

My name is Ralph,<sup>49</sup> by due descent though not ignoble I

Yet far inferior to the flock <sup>50</sup> of gracious grocery;

And by the common counsel of my fellows in
the Strand,

With gilded staff and crossed scarf, the Mav-lord here I stand.

Rejoice, O English hearts, rejoice! rejoice,
O lovers dear!

Rejoice, O city, town, and country! rejoice,
eke every shire! 10

<sup>50</sup> Dyce emends stock.

For now the fragrant flowers do spring and sprout in seemly sort,
 The little birds do sit and sing, the lambs do make fine sport ;
 And now the birchen-tree doth bud, that makes the schoolboy cry ;
 The mcrris rings,<sup>51</sup> while hobbyhorse doth foot it feateously ;<sup>52</sup>
 The lords and ladies now abroad, for their disport and play,
 Do kiss sometimes upon the grass, and sometimes in the hay ;
 Now butter with a leaf of sage is good to purge
 the blood ;
 Fly Venus<sup>53</sup> and phlebotomy,<sup>54</sup> for they are neither good ;
 Now little fish on tender stone begin to cast their bellies,<sup>55</sup>
 And sluggish snails, that erst were [mew'd],<sup>56</sup> do creep out of their shellies ;<sup>20</sup>
 The rumbling rivers now do warm, for little boys to paddle ;
 The sturdy steed now goes to grass, and up
 they hang his saddle ;
 The heavy hart, the bellowing buck, the rascal,<sup>57</sup> and the pricket,<sup>58</sup>
 Are now among the yeoman's peas, and leave the fearful thicket :
 And be like them, oh, you, I say, of this same noble town,
 And lift aloft your velvet heads,<sup>59</sup> and slipping off your gown,
 With bells on legs,<sup>60</sup> and napkins clean unto your shoulders ti'd,
 With scarfs and garters as you please, and
 "Hey for our town !" cri'd,
 March out, and show your willing minds, by twenty and by twenty,
 To Hogsdon<sup>61</sup> or to Newington,<sup>62</sup> where ale and cakes are plenty ;<sup>30</sup>
 And let it ne'er be said for shame, that we the youths of London
 Lay thrumming of our caps<sup>63</sup> at home, and left our custom undone.
 Up, then, I say, both young and old, both man and maid a-maying,

 and merry tabor playing !
 Which to prolong, God save our King, and send his country peace,
 And root out treason from the land ! and so,
 my friends, I cease. Exit.

ACT V — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter Merchant [VENTUREWELL], solus.

VENT. I will have no great store of company at the wedding ; a couple of neighbors and their wives ; and we will have a capon in stewed broth, with marrow, and a good piece of beef stuck with rosemary.

Enter JASPER [from the closet], his face mealed.

JASP. Forbear thy pains, fond man ! it is too late.

VENT. Heaven bless me ! Jasper !

JASP. Ay, I am his ghost,
 Whom thou hast injur'd for his constant love, Fond worldly wretch ! who dost not understand

In death that true hearts cannot parted be. [10
 First know, thy daughter is quite borne away
 On wings of angels, through the liquid air,
 [Too]<sup>2</sup> far out of thy reach, and never more Shalt thou behold her face ; but she and I
 Will in another world enjoy our loves ;
 Where neither father's anger, poverty,
 Nor any cross that troubles earthly men,
 Shall make us sever our united hearts.

And never shalt thou sit or be alone
 In any place, but I will visit thee <sup>20</sup>
 With ghastly looks, and put into thy mind
 The great offences which thou didst to me.
 When thou art at thy table with thy friends,
 Merry in heart, and fill'd with swelling wine,
 I'll come in midst of all thy pride and mirth,
 Invisible to all men but thyself,
 And whisper such a sad tale in thine ear
 Shall make thee let the cup fall from thy hand,
 And stand as mute and pale as death itself.<sup>3</sup>

VENT. Forgive me, Jasper ! Oh, what might I do, <sup>30</sup>

Tell me, to satisfy thy troubled ghost ?

JASP. There is no means ; too late thou think'st of this.

<sup>64</sup> Bang.<sup>1</sup> A room in Venturewell's house.<sup>2</sup> So Qq 1, 1. F. Q 1 To.<sup>3</sup> Pretty clearly an allusion to Macbeth, III, iv.

VENT. But tell me what were best for me to do?

JASP. Repent thy deed, and satisfy my father,
And beat fond Humphrey<sup>4</sup> out of thy doors.

Exit JASPER.

WIFE. Look, George; his very ghost would have folks beaten.

Enter HUMPHREY.

HUM. Father, my bride is gone, fair Mistress Luce;
My soul's the fount of vengeance, mischief's sluice.

VENT. Hence, fool, out of my sight with thy fond passion!<sup>5</sup>
Thou hast undone me. [Beats him.]

HUM. Hold, my father dear,
For Luce thy daughter's sake, that had no peer!

VENT. Thy father, fool! There's some blows more; begone. — [Beats him.]
Jasper, I hope thy ghost be well appeased
To see thy will perform'd. Now will I go To satisfy thy father for thy wrongs. Exit.

HUM. What shall I do? I have been beaten twice,
And Mistress Luce is gone. Help me, device!<sup>6</sup>

Since my true love is gone, I nevermore,
Whilst I do live, upon the sky will pore;
But in the dark will wear out my shoe-soles
In passion<sup>7</sup> in Saint Faith's Church under Paul's.<sup>8</sup> Exit.

WIFE. George, call Ralph hither; if you love me, call Ralph hither: I have the bravest thing for him to do, George; prithee, call him quickly.

CIT. Ralph! why, Ralph, boy!

Enter RALPH.

RALPH. Here, sir.

CIT. Come hither, Ralph; come to thy mistress, boy.

WIFE. Ralph, I would have thee call all the youths together in battle-ray, with drums, and guns, and flags, and march to Mile End in pompous fashion, and there exhort your soldiers to be merry and wise, and to keep their beards from burning, Ralph; and then skirmish, and let your flags fly, and cry, "Kill, kill, kill!"<sup>9</sup> My husband shall lend you his jerkin, Ralph, and there's a scarf; for the rest, the house shall furnish you, and we'll pay for't. Do it bravely, Ralph; and think [70 before whom you perform, and what person you represent.

RALPH. I warrant you, Mistress; if I do it not for the honor of the city and the credit of my master, let me never hope for freedom!<sup>10</sup>

WIFE. 'Tis well spoken, i' faith. Go thy ways; thou art a spark indeed.

CIT. Ralph, Ralph, double your files bravely, Ralph!

RALPH. I warrant you, sir. Exit RALPH. [80

CIT. Let him look narrowly to his service; I shall take<sup>11</sup> him else. I was there myself a pikeman once, in the hottest of the day, wench; had my feather shot sheer away, the fringe<sup>12</sup> of my pike burnt off with powder, my pate broken with a scouring-stick,<sup>13</sup> and yet, I thank God, I am here. Drum within.

WIFE. Hark, George, the drums!

CIT. Ran, tan, tan, tan; ran, tan! Oh, wench, an thou hadst but seen little Ned [90 of Aldgate, Drum Ned, how he made it roar again, and laid on like a tyrant, and then struck softly till the ward<sup>14</sup> came up, and then thund'ed again, and together we go! "Sa, sa, sa, bounce!" quoth the guns; "Courage, my hearts!" quoth the captains; "Saint George!" quoth the pikemen; and withal, here they lay, and there they lay; and yet for all this I am here, wench. 99

WIFE. Be thankful for it, George; for indeed 'tis wonderful.

[SCENE II]<sup>15</sup>

Enter RALPH and his company [among whom are WILLIAM HAMMERTON and GEORGE GREENGOOSE], with drums and colors.

RALPH. March fair, my hearts! Lieutenant, beat the rear up. — Ancient,<sup>16</sup> let your colors fly; but have a great care of the butchers' hooks at Whitechapel; they have been the death of many a fair ancient.<sup>17</sup> — Open your files, that I may take a view both of your

SERG. A stand!—William Hammerton, pewterer! 10

HAM. Here, captain!

RALPH. A corselet and a Spanish pike; 't is well; can you shake it with a terror?

HAM. I hope so, captain.

RALPH. Charge upon me. [He charges on RALPH.]—'T is with the weakest; put more strength, William Hammerton, more strength. As you were again!—Proceed, Sergeant.

SERG. George Greengoose, poulterer!

GREEN. Here! 20

RALPH. Let me see your piece,<sup>18</sup> neighbor Greengoose; when was she shot in?

GREEN. An['t] like you, Master Captain, I made a shot even now, partly to scour her, and partly for audacity.

RALPH. It should seem so certainly, for her breath is yet inflamed; besides, there is a main<sup>19</sup> fault in the touchhole, it runs and stinketh; and I tell you moreover, and believe it, ten such touchholes would breed the [30] pox in the army. Get you a feather, neighbor, get you a feather, sweet oil, and paper, and your piece may do well enough yet. Where's your powder?

GREEN. Here.

RALPH. What, in a paper! As I am a soldier and a gentleman, it craves a martial court!<sup>20</sup> You ought to die for't. Where's your horn? Answer me to that.

GREEN. An't like you, sir, I was [40] oblivious.

RALPH. It likes me not you should be so; 't is a shame for you, and a scandal to all our neighbors, being a man of worth and estimation, to leave your horn behind you; I am afraid 't will breed example. But let me tell you, no more on't.—Stand, till I view you all. What's become o' th' nose of your flask?

1 SOLD. Indeed, law, Captain, 't was blown away with powder. 50

RALPH. Put on a new one at the city's charge.—Where's the stone<sup>21</sup> of this piece?

2 SOLD. The drummer took it out to light tobacco.

RALPH. 'T is a fault, my friend; put it in again.—You want a nose,—and you a stone.<sup>22</sup>—Sergeant, take a note on't, for I mean to stop it in the pay.—Remove, and march! [They march.] Soft and fair, gentlemen, soft and fair! Double your files! As [60] you were! Faces about! Now, you with the sodden<sup>23</sup> face, keep in there! Look to your match, sirrah, it will be in your fellow's flask anon. So; make a crescent now; advance your pikes; stand and give ear!—Gentlemen, countrymen, friends, and my fellow-soldiers, I have brought you this day, from the shops of security and the counters of content, to measure out in these furious fields honor by the ell, and prowess by the pound. [70] Let it not, oh, let it not, I say, be told hereafter the noble issue of this city fainted; but bear yourselves in this fair action like men, valiant men, and free men! Fear not the face of the enemy, nor the noise of the guns, for, believe me, brethren, the rude rumbling of a brewer's car is far more terrible, of which you have a daily experience; neither let the stink of powder offend you, since a more valiant stink is nightly with you. To a resolved<sup>24</sup> [80] mind his home is everywhere; I speak not this to take away the hope of your return; for you shall see, I do not doubt it, and that very shortly, your loving wives again and your sweet children, whose care doth bear you company in baskets.<sup>25</sup> Remember, then, whose cause you have in hand, and, like a sort<sup>26</sup> of true-born scavengers, scour me this famous realm of enemies. I have no more to say but this: stand to your tacklings,<sup>27</sup> [90] lads, and show to the world you can as well brandish a sword as shake an apron. Saint George, and on, my hearts!

OMNES. Saint George, Saint George!

Exeunt.

WIFE. 'T was well done, Ralph! I'll send thee a cold capon afield and a bottle of March beer; and, it may be, come myself to see thee.

CIT. Nell, the boy has deceived me much; I did not think it had been in him. He has performed such a matter, wench, that, [100] if I live, next year I'll have him captain of the galley-foist<sup>28</sup> or I'll want my will.

[SCENE III]<sup>29</sup>

Enter old MERRYTHOUGHT.

MER. Yet, I thank God, I break not a wrinkle more than I had. Not a stoup, boys?

Care, live with cats; I defy thee! My heart is as sound as an oak; and though I want drink to wet my whistle, I can sing:

Come no more there, boys, come no more there;
For we shall never whilst we live come any more there.<sup>30</sup>

Enter a Boy, with a coffin.

Boy. God save you, sir!

MER. It's a brave boy. Canst thou sing?

Boy. Yes, sir, I can sing; but 't is not [10 so necessary at this time.

MER.

Sing we, and chant it;
Whilst love doth grant it.<sup>31</sup>

Boy. Sir, sir, if you knew what I have brought you, you would have little list to sing.

MER.

Oh, the [minion] <sup>32</sup> round!
Full long, long I have thee sought,
And now I have thee found,
And what hast thou here brought? <sup>30</sup> 19

Boy. A coffin, sir, and your dead son Jasper in it. [Exit with Coffin-carrier.]

MER. Dead!

Why, farewell he!
Thou wast a bonny boy,
And I did love thee.<sup>30</sup>

Enter JASPER.

JASP. Then, I pray you, sir, do so still.

MER. Jasper's ghost!

Thou art welcome from Stygian lake so soon;
Declare to me what wondrous things in Pluto's court are done.<sup>30</sup>

JASP. By my troth, sir, I ne'er came there;
't is too hot for me, sir. 31

MER. A merry ghost, a very merry ghost!
And where is your true-love? Oh, where is yours? <sup>30</sup>

JASP. Marry, look you, sir!

Heaves up the coffin; [LUCE steps out].

MER. Ah, ha! art thou good at that, i'
faith?

With hey, trixy, terlery-whiskin,
The world it runs on wheels; <sup>32</sup>
When the young man's ———, <sup>34</sup>
Up goes the maiden's heels. <sup>35</sup> 40

MISTRESS MERRYTHOUGHT and MICHAEL
within.

MIST. MER. What, Master Merrythought!

<sup>31</sup> From Thomas Morley's First Book of Ballads (1600). (Dyce.)

will you not let's in? What do you think shall become of us?

MER.

What voice is that, that calleth at our door? <sup>36</sup>

MIST. MER. You know me well enough;
I am sure I have not been such a stranger to
you.

MER.

And some they whistled, and some they sung,

Hey, down, down!
And some did loudly say, 50
Ever as the Lord Barnet's horn blew,
Away, Musgrave, away! <sup>36</sup>

MIST. MER. You will not have us starve here, will you, Master Merrythought?

JASP. Nay, good sir, be persuaded; she is my mother. If her offences have been great against you, let your own love remember she is yours; and so forgive her.

LUCE. Good Master Merrythought, let me
entreat you; I will not be denied. 60

MIST. MER. Why, Master Merrythought, will you be a vex'd thing still?

MER. Woman, I take you to my love again;
but you shall sing before you enter; therefore dispatch your song and so come in.

MIST. MER. Well, you must have your will, when all's done. — Mick, what song canst thou sing, boy?

MICH. I can sing none, forsooth, but "A Lady's Daughter, of Paris properly." 70

MIST. MER.

SONG

It was a lady's daughter, &c.<sup>37</sup>

[MERRYTHOUGHT opens the door; enter MIS-TRESS MERRYTHOUGHT and MICHAEL.]

MER. Come, you're welcome home again.

If such danger be in playing,
And jest must to earnest turn,
You shall go no more a-maying — <sup>35</sup>

VENT. (within) Are you within, sir? Master Merrythought!

JASP. It is my master's voice! Good sir, go hold him in talk, whilst we convey ourselves into some inward room. 80

[Exit with LUCE.]

MER. What are you? Are you merry?
You must be very merry, if you enter.

VENT. [within] I am, sir.

MER. Sing, then.

VENT. [within] Nay, good sir, open to me.

<sup>36</sup> From the ballad of Little Musgrave and Lady Barnard.

<sup>37</sup> A Protestant ballad, identified by Dyce.

MER. Sing, I say, or, by the merry heart,
You come not in!

VENT. [within] Well, sir, I'll sing.

Fortune, my foe, &c.<sup>38</sup>

[MERRYTHOUGHT opens the door; enter VENTUREWELL.]

MER. You are welcome, sir, you are welcome; you see your entertainment; pray you, be merry. 90

VENT. Oh, Master Merrythought, I am come to ask you

Forgiveness for the wrongs I offered you
And your most virtuous son! They're infinite;

Yet my contrition shall be more than they;
I do confess my hardness broke his heart,
For which just Heaven hath given me punishment

More than my age can carry. His wand'ring spirit,

Not yet at rest, pursues me everywhere,
Crying, "I'll haunt thee for thy cruelty."
My daughter, she is gone, I know not how, 100
Taken invisible, and whether living
Or in grave, 't is yet uncertain to me.

Oh, Master Merrythought, these are the weights

Will sink me to my grave! Forgive me, sir.

MER. Why, sir, I do forgive you; and be merry.

And if the wag in's lifetime play'd the knave.
Can you forgive him too?

VENT. With all my heart, sir.

MER. Speak it again, and heartily.

VENT. I do, sir;

Now, by my soul, I do.

Re-enter LUCE and JASPER.

MER.

With that came out his paramour; 110
She was as white as the lily flower;
Hey, troll, trolly, lolly!
With that came out her own dear knight;
He was as true as ever did fight, &c.<sup>39</sup>

Sir, if you will forgive 'em, clap their hands together; there's no more to be said i' th' matter.

VENT. I do, I do.

CIT. I do not like this. Peace, boys!
Hear me, one of you! Everybody's part is

come to an end but Ralph's, and he's left [21 out.

BOY. 'T is 'long of yourself, sir; we have nothing to do with his part.

CIT. Ralph, come away! — Make on<sup>40</sup> him, as you have done of the rest, boys; come.

WIFE. Now, good husband, let him come out and die.

CIT. He shall, Nell. — Ralph, come away quickly, and die, boy! 130

BOY. 'T will be very unfit he should die, sir, upon no occasion — and in a comedy too.

CIT. Take you no care of that, Sir Boy; is not his part at an end, think you, when he's dead? — Come away, Ralph!

SCENE IV

Enter RALPH, with a forked<sup>41</sup> arrow through his head.<sup>42</sup>

RALPH. When I was mortal, this my costive corps<sup>43</sup>

Did lap up figs and raisins in the Strand;
Where sitting, I espi'd a lovely dame,
Whose master wrought with lingel<sup>44</sup> and with awl,

And underground he vamped many a boot.
Straight did her love prick forth me, tender sprig,

To follow feats of arms in warlike wise
Through Waltham Desert; where I did perform

Many achievements, and did lay on ground
Huge Barbaroso, that insulting<sup>45</sup> giant, 10
And all his captives soon set at liberty.

Then honor prick'd me from my native soil
Into Moldavia, where I gain'd the love
Of Pompiona, his beloved daughter;
But yet prov'd constant to the black-thumb'd<sup>46</sup> maid

Susan, and scorned Pompiona's love;
Yet liberal I was, and gave her pins,
And money for her father's officers.
I then returned home, and thrust myself
In action, and by all men chosen was 20
Lord of the May, where I did flourish it,
With scarfs and rings, and posy<sup>47</sup> in my hand.
After this action I preferred was,

<sup>47</sup> Nosegay.

And chosen city-captain at Mile End,
With hat and feather, and with leading-staff,<sup>48</sup>
And train'd my men, and brought them all off
clear,

Save one man that beray'd him with<sup>49</sup> the noise.

But all these things I, Ralph, did undertake
Only for my beloved Susan's sake.
Then coming home, and sitting in my shop [30
With apron blue, Death came into my stall
To cheapen<sup>50</sup> aqua vitae; but ere I Could take the bottle down and fill a taste,
Death caught a pound of pepper in his hand,
And sprinkled all my face and body o'er,
And in an instant vanished away.

CIT. 'T is a pretty fiction, i' faith.

RALPH. Then took I up my bow and shaft
in hand,

And walk'd into Moorfields to cool myself;
But there grim cruel Death met me again, [40
And shot this forked arrow through my head;
And now I faint; therefore be warn'd by me,
My fellows every one, of forked heads! <sup>51</sup>
Farewell, all you good boys in merry London!

Ne'er shall we more upon Shrove Tuesday
meet,

And pluck down houses of iniquity.<sup>52</sup>
My pain increaseth; I shall never more
Hold open, whilst another pumps both legs,
Nor daub a satin gown with rotten eggs;
Set up a stake, oh, never more I shall! <sup>50</sup>
I die! fly, fly, my soul, to Grocers' Hall!
Oh, oh, oh, &c.<sup>53</sup>

<sup>52</sup> On Shrove Tuesday the municipal authorities made a search for brothels; that being a great holiday of theirs, the prentices took it on themselves to wreck such houses.

<sup>53</sup> The actor was now supposed to die — ad libitum.

WIFE. Well said, Ralph! do your obeisance to the gentlemen, and go your ways; well said, Ralph!
Exit RALPH.

MER. Methinks all we, thus kindly and unexpectedly reconciled, should not depart<sup>54</sup> without a song.

VENT. A good motion.

MER. Strike up, then!

60

SONG

Better music ne'er was known
Than a choir of hearts in one.
Let each other, that hath been Troubled with the gall or spleen,
Learn of us to keep his brow
Smooth and plain, as ours are now;<sup>55</sup>
Sing, though before the hour of dying;
He shall rise, and then be crying,
"Hey, ho, 't is naught but mirth
That keeps the body from the earth!" <sup>56</sup> 70

Exeunt omnes.

EPILOGUS

CIT. Come, Nell, shall we go? The play's
done.

WIFE. Nay, by my faith, George, I have more manners than so; I'll speak to these gentlemen first. — I thank you all, gentlemen, for your patience and countenance to Ralph, a poor fatherless child; and if I might see you at my house, it should go hard but I would have a pottle of wine and a pipe of tobacco for you;
for, truly, I hope you do like the youth, but [80
I would be glad to know the truth; I refer it to your own discretions, whether you will applaud him or no; for I will wink, and whilst<sup>57</sup> you shall do what you will. — I thank you with all my heart. God give you good night! —
Come, George. [Exeunt.]

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

Philaster is mentioned in The Scourge of Folly by John Davies of Hereford, which was entered in the Stationers' Register on October 8, 1610. It may have been composed shortly before, or it may date back a year or two. It was acted by the King's Men, Shakespeare's company, at the Globe and the Blackfriars. No source is known, though the maiden disguised as a page and acting as a go-between appears in the tale of Felismena in the Diana of Jorge de Montemayor, and in Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona and Twelfth Night. (For a review of possible influences see T. P. Harrison, Jr., Publications of the Modern Language Association, XLI, 294-303.)

More interesting is Philaster's relation to Cymbeline (c. 1610). Professor A. H. Thorndike has argued for the priority of Beaumont and Fletcher, and for their strong influence on Shakespeare's final group of dramatic romances. Lacking precise dates, we can not be sure who deserves credit for introducing this type of romantic tragi-comedy. It was destined to be a much practised form of drama; Philaster was both influential in establishing the vogue and extremely popular itself, for it was one of the leading items in the London repertory throughout the seventeenth century. In 1695 it was adapted by Elkanah Settle, but in 1711 the original was restored to the boards. In 1763, somewhat altered, it was successfully revived at Drury Lane by the elder Colman; in this version it survived into the nineteenth century.

Despite the coarseness of parts of Philaster, there is an aristocratic refinement about this play which is proof that a noble purity could appeal to the same audience that revelled in racy farce and sophisticated comedy. The delicacy of the dramatist's treatment of the disguised Euphrasia, her idealism, her honor, her loyalty to the distressed Arethusa, may be a little artificial and not a little sentimental, but they are very lovely. All that keeps this play from the Shakespearean level is its failure to fuse the real and the ideal, which are here set forth in separate scenes. Shakespeare brings them together, often in the same speech; but that amazing verisimilitude was not consistently achieved by any of his colleagues. Nor must we allow our admiration of the Bellario scenes to blind us to the great, though very different, merits of the portrait of Megra. As for Philaster, romantic heroes are less easily credible than romantic heroines. There has to be a tenor in this kind of drama; Philaster's operatic flourishes in the fourth act are hard to bear with, but his earlier duets with "Bellario" are beautiful, and his Hamlet-like predicament wins our sympathy. The collaboration in this play is so happy that efforts to distinguish the two hands must be regarded with caution. The prevailing opinion is that Beaumont's is the major contribution.

Philaster was first printed, in quarto, in 1620. This edition supplies a generally inferior text; it is, in fact, a distinct version, with a variant beginning and end by another writer. The Second Quarto, of 1622, is the most authoritative and has been followed here, with a few corrections from the other old editions, especially the first, which occasionally preserves original readings garbled by the compositor of Q 2. Later editions appeared in 1628, 1634 (with a revised text, reprinted in subsequent editions), 1639, 1652 (two editions), n.d. [1663], 1687, and 1717. Philaster was also printed in the Second Folio, of 1679. It was edited, with The Maid's Tragedy, by A. H. Thorndike (1906), for the Bullen Variorum by P. A. Daniel (1904), and separately by F. S. Boas (1909).

ACT I—SCENE I<sup>2</sup>

Enter DION, CLEREMONT, and THRASILINE.

CLER. Here's nor lords nor ladies.

DION. Credit me, gentlemen, I wonder at it. They receiv'd strict charge from the King to attend here; besides, it was boldly published that no officer should forbid any gentleman that desired to attend and hear.

CLE. Can you guess the cause?

DION. Sir, it is plain, about the Spanish Prince that's come to marry our kingdom's heir and be our sovereign. 10

THRA. Many that will seem to know much say she looks not on him like a maid in love.

DION. Faith, sir, the multitude, that seldom know any thing but their own opinions, speak that they would have; but the Prince, before his own approach, receiv'd so many confident messages from the state, that I think she's resolv'd to be rul'd.

CLE. Sir, it is thought with her he shall enjoy both these kingdoms of Sicily and [20 Calabria.

DION. Sir, it is without controversy so meant. But 't will be a troublesome labor for him to enjoy both these kingdoms with safety, the right heir to one of them living, and living so virtuously; especially, the people admiring the bravery of his mind and lamenting his injuries.

CLE. Who? Philaster?

DION. Yes; whose father, we all know, [30 was by our late King of Calabria unrighteously deposed from his fruitful Sicily. Myself drew some blood in those wars, which I would give my hand to be washed from.

CLE. Sir, my ignorance in state policy will not let me know why, Philaster being heir to one of these kingdoms, the King should suffer him to walk abroad with such free liberty.

DION. Sir, it seems your nature is more constant than to inquire after state news. [40 But the King, of late, made a hazard of both the kingdoms, of Sicily and his own, with offering<sup>3</sup> but to imprison Philaster; at which the city was in arms, not to be charm'd down<sup>4</sup> by any state order or proclamation, till they saw Philaster ride through the streets pleas'd and without a guard; at which they threw their hats and their arms from them ; some to make bonfires, some to drink, all for his deliverance ; which, wise men say, is the cause the [50 King labors to bring in the power of a foreign nation to awe his own with.

Enter GALATEA, a Lady, and MEGRA.<sup>5</sup>

THRA. See, the ladies ! What's the first ?

DION. A wise and modest gentlewoman that attends the Princess.

CLE. The second ?

DION. She is one that may stand still discreetly enough and ill-favor'dly dance her measure, simper when she is courted by her friend,<sup>6</sup> and slight her husband. [60

CLE. The last ?

DION. Faith, I think she is one whom the state keeps for the agents of our confederate princes ; she 'll cog<sup>7</sup> and lie with a whole army, before the league shall break. Her name is common through the kingdom, and the trophies of her dishonor advanced beyond Hercules' Pillars. She loves to try the several constitutions of men's bodies ; and, indeed, has destroyed the worth of her own body [70 by making experiment upon it for the good of the commonwealth.

CLE. She's a profitable member.

MEG. Peace, if you love me ! You shall see these gentlemen stand their ground and not court us.

GAL. What if they should ?

LA. What if they should !

MEG. Nay, let her alone. — What if they should ! Why, if they should, I say they [80 were never abroad. What foreigner would do so ? It writes them directly untravell'd.

GAL. Why, what if they be ?

LA. What if they be !

MEG. Good madam, let her go on. — What if they be ! Why, if they be, I will justify, they cannot maintain discourse with a judicious lady, nor make a leg<sup>8</sup> nor say " Excuse me." [90

GAL. Ha, ha, ha !

MEG. Do you laugh, madam ?

DION. Your desires upon you, ladies !

MEG. Then you must sit beside us.

DION. I shall sit near you then, lady.

MEG. Near me, perhaps ; but there's a lady endures no stranger ; and to me you appear a very strange fellow.

LA. Methinks he's not so strange ;<sup>9</sup> he would quickly be acquainted.

THRA. Peace, the King !

100

Enter KING, PHARAMOND, ARETHUSA, and Train.

KING. To give a stronger testimony of love Than sickly promises (which commonly In princes find both birth and burial

In one breath) we have drawn you, worthy sir,

To make your fair endearments to our daughter,

And worthy services known to our subjects, Now lov'd and wondered at ; next, our intent To plant you deeply our immediate heir

Both to our blood<sup>10</sup> and kingdoms. For<sup>11</sup> this lady,

(The best part of your life, as you confirm me,

110

And I believe,) though her few years and sex Yet teach her nothing but her fears and

blushes,

Desires without desire, discourse<sup>12</sup> and knowledge

Only of what herself is to herself,

Make her feel moderate health ; and when she sleeps,

In making no ill day, knows no ill dreams.

Think not, dear sir, these undivided parts,

That must mold up a virgin, are put on

To show her so, as borrowed ornaments

To [speak]<sup>13</sup> her perfect love to you, or add [120

An artificial shadow to her nature —

No, sir ; I boldly dare proclaim her yet

No woman.<sup>14</sup> But woo her still, and think her modesty

A sweeter mistress than the offer'd language Of any dame, were she a queen, whose eye

Speaks common loves and comforts to her servants.<sup>15</sup>

Last, noble son, for so I now must call you,

What I have done thus public is not only

To add [a]<sup>16</sup> comfort in particular

To you or me, but all ; and to confirm [130

The nobles and the gentry of these kingdoms

<sup>12</sup> Reason.

<sup>8</sup> Bow.

By oath to your succession, which shall be Within this month at most.

THRA. [aside] This will be hardly done.

CLE. [aside] It must be ill done, if it be done.

DION. [aside] When 't is at best, 't will be but half done, whilst

So brave a gentleman is wrong'd and flung off.

THRA. [aside] I fear.

CLE. [aside] Who does not?

DION. [aside] I fear not for myself, and yet
I fear too. 140

Well, we shall see, we shall see. No more.

PHA. Kissing your white hand, mistress, I take leave

To thank your royal father; and thus far
To be my own free trumpet. Understand, Great King, and these your subjects, mine that must be,

(For so deserving you have spoke me, sir,

And so deserving I dare speak myself,)

To what a person, of what eminence,

Ripe expectation, of what faculties,

Manners and virtues, you would wed your kingdoms; 150

You in me have your wishes. Oh, this country!

By more than all the gods, I hold it happy;

Happy in their dear memories that have been

Kings great and good; happy in yours that is;

And from you, as a chronicle to keep

Your noble name from eating age, do I

Open <sup>17</sup> myself most happy. Gentlemen,

Believe me in a word, a prince's word,

There shall be nothing to make up a kingdom

Mighty and flourishing, defenced, fear'd, [160

Equal to be commanded and obeyed,

But through the travails of my life I'll find
it,

And tie it to this country. By all the gods,

My reign shall be so easy to the subject

That every man shall be his prince himself,

And his own law — yet I his prince and law.

And dearest lady, to your dearest self,

Dear in the choice of him whose name and lustre

Must make you more and mightier, let me say,

You are the blessed'st living; for, sweet Princess, 170

You shall enjoy a man of men to be

Your servant; you shall make him yours, for whom

Great queens must die.

THRA. [aside] Miraculous!

CLE. [aside] This speech calls him Spaniard, being nothing but a large inventory of his own commendations.

DION. [aside] I wonder what's his price;
for certainly

He'll sell himself, he has so prais'd his shape.

Enter PHILASTER.

But here comes one more worthy those large speeches. 180

Than the large speaker of them.

Let me be swallowed quick, <sup>18</sup> if I can find,

In all the anatomy of yon man's virtues,
One sinew sound enough to promise for
him

He shall be constable. By this sun,
He'll ne'er make king, unless it be of trifles,
In my poor judgment.

PHI. Right noble sir, as low as my obedi-
ence,

And with a heart as loyal as my knee,
I beg your favor.

KING. Rise; you have it, sir.

DION. [aside] Mark but the King, how pale he looks! He fears! 191

Oh, this same whoreson conscience, how it jades us!

KING. Speak your intents, sir.

PHI. Shall I speak 'em freely?
Be still my royal sovereign.

KING. As a subject,
We give you freedom.

DION. [aside] Now it heats.

PHI. Then thus I turn
My language to you, Prince, you foreign
man!

Ne'er stare nor put on wonder, for you must Endure me, and you shall. This earth you tread upon

(A dowry, as you hope, with this fair princess),
By my dead father (oh, I had a father, 200

Whose memory I bow to!) was not left <sup>19</sup>

To your inheritance, and I up and living —

Having myself about me and my sword,

The souls of all my name and memories,
These arms and some few friends beside the
gods —

To part so calmly with it, and sit still

And say, "I might have been." I tell thee,
Pharamond,

When thou art king, look I be dead and rotten,

And my name ashes, as I;<sup>20</sup> for, hear me, Pharamond!

This very ground thou goest on, this fat earth,
My father's friends made fertile with their faiths,<sup>21</sup> 211

Before that day of shame shall gape and swallow

Thee and thy nation, like a hungry grave,
Into her hidden bowels. Prince, it shall;
By the just gods, it shall!

PHA. He's mad; beyond cure, mad.

DION. [aside] Here is a fellow has some fire
in 's veins:

The outlandish<sup>22</sup> prince looks like a tooth-drawer.<sup>23</sup>

PHI. Sir Prince of popinjays,<sup>24</sup> I'll make it
well

Appear to you I am not mad.

KING. You displease us;
You are too bold.

No, sir, I am too tame, [220
Too much a turtle,<sup>25</sup> a thing born without passion,

A faint shadow, that every drunken cloud
Sails over, and makes nothing.

KING. I do not fancy this.
Call our physicians; sure, he's somewhat tainted.<sup>26</sup>

THRA. [aside] I do not think 't will prove so.

DION. [aside] H'as given him a general purge already,

For all the right he has; and now he means
To let him blood. Be constant, gentlemen;
By Heaven, I'll run his hazard,

Although I run my name out of the kingdom!

CLE. [aside] Peace, we are all one soul. [231

PHA. What you have seen in me to stir offence

I cannot find, unless it be this lady,
Offer'd into mine arms with the succession;
Which I must keep, though it hath pleas'd your fury

To mutiny within you, without disputing
Your genealogies, or taking knowledge Whose branch you are. The King will leave it me,

And I dare make it mine. You have your answer.

<sup>20</sup> Q<sub>4</sub> et seq. omit as I; but the line is not an Alexandrine, the last two syllables of "Pharamond" being lightly pronounced. Cf. l. 207.

PHI. If thou wert sole inheritor to him [240
That made the world his,<sup>27</sup> and couldst see no
sun

Shine upon anything but thine; were Pharamond

As truly valiant as I feel him cold,
And ring'd amongst the choicest of his friends (Such as would blush to talk such serious follies,

Or back such [bellied]<sup>28</sup> commendations),
And from this presence, spite of [all] these bugs,<sup>29</sup>

You should hear further from me.

KING. Sir, you wrong the Prince; I gave you not this freedom

To brave our best friends. You deserve our frown. 250

Go to; be better temper'd.

PHI. It must be, sir, when I am nobler us'd.

GAL. [aside] Ladies,

This would have been a pattern of succession,<sup>30</sup>
Had he ne'er met this mischief. By my life,
He is the worthiest the true name of man
This day within my knowledge.

MEG. [aside to GALATEA] I cannot tell what you may call your knowledge;

But the other is the man set in mine eye.

Oh, 't is a prince of wax!<sup>31</sup>

GAL. [aside] A dog it is. 260

KING. Philaster, tell me

The injuries you aim at<sup>32</sup> in your riddles.

PHI. If you had my eyes, sir, and sufferance,<sup>33</sup>

My griefs upon you, and my broken fortunes,
My wants great, and now [nought but]<sup>34</sup>
hopes and fears,

My wrongs would make ill riddles to be laugh'd
at.

Dare you be still my king and right me?<sup>35</sup>

KING. Give me your wrongs in private.

PHI. Take them,
And ease me of a load would bow strong Atlas.

They whisper.

CLE. He dares not stand the shock. 270

DION. I cannot blame him; there's danger in 't. Every man in this age has not a KING. Go to;

Be more yourself, as you respect our favor;
You'll stir us else. Sir, I must have you know That y' are and shall be, at our pleasure, what fashion we Will put upon you. Smooth your brow, or by the gods —

PHI. I am dead, sir; y' are my fate. It was not I
Said I was wrong'd; I carry all about me
My weak stars lead me to, all my weak fortunes.

Who dares in all this presence speak, (that is But man of flesh, and may be mortal,) tell me
I do not most entirely love this prince, 291
And honor his full virtues!

KING. Sure, he's possess'd.

PHI. Yes, with my father's spirit. It's here, O King,
A dangerous spirit! Now he tells me, King,
I was a king's heir, bids me be a king,
And whispers to me these are all my subjects.
'T is strange he will not let me sleep, but dives
Into my fancy, and there gives me shapes
That kneel and do me service, cry me king.
But I'll suppress him; he's a factious spirit,
And will undo me. — [To PHARAMOND] Noble
sir, your hand; 301
I am your servant.

KING. Away! I do not like this;
I'll make you tamer, or I'll dispossess you
Both of <sup>41</sup> life and spirit. For this time
I pardon your wild speech, without so much
As your imprisonment.

Exeunt KING, PHARAMOND, ARE-THUSA, [and Train].

DION. [aside] I thank you, sir; you dare not for the people.

GAL. Ladies, what think you now of this brave fellow?

MEG. A pretty talking fellow, hot at hand.
But eye yon stranger.<sup>42</sup> Is he not a fine 310 complete gentleman? Oh, these strangers, I do affect <sup>43</sup> them strangely! They do the rarest home-things,<sup>44</sup> and please the fullest!

As I live, I could love all the nation over and over for his sake.

GAL. Gods comfort your poor headpiece, lady! 't is a weak one, and had need of a nightcap. [Exeunt] <sup>45</sup> Ladies.

DION. See, how his fancy labors! Has he
not Spoke home and bravely? What a dangerous train 320

Did he give fire to! How he shook the King,
Made his soul melt within him, and his blood
Run into whey! It stood upon his brow
Like a cold winter dew.

PHI. Gentlemen,
You have no suit to me? I am no minion.<sup>46</sup>
You stand, methinks, like men that would be courtiers,

If [I] <sup>47</sup> could well be flatter'd at a price,
Not to undo <sup>48</sup> your children. Y' are all
honest;

Go, get you home again, and make your country

A virtuous court, to which your great ones
may, 330

In their diseased age, retire and live recluse.

CLE. How do you, worthy sir?

PHI. Well, very well;
And so well that, if the King please, I find
I may live many years.

DION. The King must please,
Whilst we know what you are and who you are,
Your wrongs and injuries.<sup>49</sup> Shrink not,
worthy sir,

But add your father to you; in whose name
We'll waken all the gods, and conjure up
The rods of vengeance, the abused <sup>50</sup> people,
Who, like to raging torrents, shall swell
high, 340

And so begirt the dens of these male-dragons,<sup>51</sup>
That, through the strongest safety, they shall beg

For mercy at your sword's point.

PHI. My Lord Dion, you had
A virtuous gentlewoman call'd you father;
Is she yet alive?

DION. Most honor'd sir, she is;
And, for the penance but of an idle dream,
Has undertook a tedious pilgrimage. 350

Enter a Lady.

PHI. Is it to me, or any of these gentlemen,
you come?

LADY. To you, brave lord; the Princess would entreat
Your present company.

PHI. The Princess send for me! Y' are mistaken.

LADY. If you be call'd Philaster, 't is to you.

PHI. [Kiss her fair hand, and say I will attend her. [Exit Lady.]

DION. Do you know what you do?

PHI. Yes; go to see a woman.

CLE. But do you weigh the danger you are
in?

PHI. Danger in a sweet face? 360
By Jupiter, I must not fear a woman!

THRA. But are you sure it was the Princess sent?

It may be some foul train <sup>52</sup> to catch your life.

PHI. I do not think it, gentlemen; she's noble.

Her eye may shoot me dead, or those true red
And white friends in her face <sup>53</sup> may steal my soul out;

There's all the danger in 't. But, be what may,

Her single name <sup>54</sup> hath arm'd me.

Exit PHILASTER.

DION. Go on,
And be as truly happy as th' art fearless! —
Come, gentlemen, let's make our friends acquainted, 370

Lest the King prove false.

[Exeunt] Gentlemen.

[SCENE II] <sup>55</sup>

Enter ARETHUSA and a Lady.

ARE. Comes he not?

LADY. Madam?

ARE. Will Philaster come?

LADY. Dear madam, you were wont to credit me

At first.

ARE. But didst thou tell me so?
I am forgetful, and my woman's strength
Is so o'ercharg'd with dangers like to grow
About my marriage, that these under-things
Dare not abide in such a troubled sea.
How look'd he when he told thee he would come?

LADY. Why, well.

ARE. And not a little fearful?

LADY. Fear, madam! Sure, he knows not what it is. 10

ARE. You all are of his faction; the whole
court

Is bold in praise of him; whilst I
May live neglected, and do noble things
As fools in strife throw gold into the sea,
Drown'd in the doing. But, I know he fears.

LADY. Fear, madam! Methought his looks hid more
Of love than fear.

ARE. Of love! to whom? to you?
Did you deliver those plain words I sent
With such a winning gesture and quick look
That you have caught him?

LADY. Madam, I mean to you. [20

ARE. Of love to me! Alas, thy ignorance
Lets thee not see the crosses of our births!
Nature, that loves not to be questioned
Why she did this or that, but has her ends,
And knows she does well, never gave the world
Two things so opposite, so contrary
As he and I am; if a bowl of blood Drawn from this arm of mine would poison
thee,

A draught of his would cure thee. Of love to
me!

LADY. Madam, I think I hear him.

ARE. Bring him in. [Exit Lady.] 30
You gods, that would not have your dooms
withstood,

Whose holy wisdoms at this time it is
To make the passions of a feeble maid
The way unto your justice, I obey.

[Re-enter [Lady with] PHILASTER.]

LADY. Here is my Lord Philaster.

ARE. Oh, it is well.
[Exit Lady.]

PHI. Madam, your messenger
Made me believe you wish'd to speak with me.

ARE. 'T is true, Philaster; but the words are such

<sup>53</sup> Q<sub>1</sub> cheeks.

<sup>55</sup> Arethusa's apartment.

I have to say, and do so ill beseem
 The mouth of woman, that I wish them said,
 And yet am loth to speak them. Have you
     known 41
 That I have aught detracted from your worth?
 Have I in person wrong'd you, or have set
 My baser instruments to throw disgrace
 Upon your virtues?

PHI. Never, madam, you.

ARE. Why, then, should you, in such a public place,
 Injure a princess, and a scandal lay
 Upon my fortunes, fam'd to be so great,
 Calling a great part of my dowry in question?

PHI. Madam, this truth which I shall speak will be 50

Foolish; but, for your fair and virtuous self,
 I could afford myself to have no right
 To anything you wish'd.

ARE. Philaster, know
 I must enjoy these kingdoms.

PHI. Madam, both?

ARE. Both, or I die: by Heaven, I die,
 Philaster,

If I not calmly may enjoy them both.

PHI. I would do much to save that noble
     life;

Yet would be loth to have posterity
 Find in our stories that Philaster gave His right unto a sceptre and a crown 60
 To save a lady's longing.

ARE. Nay, then, hear:
 I must and will have them, and more——

PHI. What more?

ARE. Or lose that little life the gods prepared

To trouble this poor piece of earth withal.

PHI. Madam, what more?

ARE. Turn, then, away thy face.

PHI. No.

ARE. Do.

PHI. I can endure it. Turn away my face!
 I never yet saw enemy that look'd
 So dreadfully, but that I thought myself 70
 As great a basilisk <sup>56</sup> as he; or spake
 So horrible, but that I thought my tongue Bore thunder underneath, as much as his;
 Nor beast that I could turn from. Shall I
     then

Begin to fear sweet sounds? A lady's voice, Whom I do love? Say you would have my
     life;

Why, I will give it you; for it is of me
 A thing so loath'd, and unto you that ask

<sup>56</sup> The fabulous serpent, whose look was fatal.

Of so poor use, that I shall make no price:
 If you entreat, I will unmov'dly hear. 80

ARE. Yet, for my sake, a little bend thy looks.

PHI. I do.

ARE. Then know, I must have them and
     thee.

PHI. And me?

ARE. Thy love; without which, all the land

Discovered yet will serve me for no use
 But to be buried in.

PHI. Is't possible?

ARE. With it, it were too little to bestow
 On thee. Now, though thy breath do strike me dead

(Which, know, it may), I have unripp'd my breast.

PHI. Madam, you are too full of noble
     thoughts

To lay a train for this contemned life, 90
 Which you may have for asking. To suspect
 Were base, where I deserve no ill. Love you!
 By all my hopes, I do, above my life!

But how this passion should proceed from you
 So violently, would amaze a man
 That would be jealous.<sup>57</sup>

ARE. Another soul into my body shot
 Could not have fill'd me with more strength and spirit

Than this thy breath. But spend not hasty
     time

In seeking how I came thus: 't is the gods, [100
 The gods, that make me so; and sure our love
 Will be the nobler and the better blest,
 In that the secret justice of the gods
 Is mingled with it. Let us leave,<sup>58</sup> and kiss;
 Lest some unwelcome guest should fall betwixt
     us,

And we should part without it.

PHI. 'T will be ill
 I should abide here long.

ARE. 'T is true; and worse
 You should come often. How shall we devise
 To hold intelligence, that our true loves,
 On any new occasion, may agree 110
 What path is best to tread?

PHI. I have a boy,
 Sent by the gods, I hope, to this intent,
 Not yet seen in the court. Hunting the buck,
 I found him sitting by a fountain's side,
 Of which he borrow'd some to quench his thirst,

<sup>58</sup> I.e., stop talking.

And paid the nymph again as much in tears.
 A garland lay him by, made by himself
 Of many several flowers bred in the [vale],<sup>59</sup>
 Stuck in that mystic order that the rareness
 Delighted me; but ever when he turn'd [120
 His tender eyes upon 'em, he would weep,
 As if he meant to make 'em grow again.
 Seeing such pretty, helpless innocence
 Dwell in his face, I ask'd him all his story.
 He told me that his parents gentle died,
 Leaving him to the mercy of the fields,
 Which gave him roots; and of the crystal springs,
 Which did not stop their courses; and the sun,
 Which still,<sup>60</sup> he thank'd him, yielded him his
 light.
 Then took he up his garland, and did show [130
 What every flower, as country people hold,
 Did signify, and how all, ordered thus,
 Express'd his grief; and, to my thoughts, did read
 The prettiest lecture of his country art
 That could be wish'd: so that methought I could
 Have studied it. I gladly entertain'd<sup>61</sup>
 Him, who was glad to follow; and have got
 The trustiest, loving'st, and the gentlest boy
 That ever master kept. Him will I send
 To wait on you, and bear our hidden love. [140
 ARE. 'Tis well; no more.

Re-enter Lady.

LADY. Madam, the Prince is come to do his service.
 ARE. What will you do, Philaster, with yourself?
 PHI. Why, that which all the gods have appointed out for me.<sup>62</sup>
 ARE. Dear, hide thyself. —
 Bring in the Prince. [Exit Lady.]
 PHI. Hide me from Pharamond!<sup>63</sup>
 When thunder speaks, which is the voice of God,
 Though I do reverence, yet I hide me not;
 And shall a stranger prince have leave to brag
 Unto a foreign nation that he made 150
 Philaster hide himself?

ARE. He cannot know it.

<sup>62</sup> An "apparent" Alexandrine, the last two syllables being unstressed, and "have" being slurred.

<sup>63</sup> These four words form a metrical line with Arethusa's words to Philaster; her order to the Lady is an extra-metrical insertion, as Daniel notes.

PHI. Though it should sleep for ever to the
 world,
 It is a simple sin to hide myself,
 Which will for ever on my conscience lie.
 ARE. Then, good Philaster, give him scope and way
 In what he says; for he is apt to speak
 What you are loth to hear. For my sake, do.
 PHI. I will.

Enter PHARAMOND.

PHA. My princely mistress, as true lovers ought,
 I come to kiss these fair hands, and to show,
 In outward ceremonies, the dear love 161
 Writ in my heart.
 PHI. If I shall have an answer no directlier,
 I am gone.
 PHA. To what would he have answer?
 ARE. To his claim unto the kingdom.
 PHA. Sirrah, I forbare you before the
 King —
 PHI. Good sir, do so still; I would not talk with you.
 PHA. But now the time is fitter. Do but offer
 To make mention of right to any kingdom, [170
 Though it be scarce habitable —
 PHI. Good sir, let me go.
 PHA. And by the gods —
 PHI. Peace, Pharamond! if thou —
 ARE. Leave us, Philaster.
 PHI. I have done. [Going.]
 PHA. You are gone! by Heaven I'll fetch you back.
 PHI. You shall not need. [Returning.]
 PHA. What now?
 PHI. Know, Pharamond,
 I loathe to brawl with such a blast as thou,
 Who art nought but a valiant voice; but if Thou shalt provoke me further, men shall say
 Thou wert, and not lament it.
 PHA. Do you slight
 My greatness so, and in the chamber of 180
 The Princess?
 PHI. It is a place to which, I must confess,
 I owe a reverence; but were 't the church,
 Ay, at the altar, there's no place so safe,
 Where thou dar'st injure me, but I dare kill
 thee.
 And for<sup>64</sup> your greatness, know, sir, I can grasp

<sup>64</sup> As for.

You and your greatness thus, thus into nothing.

Give not a word, not a word back! Farewell.
Exit.

PHA. 'T is an odd fellow, madam; we must stop

His mouth with some office when we are married. 190

ARE. You were best make him your controller.

PHA. I think he would discharge it well.
But, madam,

I hope our hearts are knit; but yet so slow
The ceremonies of state are, that 't will be long Before our hands be so. If then you please,

Being agreed in heart, let us not wait
For dreaming form, but take a little stol'n
Delights, and so prevent <sup>65</sup> our joys to come.

ARE. If you dare speak such thoughts,
I must withdraw, in honor. 200

Exit ARETHUSA.

PHA. The constitution of my body will never hold out till the wedding; I must seek elsewhere.<sup>66</sup> Exit PHARAMOND.

ACT II — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter PHILASTER and BELLARIO.

PHIL. And thou shalt find her honorable,
boy;

Full of regard unto thy tender youth,
For thine own modesty; and, for my sake,
Apter to give than thou wilt be to ask,
Ay, or deserve.

BEL. Sir, you did take me up
When I was nothing; and only yet am something

By being yours. You trusted me unknown;
And that which you were apt to conster<sup>2</sup>

A simple innocence in me, perhaps
Might have been craft, the cunning of a boy 10
Hard'n'd in lies and theft; yet ventur'd you
To part my miseries and me; for which,
I never can expect to serve a lady
That bears more honor in her breast than you.

PHI. But, boy, it will prefer<sup>3</sup> thee. Thou art young,

<sup>65</sup> Anticipate.

<sup>66</sup> So arranged in old eds. Dyce suggests lines of verse ending "withdraw", "body", "elsewhere."

And bear'st a childish overflowing love
To them that clap thy cheeks and speak thee fair yet;

But when thy judgment comes to rule those passions,

Thou wilt remember best those careful friends
That plac'd thee in the noblest way of life. [20
She is a princess I prefer thee to.

BEL. In that small time that I have seen the world,

I never knew a man hasty to part
With a servant he thought trusty. I remember

My father would prefer the boys he kept
To greater men than he; but did it not Till they were grown too saucy for himself.

PHI. Why, gentle boy, I find no fault at all
In thy behavior.

BEL. Sir, if I have made
A fault of ignorance, instruct my youth: 30
I shall be willing, if not apt, to learn;
Age and experience will adorn my mind
With larger knowledge; and if I have done
A wilful fault, think me not past all hope
For once. What master holds so strict a hand
Over his boy, that he will part with him
Without one warning? Let me be corrected
To break my stubbornness, if it be so,
Rather than turn me off; and I shall mend. [39

PHI. Thy love doth plead so prettily to stay,
That, trust me, I could weep to part with thee.
Alas, I do not turn thee off! Thou knowest
It is my business that doth call thee hence;
And when thou art with her, thou dwell'st
with me:

Think so, and 't is so; and, when time is full,
That thou hast well discharged this heavy
trust,

Laid on so weak a one, I will again
With joy receive thee; as I live, I will!
Nay, weep not, gentle boy. 'T is more than
time

Thou didst attend the Princess.

BEL. I am gone. [50
But since I am to part with you, my Lord,
And none knows whether I shall live to do
More service for you, take this little prayer:
Heaven bless your loves, your fights, all your designs!

May sick men, if they have your wish, be well;
And Heaven hate those you curse, though I be one! Exit.

PHI. The love of boys unto their lords is strange:

I have read wonders of it; yet this boy

For my sake (if a man may judge by looks And speech) would out-do story. I may see
A day to pay him for his loyalty. 61

Exit PHILASTER.

[SCENE II] <sup>4</sup>

Enter PHARAMOND.

PHA. Why should these ladies stay so long?
They must come this way. I know the Queen employs 'em not; for the reverend mother <sup>5</sup> sent me word, they would all be for the garden.
If they should all prove honest <sup>6</sup> now, I were in a fair taking; <sup>7</sup> I was never so long without sport in my life, and, in my conscience, 't is not my fault. Oh, for our country <sup>8</sup> ladies!

Enter GALATEA.

Here's one bolted; I'll hound at her. — [Madam!] <sup>9</sup>

GAL. Your Grace! 10

PHA. Shall I not be a trouble?

GAL. [going] Not to me, sir.

PHA. Nay, nay, you are too quick. By this sweet hand —

GAL. You'll be forsworn, sir; 't is but an old glove.

If you will talk at distance, I am for you.
But, good Prince, be not bawdy, nor do not brag;

These two I bar;
And then, I think, I shall have sense enough
To answer all the weighty apothegms
Your royal blood shall manage. <sup>10</sup>

PHA. Dear lady, can you love?

GAL. Dear Prince! how dear? I ne'er [20 cost you a coach yet, nor put you to the dear repentance of a banquet. Here's no scarlet, sir, to blush the sin out it was given for. This wire <sup>11</sup> mine own hair covers; and this face has been so far from being dear to any, that it ne'er cost penny painting; and, for the rest of my poor wardrobe, such as you see, it leaves no hand <sup>12</sup> behind it, to make the jealous mercer's wife curse our good doings.

<sup>4</sup> Another room in the palace.

<sup>5</sup> The "mother of the maids", who had charge of the ladies in waiting.

<sup>9</sup> So Q1.

<sup>10</sup> Old eds. print this speech as prose; there are numerous similar cases in this play, and it is often impossible to be certain whether the authors intended verse or prose.

<sup>11</sup> It was much used to support the headdress and the hair.

<sup>12</sup> I.e., no acknowledgment of indebtedness.
(Daniel.)

PHA. You mistake me, lady. 30

GAL. Lord, I do so; would you or I could help it!

[PHA. Y'are very dangerous bitter, like a potion.

GAL. No, sir, I do not mean to purge you,
though

I mean to purge a little time on you.] <sup>13</sup>

PHA. Do ladies of this country use to give
No more respect to men of my full being?

GAL. Full being! I understand you not, unless your Grace means growing to fatness;
and then your only remedy, upon my knowledge, Prince, is, in a morning, a cup of neat [40 white wine brew'd with carduus,<sup>14</sup> then fast till supper; about eight you may eat; use exercise, and keep a sparrow-hawk; you can shoot in a tiller; <sup>15</sup> but, of all, your Grace must fly phlebotomy,<sup>16</sup> fresh pork, conger,<sup>17</sup> and clarified whey; they are all dullers of the vital spirits.

PHA. Lady, you talk of nothing all this while.

GAL. 'T is very true, sir: I talk of you. [50

PHA. [aside] This is a crafty wench; I like her wit well; 't will be rare to stir up a leaden appetite. She's a Danaë, and must be courted in a shower of gold. — Madam, look here; all these, and more than —

GAL. What have you there, my Lord?
Gold! now, as I live, 't is fair gold! You would have silver for it, to play <sup>18</sup> with the pages. You could not have taken me in a worse time; but, if you have present use, [60 my Lord, I'll send my man with silver and keep your gold for you. <sup>19</sup>

PHA. Lady, lady!

GAL. She's coming, sir, behind, will take white money. <sup>20</sup> —

[aside] Yet for all this I'll match ye.

Exit GALATEA behind the hangings.

PHA. If there be but two such more in this kingdom, and near the court, we may even hang up our harps. Ten such camphire <sup>21</sup> constitutions as this will call the golden age again in question, and teach the old way for [70

<sup>14</sup> Carduus benedictus, the Blessed Thistle, a cordial.

<sup>20</sup> Silver; i.e., she won't set a high price on herself.

<sup>21</sup> Camphor; it was "anciently classed among those articles of the materia medica which were cold in an eminent degree." (Weber.)

every ill-fac'd husband to get his own children ;
and what a mischief that would breed, let all consider !

Enter MEGRA.

Here's another : if she be of the same last, the Devil shall pluck her on.<sup>22</sup> — Many fair mornings, lady !

MEG. As many mornings bring as many days,

Fair, sweet, and hopeful to your Grace !

PHA. [aside] She gives good words yet ; sure this wench is free. — <sup>23</sup>

If your more serious business do not call
you, 80

Let me hold quarter <sup>24</sup> with you ; we'll [talk] <sup>25</sup>
An hour out quickly.

MEG. What would your Grace talk of ?

PHA. Of some such pretty subject as your-
self :

I'll go no further than your eye, or lip ;

There's theme enough for one man for an age.

MEG. Sir, they stand right, and my lips are yet even,

Smooth, young enough, ripe enough, and red
enough,

Or my glass wrongs me.

PHA. Oh, they are two twinn'd cherries dy'd in blushes

Which those fair suns above with their bright beams 90

Reflect upon and ripen. Sweetest beauty,

Bow down those branches, that the longing
taste

Of the faint looker-on may meet those bless-
ings,

And taste and live. [They kiss.] <sup>26</sup>

MEG. [aside] Oh, delicate sweet prince !
She that hath snow enough about her heart
To take the wanton spring of ten such lines off,
May be a nun without probation. — Sir,
You have in such neat poetry gathered a kiss,
That if I had but five lines of that number,
Such pretty begging blanks,<sup>27</sup> I should commend 100

Your forehead or your cheeks, and kiss you
too.

PHA. Do it in prose ; you cannot miss it,
madam.

MEG. I shall, I shall.

PHA. By my life, [but] <sup>28</sup> you shall not ;
I'll prompt you first. [Kisses her.] Can you do it now ?

MEG. Methinks 't is easy, now [you] <sup>28</sup> ha' done 't before [me] ; <sup>29</sup>

But yet I should stick <sup>30</sup> at it. [Kisses him.]

PHA. Stick <sup>31</sup> till to-morrow ;
I'll ne'er part you, sweetest. But we lose
time.

Can you love me ?

MEG. Love you, my Lord ! How would you have me love you ?

PHA. I'll teach you in a short sentence, [110
'cause I will not load your memory ; this is all :
love me, and lie with me.

MEG. Was it " lie with you " that you said ?
'T is impossible.

PHA. Not to a willing mind, that will endeavor. If I do not teach you to do it as easily in one night as you'll go to bed, I'll lose my royal blood for 't.

MEG. Why, Prince, you have a lady of your own

That yet wants teaching. 120

PHA. I'll sooner teach a mare the old measures <sup>32</sup> than teach her anything belonging to the function. She's afraid to lie with herself if she have but any masculine imaginations about her. I know, when we are married, I must ravish her.

MEG. By mine honor, that's a foul fault,
indeed ;

But time and your good help will wear it out,
sir.

PHA. And for any other I see, excepting your dear self, dearest lady, I had rather [130 be Sir Tim the schoolmaster, and leap a dairy-maid, madam.

MEG. Has your Grace seen the court-star,
Galatea ?

PHA. Out upon her ! She's as cold of her favor <sup>33</sup> as an apoplex ; she sail'd by but now.

MEG. And how do you hold her wit, sir ?

PHA. I hold her wit ? The strength of all the guard cannot hold it, if they were tied to it ; she would blow 'em out of the kingdom.
They talk of Jupiter ; he's but a squib- [140 cracker to her ; look well about you, and you may find a tongue-bolt.<sup>34</sup> But speak, sweet lady, shall I be freely welcome ?

<sup>34</sup> I.e., an arrow shot from her tongue.

MEG. Whither?

PHA. To your bed. If you mistrust my faith, you do me the unnobler wrong.

MEG. I dare not, Prince, I dare not.

PHA. Make your own conditions ; my purse shall seal 'em, and what you dare imagine you can want, I'll furnish you withal. Give [150 two hours to your thoughts every morning about it. Come I know you are bashful ; Speak in my ear, will you be mine? — Keep this, [Gives money.]<sup>35</sup> And with it, me : soon I will visit you.

MEG. My Lord, my chamber's most unsafe ; but when 't is night, I'll find some means to slip into your lodging ;

Till when —

PHA. Till when, this and my heart go with thee ! Exeunt [several ways].

Re-enter GALATEA from behind the hangings.

GAL. Oh, thou pernicious petticoat prince ! are these your virtues ? Well, if I do not lay a train to blow your sport up, I am no [160 woman ; and, Lady Towsabel,<sup>36</sup> I'll fit you for't. Exit GALATEA.

[SCENE III]<sup>37</sup>

Enter ARETHUSA and a Lady.

ARE. Where's the boy ?

LADY. Within, madam.

ARE. Gave you him gold to buy him clothes ?

LADY. I did.

ARE. And has he done't ?

LADY. Yes, madam.

ARE. 'T is a pretty sad-talking boy, is it not ?

Asked you his name ?

LADY. No, madam.

Enter GALATEA.

ARE. Oh, you are welcome. What good news ? 10

GAL. As good as anyone can tell your Grace That says she has done that you would have wish'd.

ARE. Hast thou discovered ?

GAL. I have strain'd a point of modesty for you.

ARE. I prithee, how ?

GAL. In list'ning after bawdry. I see, let a lady live never so modestly, she shall be sure to find a lawful time to hearken after bawdry. Your prince, brave Pharamond, was so hot on't ! 20

ARE. With whom ?

GAL. Why, with the lady I suspected. I can tell the time and place.

ARE. Oh, when, and where ?

GAL. To-night, his lodging.

ARE. Run thyself into the presence ; mingle there again

With other ladies ; leave the rest to me. —

[Exit GALATEA.]

If destiny (to whom we dare not say,

" Why [didst thou] <sup>38</sup> this ? ") have not decreed it so,

In lasting leaves whose smallest characters [30 Was never alter'd, yet <sup>39</sup> this match shall break. —

Where's the boy ?

LADY. Here, madam.

Enter BELLARIO.

ARE. Sir, you are sad to change your service, is't not so ?

BEL. Madam, I have not chang'd ; I wait on you,

To do him service.

ARE. Thou disclaim'st in me.<sup>40</sup>

Tell me thy name.

BEL. Bellario.

ARE. Thou canst sing and play ?

BEL. If grief will give me leave, madam, I can. 40

ARE. Alas, what kind of grief can thy years know ?

Hadst thou a curst <sup>41</sup> master when thou went'st to school ?

Thou art not capable of other grief ;

Thy brows and cheeks are smooth as waters be When no breath troubles them. Believe me, boy,

Care seeks out wrinkled brows and hollow eyes, And builds himself caves, to abide in them.

Come, sir, tell me truly, doth your lord love me ?

BEL. Love, madam ! I know not what it is.

ARE. Canst thou know grief, and never yet knewest love ? 50

Thou art deceived, boy. Does he speak of me
As if he wish'd me well?

BEL. If it be love
To forget all respect to <sup>42</sup> his own friends
With <sup>43</sup> thinking of your face ; if it be love
To sit cross-arm'd and think <sup>44</sup> away the day,
Mingled with starts, crying your name as loud
And hastily as men i' the streets do fire ;
If it be love to weep himself away
When he but hears of any lady dead Or kill'd, because it might have been your chance ; 60

If, when he goes to rest (which will not be),
'Twixt every prayer he says, to name you once,
As others drop a bead, be to be in love,
Then, madam, I dare swear he loves you.

ARE. Oh y'are a cunning boy, and taught to lie
For your lord's credit ! But thou knowest a lie
That bears this sound is welcomer to me
Than any truth that says he loves me not.
Lead the way, boy. — [To the Lady] Do you attend me too. — 69
'T is thy lord's business hastes me thus.
Away ! Exeunt.

[SCENE IV] <sup>45</sup>

Enter DION, CLEREMONT, THRASILINE, MEGRA, [and] GALATEA.

DION. Come, ladies, shall we talk a round ?
As men
Do walk a mile, women should talk an hour
After supper : 't is their exercise.

GAL. 'T is late.

MEG. 'T is all
My eyes will do to lead me to my bed.
GAL. [aside] I fear they are so heavy you'll scarce find
The way to your own lodging with 'em tonight.

Enter PHARAMOND.

THRA. The Prince !

PHA. Not abed, ladies ? Y' are good sitters-up. 10
What think you of a pleasant dream, to last Till morning ?

MEG. I should choose, my Lord, a pleasing wake before it.

<sup>42</sup> So Qq. 1-4; other old eds. of.

<sup>43</sup> So Qq. 1-4; other old eds. in.

<sup>45</sup> Another room or courtyard, from which stairs lead up to Pharamond's apartment.

Enter ARETHUSA and BELLARIO.

ARE. 'T is well, my lord ; y'are courting of these ladies. —

Is 't not late, gentlemen ?

CLE. Yes, madam.

ARE. Wait you there. Exit ARETHUSA.

MEG. [Aside] She's jealous, as I live. —
Look you, my Lord,

The Princess has a Hylas, an Adonis.

PHA. His form is angel-like. 20

MEG. Why this is he must, when you are wed,

Sit by your pillow, like young Apollo, with His hand and voice binding your thoughts in
sleep ;

The Princess does provide him for you and for herself.

PHA. I find no music in these boys.

MEG. Nor I ;
They can do little, and that small they do,
They have not wit to hide.

DION. Serves he the Princess ?

THRA. Yes.

DION. 'T is a sweet boy : how brave <sup>46</sup>
she keeps him !

PHA. Ladies all, good rest ; I mean to kill a buck

To-morrow morning ere y' have done your dreams. 30

MEG. All happiness attend your Grace ! —
[Exit PHARAMOND].

Gentlemen, good rest. —

Come, shall we to bed ?

GAL.

Yes. — All good night.

DION. May your dreams be true to you ! —

[Exeunt] GALATEA [and] MEGRA.

What shall we do, gallants ? 'T is late. The
King

Is up still : see, he comes, a guard along
With him.

Enter KING, ARETHUSA, and Guard.

KING. Look your intelligence be true.

ARE. Upon my life, it is ; and I do hope
Your Highness will not tie me to a man
That in the heat of wooing throws me off,
And takes another.

DION. What should this mean ? [40

KING. If it be true,
That lady had been better have embrac'd
Cureless diseases. Get you to your rest :
You shall be righted. —

Exeunt ARETHUSA [and] BELLARIO.

Gentlemen, draw near :

<sup>46</sup> Finely dressed.

We shall employ you. Is young Pharamond
Come to his lodging?

DION. I saw him enter there.

KING. Haste, some of you, and cunningly discover

If Megra be in her lodging. [Exit DION.]

CLE. Sir,

She parted hence but now, with other ladies.

KING. If she be there, we shall not need to
make 51

A vain discovery of our suspicion. —

[Aside] You gods, I see that who unrighteously Holds wealth or state from others shall be curs'd

In that which meaner men are bless'd withal :
Ages to come shall know no male of him
Left to inherit, and his name shall be Blotted from earth ; if he have any child,
It shall be crossly match'd ; the gods themselves

Shall sow wild strife betwixt her lord and her.
Yet, if it be your wills, forgive the sin 61
I have committed ; let it not fall

Upon this understanding <sup>47</sup> child of mine !

She has not broke your laws. But how can I Look to be heard of gods that must be just,
Praying upon the ground I hold by wrong?

Re-enter DION.

DION. Sir, I have asked, and her women swear she is within ; but they, I think, are bawds. I told 'em I must speak with her ;
they laugh'd and said their lady lay speech- [70 less. I said my business was important ; they said their lady was about it. I grew hot, and cried my business was a matter that concern'd life and death ; they answered so was sleeping, at which their lady was. I urg'd again she had scarce time to be so since last I saw her ; they smil'd again, and seem'd to instruct me that sleeping was nothing but lying down and winking.<sup>48</sup> Answers more direct I could not get ; in short, sir, I think she is not there. [80

KING. 'T is then no time to dally. — You
o' th' guard,

Wait at the back door of the Prince's lodging,
And see that none pass thence, upon your lives. [Exeunt Guard.]

Knock, gentlemen ; knock loud ; louder yet. —
What, has their pleasure taken off their hear-
ing? —

I'll break your meditations. — Knock
again. —

<sup>47</sup> Standing under. Q<sub>1</sub> undeserving.

<sup>48</sup> Closing one's eyes.

Not yet? I do not think he sleeps, having his <sup>49</sup>

Larum by him. — Once more. — Pharamond !
Prince !

PHARAMOND [re-enters] above.

PHA. What saucy groom knocks at this dead of night?

Where be our waiters? <sup>50</sup> By my vexed soul,
He meets his death that meets me, for this
boldness. 91

KING. Prince, [prince,] <sup>51</sup> you wrong your thoughts : we are your friends ;

Come down.

PHA. The King !

KING. The same, sir. Come down :
We have cause of present counsel with you.

PHA. If your Grace please
To use me, I'll attend you to your chamber.

[Re-enter] PHARAMOND below.

KING. No, 't is too late, Prince ; I'll make bold with yours.

PHA. I have some private reasons to myself

Makes me unmannerly, and say you cannot. —

[They press to come in.] <sup>51</sup>

Nay, press not forward, gentlemen ; he must Come through my life that comes here. 101

KING. Sir, be resolv'd <sup>52</sup> I must and will come. — Enter.

PHA. I will not be dishonor'd.

He that enters, enters upon his death.

Sir, 't is a sign you make no stranger of me,
To bring these renegadoes <sup>53</sup> to my chamber
At these unseasoned hours.

KING. Why do you Chafe yourself so? You are not wrong'd nor shall be ;

Only, I'll search your lodging, for some cause
To ourself known. — Enter, I say.

PHA. I say, no. [110

[Re-enter] MEGRA above.

MEG. Let 'em enter, Prince, let 'em enter ;
I am up and ready ; <sup>54</sup> I know their business ;
'T is the poor breaking of a lady's honor
They hunt so hotly after ; let 'em enjoy it. —
You have your business, gentlemen : I lay
here.

<sup>49</sup> Q<sub>1</sub> such; Q<sub>2</sub>-F this. The reference is to Megra.

Oh, my Lord the King, this is not noble in you
To make public the weakness of a woman!

KING. Come down.

MEG. I dare, my Lord. Your whootings and your clamors,
Your private whispers and your broad floor-
ings, 120
Can no more vex my soul than this base carriage.<sup>55</sup>

But I have vengeance yet in store for some Shall, in the most contempt you can have of
me,

Be joy and nourishment.

KING. Will you come down?

MEG. Yes, to laugh at your worst; but I shall wring you,
If my skill fail me not. [Exit above.]

KING. Sir, I must dearly chide you for this looseness;
You have wrong'd a worthy lady; but, no
more. —

Conduct him to my lodging and to bed.

[Exeunt PHARAMOND and Attendants.]

CLE. [aside] Get him another wench, [130 and you bring him to bed indeed.

DION. [aside] 'Tis strange a man cannot ride a stage
Or two, to breathe<sup>56</sup> himself, without a warrant.

If this gear hold,<sup>57</sup> that lodgings be search'd
thus,

Pray God we may lie with our own wives in safety,

That they be not by some trick of state mistaken!

[Re-enter] MEGRA [below].

KING. Now, lady of honor, where's your honor now?

No man can fit your palate but the Prince.
Thou most ill-shrouded rottenness, thou piece
Made by a painter and a pothecary, 140
Thou troubled sea of lust, thou wilderness
Inhabited by wild thoughts, thou swoln cloud
Of infection, thou ripe mine of all diseases,
Thou all-sin, all-hell, and last, all-devils, tell
me,

Had you none to pull on with your courtesies
But he that must be mine, and wrong my daughter?

By all the gods, all these, and all the pages,
And all the court, shall hoot thee through the
court,

Fling rotten oranges, make ribald rhymes,
And sear thy name with candles upon
walls! 150

Do you laugh, Lady Venus?

MEG. Faith, sir, you must pardon me;
I cannot choose but laugh to see you merry.
If you do this, O King! nay, if you dare do it,
By all those gods you swore by, and as many
More of my own, I will have fellows, and such Fellows in it, as shall make noble mirth!
The Princess, your dear daughter, shall stand by me

On walls, and sung in ballads, anything. 159
Urge me no more; I know her and her haunts.
Her lays,<sup>58</sup> leaps, and outlays,<sup>59</sup> and will discover all;

Nay, will dishonor her. I know the boy
She keeps; a handsome boy, about eighteen;
Know what she does with him, where, and when.

Come, sir, you put me to a woman's madness,
The glory of a fury; and if I do not
Do it to the height —

KING. What boy is this she raves at?

MEG. Alas! good-minded prince, you know not these things!

I am loth to reveal 'em. Keep this fault,
As you would keep your health from the hot
air 170

Of the corrupted people, or, by Heaven,
I will not fall alone. What I have known
Shall be as public as a print; all tongues Shall speak it as they do the language they Are born in, as free and commonly; I'll set
it,

Like a prodigious<sup>60</sup> star, for all to gaze at;
And so high and glowing, that other kingdoms far and foreign

Shall read it there, nay, travel with it, till they find

No tongue to make it more, nor no more people;

And then behold the fall of your fair princess!

KING. Has she a boy? 181

CLE. So please your Grace, I have seen a boy wait on her,

A fair boy.

KING. Go, get you to your quarter;
For this time I'll study to forget you.

MEG. Do you study to forget me, and I'll study to forget you.

Exeunt KING, MEGRA, [and] Guard.

CLE. Why, here's a male spirit fit for Hercules. If ever there be Nine Worthies of women, this wench shall ride astride and be their captain. 189

DION. Sure, she has a garrison of devils in her tongue, she uttered such balls of wildfire. She has so nettled the King, that all the doctors in the country will scarce cure him. That boy was a strange-found-out antidote to cure her infections; that boy, that princess' boy; that brave, chaste, virtuous lady's boy; and a fair boy, a well-spoken boy! All these considered, can make nothing else — but there I leave you, gentlemen.

THRA. Nay, we'll go wander with you. [200
Exeunt.

ACT III — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter CLEREMONT, DION, [and] THRASILINE.

CLE. Nay, doubtless, 't is true.

DION. Ay; and 't is the gods That rais'd this punishment, to scourge the King

With his own issue.<sup>2</sup> Is it not a shame For us that should write noble in the land, For us that should be freemen, to behold A man that is the bravery<sup>3</sup> of his age, Philaster, press'd down from his royal right By this regardless king? and only look And see the sceptre ready to be cast Into the hands of that lascivious lady 10 That lives in lust with a smooth boy, now to be married

To yon strange prince, who, but that people please

To let him be a prince, is born a slave In that which should be his most noble part, His mind?

THRA. That man that would not stir with you

To aid Philaster, let the gods forget That such a creature walks upon the earth!

CLE. Philaster is too backward in 't himself.

The gentry do await it, and the people, Against their nature,<sup>4</sup> are all bent for him, [20 And like a field of standing corn, that's moved With a stiff gale, their heads bow all one way.

DION. The only cause that draws Philaster back

From this attempt is the fair Princess' love, Which he admires, and we can now confute.

THRA. Perhaps he'll not believe it.

DION. Why, gentlemen, 't is without question so.

CLE. Ay, 't is past speech she lives dishonestly.

But how shall we, if he be curious,<sup>5</sup> work Upon his faith? 30

THRA. We all are satisfied within ourselves.

DION. Since it is true, and tends to his own good,

I'll make this new report to be my knowledge;

I'll say I know it; nay, I'll swear I saw it.

CLE. It will be best.

THRA. 'T will move him.

Enter PHILASTER.

DION. Here he comes. Good morrow to your Honor; we have spent Some time in seeking you.

PHI. My worthy friends, You that can keep your memories to know Your friend in miseries, and cannot frown On men disgrac'd for virtue, a good day 40 Attend you all! What service may I do Worthy your acceptance?

DION. My good Lord, We come to urge that virtue, which we know Lives in your breast, forth. Rise, and make a head;<sup>6</sup>

The nobles and the people are all dull'd With this usurping king; and not a man, That ever heard the word, or known<sup>7</sup> such a thing

As virtue, but will second your attempts.

PHI. How honorable is this love in you To me that have deserv'd none! Know, my friends, 50

You that were born to shame your poor Philaster

With too much courtesy, I could afford To melt myself to thanks; but my designs Are not yet ripe. Suffice it that ere long I shall employ your loves; but yet the time Is short of what I would.

DION. The time is fuller, sir, than you expect;<sup>8</sup>

That which hereafter will not, perhaps, be reach'd

By violence, may now be caught. As for the King,

You know the people have long hated him ; [60
But now the Princess, whom they lov'd —

PHI. Why, what of her?

DION. Is loath'd as much as he.

PHI. By what strange means?

DION. She's known a whore.

PHI. Thou liest.

DION. My Lord —

PHI. Thou liest,

Offers to draw and is held.

And thou shalt feel it! I had thought thy mind

Had been of honor. Thus to rob a lady
Of her good name is an infectious sin

Not to be pardon'd. Be it false as hell,
'T will never be redeem'd, if it be sown 70

Amongst the people, fruitful to increase
All evil they shall hear. Let me alone

That I may cut off falsehood whilst it springs!
Set hills on hills betwixt me and the man

That utters this, and I will scale them
all,

And from the utmost top fall on his neck,
Like thunder from a cloud.

DION. This is most strange ;
Sure, he does love her.

PHI. I do love fair truth.
She 's my mistress, and who injures her Draws vengeance from me. Sirs, let go my arms. 80

THRA. Nay, good my Lord, be patient.

CLE. Sir, remember this is your honor'd
friend,

That comes to do his service, and will show you
Why he utter'd this.

PHI. I ask your pardon, sir ;
My zeal to truth made me unmannerly ;
Should I have heard dishonor spoke of you,
Behind your back, untruly, I had been
As much distemper'd and enrag'd as now.

DION. But this, my Lord, is truth.

PHI. Oh, say not so !
Good sir, forbear to say so ; 't is then
truth, 90

That womankind is false ; urge it no more ;
It is impossible. Why should you think

The Princess light?

DION. Why, she was taken at it.

PHI. 'T is false ! by Heaven, 't is false !
It cannot be !

* Truth.

Can it? Speak, gentlemen ; for God's love,
speak !

Is 't possible? Can women all be damn'd?

DION. Why, no, my Lord.

PHI. Why, then, it cannot be.

DION. And she was taken with her boy.

PHI. What boy?

DION. A page, a boy that serves her.

PHI. Oh, good gods !

A little boy?

DION. Ay ; know you him my Lord? [100

PHI. [aside] Hell and sin know him ! — Sir,
you are deceiv'd ;

I'll reason it a little coldly with you.

If she were lustful, would she take a boy,
That knows not yet desire? She would have
one

Should meet her thoughts and know the sin he acts,

Which is the great delight of wickedness.

You are abus'd,<sup>10</sup> and so is she, and I.

DION. How you, my Lord?

PHI. Why, all the world's abus'd
In an unjust report.

DION. Oh, noble sir, your virtues Cannot look into the subtle thoughts of
woman ! 110

In short, my Lord, I took them ; I myself.

PHI. Now, all the devils, thou didst ! Fly from my rage !

Would thou hadst ta'en devils engend'ring
plagues,

When thou did'st take them ! Hide thee from mine eyes !

Would thou hadst [taken]<sup>11</sup> thunder on thy
breast,

When thou didst take them ; or been stricken dumb

For ever ; that this foul deed might have slept

In silence !

THRA. Have you known him so illtemper'd?

CLE. Never before.

PHI. The winds that are let loose
From the four several corners of the earth, [120
And spread themselves all over sea and land, Kiss not a chaste one. What friend bears a sword

To run me thorough?

DION. Why, my Lord, are you
So mov'd at this?

PHI. When any fall from virtue,

<sup>11</sup> Q, tane.

I am distracted ; I have an interest in 't.

DION. But, good my Lord, recall yourself, and think

What's best to be done.

PHI. I thank you ; I will do it.
Please you to leave me ; I'll consider of it.

To-morrow I will find your lodging forth,
And give you answer.

DION. All the gods direct you [130
The readiest way !

THRA. He was extreme impatient.

CLE. It was his virtue and his noble mind.

Exeunt DION, CLEREMONT, [and]

THRASILINE.

PHI. I had forgot to ask him where he took
them ;

I'll follow him. Oh, that I had a sea
Within my breast, to quench the fire I feel !
More circumstances <sup>12</sup> will but fan this fire ;
It more afflicts me now, to know by whom
This deed is done, than simply that 't is done ;
And he that tells me this is honorable,
As far from lies as she is far from truth. 140
Oh, that, like beasts, we could not grieve ourselves

With that we see not ! Bulls and rams will fight

To keep their females, standing in their
sight ;

But take 'em from them, and you take at once

Their spleens <sup>13</sup> away ; and they will fall again
Unto their pastures, growing fresh and fat,
And taste the waters of the springs as sweet
As 't was before, finding no start in sleep ;
But miserable man ——

Enter BELLARIO.

See, see, you gods,
He walks still ; and the face you let him
wear 150

When he was innocent is still the same,
Not blasted ! Is this justice ? Do you mean
To entrap mortality, that you allow Treason so smooth a brow ? I cannot now Think he is guilty.

BEL. Health to you, my Lord !
The Princess doth commend her love, her life,
And this, unto you.

[He gives him a letter.] <sup>14</sup>

PHI. Oh, Bellario,
Now I perceive she loves me : she does show it

<sup>12</sup> I.e., a more circumstantial account.

In loving thee, my boy ; she has made thee brave.

BEL. My Lord, she has attir'd me past my wish, 160

Past my desert ; more fit for her attendant,
Though far unfit for me who do attend.

PHI. Thou art grown courtly, boy. —
[aside] Oh, let all women,

That love black deeds, learn to dissemble here,
Here, by this paper ! She does write to me

As if her heart were mines of adamant

To all the world besides, but unto me

A maiden-snow that melted with my looks. —

Tell me, my boy, how doth the Princess use
thee ?

For I shall guess her love to me by that. 170

BEL. Scarce like her servant, but as if I were

Something allied to her, or had preserv'd

Her life three times by my fidelity ;

As mothers fond do use their only sons ;

As I'd use one that's left unto my trust,

For whom my life should pay if he met harm ;

So she does use me.

PHI. Why, this is wondrous well :
But what kind language does she feed thee
with ?

BEL. Why, she does tell me she will trust
my youth

With all her loving secrets, and does call
me 180

Her pretty servant ; bids me weep no
more

For leaving you ; she'll see my services

Regarded : and such words of that soft strain

That I am nearer weeping when she ends

Than ere she spake.

PHI. This is much better still.

BEL. Are you not ill, my Lord ?

PHI. Ill ? No, Bellario.

BEL. Methinks your words.

Fall not from off your tongue so evenly,

Nor is there in your looks that quietness

That I was wont to see.

PHI. Thou art deceiv'd, boy : [190
And she strokes thy head ?

BEL. Yes.

PHI. And she does clap thy cheeks ?

BEL. She does, my Lord.

PHI. And she does kiss thee, boy ? ha !

BEL. How, my Lord ?

PHI. She kisses thee ?

BEL. Never, my Lord, by Heaven.

PHI. That's strange ; I know she does.

BEL. No, by my life.

PHI. Why then she does not love me.
Come, she does.

I bade her do it; I charg'd her, by all charms
Of love between us, by the hope of peace
We should enjoy, to yield thee all delights
Naked as to her bed; I took her oath 200
Thou shouldst enjoy her. Tell me, gentle
boy,

Is she not [parallelless]<sup>15</sup>? Is not her breath
Sweet as Arabian winds when fruits are ripe?
Are not her breasts two liquid ivory balls?
Is she not all a lasting mine of joy?

BEL. Ay, now I see why my disturbed
thoughts

Were so perplex'd. When first I went to her,
My heart held augury. You are abus'd;
Some villain has abus'd you; I do see Whereto you tend. Fall rocks upon his head 210

That put this to you! 'T is some subtle train
To bring that noble frame of yours to naught.

PHI. Thou think'st I will be angry with thee. Come,

Thou shalt know all my drift. I hate her more Than I love happiness, and placed thee there
To pry with narrow eyes into her deeds.

Hast thou discovered? Is she fall'n to lust,
As I would wish her? Speak some comfort to
me.

BEL. My Lord, you did mistake the boy
you sent.

Had she the lust of sparrows or of goats, [220
Had she a sin that way, hid from the world,
Beyond the name of lust, I would not aid
Her base desires; but what I came to know
As servant to her, I would not reveal,
To make my life last ages.

PHI. Oh, my heart!
This is a salve worse than the main disease. —
Tell me thy thoughts; for I will know the least

That dwells within thee, or will rip thy heart
To know it. I will see thy thoughts as plain
As I do now thy face.

BEL. Why, so you do. [230
She is, for aught I know, by all the gods,
As chaste as ice! But were she foul as hell,
And I did know it thus, the breath of kings,
The points of swords, tortures, nor bulls of brass,

Should draw it from me.

PHI. Then 't is no time
To dally with thee; I will take thy life,
For I do hate thee. I could curse thee now.

<sup>15</sup> Cor. Q<sub>1</sub>; Q<sub>1</sub> paradise; Q<sub>Q</sub><sub>1, 2</sub>, parralless.

BEL. If you do hate, you could not curse me
worse;

The gods have not a punishment in store
Greater for me than is your hate.

PHI. Fie, fie; [240
So young and so dissembling! Tell me when
And where thou didst enjoy her, or let plagues
Fall on me, if I destroy thee not!

[He draws his sword.]<sup>16</sup>

BEL. By Heaven, I never did; and when I lie

To save my life, may I live long and loath'd!
Hew me asunder, and, whilst I can think,
I'll love those pieces you have cut away Better than those that grow, and kiss those limbs

Because you made 'em so.

PHI. Fear'st thou not death?
Can boys condemn that?

BEL. Oh, what boy is he [250
Can be content to live to be a man,
That sees the best of men thus passionate,
Thus without reason?

PHI. Oh, but thou doest not know
What 't is to die.

BEL. Yes, I do know, my Lord;
'T is less than to be born, a lasting sleep,
A quiet resting from all jealousy,
A thing we all pursue. I know, besides,
It is but giving over of a game
That must be lost.

PHI. But there are pains, false boy,
For perjurd souls. Think but on those, and
then 260

Thy heart will melt, and thou wilt utter all.

BEL. May they fall all upon me whilst
I live,

If I be perjurd, or have ever thought
Of that you charge me with! If I be false,
Send me to suffer in those punishments
You speak of; kill me!

PHI. [aside] Oh, what should I do?
Why, who can but believe him? He does swear
So earnestly, that, if it were not true,
The gods would not endure him. — Rise,
Bellario;

Thy protestations are so deep, and thou 270
Doest look so truly when thou utt'rest them,
That, though I know 'em false as were my
hopes,

I cannot urge thee further. But thou wert
To blame to injure me, for I must love
Thy honest looks, and take no revenge upon Thy tender youth. A love from me to thee

<sup>16</sup> Only in Q<sub>1</sub>.

Is firm, whate'er thou doest ; it troubles me
That I have call'd the blood out of thy cheeks,
That did so well become thee. But, good boy, Let me not see thee more ; something is
done 280
That will distract me, that will make me mad,
If I behold thee. If thou tender'st <sup>16</sup> me,
Let me not see thee.

BEL. I will fly as far
As there is morning, ere I give distaste
To that most honor'd mind. But through these tears,
Shed at my hopeless parting, I can see
A world of treason practis'd upon you,
And her, and me. Farewell for evermore !
If you shall hear that sorrow struck me dead,
And after find me loyal, let there be 290
A tear shed from you in my memory,
And I shall rest at peace. Exit BELLARIO.

PHI. Blessing be with thee,
Whatever thou deservest ! Oh, where shall I Go bathe this body ? Nature too unkind,
That made no medicine for a troubled mind !
Exit PHILASTER.

[SCENE II] <sup>17</sup>

Enter ARETHUSA.

ARE. I marvel my boy comes not back
again ;
But that I know my love will question him
Over and over, — how I slept, wak'd, talk'd,
How I rememb'rd him when his dear name
Was last spoke, and how when I sigh'd, wept, sung,
And ten thousand such, — I should be angry
at his stay.

Enter KING.

KING. What, at your meditations ? Who attends you ?

ARE. None but my single self. I need no
guard ;

I do no wrong, nor fear none.

KING. Tell me, have you not a boy ?

ARE. Yes, sir. <sup>[10]</sup>

KING. What kind of boy ?

ARE. A page, a waiting-boy.

KING. A handsome boy ?

ARE. I think he be not ugly ;
Well qualified and dutiful I know him —
I took him not for beauty.

KING. He speaks and sings and plays ?

ARE. Yes, sir.

<sup>17</sup> Arethusa's apartment.

KING. About eighteen ?

ARE. I never ask'd his age.

KING. Is he full of service ?

ARE. By your pardon, why do you ask ?

KING. Put him away.

ARE. Sir !

KING. Put him away, I say.

H'as done you that good service shames me to speak of. 20

ARE. Good sir, let me understand you.

KING. If you fear me,
Show it in duty ; put away that boy.

ARE. Let me have reason for it, sir, and
then

Your will is my command.

KING. Do not you blush to ask it ? Cast him off,

Or I shall do the same to you. Y' are one
Shame with me, and so near unto myself,
That, by my life, I dare not tell myself
What you, myself, have done.

ARE. What have I done, my Lord ? 30

KING. 'T is a new language, that all love to learn :

The common people speak it well already ;
They need no grammar. Understand me
well :

There be foul whispers stirring. Cast him off,
And suddenly. Do it ! Farewell.

Exit KING.

ARE. Where may a maiden live securely
free,

Keeping her honor fair ? Not with the living.
They feed upon opinions, errors, dreams,
And make 'em truths ; they draw a nourish-
ment

Out of defamings, grow upon disgraces, 40
And, when they see a virtue fortified
Strongly above the batt'ry of their tongues,
Oh, how they cast <sup>18</sup> to sink it ! and, defeated,
Soul-sick with poison, strike the monuments
Where noble names lie sleeping, till they sweat,
And the cold marble melt.

Enter PHILASTER.

PHI. Peace to your fairest thoughts, dearest mistress !

ARE. Oh, my dearest servant, <sup>19</sup> I have a war within me !

PHI. He must be more than man that makes these crystals

Run into rivers. Sweetest fair, the cause ? <sup>[50]</sup>
And, as I am your slave, tied to your good-
ness,

<sup>18</sup> Plan.

<sup>19</sup> Lover.

Your creature, made again from what I was
And newly-spirited, I'll right your honor.

ARE. Oh, my best love, that boy!

PHI. What boy?

ARE. The pretty boy you gave me —

PHI. What of him?

ARE. Must be no more mine.

PHI. Why?

ARE. They are jealous <sup>20</sup> of him.

PHI. Jealous! Who?

ARE. The King.

PHI. [aside] Oh, my misfortune!
Then 't is no idle jealousy. — Let him go.

ARE. Oh, cruel!

Are you hard-hearted too? Who shall now
tell you 60

How much I lov'd you? who shall swear it to
you,

And weep the tears I send? Who shall now bring you

Letters, rings, bracelets? lose his health in service?

Wake tedious nights in stories of your praise?
Who shall [now] <sup>21</sup> sing your crying elegies,

And strike a sad soul into senseless pictures,
And make them mourn? Who shall take up his lute,

And touch it till he crown a silent sleep
Upon my eyelids, making me dream, and cry,
"Oh, my dear, dear Philaster!"

PHI. [aside] Oh, my heart! [70
Would he had broken thee, that made thee
know

This lady was not loyal! — Mistress,
Forget the boy; I'll get thee a far better.

ARE. Oh, never, never such a boy again
As my Bellario!

PHI. 'T is but your fond affection.

ARE. With thee, my boy, farewell for ever
All secrecy in servants! Farewell, faith,
And all desire to do well for itself!

Let all that shall succeed thee for thy wrongs
Sell and betray chaste love! 80

PHI. And all this passion <sup>22</sup> for a boy?

ARE. He was your boy, and you put him
to me,
And the loss of such must have a mourning
for.

PHI. Oh, thou forgetful woman!

ARE. How, my Lord?

PHI. False Arethusa!

Hast thou a medicine to restore my wits,
When I have lost 'em? If not, leave to talk,
And do thus.

<sup>22</sup> Sorrow.

ARE. Do what, sir? Would you sleep?

PHI. For ever, Arethusa. Oh, you gods,
Give me a worthy patience! Have I stood, [90
Naked, alone, the shock of many fortunes?

Have I seen mischiefs numberless and mighty Grow like a sea upon me? Have I taken

Danger as stern as death into my bosom,
And laugh'd upon it, made it but a mirth,

And flung it by? Do I live now like him,
Under this tyrant king, that languishing

Hears his sad bell and sees his mourners?
Do I

Bear all this bravely, and must sink at length
Under a woman's falsehood? Oh, that boy,
That cursed boy! None but a villain boy [101
To ease your lust?

ARE. Nay, then, I am betrayed;
I feel the plot cast for my overthrow.

Oh, I am wretched!

PHI. Now you may take that little right I
have

To this poor kingdom. Give it to your joy;
For I have no joy in it. Some far place,

Where never womankind durst set her foot
For <sup>23</sup> bursting with her poisons, must I seek,

And live to curse you; 110
There dig a cave, and preach to birds and beasts

What woman is, and help to save them from
you;

How Heaven is in your eyes, but in your hearts

More hell than hell has; how your tongues,
like scorpions,

Both heal and poison; <sup>24</sup> how your thoughts are woven

With thousand changes in one subtle web,
And worn so by you; how that foolish man

That reads the story of a woman's face
And dies believing it, is lost for ever;

How all the good you have is but a shadow,
I' th' morning with you, and at night behind

you, 121
Past and forgotten; how your vows are frosts,
Fast for a night, and with the next sun gone;

How you are, being taken all together,
A mere confusion, and so dead a chaos,

That love cannot distinguish. These sad texts,

Till my last hour, I am bound to utter of you.
So, farewell all my woe, all my delight!

Exit PHILASTER.

<sup>23</sup> For fear of.

<sup>24</sup> It was an ancient belief that scorpions "being laid to their own wounds they made, they cure
them."

ARE. Be merciful, ye gods, and strike me dead!

What way have I deserv'd this? Make my breast

130

Transparent as pure crystal, that the world,
Jealous of me, may see the foulest thought
My heart holds. Where shall a woman turn her eyes,
To find out constancy?

Enter BELLARIO.

Save me, how black
And guiltily, methinks, that boy looks
now!

Oh thou dissembler, that, before thou spak'st,
Wert in thy cradle false, sent to make lies
And betray innocents! Thy lord and thou
May glory in the ashes of a maid
Fool'd by her passion; but the conquest is [140
Nothing so great as wicked. Fly away!
Let my command force thee to that which
shame

Would do without it. If thou understood'st
The loathed office thou hast undergone,
Why, thou wouldst hide thee under heaps of hills,

Lest men should dig and find thee.

BEL. Oh, what god,
Angry with men, hath sent this strange disease

Into the noblest minds! Madam, this grief
You add unto me is no more than drops
To seas, for which they are not seen to swell.

My lord hath struck his anger through my
heart,

151

And let out all the hope of future joys.
You need not bid me fly; I came to part,
To take my latest leave. Farewell for ever!
I durst not run away in honesty
From such a lady, like a boy that stole Or made some grievous fault. The power of
gods

Assist you in your sufferings! Hasty time
Reveal the truth to your abused lord
And mine, that he may know your worth;
whilst I

160

Go seek out some forgotten place to die!

Exit BELLARIO.

ARE. Peace guide thee! Th'ast overthrown me once;

Yet, if I had another Troy to lose,
Thou, or another villain with thy looks,
Might talk me out of it, and send me naked,
My hair dishevell'd, through the fiery streets.

Enter a Lady.

LADY. Madam, the King would hunt, and calls for you

With earnestness.

ARE. I am in tune to hunt!
Diana, if thou canst rage with a maid
As with a man,<sup>25</sup> let me discover thee 170
Bathing, and turn me to a fearful hind,
That I may die pursued by cruel hounds,
And have my story written in my wounds!

Exeunt.

ACT IV — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter KING, PHARAMOND, ARETHUSA, GALA-TEA, MEGRA, DION, CLEREMONT, THRASI-LINE, and Attendants.

KING. What, are the hounds before, and all the woodmen?<sup>2</sup>

Our horses ready, and our bows bent?

DION. All, sir.

KING. [to PHARAMOND] Y'are cloudy, sir.
Come, we have forgotten

Your venial trespass; let not that sit heavy
Upon your spirit; here's none dare utter it.

[They talk apart.]

DION. He looks like an old surfeited stallion, after his leaping, dull as a dormouse.
See how he sinks! The wench has shot him between wind and water, and, I hope, sprung
a leak. 10

THRA. He needs no teaching: he strikes<sup>3</sup> sure enough. His greatest fault is, he hunts too much in the purlieus;<sup>4</sup> would he would leave off poaching!

DION. And for his horn, h'as left it at the lodge where he lay late. Oh, he's a precious limehound!<sup>5</sup> Turn him loose upon the pursuit of a lady, and if he lose her, hang him up i' th' slip.<sup>6</sup> When my fox-bitch Beauty grows proud, I'll borrow him. 20

KING. Is your boy turn'd away?

ARE. You did command, sir,
And I obey'd you.

KING. [to ARETHUSA] 'Tis well done. Hark ye further.

[They talk apart.]

CLE. Is't possible this fellow should re-

pent? Methinks, that were not noble in him; and yet he looks like a mortified member, as if he had a sick man's salve<sup>7</sup> in's mouth. If a worse man had done this fault now, some physical<sup>8</sup> justice or other would presently, without the help of an almanac,<sup>9</sup> have opened the obstructions of his liver, [30 and let him blood with a dog-whip.

DION. See, see how modestly yon lady looks, as if she came from churching with her neighbors! Why, what a devil can a man see in her face but that she's honest!

THRA. Faith, no great matter to speak of; a foolish twinkling with the eye, that spoils her coat;<sup>10</sup> but he must be a cunning herald that finds it.

DION. See how they muster one another! Oh, there's a rank regiment where the Devil carries the colors and his dam drum-major! Now the world and the flesh come behind with the carriage.<sup>11</sup>

CLE. Sure this lady has a good turn done her against her will: before she was common talk; now none dare say cantharides<sup>12</sup> can stir her. Her face looks like a warrant, willing and commanding all tongues, as they will answer it, to be tied up and bolted when [50 this lady means to let herself loose. As I live, she has got her a goodly protection and a gracious; and may use her body discreetly for her health's sake, once a week, excepting Lent and dog days. Oh, if they were to be got for money, what a large sum would come out of the city for these licenses!

KING. To horse, to horse! we lose the morning, gentlemen. Exeunt.

[SCENE II]<sup>13</sup>

Enter two Woodmen.

1 WOOD. What, have you lodged the deer?

2 WOOD. Yes, they are ready for the bow.

1 WOOD. Who shoots?

2 WOOD. The Princess.

1 WOOD. No, she'll hunt.

2 WOOD. She'll take a stand, I say.

1 WOOD. Who else?

<sup>9</sup> Which noted the best times for blood-letting.

<sup>10</sup> Coat of arms. "The allusion is to mullets, or stars, introduced into coats of arms, to distinguish the younger branches of a family, which of course denote inferiority." (Mason.)

2 WOOD. Why, the young stranger prince.

1 WOOD. He shall shoot in a stone-bow<sup>14</sup> for me.<sup>15</sup> I never lov'd his Beyond-sea- [10 ship since he forsook the say,<sup>16</sup> for paying ten shillings. He was there at the fall of a deer, and would needs (out of his mightiness) give ten groats for the dowcets;<sup>17</sup> marry, the<sup>18</sup> steward would have the velvet-head<sup>19</sup> into the bargain, to turf<sup>20</sup> his hat withal. I think he should love venery; he is an old Sir Tristram;<sup>21</sup> for, if you be rememb'ed, he forsook the stag once to strike a rascal<sup>22</sup> [miching]<sup>23</sup> in a meadow, and her he kill'd in the eye.<sup>24</sup> Who shoots else? 21

2 WOOD. The Lady Galatea.

1 WOOD. That's a good wench, an she would not chide us for tumbling of her women in the brakes. She's liberal, and by the gods, they say she's honest, and whether that be a fault, I have nothing to do. There's all?

2 WOOD. No, one more; Megra.

1 WOOD. That's a firker,<sup>25</sup> i' faith, boy. There's a wench will ride her haunches [30 as hard after a kennel of hounds as a hunting saddle, and when she comes home, get 'em clapp'd,<sup>26</sup> and all is well again. I have known her lose herself three times in one afternoon, if the woods have been answerable,<sup>27</sup> and it has been work enough for one man to find her, and he has sweat for it. She rides well and she pays well. Hark! let's go. Exeunt.

[SCENE III]<sup>28</sup>

Enter PHILASTER.

PHI. Oh, that I had been nourish'd in these woods

With milk of goats and acorns, and not known

<sup>14</sup> With a crossbow that shoots stones.

<sup>15</sup> For all of me.

<sup>16</sup> The assay was taken by a man of high rank, to whom the chief huntsman offered his knife for slitting the fallen deer in order to test the quality of the flesh. The huntsman expected a special fee.

<sup>21</sup> Who was a patron of hunting. His name, however, had come to be used as a jocular form of address, vaguely allusive to his fame as an amorist. Cf. Dekker, Satiromastix, ed. Pearson, I, 217: "That Lady a' th' Lake is mine, Sir Tristram."

<sup>28</sup> Another part of the forest.

The right of crowns nor the dissembling trains
Of women's looks ; but digg'd myself a cave
Where I, my fire, my cattle, and my bed,
Might have been shut together in one shed ;
And then had taken me some mountain girl,
Beaten with winds, chaste as the hard'ned rocks

Whereon she dwells,<sup>29</sup> that might have strewed
my bed

With leaves and reeds, and with the skins of
beasts, 10

Our neighbors, and have borne at her big
breasts

My large coarse issue ! This had been a life
Free from vexation.<sup>30</sup>

Enter BELLARIO.

BEL. Oh, wicked men !
An innocent may walk safe among beasts ;
Nothing assaults me here. See, my griev'd
Lord

Sits as<sup>31</sup> his soul were searching out a way
To leave his body ! — Pardon me, that must Break thy last commandment ; for I must speak.

You that are griev'd can pity ; hear, my Lord !

PHI. Is there a creature yet so miserable, [20
That I can pity ?

BEL. Oh, my noble Lord,
View my strange fortune, and bestow on me,
According to your bounty (if my service
Can merit nothing), so much as may serve
To keep that little piece I hold of life
From cold and hunger !

PHI. Is it thou ? Begone !
Go, sell those misbeseeming clothes thou wearest,
And feed thyself with them.

BEL. Alas, my Lord, I can get nothing for
them !

The silly country people think 't is treason [30
To touch such gay things.

PHI. Now, by the gods, this is Unkindly done, to vex me with thy sight.
Th' art fall'n again to thy dissembling trade ;
How shouldst thou think to cozen me again ?
Remains there yet a plague untri'd for me ?
Even so thou wep[t]'st, and look'dst, and spok'st when first

I took thee up.
Curse on the time ! If thy commanding tears
Can work on any other, use thy art ; 39

<sup>29</sup> Q: dwell.

<sup>30</sup> Imitated from the opening of Juvenal's Sixth
Satire. (Dyce.)

<sup>31</sup> As if

I'll not betray it. Which way wilt thou take,
That I may shun thee, for thine eyes are poison
To mine, and I am loth to grow in rage ?
This way, or that way ?

BEL. Any will serve ; but I will choose to have

That path in chase that leads unto my grave.

Exeunt PHILASTER and BELLARIO severally.

SCENE IV <sup>32</sup>

Enter DION and the [two] Woodmen.

DION. This is the strangest sudden chance !
— You, woodman !

1 WOOD. My Lord Dion ?

DION. Saw you a lady come this way on a sable horse studded with stars of white ?

2 WOOD. Was she not young and tall ?

DION. Yes. Rode she to the wood or to the plain ?

2 WOOD. Faith, my Lord, we saw none.

Exeunt Woodmen.

DION. Pox of you[r] questions then !

Enter CLEREMONT.

What, is she found ?

CLE. Nor will be, I think.

DION. Let him seek his daughter himself.
She cannot stray about a little necessary [11 natural business, but the whole court must be in arms. When she has done, we shall have peace.

CLE. There's already a thousand fatherless tales amongst us. Some say her horse ran away with her ; some, a wolf pursued her ;
others, 't was a plot to kill her, and that arm'd men were seen in the wood ; but questionless
she rode away willingly. 20

Enter KING and THRASILINE.

KING. Where is she ?

CLE. Sir, I cannot tell.

KING. How's that ?

Answer me so again !

CLE. Sir, shall I lie ?

KING. Yes, lie and damn, rather than tell me that.

I say again, where is she ? Mutter not ! — Sir, speak you ; where is she ?

DION. Sir, I do not know.

KING. Speak that again so boldly, and, by Heaven,

<sup>32</sup> Another part of the forest.

It is thy last! — You, fellows, answer me;
Where is she? Mark me, all; I am your
king:

I wish to see my daughter; show her me;
I do command you all, as you are subjects, [30
To show her me! What! am I not your
king?

If ay, then am I not to be obeyed?

DION. Yes, if you command things possible and honest.

KING. Things possible and honest! Hear me, thou,
Thou traitor, that dar'st confine thy king to
things

Possible and honest! Show her me,
Or, let me perish, if I cover not
All Sicily with blood!

DION. Faith, I cannot,
Unless you tell me where she is.

KING. You have betrayed me; y' have let me lose 40

The jewel of my life. Go, bring her me,
And set her here before me. 'T is the King
Will have it so; whose breath can still the winds,

Uncloud the sun, charm down the swelling
sea,

And stop the floods of heaven. Speak, can it
not?

DION. No.

KING. No! cannot the breath of kings do this?

DION. No; nor smell sweet itself, if once the lungs
Be but corrupted.

KING. Is it so? Take heed!

DION. Sir, take you heed how you dare the Powers

That must be just.

KING. Alas! what are we kings?
Why do you gods place us above the rest, [51
To be serv'd, flatter'd, and ador'd, till we Believe we hold within our hands your thunder?

And when we come to try the power we
have,

There's not a leaf shakes at our threat'nings.
I have sinn'd, 't is true, and here stand to be
punish'd;

Yet would not thus be punish'd. Let me
choose

My way, and lay it on!

DION. [aside] He articles with the gods.
Would somebody would draw bonds for [60
the performance of covenants betwixt them!

Enter PHARAMOND, GALATEA, and MEGRA.

KING. What, is she found?

PHA. No; we have ta'en her horse;
He gallop'd empty by. There's some trea-
son. —

You, Galatea, rode with her into the wood;
Why left you her?

GAL. She did command me.

KING. Command! you should not.

GAL. 'T would ill become my fortunes and my birth

To disobey the daughter of my king.

KING. Y' are all cunning to obey us for our hurts;

But I will have her.

PHA. If I have her not, 70
By this hand, there shall be no more Sicily.

DION. [aside] What, will he carry it to Spain
in's pocket?

PHA. I will not leave one man alive, but the King,

A cook, and a tailor.

DION. [aside] Yes; you may do well to spare your lady-bedfellow; and her you may keep for a spawner.

KING. [aside] I see the injuries I have done must be reveng'd.

DION. Sir, this is not the way to find her
out.

KING. Run all, disperse yourselves. The man that finds her, 80
Or, if she be kill'd, the traitor, I'll make him great.

DION. I know some would give five thousand pounds to find her.

PHA. Come, let us seek.

KING. Each man a several way; here I myself.

DION. Come, gentlemen, we here.

CLE. Lady, you must go search too.

MEG. I had rather be search'd myself.

[Exeunt] omnes.

[SCENE V] 33

Enter ARETHUSA.

ARE. Where am I now? Feet, find me out
a way

Without the counsel of my troubled
head.

I'll follow you boldly about these woods,
O'er mountains, thorough brambles, pits, and floods.

* Another part of the forest.

Heaven, I hope, will ease me; I am sick.

[She sits down.] <sup>34</sup>

Enter BELLARIO.

BEL. Yonder's my lady. God knows I want nothing, Because I do not wish to live; yet I Will try her charity. — Oh, hear, you that have plenty!

From that flowing store drop some on dry ground. — See, The lively red is gone to guard her heart! [10 I fear she faints. — Madam, look up! — She breathes not. —

Open once more those rosy twins, and send Unto my lord your latest farewell! — Oh, she stirs. —

How is it, madam? Speak comfort.

ARE. 'T is not gently done, To put me in a miserable life, And hold me there. I prithee, let me go; I shall do best without thee; I am well.

Enter PHILASTER.

PHI. I am to blame to be so much in rage. I'll tell her coolly when and where I heard This killing truth. I will be temperate 20 In speaking, and as just in hearing. — Oh, monstrous! Tempt me not, you gods! good gods, Tempt not a frail man! What's he that has a heart,

But he must ease it here?

BEL. My Lord, help! help the Princess!

ARE. I am well; forbear.

PHI. [aside] Let me love lightning, let me be embrac'd

And kiss'd by scorpions, or adore the eyes Of basilisks, rather than trust the tongues Of hell-bred women! Some good god look 30 down,

And shrink these veins up! Stick me here a stone,

Lasting to ages in the memory

Of this damned act! — Hear me, you wicked ones!

You have put hills of fire into this breast, Not to be quench'd with tears; for which may guilt

Sit on your bosoms! At your meals and beds Despair await you! What, before my face? Poison of asps between your lips! Diseases Be your best issues! Nature make a curse, And throw it on you!

<sup>34</sup> Only in Q<sub>1</sub>.

ARE. Dear Philaster, leave [40 To be enrag'd, and hear me.

PHI. I have done; Forgive my passion. Not the calmed sea, When Aeolus locks up his windy brood, Is less disturb'd than I. I'll make you know't.

Dear Arethusa, do but take this sword, [Offers his drawn sword.] <sup>35</sup>

And search how temperate a heart I have; Then you and this your boy may live and reign In lust without control. — Wilt thou, Bellario?

I prithee kill me; thou art poor, and mayst Nourish ambitious thoughts; when I am dead, 50

[Thy] <sup>36</sup> way were freer. Am I raging now? If I were mad, I should desire to live.

Sirs,<sup>37</sup> feel my pulse, whether you have known A man in a more equal tune to die.

BEL. Alas, my Lord, your pulse keeps mad-man's time!

So does your tongue.

PHI. You will not kill me, then?

ARE. Kill you!

BEL. Not for the world.

PHI. I blame not thee, Bellario; thou hast done but that which gods Would have transform'd themselves to do. Begone;

Leave me without reply; this is the last 60 Of all our meeting.<sup>38</sup> — (Exit BELLARIO.) Kill me with this sword;

Be wise, or worse will follow: we are two Earth cannot bear at once. Resolve to do, Or suffer.

ARE. If my fortune be so good to let me fall Upon thy hand, I shall have peace in death. Yet tell me this, will there be no slanders, No jealousy in the other world, no ill there?

PHI. No.

ARE. Show me, then, the way. 70

PHI. Then guide my feeble hand, You that have power to do it, for I must Perform a piece of justice! — If your youth Have any way-offended Heaven, let prayers Short and effectual reconcile you to it.

ARE. I am prepared.

Enter a Country Fellow.

C. FELL. I'll see the King, if he be in the forest; I have hunted him these two hours.

If I should come home and not see him, my sisters would laugh at me. I can see nothing [80 but people better hors'd than myself, that out-ride me; I can hear nothing but shouting. These kings had need of good brains; this whooping is able to put a mean <sup>39</sup> man out of his wits. There's a courtier with his sword drawn; by this hand, upon a woman, I think!

PHI. Are you at peace?

ARE. With Heaven and earth.

PHI. May they divide <sup>40</sup> thy soul and body!

[PHILASTER wounds her.] <sup>41</sup>

C. FELL. Hold, dastard! strike a woman! Th'art a craven. I warrant thee, thou [90 wouldest be loth to play half a dozen venies at wasters <sup>42</sup> with a good fellow for a broken head.

PHI. Leave us, good friend.

ARE. What ill-bred man art thou, to intrude thyself

Upon our private sports, our recreation?

C. FELL. God 'uds <sup>43</sup> me, I understand you not; but I know the rogue has hurt <sup>44</sup> you.

PHI. Pursue thy own affairs; it will be ill To multiply blood upon my head, which thou Wilt force me to. 100

C. FELL. I know not your rhetoric; but I can lay it on, if you touch the woman.

PHI. Slave, take what thou deservest!

They fight.

ARE. Heaven guard my lord!

C. FELL. Oh, do you breathe?

PHI. I hear the tread of people. I am hurt. The gods take part against me; could this boor

Have held me thus else? I must shift for life, Though I do loathe it. I would find a course To lose it rather by my will than force.

Exit PHILASTER.

C. FELL. I cannot follow the rogue. I pray thee, wench, come and kiss me now. 111

Enter PHARAMOND, DION, CLEREMONT, THRASILINE, and Woodmen.

PHA. What art thou?

C. FELL. Almost kill'd I am for a foolish woman; a knave has hurt her.

PHA. The Princess, gentlemen! — Where's the wound, madam! Is it dangerous?

ARE. He has not hurt me.

C. FELL. By God, she lies; h' as hurt her in the breast; Look else.

PHA. O sacred spring of innocent blood! DION. 'T is above wonder! Who should dare this? 120

ARE. I felt it not.

PHA. Speak, villain, who has hurt the Princess?

C. FELL. Is it the Princess?

DION. Ay.

C. FELL. Then I have seen something yet.

PHA. But who has hurt her?

C. FELL. I told you, a rogue; I ne'er saw him before, I.

PHA. Madam, who did it?

ARE. Some dishonest wretch; Alas, I know him not, and do forgive him!

C. FELL. He's hurt too; he cannot go far; 130

I made my father's old fox <sup>45</sup> fly about his ears.

PHA. How will you have me kill him?

ARE. Not at all; 't is some distracted fellow.

PHA. By this hand, I'll leave never a piece of him bigger than a nut, and bring him all to you in my hat.

ARE. Nay, good sir,

If you do take him, bring him quick <sup>46</sup> to me, And I will study for a punishment Great as his fault. 140

PHA. I will.

ARE. But swear.

PHA. By all my love, I will. — Woodmen, conduct the Princess to the King, And bear that wounded fellow to dressing. — Come, gentlemen, we'll follow the chase close.

[Exeunt] ARETHUSA, PHARAMOND, DION, CLEREMONT, THRASILINE, and 1 Woodman.

C. FELL. I pray you, friend, let me see the King.

2 WOOD. That you shall, and receive thanks.

C. FELL. If I get clear of this, I'll go to see no more gay sights. Exeunt. [150

[SCENE VI] <sup>47</sup>

Enter BELLARIO.

BEL. A heaviness near death sits on my brow,

And I must sleep. Bear me, thou gentle bank, For ever, if thou wilt. You sweet ones all,

[Lies] down.]

Let me unworthy press you; I could wish

<sup>47</sup> Another part of the forest.

I rather were a corse strew'd o'er with you Than quick above you. Dulness shuts mine
eyes,
And I am giddy; oh, that I could take
So sound a sleep that I might never wake!
[Sleeps.]

Enter PHILASTER.

PHI. I have done ill; my conscience calls me false
To strike at her that would not strike at [10
me.
When I did fight, methought I heard her pray
The gods to guard me. She may be abus'd,<sup>48</sup>
And I am loathed villain; if she be,
She will conceal who hurt her. He has wounds
And cannot follow; neither knows he me.
Who's this? Bellario sleeping! If thou beest Guilty, there is no justice that thy sleep
Should be so sound, and mine, whom thou hast wrong'd,
So broken. (Cry within.) Hark! I am pursued. You gods
I'll take this offer'd means of my escape [20
They have no mark to know me but my wounds,<sup>49</sup>
If she be true; if false, let mischief light
On all the world at once! Sword, print my wounds
Upon this sleeping boy! I ha' none, I think,
Are mortal, nor would I lay greater on thee.

Wounds him.

BEL. Oh, death, I hope, is come! Blest be that hand!
It meant me well. Again, for pity's sake!
PHI. I have caught myself;

PHILASTER falls.

The loss of blood hath stayed my flight. Here,
here,
Is he that struck thee: take thy full revenge; [30
Use me, as I did mean thee, worse than death;
I'll teach thee to revenge. This luckless hand
Wounded the Princess; tell my followers<sup>50</sup>
Thou didst receive these hurts in staying
me,
And I will second thee; get a reward.

BEL. Fly, fly, my Lord, and save yourself!

PHI. How's this?
Wouldst thou I should be safe?

BEL. Else were it vain
For me to live. These little wounds I have Ha' not bled much. Reach me that noble

hand;

I'll help to cover you.

PHI. Art thou [then] <sup>51</sup> true to me? [40

BEL. Or let me perish loath'd! Come, my good Lord,
Creep in amongst those bushes; who does
know

But that the gods may save your much-lov'd breath?

PHI. Then I shall die for grief, if not for
this,
That I have wounded thee. What wilt thou
do?

BEL. Shift for myself well. Peace! I hear
'em come.

[PHILASTER creeps into a bush.]

Within. Follow, follow, follow! that way they went.

BEL. With my own wounds I'll bloody my own sword.

I need not counterfeit to fall; Heaven knows
That I can stand no longer. [50

[Boy falls down.] <sup>52</sup>

Enter PHARAMOND, DION, CLEREMONT, and THRASILINE.

PHA. To this place we have track'd him by his blood.

CLE. Yonder, my Lord, creeps one away.

DION. Stay, sir! what are you?

BEL. A wretched creature, wounded in these woods
By beasts. Relieve me, if your names be men,
Or I shall perish.

DION. This is he, my Lord,
Upon my soul, that hurt her. 'Tis the boy,
That wicked boy, that serv'd her.

PHA. Oh, thou damn'd
In thy creation! What cause couldst thou shape

To strike <sup>53</sup> the Princess?

BEL. Then I am betrayed. [60

DION. Betrayed! No, apprehended.

BEL. I confess,
(Urge it no more) that, big with evil thoughts,
I set upon her, and did make my aim
Her death. For charity let fall at once
The punishment you mean, and do not load
This weary flesh with tortures.

PHA. I will know
Who hired thee to this deed.

BEL. Mine own revenge.

<sup>53</sup> Only in Q<sub>1</sub>.

PHA. Revenge! for what?

BEL. It pleas'd her to receive
Me as her page and, when my fortunes ebb'd,
That men strid o'er them careless, she did show'r 70

Her welcome graces on me, and did swell
My fortunes till they overflowed their banks, Threat'ning the men that cross'd 'em; when,
as swift

As storms arise at sea, she turn'd her eyes
To burning suns upon me, and did dry
The streams she had bestowed, leaving me
worse

And more condemn'd than other little brooks,
Because I had been great. In short, I knew
I could not live, and therefore did desire
To die reveng'd.

PHA. If tortures can be found [80
Long as thy natural life, resolve to feel
The utmost rigor.

PHILASTER creeps out of a bush.

CLE. Help to lead him hence.

PHI. Turn back, you ravishers of innocence!

Know ye the price of that you bear away
So rudely?

PHA. Who's that?

DION. 'T is the Lord Philaster.

PHI. 'T is not the treasure of all kings in
one,
The wealth of Tagus, nor the rocks of pearl
That pave the court of Neptune, can weigh
down

That virtue. It was I that hurt the Princess.
Place me, some god, upon a pyramis<sup>54</sup> 90
Higher than hills of earth, and lend a voice Loud as your thunder to me, that from thence
I may discourse to all the underworld
The worth that dwells in him!

PHA. How's this?

BEL. My Lord, some man
Weary of life, that would be glad to die.

PHI. Leave these untimely courtesies, Bellario.

BEL. Alas, he's mad! Come, will you lead me on?

PHI. By all the oaths that men ought most to keep,

And gods to punish most when men do break,
He touch'd her not. — Take heed, Bellario,
How thou dost drown the virtues thou hast
shown 101

With perjury. — By all the gods, 't was I!
You know she stood betwixt me and my right.

<sup>54</sup> Pyramid.

PHA. Thy own tongue be thy judge!

CLE. It was Philaster.

DION. Is't not a brave boy?

Well, sirs, I fear me we were all deceived.

PHI. Have I no friend here?

DION. Yes.

PHI. Then show it; some Good body lend a hand to draw us nearer.
Would you have tears shed for you when you
die?

Then lay me gently on his neck, that there [110
I may weep floods, and breathe forth my spirit. —

'T is not the wealth of Plutus, nor the gold
Lock'd in the heart of earth, can buy away
This armful from me; this had been a ran-
some

To have redeem'd the great Augustus Cæsar,
Had he been taken. You hard-hearted men,
More stony than these mountains, can you see Such clear, pure blood drop, and not cut your flesh

To stop his life, to bind whose bitter wounds Queens ought to tear their hair, and with their tears 120

Bathe 'em? — Forgive me, thou that art the wealth

Of poor Philaster!

Enter KING, ARETHUSA, and a Guard.

KING. Is the villain ta'en?

PHA. Sir, here be two confess the deed; but say<sup>55</sup>

It was Philaster.

PHI. Question it no more;

It was.

KING. The fellow that did fight with him
Will tell us that.

Are. Aye me! I know he will.

KING. Did not you know him?

ARE. Sir, if it was he,
He was disguised.

PHI. I was so. — Oh, my stars,
That I should live still.

KING. Thou ambitious fool,
Thou that hast laid a train for thy own life! —
Now I do mean to do, I'll leave to talk. 131
Bear [them]<sup>56</sup> to prison.

ARE. Sir, they did plot together to take hence
This harmless life; should it pass unreveng'd,

<sup>55</sup> Q<sub>1</sub> sute, which Dyce (followed by all but Boas) emends to sure. "Say" may be imperative, or may = "suppose it is"; in the latter case the speech should end with a dash.

<sup>56</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub>; other old eds., him.

I should to earth go weeping. Grant me, then,
By all the love a father bears his child,
Their custodies, and that I may appoint
Their tortures and their deaths.

DION. [aside] Death! Soft; our law will not reach that for this fault.

KING. 'T is granted; take 'em to you with a guard. — 140

Come, princely Pharamond, this business past,
We may with more security go on
To your intended match.

CLE. [aside to DION] I pray that this action lose not Philaster the hearts of the people.

DION. [aside to CLEREMONT] Fear it not;
their over-wise heads will think it but a trick.
Exeunt omnes.

ACT V — SCENE I <sup>1</sup>

Enter DION, CLEREMONT, [and] THRASILINE.

THRA. Has the King sent for him to death?

DION. Yes; but the King must know 't is not in his power to war with Heaven.

CLE. We linger time; the King sent for Philaster and the headsman an hour ago.

THRA. Are all his wounds well?

DION. All; they were but scratches; but the loss of blood made him faint.

CLE. We dally, gentlemen.

THRA. Away! 10

DION. We'll scuffle hard before he perish.
Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>2</sup>

Enter PHILASTER, ARETHUSA, [and] BELLARIO.

ARE. Nay, faith, Philaster, grieve not; we are well.

BEL. Nay, good my Lord, forbear; we're wondrous well.

PHI. Oh, Arethusa, oh, Bellario,
Leave to be kind!

I shall be [shut] <sup>3</sup> from Heaven, as now from
earth,

If you continue so. I am a man

False to a pair of the most trusty ones

That ever earth bore; can it bear us all?

Forgive, and leave me. But the King hath sent

To call me to my death; oh, show it me, 10
And then forget me! And for thee, my boy,

<sup>3</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub>; other old eds., shot.

I shall deliver words will mollify
The hearts of beasts to spare thy innocence.

BEL. Alas, my Lord, my life is not a thing Worthy your noble thoughts! 'T is not a life:
'T is but a piece of childhood thrown away.
Should I outlive you, I should then outlive Virtue and honor; and when that day comes,
If ever I shall close these eyes but once,
May I live spotted for my perjury, 20
And waste [by time] <sup>4</sup> to nothing!

ARE. And I, the woful'st maid that ever
was,
Forc'd with my hands to bring my lord to
death,
Do by the honor of a virgin swear
To tell <sup>5</sup> no hours beyond it!

PHI. Make me not hated so.

ARE. Come from this prison all joyful to our deaths!

PHI. People will tear me, when they find you true

To such a wretch as I; I shall die loath'd.
Enjoy your kingdoms peacably, whilst I
For ever sleep forgotten with my faults. 30
Every just servant, <sup>6</sup> every maid in love,
Will have a piece of me, if you be true.

ARE. My dear Lord, say not so.

BEL. A piece of you!
He was not born of [woman] <sup>7</sup> that can cut
It and look on.

PHI. Take me in tears betwixt you, for my
heart

Will break with shame and sorrow.

ARE. Why, 't is well.

BEL. Lament no more.

PHI. [Why], <sup>8</sup> what would you have done
If you had wrong'd me basely, and had found My life no price compar'd to yours? <sup>9</sup> For love, sirs, 40

Deal with me truly.

BEL. 'T was mistaken, sir.

PHI. Why, if it were?

BEL. Then, sir, we would have ask'd
Your pardon.

PHI. And have hope to enjoy it?

ARE. Enjoy it! ay.

PHI. Would you indeed? Be plain.

BEL. We would, my Lord.

PHI. Forgive me, then.

<sup>4</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub>; Q<sub>2</sub> by limbs; other old eds., my limbs.

<sup>7</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub>; other old eds., women.

<sup>8</sup> Only in Q<sub>1</sub>.

<sup>9</sup> Mason (followed by all the later eds.) emends to read your life . . . to mine, which is more logical but unnecessary and perhaps less dramatic.

ARE. So, so.
 BEL. 'T is as it should be now.
 PHI. Lead to my death. Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>10</sup>

Enter KING, DION, CLEREMONT, THRASILINE,
 [and Attendants].

KING. Gentlemen, who saw the Prince?

CLE. So please you, sir, he's gone to see the city

And the new platform,<sup>11</sup> with some gentlemen
 Attending on him.

KING. Is the Princess ready
 To bring her prisoner out?

THRA. She waits your Grace.

KING. Tell her we stay.

[Exit THRASILINE.] <sup>12</sup>

DION. [aside] King, you may be deceiv'd
 yet.

The head you aim at cost more setting on
 Than to be lost so lightly. If it must off, —
 Like a wild overflow, that s[w]oops before him
 A golden stack, and with it shakes down bridges, <sup>10</sup>

Cracks the strong hearts of pines, whose cableroots

Held out a thousand storms, a thousand thunders,

And, so made mightier, takes whole villages
 Upon his back, and in that heat of pride
 Charges strong towns, towers, castles, palaces,
 And lays them desolate; so shall thy head,
 Thy noble head, bury the lives of thousands,
 That must bleed with thee like a sacrifice,
 In thy red ruins.

Enter PHILASTER, ARETHUSA, BELLARIO in a robe and garland, [and THRASILINE].

KING. How now? What masque is this?

BEL. Right royal sir, I should <sup>20</sup>
 Sing you an epithalamion of these lovers,
 But having lost my best airs with my fortunes,
 And wanting a celestial harp to strike
 This blessed union on, thus in glad story
 I give you all. These two fair cedar branches,
 The noblest of the mountain where they grew, Straightest and tallest, under whose still shades

The worthier beasts have made their lairs, and slept

<sup>10</sup> Not precisely located; presumably before the palace, or a room or courtyard in it.

<sup>11</sup> This might mean plan, model, site of a battery, walk, or terrace.

<sup>12</sup> Only in Q<sub>1</sub>.

Free from [the fervor of] <sup>13</sup> the Sirian star <sup>14</sup>
 And the fell thunder-stroke, free from the clouds <sup>30</sup>
 When they were big with humor,<sup>15</sup> and deliver'd

In thousand spouts their issues to the earth;
 Oh, there was none but silent quiet there!
 Till never-pleased Fortune shot up shrubs, Base under-brambles, to divorce these branches;

And for a while they did so, and did reign
 Over the mountain, and choke up his beauty
 With brakes, rude thorns and thistles, till the sun

Scorch'd them even to the roots and dried them there.

And now a gentler gale hath blown again, [40
 That made these branches meet and twine together,

Never to be divided.<sup>16</sup> The god that sings
 His holy numbers over marriage beds Hath knit their noble hearts; and here they
 stand

Your children, mighty King; and I have done.

KING. How, how?

ARE. Sir, if you love it in plain truth,
 For now there is no masquing in 't, this gentleman,

The prisoner that you gave me, is become
 My keeper, and through all the bitter throes
 Your jealousies and his ill fate have wrought
 him, <sup>50</sup>

Thus nobly hath he struggled, and at length
 Arrived here my dear husband.

KING. Your dear husband! —
 Call in the captain of the citadel —
 There you shall keep your wedding. I'll provide

A masque shall make your Hymen turn his saffron <sup>17</sup>

Into a sullen coat, and sing sad requiems
 To your departing souls.
 Blood shall put out your torches; and, instead
 Of gaudy flowers about your wanton necks,
 An axe shall hang, like a prodigious <sup>18</sup> meteor, Ready to crop your loves' sweets. — Hear,
 you gods! <sup>61</sup>

From this time do I shake all tittle off
 Of father to this woman, this base woman;
 And what there is of vengeance in a lion

Cha[f]d among dogs or robb'd of his dear
young,

The same, enforc'd more terrible, more mighty,
Expect from me!

ARE. Sir, by that little life I have left to swear by,
There's nothing that can stir me from myself.
What I have done, I have done without repentance, 70

For death can be no bugbear unto me,
So long as Pharamond is not my headsman.

DION. [aside] Sweet peace upon thy soul,
thou worthy maid,

Whene'er thou diest! For this time I'll excuse thee,

Or be thy prologue.

PHI. Sir, let me speak next;
And let my dying words be better with you
Than my dull living actions. If you aim
At the dear life of this sweet innocent,
Y'are a tyrant and a savage monster,
[That feeds upon the blood you gave a life
to:] 19 80

Your memory shall be as foul behind you,
As you are living; all your better deeds
Shall be in water writ, but this in marble;
No chronicle shall speak you, though your
own,

But for the shame of men. No monument,
Though high and big as Pelion, shall be able
To cover this base murder: make it rich
With brass, with purest gold, and shining jasper,

Like the Pyramids; lay on epitaphs
Such as make great men gods; my little marble, 90

That only clothes my ashes, not my faults,
Shall far outshine it. And, for after-issues,
Think not so madly of the heavenly wisdoms,
That they will give you more for your mad
rage

To cut off, unless it be some snake, or something

Like yourself, that in his birth shall strangle
you.

Remember my father, King! There was a fault,

But I forgive it. Let that sin persuade you
To love this lady; if you have a soul,
Think, save her, and be saved. For myself,
I have so long expected this glad hour, 101
So languish'd under you, and daily withered,
That, Heaven knows, it is a joy to die;
I find a recreation in 't.

<sup>19</sup> Q<sub>1</sub> only.

Enter a Messenger.

MESS. Where's the King?

KING. Here.

MESS. Get you to your strength,
And rescue the Prince Pharamond from danger;

He's taken prisoner by the citizens,
Fearing <sup>20</sup> the Lord Philaster.

DION. [aside] Oh, brave followers! <sup>21</sup>
Mutiny, my fine dear countrymen, mutiny!
Now, my brave valiant foremen, show your weapons 110

In honor of your mistresses!

Enter another Messenger.

2 MESS. Arm, arm, arm, arm!

KING. A thousand devils take [these citizens!] <sup>22</sup>

DION. [aside] A thousand blessings on 'em!

2 MESS. Arm, O King! The city is in mutiny,

Led by an old gray ruffian, who comes on
In rescue of the Lord Philaster.

KING. Away to the citadel!—

Exit [Messenger] with ARETHUSA, PHILASTER, [and] BELLARIO.

I'll see them safe,
And then cope with these burghers. Let the guard

And all the gentlemen give strong attendance. 120

[Exeunt all except] DION, CLERE-MONT, [and] THRASILINE.

CLE. The city up! This was above our wishes.

DION. Ay, and the marriage too. By [all the gods,] <sup>23</sup>

This noble lady has deceiv'd us all.

A plague upon myself, a thousand plagues,
For having such unworthy thoughts of her dear
honor!

Oh, I could beat myself! Or do you beat me,
And I'll beat you; for we had all one thought.

CLE. No, no; 't will but lose time.

DION. You say true. Are your swords sharp?—Well, my dear countrymen [130
What-ye-lacks, <sup>24</sup> if you continue, and fall not back upon the first broken shin, <sup>25</sup> I'll have ye chronicled and chronicled, and cut, <sup>26</sup> and chronicled, and all-to-be-prais'd and sung in

<sup>21</sup> Q<sub>1</sub> follows.

<sup>22</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub>; Q<sub>2</sub> et seq., um or 'em.

sonnets, and [bawl'd] <sup>27</sup> in new brave ballads, that all tongues shall troll you in saecula saeculorum, my kind can-carriers.

THRA. What if a toy <sup>28</sup> take 'em i' th' heels now, and they run all away, and cry, "The Devil take the hindmost"? 140

DION. Then the same Devil take the foremost too, and souse <sup>29</sup> him for his breakfast! If they all prove cowards, my curses fly among them, and be speeding! May they have mur-rains <sup>30</sup> reign to keep the gentlemen at home unbound <sup>31</sup> in easy frieze! <sup>32</sup> May the moths branch <sup>33</sup> their velvets, and their silks only be worn before sore eyes! <sup>34</sup> May their false lights <sup>35</sup> undo 'em, and discover presses, <sup>36</sup> holes, stains, and oldness in their stuffs, and [150 make them shop-rid! May they keep whores and horses, and break; <sup>37</sup> and live mewed up with necks of beef and turnips! May they have many children, and none like the father! May they know no language but that gibberish they prattle to their parcels, unless it be the goatish <sup>38</sup> Latin they write in their bonds—and may they write that false, and lose their debts!

Re-enter the KING.

KING. Now the vengeance of all the [160 gods confound them! How they swarm together! What a hum they raise!—Devils choke your wild throats!—If a man had need to use their valors, he must pay a brokerage for it, and then bring 'em on, and they will fight like sheep. 'T is Philaster, none but Philaster, must allay this heat. They will not hear me speak, but fling dirt at me and call me tyrant.—Oh, run, dear friend, and bring the Lord Philaster! Speak him fair; call him [170 prince; do him all the courtesy you can; commend me to him.—Oh, my wits, my wits!

Exit CLEREMONT.

DION. [aside] Oh, my brave countrymen! as I live, I will not buy a pin out of your walls <sup>39</sup> for this. Nay, you shall cozen me, and I'll thank you, and send you brawn and bacon, and

soil <sup>40</sup> you ever[y] long vacation a brace of foremen, <sup>41</sup> that at Michaelmas shall come up fat and kicking.

KING. What they will do with this poor [180 prince, the gods know, and I fear.

DION. [aside] Why, sir, they'll flay him, and make church-buckets <sup>42</sup> on 's skin, to quench rebellion; then clap a rivet in 's sconce <sup>43</sup> and hang him up for [a] sign.

Enter CLEREMONT with PHILASTER.

KING. Oh, worthy sir, forgive me! Do not make

Your miseries and my faults meet together,
To bring a greater danger. Be yourself,
Still sound amongst diseases. I have wrong'd
you;

And though I find it last, and beaten to it, [190 Let first your goodness know it. Calm the people,

And be what you were born to. Take your
love,

And with her my repentance, all my wishes,
And all my prayers. By the gods, my heart speaks this;

And if the least fall from me not perform'd,
May I be struck with thunder!

PHI.

Mighty sir,

I will not do your greatness so much wrong,
As not to make your word truth. Free the Princess

And the poor boy, and let me stand the shock
Of this mad sea-breach, which I'll either turn, 200

Or perish with it.

KING. Let your own word free them.

PHI. Then thus I take my leave, kissing your hand,

And hanging on your royal word. Be kingly,
And be not mov'd, sir. I shall bring [you] <sup>44</sup>
peace

Or never bring myself back.

KING. All the gods go with thee.

Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE IV] <sup>45</sup>

Enter an old Captain and Citizens with PHARAMOND.

CAP. Come, my brave myrmidons, let's fall on.

Let [your]<sup>46</sup> caps swarm, my boys, and your nimble tongues Forget your mother's gibberish of "What do you lack?"

And set your mouths [ope],<sup>47</sup> children, till your palates

Fall frightened half a fathom past the cure
Of bay-salt and gross pepper, and then cry
"Philaster, brave Philaster!" Let Philaster
Be deeper in request, my ding-dongs,<sup>48</sup>
My pairs of dear indentures,<sup>49</sup> kings of clubs,<sup>49</sup>
Than your cold-water-camlets,<sup>50</sup> or your paint-ings 10

Or your branch'd<sup>53</sup> cloth of bodkin,<sup>54</sup> or your tissues,

Dearly beloved of spiced cake and custards,
[You]<sup>55</sup> Robin Hoods, Scarlets, and Johns, tie your affections

In darkness to your shops. No, dainty duckers,<sup>56</sup>

Up with your three-pil'd<sup>57</sup> spirits, your wrought valors;<sup>58</sup>

And let your uncut cholers<sup>59</sup> make the King feel

The measure of your mightiness. Philaster!
Cry, my rose-nobles,<sup>60</sup> cry!

ALL. Philaster! Philaster!

CAP. How do you like this, my Lord Prince? 20

These are mad boys, I tell you; these are things

That will not strike their topsails to a foist,<sup>61</sup>
And let a man-of-war, an argosy,<sup>62</sup>

<sup>49</sup> I.e., apprentices; the articles of each apprenticeship were set forth in a pair of indentures, and their favorite weapon was the club.

<sup>60</sup> Gold coins worth at this time about $4.00 each, though originally less in value.

<sup>62</sup> A large merchantman, but here evidently with reference only to size. Philaster is apparently meant by this and by "man-of-war."

Hull<sup>63</sup> and cry cockles.<sup>64</sup>

PHA. Why, you rude slave, do you know what you do?

CAP. My pretty prince of puppets, we do know;

And give your Greatness warning that you talk
No more such bug's-words,<sup>65</sup> or that solder'd<sup>66</sup> crown

Shall be scratch'd with a musket.<sup>67</sup> Dear Prince Pippin,

Down with your noble blood, or, as I live, [30
I'll have you coddled.<sup>68</sup> — Let him loose, my spirits;

Make us a round ring with your bills,<sup>69</sup> my Hectors,

And let us see what this trim man dares do.

Now, sir, have at you! here I lie;

And with this [s]washing blow (do you see, sweet Prince?)

I could hulk<sup>70</sup> your Grace, and hang you up cross-legg'd,

Like a hare at a poulter's, and do this with this wiper.<sup>71</sup>

PHA. You will not see me murder'd, wicked villains?

1 CIT. Yes, indeed, will we, sir; we have not seen one

Fo[r] a great while.

CAP. He would have weapons, would he? 40

Give him a broadside,<sup>72</sup> my brave boys, with your pikes;

Branch me his skin in flowers like a satin,

And between every flower a mortal cut. —
Your royalty shall ravel! 73 — Jag him, gentlemen;

I'll have him cut to the kell,<sup>74</sup> then down the seams.

O for a whip to make him galoon-laces! 75

I'll have a coach-whip.

<sup>64</sup> Either (1) "be hanged" (according to Grose's Dict. of the Vulgar Tongue), in which case we must suppose that the metaphor changes abruptly; or (2) "engage in base traffic", suggested by the reading of Q<sub>1</sub>: Stoove to carry coales.

<sup>75</sup> Narrow, close-woven ribbon or braid used as trimming; i.e., as Thorndike notes, "to cut him into ribbons."

PHA. Oh, spare me, gentlemen!

CAP. Hold, hold;

The man begins to fear and know himself.

He shall for this time only be seel'd up,<sup>76</sup> [50
With a feather through his nose, that he may

See Heaven, and think whither he's going,
Nay, my beyond-sea sir, we will proclaim you:
You would<sup>77</sup> be king!

Thou tender heir apparent to a church-ale,<sup>78</sup>
Thou slight prince of single<sup>79</sup> sarcenet,
Thou royal ring-tail,<sup>80</sup> fit to fly at nothing
But poor men's poultry, and have every
boy

Beat thee from that too with his bread and butter!<sup>81</sup> 59

PHA. Gods keep me from these hell-hounds!

1 CIT. Shall's geld him, captain?

CAP. No, you shall spare his dowcets, my dear donzels;<sup>82</sup>

As you respect the ladies, let them flourish.

The curses of a longing woman kills

As speedy as a plague, boys.

1 CIT. I'll have a leg, that's certain.

2 CIT. I'll have an arm.

3 CIT. I'll have his nose, and at mine own charge build

A college and clap't upon the gate.<sup>83</sup>

4 CIT. I'll have his little gut to string a kit<sup>84</sup> with;

For certainly a royal gut will sound like silver. 70

PHA. Would they were in thy belly, and I past

My pain once!

5 CIT. Good captain, let me have his liver to feed ferrets.

CAP. Who will have parcels else? Speak.

PHA. Good gods, consider me! I shall be tortur'd.

CAP. No, sir, he's a pollard.<sup>86</sup>

What wouldst thou do with horns?

2 CIT. Oh, if he had had, [80

I would have made rare hafts and whistles of
'em;

But his shin bones, if they be sound, shall serve
me.

Enter PHILASTER.

ALL. Long live Philaster, the brave Prince
Philaster!

PHI. I thank you, gentlemen. But why are these

Rude weapons brought abroad, to teach your hands

Uncivil trades?

CAP. My royal Rosicleer,<sup>87</sup>

We are thy myrmidons, thy guard, thy roar-
ers;<sup>88</sup>

And when thy noble body is in durance,
Thus do we clap our musty murrions<sup>89</sup>
on,

And trace the streets in terror. Is it peace, [90
Thou Mars of men? Is the King sociable, And bids thee live? Art thou above thy foemen,

And free as Phoebus?<sup>90</sup> Speak. If not, this stand<sup>91</sup>

Of royal blood shall be abroach, a-tilt,

And run even to the lees of honor.

PHI. Hold, and be satisfied. I am myself;
Free as my thoughts are; by the gods, I am!

CAP. Art thou the dainty darling of the King?

Art thou the Hylas to our Hercules? 99
Do the lords bow, and the regarded scarlets<sup>92</sup> Kiss their gumm'd golls,<sup>93</sup> and cry, "We are your servants"?

Is the court navigable and the presence stuck With flags of friendship? If not, we are thy castle,

And this man sleeps.

<sup>93</sup> Perfumed hands.

PHI. I am what I do desire to be, your friend ;

I am what I was born to be, your prince.

PHA. Sir, there is some humanity in you ; You have a noble soul. Forget my name, And know my misery ; set me safe aboard From these wild cannibals, and, as I live, [110] I'll quit this land for ever. There is nothing, —

Perpetual prisonment, cold, hunger, sickness Of all sorts, of all dangers, and all together, The worst company of the worst men, madness, age,

To be as many creatures as a woman, And do as all they do, nay, to despair, — But I would rather make it a new nature, And live with all these, than endure one hour Amongst these wild dogs.

PHI. I do pity you. — Friends, discharge your fears : 120

Deliver me the Prince. I'll warrant you I shall be old enough to find my safety.

3 CIT. Good sir, take heed he does not hurt you ;

He's a fierce man, I can tell you, sir.

CAP. Prince, by your leave, I'll have a sur-cingle,<sup>94</sup>

And make<sup>95</sup> you like a hawk.

[PHARAMOND] strives.

PHI. Away, away, there is no danger in him ;

Alas, he had rather sleep to shake his fit off ! Look you, friends, how gently he leads ! Upon my word,

He's tame enough, he need[s] no further watching.<sup>96</sup> 130

Good my friends, go to your houses, And by me have your pardons and my love ; And know there shall be nothing in my power You may deserve, but you shall have your wishes.

To give you more thanks were to flatter you. Continue still your love ; and, for an earnest, Drink this. [Gives money.]

ALL. Long mayst thou live, brave Prince, brave Prince, brave Prince !

[Exeunt] PHILASTER and PHARAMOND.

CAP. Go thy ways ; thou art the king of courtesy !

Fall off again, my sweet youths. Come, [140] And every man trace to his house again,

And hang his pewter<sup>97</sup> up ; then to the tavern, And bring your wives in muffs.<sup>98</sup> We will have music ;

And the red grape shall make us dance and rise, boys. Exeunt.

[SCENE V] <sup>99</sup>

Enter KING, ARETHUSA, GALATEA, MEGRA, CLEREMONT, DION, THRASILINE, BELLARIO, and Attendants.

KING. Is it appeas'd ?

DION. Sir, all is quiet as this dead of night, As peaceable as sleep. My Lord Philaster Brings on the Prince himself.

KING. Kind gentlem[a]n ! <sup>100</sup> I will not break the least word I have given In promise to him. I have heap'd a world Of grief upon his head, which yet I hope To wash away.

Enter PHILASTER and PHARAMOND.

CLE. My Lord is come.

KING. My son !

Blest be the time that I have leave to call Such virtue mine ! Now thou art in mine arms, <sup>10</sup>

Methinks I have a salve unto my breast For all the stings that dwell there. Streams of grief

That I have [wrong'd] <sup>101</sup> thee, and as much of joy

That I repent it, issue from mine eyes ; Let them appease thee. Take thy right ; take her ;

She is thy right too ; and forget to urge My vexed soul with that I did before.

PHI. Sir, it is blotted from my memory, Past and forgotten. — For you, Prince of Spain,

Whom I have thus redeem'd, you have full leave <sup>20</sup>

To make an honorable voyage home. And if you would go furnish'd to your realm With fair provision, I do see a lady, Methinks, would gladly bear you company. How like you this piece ?

MEG. Sir, he likes it well, For he hath tried it, and hath found it worth His princely liking. We were ta'en abed ; I know your meaning. I am not the first

That nature taught to seek a fellow forth ;
Can shame remain perpetually in me, 30
And not in others? Or have princes salves
To cure ill names, that meaner people want?

PHI. What mean you?

MEG. You must get another ship,
To bear the Princess and her boy together.

DION. How now!

MEG. Others took me, and I took her and
him
At that all women may be ta'en sometime.
Ship us all four, my Lord ; we can endure
Weather and wind alike.

KING. Clear thou thyself, or know not me for father. 40

ARE. This earth, how false it is! What means is left for me
To clear myself? It lies in your belief.
My Lords, believe me ; and let all things else
Struggle together to dishonor me.

BEL. Oh, stop your ears, great King, that I may speak
As freedom would ! Then I will call this lady
As base as are her actions. Hear me, sir ;
Believe your heated blood when it rebels
Against your reason, sooner than this lady.

MEG. By this good light, he bears it handsomely. 50

PHI. This lady ! I will sooner trust the wind
With feathers, or the troubled sea with pearl,
Than her with anything. Believe her not.
Why, think you, if I did believe her words,
I would outlive 'em? — Honor cannot take Revenge on you ; then what were to be known
But death?

KING. Forget her, sir, since all is knit Between us. But I must request of you
One favor, and will sadly <sup>102</sup> be denied.

PHI. Command, whate'er it be.

KING. Swear to be true [60
To what you promise.

PHI. By the Powers above,
Let it not be the death of her or him,
And it is granted !

KING. Bear away that boy
To torture ; I will have her clear'd or buried.

PHI. Oh, let me call my word back, worthy
sir !

Ask something else ; bury my life and right
In one poor grave ; but do not take away
My life and fame at once.

KING. Away with him ! It stands irrevocable.

<sup>102</sup> It will be a grievous matter if I am denied.

PHI. Turn all your eyes on me. Here stands a man, 70
The falsest and the basest of this world.
Set swords against this breast, some honest
man,

For I have liv'd till I am pitied !
My former deeds were hateful ; but this last
Is pitiful, for I unwillingly
Have given the dear preserver of my life
Unto his torture. Is it in the power
Of flesh and blood to carry this, and live?

Offers to kill himself.

ARE. Dear sir, be patient yet ! Oh, stay
that hand !

KING. Sirs, strip that boy.

DION. Come, sir ; your tender flesh [80
Will [try] <sup>103</sup> your constancy.

BEL. Oh, kill me, gentlemen !

DION. No. — Help, sirs.

BEL. Will you torture me?

KING. Haste there ;

Why stay you?

BEL. Then I shall not break my vow,
You know, just gods, though I discover all.

KING. How's that? Will he confess?

DION. Sir, so he says.

KING. Speak then.

BEL. Great King, if you command
This lord to talk with me alone, my tongue,
Urg'd by my heart, shall utter all the thoughts
My youth hath known ; and stranger thing <sup>104</sup> than these

You hear not often.

KING. Walk aside with him. [90
[DION and BELLARIO walk apart.]

DION. Why speak'st thou not?

BEL. Know you this face, my Lord?

DION. No.

BEL. Have you not seen it, nor the like?

DION. Yes, I have seen the like, but readily
I know not where.

BEL. I have been often told
In court of one Euphrasia, a lady,
And daughter to you ; betwixt whom and
me

They that would flatter my bad face would swear

There was such strange resemblance, that we two

Could not be known asunder, dress'd alike.

DION. By Heaven, and so there is !

BEL. For her fair sake, [100
Who now doth spend the springtime of her life

<sup>103</sup> Q, tire.

<sup>104</sup> So Harvard copy of Q; ; later Qq and F; things.

In holy pilgrimage, move to the King,
That I may scape this torture.

DION. But thou speak'st
As like Euphrasia as thou dost look.
How came it to thy knowledge that she lives
In pilgrimage?

BEL. I know it not, my Lord;
But I have heard it, and do scarce believe it.
DION. Oh, my shame! is 't possible?
Draw near,

That I may gaze upon thee. Art thou she,
Or else her murderer? <sup>106</sup> Where wert thou
born? 110

BEL. In Syracusa.

DION. What's thy name?

BEL. Euphrasia.

DION. Oh, 't is just; <sup>106</sup> 't is she!
Now I do know thee. Oh, that thou hadst
died,
And I had never seen thee nor my shame!
How shall I own thee? Shall this tongue of mine
E'er call thee daughter more?

BEL. Would I had died indeed! I wish it
too;
And so I must have done by vow, ere publish'd
What I have told, but that there was no means
To hide it longer. Yet I joy in this: 120
The Princess is all clear.

KING. What, have you done?

DION. All's discovered.

PHI. Why then hold you me?
All is discovered! Pray you, let me go.
He offers to stab himself.

KING. Stay him.

ARE. What is discovered?

DION. Why, my shame.
It is a woman; let her speak the rest.

PHI. How? That again!

DION. It is a woman.

PHI. Bless'd be you powers that favor innocence!

KING. Lay hold upon that lady.

[MEGRA is seized.]

PHI. It is a woman, sir! — Hark, gentle-
men,

It is a woman! — Arethusa, take 130
My soul into thy breast, that would be gone
With joy. It is a woman! Thou art fair,
And virtuous still to ages, in despite
Of malice.

KING. Speak you, where lies his shame?

BEL. I am his daughter.

PHI. The gods are just.

DION. I dare accuse none; but, before you
two,
The virtue of our age, I bend my knee
For mercy.

PHI. Take it freely; for I know,
Though what thou didst were indiscreetly
done,

'T was meant well.

ARE. And for me, I have a power [140
To pardon sins, as oft as any man
Has power to wrong me.

CLE. Noble and worthy!

PHI. But, Bellario,
(For I must call thee still so,) tell me why
Thou didst conceal thy sex. It was a fault,
A fault, Bellario, though thy other deeds
Of truth outweigh'd it; all these jealousies <sup>107</sup>
Had flown to nothing if thou hadst discovered
What now we know.

BEL. My father oft would speak
Your worth and virtue; and, as I did grow
More and more apprehensive, <sup>108</sup> I did thirst [150
To see the man so rais'd. <sup>109</sup> But yet all this Was but a maiden longing, to be lost
As soon as found; till, sitting in my window,
Printing my thoughts in lawn, I saw a god,
I thought, (but it was you,) enter our gates.
My blood flew out and back again, as fast
As I had puff'd it forth and suck'd it in Like breath. Then was I call'd away in haste
To entertain you. Never was a man, <sup>159</sup>
Heav'd from a sheepcote to a sceptre, rais'd
So high in thoughts as I. You left a kiss <sup>110</sup>
Upon these lips then, which I mean to keep
From you for ever. I did hear you talk,
Far above singing. After you were gone,
I grew acquainted with my heart, and search'd
What stirr'd it so; alas, I found it love!
Yet far from lust; for, could I but have liv'd
In presence of you, I had had my end.
For this I did delude my noble father
With a feign'd pilgrimage, and dress'd myself
In habit of a boy; and, for I knew <sup>171</sup>
My birth no match for you, I was past hope
Of having you; and, understanding well
That when I made discovery of my sex
I could not stay with you, I made a vow,
By all the most religious things a maid

Whilst there was hope to hide me from men's
eyes,

For other than I seem'd, that I might ever Abide with you. Then sat I by the fount, [180
Where first you took me up.

KING. Search out a match Within our kingdom, where and when thou wilt,
And I will pay thy dowry ; and thyself
Wilt well deserve him.

BEL. Never, sir, will I
Marry ; it is a thing within my vow ;
But, if I may have leave to serve the Princess,
To see the virtues of her lord and her,
I shall have hope to live.

ARE. I, Philaster,
Cannot be jealous, though you had a lady
Dress'd like a page to serve you ; nor will I [190 Suspect her living here. — Come, live with
me ;

Live free as I do. She that loves my lord,
Curs'd be the wife that hates her !

PHI. I grieve such virtue should be laid in
earth
Without an heir. — Hear me, my royal father :

Wrong not the freedom of our souls so much,
To think to take revenge of that base woman ;
Her malice cannot hurt us. Set her free

As she was born, saving from shame and sin.
KING. Set her at liberty. — But leave the
court ; 200

This is no place for such. — You, Pharamond,
Shall have free passage, and a conduct home Worthy so great a prince. When you come
there,

Remember 't was your faults that lost you her,
And not my purpos'd will.

PHA. I do confess,
Renowned sir.

KING. Last, join your hands in one. Enjoy,
Philaster,
This kingdom, which is yours, and, after me,
Whatever I call mine. My blessing on you !
All happy hours be at your marriage joys,
That you may grow yourselves over all lands, 211

And li[v]e to see your plenteous branches spring
Wherever there is sun ! — Let princes learn
By this to rule the passions of their blood ;
For what Heaven wills can never be withstood.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

FEW plays in the London repertory achieved the popularity that The Maid's Tragedy held throughout the reigns of the Stuarts. Originally acted by the King's Men, it was speedily revived under the Restoration. Hart and Mohun of the new King's Men were celebrated as Amintor and Melantius; and, after the union of the companies in 1682, Thomas Betterton, the most eminent actor of the period, found in the latter one of his greatest rôles. Though it is probable that his performance of several of Shakespeare's heroes has never been surpassed, Betterton chose Melantius for his famous farewell appearance in 1710.

The play has obvious faults, but its power is undeniable. Largely written by the author of The Knight of the Burning Pestle, it must none the less be accepted as a sincerely romantic drama, beside which the most exuberant tragedies of Shakespeare's maturity seem almost severely realistic. We miss the Shakesperean care for the integrity of human character, which is here occasionally sacrificed to a theatrical exploitation of situation; but the play tells an absorbing story, contains several confrontation scenes that offer a tragic actor the fullest scope for his art, and is composed in a style of remarkable vigor and, at times, great beauty.

Whether or not The Maid's Tragedy was written before Philaster we have no means of knowing. It antedates October 31, 1611, when a Second Maiden's Tragedy, a play in MS, was so entitled and licensed by Sir George Buck, the Master of the Revels. It was acted at court in 1612-1613. No source for the plot is known. Beaumont's share is supposed to be the greater in this play; Fletcher's hand seems more evident in IV, i, and in V, i, ii, and iii.

The First Quarto, of 1619, presents an inferior text, which is evidently the result of cutting and unauthorized tampering. As in the case of Philaster, however, some of its readings are pretty clearly more authentic than variants in the Second Quarto, of 1622, on which, with a few corrections from the other Quartos and the Folio of 1679, the present text is based. The other Quartos appeared in 1630 (with the first ascription of the play to Beaumont and Fletcher), 1638, 1641, 1650, 1661, 1686, 1704, and 1717. It was edited for the Bullen Variorum by P. A. Daniel (1904), and with Philaster by A. H. Thorndike (1906).

Enter CLEON, STRATO, LYSIPPUS, [and]
DIPHILUS.

CLE. The rest are making ready, sir. ✓

[LYS.]<sup>3</sup> So let them; there's time enough.

DIPH. You are the brother to the King, my
Lord;

We'll take your word.

LYS. Strato, thou hast some skill in poetry;
What think'st [thou]<sup>4</sup> of a ' masque? Will it be well?

STRA. As well as masques can be.

LYS. As masques can be!

STRA. Yes; they must commend their king, and speak in praise
Of the assembly, bless the bride and bridegroom

In person of some god; they're tied to rules
Of flattery.

CLE. See, good my Lord, who is return'd! 11

Enter MELANTIUS.

LYS. Noble Melantius, the land by me
Welcomes thy virtues home to Rhodes;

Thou that with blood abroad buyest our peace!
The breath of kings is like the breath of gods;
My brother wish'd thee here, and thou art
here.

He will be too kind, and weary thee
With often welcomes; but the time doth give
thee

A welcome above his or all the world's.

MEL. My Lord, my thanks; but these scratch'd limbs of mine 20

Have spoke my love and truth unto my
friends,

More than my tongue e'er could. My mind's
the same

It ' ever was to you; where I find worth,
I love the keeper till he let it go,
And then I follow it.

DIPH. Hail, worthy Brother!
He that rejoices not at your return
In safety is mine enemy for ever.

MEL. I thank thee, Diphilus. But thou art faulty;

I sent for thee to exercise thine arms

Lys. 'T is [most] <sup>8</sup> true, Melantius ;
He might not come till the solemnities <sup>9</sup>
Of this great match were past.

DIPH. Have you heard of it ?

MEL. Yes, [and] <sup>9</sup> have given cause to those that [here] <sup>10</sup>

Envy my deeds abroad to call me gamesome :
I have no other business here at Rhodes.

Lys. We have a masque to-night, and you must tread

A soldier's measure. <sup>11</sup> 40

MEL. These soft and silken wars are not
for me ;

The music must be shrill and all confus'd
That stirs my blood, and then I dance with arms.

But is Amintor wed ?

DIPH. This day.

MEL. All joys upon him ! for he is my friend.

Wonder not that I call a man so young my
friend :

His worth is great ; valiant he is and temperate ;

And one that never thinks his life his own,
If his friend need it. When he was a boy,
As oft as I return'd (as, without boast, 50
I brought home conquest), he would gaze
upon me

And view me round, to find in what one limb
The virtue <sup>12</sup> lay to do those things he heard ;
Then would he wish to see my sword, and feel
The quickness <sup>13</sup> of the edge, and in his hand Weigh it. He oft would make me smile at this.

His youth did promise much, and his ripe years
Will see it all perform'd. —

Enter ASPATIA, passing by.

Hail, maid and wife !

Thou fair Aspatia, may the holy knot
That thou hast tied to-day last till the hand
Of age undo't ! Mayst thou bring a race [61
Unto Amintor that may fill the world
Successively with soldiers !

Asp. My hard fortunes

Deserve not scorn, for I was never proud
When they were good. Exit ASPATIA.

MEL. How's this ?

Lys. You are mistaken, for
She is not married.

MEL. You said Amintor was.

DIPH. 'T is true ; but —

MEL. Pardon me ; I did receive Letters at Patria from my Amintor,
That he should marry her.

DIPH. And so it stood
In all opinion long ; but your arrival 70
Made me imagine you had heard the change.

MEL. Who hath he taken then ?

Lys. A lady, sir,
That bears the light [above] <sup>14</sup> her, and strikes
dead

With flashes of her eye : the fair Evadne,
Your virtuous sister.

MEL. Peace of heart betwixt them !
But this is strange.

Lys. The King, my brother, did it
To honor you ; and these solemnities
Are at his charge.

MEL. 'T is royal, like himself. But I am
sad

My speech bears so unfortunate a sound 80
To beautiful Aspatia. There is rage
Hid in her father's breast, Calianax, Bent long against me ; and he should not think,

If I could call it back, that I would take
So base revenges as to scorn the state
Of his neglected daughter. Holds he still His greatness with the King ?

Lys. Yes. But this lady
Walks discontented, with her wat'ry eyes
Bent on the earth. The unfrequented woods
Are her delight ; and when she sees a bank [90
Stuck full of flowers, she with a sigh will tell Her servants what a pretty place it were
To bury lovers in, and make her maids
Pluck 'em and strow her over like a corse.
She carries with her an infectious grief,
That strikes all her beholders ; she will sing
The mournfull'st things that ever ear hath heard,

And sigh, and sing again ; and when the rest
Of our young ladies, in their wanton blood, <sup>15</sup> Tell mirthful tales in course, <sup>16</sup> that fill the room. 100

With laughter, she will, with so sad a look,
Bring forth a story of the silent death
Of some forsaken virgin, which her grief

Will put in such a phrase that, ere she end,
She'll send them weeping one by one away.

MEL. She has a brother under my command,<sup>17</sup>

Like her, a face as womanish as hers,
But with a spirit that hath much outgrown
The number of his years.

Enter AMINTOR.

CLE. My Lord<sup>18</sup> the bridegroom!

MEL. I might run fiercely, not more hastily, 110

Upon my foe. I love thee well, Amintor;
My mouth is much too narrow for my heart;
I joy to look upon those eyes of thine;
Thou art my friend, but my disordered speech
Cuts off my love.

AMIN. Thou art Melantius;
All love is spoke in that. — A sacrifice,
To thank the gods Melantius is return'd
In safety! — Victory sits on his sword, As she was wont. May she build there and dwell;

And may thy armor be, as it hath been, 120
Only thy valor and thine innocence!

What endless treasures would our enemies
give,

That I might hold thee still<sup>19</sup> thus!

MEL. I am poor
In words; but credit me, young man, thy mother

Could [do]<sup>20</sup> no more but weep for joy to see
thee

After long absence. All the wounds I have<sup>21</sup>
Fetch'd not so much away, nor all the cries
Of widowed mothers. But this is peace,
And that was war.

AMIN. Pardon, thou holy god
Of marriage bed, and frown not, I am forc'd,
In answer of such noble tears as those, 131
To weep upon my wedding day!

MEL. I fear thou art grown too fickle; for
I hear

A lady mourns for thee, men say, to death,
Forsaken of thee, on what terms<sup>22</sup> I know not.

AMIN. She had my promise; but the King forbade it,

And made me make this worthy change, thy
sister,

MESS. My Lord, the masquers rage for you.

LYS. We are gone. —

We shall trouble you

With our solemnities.

MEL. Not so, Amintor;

But if you laugh at my rude carriage
In peace, I'll do as much for you in war,
When you come thither. Yet I have a mis-

I have a mistress, and she has a heart [149

[SCENE II]<sup>27</sup>

Enter CALIANAX with DIAGORAS.

CAL. Diagoras, look to the doors better, for shame! You let in all the world, and anon the King will rail at me. — Why, very well said.<sup>28</sup>
By Jove, the King will have the show i' th'
court!

DIAG. Why do you swear so, my Lord?
You know he'll have it here.

CAL. By this light, if he be wise, he will not.

DIAG. And if he will not be wise, you are forsworn. 10

CAL. One may [sweat]<sup>29</sup> his heart out with swearing, and get thanks on no side.
I'll be gone, look to 't who will.

DIAG. My Lord, I shall never keep them out. Pray, stay; your looks will terrify
them.

CAL. My looks terrify them, you cox-combly<sup>30</sup> ass, you! I'll be judge[d] by all the company whether thou hast not a worse face than I. 20

your office.

<sup>30</sup> Silly.

CAL. Office!<sup>31</sup> I would I could put it off! I am sure I sweat quite through my office.<sup>32</sup> I might have made room at my daughter's wedding; — they ha' near kill'd her amongst them; and now I must do service for him that hath forsaken her. Serve that will!

Exit CALIANAX.

DIAG. He's so humorous<sup>33</sup> since his daughter was forsaken! (Knock within.) Hark, [30 hark! there, there! so, so! codes, codes!<sup>34</sup> What now?

MEL. (within) Open the door.

DIAG. Who's there?

MEL. [within] Melantius.

DIAG. I hope your Lordship brings no troop with you; for, if you do, I must return them.<sup>35</sup> [Opens the door.]

Enter MELANTIUS and a Lady.

MEL. None but this lady, sir.

DIAG. The ladies are all plac'd above, [40 save those that come in the King's troop; the best of Rhodes sit there, and there's room.

MEL. I thank you, sir. — When I have seen you placed, madam, I must attend the King; but, the masque done, I'll wait on you again.

DIAG. [opening another door] Stand back there! — Room for my Lord Melantius! [Exit MELANTIUS (with) Lady, (at) other door.]<sup>36</sup> — Pray, bear back — this is no place for [50 such youth and their trulls<sup>37</sup> — let the doors shut again. — Ay, do your heads itch? I'll scratch<sup>38</sup> them for you. [Shuts the door.] — So, now thrust and hang. [Knocking within.] — Again! who is't now? — I cannot blame my Lord Calianax for going away; would he were here! He would run raging amongst them, and break a dozen wiser heads than his own<sup>39</sup> in the twinkling of an eye. — What's the news now? 60

Within. I pray you, can you help me to the speech of the master-cook?

DIAG. If I open the door, I'll cook some of your calves heads. Peace, rogues! [Knocking within.] — Again! who is't?

MEL. (within) Melantius.

Re-enter CALIANAX to MELANTIUS.

CAL. Let him not in.

DIAG. O, my Lord, 'a must. [Opens the door.] — Make room there for my Lord. — Is your lady plac'd? 70

[Re-enter MELANTIUS.]<sup>40</sup>

MEL. Yes, sir.

I thank you. — My Lord Calianax, well met. Your causeless hate to me I hope is buried.

CAL. Yes, I do service for your sister here, That brings mine own poor child to timeless<sup>41</sup> death.

She loves your friend Amintor, such another False-hearted lord as you.

MEL. You do me wrong, A most unmanly one, and I am slow In taking vengeance; but be well advis'd.

CAL. It may be so. — Who plac'd the lady there 80

So near the presence of the King?

MEL. I did.

CAL. My Lord, she must not sit there.

MEL. Why?

CAL. The place is kept for women of more worth.

MEL. More worth than she! It misbecomes your age

And place to be thus womanish; forbear! What you have spoke I am content to think The palsy shook your tongue to.

CAL. Why, 't is well, If I stand here to place men's wenches.

MEL. I

Shall [quite]<sup>42</sup> forget this place, thy age, my safety,

And, through<sup>43</sup> all, cut that poor sickly week Thou hast to live away from thee. 91

CAL. Nay, I know you can fight for your whore.

MEL. Bate<sup>44</sup> the King, and, be he flesh and blood,

MEL. That heap of age, which I should

Are most contemptible.

AMIN. Good sir, forbear.

CAL. There is just such another as yourself.

AMIN. He will wrong you, or me, or any
man,
And talk as if he had no life to lose,
Since this our match. The King is coming in;
I would not for more wealth than I enjoy
He should perceive you raging. He did hear
You were at difference now, which hast'ned him. Hautboys play within.

CAL. Make room there! 120

Enter KING, EVADNE, ASPATIA, Lords, and Ladies.

KING. Melantius, thou art welcome, and my love
Is with thee still; but this is not a place
To brabble <sup>48</sup> in. — Calianax, join hands.

CAL. He shall not have mine hand.

KING. This is no time
To force you to't. I do love you both: —
Calianax, you look well to your office; —
And you, Melantius, are welcome home.
Begin the masque.

MEL. Sister, I joy to see you and your choice;
You look'd with my eyes when you took that
man. 130

Can be unto me.

THE MASQUE

NIGHT rises in mists.<sup>47</sup>

NIGHT. Our reign is come; for in the raging <sup>48</sup> sea

The sun is drown'd, and with him fell the Day.

Bright Cynthia, hear my voice! I am the Night,

For whom thou bear'st about thy borrowed
light.

Appear! no longer thy pale visage shroud,
But strike thy silver horns quite through a cloud,

And send a beam upon my swarthy face,
By which I may discover all the place

And persons, and how many longing eyes/
Are come to wait on our solemnities. 10

Enter CYNTHIA.

How dull and black am I! I could not find
This beauty <sup>49</sup> without thee, I am so blind:
Methinks they show like to those eastern streaks

That warn us hence before the morning breaks.
Back, my pale servant! for these eyes know
how

To shoot far more and quicker rays than thou.

CYNTH. Great Queen, they be a troop for whom alone

One of my clearest moons I have put on;
A troop that looks as if thyself and I
Had pluck'd our reins in and our whips laid
by, 20

To gaze upon these mortals, that appear Brighter than we.

NIGHT. Then let us keep 'em here,
And never more our chariots drive away,
But hold our places and outshine the Day.

CYNTH. Great Queen of shadows, you are pleas'd to speak

Of more than may be done. We may not break

The gods' decrees; but, when our time is
come,

Must drive away, and give the Day our room.
Yet, whilst our reign lasts, let us stretch our
power,

To give our servants one contented hour, 30
With such unwonted solemn grace and state
As may forever after force them hate

<sup>47</sup> Perhaps represented by dancers.

<sup>48</sup> Q: quenching.

<sup>49</sup> With a gesture toward the ladies of the audience

Our brother's glorious beams, and wi[s]h<sup>50</sup>
the Night
Crown'd with a thousand stars and our cold
light ;
For almost all the world their service bend
To Phoebus, and in vain my light I lend,
Gaz'd on unto my setting from my rise
Almost of none but of unquiet eyes.

NI<sup>HT</sup>. Then shine at full, fair Queen, and by thy power

Produce a birth, to crown this happy hour, [40
Of nymphs and shepherds ; let their songs
discover,

Easy and sweet, who is a happy lover ;
Or, if thou woo 't,<sup>51</sup> then call thine own Endymion

From the sweet flow'ry bed<sup>52</sup> he lies upon,
On Latmus<sup>53</sup> top,<sup>54</sup> thy pale beams drawn
away,

And of [his]<sup>55</sup> long night let him make this<sup>56</sup>
day.

CYNTH. Thou dream'st, dark Queen ; that fair boy was not mine,
Nor went I down to kiss him. Ease and wine Have bred these bold tales ; poets, when they rage,<sup>57</sup>

Turn gods to men, and make an hour an age.
But I will give a greater state and glory, [51
And raise to time a [nobler]<sup>58</sup> memory
Of what these lovers are. — Rise, rise, I say,
Thou power of deeps, thy surges laid away,
Neptune, great king of waters, and by me
Be proud to be commanded !

NEPTUNE rises.

NEPT. Cynthia, see,
Thy word hath fetch'd me hither ; let me
know
Why I ascend.

CYNTH. Doth this majestic show
Give thee no knowledge yet ?

NEPT. Yes, now I see Something intended, Cynthia, worthy thee.
Go on ; I'll be a helper.

CYNTH. Hie thee, then, 61
And charge the Wind go<sup>59</sup> from his rocky den,
Let loose his subjects ; only Boreas,
Too foul for our intentions as he was,
Still keep him fast chain'd : we must have none here

Bring on in couples we are pleas'd to grace [70
This noble night, each in their richest things
Your own deeps or the broken vessel brings.
Be prodigal, and I shall be as kind
And shine at full upon you.

NEPT. Oh, the Wind !<sup>60</sup>
Commanding Aeolus !

Enter AEOLUS out of a rock.

AEOL. Great Neptune !
NEPT. He.

AEOL. What is thy will ?
NEPT. We do command thee free

Favonius and thy milder winds, to wait
Upon our Cynthia ; but tie Boreas strait :<sup>61</sup>
He's too rebellious.

AEOL. I shall do it. [Exit AEOLUS.]
NEPT. Do.

and all below, 80
Thy full command has taken. — Oh, the Neptune !

NEPT. Here.

[Re-enter AEOLUS, followed by FAVONIUS and other Winds.]

AEOL. Boreas has broke his chain,
And, struggling with the rest, has got away.

NEPT. Let him alone, I'll take him up at
sea ;

He<sup>62</sup> will not long be thence. Go once
again,

And call out of the bottoms of the main
Blue<sup>63</sup> Proteus and the rest ; charge them

[FIRST] SONG

[During which PROTEUS and other Sea-deities enter.]

Cynthia, to thy power and thee
We obey.
Joy to this great company!
And no day
Come to steal this night away, 100
Till the rites of love are ended,
And the lusty bridegroom say,
"Welcome, light, of all befriended!"
Pace out, you watery powers below;
(Let your feet,
Like the galleys when they row,
Even beat.
Let your unknown measures, set
To the still winds, tell to all
That gods are come, immortal, great, 110
To honor this great nuptial.

The Measure.<sup>66</sup>

SECOND SONG

Hold back thy hours, dark Night, till we have done;
The Day will come too soon;
Young maids will curse thee, if thou steal'st away,
And leav'st their [losses] <sup>67</sup> open to the day;
Stay, stay, and hide
The blushes of the bride.
Stay, gentle Night, and with thy darkness cover
The kisses of her lover;
Stay, and confound her tears and her shrill cryings,
Her weak denials, vows, and often-dyings; 121
Stay, and hide all;
But help not, though she call.

NEPT. Great Queen of us and Heaven, hear what I bring
To make this hour a full one.<sup>68</sup>

CYNTH. Speak, sea's King.

NEPT. Thy tunes my Amphitrite joys to
have,
When [she] <sup>69</sup> will dance upon the rising wave,
And court me as [s]he sails. My Tritons,
play
Music to [lay] <sup>70</sup> a storm! I'll lead the way.
[Masquers dance; NEPTUNE leads it.] <sup>71</sup>

THIRD SONG

To bed, to bed! Come, Hymen, lead the bride, 130
And lay her by her husband's side;
Bring in the virgins every one,
That grieve to lie alone,

<sup>71</sup> After the second song Q<sub>1</sub> has this stage direction and proceeds with l. 128, omitting what intervenes. Other old eds. Measure.

That they may kiss while they may say a maid;
To-morrow 't will be other kiss'd and said.
Hesperus, be long a-shining,
Whilst these lovers are a-twining.

AEOL. [within] Ho, Neptune!

NEPT. Aeolus!

[Re-enter AEOLUS.]

AEOL. The sea goes high,
Boreas hath rais'd a storm: go and apply
Thy trident; else, I prophesy, ere day 140
Many a tall ship will be cast away.
Descend with all the <sup>72</sup> gods and all their power,
To strike a calm.

CYNTH. [We thank you for this hour:
My favor to you all.] <sup>73</sup> To gratulate
So great a service, done at my desire,
Ye shall have many floods, fuller and higher Than you have wish'd for; [and] <sup>74</sup> no ebb shall dare

To let the Day see where your dwellings are.
Now back unto your government in haste,
Lest your proud charge <sup>75</sup> should swell above
the waste, <sup>76</sup> 150

And win upon the island.

NEPT. We obey.

NEPTUNE descends and the Sea-gods. [Exeunt FAVONIUS and other Winds.]

CYNTH. Hold up thy head, dead Night;
seest thou not Day?

The east begins to lighten. I must down,
And give my brother place.

NIGHT. Oh, I could frown

To see the Day, the Day that flings his light
Upon my kingdoms and contemns old Night!
Let him go on and flame! I hope to see Another wildfire in his axletree,<sup>77</sup>

And all fall drench'd.<sup>78</sup> But I forget. — Speak, Queen:

The Day grows on; I must no more be
seen. 160

CYNTH. Heave up thy drowsy head again and see

A greater light, a greater majesty, Between our [set] <sup>79</sup> and us! Whip up thy team;

<sup>72</sup> Theobald emends thy, perhaps rightly.

CYNTH. I into Day.

Finis Masque.

KING. Take lights there! — Ladies, get the bride to bed. —

We will not see you laid; good night, Amin-tor;

We'll ease you of that tedious ceremony.

Were it my case, I should think time run slow.

If thou beest noble, youth, get me a boy, [171 That may defend my kingdoms from my foes.

AMIN. All happiness to you!

KING. Good night, Melantius.

Exeunt.

ACT II — [SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter EVADNE, (ASPATIA) (DULA), and other Ladies.

DULA. Madam, shall we undress you for this fight?

The wars are nak'd that you must make to-night.

EVAD. You are very merry, Dula.

DULA. I should be Far merrier, madam, if it were with me As it is with you.

[EVAD. How's that?

DULA. That I might go To bed with him wi' th' credit that you do.]<sup>2</sup>

EVAD. Why, how now, wench?

DULA. Come, ladies, will you help?

EVAD. I am soon undone.

DULA. And as soon done;

Good store of clothes will trouble you at both.

EVAD. Art thou drunk, Dula?

DULA. Why, here's none but we. [10

<sup>30</sup> Ray. These lines are another compliment to the brilliance of the audience, though the ostensible object of the flattery is the King of the play. EVAD. Thou think'st belike there is no modesty

When we are alone.

DULA. Ay, by my troth, you hit my thoughts aright.

EVAD. You prick me, lady.

I LADY. 'T is against my will.

DULA. Anon you must endure more and lie still;

You're<sup>3</sup> best to practise.

EVAD. Sure, this wench is mad.

DULA. No, faith, this is a trick that I have had

Since I was fourteen.

EVAD. 'T is high time to leave it.

DULA. Nay, now I'll keep it till the trick leave me.

A dozen wanton words put in your head [20 Will make you livelier in your husband's bed.

EVAD. Nay, faith, then take it.<sup>4</sup>

DULA. Take it, madam! Where?

We all, I hope, will take it that are here.

EVAD. Nay, then I'll give you o'er.

DULA. So will I make

The ablest man in Rhodes, or his heart ache.

EVAD. Wilt take<sup>5</sup> my place to-night?

DULA. I'll hold your cards

Against any two I know.

EVAD. What wilt thou do?

DULA. Madam, we'll do't, and make 'em leave play too.

EVAD. Aspatia, take her part.

DULA. I will refuse it: [29 She will pluck down a side;<sup>6</sup> she does not use it.

EVAD. Why, do, [I prithee.]<sup>7</sup>

DULA. You will find the play Quickly, because your head lies well that way.

EVAD. I thank thee, Dula. Would thou couldst instil

Some of thy mirth into Aspatia!

Nothing but sad thoughts in her breast do dwell;

Methinks, a mean betwixt you would do well.

DULA. She is in love; hang me, if I were so,

But I could run my country.<sup>8</sup> I love too

To do those things that people in love do.

ASP. It were a timeless<sup>9</sup> smile should prove my cheek. 40

<sup>8</sup> Drive my country at a hot pace. (Thorndike.)

<sup>9</sup> Untimely.

It were a fitter hour for me to laugh,
When at the altar the religious priest
Were pacifying the offended powers With sacrifice, than now. This should have been

My [rite];<sup>10</sup> and all your hands have been employ'd

In giving me a spotless offering
To young Amintor's bed, as we are now
For you. — Pardon, Evadne; would my worth
Were great as yours, or that the King, or he,
Or both, thought so! Perhaps he found me worthless;

But till he did so, in these ears of mine,
These credulous ears, he pour'd the sweetest
words

That art or love could frame. If he were false, Pardon it, Heaven! and, if I did want
Virtue, you safely may forgive that too;
For I have lost none that I had from you.

EVAD. Nay, leave this sad talk, madam.

ASP. Would I could!

Then I should leave the cause.

EVAD. See, if you have not spoil'd all Dula's mirth!

ASP. Thou think'st thy heart hard; but, if thou beest caught,

Remember me; thou shalt perceive a fire
Shot suddenly into thee.

DULA. That's not so good;
Let 'em shoot anything but fire, I fear 'em not.

ASP. Well, wench, thou mayst be taken.

EVAD. Ladies, good night; I'll do the rest
myself.

DULA. Nay, let your Lord do some.

ASP. [singing]

Lay a garland on my hearse
Of the dismal yew —

EVAD. That's one of your sad songs,
madam.

ASP. Believe me, 't is a very pretty one. [70]

EVAD. How is it, madam?

ASP.

SONG

Lay a garland on my hearse
Of the dismal yew;
Maidens, willow branches bear;
Say I died true.
My love was false, but I was firm
From my hour of birth;
Upon my buried body lay
Lightly, gentle earth!

EVAD. Fie on't, madam! The words are so strange, they

Are able to make one dream of hobgoblins. —
"I could never have the power" — sing that,
Dula.

DULA. [singing]

I could never have the power
To love one above an hour,
But my heart would prompt mine eye
On some other man to fly.
Venus, fix mine eyes fast,
Or, if not, give me all that I shall see at last!

EVAD. So; leave me now.

DULA. Nay, we must see you laid. 90

ASP. Madam, good night. May all the marriage joys

That longing maids imagine in their beds,
Prove so unto you! May no discontent Grow 'twixt your love and you! but, if there
do,

Inquire of me, and I will guide your moan;
And <sup>12</sup> teach you an artificial way to grieve,
To keep your sorrow waking. Love your lord

No worse than I; but, if you love so well,
Alas, you may displease him! so did I.

This is the last time you shall look on me. —
Ladies, farewell. As soon as I am dead, [101 Come all and watch one night about my hearse;

Bring each a mournful story and a tear,
To offer at it when I go to earth;
With flattering ivy clasp my coffin round;
Write on my brow my fortune; let my bier
Be borne by virgins, that shall sing by course <sup>14</sup>
The truth of maids and perjuries of men.

EVAD. Alas, I pity thee.

OMNES. Madam, good night.

Exit EVADNE.

1 LADY. Come, we'll let in the bridegroom.

DULA. Where's my Lord? [110]

1 LADY. Here, take this light.

Enter AMINTOR.

DULA. You'll find her in the dark.

1 LADY. Your lady's scarce abed yet; you must help her.

ASP. Go, and be happy in your lady's love.
May all the wrongs that you have done to me
Be utterly forgotten in my death!
I'll trouble you no more; yet I will take
A parting kiss, and will not be denied.

[Kisses AMINTOR.]

You'll come, my Lord, and see the virgins weep

When I am laid in earth, though you yourself
Can know no pity. Thus I wind myself [120

Into this willow garland,<sup>15</sup> and am prouder
That I was once your love, though now refus'd,
Than to have had another true to me.

So with [my]<sup>16</sup> prayers I leave you, and must try
Some yet unpractis'd way to grieve and die.

Exit ASPATIA.

DULA. Come, ladies, will you go?

OMNES. Good night, my Lord.

AMIN. Much happiness unto you all!

Exeunt Ladies.

I did that lady wrong. Methinks I feel Her <sup>17</sup> grief shoot suddenly through all my veins;

Mine eyes run;<sup>18</sup> this is strange at such a
time. 130

It was the King first mov'd me to't; but he Has not my will in keeping. Why do I Perplex myself thus? Something whispers
me.

"Go not to bed." My guilt is not so great
As mine own conscience, too sensible,<sup>19</sup>
Would make me think; I only brake a promise,

And 't was the King that forc'd me. Timor-ous flesh,

Why shak'st thou so? Away, my idle fears!

Re-enter EVADNE.

Yonder she is, the lustre of whose eye
Can blot away the sad remembrance<sup>20</sup> 140
Of all these things. — Oh, my Evadne, spare
That tender body; let it not take cold!
The vapors of the night will<sup>21</sup> not fall here.
To bed, my love; Hymen will punish us
For being slack performers of his rites.
Can'st thou to call me?

EVAD. No.

AMIN. Come, come, my love,
And let us lose ourselves to one another.
Why art thou up so long?

EVAD. I am not well.

AMIN. To bed then; let me wind thee in these arms

Till I have banish'd sickness.

EVAD. Good my Lord, [150
I cannot sleep.

AMIN. Evadne,<sup>22</sup> we'll watch; —
I mean no sleeping.

EVAD. I'll not go to bed.

AMIN. I prithee, do.

EVAD. I will not for the world.

<sup>15</sup> Symbol of rejected love.

AMIN. Why, my dear love?

EVAD. Why! I have sworn I will not.

AMIN. Sworn!

EVAD. Ay!

AMIN. How? Sworn, Evadne!

EVAD. Yes, sworn, Amintor; and will swear again,

If you will wish to hear me.

AMIN. To whom have you sworn this?

EVAD. If I should name him, the matter were not great.

AMIN. Come, this is but the coyness of a
bride. 160

EVAD. The coyness of a bride!

AMIN. How prettily

That frown becomes thee!

EVAD. Do you like it so?

AMIN. Thou canst not dress thy face in such a look

But I shall like it.

EVAD. What look likes you<sup>24</sup> best?

AMIN. Why do you ask?

EVAD. That I may show you one less pleasing to you.

AMIN. How's that?

EVAD. That I may show you one less pleasing to you.

AMIN. I prithee, put thy jests in milder
looks;

It shows as thou wert angry.

EVAD. So perhaps [170

I am indeed.

AMIN. Why, who has done thee wrong?

Name me the man, and by thyself I swear,
Thy yet unconquered self, I will revenge thee!

EVAD. Now I shall try thy truth. If thou dost love me,

Thou weigh'st not anything compar'd with me:
Life, honor, joys eternal, all delights

This world can yield, or hopeful people feign,

Or in the life to come, are light as air

To a true lover when his lady frowns,

And bids him, "Do this." Wilt thou kill this
man? [180

Swear, my Amintor, and I'll kiss the sin
Off from thy lips.

AMIN. I wo'<sup>25</sup> not swear, sweet love,
Till I do know the cause.

EVAD. I would thou wouldst.

Why, it is thou that wrong'st me; I hate thee;
Thou shouldst have kill'd thyself.

AMIN. If I should know that, I should quickly kill

The man you hated.

<sup>25</sup> Will.

EVAD. Know it, then, and do 't.

AMIN. Oh, no! what look soe'er thou shalt put on

To try my faith, I shall not think thee false ;
I cannot find one blemish in thy face, 190 Where falsehood should abide. Leave,<sup>26</sup> and to bed.

If you have sworn to any of the virgins
That were your old companions, to preserve
Your maidenhead a night, it may be done
Without this means.

EVAD. A maidenhead, Amintor,
At my years !

AMIN. Sure she raves ; — this cannot be [Her]<sup>27</sup> natural temper. — Shall I call thy maids ?

Either thy healthful sleep hath left thee long,
Or else some fever rages in thy blood.

EVAD. Neither, Amintor ; think you I am mad, 200
Because I speak the truth ?

AMIN. [Is this the truth ?]<sup>28</sup>
Will you not lie with me to-night ?

EVAD. To-night !
You talk as if [you thought]<sup>29</sup> I would hereafter.

AMIN. Hereafter ! yes, I do.

EVAD. You are deceiv'd.
Put off amazement, and with patience mark
What I shall utter, for the oracle
Knows nothing truer. 'T is not for a night
Or two that I forbear thy bed, but ever.

AMIN. I dream. Awake, Amintor !

EVAD. You hear right ;
I sooner will find out the beds of snakes, [210
And with my youthful blood warm their cold
flesh,

Letting them curl themselves about my limbs,
Than sleep one night with thee. This is not feign'd,

Nor sounds it like the coyness of a bride.

AMIN. Is flesh so earthly to endure all this ?
Are these the joys of marriage ? Hymen, keep
This story, that will make succeeding youth
Neglect thy ceremonies, from all ears ;
Let it not rise up, for thy shame and mine
To after ages ; we will scorn thy laws, 220
If thou no better bless them. Touch the heart.
Of her that thou hast sent me, or the world
Shall know ; there's not an altar that will smoke

In praise of thee ; we will adopt us sons ;

Then virtue shall inherit, and not blood.<sup>30</sup>
If we do lust, we'll take the next we meet,
Serving ourselves as other creatures do ;
And never take note of the female more,
Nor of her issue. — I do rage in vain ; 229
She can but jest. — Oh, pardon me, my love !
So dear the thoughts are that I hold of thee,
That I must break forth. Satisfy my fear ;
It is a pain, beyond the hand of death,
To be in doubt. Confirm it with an oath,
If this be true.

EVAD. Do you invent the form ;
Let there be in it all the binding words
Devils and conjurers can put together,
And I will take it. I have sworn before,
And here by all things holy do again,
Never to be acquainted with thy bed ! 240
Is your doubt over now ?

AMIN. I know too much ; would I had doubted still !

Was ever such a marriage night as this ! —
You Powers above, if you did ever mean Man should be us'd thus, you have thought a way

How he may bear himself, and save his honor :
Instruct me in it ; for to my dull eyes
There is no mean, no moderate course to run :
I must live scorn'd, or be a murderer ;
Is there a third ? — Why is this night so calm ?
Why does not Heaven speak in thunder to
us, 251

And drown her voice ?

EVAD. This rage will do no good.

AMIN. Evadne, hear me. Thou hast ta'en an oath,

But such a rash one that to keep it were Worse than to swear it. Call it back to thee ;
Such vows as those never ascend the Heaven ;
A tear or two will wash it quite away.
Have mercy on my youth, my hopeful youth,
If thou be pitiful ! for, without boast,
This land was proud of me. What lady was
there, 260

That men call'd fair and virtuous in this isle,
That would have shunn'd my love ? It is in
thee

To make me hold this worth. Oh, we vain
men,

That trust<sup>30</sup> all our reputation
To rest upon the weak and yielding hand
Of feeble woman ! But thou art not stone ;
Thy flesh is soft, and in thine eyes do[th] dwell
The spirit of love ; thy heart cannot be hard.
Come, lead me from the bottom of despair

<sup>30</sup> Q<sub>1</sub> et seq. add out.

To all the joys thou hast; I know thou wilt;
And make me careful lest the sudden
change 271

O'ercome my spirits.

EVAD. When I call back this oath,
The pains of hell environ me!

AMIN. I sleep, and am too temperate.

Come to bed!

Or by those hairs, which, if thou ha[d]st a soul
Like to thy locks, were threads for kings to wear

About their arms——

EVAD. Why, so perhaps they are.

AMIN. I'll drag thee to my bed, and make thy tongue

Undo this wicked oath, or on thy flesh
I'll print a thousand wounds to let out life! [280

EVAD. I fear thee not; do what thou dar'st
to me!

Every ill-sounding word or threat'ning look
Thou showest to me will be reveng'd at full.

AMIN. It will not, sure, Evadne?

EVAD. Do not you hazard that.

AMIN. Ha' ye your champions?

EVAD. Alas, Amintor, think'st thou I forbear

To sleep with thee because I have put on A maiden's strictness? Look upon these cheeks,

And thou shalt find the hot and rising blood
Unapt for such a vow. No; in this heart [290
There dwells as much desire and as much will
To put that wish'd act in practice as ever yet
Was known to woman; and they have been shown

Both. But it was the folly of thy youth
To think this beauty, to what [hand] <sup>31</sup> soe'er
It shall be call'd, shall stoop to any second.

I do enjoy the best, and in that height
Have sworn to stand or die. You guess the man.

AMIN. No; let me know the man that wronges me so,

That I may cut his body into motes, 300
And scatter it before the northern wind.

EVAD. You dare not strike him.

AMIN. Do not wrong me so.

Yes, if his body were a poisonous plant
That it were death to touch, I have a soul
Will throw me on him.

EVAD. Why, 't is the King.

AMIN. The King!

EVAD. What will you do now?

AMIN. 'T is not the King!

EVAD. What did he make this match for, dull Amintor?

AMIN. Oh, thou hast nam'd a word that wipes away——

All thoughts revengeful! In that sacred
name,

"The King," there lies a terror. What frail
man 310

Dares lift his hand against it? Let the gods Speak to him when they please; till when, let us

Suffer and wait.

EVAD. Why should you fill yourself so full of heat,

And haste so to my bed? I am no virgin.

AMIN. What devil put it in thy fancy, then,
To marry me?

EVAD. Alas, I must have one
To father children, and to bear the name
Of husband to me, that my sin may be [319
More honorable!

AMIN. What a strange thing am I!

EVAD. A miserable one; one that myself Am sorry for.

AMIN. Why, show it then in this:
If thou hast pity, though thy love be none,
Kill me; and all true lovers, that shall live
In after ages cross'd in their desires
Shall bless thy memory, and call thee good,
Because such mercy in thy heart was found,
To rid <sup>32</sup> a ling'ring wretch.

EVAD. I must have one
To fill thy room again, if thou wert dead;
Else, by this night, I would! I pity thee. [320

AMIN. These strange and sudden injuries have fall'n

So thick upon me that I lose all sense
Of what they are. Methinks I am not wrong'd;

Nor is it aught, if from the censuring world
I can but hide it. Reputation,

Thou art a word, no more! — But thou hast
shown

An impudence so high, that to the world
I fear thou wilt betray or shame thyself.

EVAD. To cover shame, I took thee; never fear

That I would blase <sup>33</sup> myself.

AMIN. Nor let the King [340
Know I conceive he wrongs me; then mine
honor

<sup>31</sup> Cor. Bullen; old eds. land. The figure is from hawking; note stoop in the next line, and leap in the next.

<sup>32</sup> Dispatch.

<sup>33</sup> Blazon, proclaim, publish.

Will thrust me into action ; that <sup>34</sup> my flesh
Could bear with patience. And it is some ease
To me in these extremes, that I know this Before I touch'd thee ; else, had all the sins
Of mankind stood betwixt me and the King,
I had gone through 'em to his heart and thine.
I have lost one desire : 't is not his crown
Shall buy me to thy bed, now I resolve <sup>35</sup>
He has dishonor'd thee. Give me thy hand ;
Be careful of thy credit, and sin close ; <sup>36</sup> [351
'T is all I wish. Upon thy chamber floor
I'll rest to-night, that morning visitors
May think we did as married people use ;
And, prithee, smile upon me when they come,
And seem to toy, as if thou hadst been pleased
With what we did.

EVAD. Fear not ; I will do this.

AMIN. Come, let us practise ; and, as wantonly

As ever loving bride and bridegroom met,
Let's laugh and enter here.

EVAD. I am content. [360

AMIN. Down all the swellings of my troubled heart !

When we walk thus entwin'd, let all eyes see
If ever lovers better did agree. Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>37</sup>

Enter ASPATIA, ANTIPHILA, [and] OLYMPIAS.

ASP. Away, you are not sad ! force it no further.

Good gods, how well you look ! Such a full color

Young bashful brides put on ; sure, you are new married !

ANT. Yes, madam, to your grief.

ASP. Alas, poor wenches !

Go learn to love first ; learn to lose yourselves ;
Learn to be flattered, and believe and bless
The double tongue that did it ; make a faith
Out of the miracles of ancient lovers,
Such as spake <sup>38</sup> truth and died in 't ; and, like
me,

Believe all faithful, and be miserable. 10

Did you ne'er love yet, wenches ? Speak,
Olympias ; <sup>39</sup>

Thou hast an easy temper, fit for stamp.

OLYM. Never.

<sup>34</sup> The situation, given that concealment (expressed in II. 340, 341).

<sup>36</sup> Secretly.

place in the old eds., where it follows I. 8 (Q. I. 7).

ASP. Nor you, Antiphila ?

ANT. Nor I.

ASP. Then, my good girls, be more than women, wise ;

At least be more than I was ; and be sure
You credit anything the light gives life to,
Before a man. Rather believe the sea
Weeps for the ruin'd merchant, when he roars ;
Rather, the wind courts but the pregnant sails, When the strong cordage cracks ; rather, the
sun 20

Comes but to kiss the fruit in wealthy autumn, When all falls blasted. If you needs must
love,

Forc'd by ill fate, take to your maiden bosoms
Two dead-cold aspics,<sup>40</sup> and of them make lovers.

They cannot flatter nor forswear ; one kiss
Makes a long peace for all. But man —

Oh, that beast man ! Come, let's be sad, my girls :

That downcast of thine eye, Olympias,
Shows a fine sorrow. — Mark, Antiphila ; [29
Just such another was the nymph Oenone's
When Paris brought home Helen. — Now, a tear ;

And then thou art a piece expressing fully
The Carthage queen,<sup>41</sup> when from a cold sea-rock, Dido

Full with her sorrow, she tied fast her eyes
To the fair Trojan ships ; and, having lost
them,

Just as thine does, down stole a tear. — An-tiphila,

What would this wench do, if she were Aspatia ?

Here she would stand, till some more pitying
god

Turn'd her to marble ! — 'T is enough, my wench !

Show me the piece of needlework you wrought.

ANT. Of Ariadne,<sup>42</sup> madam ?

ASP. Yes, that piece. — [41
This should be Theseus ; h'as a cozening <sup>43</sup>
face. —

You meant him for a man ?

ANT. He was so, madam.

ASP. Why, then, 't is well enough. — Never look back ;

You have a full wind and a false heart, The-seus. —

Does not the story say his keel was split,

<sup>43</sup> Cheating, deceitful.

Or his masts spent, or some kind rock or other
Met with his vessel?

ANT. Not as I remember.

ASP. It should ha' been so. Could the gods know this,
And not, of all their number, raise a storm? [50
But they are all as ill. — This false smile
Was well express'd; just such another caught
me. —

You shall not go so.<sup>44</sup> —

Antiphila, in this place work a quicksand,
And over it a shallow, smiling water,
And his ship ploughing it; and then a Fear:
Do that Fear to the life, wench.

ANT. 'T will wrong the story.

ASP. 'T will make the story, wrong'd by wanton poets,
Live long and be believ'd. But where's the
lady?

ANT. There, madam.

ASP. Fie, you have miss'd it here,
Antiphila; 60

You are much mistaken, wench.
These colors are not dull and pale enough
To show a soul so full of misery
As this sad lady's was. Do it by me,<sup>45</sup>
Do it again by me, the lost Aspatia;
And you shall find all true but the wild island.<sup>46</sup>
I stand upon the sea-breach now, and think <sup>47</sup> Mine arms thus, and mine hair blown with the wind,

Wild as that desert; and let all about me
Tell that I am forsaken. Do my face, 70
If thou hadst ever feeling of a sorrow,
Thus, thus, Antiphila; strive to make me look Like Sorrow's monument; and the trees about
me,

Let them be dry and leafless; let the rocks
Groan with continual surges; and behind me,
Make all a desolation. Look, look, wenches,
A miserable life <sup>48</sup> of this poor picture!

OLYM. Dear madam!

ASP. I have done. Sit down; and let us
Upon that point fix all our eyes, that point there.
Make a dumb <sup>49</sup> silence, till you feel a sudden sadness 80
Give us new souls.

Enter CALIANAX

CAL. The King may do this, and he may not do it;

<sup>49</sup> Q: et seq., dull.

My child is wrong'd, disgrac'd. — Well, how now, huswives? <sup>50</sup>

What, at your ease! Is this a time to sit still?

Up, your young lazy whores, up, or I'll swinge
you!

OLYM. Nay, good my Lord —

CAL. You'll lie down shortly. Get you in,
and work!

What, are you grown so resty <sup>51</sup> you want heats?

We shall have some of the court boys do that office.<sup>52</sup>

ANT. My Lord, we do no more than we are charg'd; 90

It is the lady's pleasure we be thus
In grief <sup>53</sup> she is forsaken.

CAL. There's a rogue <sup>54</sup> too,
A young dissembling slave! — Well, get you
in. —

I'll have a bout with that boy. 'T is high
time

Now to be valiant; I confess my youth Was never prone that way. What, made an ass!

A court stale! <sup>55</sup> Well, I will be valiant,
And beat some dozen of these whelps; I will!

And there's another of 'em, a trim, cheating soldier; <sup>56</sup>

I'll maul that rascal; h'as out-brav'd me twice; 100

But now, I thank the gods, I am valiant. —
Go, get you in. — I'll take a course with all.

Exeunt omnes.

ACT III — [SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter CLEON, STRATO, [and] DIPHILUS.

CLE. Your sister is not up yet.

DIPH. Oh, brides must take their morning's rest; the night is troublesome.

STRA. But not tedious.

DIPH. What odds he has not my sister's maidenhead to-night?

STRA. No; it's odds against any bridegroom living, he ne'er gets it while he lives.

<sup>50</sup> Hussies.

<sup>51</sup> Inert, sluggish; comparing them "to lazy, resty mares, that want to be rid so many heats."
(Theobald.)

DIPH. Y' are merry with my sister ; you'll please to allow me the same freedom with [10] your mother.

STRA. She's at your service.

DIPH. Then she's merry enough of herself ; she needs no tickling. Knock at the door.

STRA. We shall interrupt them.

DIPH. No matter ; they have the year before them. —

Good morrow, Sister. Spare yourself to-day ; The night will come again.

Enter AMINTOR.

AMIN. Who's there? My brother ! I am no readier<sup>2</sup> yet. 20
Your sister is but now up.

DIPH. You look as you had lost your eyes to-night :

I think you ha' not slept.

AMIN. I' faith I have not.

DIPH. You have done better, then.

AMIN. We ventured for a boy ; when he is twelve,

'A shall command against the foes of Rhodes. Shall we be merry?

STRA. You cannot ; you want sleep.

AMIN. 'T is true. — (aside) But she, As if she had drank Lethe, or had made Even with Heaven, did fetch so still a sleep, [30] So sweet and sound —

DIPH. What's that?

AMIN. Your sister frets This morning, and does turn her eyes upon me As people on their headsmen. She does chafe, And kiss, and chafe again, and clap my cheeks ; She's in another world.

DIPH. Then I had lost ; I was about to lay<sup>3</sup> You had not got her maidenhead to-night.

AMIN. [aside] Ha ! he does<sup>4</sup> not mock me? y'ad lost indeed ; I do not use<sup>5</sup> to bungle.

CLEO. You do deserve her.

AMIN. (aside) I laid my lips to hers, and that wild breath, 40
That was so rude and rough to me last night, Was sweet as April. I'll be guilty too, If these be the effects.

Enter MELANTTIUS.

MEL. Good day, Amintor ; for to me the name
Of brother is too distant : we are friends,
And that is nearer.

AMIN. Dear Melantius !

Let me behold thee. Is it possible?

MEL. What sudden gaze is this?

AMIN. 'T is wondrous strange !

MEL. Why does thine eye desire so strict a view

Of that it knows so well? There's nothing here 50

That is not thine.

AMIN. I wonder much, Melantius, To see those noble looks, that make me think How virtuous thou art ; and, on the sudden, 'T is strange to me thou shouldst have worth and honor,

Or not be base and false and treacherous And every ill. But —

MEL. Stay, stay, my friend, I fear this sound will not become our loves. No more ;<sup>6</sup> embrace me.

AMIN. Oh, mistake me not ! I know thee to be full of all those deeds 59
That we frail men call good ; but by the course

Of nature thou shouldst be as quickly chang'd As are the winds ; dissembling as the sea, That now wears brows as smooth as virgins' be, Tempting the merchant<sup>7</sup> to invade his face, And in an hour calls his billows up, And shoots 'em at the sun, destroying all 'A carries on him. — (aside) Oh, how near am I To utter my sick thoughts.

MEL. But why, my friend, should I be so by nature?

AMIN. I have wed thy sister, who hath virtuous thoughts 70
Enough for one whole family ; and it is strange That you should feel no want.

MEL. Believe me, this is compliment too cunning for me.

DIPH. What should I be then by the course of nature, They having both robb'd me of so much virtue?

STRA. Oh, call the bride, my Lord Amintor, That we may see her blush, and turn her eyes down.

It is the prettiest sport !

AMIN. Evadne !

EVAD. (within) My Lord?

AMIN. Come forth, my love ; Your brothers do attend to wish you joy. [80
EVAD. [within] I am not ready<sup>8</sup> yet.

AMIN. Enough, enough.

EVAD. [within] They'll mock me.

AMIN. Faith, thou shalt come in.

Enter EVADNE.

MEL. Good morrow, Sister. He that understands

Whom you have wed, need not to wish you joy;

You have enough: take heed you be not proud.

DIPH. Oh, Sister, what have you done?

EVAD. I done! why, what have I done?

STRA. My Lord Amintor swears you are no maid now.

EVAD. Push!<sup>9</sup>

STRA. I' faith, he does.

EVAD. I knew I should be mock'd. [90]

DIPH. With a truth.

EVAD. If 't were to do again,

In faith I would not marry.

AMIN. (aside) Nor I, by Heaven!

DIPH. Sister, Dula swears

She heard you cry two rooms off.

EVAD. Fie, how you talk!

DIPH. Let's see you walk.

EVAD. By my troth, y'are spoil'd.<sup>10</sup>

MEL. Amintor. —

AMIN. Ha!

MEL. Thou art sad.

AMIN. Who, I? I thank you for that.

Shall Diphilus, thou, and I, sing a catch?

MEL. How!

AMIN. Prithee, let's. 99

MEL. Nay, that's too much the other way.

AMIN. I'm so light'ned with my happiness! —

How dost thou, love? Kiss me.

EVAD. I cannot love you; you tell tales of me.

AMIN. Nothing but what becomes us. — Gentlemen,

Would you had all such wives, and all the world,

That I might be no wonder! Y'are all sad:

What, do you envy me? I walk, methinks,

On water, and ne'er sink, I am so light.

MEL. 'T is well you are so.

AMIN. Well! how can I be other, When she looks thus? — Is there no music there? 110

Let's dance.

MEL. Why this is strange, Amintor!

AMIN. I do not know myself; yet I could wish

My joy were less.

DIPH. I'll marry too, if it will make one thus.

EVAD. (aside) Amintor, hark.

AMIN. What says my love? — I must obey.

EVAD. You do it scurvily, 't will be perceived.

CLEO. My Lord, the King is here.

Enter KING and LYSIPPUS.

AMIN. Where?

STRA. And his brother. 120

KING. Good morrow, all! —

Amintor, joy on joy fall thick upon thee! —

And, madam, you are alter'd since I saw you; I must salute you; you are now another's.

How lik'd you your night's rest?

EVAD. Ill, sir.

AMIN. Indeed,

She took but little.

LYS. You'll let her take more,

And thank her too, shortly.

KING. Amintor, wert thou truly honest<sup>11</sup> till Thou wert married?

AMIN. Yes, sir.

KING. Tell me, then, how shows

The sport unto thee?

AMIN. Why, well.

KING. What did you do?

AMIN. No more, nor less, than other couples use; 113

You know what 't is; it has but a coarse name.

KING. But, prithee, I should think, by her black eye,

And her red cheek, she should be quick<sup>12</sup> and stirring

In this same business; ha?

AMIN. I cannot tell;

I ne'er tried other, sir; but I perceive

She is as quick as you delivered.<sup>13</sup>

KING. Well, you'll trust me then, Amintor, to choose

A wife for you again?

AMIN. No, never, sir.

KING. Why, like you this so ill?

AMIN. So well I like her. [140]

For this I bow my knee in thanks to you, And unto Heaven will pay my grateful tribute Hourly; and do hope we shall draw out

<sup>9</sup> Plish.

<sup>10</sup> Some mod. eds. add this to Diphilus's speech, and make a vocative out of Evadne. Metrical arrangement here is present Editor's and confirms reading of old texts.

A long contented life together here,
And die both, full of gray hairs, in one day :
For which the thanks is yours. But if the Powers
That rule us please to call her first away, Without pride spoke, this world holds not a
wife
Worthy to take her room.

KING. [aside] I do not like this. — All forbear the room, 150
But you, Amintor, and your lady. — [Exeunt all but the KING, AMINTOR, and EVADNE.]

I have some speech with you, that may concern
Your after living well.

AMIN. [aside] 'A will not tell me that he lies with her !
If he do, something heavenly stay my heart,
For I shall be apt to thrust this arm of mine
To acts unlawful !

KING. You will suffer me
To talk with her, Amintor, and not have A jealous pang ?

AMIN. Sir, I dare trust my wife
With whom she dares to talk, and not be jealous. [Retires.] 160

KING. How do you like Amintor ?

EVAD. As I did, sir.

KING. How's that ?

EVAD. As one that, to fulfil your will and
pleasure,
I have given leave to call me wife and love.

KING. I see there is no lasting faith in
sin ;
They that break word with Heaven will break
again

With all the world, and so dost thou with me.

EVAD. How, sir ?

KING. This subtle woman's ignorance
Will not excuse you : thou hast taken oaths,
So great that, methought, they did mis-become 170

A woman's mouth, that thou wouldst ne'er enjoy

A man but me.

EVAD. I never did swear so ;
You do me wrong.

KING. Day and night have heard it.

EVAD. I swore indeed that I would never
love

A man of lower place ; but, if your fortune
Should throw you from this height, I bade you trust

I would forsake you, and would bend to him

That won your throne. I love with my ambition,

Not with my eyes. But, if I ever yet
Touch'd any other, leprosy light here 180
Upon my face ! which for your royalty
I would not stain !

KING. Why, thou dissemblest, and
It is in me to punish thee.

EVAD. Why, it is in me,
Then, not to love you, which will more afflict
Your body than your punishment can mine.

KING. But thou hast let Amintor lie with
thee.

EVAD. I ha' not.

KING. Impudence ! he says himself so.

EVAD. 'A lies.

KING. 'A does not.

EVAD. By this light, he does,
Strangely and basely ! and I'll prove it so.

I did not only shun him for a night, 190
But told him I would never close with him.

KING. Speak lower ; 't is false.

EVAD. I am no man
To answer with a blow ; or, if I were,
You are the King. But urge me not ; 't is most true.

KING. Do not I know the uncontrolled
thoughts
That youth brings with him, when his blood is high

With expectation and desire of that
He long hath waited for ? Is not his spirit,
Though he be temperate, of a valiant strain
As this our age hath known ? What could he 200

If such a sudden speech had met his blood,
But ruin thee for ever, if he had not kill'd
thee ?

He could not bear it thus ; he is as we,
Or any other wrong'd man.

EVAD. It is dissembling.

KING. Take him ! farewell : henceforth I am thy foe ;

And what disgraces I can blot thee with, look
for.

EVAD. Stay, sir ! — Amintor ! — You shall hear. — Amintor !

AMIN. [coming forward] What, my love.

EVAD. Amintor, thou hast an ingenious<sup>14</sup> look,

And shouldst be virtuous ; it amazeth me [210
That thou canst make such base malicious lies !

AMIN. What, my dear wife ?

<sup>14</sup> Ingenuous.

EVAD. Dear wife! I do despise thee.
Why, nothing can be baser than to sow
Dissension amongst lovers.

AMIN. Lovers! Who?

EVAD. The King and me —

AMIN. Oh, God!

EVAD. Who should live long, and love without distaste,
Were it not for such pickthanks<sup>15</sup> as thyself.
Did you lie with me? Swear now, and be punish'd
In hell for this!

AMIN. The faithless sin I made
To fair Aspatia is not yet reveng'd; 220
It follows me. — I will not lose a word
To this [wild]<sup>16</sup> woman; but to you, my King,
The anguish of my soul thrusts out this truth:
Y' are a tyrant! and not so much to wrong
An honest man thus, as to take a pride
In talking with him of it.

EVAD. Now, sir, see
How loud this fellow lied!

AMIN. You that can know to wrong, should know how men Must right themselves. What punishment is due

From me to him that shall abuse my bed? [230
[Is it]<sup>17</sup> not death? Nor can that satisfy, Unless I send your [limbs]<sup>18</sup> through all the
land,

To show how nobly I have freed myself.

KING. Draw not thy sword; thou know'st
I cannot fear
A subject's hand; but thou shalt feel the weight
Of this, if thou dost rage.

AMIN. The weight of that!
If you have any worth, for Heaven's sake,
think

I fear not swords; for, as you are mere man,
I dare as easily kill you for this deed,

As you dare think to do it. But there is [240
Divinity about you that strikes dead

My rising passions; as you are my King,

I fall before you, and present my sword

To cut mine own flesh, if it be your will.

Alas, I am nothing but a multitude
Of walking griefs! Yet, should I murder you,
I might before the world take the excuse
Of madness; for, compare my injuries,
And they will well appear too sad a weight

For reason to endure. But, fall I first 250
Amongst my sorrows, ere my treacherous hand Touch holy things! But why (I know not what

I have to say), why did you choose out me
To make thus wretched? There were thousands, fools

Easy to work on, and of state enough,
Within the island.

EVAD. I would not have a fool;
It were not credit for me.

AMIN. Worse and worse!
Thou, that dar'st talk unto thy husband thus,
Profess thyself a whore, and, more than so,
Resolve to be so still! — It is my fate 260
To bear and bow beneath a thousand griefs,
To keep that little credit with the world! —
But there were wise ones too; you might have ta'en

Another.

KING. No: for I believ[']d thee honest,
As thou wert valiant.

AMIN. All the happiness
Bestow'd upon me turns into disgrace.
Gods, take your honesty again, for I Am laden with it! — Good my Lord the King,

Be private in it.

KING. Thou mayst live, Amintor,
Free as thy King, if thou wilt wink at this [270
And be a means that we may meet in secret.

AMIN. A bawd! Hold, hold, my breast!
A bitter curse

Seize me, if I forget not all respects<sup>19</sup>
That are religious, on another word
Sounded like that; and through a sea of sins Will wade to my revenge, though I should call

Pains here and after life upon my soul!

KING. Well, I am resolute<sup>20</sup> you lay not with her;

And so I leave you. Exit KING.

EVAD. You must needs be prating;
And see what follows!

AMIN. Prithee, vex me not. [280
Leave me; I am afraid some sudden start
Will pull a murder on me.

EVAD. I am gone;
I love my life well. Exit EVADNE.

AMIN. I hate mine as much.
This 't is to break a troth! I should be glad,

If all this tide of grief would make me mad.

Exit.

[SCENE II] <sup>21</sup>Enter MELANTIUS.

MEL. I'll know the cause of all Amintor's
griefs,
Or friendship shall be idle.<sup>22</sup>

Enter CALIANAX.

CAL. Oh, Melantius,
My daughter will die!

MEL. Trust me, I am sorry;
Would thou hadst ta'en her room!

CAL. Thou art a slave,
A cutthroat slave, a bloody treacherous slave!

MEL. Take heed, old man; thou wilt be heard to rave,
And lose thine offices.

CAL. I am valiant grown
At all these years, and thou art but a slave!

MEL. Leave!
Some company will come, and I respect 10
Thy years, not thee, so much, that I could wish
To laugh at thee alone.

CAL. I'll spoil your mirth:
I mean to fight with thee. There lie, my cloak.

This was my father's sword, and he durst
fight.

Are you prepar'd?

MEL. Why wilt thou dote thyself
Out of thy life? Hence, get thee to bed,
Have careful looking-to, and eat warm things,
And trouble not me; my head is full of
thoughts

More weighty than thy life or death can be.

CAL. You have a name in war, where you stand safe 20

Amongst a multitude; but I will try
What you dare do unto a weak old man
In single fight. You'll give ground, I fear.
Come, draw.

MEL. I will not draw, unless thou pull'st thy death

Upon thee with a stroke. There's no one blow

That thou canst give hath strength enough to kill me.

Tempt me not so far, then: the power of earth
Shall not redeem thee.

CAL. [aside] I must let him alone;
He's stout and able; and, to say the truth, [30
However I may set a face and talk,
I am not valiant. When I was a youth,

I kept my credit with a testy trick <sup>23</sup>

I had amongst cowards, but durst never fight.

MEL. I will not promise to preserve your
life,

If you do stay.

CAL. [aside] I would give half my land
That I durst fight with that proud man a little.

If I had men to hold him, I would beat him
Till he ask <sup>24</sup> me mercy.

MEL. Sir, will you be gone?

CAL. [aside] I dare not stay; but I will go home, and beat 40

My servants all over for this.

Exit CALIANAX.

MEL. This old fellow haunts me.
But the distracted carriage of mine Amintor
Takes <sup>25</sup> deeply on me. I will find the cause;
I fear his conscience cries he wrong'd Aspatia.

Enter AMINTOR.

AMIN. [aside] Men's eyes are not so subtle to perceive

My inward misery; I bear my grief Hid from the world. How art thou wretched
then?

For aught I know, all husbands are like me;
And every one I talk with of his wife
Is but a well dissembler of his woes, 50
As I am. Would I knew it! for the rareness Afflicts me now.

MEL. Amintor, we have not Enjoy'd our friendship of late, for we were wont

To [change] <sup>26</sup> our souls in talk.

AMIN. Melantius, I can tell thee
A good jest of Strato and a lady the last day.

MEL. How was't?

AMIN. Why, such an odd one!

MEL. I have long'd
To speak with you; not of an idle jest, That's forc'd, but of matter you are bound to utter to me.<sup>27</sup>

AMIN. What is that, my friend?

MEL. I have observ'd your words Fall from your tongue wildly, and all your carriage 60

Like one that strove to shew his merry mood
When he were ill dispos'd. You were not wont
To put such scorn into your speech, or wear
Upon your face ridiculous jollity.

<sup>22</sup> I.e., an empty term.

Some sadness sits here, which your cunning would

Cover o'er with smiles, and 't will not be.
What is it?

AMIN. A sadness here! What cause
Can fate provide for me to make me so?
Am I not lov'd through all this isle? The
King

Rains greatness on me. Have I not received
A lady to my bed that in her eye 71
Keeps mounting fire, and on her tender cheeks
Inevitable<sup>28</sup> color, in her heart
A prison for all virtue? Are not you,
Which is above all joys, my constant friend?
What sadness can I have? No; I am light,
And feel the courses of my blood more warm
And stirring than they were. Faith, marry,
too;

And you will feel so unexpress'd<sup>29</sup> a joy
In chaste embraces, that you will indeed 80
Appear another.

MEL. You may shape, Amintor,
Causes to cozen the whole world withal,
And you yourself too; but 't is not like a
friend

To hide your soul from me. 'T is not your
nature

To be thus idle. I have seen you stand
As you were blasted 'midst of all your mirth;
Call thrice aloud, and then start, feigning joy
So coldly! — World, what do I here? A friend

Is nothing. Heaven, I would ha' told that
man

My secret sins! I'll search an unknown
land, 90

And there plant friendship; all is withered
here.

Come with a compliment!<sup>30</sup> I would have fought,

Or told my friend 'a lied, ere sooth'd<sup>31</sup> him
so. —

Out of my bosom!<sup>32</sup>

AMIN. But there is nothing.

MEL. Worse and worse! farewell:
From this time have acquaintance, but no
friend.

AMIN. Melantius, stay; you shall know what that is.

MEL. See how you play'd with friendship!
Be advis'd<sup>33</sup>

How you give cause unto yourself to say
You ha' lost a friend.

AMIN. Forgive what I ha' done; [100
For I am so o'ergone with injuries
Unheard of, that I lose consideration
Of what I ought to do. Oh, oh!

MEL. Do not weep.
What is 't? May I once but know the man
Hath turn'd my friend thus!

AMIN. I had spoke at first,
But that —

MEL. But what?

AMIN. I held it most unfit
For you to know. Faith, do not know it yet.

MEL. Thou seest my love, that will keep company
With thee in tears; hide nothing, then, from
me;

For when I know the cause of thy distemper,
With mine old armor I'll adorn myself, [111
My resolution, and cut through thy foes
Unto thy quiet, till I place thy heart
As peaceable as spotless innocence.

What is it?

AMIN. Why, 't is this — it is too big
To get out — let my tears make way awhile.

MEL. Punish me strangely, Heaven, if he scape
Of life or fame, that brought this youth to
this!

AMIN. Your sister —

MEL. Well said.

AMIN. You will wish 't unknown,
When you have heard it.

MEL. No.

AMIN. Is much to blame, [120
And to the King has given her honor up,
And lives in whoredom with him.

MEL. How's this?
Thou art run mad with injury indeed;
Thou couldst not utter this else. Speak
again;

For I forgive it freely; tell thy griefs.

AMIN. She's wanton: I am loth to say, a
whore,

Though it be true.

MEL. Speak yet again, before mine anger
grow

Up beyond throwing down. What are thy griefs?

AMIN. By all our friendship, these.

MEL. What, am I tame? [130
After mine actions, shall the name of friend
Blot all our family, and [strike]<sup>34</sup> the brand

Of whore upon my sister, unreveng'd?
My shaking flesh, be thou a witness for me,
With what unwillingness I go to scourge
This railer, whom my folly hath call'd friend.
I will not take thee basely : thy sword

[Draws his sword.]

Hangs near thy hand ; draw it, that I may whip

Thy rashness to repentance ; draw thy sword !

AMIN. Not on thee, did thine anger go as high 140

As troubled waters.<sup>35</sup> Thou shouldst do me
ease

Here and eternally, if thy noble hand

Would cut me from my sorrows.

MEL. This is base
And fearful.<sup>36</sup> They that use to utter lies Provide not blows but words to qualify<sup>37</sup>
The men they wrong'd. Thou hast a guilty cause.

AMIN. Thou pleasest me ; for so much more like this

Will raise my anger up above my griefs,
Which is a passion easier to be borne,
And I shall then be happy.

MEL. Take, then, more [150
To raise thine anger : 't is more cowardice Makes thee not draw ; and I will leave thee
dead,

However. But if thou art so much press'd
With guilt and fear as not to dare to fight, I'll make thy memory loath'd, and fix a scandal

Upon thy name forever.

AMIN. [drawing his sword] Then I draw,
As justly as our magistrates their swords
To cut offenders off. I knew before
'T would grate your ears ; but it was base in
you

To urge a weighty secret from your friend, [160
And then rage at it. I shall be at ease,
If I be kill'd ; and, if you fall by me,
I shall not long outlive you.

MEL. Stay awhile. —
The name of friend is more than family,
Or all the world besides ; I was a fool. —
Thou searching Human Nature, that didst wake

To do me wrong, thou art inquisitive,
And thrusts<sup>38</sup> me upon questions that will take

My sleep away ! Would I had died, ere known

This sad dishonor ! — Pardon me, my friend !
[Sheathes his sword.]

If thou wilt strike, here is a faithful heart ; [171
Pierce it, for I will never heave my hand

To thine. Behold the power thou hast in me !
I do believe my sister is a whore,

A leprous one. Put up thy sword, young man.

AMIN. How should I bear it, then, she being so ?

I fear, my friend, that you will lose me shortly ;
[Sheathes his sword.]

And I shall do a foul act on myself,
Through these disgraces.

MEL. Better half the land
Were buried quick<sup>39</sup> together. No, Amintor ;
Thou shalt have ease. Oh, this adulterous
King, 181

That drew her to't ! Where got he the spirit
To wrong me so ?

AMIN. What is it, then, to me,
If it be wrong to you ?

MEL. Why, not so much.
The credit of our house is thrown away.
But from his iron den I'll waken Death,
And hurl him on this King. My honesty Shall steel my sword ; and on my<sup>40</sup> horrid point

I'll wear my cause, that shall amaze the eyes
Of this proud man, and be too glitt'ring<sup>41</sup> [190
For him to look on.

AMIN. I have quite undone my fame.

MEL. Dry up thy wat'ry eyes,
And cast a manly look upon my face ;
For nothing is so wild as I, thy friend,
Till I have freed thee. Still this swelling
breast.

I go thus from thee, and will never cease
My vengeance till I find [thy]<sup>42</sup> heart at peace.

AMIN. It must not be so. Stay. Mine eyes would tell

How loth I am to this ; but, love and tears,
Leave me awhile ! for I have hazarded [201
All that this world calls happy. — Thou hast
wrought

A secret from me, under name of friend,
Which art could ne'er have found, nor torture
wrought

From out my bosom. Give it me again ;
For I will find it, wheresoe'er it lies,
Hid in the mortal'st part. Invent a way
To give it back.

<sup>42</sup> So Q<sub>1</sub> ; other old eds. my.

MEL. Why would you have it back?
I will to death pursue him with revenge,

AMIN. Therefore I call it back from thee;
for I know 210
Thy blood so high, that thou wilt stir in
this,

And shame me to posterity. Take to thy weapon! [Draws his sword.]

MEL. Hear thy friend, that bears more years than thou.

AMIN. I will not hear; but draw, or I—

MEL. Amintor!

AMIN. Draw, then, for I am full as resolute
As fame and honor can enforce me be;
I cannot linger. Draw!

MEL. [drawing his sword] I do. But is not

My share of credit equal<sup>43</sup> with thine,
If I do stir?

AMIN. No, for it will be call'd
Honor in thee to spill thy sister's blood, 220
If she her birth abuse, and on the King
A brave revenge; but on me, that have walk'd
With patience in it, it will fix the name Of fearful cuckold.—Oh, that word! Be quick.

MEL. Then join with me.

AMIN. I dare not do a sin,
Or else I would. Be speedy.

MEL. Then, dare not fight with me; for that's a sin.—

His grief distracts him.—Call thy thoughts
again,
And to thyself pronounce the name of friend,
And see what that will work. I will not fight. 230

AMIN. You must.

MEL. [sheathing his sword] I will be kill'd first. Though my passions
Offered the like to you, 't is not this earth
Shall buy my reason to it. Think awhile,
For you are (I must weep when I speak that)
Almost besides yourself.

AMIN. [sheathing his sword] Oh, my soft temper!

So many sweet words from thy sister's mouth,
I am afraid, would make me take her to Embrace and pardon her. I am mad indeed,
And know not what I do. Yet, have a care
Of me in what thou doest.

MEL. Why, thinks my friend [240
I will forget his honor? or, to save
The bravery of our house, will lose his fame,
And fear to touch the throne of majesty?

<sup>43</sup> Almost trisyllabic.

AMIN. A curse will follow that; but rather live

And suffer with me.

MEL. I will do what worth
Shall bid me, and no more.

AMIN. Faith, I am sick,
And desperately I hope; yet, leaning thus,
I feel a kind of ease.

MEL. Come, take again
Your mirth about you.

AMIN. I shall never do 't.

MEL. I warrant you; look up; we'll walk
together; 250

Put thine arm here; all shall be well again.

AMIN. Thy love (oh, wretched!) ay, thy love, Melantius;

Why, I have nothing else.

MEL. Be merry, then. Exeunt.

Enter MELANTIUS again.

MEL. This worthy young man may do violence

Upon himself; but I have cherish'd him
To [my best power],<sup>44</sup> and sent him smiling
from me,

To counterfeit again. Sword, hold thine
edge;

My heart will never fail me.

Enter DIPHILUS.

Diphilus!

Thou com'st as<sup>45</sup> sent.

DIPH. Yonder has been such laughing.

MEL. Betwixt whom?

DIPH. Why, our sister and the King. [260
I thought their spleens would break; they laugh'd us all

Out of the room.

MEL. They must weep, Diphilus.

DIPH. Must they?

MEL. They must.

Thou art my brother; and, if I did believe
Thou hadst a base thought, I would rip it out,
Lie where it durst.

DIPH. You should not; I would first Mangle myself and find it.

MEL. That was spoke
According to our strain.<sup>46</sup> Come, join thy hands to mine,

And swear a firmness to what project I Shall lay before thee.

DIPH. You do wrong us both. [270
People hereafter shall not say there pass'd

<sup>46</sup> Stook.

A bond, more than our loves, to tie our lives
And deaths together.

MEL. It is as nobly said as I would wish.
Anon I'll tell you wonders : we are wrong'd.

DIPH. But I will tell you now, we'll right ourselves.

MEL. Stay not ; prepare the armor in my house ;
And what friends you can draw unto our side,

Not knowing of the cause, make ready too.
Haste, Diphilus, the time requires it, haste ! —

Exit DIPHILUS.

I hope my cause is just ; I know my blood [281
Tells me it is ; and I will credit it.

To take revenge, and lose myself withal,
Were idle ; and to scape impossible,
Without I had the fort, which (misery !)
Remaining in the hands of my old enemy
Calianax — but I must have it. See

Re-enter CALIANAX.

Where he comes shaking by me ! — Good my
Lord,

Forget your spleen to me. I never wrong'd
you,

But would have peace with every man.

CAL. 'T is well ; [290
If I durst fight, your tongue would lie at quiet.

MEL. Y' are touchy without all cause.

CAL. Do, mock me.

MEL. By mine honor, I speak truth.

CAL. Honor ! where is 't ?

MEL. See, what starts you make
Into your [idle] <sup>47</sup> hatred, to my love
And freedom to you. I come with resolution
To obtain a suit of you.

CAL. A suit of me !
'T is very like it should be granted, sir.

MEL. Nay, go not hence. 299
'T is this : you have the keeping of the fort,
And I would wish you, by the love you ought
To bear unto me, to deliver it
Into my hands.

CAL. I am in hope thou art mad,
To talk to me thus.

MEL. But there is a reason
To move you to it : I would kill the King,
That wrong'd you and your daughter.

CAL. Out, traitor !

MEL. Nay, but stay ; I cannot scape, the deed once done,
Without I have this fort.

<sup>47</sup> Q<sub>1</sub> only.

CAL. And should I help thee ?
Now thy treacherous mind betrays itself.

MEL. Come, delay me not ; 310
Give me a sudden answer, or already Thy last is spoke ! Refuse not offered love
When it comes clad in secrets.

CAL. [aside] If I say
I will not, he will kill me ; I do see 't Writ in his looks ; and should I say I will, He'll run and tell the King. — I do not shun

Your friendship, dear Melantius, but this cause

Is weighty ; give me but an hour to think.

MEL. Take it. — [aside] I know this goes unto the King ;

But I am arm'd. Exit MELANTIUS.

CAL. Methinks I feel myself [320
But twenty now again. This fighting fool
Wants policy ; <sup>48</sup> I shall revenge my girl,
And make her red <sup>49</sup> again. I pray my legs
Will last that pace that I will carry them ;
I shall want breath before I find the King.

[Exit.]

ACT IV — [SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter MELANTIUS, [to] EVADNE, and [Ladies].

MEL. Save you !

EVAD. Save you, sweet Brother.

MEL. In my blunt eye, methinks, you look,
Evadne —

EVAD. Come, you would make me blush.

MEL. I would, Evadne ;
I shall displease my ends else.

EVAD. You shall, if you [Commend] <sup>2</sup> me ; I am bashful. Come, sir, how do

I look ?

MEL. I would not have your women hear me

Break into commendations of you ; 't is not Seemly.

EVAD. Go wait me in the gallery.

Exeunt Ladies.

Now speak.

MEL. I'll lock the door first.

EVAD. Why ?

MEL. I will not have your gilded things, that dance 10

In visitation with their Milan skins,<sup>3</sup>
Choke up my business.

EVAD. You are strangely dispos'd, sir.

MEL. Good madam, not to make you merry.

EVAD. No; if you praise me, 't will make me sad.

MEL. Such a sad commendation I have for you.

EVAD. Brother,
The court hath made you witty, and learn to riddle.

MEL. I praise the court for't; has it learn'd you nothing?

EVAD. Me!

MEL. Ay, Evadne; thou art young and handsome,
A lady of a sweet complexion, 20
And such a flowing carriage, that it cannot Choose but inflame a kingdom.

EVAD. Gentle Brother!

MEL. 'T is yet in thy repentance, foolish woman,

'To make me gentle.

EVAD. How is this?

MEL. 'T is base;
And I could blush, at these years, through all
My honor'd scars, to come to such a parley.

EVAD. I understand ye not.

MEL. You dare not, fool!
They that commit thy faults fly the remembrance.

EVAD. My faults, sir! I would have you know, I care not
If they were written here, here in my forehead. 30

MEL. Thy body is too little for the story;
The lusts<sup>4</sup> of which would fill another woman,
Though<sup>5</sup> she had twins within her.

EVAD. This is saucy;
Look you intrude no more! There's your way.

MEL. Thou art my way, and I will tread upon thee,
Till I find truth out.

<sup>4</sup> Dissyllabic. <sup>5</sup> The record of the lusts. Even if. "Fill" = cover with writing. There has been much silly annotation at this point, but the meaning is perfectly clear, as was indeed recognized by Colman. Any woman's whole body, to say nothing of your little forehead, would afford insufficient space to write the record of your lusts; even the distended body of a woman pregnant with twins would be insufficient.

EVAD. What truth is that you look for?

MEL. Thy long-lost honor. Would the gods had set me

Rather to grapple with the plague, or stand
One of their loudest bolts! Come, tell me quickly;

Do it without enforcement, and take heed [40
You swell me not above my temper.

EVAD. How, sir!
Where got you this report?

MEL. Where there was people;
In every place.

EVAD. They and the seconds of it
Are base people; believe them not: they lied.

MEL. Do not play with mine anger; do not, wretch! [Seizes her.]

I come to know that desperate fool that drew thee

From thy fair life. Be wise, and lay him open.

EVAD. Unhand me, and learn manners!
Such another

Forgetfulness forfeits your life.

MEL. Quench me this mighty humor,<sup>7</sup> and then tell me 50

Whose whore you are; for you are one, I know it.

Let all mine honors perish but I'll find him
Though he lie lock'd up in thy blood! Be sudden;

There is no facing it;<sup>8</sup> and be not flattered.
The burnt air, when the Dog<sup>9</sup> reigns, is not fouler

Than thy contagious name, till thy repentance

(If the gods grant thee any) purge thy sickness.

EVAD. Begone! you are my brother;
that's your safety.

MEL. I'll be a wolf first. 'T is, to be thy brother,

An infamy below the sin of coward. 60
I am as far from being part of thee

As thou art from thy virtue. Seek a kindred
'Mongst sensual beasts, and make a goat thy brother;

A goat is cooler. Will you tell me yet?

EVAD. If you stay here and rail thus, I shall tell you

I'll ha' you whipp'd! Get you to your command,

<sup>7</sup> This whim or affectation of mightiness.

<sup>9</sup> Sirius, the Dog Star, supposed to be responsible for the hot weather of the dog days.

And there preach to your sentinels, and tell them

What a brave man you are ; I shall laugh at you.

MEL. Y'are grown a glorious whore !
Where be your fighters ?

What mortal fool durst raise thee to this daring, 70

And I alive ! / By my just sword, h' ad safer
[Bestrid] a billow when the angry North Plows up the sea, or made Heaven's fire his [foe] !<sup>10</sup>

Work me no higher. Will you discover yet ?

EVAD. The fellow's mad. Sleep, and speak sense.

MEL. Force my swoln heart no further ;
I would save thee.

Your great maintainers are not here ; they dare not.

Would they were all, and armed ! I would speak loud ;

Here's one should thunder to 'em ! Will you tell me ? —

Thou hast no hope to scape. He that dares most, 80

And damns away his soul to do thee service,
Will sooner snatch meat from a hungry lion
Than come to rescue thee. Thou hast death about thee.

H 'as undone thine honor, poison'd thy virtue,
And, of a lovely rose, left thee a canker.<sup>11</sup>

EVAD. Let me consider.

MEL. Do, whose child thou wert,
Whose honor thou hast murdered, whose grave opened,

And so pull'd on the gods that in their justice
They must restore him flesh again and life,
And raise his dry bones to revenge this scandal. 90

EVAD. The gods are not of my mind ; they had better

Let 'em lie sweet still in the earth ; they'll stink here.

MEL. Do you raise mirth out of my easiness ?

Forsake me, then, all weaknesses of nature,
[Draws his sword.]

That make men women ! Speak, you whore, speak truth,

Or, by the dear soul of thy sleeping father,
This sword shall be thy lover ! Tell, or I'll kill thee ;

And, when thou hast told all, thou wilt deserve it.

EVAD. You will not murder me ?

MEL. No ; 't is a justice, and a noble one, 100

To put the light out of such base offenders.

EVAD. Help !

MEL. By thy foul self, no human help shall help thee,

If thou criest ! When I have kill'd thee, as I
Have vow'd to do, if thou confess not, naked
As thou hast left thine honor will I leave thee,
That on thy branded flesh the world may read
Thy black shame and my justice. Wilt thou bend yet ?

EVAD. Yes.

MEL. Up, and begin your story. 110

EVAD. Oh, I am miserable !

MEL. 'T is true, thou art. Speak truth still.

EVAD. I have offended ; noble sir, forgive me !

MEL. With what secure slave ?

EVAD. Do not ask me, sir ;

Mine own remembrance is a misery

Too mighty for me.

MEL. Do not fall back again ;
My sword's unsheathed yet.

EVAD. What shall I do ?

MEL. Be true, and make your fault less.

EVAD. I dare not tell.

MEL. Tell, or I'll be this day a-killing thee.

EVAD. Will you forgive me, then ? 120

MEL. Stay ; I must ask mine honor first.

I have too much foolish nature in me ; speak.

EVAD. Is there none else here ?

MEL. None but a fearful conscience ; that's too many.

Who is't ?

EVAD. Oh, hear me gently ! It was the King.<sup>12</sup>

MEL. No more. My worthy father's and my services

Are liberally rewarded ! King, I thank thee !

For all my dangers and my wounds thou hast paid me

In my own metal ; these are soldiers' thanks ! —

How long have you liv'd thus, Evadne ?

EVAD. Too long. [130

<sup>11</sup> Cankerworm.

<sup>12</sup> Melantius has already been informed of this : a good illustration of the authors' tendency to sacrifice logic and consistency for theatrical effectiveness within a scene.

MEL. Too late you find it. Can you be sorry?

EVAD. Would I were half as blameless!

MEL. Evadne, thou wilt to thy trade again.

EVAD. First to my grave.

MEL. Would gods thou hadst been so blest!

Dost thou not hate this King now? Prithee, hate him;

Couldst thou not curse him? I command thee, curse him;

Curse till the gods hear, and deliver him

To thy just wishes. Yet I fear, Evadne,

You had rather play your game out.

EVAD. No; I feel
Too many sad confusions here, to let in [140
Any loose flame hereafter.

MEL. Dost thou not feel, amongst all those,
one brave anger,

That breaks out nobly, and directs thine arm
To kill this base King?

EVAD. All the gods forbid it!

MEL. No, all the gods require it;
They are dishonored in him.

EVAD. 'Tis too fearful.

MEL. Y' are valiant in his bed, and bold
enough

To be a stale whore, and have your madam's
name

Discourse for grooms and pages; and hereafter,

When his cool Majesty hath laid you by, [150

To be at pension with some needy sir

For meat and coarser clothes; thus far you knew

No fear. Come, you shall kill him.

EVAD. Good sir!

MEL. An 't were to kiss him dead, thou 'dst smother him;

Be wise, and kill him. Canst thou live, and
know

What noble minds shall make thee, see thyself
Found out with every finger, made the shame
Of all successions,<sup>13</sup> and in this great ruin

Thy brother and thy noble husband broken?
Thou shalt not live thus. Kneel, and swear to help me, 160

When I shall call thee to it; or, by all
Holy in Heaven and earth, thou shalt not live
To breathe a full hour longer; not a thought!
Come 't is a righteous oath. Give me thy [hands],<sup>14</sup>

And, both to Heaven held up, swear, by that wealth

<sup>13</sup> Posterity, <sup>14</sup> Emend. Colman; old eds. hand.

This lustful thief stole from thee, when I say it,
To let his foul soul out.

EVAD. Here I swear it; ✓
And, all you spirits of abused ladies,
Help me in this performance!

MEL. Enough. This must be known to
none 170

But you and I, Evadne; not to your lord,
Though he be wise and noble, and a fellow
Dares step as far into a worthy action
As the most daring, ay, as far as justice.
Ask me not why. Farewell.

Exit MELANTIUS.

EVAD. Would I could say so to my black disgrace!

Gods, where have I been all this time? How
friended,

That I should lose myself thus desperately,
And none for pity show me how I wand' red?
There is not in the compass of the light [180
A more unhappy creature; sure, I am monstrous;

For I have done those follies, those mad mis-chiefs,

Would dare <sup>15</sup> a woman. Oh, my loaden soul,
Be not so cruel to me; choke not up
The way to my repentance!

Enter AMINTOR.

Oh, my Lord!

AMIN. How now?

EVAD. My much abused lord! Kneels.

AMIN. This cannot be!

EVAD. I do not kneel to live. I dare not hope it;

The wrongs I did are greater. Look upon me,
Though I appear with all my faults.

AMIN. Stand up.

This is [a] <sup>16</sup> new way to beget more sorrow; 190

Heaven knows I have too many. Do not mock me;

Though I am tame, and bred up with my
wrongs,

Which are my foster brothers, I may leap,
Like a hand-wolf,<sup>17</sup> into my natural wildness,
And do an outrage. Prithee, do not mock
me.

EVAD. My whole life is so leprous, it infects

All my repentance. I would buy your pardon, Though at the highest set,<sup>18</sup> even with my
life;

That slight contrition, that[s] <sup>19</sup> no sacrifice
For what I have committed.

AMIN. Sure, I dazzle; <sup>20</sup> [200
There cannot be a faith in that foul woman,
That knows no god more mighty than her mischiefs. —

Thou dost still worse, still number on thy faults,

To press my poor heart thus. Can I believe
There's any seed of virtue in that woman
Left to shoot up, that dares go on in sin
Known, and so known as thine is? Oh,
Evadne!

Would there were any safety <sup>21</sup> in thy sex,
That I might put a thousand sorrows off,
And credit thy repentance! but I must
not. 210

Thou hast brought me to that dull calamity,
To that strange misbelief of all the world
And all things that are in it, that I fear
I shall fall like a tree, and find my grave,
Only rememb'ring that I grieve.

EVADNE. My Lord,
Give me your griefs; you are an innocent,
A soul as white as Heaven; let not my sins
Perish your noble youth. I do not fall here
To shadow, by dissembling with my tears,
(As all say women can,) or to make less, [220
What my hot will hath done, which Heaven and you

Knows to be tougher than the hand of time
Can cut from man's remembrance; no, I do
not;

I do appear the same, the same Evadne,
Dress'd in the shames I liv'd in, the same monster.

But these are names of honor to <sup>22</sup> what I am;
I do present myself the foulest creature,
Most poisonous, dangerous, and despis'd of
men,

Lerna <sup>23</sup> e'er bred or Nilus. I am hell, Till you, my dear Lord, shoot your light into
me, 230

The beams of your forgiveness; I am soul-sick,

And wither with the fear of one condemn'd,
Till I have got your pardon.

AMIN. Rise, Evadne.
Those heavenly Powers that put this good into
thee

Grant a continuance of it! I forgive thee;

<sup>19</sup> Add. Qs. <sup>20</sup> Am dazzled.

slew.

Make thyself worthy of it; and take heed,
Take heed, Evadne, this be serious.

Mock not the Powers above, that can and dare

Give thee a great example of their justice
To all ensuing eyes, <sup>24</sup> if thou play'st 240

With thy repentance, the best sacrifice.

EVADNE. I have done nothing good to win
belief,

My life hath been so faithless. All the creatures,

Made for Heaven's honors, have their ends,
and good ones,

All but the cozening crocodiles, false women.
They reign here like those plagues, those killing sores,

Men pray against; and when they die, like tales

Ill told and unbeliev'd, they pass away,
And go to dust forgotten. But, my Lord, Those short days I shall number to my
rest 250

(As many must not see me) shall, though too
late,

Though in my evening, yet perceive a will,
Since I can do no good, because a woman,
Reach constantly at something that is near it;
I will redeem one minute of my age,
Or, like another Niobe, I'll weep,
Till I am water.

AMIN. I am now dissolved;
My frozen soul melts. May each sin thou hast,

Find a new mercy! Rise; I am at peace. [259
Hadst thou been thus, thus excellently good,
Before that devil-king tempted thy frailty, Sure thou hadst made a star. Give me thy
hand:

From this time I will know thee; and, as far
As honor gives me leave, be thy Amintor.

When we meet next, I will salute thee fairly,
And pray the gods to give thee happy days;
My charity shall go along with thee,

Though my embraces must be far from thee.
I should ha' kill'd thee, but this sweet repentance

Locks up my vengeance; for which thus I kiss thee — 270

The last kiss we must take; and would to
Heaven

The holy priest that gave our hands together
Had given us equal virtues! Go, Evadne;

The gods thus part our bodies. Have a care
My honor falls no further; I am well, then.

<sup>24</sup> Weber conjectures ages.

EVAD. All the dear joys here, and above
hereafter,
Crown thy fair soul! Thus I take leave, my
Lord;
And never shall you see the foul Evadne,
Till she have tried all honored means that
may
Set her in rest and wash her stains away. [280
Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>25</sup>

Hautboys play within; a banquet [discovered].
Enter KING [and] CALIANAX.

KING. I cannot tell how I should credit
this
From you, that are his enemy.

CAL. I am sure
He said it to me; and I'll justify it What way he dares oppose, but <sup>26</sup> with my sword.

KING. But did he break, <sup>27</sup> without all circumstance,
To you, his foe, that he would have the fort,
To kill me, and then scape?

CAL. If he deny it,
I'll make him blush.

KING. It sounds incredibly.

CAL. Ay, so does everything I say of late.

KING. Not so, Calianax.

CAL. Yes, I should sit [10
Mute, whilst a rogue with strong arms cuts your throat.

KING. Well, I will try him; and, if this be true,

I'll pawn my life I'll find it; if 't be false,
And that <sup>28</sup> you clothe your hate in such a
lie,

You shall hereafter dote in your own house,
Not in the court.

CAL. Why, if it be a lie,
Mine ears are false, for I'll be sworn I heard
it.

Old men are good for nothing; you were best
Put me to death for hearing, and free him
For meaning it. You would 'a' trusted me [20
Once, but the time is altered.

KING. And will still,
Where I may do with justice to the world.
You have no witness.

CAL. Yes, myself.

KING. No more,
I mean, there were that heard it.

CAL. How? no more!
Would you have more? Why, am not I
enough

To hang a thousand rogues?

KING. But so you may
Hang honest men too, if you please.

CAL. I may!
'T is like I will do so; there are a hundred
Will swear it for a need too, if I say it —

KING. Such witnesses we need not.

CAL. And 't is hard [30
If my word cannot hang a boisterous knave.

KING. Enough. — Where's Strato?

Enter STRATO.

STRATO. Sir?

KING. Why, where's all the company?
Call Amintor in;

Evadne. Where's my brother, and Melan-tius?

Bid him come too; and Diphilus. Call all
That are without there. — Exit STRATO.

If he should desire
The combat of you, 't is not in the power
Of all our laws to hinder it, unless
We mean to quit <sup>29</sup> 'em.

CAL. Why, if you do think
'T is fit an old man and a councillor 40
To fight for what he says, then you may grant
it.

Enter AMINTOR, EVADNE, MELANTIVS, DI-PHILUS, LYSIPPUS, CLEON, STRATO, [and] DIAGORAS.

KING. Come, sirs! — Amintor, thou art
yet a bridegroom,

And I will use thee so; thou shalt sit down. —
Evadne, sit; — and you, Amintor, too;

This banquet is for you, sir. — Who has brought

A merry tale about him, to raise laughter
Amongst our wine? Why, Strato, where art
thou?

Thou wilt chop out with them unseasonably,
When I desire 'em not.

STRA. 'T is my ill luck, sir, so to spend them, then. 50

KING. Reach me a bowl of wine. — Melan-tius, thou

Art sad.

AMIN. <sup>30</sup> I should be, sir, the merriest here,
But I ha' ne'er a story of mine own
Worth telling at this time.

<sup>29</sup> Abandon.

<sup>30</sup> Q., incorrectly followed by mod. eds., Mel.

KING. Give me the wine. —
Melantius, I am now considering
How easy 't were for any man we trust
To poison one of us in such a bowl.

MEL. I think it were not hard, sir, for a knave.

CAL. [aside] Such as you are.

KING. I' faith, 't were easy. It becomes us well 60

To get plain-dealing men about ourselves ;
Such as you all are here. — Amintor, to thee
And to thy fair Evadne. [Drinks.]

MEL. [aside] Have you thought
Of this, Calianax?

CAL. [aside] Yes, marry, have I.

MEL. [aside] And what 's your resolution?

CAL. [aside] Ye shall have it, —
Soundly, I warrant you.

KING. Reach to Amintor, Strato.

AMIN. Here, my love ;
[Drinks and then hands the cup to EVADNE.]

This wine will do thee wrong, for it will set
Blushes upon thy cheeks ; and, till thou dost
A fault, 't were pity.

KING. Yet I wonder much [70
Of <sup>31</sup> the strange desperation of these men,
That dare attempt such acts here in our state :
He could not scape that did it.

MEL. Were he known, Impossible.

KING. It would be known, Melantius.

MEL. It ought to be. If he got then away,
He must wear all our lives upon his sword :
He need not fly the island ; he must leave
No one alive.

KING. No ; I should think no man Could kill me, and scape clear, but that old
man.

CAL. But I ! Heaven bless me ! I ! should
I, my Liege? 80

KING. I do not think thou wouldst ; but yet thou might'st,
For thou hast in thy hands the means to
scape,

By keeping of the fort. — He has, Melantius,
And he has kept it well.

MEL. From cobwebs, sir,
'T is clean swept ; I can find no other art
In keeping of it now. 'T was ne'er besieg'd
Since he commanded.

CAL. I shall be sure
Of your good word ; but I have kept it safe
From such as you.

<sup>1</sup> Theobald emends at.

MEL. Keep your ill temper in :
I speak no malice ; had my brother kept it,
I should ha' said as much.

KING. You are not merry. [91
Brother, drink wine. [KING rises.] Sit you all still. — (aside) Calianax,

I cannot trust [this].<sup>32</sup> I have thrown out
words

That would have fetch'd warm blood upon the cheeks

Of guilty men, and he is never mov'd ;
He knows no such thing.

CAL. [aside] Impudence may scape,
When feeble virtue is accus'd.

KING. [aside] 'A must,
If he were guilty, feel an alteration
At this our whisper, whilst we point at him ;
You see he does not.

CAL. [aside] Let him hang himself ; [100
What care I what he does? This he did say.

KING [drawing MELANTIUS and CAL-IANAX aside] Melantius, you can easily conceive

What I have meant ; for men that are in fault
Can subtly apprehend when others aim
At what they do amiss ; but I forgive
Freely before this man, — Heaven do so too !
I will not touch thee so much as with shame
Of telling it. Let it be so no more.

CAL. Why, this is very fine !

MEL. I cannot tell
What 't is you mean ; but I am apt enough
Rudely to thrust into <sup>33</sup> ignorant fault. [111
But let me know it. Happily <sup>34</sup> 't is naught
But misconstruction ; and, where I am clear,
I will not take forgiveness of the gods,
Much less of you.

KING. Nay, if you stand so stiff,
I shall call back my mercy.

MEL. I want smoothness
To thank a man for pardoning of a crime
I never knew.

KING. Not to instruct your knowledge, but to show you

My ears are everywhere : you meant to kill
me, 120
And get the fort to scape.

MEL. Pardon me, sir ;
My bluntness will be pardoned. You preserve

A race of idle people here about you,
[Facers] <sup>35</sup> and talkers, to defame the worth

<sup>35</sup> Cf. on IV, i, 54. So Q<sub>1</sub> ; other old eds., Eaters.

Of those that do things worthy. The man that uttered this
Had perish'd without food, be 't who it will,
But for this arm, that fenc'd him from the foe ;
And if I thought you gave a faith to this,
The plainness of my nature would speak more.
Give me a pardon (for you ought to do 't) [130
To kill him that spake this.

CAL. [aside] Ay, that will be
The end of all ; then I am fairly paid
For all my care and service.

MEL. That old man,
Who calls me enemy, and of whom I
(Though I will never match my hate so low)
Have no good thought, would yet, I think, excuse me,
And swear he thought me wrong'd in this,

CAL. Who, I ?
Thou shameless fellow ! didst thou not speak
to me
Of it thyself ?

MEL. Oh, then it came from him !

CAL. From me ! who should it come from but from me ? 140

MEL. Nay, I believe your malice is enough ;
But I ha' lost my anger. — Sir, I hope
You are well satisfied.

KING. Lysippus, cheer
Amintor and his lady. — There's no sound
Comes from you ; I will come and do 't myself.

AMIN. [aside] You have done already, sir,
for me, I thank you.

KING.<sup>36</sup> Melantius, I do credit this from
him,
How slight soe'er you make 't.

MEL. 'T is strange you should.

CAL. 'T is strange 'a should believe an old man's word

That never lied in 's life !

MEL. I talk not to thee. — [150
Shall the wild words of this distempered man,
Frantic with age and sorrow, make a breach Betwixt your Majesty and me ? 'T was wrong
To hearken to him ; but to credit him,
As much at least as I have power to bear.
But pardon me — whilst I speak only truth,
I may commend myself — I have bestow'd
My careless blood with you,<sup>37</sup> and should be loth

To think an action that would make me lose

That and my thanks too. When I was a boy,
I thrust myself into my country's cause, [161
And did a deed that pluck'd five years from
time,

And styl'd me man then. And for you, my
King,

Your subjects all have fed by virtue of My arm — this sword of mine hath plough'd
the ground —

And reap'd<sup>38</sup> the fruit in peace ;
And you yourself have liv'd at home in ease.
So terrible I grew that, without swords,
My name hath fetch'd you conquest ; and my
heart

And limbs are still the same, my will as great
To do you service. Let me not be paid [171
With such a strange distrust.

KING. Melantius,
I held it great injustice to believe
Thine enemy, and did not ; if I did,
I do not ; let that satisfy. — What, struck
With sadness all ? More wine !

CAL. A few fine words Have overthrown my truth. Ah, th' art a villain !

MEL. (aside) Why, thou wert better let me have the fort :

Dotard, I will disgrace thee thus for ever ;
There shall no credit lie upon thy words. [180
Think better, and deliver it.

CAL. My Liege,
He's at me now again to do it. — Speak ;
Deny it, if thou canst. — Examine him
Whilst he is hot ; for, if he cool again,
He will forswear it.

KING. This is lunacy,
I hope, Melantius.

MEL. He hath lost himself
Much, since his daughter miss'd the happiness
My sister gain'd ; and, though he call me foe,
I pity him.

CAL. Pity ! A pox upon you !

MEL. Mark his disordered words : and at
the masque 190

Diagoras knows he rag'd and rail'd at me,
And call'd a lady " whore," so innocent
She understood him not. But it becomes Both you and me to forgive distraction :
Pardon him, as I do.

<sup>38</sup> Present punctuation is designed to show that subjects is the real subject of reap'd, though it is possible that the sense is "My sword hath reaped the fruit of my actions in the form of the peace we all enjoy." But the line is short, and Seward's conjecture may be right: "And they have reap'd the fruit of it in peace."

<sup>36</sup> Apparently the whole colloquy, down to about l. 196, is not heard by the other guests.

<sup>37</sup> I have spent my blood, taking no care of it, in your service.

CAL. I'll not speak for thee,
For all thy cunning. — If you will be safe,
Chop off his head; for there was never known
So impudent a rascal.

KING. Some, that love him,
Get him to bed. Why, pity should not let Age make itself contemptible; we must be [200
All old. Have him away.

MEL. Calianax,
The King believes you; come, you shall go
home,

And rest; you ha' done well. — [aside to him]
You'll give it up,

When I have us'd you thus a month, I hope.

CAL. Now, now, 't is plain, sir; he does move me still.

He says he knows I'll give him up the fort,
When he has us'd me thus a month. I am
mad,

Am I not, still?

OMNES. Ha, ha, ha!

CAL. I shall be mad indeed, if you do thus.
Why should you trust a sturdy fellow there (That has no virtue in him — all's in his sword) 211

Before me? Do but take his weapons from
him,

And he's an ass; and I am a very fool,
Both with ['em]<sup>39</sup> and without ['em],<sup>39</sup> as you use me.

OMNES. Ha, ha, ha!

KING. 'T is well, Calianax; but if you use
This once again, I shall entreat some other
To see your offices be well discharg'd. —
Be merry, gentlemen. — It grows somewhat late. —

Amintor, thou wouldst be abed again. 220

AMIN. Yes, sir.

KING. And you, Evadne. — Let me take Thee in my arms, Melantius, and believe
Thou art, as thou deservest to be, my friend
Still and for ever. — Good Calianax,
Sleep soundly; it will bring thee to thyself.

Exeunt [all but] MELANTIUS and CALIANAX.

CAL. Sleep soundly! I sleep soundly now,
I hope;
I could not be thus else. — How dar'st thou
stay

Alone with me, knowing how thou hast used
me?

MEL. You cannot blast me with your tongue, and that's
The strongest part you have about you.

<sup>39</sup> Emend. Dyce; old eds. him.

CAL. I [230

Do look for some great punishment for this;
For I begin to forget all my hate,
And take 't unkindly that mine enemy
Should use me so extraordinarily scurvily.

MEL. I shall melt too, if you begin to take

Unkindnesses; I never meant you hurt.

CAL. Thou 'lt anger me again. Thou wretched rogue,

Meant me no hurt! Disgrace me with the King!

Lose all my offices! This is no hurt,
Is it? I prithee, what dost thou call hurt?

MEL. To poison men, because they love
me not; 241

To call the credit of men's wives in question;

To murder children,<sup>40</sup> betwixt me and land;
This I call hurt.

CAL. All this thou think'st is sport;
For mine is worse; but use thy will with
me,

For betwixt grief and anger I could cry.

MEL. Be wise, then, and be safe; thou mayst revenge —

CAL. Ay, o' th' King; I would revenge of
thee.

MEL. That you must plot yourself.

CAL. I am a fine plotter.

MEL. The short is, I will hold thee with the
King 250

In this perplexity, till peevishness
And thy disgrace have laid thee in thy grave.
But if thou wilt deliver up the fort,
I'll take thy trembling body in my arms,
And bear thee over dangers. Thou shalt hold

Thy wonted state.

CAL. If I should tell the King.
Canst thou deny 't again?

MEL. Try, and believe.

CAL. Nay, then, thou canst bring any thing about.

[Melantius],<sup>41</sup> thou shalt have the fort.

MEL. Why, well.
Here let our hate be buried; and this hand [260
Shall right us both. Give me thy aged breast
To compass.

CAL. Nay, I do not love thee yet;
I cannot well endure to look on thee;
And if I thought it were a courtesy,
Thou shouldst not have it. But I am dis-
grac'd;

<sup>40</sup> I.e., heirs who stand.

<sup>41</sup> Q<sub>1</sub> only.

My offices are to be ta'en away ;
 And, if I did but hold this fort a day,
 I do believe the King would take it from
 me,
 And give it thee, things are so strangely carried.
 Ne'er thank me for 't ; but yet the King shall
 know 270
 There was some such thing in 't I told him of,
 And that I was an honest man.

MEL. He'll buy
 That knowledge very dearly.

Re-enter DIPHILUS.

Diphilus,

What news with thee?

DIPH. This were a night indeed
 To do it in : the King hath sent for her.

MEL. She shall perform it then. — Go,
 Diphilus,
 And take from this good man, my worthy
 friend,
 The fort ; he'll give it thee.

DIPH. Ha' you got that?

CAL. Art thou of the same breed? Canst thou deny
 This to the King too?

DIPH. With a confidence [280
 As great as his.

CAL. Faith, like enough.

MEL. Away, and use him kindly.

CAL. Touch not me ;
 I hate the whole strain.<sup>42</sup> If thou follow
 me

A great way off, I'll give thee up the fort ;
 And hang yourselves.

MEL. Begone.

DIPH. He's finely wrought.

Exeunt CALIANAX [and] DIPHILUS.

MEL. This is a night, spite of astronomers,<sup>43</sup>
 To do the deed in. I will wash the stain
 That rests upon our house off with his blood.

Re-enter AMINTOR.

AMIN. Melantius, now assist me : if thou beest
 That which thou say'st, assist me. I have lost 290

All my distempers, and have found a rage
 So pleasing ! Help me.

MEL. [aside] Who can see him thus,
 And not swear vengeance? — What's the matter, friend?

<sup>43</sup> Astrologers.

AMIN. Out with thy sword ; and, hand in hand with me,
 Rush to the chamber of this hated King,
 And sink him with the weight of all his sins
 To hell for ever.

MEL. 'T were a rash attempt,
 Not to be done with safety. Let your reason
 Plot your revenge, and not your passion.

AMIN. If thou refusest me in these extremes, 300

Thou art no friend. He sent for her to me ;
 By Heaven, to me, myself ! and, I must tell
 ye,

I love her as a stranger : there is worth
 In that vild woman, worthy things, Melantius ;
 And she repents. I'll do 't myself alone,
 Though I be slain. Farewell.

MEL. [aside] He'll overthrow
 My whole design with madness. — Amintor, Think what thou doest ; I dare as much as
 valor ;

But 't is the King, the King, the King,
 Amintor,
 With whom thou fightest ! — (aside) I know he's honest 310

And this will work with him.

AMIN. I cannot tell
 What thou hast said ; but thou hast charm'd my sword

Out of my hand, and left me shaking here, Defenceless.

MEL. I will take it up for thee.

AMIN. What a wild beast is uncollected <sup>45</sup>
 man !

The thing that we call honor bears us all
 Headlong unto sin, and yet itself is nothing.

MEL. Alas, how variable are thy thoughts !

AMIN. Just like my fortunes. I was run to that

I purpos'd to have chid thee for. Some plot, 320

I did distrust, thou hadst against the King,
 By that old fellow's carriage. But take heed ;

There's not the least limb growing to a
 king

But carries thunder in 't.

MEL. I have none
 Against him.

AMIN. Why, come, then ; and still remember

We may not think revenge.

MEL. I will remember. Exeunt.

<sup>44</sup> Loyal.

<sup>45</sup> With disordered faculties.

ACT V — [SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter EVADNE and a Gentleman [of the Bed-chamber].

EVAD. Sir, is the King abed?

GENT. Madam, an hour ago.

EVAD. Give me the key, then, and let none be near;

'T is the King's pleasure.

GENT. I understand you, madam; would 't were mine!

I must not wish good rest unto your Ladyship.

EVAD. You talk, you talk.

GENT. 'T is all I dare do, madam; but the King

Will wake, and then, [methinks] <sup>2</sup>—

EVAD. Saving your imagination, pray, good night, sir.

GENT. A good night be it, then, and a long one, madam. <sup>10</sup>

I am gone. Exit.

EVAD. The night grows horrible; and all about me

Like my black purpose. Oh, the conscience Of a lost virgin,<sup>3</sup> whither wilt thou pull me? To what things dismal as the depth of hell Wilt thou provoke me? Let no woman dare From this hour be disloyal, if her heart be flesh, If she have blood, and can fear. 'T is a darling

Above that desperate fool's<sup>4</sup> that left his peace,

And went to sea to fight; 't is so many sins, [20 An age cannot [repent] <sup>5</sup> 'e]m; and so great, The gods want mercy for. Yet I must through 'e]m:

I have begun a slaughter on my honor, And I must end it there.

[She opens the curtains of the inner stage, discovering the] KING abed.<sup>6</sup>

— 'A sleeps. Good

Heavens! <sup>7</sup>

Why give you peace to this untemperate beast,

That hath so long transgress'd you? I must kill him,

And I will do 't bravely; the mere joy Tells me I merit in it. Yet I must not

Thus tamely do it as he sleeps — that were To rock him to another world; my vengeance

Shall take him waking, and then lay before him

The number of his wrongs and punishments.

I'll shape his sins like Furies, till I waken

His evil angel, his sick conscience,

And then I'll strike him dead. — King, by your leave; — (Ties his arms to the bed.)

I dare not trust your strength; your Grace and I Must grapple upon even terms no more.

So, if he rail me not from my resolution,

I shall be strong enough. — My Lord the King!

My Lord! — 'A sleeps as if he meant to wake

No more. — My Lord! — Is he not dead already? —

Sir! My Lord!

KING. Who's that?

EVAD. Oh, you sleep soundly, sir!

KING. My dear Evadne,

I have been dreaming of thee; come to bed.

EVAD. I am come at length, sir; but how welcome?

KING. What pretty new device is this, Evadne?

What, do you tie me to you? By my love, This is a quaint one. Come, my dear, and kiss me;

I'll be thy Mars; to bed, my Queen of Love. Let us be caught together, that the gods <sup>50</sup> May see and envy our embraces.

EVAD. Stay, sir, stay;

You are too hot, and I have brought you physic

To temper your high veins.

KING. Prithee, to bed, then; let me take it warm;

There thou shalt know the state of my body better.

EVAD. I know you have a surfeited foul body;

And you must bleed. [Draws a knife.]

KING. Bleed!

EVAD. Ay, you shall bleed. Lie still; and, if the devil,

Your lust, will give you leave, repent. This steel

Comes to redeem the honor that you stole, [60 KING, my fair name, which nothing but thy death

Can answer to the world.

KING. How's this, Evadne?

EVAD. I am not she; nor bear I in this breast

So much cold spirit to be call'd a woman:

I am a tiger; I am anything

That knows not pity. Stir not! If thou dost,

I'll take thee unprepar'd, thy fears upon thee,

That make thy sins look double, and so send thee

(By my revenge, I will!) to look<sup>8</sup> those torments

Prepar'd for such black souls. 70

KING. Thou dost not mean this; 't is impossible;

Thou art too sweet and gentle.

EVAD. No, I am not;

I am as foul as thou art, and can number

As many such hells here. I was once fair,

Once I was lovely; not a blowing rose

More chastely sweet, till thou, thou, thou, foul canker,<sup>9</sup>

(Stir not!) didst poison me. I was a world of virtue,

Till your curs'd court and you (hell bless you for 't!)

With your temptations on temptations

Made me give up mine honor; for which, King, 80

I am come to kill thee.

KING. No!

EVAD. I am.

KING. Thou art not!

I prithee speak not these things. Thou art gentle,

And wert not meant thus rugged.

EVAD. Peace, and hear me.

Stir nothing but your tongue, and that for mercy

To those above us; by whose lights I vow,

Those blessed fires<sup>10</sup> that shot to see our sin,

If thy hot soul had substance with thy blood, I would kill that too; which, being past my steel,

My tongue shall reach. Thou art a shameless villain;

A thing out of the overcharge of nature 90

Sent, like a thick cloud, to disperse a plague

Upon weak catching<sup>11</sup> women; such a tyrant

That for his lust would sell away his subjects,

Ay, all his Heaven hereafter!

KING. Hear, Evadne,

Thou soul of sweetness, hear! I am thy King.

EVAD. Thou art my shame! Lie still; there's none about you,

Within<sup>12</sup> your cries; all promises of safety Are but deluding dreams. Thus, thus, thou foul man,

Thus I begin my vengeance! Stabs him.

KING. Hold, Evadne!

I do command thee, hold.

EVAD. I do not mean, sir, [100 To part so fairly with you; we must change More of these love-tricks yet.

KING. What bloody villain Provok'd thee to this murder?

EVAD. Thou, thou monster!

KING. Oh!

EVAD. Thou kept'st me brave<sup>13</sup> at court, and whor'd me, King; Then married me to a young noble gentleman, And whor'd me still.

KING. Evadne, pity me!

EVAD. Hell take me, then! This for my Lord Amintor.

This for my noble brother! And this stroke For the most wrong'd of women! Kills him.

KING. Oh! I die. [110

EVAD. Die all our faults together! I forgive thee. Exit.

Enter two [Gentlemen] of the Bedchamber.

1 GENT. Come, now she's gone, let's enter; the King expects it, and will be angry.

2 GENT. 'T is a fine wench; we'll have a snap at her one of these nights, as she goes from him.

1 GENT. Content. How quickly he had done with her! I see kings can do no more that way than other mortal people.

2 GENT. How fast he is! I cannot hear him breathe. 120

1 GENT. Either the tapers give a feeble light,

Or he looks very pale.

2 GENT. And so he does:

Pray Heaven he be well; let's look. — Alas! He's stiff, wounded, and dead! — Treason, treason!

1 GENT. Run forth and call.

2 GENT. Treason, treason! Exit.

1 GENT. This will be laid on us: Who can believe a woman could do this?

Enter CLEON and LYSIPPUS.

CLEON. How now! where's the traitor?

<sup>12</sup> Within sound of.

<sup>13</sup> In splendid state.

1 GENT. Fled, fled away; but there her woful act

Lies still.

CLEON. Her act! a woman!

Lys. Where's the body? [130]

1 GENT. There.

Lys. Farewell, thou worthy man! There were two bonds

That tied our loves, a brother and a king,
The least of which might fetch a flood of tears;
But such the misery of greatness is,
They have no time to mourn; then, pardon
me!

Sirs, which way went she?

Enter STRATO.

STRA. Never follow her;

For she, alas! was but the instrument.
News is now brought in that Melantius
Has got the fort, and stands upon the wall, [140
And with a loud voice calls those few that pass
At this dead time of night, delivering<sup>14</sup>
The innocence of this act.

Lys. Gentlemen,

I am your King.

STRA. We do acknowledge it.

Lys. I would I were not! Follow, all;
for this

Must have a sudden stop. Exeunt.

[SCENE II]<sup>15</sup>

Enter MELANTIUS, DIPHILUS, [and] CALIANAX, on the walls.<sup>16</sup>

MEL. If the dull people can believe I am arm'd,
(Be constant, Diphilus,) now we have time
Either to bring our banish'd honors home,
Or create new ones in our ends.

DIPH. I fear not;
My spirit lies not that way. — Courage, Calianax!

CAL. Would I had any! you should quickly know it.

MEL. Speak to the people; thou art eloquent.

CAL. 'T is a fine eloquence to come to the gallows:
You were born to be my end; the Devil take
you!

Now must I hang for company. 'T is strange<sup>10</sup>
I should be old, and neither wise nor valiant.

Enter LYSIPPUS, DIAGORAS, CLEON, STRATO, [and] Guard.

Lys. See where he stands, as boldly confident

As if he had his full command about him.

STRA. He looks as if he had the better cause,
sir,

Under your gracious pardon let me speak it!
Though he be mighty-spirited, and forward
To all great things, to all things of that danger
Worse men shake at the telling of, yet certainly

I do believe him noble, and this action
Rather pull'd on than sought; his mind was ever

20

As worthy as his hand.

Lys. 'T is my fear, too.

Heaven forgive all! — Summon him, Lord
Cleon.

CLEON. Ho, from the walls there!

MEL. Worthy Cleon, welcome:
We could have wish'd you here, Lord; you are honest.

CAL. (aside) Well, thou art as flattering a knave, though

I dare not tell thee so —

Lys. Melantius!

MEL. Sir?

Lys. I am sorry that we meet thus; our old love

Never requir'd such distance. Pray [to]<sup>17</sup>
Heaven,

You have not left yourself, and sought this safety

More out of fear than honor! You have lost

30

A noble master, which your faith, Melantius,
Some think might have preserved; yet you know best.

CAL. (aside) When time was,<sup>18</sup> I was mad;
some that dares fight

I hope will pay this rascal.

MEL. Royal young man, those tears look lovely on thee;

Had they been shed for a deserving one,
They had been lasting monuments. Thy
brother,

Whilst he was good, I call'd him king, and serv'd him

With that strong faith, that most unwearied
valor,

Pull'd people from the farthest sun to seek
him

And buy his friendship. I was then his soldier.
But since his hot pride drew him to disgrace
me,

And brand my noble actions with his lust,
(That never-cur'd dishonor of my sister, Base stain of whore, and, which is worse, the joy

To make it still so,) like myself thus I
Have flung him off with my allegiance;
And stand here, mine own justice, to revenge
What I have suffered in him, and this old man
Wrong'd almost to lunacy.

CAL. Who, I? 50
You would draw me in. I have had no wrong;
I do disclaim ye all.

MEL. The short is this:
'T is no ambition to lift up myself
Urgeth me thus; I do desire again
To be a subject, so <sup>19</sup> I may be free;
If not, I know my strength, and will unbuild
This goodly town. Be speedy, and be wise,
In a reply.

STRA. Be sudden, sir, to tie
All up again. What's done is past recall,
And past you to revenge; and there are thousands 60
That wait for such a troubled hour as this.
Throw him the blank.

LYS. Melantius, write in that Thy choice: my seal is at it.

[Throws a paper to MELANTIUS.]

MEL. It was our honors drew us to this act,
Not gain; and we will only work our pardons.
CAL. Put my name in too.

DIPH. You disclaim'd us all
But now, Calianax.

CAL. That's all one; <sup>20</sup>
I'll not be hang'd hereafter by a trick:
I'll have it in.

MEL. You shall, you shall. — Come to the back gate, and we'll call you
king, 70

And give you up the fort.

LYS. Away, away. Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE III] <sup>21</sup>

Enter ASPATIA, in man's apparel.

ASP. This is my fatal hour. Heaven may forgive

My rash attempt, that causelessly hath laid
Griefs on me that will never let me rest,
And put a woman's heart into my breast.

It is more honor for you that I die;
For she that can endure the misery
That I have on me, and be patient too,
May live and laugh at all that you can do.

Enter Servant.

God save you, sir!

SER. And you, sir! What's your business?

ASP. With you, sir, now; to do me the fair office 10

To help me to your lord.

SER. What, would you serve him?

ASP. I'll do him any service; but, to haste, <sup>22</sup>

For my affairs are earnest, I desire
To speak with him.

SER. Sir, because you are in such haste, I would

Be loth to delay you longer: you can not.

ASP. It shall become you, though, to tell your lord.

SER. Sir, he will speak with nobody;
[But in particular, I have in charge,
About no weighty matters.] <sup>23</sup>

ASP. This is most strange. [20
Art thou gold-proof? There's for thee; help me to him.

SER. Pray be not angry, sir; I'll do my best. Exit.

ASP. How stubbornly this fellow answer'd
me!

There is a vild dishonest trick in man,
More than in women. All the men I meet
Appear thus to me, are harsh and rude,
And have a subtlety in everything,
Which love could never know; but we fond women

Harbor the easiest and the smoothest thoughts,
And think all shall go so. It is unjust 30
That men and women should be match'd
together.

Enter AMINTOR and his Man.

AMIN. Where is he?

SER. There, my Lord.

AMIN. What would you, sir?

ASP. Please it your Lordship to command
your man

Out of the room, I shall deliver things
Worthy your hearing.

<sup>22</sup> Make haste.

<sup>23</sup> Q: only. "My instructions are that he will speak with no one, especially if the subject is one of importance."

<sup>19</sup> Provided that. <sup>20</sup> That makes no difference.

AMIN. Leave us. [Exit Servant.]

ASP. (aside) Oh, that that shape
Should bury falsehood in it!

AMIN. Now your will, sir.

ASP. When you know me, my Lord, you needs must guess

My business; and I am not hard to know;
For, till the chance of war mark'd this smooth
face

With these few blemishes,<sup>24</sup> people would call
me 40

My sister's picture, and her mine. In short,
I am brother to the wrong'd Aspatia.

AMIN. The wrong'd Aspatia! Would thou wert so too

Unto the wrong'd Amintor! Let me kiss
That hand of thine, in honor that I bear Unto the wrong'd Aspatia. Here I stand
That did it. Would he<sup>25</sup> could not!<sup>26</sup> Gentle youth,

Leave me; for there is something in thy looks

That calls my sins in a most hideous form
Into my mind; and I have grief enough 50
Without thy help.

ASP. I would I could with credit!
Since I was twelve years old, I had not seen
My sister till this hour I now arriv'd;
She sent for me to see her marriage—
A woful one! but They that are above
Have ends in everything. She us'd few words,
But yet enough to make me understand
The baseness of the injuries you did her.
That little training I have had is war:
I may behave myself rudely in peace; 60
I would not, though. I shall not need to tell
you

I am but young, and would be loth to lose
Honor, that is not easily gain'd again.
Fairly I mean to deal: the age is strict
For single combats; and we shall be stopp'd,
If it be publish'd. If you like your sword,
Use it; if mine appear a better to you,
Change; for the ground is this, and this the
time,

To end our difference. [Draws.]

AMIN. Charitable youth,
If thou beest such, think not I will maintain 70
So strange a wrong; and, for thy sister's sake, Know that I could not think that desperate
thing

I durst not do; yet, to enjoy this world,

<sup>24</sup> She has evidently painted scars on her face.

<sup>25</sup> That did it. <sup>26</sup> Stand here.

I would not see her; for, beholding thee,
I am I know not what. If I have aught
That may content thee, take it, and be-
gone;

For death is not so terrible as thou:
Thine eyes shoot guilt into me.

ASP. Thus, she swore Thou wouldst behave thyself, and give me
words

That would fetch tears into my eyes; and
so 80

Thou dost indeed, But yet she bade me watch
Lest I were cozen'd; and be sure to fight
Ere I return'd.

AMIN. That must not be with me.
For her I'll die directly; but against her
Will never hazard it.

ASP. You must be urg'd.
I do not deal uncivilly with those
That dare to fight; but such a one as you Must be us'd thus. She strikes him.

AMIN. I prithee, youth, take heed.
Thy sister is a thing to me so much
Above mine honor, that I can endure 90
All this—good gods! a blow I can endure;
But stay not, lest thou draw a timeless<sup>27</sup>
death
Upon thyself.

ASP. Thou art some prating fellow;
One that has studied out a trick to talk,
And move soft-hearted people; to be kick'd,
She kicks him.
Thus to be kick'd.—(aside) Why should he be so slow

In giving me my death?

AMIN. A man can bear
No more, and keep his flesh. Forgive me,
then!

I would endure yet, if I could. Now show
[Draws.]

The spirit thou pretendest, and understand
Thou hast no hour to live.

They fight; [ASPATIA is wounded.]

What dost thou mean? [101
Thou canst not fight; the blows thou mak'st
at me

Are quite besides;<sup>28</sup> and those I offer at
thee,

Thou spread'st thine arms, and tak'st upon thy breast,
Alas, defenceless!

ASP. I have got enough.
And my desire. There is no place so fit
For me to die as here. [Falls.]

<sup>28</sup> Aside.

Enter EVADNE, her hands bloody, with a knife.

EVAD. Amintor, I am loaden with events
That fly to make thee happy; I have joys
That in a moment can call back thy wrongs
And settle thee in thy free state again. 111
It is Evadne still that follows thee,
But not her mischiefs.

AMIN. Thou canst not fool me to believe
again;
But thou hast looks and things so full of news,
That I am stay'd.

EVAD. Noble Amintor, put off thy amaze, Let thine eyes loose, and speak. Am I not fair?

Looks not Evadne beauteous with these rites
now?

Were those hours half so lovely in thine
eyes 120

When our hands met before the holy man?

I was too foul within to look fair then;

Since I knew ill, I was not free till now.

AMIN. There is presage of some important
thing

About thee, which, it seems, thy tongue hath lost.

Thy hands are bloody, and thou hast a knife.

EVAD. In this consists thy happiness and mine.

Joy to Amintor! for the King is dead.

AMIN. Those have most power to hurt us, that we love;

We lay our sleeping lives within their arms.

Why, thou hast raised up mischief to his height, 131

And found one to out-name<sup>29</sup> thy other faults;

Thou hast no intermission of thy sins,

But all thy life is a continued ill.

Black is thy color now, disease thy nature.

Joy to Amintor! Thou hast touch'd a life,

The very name of which had power to chain

Up all my rage, and calm my wildest wrongs.

EVAD. 'T is done; and, since I could not find a way

To meet thy love so clear as through his
life, 140

I cannot now repent it.

AMIN. Couldst thou procure the gods to speak to me,

To bid me love this woman and forgive,

I think I should fall out with them. Behold,

Here lies a youth whose wounds bleed in my
breast,

Sent by a violent fate to fetch his death

<sup>29</sup> Surpass.

From my slow hand! And, to augment my woe,

You now are present, stain'd with a king's
blood

Violently shed. This keeps night here,

And throws an unknown wilderness<sup>30</sup> about
me. 150

ASP. Oh, oh, oh!

AMIN. No more; pursue me not.

EVAD. Forgive me, then,
And take me to thy bed; we may not part.

[Kneels.]

AMIN. Forbear; be wise; and let my rage go this way.

EVAD. 'T is you that I would stay, not it.

AMIN. Take heed;

It will return with me.

EVAD. If it must be,

I shall not fear to meet it. Take me home.

AMIN. Thou monster of cruelty, forbear!

EVAD. For Heaven's sake look more calm!

Thine eyes are sharper

Than thou canst make thy sword.

AMIN. Away, away! [160

Thy knees are more to me than violence.

I am worse than sick to see knees follow me

For that I must not grant. For God's sake,
stand.

EVAD. Receive me, then.

AMIN. I dare not stay thy language.

In midst of all my anger and my grief,

Thou dost awake something that troubles me,

And says, I lov'd thee once. I dare not stay;

There is no end of woman's reasoning.

[Leaves her.]

EVAD. [rising] Amintor, thou shalt love me now again.

Go; I am calm. Farewell, and peace for ever! 170

Evadne, whom thou hat'st, will die for thee.

[Kills herself.]

AMIN. (returns.) I have a little human nature yet,

That's left for thee, that bids me stay thy
hand.

EVAD. Thy hand was welcome, but it came too late.

Oh, I am lost! the heavy sleep makes haste.

[She dies.]

ASP. Oh, oh, oh!

AMIN. This earth of mine doth tremble, and I feel

A stark affrighted motion in my blood.

My soul grows weary of her house, and I

<sup>30</sup> Wilderness.

All over am a trouble to myself. 180
There is some hidden power in these dead things,

That calls my flesh unto 'em ; I am cold.
Be resolute and bear 'em company.

There's something yet, which I am loth to leave ;

There's man enough in me to meet the fears
That death can bring ; and yet would it were done !

I can find nothing in the whole discourse
Of death I durst not meet the boldest way ;
Yet still, betwixt the reason and the act,
The wrong I to Aspatia did stands up ; [190
I have not such another fault to answer.

Though she may justly arm herself with scorn
And hate of me, my soul will part less troubled
When I have paid to her in tears my sorrow.
I will not leave this act unsatisfied,
If all that's left in me can answer it.

ASP. Was it a dream ? There stands Amintor still ;
Or I dream still.

AMIN. How dost thou ? speak ; receive my love and help.

Thy blood climbs up to his old place again ;
There's hope of thy recovery. 201

ASP. Did you not name Aspatia ?

AMIN. I did.

ASP. And talk'd of tears and sorrow unto
her ?

AMIN. 'Tis true ; and, till these happy signs in thee
Stay'd my course, it<sup>1</sup> was thither I was going.

ASP. Thou art there already, and these wounds are hers.

Those threats I brought with me sought not
revenge,
But came to fetch this blessing from thy
hand ;

I am Aspatia yet.

AMIN. Dare my soul ever look abroad
again ? 210

ASP. I shall sure live, Amintor ; I am well ;
A kind of healthful joy wanders within me.

AMIN. The world wants [lives]<sup>2</sup> to excuse thy loss ;
Come, let me bear thee to some place of help.

ASP. Amintor, thou must stay ; I must rest here ;

My strength begins to disobey my will.

How dost thou, my best soul ? I would fain
live

Now, if I could. Wouldst thou have loved me, then ?

AMIN. Alas,

All that I am 's not worth a hair from thee !

ASP. Give me thy hand ; mine hands grope up and down, 221

And cannot find thee ; I am wondrous sick.

Have I thy hand, Amintor ?

AMIN. Thou greatest blessing of the world, thou hast.

ASP. I do believe thee better than my sense.

Oh, I must go ! farewell ! [Dies.]

AMIN. She swoons.<sup>3</sup> — Aspatia ! — Help !
for God's sake, water,

Such as may chain life ever to this frame ! — Aspatia, speak ! — What, no help ? Yet I fool !

I'll chafe her temples. Yet there's nothing stirs. 230

Some hidden power tell her Amintor calls,
And let her answer me ! — Aspatia, speak ! —
I have heard, if there be any life, but bow
The body thus, and it will show itself.

Oh, she is gone ! I will not leave her yet.
Since out of justice we must challenge noth-
ing,

I'll call it mercy, if you'll pity me,
You heavenly Powers, and lend for some few
years

The blessed soul to this fair seat again ! —
No comfort comes ; the gods deny me too. [240
I'll bow the body once again. — Aspatia ! —
The soul is fled for ever ; and I wrong
Myself, so long to lose her company.

Must I talk now ? Here's to be with thee, love ! Kills himself.

Re-enter Servant.

SERV. This is a great grace to my Lord, to have the new king come to him. I must tell him he is ent'ring. — Oh, God ! — Help, help !

Enter LYSIPPUS, MELANTIUS, CALIANAX, CLEON, DIPHILUS, [and] STRATO.

LYS. Where's Amintor ?

STRA. Oh, there, there !

LYS. How strange is this !

CAL. What should we do here ?

MEL. These deaths are such acquainted things with me, 250

That yet my heart dissolves not. May I
stand

Stiff here for ever! — Eyes, call up your tears!

This is Amintor. Heart, he was my friend;
Melt! now it flows. — Amintor, give a word
To call me to thee.

AMIN. Oh!

MEL. Melantius calls his friend Amintor.
Oh,

Thy arms are kinder to me than thy tongue!
Speak, speak!

AMIN. What? 260

MEL. That little word was worth all the sounds

That ever I shall hear again.

DIPH. Oh, Brother,
Here lies your sister slain! You lose yourself

In sorrow there.

MEL. Why, Diphilus, it is
A thing to laugh at, in respect of this.
Here was my sister, father, brother, son;
All that I had. — Speak once again; what youth

Lies slain there by thee?

AMIN. 'T is Aspatia.

My last is said. Let me give up my soul
Into thy bosom. [Dies.] 270

CAL. What's that? What's that? Aspatia!

MEL. I never did
Repent the greatness of my heart till now;
It will not burst at need.

CAL. My daughter dead here too! And you have all fine new tricks to grieve; but I ne'er knew any but direct crying.

MEL. I am a prattler; but no more.

[Offers <sup>34</sup> to kill himself.]

DIPH. Hold, Brother!

LYS. Stop him.

DIPH. Fie, how unmanly was this offer in
you!

Does this become our strain? <sup>35</sup> 280

CAL. I know not what the matter is, but I am grown very kind, and am friends with you [all now].<sup>36</sup> You have given me that among you will kill me quickly; but I'll go home, and live as long as I can. [Exit.] <sup>36</sup>

MEL. His spirit is but poor that can be kept

From death for want of weapons.

Is not my hands a weapon sharp enough
To stop my breath? or, if you tie down those,
I vow, Amintor, I will never eat, 290
Or drink, or sleep, or have to do with that That may preserve life! This I swear to keep.

LYS. Look to him, though, and bear those bodies in.

May this a fair example be to me
To rule with temper; for on lustful kings Unlook'd-for sudden deaths from God are sent;

But curs'd is he that is their instrument.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

THIS sprightly comedy, wholly the work of Fletcher, was acted at court in 1621, presumably not long after its composition. According to the eminent actors Lowin and Taylor, who introduce the editio princeps, it was a particular favorite of the author's: in spite of his "innate modesty" and usual unconcern when he witnessed his plays in performance, he joined "the thronged theatre" in "applauding this rare issue of his brain." "Only we wish," they conclude, "that you may have the same kind of joy in perusing of it as we had in the acting."

Like many another comedy of manners, The Wild-Goose Chase is not remarkable for structural excellences. No source of the too episodic plot is known. The play pleases by its very artificiality, its sparkling dialogue, its wit and sophistication, and above all its unforced gaiety. We are on the way, now, from the thoughtful comedy of Jonson to the careless grace of Etherege.

The piece remained in "general received acceptance" up to the closing of the theatres, and when they reopened under the Restoration was one of the first plays to be revived. Farquhar's adaptation, The Inconstant, was staged in 1702, but the original was occasionally acted till long after.

The Wild-Goose Chase was not included in the First Folio, of 1647, since, as we learn from the prefatory note of the publisher, the only MS of it had "long been lost, and I fear irrecoverable." He goes on to explain that "a person of quality borrowed it from the actors many years since and, by the negligence of a servant, it was never returned; therefore now I put up this Si quis [advertisement], that whoever happily meets with it shall be thankfully satisfied if he please to send it home." Apparently the Si quis turned the trick, and in 1652 the play appeared separately in folio, with eulogistic verses by Richard Lovelace and others. It was reprinted in the Second Folio, of 1679. The present text is based on the first edition, with a few corrections from the second.

THE WILD-GOOSE CHASE

JOHN FLETCHER

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

DE GARD, a noble, staid gentleman, that, being newly lighted from his travels, assists his sister Oriana in her chase of Mirabel the Wild-Goose. Acted by Mr. Robert Benfield.

LA CASTRE, the indulgent father to Mirabel. Acted by Mr. Richard Robinson.

MIRABEL the Wild-Goose, a travell'd Monsieur, and great defier of all ladies in the way of marriage, otherwise their much loose servant,<sup>1</sup> at last caught by the despis'd Oriana. Incomparably acted by Mr. Joseph Taylor.

PINAC, his fellow traveller, of a lively spirit, and servant to the no less sprightly Lillia Bianca. Admirably well acted by Mr. Thomas Pollard.

BELLEUR, companion to both, of a stout blunt humor, in love with Rosalura. Most naturally acted by Mr. John Lowin.

NANTOLET, father to Rosalura and Lillia Bianca. Acted by Mr. William Penn.

LUGIER, the rough and confident tutor to the ladies, and chief engine to entrap the Wild-Goose. Acted by Mr. Hilliard Swanston.

A Young [Man disguised as a] factor. By Mr. John Honyman.

[A Servant to Lillia Bianca.]

ORIANA, the fair betroth'd of Mirabel, and witty follower of the chase. Acted by Mr. Steph. Hammerton.

ROSALURA, } the airy daughters of Nan-LILLIA BIANCA, } tolet. William Trigg, Sander Gough.

MARIANA, an English courtesan.

Four Women.

THE SCENE — Paris.

ACT I — SCENE I<sup>4</sup>

Enter MONSIEUR DE GARD and a Foot-boy.

DE GARD. Sirrah, you know I have rid hard; stir my horse well,
And let him want no litter.

BOY. I am sure I have run hard;
Would somebody would walk me, and see me litter'd,

For I think my fellow horse cannot in reason Desire more rest, nor take up his chamber before me;

But we are the beasts now, and the beasts are our masters.

<sup>3</sup> F. adds Their Servant. Dyce suggests that this may be the servant to Lillia Bianca, and that Shanck doubled the rôles.

<sup>4</sup> Not precisely located; in or before the house of La Castre.

DE GARD. When you have done, step to the ten-crown ordinary<sup>5</sup> —

BOY. With all my heart, sir; for I have [a] twenty-crown stomach.

DE GARD. And there bespeak a dinner.

BOY. Yes, sir, presently.<sup>6</sup> [10

DE GARD. For whom, I beseech you, sir?

BOY. For myself, I take it, sir.

DE GARD. In truth, you shall not take it; 't is not meant for you.

There's for your provender [giving money].
Bespeak a dinner

For Monsieur Mirabel and his companions;
They'll be in town within this hour. When you have done, sirrah,

Make ready all things at my lodging for me,
And wait me there.

BOY. The ten-crown ordinary?

<sup>6</sup> At once.

DE GARD. Yes, sir, if you have not forgot it.

BOY. I'll forget my feet first :

'T is the best part of a footman's faith.

Exit Boy.

DE GARD. These youths, [20

For all they have been in Italy to learn thrift,
And seem to wonder at men's lavish ways,
Yet they cannot rub off old friends, their French itches ;<sup>7</sup>

They must meet sometimes to disport their bodies

With good wine and good women, and good store too.

Let 'em be what they will, they are arm'd at all points,

And then hang saving, let the sea grow high !
This ordinary can fit 'em of all sizes.

Enter LA CASTRE and ORIANA.

They must salute their country with old customs.

ORI. Brother !

DE GARD. My dearest Sister !

ORI. Welcome, welcome ! [30

Indeed, ye are welcome home, most welcome !

DE GARD. Thank ye.

You are grown a handsome woman, Oriana — Blush at your faults ! I am wondrous glad to see ye. —

Monsieur La Castre, let not my affection
To my fair sister make me [be]<sup>8</sup> held unman-nerly ;

I am glad to see ye well, to see ye lusty,
Good health about ye, and in fair company ;
Believe me, I am proud —

LA CAST. Fair sir, I thank ye.

Monsieur De Gard, you are welcome from your journey ;

Good men have still good welcome. Give me your hand, sir. 40

Once more, you are welcome home. You look still younger.

DE GARD. Time has no leisure to look after
us ;

We wander every where ; Age cannot find us.
LA CAST. And how does all ?

DE GARD. All well, sir, and all lusty.

LA CAST. I hope my son be so. I doubt not, sir,

But you have often seen him in your journeys,
And bring me some fair news.

DE GARD. Your son is well, sir,
And grown a proper gentleman ; he is well and lusty.

<sup>8</sup> Add F.

Within this eight hours I took leave of him,
And [over-hied]<sup>9</sup> him, having some slight business 50

That forc'd me out o' th' way. I can assure
you .

He will be here to-night.

LA CAST. Ye make me glad, sir ;
For o' my faith, I almost long to see him.
Methinks, he has been away —

DE GARD. 'T is but your tenderness.
What are three years ? A love-sick wench will allow it.

His friends that went out with him are come back too,

Belleur and young Pinac. He bid me say little,
Because he means to be his own glad messenger.

LA CAST. I thank ye for this news, sir. He shall be welcome,

And his friends too ; indeed, I thank you heartily. 60

And how [for I dare say you will not flatter
him)

Has Italy wrought on him ? Has he mew'd<sup>10</sup>
yet

His wild fantastic toys ?<sup>11</sup> They say that climate

Is a great purger of those humorous fluxes.<sup>12</sup>

How is he improved, I pray ye ?

DE GARD. No doubt, sir, well ;
H' as borne himself a full and noble gentle-
man ;

To speak him farther is beyond my charter.

LA CAST. I am glad to hear so much good.
Come, I see

You long to enjoy your sister ; yet I must entreat ye,

Before I go, to sup with me to-night, 70
And must not be deni'd.

DE GARD. I am your servant.

LA CAST. Where you shall meet fair, merry, and noble company ;

My neighbor Nantolet and his two fair
daughters.

DE GARD. Your supper's season'd well, sir ; I shall wait upon ye.

LA CAST. Till then I'll leave ye ; and y' are once more welcome. Exit.

DE GARD. I thank ye, noble sir ! — Now,
Oriana,

How have ye done since I went ? Have ye had your health well ?

And your mind free ?

<sup>12</sup> Whims, notions.

ORI. You see, I am not bated ;<sup>13</sup>
Merry, and eat my meat.

DE GARD. A good preservative.
And how have you been us'd? You know,
Oriana, 80

Upon my going out, at your request
I left your portion in La Castre's hands,
The main means you must stick to. For that reason,

And 't is no little one, I ask ye, Sister,
With what humanity he entertains ye,
And how ye find his courtesy?

ORI. Most ready.
I can assure you, sir, I am us'd most nobly.

DE GARD. I am glad to hear it; but, I prithce, tell me,
And tell me true, what end had you, Oriana,
In trusting your money here? He is no kins-
man, 90

Nor any tie upon him of a guardian ;
Nor dare I think ye doubt my prodigality.<sup>14</sup>

ORI. No, certain, sir; none of all this provoked<sup>15</sup> me ;
Another private reason.

DE GARD. 'T is not private
Nor carried so; 't is common, my fair Sister ;
Your love to Mirabel : your blushes tell it.
'T is too much known, and spoken of too
largely ;

And with no little shame I wonder at it.

ORI. Is it a shame to love?

DE GARD. To love undiscreetly ;
A virgin should be tender of her honor, 100
Close,<sup>16</sup> and secure.

ORI. I am as close as can be,
And stand upon as strong and honest guards
too ;

Unless this warlike age need a portcullis ;
Yet, I confess, I love him.

DE GARD. Hear the people.

ORI. Now, I say, hang the people! He
that dares
Believe what they say dares be mad, and give

His mother, nay, his own wife, up to rumor.
All grounds of truth they build on is a tavern,
And their best censure's<sup>17</sup> sack, sack in abundance ;

For, as they drink, they think : they ne'er speak modestly, 110

Unless the wine be poor, or they want money.
Believe them ! Believe Amadis de Gaul,

The Knight o' th' Sun, or Palmerin of England ;<sup>18</sup>

For these, to them, are modest and true stories.

Pray, understand me ; if their tongues be
truth,

And if in vino veritas be an oracle,
What woman is, or has been ever, honest?<sup>19</sup>
Give 'em but ten round cups, they'll swear
Lucretia

Di'd not for want of power to resist Tarquin,
But want of pleasure, that he stay'd no
longer ; 120

And Portia,<sup>20</sup> that was famous for her piety
To her lov'd lord, they'll face ye out,<sup>21</sup> died
o' th' pox.<sup>22</sup>

DE GARD. Well, there is something, Sister.

ORI. If there be, Brother,
'T is none of their things ; 't is not yet so
monstrous :

My thing is marriage ; and, at his return,
I hope to put their squint eyes right again.

DE GARD. Marriage? 'T is true his father is a rich man,

Rich both in land and money ; he his heir,
A young and handsome man, I must confess,
too ;

But of such qualities, and such wild flings, [130
Such admirable<sup>23</sup> imperfections, Sister,
For all his travel and bought experience,
I should be loth to own him for my brother.
Methinks, a rich mind in a state indifferent<sup>24</sup>
Would prove the better fortune.

ORI. If he be wild,
The reclaiming him to good and honest,
Brother,

Will make much for my honor ; which, if I prosper,
Shall be the study of my love, and life too.

DE GARD. Ye say well ; would he thought as well, and loved too !

He marry ! He'll be hang'd first. He knows
no more 140

What the conditions and the ties of love are,
The honest purposes and grounds of marriage,
Nor will know, nor be ever brought t' endeavor,

Than I do how to build a church. He was ever

A loose and strong defier of all order ;

<sup>18</sup> Like the others, a hero of romance ; the Knight
o' th' Sun is the hero of The Mirror of Knighthood.

<sup>17</sup> Judgment's.

His loves are wanderers — they knock at each door,

And taste each dish, but are no residents.
Or say <sup>25</sup> he may be brought to think of marriage,

(As 't will be no small labor), thy hopes are strangers.

I know there is a labor'd match now follow'd,
Now at this time, for which he was sent for home too. 151

Be not abus'd: <sup>26</sup> Nantolet has two fair daughters,

And he must take his choice.

ORI. Let him take freely.
For all this, I despair not; my mind tells me
That I, and only I, must make him perfect;
And in that hope I rest.

DE GARD. Since y' are so confident,
Prosper your hope! I'll be no adversary;
Keep <sup>27</sup> yourself fair and right, he shall not wrong ye.

ORI. When I forget my virtue, no man know me! Exeunt.

SCENE II <sup>28</sup>

Enter MIRABEL, PINAC, BELLEUR, and Servants.

MIR. Welcome to Paris once more, gentlemen!

We have had a merry and a lusty ord'nary,
And wine, and good meat, and a bouncing reck'ning; <sup>29</sup>

And let it go for once; 't is a good physic.
Only, the wenches are not for my diet;
They are too lean and thin, their embraces brawn-fall'n. <sup>30</sup>

Give me the plump Venetian, fat and lusty,
That meets me soft and supple, smiles upon me,

As if a cup of full wine leap'd to kiss me;
These slight things I affect <sup>31</sup> not.

PIN. They are ill-built; [10
Pin-buttock'd, <sup>32</sup> like your dainty Barbaries,
And weak i' th' pasterns; they'll endure no hardness.

MIR. There's nothing good or handsome bred amongst us;

Till we are travell'd, and live abroad, we are coxcombs. <sup>34</sup>

Ye talk of France — a slight unseason'd country,

Abundance of gross food, which makes us blockheads.

We are fair set out indeed, and so are fore-horses: <sup>35</sup> —

Men say we are great courtiers — men abuse <sup>36</sup> us;

We are wise, and valiant too — non credo, signior;

Our women the best linguists — they are parrots; 20

O' this side the Alps they are nothing but mere drolleries. <sup>37</sup>

Ha! Roma la Santa, Italy for my money!
Their policies, their customs, their frugalities,
Their courtesies so open, yet so reserved too,
As, when ye think y' are known best, ye are a stranger.

Their very pick-teeth <sup>38</sup> speak more man than we do,

And season of more salt.

PIN. 'T is a brave <sup>39</sup> country;
Not pester'd with your stubborn precise <sup>40</sup> puppies,

That turn all useful and allow'd contentments
To scabs and scruples <sup>41</sup> — hang 'em, capon-worshippers. <sup>42</sup> 30

BEL. I like that freedom well, and like their women too,

And would fain do as others do; but I am so bashful,

So naturally an ass! Look ye, I can look upon 'em,

And very willingly I go to see 'em,
(There's no man willinger), and I can kiss 'em,
And make a shift —

MIR. But, if they chance to flout ye,
Or say, "Ye are too bold! Fie, sir, remember!

I pray, sit farther off —"

BEL. 'T is true — I am humbled,
I am gone; I confess ingenuously, I am silenced;

The spirit of amber <sup>43</sup> cannot force me answer.

PIN. Then would I sing and dance —

BEL. You have wherewithal, sir. [41

<sup>41</sup> I.e., that turn pleasures into questions of the physical consequences (the scabs of venereal disease) and of scruples of conscience.

<sup>43</sup> Highly reputed as an aphrodisiac.

PIN. And charge her up again.

BEL. I can be hang'd first ;
Yet, where I fasten well, I am a tyrant.

MIR. Why, thou dar'st fight?

BEL. Yes, certainly, I dare fight,
And fight with any man at any weapon.

Would th' other were no more ! But, a pox
on't !

When I am sometimes in my height of hope,
And reasonable valiant that way, my heart
harden'd,

Some scornful jest or other chops between me
And my desire. What would ye have me to do, then, gentlemen? 50

MIR. Belleur, ye must be bolder. Travel
three years,

And bring home such a baby to betray ye
As bashfulness ! A great fellow, and a soldier !

BEL. You have the gift of impudence ; be thankful.

Every man has not the like talent. I will study,

And, if it may be reveal'd to me —

MIR. Learn of me,
And of Pinac. No doubt you'll find employ-
ment ;

Ladies will look for courtship.

PIN. 'T is but fleshing,<sup>44</sup>
But standing one good brunt or two. Hast thou any mind to marriage?

We'll provide thee some soft-natur'd wench,
that's dumb too. 60

MIR. Or an old woman that cannot refuse thee in charity.

BEL. A dumb woman, or an old woman, that were eager

And car'd not for discourse, I were excellent
at.

MIR. You must now put on boldness,
— there's no avoiding it —

And stand all hazards, fly at all games bravely ; They'll say you went out like an ox, and return'd like an ass, else.

BEL. I shall make danger,<sup>45</sup> sure.

MIR. I am sent for home now ;
I know it is to marry ; but my father shall pardon me :

Although it be a witty<sup>46</sup> ceremony,
And may concern me hereafter in my gravity,
I will not lose the freedom of a traveller. 71
A new strong lusty bark cannot ride at one anchor.

Shall I make divers suits to show to the same
eyes?

'T is dull and homespun ; — study several pleasures,

And want employments for 'em? I'll be hang'd first.

Tie me to one smock? Make my travels fruitless?

I'll none of that ; for every fresh behavior,
By your leave, Father, I must have a fresh
mistress,

And a fresh favor<sup>47</sup> too.

BEL. I like that passingly ;
As many as you will, so they be willing, 80
Willing, and gentle, gentle.

PIN. There's no reason
A gentleman, and a traveller, should be clapp'd up,

(For 't is a kind of b[il]lboes<sup>48</sup> to be married),
Before he manifest to the world his good parts ;<sup>49</sup>

Tug ever, like a rascal, at one oar? <sup>50</sup>

Give me the Italian liberty !

MIR. That I study,
And that I will enjoy. Come, go in, gentle-
men ;

There mark how I behave myself, and follow.
Exeunt.

SCENE III <sup>51</sup>

Enter LA CASTRE, NANTOLET, LUGIER, ROSA-LURA, [and] LILLIA BIANCA.

LA CAST. You and your beauteous daughters are most welcome.

Beshrew my blood, they are fair ones ! — Welcome, beauties,

Welcome, sweet birds.

NANT. They are bound much to your courtesies.

LA CAST. I hope we shall be nearer acquainted.

NANT. That's my hope too :
For, certain, sir, I much desire your alliance.
You see 'em ; they are no gypsies.<sup>52</sup> For their breeding,

It has not been so coarse but they are able To rank themselves with women of fair fashion ;

Indeed, they have been trained well.

LUG. Thank me.

<sup>46</sup> Some mod. eds. emend. weighty.

NANT. Fit for the heirs of that state I shall leave 'em : 10

To say more, is to sell 'em. They say your
son,

Now he has travell'd, must be wondrous curious <sup>53</sup>

And choice in what he takes ; these are no coarse ones.

Sir, here's a merry wench — let him look to himself —

All heart, i' faith — may chance to startle
him ;

For all his care, and travell'd caution,
May creep into his eye. If he love gravity,
Affect a solemn face, there's one will fit him.

LA CAST. So young and so demure ?

NANT. She is my daughter,
Else I would tell you, sir, she is a mistress [20
Both of those manners and that modesty
You would wonder at. She is no often-speaker,

But, when she does, she speaks well ; nor no
reveller,

Yet she can dance, and has studied the court elements,

And sings, as some say, handsomely ; if a
woman,

With the decency of her sex, may be a scholar,
I can assure ye, sir, she understands too.

LA CAST. These are fit garments, sir.

LUG. Thank them that cut 'em.
Yes, they are handsome women ; they have handsome parts, too,

Pretty becoming parts.

LA CAST. 'T is like they have, sir. [30

LUG. Yes, yes, and handsome education
they have had too,

Had it abundantly ; they need not blush at it.
I taught it : I'll avouch it.

LA CAST. Ye say well, sir.

LUG. I know what I say, sir, and I say but right, sir.

I am no trumpet of their commendations
Before their father ; else I should say farther.

LA CAST. Pray ye, what's this gentleman ?

NANT. One that lives with me, sir ;
A man well bred and learn'd, but blunt and bitter ;

Yet it offends no wise man ; I take pleasure
in't.

Many fair gifts he has, in some of which, [40
That lie most easy to their understandings, H'as handsomely bred up my girls, I thank
him.

<sup>53</sup> Particular, finical.

[LUG.] I have put it to 'em, that's my part ;
I have urg'd it.

It seems they are of years now to take hold
on't.

NANT. He's wondrous blunt.

LA CAST. By my faith, I was afraid of
him.

Does he not fall out with the gentlewomen sometimes ?

NANT. No, no ; he's that way moderate and discreet, sir.

ROS. If he did, we should be too hard for
him.

LUG. Well said, sulphur !

Too hard for thy husband's head, if he wear not armor.

Enter MIRABEL, PINAC, [BELLEUR], DE GARD, and ORIANA.

NANT. Many of these bick'rings, sir.

LA CAST. I am glad they are no
oracles. 50

Sure as I live, he beats them, he's so puissant.

ORI. Well, if ye do forget —

MIR. Prithee, hold thy peace.

I know thou art a pretty wench ; I know thou
lov'st me ;

Preserve it till we have a fit time to discourse
on't,

And a fit place. I'll ease thy heart, I warrant
thee.

Thou seest I have much to do now.

ORI. I am answer'd, sir ;
With me ye shall have nothing on these conditions.

DE GARD. Your father and your friends.

LA CAST. You are welcome home, sir ;
Bless ye, ye are very welcome ! Pray, know
this gentleman,

And these fair ladies.

NANT. Monsieur Mirabel, [60
I am much affected with your fair return, sir ;
You bring a general joy.

MIR. I bring you service,
And these bright beauties, sir.

NANT. Welcome home, gentlemen,
Welcome with all my heart !

BEL. [&] PIN. We thank ye, sir.

LA CAST. Your friends will have their share
too.

BEL. Sir, we hope
They'll look upon us, though we show like strangers.

[LA CASTRE and MIRABEL talk aside.]

NANT. Monsieur De Gard, I must salute you also,
And this fair gentlewoman ; you are welcome from your travel too.

All welcome, all.

DE GARD. We render ye our loves, sir. The best wealth we bring home. — By your favors, beauties. — 70
[aside to ORIANA] One of these two — you know my meaning.

ORI. [aside] Well, sir ; They are fair and handsome, I must needs confess it,
And, let it prove the worst, I shall live after it. Whilst I have meat and drink, love cannot starve me ;
For, if I die o' th' first fit, I am unhappy, And worthy to be buried with my heels upward.

MIR. To marry, sir?

LA CAST. You know I am an old man, And every hour declining to my grave, One foot already in ; more sons I have not, Nor more I dare not seek whilst you are worthy. 80
In you lies all my hope, and all my name, The making good or wretched of my memory, The safety of my state.

MIR. And you have provided, Out of this tenderness, [these] handsome [gentlewomen,] <sup>54</sup> Daughters to this rich man, to take my choice of?

LA CAST. I have, dear son.

MIR. 'T is true, ye are old and feeble ; Would ye were young again, and in full vigor ! I love a bounteous father's life, a long one ; I am none of those that, when they shoot to ripeness,
Do what they can to break the boughs they grew on. 90

I wish ye many years and many riches, And pleasures to enjoy 'em ; but, for marriage,
I neither yet believe in 't, nor affect it ; Nor think it fit.

LA CAST. You will render me your reasons?

MIR. Yes, sir, both short and pithy, and these they are :
You would have me marry a maid?

LA CAST. A maid ! what else?

MIR. Yes, there be things called widows, dead men's wills,

I never lov'd to prove those ; nor never long'd yet

To be buried alive in another man's cold monument.

And there be maids-appearing, and maids-being ; 100

The appearing are fantastic things, mere shadows ;

And, if you mark 'em well, they want their heads, too ;

Only the world, to cozen misty eyes, Has clapp'd 'em on new faces. The maids-being

A man may venture on, if he be so mad to marry,

If he have neither fear before his eyes, nor fortune ;

And let him take heed how he gather these too ;

For, look ye, Father, they are just like melons —

Muskmelons are the emblems of these maids : Now they are ripe, now cut 'em, they taste pleasantly, 110

And are a dainty fruit, digested easily ; Neglect this present time, and come to-morrow,

They are so ripe they are rotten gone, their sweetness

Run into humor, <sup>55</sup> and their taste to surfeit.

LA CAST. Why, these are now ripe, son.

MIR. I'll try them presently, And, if I like their taste —

LA CAST. 'Pray ye, please yourself, sir.

MIR. That liberty is my due, and I'll maintain it. —
Lady, what think you of a handsome man now?

ROS. A wholesome <sup>56</sup> too, sir?

MIR. That's as you make your bargain. A handsome, wholesome man, then, and a kind man, 120

To cheer your heart up, to rejoice ye, lady?

ROS. Yes, sir, I love rejoicing.

MIR. To lie close to ye? Close as a cockle? Keep the cold nights from ye?

ROS. That will be look'd for too ; our bodies ask it.

MIR. And get two boys at every birth?

ROS. That's nothing ; I have known a cobbler do it, a poor thin cobbler, <sup>55</sup> Moisture, wateriness.

<sup>54</sup> So F.; F 1652 this . . . Gentlewoman.

A cobbler out of mouldy cheese perform it, Cabbage, and coarse black bread. Methinks,
a gentleman

Should take foul scorn to have an awl out-name <sup>57</sup> him.

Two at a birth! Why, every house-dove has it. 130

That man that feeds well, promises as well
too,

I should expect indeed something of worth from.

Ye talk of two!

MIR. [aside] She would have me get two dozen,

Like buttons, at a birth.

ROS. You love to brag, sir.
If you proclaim these offers at your marriage,
Ye are a pretty-timber'd man: take heed!
They may be taken hold of, and expected,
Yes, if not hoped for at a higher rate too.

MIR. I will take heed, and thank ye for your counsel.

Father, what think ye?

LA CAST. 'Tis a merry gentlewoman;
Will make, no doubt, a good wife.

MIR. Not for me. [141]
I marry her, and, happily, <sup>58</sup> get <sup>59</sup> nothing;
In what a state am I then? Father, I shall suffer,

For anything I hear to the contrary, *more ma-
jorum*;

I were as sure to be a cuckold, Father,

A gentleman of antler —

LA CAST. Away, away, fool!

MIR. As I am sure to fail her expectation.
I had rather get the pox than get her babies.

LA CAST. Ye are much to blame. If this do not affect <sup>60</sup> ye,

Pray, try the other; she is of a more demure
way. 150

BEL. [aside] That I had but the audacity to talk thus!

I love that plain-spoken gentlewoman admirably;

And, certain, I could go as near to please her,
If downright doing — she has a per'lous countenance —

If I could meet one that would believe me,
And take my honest meaning without circum-
stance <sup>61</sup> —

MIR. You shall have your will, sir; I will try the other;

But 't will be to small use. — I hope, fair lady,
(For, methinks, in your eyes I see more mercy,)

You will enjoin your lover a less penance; [160]
And though I'll promise much, as men are liberal,

And vow an ample sacrifice of service,
Yet your discretion, and your tenderness,
And thriftiness in love, good housewife's carefulness

To keep the stock entire —

LIL. Good sir, speak louder,
That these may witness, too, ye talk of nothing.

I should be loth alone to bear the burden
Of so much indiscretion.

MIR. Hark ye, hark ye!
'Ods-bobs, you are angry, lady.

LIL. Angry! no, sir;
I never own'd an anger to lose poorly. 170

MIR. But you can love, for all this; and delight too,

For all your set austerity to hear

Of a good husband, lady?

LIL. You say true, sir;
For, by my troth, I have heard of none these ten year,

They are so rare; and there are so many, sir,
So many longing women on their knees, too,
That pray the dropping down of these good husbands —

The dropping down from Heaven; for they are not bred here —

That you may guess at all my hope, but hearing —

MIR. Why may not I be one?

LIL. You were near 'em once, sir, [180]
When ye came o'er the Alps: those are near Heaven!

But since ye miss'd that happiness, there's no hope of ye.

MIR. Can ye love a man?

LIL. Yes, if the man be lovely,
That is, be honest, modest. I would have him valiant,

His anger slow, but certain for his honor;
Travell'd he should be, but through himself exactly,

For 't is fairer to know manners well than countries.

He must be no vain talker, nor no lover
To hear himself talk; they are brags of a wanderer,

Of one finds no retreat for fair behavior. [190]
Would ye learn more?

MIR. Yes.

LIL. Learn to hold your peace, then :
Fond <sup>62</sup> girls are got with tongues, women with tempers.

MIR. Women, with I know what ; but let that vanish.

Go thy way, Goodwife Bias ! <sup>63</sup> Sure, thy
husband

Must have a strong philosopher's stone ; he will ne'er please thee else. —

Here's a starch'd piece of austerity ! — Do you hear, Father ?

Do you hear this moral lecture ?

LA CAST. Yes, and like it.

MIR. Why, there's your judgment now ;
there's an old bolt shot !

This thing must have the strangest observation, <sup>64</sup>

(Do you mark me, Father?), when she is married once, 200

The strangest custom too of admiration

On all she does and speaks — 't will be past sufferance.

I must not lie with her in common language,
Nor cry, " Have at thee, Kate ! " — I shall be hiss'd then ;

Nor eat my meat without the sauce of sentences, <sup>65</sup>

Your powder'd <sup>66</sup> beef and problems, a rare
diet !

My first son, Monsieur Aristotle, I know it,
Great master of the metaphysics, or so ;

The second, Solon, and the best law-setter ;

And I must look <sup>67</sup> Egyptian godfathers, [210
Which will be no small trouble ; my eldest
daughter,

Sappho, or such a fiddling kind of poetess,
And brought up, invita Minerva, at her needle !
My dogs must look their names too, and all Spartan :

Bawdy <sup>70</sup> face.

I married to a sullen set of sentences !

To one that weighs her words and her behaviors

In the gold-weights <sup>71</sup> of discretion ! I'll be hang'd first.

<sup>63</sup> Alluding to Bias of Priene, one of the Seven Sages of Greece.

<sup>69</sup> The prophet and physician supposed to have introduced the worship of Dionysus into Greece.

LA CAST. Prithee, reclaim thyself.

MIR. Pray ye, give me time, then.
If they can set me anything to play at [220
That seems fit for a gamester, have at the fairest,

Till I see more, and try more !

LA CAST. Take your time, then ;
I'll bar ye no fair liberty. — Come, gentle-
men ;

And ladies, come ; to all, once more, a welcome !

And, now let's in to supper.

MIR. [aside to his friends] How dost like 'em ?

PIN. They are fair enough, but of so strange behaviors —

MIR. Too strange for me. I must have those have mettle,
And mettle to my mind. Come, let's be merry.

BEL. Bless me from this woman ! I would stand the cannon,
Before ten words of hers.

DE GARD. [aside to ORIANA] Do you find him now? 230

Do you think he will be ever firm ?

ORI. I fear not. Exeunt.

ACT II — SCENE I <sup>1</sup>

Enter MIRABEL, PINAC, [and] BELLEUR.

MIR. Ne'er tell me of this happiness ; 't is nothing ;
The state they bring with being sought-to, <sup>2</sup>
scurvy :

I had rather make mine own play, and I will do.

My happiness is in mine own content,
And the despising of such glorious <sup>3</sup> trifles,
As I have done a thousand more. For my humor, <sup>4</sup>

Give me a good free fellow, that sticks to me,
A jovial fair companion ; there's a beauty !
For <sup>5</sup> women, I can have too many of them ;
Good women too, as the age reckons 'em, [10
More than I have employment for.

PIN.

You are happy.

<sup>1</sup> The same, though not precisely located. The scene may be in or before La Castre's house, or,
as mod. eds. specify, in its garden.

MIR. My only fear is, that I must be forced,
Against my nature, to conceal myself ;
Health and an able body are two jewels.

PIN. If either of these two women were offer'd to me now,
I would think otherwise, and do accordingly ;
Yes, and recant my heresies ; I would, <sup>6</sup> sir ;
And be more tender of opinion, <sup>7</sup>
And put a little of my travell'd liberty
Out of the way, and look upon 'em seriously.
Methinks, this grave-carried wench —

BEL. Methinks, the other, [21
The home-spoken gentlewoman, that desires to be fruitful,
That treats of the full manage of the matter,
(For there lies all my aim,) that wench, methinks,

If I were but well set on, for she is affable,
If I were but hounded right, and one to teach
me —

She speaks to th' matter, and comes home to th' point —

Now do I know I have such a body to please
her

As all the kingdom cannot fit her with, I am sure on 't,

If I could but talk myself into her favor. [30
MIR. That's easily done.

BEL. That's easily said ; would 't were done !

You should see then how I would lay about me.
If I were virtuous, it would never grieve me,
Or anything that might justify my modesty ;
But when my nature is prone to do a charity,
And my calf's tongue will not help me —

MIR. Will ye go to 'em ?
They cannot but take it courteously.

PIN. I'll do my part,
Though I am sure 't will be the hardest I e'er
play'd yet,

A way I never tri'd, too, which will stagger
me ;

And, if it do not shame me, I am happy. [40
MIR. Win 'em, and wear 'em ; I give up my interest.

PIN. What say you, Monsieur Belleur ?

BEL. Would I could say,
Or sing, or anything that were but handsome !
I would be with her presently ! <sup>8</sup>

PIN. Yours is no venture :
A merry ready wench.

BEL. A vengeance <sup>9</sup> squibber ; <sup>10</sup>
She'll fleer <sup>11</sup> me out of faith too.

MIR. I'll be near thee.
Pluck up thy heart ; I'll second thee at all brunts. <sup>12</sup>

Be angry, if she abuse thee, and beat her a little ;

Some women are won that way.

BEL. Pray, be quiet,
And let me think : I am resolv'd to go on ; [50
But how I shall get off again —

MIR. I am persuaded Thou wilt so please her, she will go near to ravish thee.

BEL. I would 't were come to that once !
Let me pray a little.

MIR. Now, for thine honor, Pinac, board me <sup>13</sup> this modesty ;

Warm but this frozen snowball : 't will be a conquest

(Although I know thou art a fortunate wencher,

And hast done rarely in thy days) above all thy ventures.

BEL. You will be ever near ?

MIR. At all necessities ;
And take thee off, and set thee on again, boy,
And cherish thee, and stroke thee.

BEL. Help me out too ? [60
For I know I shall stick i' th' mire. If you see us close once,

Begone, and leave me to my fortune, suddenly,
For I am then determin'd to do wonders.

Farewell, and fling an old shoe. <sup>14</sup> How my heart throbs !

Would I were drunk ! Farewell, Pinac ; Heaven send us

A joyful and a merry meeting, man !

PIN. Farewell,
And cheer thy heart up ; and remember, Belleur,

They are but women.

BEL. I had rather they were lions.

MIR. About it ; I'll be with you instantly. —

Exeunt [BELLEUR and PINAC].

Enter ORIANA.

[aside] Shall I ne'er be at rest ? No peace of conscience ? <sup>70</sup>

No quiet for these creatures ? Am I ordain'd
To be devour'd quick <sup>15</sup> by these she-cannibals ?

Here's another they call handsome ; I care not for her ;

<sup>15</sup> Alive.

I ne'er look after her. When I am half-tiptled
It may be I should turn <sup>16</sup> her, and peruse her ;
Or, in my want of women, I might call for her ;
But to be haunted when I have no fancy,
No maw <sup>17</sup> to th' matter ! — Now, why do you follow me ?

ORI. I hope, sir, 't is no blemish to my virtue ;
Nor need you, out of scruple, ask that question,
If you remember ye, before your travel, 81
The contract you ti'd to me. 'T is my love,
sir,
That makes me seek ye, to confirm your memory ;
And, that being fair and good, I cannot suffer.
I come to give ye thanks too.

MIR. For what, prithee ?

ORI. For that fair piece of honesty ye show'd sir,
That constant nobleness.

MIR. How ? for I am short-headed.<sup>18</sup>

ORI. I'll tell ye then ; for refusing that free
offer
Of Monsieur Nantolet's, those handsome beauties,
Those two prime ladies, that might well have press'd ye 90
If not to have broken, yet to have bow'd your promise.
I know it was for my sake, for your faith sake,
You slipp'd 'em off ; your honesty compell'd
ye ;
And let me tell ye, sir, it show'd most handsomely.

MIR. And let me tell thee, there was no such matter ;
Nothing intended that way, of that nature.
I have more to do with my honesty than to fool it,
Or venture it in such leak barks as women.
I put 'em off because I lov'd 'em not, 99
Because they are too queasy <sup>19</sup> for my temper,
And not for thy sake, nor the contract sake,
Nor vows, nor oaths ; I have made a thousand of 'em ;
They are things indifferent whether kept or
broken ;
Mere venial slips, that grow not near the conscience ;
Nothing concerns those tender parts ; they are trifles ;
For, as I think, there was never man yet hop'd
for

Either constancy or secrecy from a woman,
Unless it were an ass ordain'd for sufferance ;
Nor to contract with such can be a tie-all.
So let them know again ; for 't is a justice [110
And a main point of civil policy,
Whate'er we say or swear, they being repro-
bates,
Out of the state of faith, we are clear of all
sides,
And 't is a curious blindness to believe us.

ORI. You do not mean this, sure ?

MIR. Yes, sure and certain ;
And hold it positively, as a principle,
As ye are strange things, and made of strange fires and fluxes,
So we are allow'd as strange ways to obtain ye,
But not to hold ; we are all created errant.

ORI. You told me other tales.

MIR. I not deny it ; [120
I have tales of all sorts for all sorts of women,
And protestations likewise of all sizes,
As they have vanities to make us coxcombs.
If I obtain a good turn, so it is,
I am thankful for it ; if I be made an ass,
The mends are in mine own hands, or the surgeon's,<sup>20</sup>
And there's an end on 't.

ORI. Do not you love me, then ?

MIR. As I love others ; heartily I love thee ;
When I am high and lusty, I love thee cruelly.
After I have made a plenteous meal, and satis-
fi'd 130

My senses with all delicates, come to me,
And thou shalt see how I love thee.

ORI. Will not you marry me ?

MIR. No, certain, no, for anything I know
yet.
I must not lose my liberty, dear lady,
And, like a wanton slave, cry for more shackles.
What should I marry for ? Do I want anything ?

Am I an inch the farther from my pleasure ?
Why should I be at charge <sup>21</sup> to keep a wife of
mine own,
When other honest married men will ease me,<sup>22</sup>
And thank me too, and be beholding <sup>23</sup> to me ?
Thou think'st I am mad for a maidenhead ;
thou art cozen'd ; 141

Or, if I were addicted to that diet,
Can you tell me where I should have one ?
Thou art eighteen now,

And, if thou hast thy maidenhead yet extant,

<sup>20</sup> Alluding to the possibility of contracting a venereal disease.

<sup>23</sup> Beholden.

Sure, 't is as big as cod's-head ; and those grave dishes
 I never love to deal withal. Dost thou see this book here?
 Look over all these ranks ; all these are women,
 Maids, and pretenders to maidenheads ; these are my conquests ;
 All these I swore to marry, as I swore to thee, With the same reservation, and most righteously ; 150
 Which I need not have done neither, for, alas, they made no scruple ;
 And I enjoy'd 'em at my will, and left 'em. Some of 'em are married since, and were as pure maids again, Nay, o' my conscience, better than they were bred for ;
 The rest, fine sober women.

ORI. Are ye not asham'd, sir?

MIR. No, by my troth sir ; there's no shame belongs to it ;
 I hold it as commendable to be wealthy in pleasure
 As others do in rotten sheep and pasture.

Enter DE GARD.

ORI. Are all my hopes come to this? Is there no faith,
 No troth, nor modesty, in men? [Weeps.]

DE GARD. How now, Sister? 160
 Why weeping thus? Did I not prophesy?

Come, tell me why —

ORI. I am not well ; pray ye pardon me.

Exit.

DE GARD. Now, Monsieur Mirabel, what ails my sister?

You have been playing the wag with her.

MIR. As I take it,
 She is crying for a codpiece.<sup>24</sup> Is she gone?
 Lord, what an age is this! I was calling for ye ;

For, as I live, I thought she would have ravish'd me.

DE GARD. Ye are merry, sir.

MIR. Thou know'st this book, De Gard, this inventory.

DE GARD. The debt-book of your mistresses ; I remember it.

MIR. Why, this was it that anger'd her ; she was stark mad 170
 She found not her name here ; and cri'd downright

Because I would not pity her immediately,
 And put her in my list.

DE GARD. Sure, she had more modesty.

MIR. Their modesty is anger to be overdone ;<sup>25</sup>

They'll quarrel sooner for precedence here,
 And take it in more dudgeon to be slighted,
 Than they will in public meetings : 't is their natures ;

And, alas I have so many to dispatch yet,
 And to provide myself for my affairs too,
 That, in good faith —

DE GARD. Be not too glorious<sup>26</sup> foolish ;
 Sum not your travels up with vanities ; 181
 It ill becomes your expectation.<sup>27</sup>

Temper your speech, sir ; whether your loose story

Be true or false, (for you are so free,<sup>28</sup> I fear it,) Name not my sister in 't : I must not hear it.
 Upon your danger, name her not ! I hold her A gentlewoman of those happy parts and carriage,

A good man's tongue may be right proud to speak her.

MIR. Your sister, sir ! D' ye blench<sup>29</sup> at that? D' ye cavil?

Do you hold her such a piece she may not be play'd withal? 190

I have had a hundred handsomer and nobler Have su'd to me, too, for such a courtesy ;
 Your sister comes i' th' rear. Since ye are so angry,

And hold your sister such a strong recusant,<sup>30</sup> I tell ye, I may do it ; and, it may be, will too ;
 It may be, have too ; there's my free confession ;

Work upon that now !

DE GARD. If I thought ye had, I would work

And work such stubborn work should make your heart ache ;

But I believe ye, as I ever knew ye, A glorious talker, and a legend-maker 200
 Of idle tales and trifles ; a depraver Of your own truth : their honors fly about<sup>31</sup> ye !

And so, I take my leave, but with this caution :

<sup>30</sup> Probably, as Mason suggests, = may such honor attend you as is to be derived from such stories ; possibly, as Dyce holds (emending with Sympson about to above) = the honors of the ladies in your list are above your reach.

<sup>31</sup> The baggy appendage at the front of the breeches of the time.

Your sword be surer than your tongue — you'll smart else.

MIR. I laugh at thee, so little I respect<sup>32</sup>
thee ;

And I'll talk louder, and despise thy sister ;
Set up a chambermaid that shall outshine her,
And carry her in my coach too, and that will kill her.

Go, get thy rents up,<sup>33</sup> go !

DE GARD. Ye are a fine gentleman ! Exit.

MIR. Now, have at my two youths ! I'll see how they do ; 210

How they behave themselves ; and then I'll
study

What wench shall love me next, and when I'll loose<sup>34</sup> her. Exit.

SCENE II<sup>35</sup>

Enter PINAC and a Servant.

PIN. Art thou her servant, say'st thou ?

SERV. Her poor creature ;
But servant to her horse, sir.

PIN. Canst thou show me
The way to her chamber, or where I may conveniently

See her, or come to talk to her ?

SERV. That I can, sir ;
But the question is, whether I will or no.

PIN. Why, I'll content thee.

SERV. Why, I'll content thee, then ; now ye come to me.

PIN. There's for your diligence.

[Gives money.]

SERV. There's her chamber, sir,
And this way she comes out ; stand ye but here, sir,

You have her at your prospect or your
pleasure,

PIN. Is she not very angry ?

SERV. You'll find that quickly. [10
Maybe she'll call ye saucy, scurvy fellow,
Or some such familiar name ; maybe she knows ye

And will fling a pisspot at ye, or a pantofle,<sup>36</sup> According as ye are in acquaintance. If she like ye,

Maybe she'll look upon ye, maybe no,
And two months hence call for ye.

PIN. This is fine.
She is monstrous proud, then ?

<sup>32</sup> Consider.

<sup>36</sup> Slipper.

SERV. She is a little haughty ;
Of a small body, she has a mind well mounted.
Can ye speak Greek ?

PIN. No, certain.

SERV. Get ye gone, then ! —
And talk of stars and firmaments and firedrakes ?<sup>37</sup> 20

Do you remember who was Adam's schoolmaster,

And who taught Eve to spin ? She knows all these,

And will run ye over the beginning o' th' world
As familiar as a fiddler.

Can you sit seven hours together, and say
nothing ?

Which she will do, and, when she speaks, speak
oracles,

Speak things that no man understands, nor herself neither.

PIN. Thou mak'st me wonder.

SERV. Can ye smile ?

PIN. Yes, willingly ;
For naturally I bear a mirth about me.

SERV. She'll ne'er endure ye, then ; she is never merry ; 30

If she see one laugh, she'll swoon<sup>38</sup> past aqua vitae.

Never come near her, sir ; if ye chance to venture,

And talk not like a doctor,<sup>39</sup> you are damn'd
too.

I have told ye enough for your crown, and so,
good speed ye ! Exit.

PIN. I have a pretty task, if she be thus curious,<sup>40</sup>

As, sure, it seems she is ! If I fall off now,
I shall be laugh'd at fearfully ; if I go forward,
I can but be abus'd, and that I look for ;
And yet I may hit right, but 't is unlikely.

Stay — in what mood and figure shall I attempt her ? 40

A careless way ? No, no, that will not waken
her ;

Besides, her gravity will give me line still,
And let me lose myself ; yet this way often
Has hit, and handsomely. A wanton method ?
Ay, if she give it leave to sink into her consideration ;

But there's the doubt : if it but stir her blood
once,

And creep into the crannies of her fancy,
Set her a-gog ; but, if she chance to sight it,

And by the pow'r of her modesty fling it
back,
I shall appear the arrant'st rascal to her, 50
The most licentious knave, for I shall <sup>41</sup> talk lewdly.

To bear myself austerely? Rate <sup>42</sup> my words?
And fling a general gravity about me,
As if I meant to give laws? But this I cannot do.

This is a way above my understanding;
Or, if I could, 't is odds she'll think I mock
her;
For serious and sad <sup>43</sup> things are ever still suspicious.
Well, I'll say something;
But learning I have none, and less good manners,
Especially for ladies. Well I'll set my best
face. 60

Enter LILLIA [BIANCA and] PETELLA.

I hear some coming. This is the first woman
I ever fear'd yet, the first face that shakes me.
[Retires.]

LIL. Give me my hat, Petella; take this veil off,
This sullen cloud; it darkens my delights.
Come, wench, be free, and let the music war-
ble —
Play me some lusty measure.

[Music within; LILLIA dances.]

PIN. [aside] This is she, sure,
The very same I saw, the very woman,
The gravity I wonder'd at. Stay, stay;
Let me be sure. Ne'er trust me, but she danceth!

Summer is in her face now, and she skippeth!
I'll go a little nearer.

LIL. Quicker time, fellows! [71]

Enter MIRABEL [and stands aside].

I cannot find my legs yet — now Petella!

PIN. [aside] I am amaz'd; I am founder'd <sup>44</sup>
in my fancy!

MIR. [aside] Ha! say you so? <sup>45</sup> Is this your gravity?

This the austerity ye put upon ye?
I'll see more o' this sport.

LIL. A song now!
Call in for a merry and a light song;
And sing it with a liberal spirit.

<sup>44</sup> Dumfounded.

<sup>45</sup> Do you so? Is this what you're up to?

Enter a Man.<sup>46</sup>

MAN. Yes, madam.

LIL. And be not amaz'd, sirrah, but take us for your own company. —

[A song by the Man, who then exit.]

Let's walk ourselves; come, wench. Would we had a man or two! 80

PIN. [aside] Sure, she has spi'd me, and will abuse me dreadfully.

She has put on this for the purpose; yet I will try her. — [Advances.]

Madam, I would be loth my rude intrusion,
Which I must crave a pardon for —

LIL. Oh, ye are welcome,
Ye are very welcome, sir! We want such a
one. —

Strike up again! — I dare presume ye dance
well;

Quick, quick, sir, quick! the time steals on.

PIN. I would talk with ye.

LIL. Talk as ye dance. [They dance.]

MIR. [aside] She'll beat him off his legs
first.

This is the finest masque!

LIL. Now, how do ye, sir?

PIN. You have given me a shrewd heat.

LIL. I'll give ye a hundred. [90
Come, sing now, sing; for I know ye sing well;
I see ye have a singing face.

PIN. [aside] A fine modesty!
If I could, she'd never give me breath. —
Madam, would
I might sit and recover!

LIL. Sit here, and sing now;
Let's do things quickly, sir, and hand-somerly. —

Sit close, wench, close. — Begin, begin.

PIN. I am lesson'd.

Song [by PINAC].

LIL. 'T is very pretty, i' faith. Give me some wine now.

PIN. I would fain speak to ye.

LIL. You shall drink first, believe me.
Here's to ye a lusty health. [They drink.]

PIN. I thank ye, lady. — [aside] Would I were off again! I smell my misery; 100

I was never put to this rack; I shall be drunk,
too.

MIR. [aside] If thou be'st not a right one, I have lost mine aim much;

<sup>46</sup> Possibly the Singing-boy of Dr. Pers. and V, vi.

I thank Heaven that I have scap'd thee. To her, Pinac!

For thou art as sure to have her, and to groan for her. —

I'll see how my other youth does; this speeds trimly.

A fine grave gentlewoman, and worth much honor! Exit.

LIL. Now, how do ye like me, sir?

PIN. I like ye rarely.

LIL. Ye see, sir, though sometimes we are grave and silent,

And put on sadder dispositions,

Yet we are compounded of free parts, and sometimes too 110

Our lighter, airy, and our fiery mettle

Break out, and show themselves: and what think you of that, sir?

PIN. Good lady, sit, for I am very weary;
And then I'll tell ye.

LIL. Fie! a young man idle!
Up, and walk; be still in action;
The motions of the body are fair beauties;
Besides, 't is cold. 'Ods me, sir, let's walk faster!

What think ye now of the Lady Felicia?

And Bellafronte, the Duke's fair daughter?
ha?

Are they not handsome things? There is Duarta, 120

And brown Olivia —

PIN. I know none of 'em.

LIL. But brown must not be cast away,
sir.<sup>47</sup> If young Lelia

Had kept herself till this day from a husband,
Why, what a beauty, sir! You know Ismena,
The fair gem of Saint Germain's?

PIN. By my troth, I do not.

LIL. And, then, I know, you must hear of Brisac,

How unlike a gentleman —

PIN. As I live, I have heard nothing.

LIL. Strike me another galliard!<sup>48</sup>

PIN. By this light, I cannot!

In troth, I have sprain'd my leg, madam.

LIL. Now sit ye down, sir.

And tell me why ye came hither? Why ye chose me out? 130

What is your business? Your errand? Dispatch, dispatch!

Maybe, ye are some gentleman's man,<sup>49</sup> and I mistook ye,

That have brought me a letter, or a haunch of venison,

Sent me from some friend of mine.

PIN. Do I look like a carrier?

You might allow me, what I am, a gentleman.

LIL. Cry ye mercy, sir! I saw ye yester-
day;

You are new come out of travel; I mistook ye.
And how does all our impudent friends in Italy?

PIN. Madam, I came with duty, and fair courtesy,

Service, and honor to ye.

LIL. Ye came to jeer me. [140

Ye see I am merry, sir; I have chang'd my copy;

None of the sages now: and, pray ye, proclaim
it.

Fling on me with aspersion you shall please,
sir,

Of wantonness or wildness: I look for it;

And tell the world I am an hypocrite,

Mask in a forc'd and borrow'd shape: I expect it;

But not to have you believ'd; for, mark ye,
sir,

I have won a nobler estimation,

A stronger tie, by my discretion,

Upon opinion, howe'er you think I forc'd it, [150
Than either tongue or art of yours can slubber; <sup>50</sup>

And, when I please, I will be what I please,
sir,

So I exceed not mean; <sup>51</sup> and none shall brand it,

Either with scorn or shame, but shall be slighted.

PIN. Lady, I come to love ye.

LIL. Love yourself, sir;

And, when I want observers, <sup>52</sup> [I'll send for ye.
Heigh-ho! my fit's almost off; for we do all by fits, sir.

If ye be weary, sit till I come again to ye.

Exit [with PETELLA].

PIN. This is a wench of a dainty spirit; but hang me, if I know yet

Either what to think or make of her. She had her will of me, 160

And baited me abundantly, I thank her;

And, I confess, I never was so blurted, <sup>53</sup>

Nor never so abus'd. I must bear mine own sins.

Ye talk of travels ; here's a curious country !
Yet I will find her out, or forswear my faculty.

Exit.

SCENE III <sup>54</sup>

Enter ROSALURA and ORIANA.

ROS. Ne'er vex yourself, nor grieve ; ye are a fool, then.

ORI. I am sure I am made so ; yet, before I
suffer
Thus like a girl, and give him leave to triumph —

ROS. You say right ; for, as long as he perceives ye
Sink under his proud scornings, he'll laugh at ye.

For me, secure yourself ; <sup>55</sup> and, for my sister,
I partly know her mind too ; howsoever,
To obey my father, we have made a tender
Of our poor beauties to the travell'd monsieur ;
Yet, two words to a bargain. He slights us [10
As skittish things, and we shun him as curious.
Maybe my free behavior turns his stomach,
And makes him seem to doubt a loose opinion. <sup>56</sup>
I must be so sometimes, though all the world saw it.

ORI. Why should not ye ? Are our minds only measur'd ?

As long as here ye stand secure —

ROS. Ye say true ;
As long as mine own conscience makes no
question,
What care I for report ? That woman's miserable
That's good or bad for their tongues' sake.
Come, let's retire,
And get my veil, wench. By my troth, your sorrow, <sup>20</sup>
And the consideration of men's humorous
maddings,
Have put me into a serious contemplation.

Enter MIRABEL and BELLEUR.

ORI. Come, faith, let's sit and think.

ROS. That's all my business.
[They retire.]

MIR. Why stand'st thou peeping here ?
Thou great slug, forward !

BEL. She is there ; peace !

MIR. Why stand'st thou here, then,

<sup>54</sup> Probably the same, though not definitely located.

<sup>55</sup> As for me, make your mind easy.

<sup>56</sup> Fear a reputation for looseness.

Sneaking and peeking as thou wouldst steal
linen ?

Hast thou not place and time ?

BEL. I had a rare speech
Studied, and almost ready ; and your violence
Has beat it out of my brains.

MIR. Hang your rare speeches !
Go me on like a man.

BEL. Let me set my beard up. [30
How has Pinac performed ?

MIR. He has won already ;
He stands not thrumming <sup>57</sup> of caps thus.

BEL. Lord, what should I ail !
What a cold I have over my stomach ! Would
I had some hum ! <sup>58</sup>

Certain I have a great mind to be at her,
A mighty mind.

MIR. On, fool !

BEL. Good words, I beseech ye ;
For I will not be abused by both.

MIR. Adieu, then ;
I will not trouble you : I see you are valiant,
And work your own way.

BEL. Hist, hist ! I will be rul'd ;
I will, i' faith ; I will go presently.
Will ye forsake me now, and leave me i' th'
suds ? <sup>40</sup>

You know I am false-hearted this way. I beseech ye,
Good sweet Mirabel — I'll cut your throat, if ye leave me,

Indeed I will — sweetheart —

MIR. I will be ready,
Still at thine elbow. Take a man's heart to
thee,
And speak thy mind ; the plainer still the better.

She is a woman of that free behavior,
Indeed, that common courtesy, she cannot deny thee.

Go bravely on.

BEL. Madam — keep close about me,
Still at my back — Madam, sweet madam —
ROS. Ha !

What noise is that ? What saucy sound to trouble me ? <sup>50</sup>

MIR. What said she ?

BEL. I am saucy.

[ROSALURA and ORIANA rise and come forward, the former in a veil.]

MIR. 'T is the better.

BEL. She comes ; must I be saucy still ?

MIR. More saucy.

<sup>58</sup> Strong or double ale.

ROS. Still troubled with these vanities?
Heaven bless us!

What are we born to? — Would ye speak with any of my people?

Go in, sir; I am busy.

BEL. This is not she, sure;
Is this two children at a birth? I'll be hang'd,
then;

Mine was a merry gentlewoman, talk'd
daintily,

Talk'd of those matters that befitted women;
This is a parcel<sup>59</sup> pray'r-book. I'm serv'd sweetly!

And now I am to look to;<sup>60</sup> I was prepar'd for th' other way. 60

ROS. Do you know that man?

ORI. Sure, I have seen him, lady.

ROS. Methinks 't is pity such a lusty fellow Should wander up and down, and want employment.

BEL. She takes me for a rogue!<sup>61</sup> — You may do well, madam,
To stay this wanderer, and set him a-work,
forsooth;

He can do something that may please your Ladyship.

I have heard of women that desire good breed-
ings,

Two at a birth, or so.

ROS. The fellow's impudent.

ORI. Sure, he is crazed.

ROS. I have heard of men too that have had good manners. 70

Sure, this is want of grace; indeed, 't is great
pity

The young man has been bred so ill; but this lewd age

Is full of such examples.

BEL. I am founder'd,<sup>62</sup>

And some shall rue the setting of me on.

MIR. Ha! so bookish, lady? Is it possible?

Turn'd holy at the heart too? I'll be hang'd
then;

Why, this is such a feat, such an activity,
Such fast and loose! A veil too for your knavery?

O Dio, Dio!

ROS. What do you take me for, sir?

MIR. An hypocrite, a wanton, a dissembler, Howe'er ye seem; and thus ye are to be handled! — 81

Mark me, Belleur; — and this you love, I know it. [Attempts to remove the veil.]

ROS. Stand off, bold sir!

MIR. You wear good clothes to this end,
Jewels; love feasts and masques.

ROS. Ye are monstrous saucy.

MIR. All this to draw on fools: and thus, thus, lady, [Attempts to remove the veil.]
Ye are to be lull'd.

BEL. Let her alone, I'll swinge<sup>63</sup> ye else,
I will, i' faith! for, though I cannot skill<sup>64</sup> o'
this matter

Myself, I will not see another do it before me,
And do it worse.

ROS. Away! ye are a vain thing.
You have travell'd far, sir, to return again [90
A windy and poor bladder. You talk of
women,

That are not worth the favor of a common one,
The grace of her grew in an hospital!<sup>65</sup>

Against a thousand such blown fooleries
I am able to maintain good women's honors,
Their freedoms, and their fames, and I will do
it. —

MIR. She has almost struck me dumb too.

ROS. And declaim
Against your base malicious tongues, your noises,

For they are nothing else. You teach behaviors!

Or touch us for our freedoms! Teach yourselves manners, 100

Truth and sobriety, and live so clearly

That our lives may shine in ye; and then task<sup>66</sup> us.

It seems ye are hot; the suburbs<sup>67</sup> will supply
ye:

Good women scorn such gamesters.<sup>68</sup> So;
I'll leave ye.

I am sorry to see this; faith, sir, live fairly.

Exit [with ORIANA].

MIR. This woman, if she hold on, may be virtuous;

'T is almost possible: we'll have a new day.

BEL. Ye brought me on, ye forced me to this foolery.

I am sham'd, I am scorn'd, I am flurted;<sup>69</sup>
yes, I am so;

Though I cannot talk to a woman like your Worship, 110

<sup>60</sup> I lack ability.

<sup>61</sup> The favor of one who was brought up in an orphan asylum.

<sup>69</sup> See on II, ii, 73.

And use my phrases and my learned figures,
Yet I can fight with any man.

MIR. Fie!

BEL. I can, sir;
And I will fight.

MIR. With whom?

BEL. With you; with any man;
For all men now will laugh at me.

MIR. Prithee, be moderate.

BEL. And I'll beat all men. Come.

MIR. I love thee dearly.

BEL. If [I'll]<sup>70</sup> beat all that love; love has undone me.

Never tell me; I will not be a history.

MIR. Thou art not.

BEL. 'Sfoot, I will not! Give me room,
And let me see the proudest of ye jeer me;
And I'll begin with you first.

MIR. Prithee, Belleur — [120
If I do not satisfy thee —

BEL. Well, look ye do.
But, now I think on 't better, 't is impossible;
I must beat somebody. I am maul'd myself.
And I ought in justice —

MIR. No, no, no; ye are cozen'd;
But walk, and let me talk to thee,

BEL. Talk wisely,
And see that no man laugh, upon no occasion;
For I shall think then 't is at me.

MIR. I warrant thee.

BEL. Nor no more talk of this.

MIR. Dost think I am maddish?

BEL. I must needs fight yet; for I find it concerns me;

A pox on 't! I must fight!

MIR. I' faith, thou shalt not. [130
Exeunt.

ACT III — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter DE GARD and LUGIER.<sup>2</sup>

DE GARD. I know ye are a scholar, and can do wonders.

LUG. There's no great scholarship belongs to this, sir;

What I am, I am. I pity your poor sister,
And heartily I hate these travellers,
These gimcracks, made of mops and motions.<sup>3</sup>
There's nothing in their houses here but hum-mings;

<sup>70</sup> Om. Ff.

A bee has more brains. I grieve and vex too
The insolent licentious carriage
Of this out-facing<sup>4</sup> fellow Mirabel;
And I am mad to see him prick his plumes
up. 10

DE GARD. His wrongs you partly know.

LUG. Do not you stir, sir;
Since he has begun with wit, let wit revenge
it;

Keep your sword close; <sup>5</sup> we'll cut his throat
a new way.

I am ashamed the gentlewoman should suffer
Such base, lewd wrongs.

DE GARD. I will be rul'd; he shall live,
And left to your revenge.

LUG. Ay, ay, I'll fit him.
He makes a common scorn of handsome
women;

Modesty and good manners are his May games; <sup>6</sup>

He takes up <sup>7</sup> maidenheads with a new commission —

The church-warrant's <sup>8</sup> out of date. Follow my counsel, 20

For I am zealous in the cause.

DE GARD. I will, sir,
And will be still directed; for the truth is,
My sword will make my sister seem more
monstrous.

Besides, there is no honor won on reprobates.

LUG. You are i' th' right. The slight he has show'd my pupils

Sets me afire too. Go; I'll prepare your sister.

And as I told ye —

DE GARD. Yes; all shall be fit, sir.

LUG. And seriously, and handsomely.

DE GARD. I warrant ye.

LUG. A little counsel more. [Whispers.]

DE GARD. 'T is well.

LUG. Most stately;

See that observ'd; and then —

DE GARD. I have ye every way. [30

LUG. Away, then, and be ready.

DE GARD. With all speed, sir. Exit.

*Enter LILLIA [BIANCA], ROSALURA, [and]
ORIANA.*

LUG. We'll learn to travel too, maybe beyond him. —
Good day, fair beauties!

<sup>8</sup> I.e., the permission granted by the church in the form of holy matrimony.

LIL. You have beautified us,
We thank ye, sir; ye have set us off most gallantly
With your grave precepts.

Ros. We expected husbands
Out of your documents <sup>9</sup> and taught behaviors, Excellent husbands; thought men would run
stark mad on us,
Men of all ages and all states; we expected
An inundation of desires and offers,
A torrent of trim suitors; all we did, 40
Or said, or purpos'd, to be spells about us,
Spells to provoke.

LIL. Ye have provok'd us finely!
We follow'd your directions, we did rarely,
We were stately, coy, demure, careless, light,
giddy,
And play'd at all points; this, you swore,
would carry.

Ros. We made love, and contemn'd love;
now seem'd holy,
With such a reverent put-on reservation
Which could not miss, according to your principles;
Now gave more hope again; now close,<sup>10</sup> now
public,
Still up and down we beat it like a billow; [50
And ever those behaviors you read to us,
Subtle and new; but all this will not help
us.

LIL. They help to hinder us of all acquaintance;
They have frighted off all friends. What am
I better
For all my learning, if I love a dunce, A handsome dunce? To what use serves my reading?
You should have taught me what belongs to horses,
Dogs, dice, hawks, banquets, masques, free
and fair meetings,
To have studied gowns and dressings.

LUG. Ye are not mad, sure!

Ros. We shall be, if we follow your encouragements. 60
I'll take mine own way now.

LIL. And I my fortune;
We may live maids else till the moon drop millstones.

I see, your modest women are taken for monsters;

A dowry of good breeding is worth nothing.

LUG. Since ye take it so to th' heart, pray
ye, give me leave yet,

Teachings. <sup>10</sup> Private.

And ye shall see how I'll convert this heretic.
Mark how this Mirabel —

LIL. Name him no more;
For, though I long for a husband, I hate
him,

And would be married sooner to a monkey,
Or to a Jack of Straw,<sup>11</sup> than such a juggler. [70

Ros. I am of that mind too. He is too nimble,

And plays at fast and loose <sup>12</sup> too learnedly
For a plain-meaning woman; that's the truth
on't.

Here's one too, that we love well, would be angry; [Pointing to ORIANA.]

And reason why. — No, no, we will not trouble
ye,

Nor him at this time; may he make you happy!

We'll turn ourselves loose now to our fair fortunes;

And the downright way —

LIL. The winning way we'll follow;
We'll bait that men may bite fair, and not be frighted.

Yet we'll not be carried so cheap neither;
we'll have some sport, 80

Some mad morris <sup>13</sup> or other for our money, tutor.

LUG. 'Tis like enough; prosper your own devices!

Ye are old enough to choose. But, for this gentlewoman,

So please her give me leave —

ORI. I shall be glad, sir,
To find a friend whose pity may direct me.

LUG. I'll do my best, and faithfully deal for ye;

But then ye must be ruled.

ORI. In all, I vow to ye.

Ros. Do, do; he has a lucky hand sometimes, I'll assure ye,

And hunts the recovery of a lost lover deadlly.

LUG. You must away straight.

ORI. Yes.

LUG. And I'll instruct ye; [90

Here ye can know no more.

ORI. By your leave, sweet ladies;
And all our fortunes arrive at our own wishes!

LIL. Amen, amen!

LUG. I must borrow your man.

LIL. Pray, take him;

<sup>11</sup> Straw man, dummy.

<sup>12</sup> A cheating game played with a leather strap which the dupe wrongly supposes he has fastened
down.

<sup>13</sup> Morris dance.

He is within. To do her good, take anything.
Take us and all.

LUG. No doubt, ye may find takers ;
And so, we'll leave ye to your own disposes.

Exit [LUGIER with ORIANA].

LIL. Now, which way, wench ?

Ros. We'll go a brave way, fear not ;
A safe and sure way too ; and yet a by-way.
I must confess I have a great mind to be married.

LIL. So have I too a grudging <sup>14</sup> of good will that way, 100
And would as fain be dispatch'd. But this Monsieur Quicksilver —

Ros. No, no ; we'll bar him, bye and main.<sup>15</sup> Let him trample ;

There is no safety in his surquedry.<sup>16</sup>
An army-royal of women are too few for him ;
He keeps a journal of his gentleness,
And will go near to print his fair dispatches,
And call it his "Triumph over Time and Women."

Let him pass out of memory ! What think ye
Of his two companions ?

LIL. Pinac, methinks, is reasonable ;
A little modesty he has brought home with
him, 110
And might be taught, in time, some handsome duty.

Ros. They say he is a wench too.

LIL. I like him better ;
A free light touch or two becomes a gentle-
man,
And sets him seemly off ; so <sup>17</sup> he exceed not,
But keep his compass <sup>18</sup> clear, he may be look'd at.

I would not marry a man that must be taught,
And conjur'd up with kisses ; the best game
Is play'd still by the best gamesters.

Ros. Fie upon thee !
What talk hast thou !

LIL. Are not we alone, and merry ?
Why should we be asham'd to speak what we think ? Thy gentleman, 120
The tall, fat fellow, he that came to see
thee —

Ros. Is't not a goodly man ?

LIL. A wondrous goodly !
H' as weight enough, I warrant thee. Mercy
upon me,
What a serpent wilt thou seem under such a
St. George !

Ros. Thou art a fool ! Give me a man brings mettle,

Brings substance with him, needs no broths to [lard] <sup>19</sup> him.

These little fellows show like fleas in boxes,
Hop up and down, and keep a stir to vex us.
Give me the puissant pike ; take you the small shot.

LIL. Of a great thing, I have not seen a duller ; 130

Therefore, methinks, sweet Sister —

Ros. Peace, he's modest ;
A bashfulness ; which is a point of grace,
wench ;

But, when these fellows come to moulding,
Sister,

To heat, and handling — as I live, I like him ;

Enter MIRABEL.

And, methinks, I could form him.

LIL. Peace ; the fire-drake.<sup>20</sup>

MIR. Bless ye, sweet beauties, sweet incomparable ladies,

Sweet wits, sweet humors ! Bless you, learned
lady !

And you, most holy nun, bless your devotions !

LIL. And bless your brains, sir, your most pregnant brains, sir ! 139

They are in travail ; may they be delivered
Of a most hopeful wild-geese !

Ros. Bless your manhood !

They say ye are a gentleman of action,
A fair accomplish'd man, and a rare engineer.
You have a trick to blow up maidenheads,
A subtle trick, they say abroad.

MIR. I have, lady.

Ros. And often glory in their ruins.

MIR. Yes, forsooth ;
I have a speedy trick, please you to try it ;
My engine will despatch ye instantly.

Ros. I would I were a woman, sir, fit for
ye !

As there be such, no doubt, may engine you
too ; 150

May, with a countermines, blow up your valor ;
But, in good faith, sir, we are both too honest,
And the plague is we cannot be persuaded ;
For, look ye, if we thought it were a glory
To be the last of all your lovely ladies —

MIR. Come, come, leave prating ; this has spoil'd your market !

This pride and puff'd up heart will make ye fast, ladies,

Fast when ye are hungry, too.

<sup>18</sup> Moderation, due limits.

ROS. The more our pain, sir.

LIL. The more our health, I hope, too.

MIR. Your behaviors
Have made men stand amaz'd; those men that lov'd ye, 160
Men of fair states<sup>21</sup> and parts. Your strange [conversion]<sup>22</sup>
Into I know not what, nor how, nor wherefore;

Your scorns of those that came to visit ye;
Your studied whim-whams and your fine set faces —

What have these got ye? Proud and harsh opinions.

A travell'd monsieur was the strangest creature,

The wildest monster to be wond' red at;
His person made a public scoff, his knowledge,
As if he had been bred 'mongst bears or ban-dogs,<sup>23</sup>

Shunn'd and avoided; his conversation snuff'd at; <sup>24</sup> — 170

What harvest brings all this?

ROS. I pray ye, proceed, sir.

MIR. Now ye shall see in what esteem a traveller,

An understanding gentleman, and a monsieur,
Is to be held; and, to your griefs, confess it,
Both to your griefs and galls.

LIL. In what, I pray ye, sir?
We would be glad to understand your Excellence.

MIR. Go on, sweet ladies; it becomes ye rarely!

For me, I have bless'd me from ye; scoff on seriously,

And note the man ye mock'd. You, Lady
Learning, 179

Note the poor traveller that came to visit ye,
That flat, unfurnish'd fellow; note him thoroughly;

You may chance to see him anon.

LIL. 'Tis very likely.

MIR. And see him courted by a travell'd
lady,

Held dear and honor'd by a virtuous virgin;
Maybe a beauty not far short of yours neither;
It may be, clearer.

LIL. Not unlikely.

MIR. Younger;
As killing eyes as yours, a wit as poignant;

<sup>21</sup> Estates.

<sup>23</sup> Dogs which were kept chained because of their fierceness.

<sup>24</sup> Disdained.

Maybe a state, too, that may top your fortune.

Inquire how she thinks of him, how she holds
him; 189

His good parts, in what precious price already;
Being a stranger to him, how she courts him;
A stranger to his nation, too, how she dotes on
him.

Inquire of this; be sick to know; curse, lady,
And keep your chamber; cry, and curse: a sweet one,

A thousand in yearly land, well bred, well
friended.

Travell'd, and highly followed for her fashions.

LIL. Bless his good fortune, sir!

MIR. This scurvy fellow,
I think they call his name Pinac, this serving
man

That brought ye venison, as I take it, madam, Note but this scab: <sup>25</sup> 't is strange that this coarse creature, 200

That has no more set-off but his jugglings,
His travell'd tricks —

LIL. Good sir, I grieve not at him,
Nor envy not his fortune; yet I wonder.

He's handsome; yet I see no such perfection.

MIR. Would I had his fortune! For 't is a
woman

Of that sweet-temper'd nature, and that judgment,

Besides her state, that care, clear understand-
ing,

And such a wife to bless him —

ROS. Pray ye, whence is she?

MIR. Of England, and a most accomplish'd
lady;

So modest that men's eyes are frighted at
her, 210

And such a noble carriage —

Enter a Boy.

How now, sirrah?

BOY. Sir, the great English lady —

MIR. What of her, sir?

BOY. Has newly left her coach, and coming this way,

Where you may see her plain; Monsieur Pinac
The only man that leads her.

Enter PINAC, MARIANA, and Attendants.

MIR. He is much honored;

Would I had such a favor! Now vex, ladies,
Envy, and vex, and rail!

ROS. You are short of us, sir.

<sup>25</sup> A scurvy fellow.

MIR. Bless your fair fortune, sir!
 PIN. I nobly thank ye.
 MIR. Is she married, friend?
 PIN. No, no.
 MIR. A goodly lady;
 A sweet and delicate aspect!<sup>26</sup> — Mark, mark, and wonder! — 220
 Hast thou any hope of her?
 PIN. A little.
 MIR. Follow close, then;
 Lose not that hope.
 PIN. To you, sir.
 [MARIANA courtesies to MIRABEL.]
 MIR. Gentle lady!
 ROS. She is fair, indeed.
 LIL. I have seen a fairer; yet
 She is well.
 ROS. Her clothes sit handsome too.
 LIL. She dresses prettily.
 ROS. And, by my faith, she is rich; she looks still sweeter.
 A well-bred woman, I warrant her.
 LIL. Do you hear, sir?
 May I crave this gentlewoman's name?
 PIN. Mariana, lady.
 LIL. I will not say I owe ye a quarrel, monsieur,
 For making me your stale;<sup>27</sup> a noble gentle-
 man
 Would have had more courtesy, at least more
 faith, 230
 Than to turn off his mistress at first trial.
 You know not what respect I might have show'd ye;
 I find ye have worth.
 PIN. I cannot stay to answer ye;
 Ye see my charge. I am beholding to ye
 For all your merry tricks ye put upon me, Your bobs,<sup>28</sup> and base accounts. I came to love ye,
 To woo ye, and to serve ye; I am much indebted to ye
 For dancing me off my legs, and then for walking me;
 For telling me strange tales I never heard of,
 More to abuse me; for mistaking me, 240
 When ye both knew I was a gentleman,
 And one deserv'd as rich a match as you are.
 LIL. Be not so bitter, sir.
 PIN. You see this lady;
 She is young enough and fair enough to please
 me;
 A woman of a loving mind, a quiet,

And one that weighs the worth of him that loves her.
 I am content with this, and bless my fortune.
 Your curious wits, and beauties —
 LIL. Faith, see me once more.
 PIN. I dare not trouble ye.
 LIL. May I speak to your lady?
 PIN. I pray ye, content yourself. I know ye are bitter, 250
 And, in your bitterness, ye may abuse her;
 Which if she comes to know, for she understands ye not,
 It may breed such a quarrel to your kindred,
 And such an indiscretion fling on you, too,
 For she is nobly friended —
 LIL. [aside] I could eat her PIN. Rest as ye are, a modest noble gentle-
 woman,
 And afford your honest neighbors some of your prayers.
Exit [PINAC, with MARIANA and Attendants].
 MIR. What think you now?
 LIL. Faith, she's a pretty whiting;<sup>29</sup>
 She has got a pretty catch too.
 MIR. You are angry,
 Monstrous angry now, grievously angry; [260
 And the pretty heart does swell now.
 LIL. No, in troth, sir.
 MIR. And it will cry anon, "A pox upon
 it!"
 And it will curse itself, and eat no meat, lady;
 And it will [sigh].<sup>30</sup>
 LIL. Indeed, you are mistaken;
 It will be very merry.
 ROS. Why, sir, do you think
 There are no more men living, nor no handsomer,
 Than he or you? By this light, there be ten thousand,
 Ten thousand thousand! Comfort yourself,
 dear monsieur;
 Faces, and bodies, wits, and all abilitments<sup>31</sup> —
 There are so many we regard 'em not. 270
Enter BELLEUR and two Gentlemen.
 MIR. That such a noble lady — (aside)
 I could burst now! —
 So far above such trifles —
 BEL. You did laugh at me;
 And I know why ye laughed.

1 GENT. I pray ye, be satisfied ;
If we did laugh, we had some private reason,
And not at you.

2 GENT. Alas, we know you not, sir !

BEL. I'll make you know me. Set your faces soberly ;
Stand this way, and look sad ;<sup>32</sup> I'll be no
May game ;<sup>33</sup>
Sadder, demurer yet.

Ros. What's the matter ?
What ails this gentleman ?

BEL. Go off now backward, that I may behold ye ; 279
And not a simper, on your lives !

[Exeunt Gentlemen, walking backward.]

LIL. He's mad, sure.

BEL. Do you observe me too ?

MIR. I may look on ye.

BEL. Why do you grin ? I know your mind.

MIR. You do not.
You are strangely humorous.<sup>34</sup> Is there no
mirth nor pleasure
But you must be the object ?

BEL. Mark, and observe me. Wherever I am nam'd,

The very word shall raise a general sadness,
For the disgrace this scurvy woman did me,
This proud, pert thing. Take heed ye laugh not at me,

Provoke me not ; take heed.

Ros. I would fain please ye, 289
Do anything to keep ye quiet.

BEL. Hear me.

Till I receive a satisfaction
Equal to the disgrace and scorn ye gave me,
Ye are a wretched woman ; till thou woo'st me,
And I scorn thee as much, as seriously
Jeer and abuse thee ; ask what gill<sup>35</sup> thou art,
Or any baser name ; I will proclaim thee,
I will so sing thy virtue, so be-paint thee ——

Ros. Nay, good sir, be more modest.

BEL. Do you laugh again ? —
Because ye are a woman, ye are lawless,
And out of compass of an honest anger. 300

Ros. Good sir, have a better belief of me.

LIL. Away, dear Sister !

Exit [with ROSALURA].

MIR. Is not this better now, this seeming madness,
Than falling out with your friends ?

BEL. Have I not frightened her ?

<sup>35</sup> Wench.

MIR. Into her right wits, I warrant thee.
Follow this humor,
And thou shalt see how prosperously 't will guide thee.

BEL. I am glad I have found a way to woo yet ; I was afraid once
I never should have made a civil suitor.
Well, I'll about it still. Exit.

MIR. Do, do, and prosper.
What sport do I make with these fools ! What
pleasure
Feeds me, and fats my sides at their poor innocence ! 310

Enter LUGIER, [disguised.]

Wooring and wiving — hang it ! Give me
mirth,
Witty and dainty mirth ! I shall grow in love,
sure,

With mine own happy head. — Who's this ? —
To me, sir ? —

[aside] What youth is this ?

LUG. Yes, sir, I would speak with you,
If your name be Monsieur Mirabel.

MIR. Ye have hit it ;
Your business, I beseech you ?

LUG. This it is, sir :
There is a gentlewoman hath long time affected
ye,
And lov'd ye dearly.

MIR. Turn over, and end that story ;
'T is long enough : I have no faith in women,
sir.

LUG. It seems so, sir. I do not come to woo for her, 320
Or sing her praises, though she well deserve
'em ;

I come to tell ye ye have been cruel to her,
Unkind and cruel, fals'er of faith, and careless,
Taking more pleasure in abusing her,
Wresting her honor to your wild disposes,
Than noble in requiting her affection ;
Which, as ye are a man, I must desire ye,
A gentleman of rank, not to persist in,
No more to load her fair name with your injuries.

MIR. Why, I beseech ye, sir ?

LUG. Good sir, I'll tell ye.
And I'll be short ; I'll tell ye because I love
ye, 331

Because I would have you shun the shame
may follow.

There is a nobleman new come to town, sir,
A noble and a great man, that affects her,
(A countryman of mine, a brave Savoyan)

Nephew to th' Duke, and so much honors her
That 't will be dangerous to pursue your old
way,

To touch at anything concerns her honor,
Believe, most dangerous. Her name is Ori-ana,

And this great man will marry her. Take heed, sir; 340

For howsoe'er her brother, a staid gentleman,
Lets things pass upon better hopes, this lord,
sir,

Is of that fiery and that poignant mettle,
Especially provok'd on by affection,
That 't will be hard — but you are wise.

MIR. A lord, sir?

LUG. Yes, and a noble lord.

MIR. Send her good fortune!

This will not stir her lord. A baroness!

Say ye so? Say ye so? By'r lady, a brave title!

Top and topgallant now! Save her great Ladyship!

I was a poor servant <sup>36</sup> of hers, I must confess,
sir, 350

And in those days I thought I might be jovy,<sup>37</sup>
And make a little bold to call in to her;

But basta,<sup>38</sup> now; I know my rules and distance;

Yet, if she want an usher, such an implement,
One that is thoroughly pac'd, a clean-made
gentleman,

Can hold a hanging up with approbation,
Plant his hat formally, and wait with patience,
I do beseech you, sir —

LUG. Sir, leave your scoffing,
And, as ye are a gentleman, deal fairly.

I have given ye a friend's counsel; so, I'll leave ye. 360

MIR. But, hark ye, hark ye, sir; is't
possible

I may believe what you say?

LUG. You may choose, sir.

MIR. No baits, no fishhooks, sir? No gins? no nooses?

No pitfalls to catch puppies?

LUG. I tell ye certain:
You may believe; if not, stand to the danger!

Exit.

MIR. A lord of Savoy, says he? The Duke's nephew?

A man so mighty? By Lady, a fair marriage!
By my faith, a handsome fortune! I must leave prating;

For, to confess the truth, I have abused her,

<sup>36</sup> Lover. <sup>37</sup> Merry. <sup>38</sup> Enough (Ital.). Ff Basta.

For which I should be sorry, but that will seem scurvy. 370

I must confess she was, ever since I knew her,
As modest as she was fair; I am sure she lov'd
me;

Her means good, and her breeding excellent;
And for my sake she has refus'd fair matches.
I may play the fool finely. — Stay; who are these?

Re-enter DE GARD [in disguise], ORIANA, and Attendants.

[aside] 'T is she, I am sure; and that the lord,
it should seem.

He carries a fair port, is a handsome man too.
I do begin to feel I am a coxcomb.

ORI. Good my Lord, choose a nobler; for I
know

I am so far below your rank and honor 380
That what ye can say this way I must credit
But spoken to beget yourself sport. Alas, sir,
I am so far off from deserving you,
My beauty so unfit for your affection,
That I am grown the scorn of common railers,
Of such injurious things that, when they can-
not

Reach at my person, lie with my reputation!
I am poor, besides.

DE GARD. Ye are all wealth and goodness;
And none but such as are the scum of men, [390
The ulcers of an honest state, spite-weavers,
That live on poison only, like swoln spiders,
Dare once profane such excellence, such sweet-
ness.

MIR. This man speaks loud indeed.

DE GARD. Name but the men, lady;
Let me but know these poor and base depravers,
Lay but to my revenge their persons open,
And you shall see how suddenly, how fully,
For your most beauteous sake, how direfully,
I'll handle their despites. Is this thing one?
Be what he will —

MIR. Sir?

DE GARD. Dare your malicious tongue, sir — 400

MIR. I know you not, nor what ye mean.

ORI. Good my Lord —

DE GARD. If he, or any he —

ORI. I beseech your Honor —
This gentleman's a stranger to my knowledge;

And, no doubt, sir, a worthy man.

DE GARD. [to MIRABEL] Your mercy!
But, had he been [a tainter] <sup>39</sup> of your honor, <sup>39</sup> Cor. F<sub>2</sub>; F 1652 attaint.

A blaster of those beauties reign within ye —
But we shall find a fitter time. Dear lady,
As soon as I have freed ye from your guardian,
And done some honor'd offices unto ye,
I'll take ye with those faults the world flings
on ye, 410
And dearer than the whole world I'll esteem
ye!

[Exeunt DE GARD, ORIANA, and Attendants.]

MIR. This is a thund'ring lord; I am glad
I scap'd him.
How lovingly the wench disclaim'd my vil-
lainy!
I am vex'd now heartily that he shall have
her;
Not that I care to marry, or to lose her,
But that this bilbo <sup>40</sup>-lord shall reap that
maidenhead
That was my due; that he shall rig and top <sup>41</sup>
her!
I'd give a thousand crowns now, he might miss
her!

Enter a Servant.<sup>42</sup>

SERV. [aside] Nay, if I bear your blows, and keep your counsel,
You have good luck, sir; I'll teach ye to strike lighter. 420

MIR. Come hither, honest fellow; canst
thou tell me
Where this great lord lies, this Savoy lord?
Thou mett'st him;
He now went by thee, certain.

SERV. Yes, he did, sir;
I know him, and I know you are fool'd.

MIR. Come hither;
Here's all this; give me truth. [Gives money.]

SERV. Not for your money,
And yet that may do much; but I have been beaten,
And by the worshipful contrivers beaten, and I'll tell ye,
This is no lord, no Savoy lord.

MIR. Go forward.

SERV. This is a trick, and put upon ye grossly
By one Lugier. The lord is Monsieur De
Gard, sir, 430
An honest gentleman, and a neighbor here;
Their ends you understand better than I, sure.

<sup>41</sup> Fix her up and finish her off. Both verbs embody nautical figures, with several double ententes.

<sup>42</sup> The servant of II, ii. See III, i, 93. He reappears in IV, i.

MIR. Now I know him, know him now
plain.

SERV. I have discharg'd my [cholvers]<sup>43</sup>
so God by ye, sir! Exit.

MIR. What a purblind <sup>44</sup> puppy was I.
Now I remember him;
All the whole cast on's <sup>45</sup> face, though it were umber'd,<sup>46</sup>

And mask'd with patches. What a dunderwhelp,<sup>47</sup>

To let him domineer thus! How he strutted,
And what a load of lord he clapp'd upon him!
Would I had him here again! I would so bounce <sup>48</sup> him, 440

I would so thank his lordship for his lewd
plot!

Do they think to carry it away,<sup>49</sup> with a great band made of bird-pots,<sup>50</sup>

And a pair of pin-buttock'd breeches? — Ha!
't is he again;

He comes, he comes, he comes! have at him!

Re-enter DE GARD, [still in disguise], ORIANA,
and [Attendants.]

[MIRABEL] sings.

My Savoy lord, why dost thou frown on me?
And will that favor never sweeter be?
Wilt thou, I say, for ever play the fool? <sup>51</sup>
De Gard, be wise, and, Savoy, go to school!
My Lord De Gard, I thank you for your antic; <sup>52</sup>
My Lady Bright, that will be [sometimes] <sup>53</sup> frantic;
You worthy train, that wait upon this pair, <sup>54</sup>
Send you more wit, and they a bouncing bair! <sup>55</sup>

And so I take my humble leave of your Honors! Exit.

DE GARD. We are discover'd; there's no
remedy.

Lillia Bianca's man, upon my life,
In stubbornness, because Lugier corrected
him —

A shameless slave's plague on him for a rascal!

ORI. I was in a perfect hope. The bane on 't is now,

He will make mirth on mirth, to persecute us.

<sup>50</sup> Apparently a large ruff resembling bird-pots in shape. N.E.D. gives "pot-birds" = apparatus for making bird calls by blowing a pipe through a pot of water.

<sup>51</sup> The first three lines parody the opening lines of the famous popular song "Fortune, my foe."

<sup>54</sup> I.e., bairn, the "n" being omitted for the rhyme.

DE GARD. We must be patient; I am vex'd to the proof too. 460
 I'll try once more; then, if I fail, here's one speaks. [Puts his hand on his sword.]
 ORI. Let me be lost and scorn'd first!
 DE GARD. Well, we'll consider.
 Away, and let me shift; <sup>55</sup> I shall be hooted else. Exeunt.

Enter LUGIER, LILLIA [BIANCA, and] [Servant] <sup>2</sup> [carrying a willow garland].

LUG. Faint not, but do as I direct ye; trust me;
 Believe me, too; for what I have told ye, lady, As true as you are Lillia, is authentic;
 I know it, I have found it; 't is a poor courage
 Flies off for one repulse. These travellers
 Shall find, before we have done, a homespun wit,
 A plain French understanding, may cope with 'em.
 They have had the better yet, thank your sweet squire here!
 And let 'em brag. You would be reveng'd?

LIL. Yes, surely.

LUG. And married too?

LIL. I think so.

LUG. Then be counsell'd; [10
 You know how to proceed. I have other irons
 Heating as well as yours, and I will strike
 Three blows with one stone home. Be rul'd, and happy;

And so, I leave ye. Now is the time.

LIL. I am ready.

If he do come to [dor] <sup>3</sup> me. [Exit LUGIER.]

SERV. Will ye stand here,

And let the people think ye are God knows what, mistress?

Let boys and prentices presume upon ye?

LIL. Prithee, hold thy peace.

SERV. Stand at his door that hates ye?

LIL. Prithee, leave prating.

SERV. Pray ye, go to the tavern; I'll give ye a pint of wine there.

If any of the madcap gentlemen should come by, 20

That take up women upon special warrant,
 You were in a wise case now.

Enter MIRABEL, PINAC, MARIANA, Priest, [and] Attendants.

LIL. Give me the garland:
 And wait you here.

[Takes the garland from Servant, who retires.]

MIR. She is here to seek thee, sirrah.
 I told thee what would follow; she is mad for thee.

Show, and advance. — So early stirring, lady?

It shows a busy mind, a fancy troubled.

A willow garland, too? is 't possible?

'T is pity so much beauty should lie musty;
 But 't is not to be help'd now.

LIL. The more 's my misery. —
 Good fortune to ye, lady! you deserve it; [30
 To me, too-late repentance! I have sought it.
 I do not envy, though I grieve a little,
 You are mistress of that happiness, those joys,
 That might have been, had I been wise — but fortune —

PIN. She understands ye not; pray ye, do not trouble her;

And do not cross me like a hare <sup>4</sup> thus; 't is as ominous.

LIL. I come not to upbraid your levity
 (Though ye made show of love, and though I lik'd ye),

To claim an interest (we are yet both strangers;

But what we might have been, had you persever'd, sir!) 40

To be an eyesore to your loving lady.

This garland shows I give myself forsaken

(Yet, she must pardon me, 't is most unwillingly);

And all the power and interest I had in ye
 (As, I persuade myself, somewhat ye lov'd me)

Thus patiently I render up, I offer

To her that must enjoy ye; and so, bless ye;

Only, I heartily desire this courtesy,

And would not be deni'd, to wait upon ye

This day, to see ye ti'd, then no more trouble ye. 50

PIN. It [needs] <sup>5</sup> not, lady.

LIL. Good sir, grant me so much.

PIN. 'T is private, and we make no invitation.

<sup>4</sup> Make game of. Emend. Sympson; Ff do.

LIL. My presence, sir, shall not proclaim it public.

PIN. Maybe 't is not in town.

LIL. I have a coach, sir,
And a most ready will to do you service.

MIR. [aside to PINAC] Strike now or never ;
make it sure ; I tell thee,
She will hang herself, if she have thee not.

PIN. Pray ye, sir,
Entertain my noble mistress ; only a word or two
With this importunate woman, and I'll relieve
ye. —

Now ye see what your flings are, and your fancies, 60

Your states, and your wild stubbornness ; now ye find

What 't is to gird and kick at men's fair services,

To raise your pride to such a pitch and glory
That goodness shows like gnats, scorn'd under
ye.

'T is ugly, naught ; a self-will in a woman,
Chain'd to an overweening thought, is pesti-
lent,

Murders fair fortune first, then fair opinion.
There stands a pattern, a true patient [pl]attern,
Humble and sweet.

LIL. I can but grieve my ignorance.
Repentance, some say, too, is the best sacrifice ; 70

For, sure, sir, if my chance had been so happy
(As I confess I was mine own destroyer)
As to have arriv'd at you, I will not prophesy ;
But certain, as I think, I should have pleas'd
ye ;

Have made ye as much wonder at my courtesy,
My love, and duty, as I have dishearten'd ye.
Some hours we have of youth, and some of
folly ;

And being free-born maids, we take a liberty,
And, to maintain that, sometimes we strain highly.

PIN. Now ye talk reason.

LIL. But, being yok'd and govern'd, [80 Married, and those light vanities purg'd from
us,

How fair we grow, how gentle ! and how tender
We twine about those loves that shoot up with
us !

A sullen woman fear, that talks not to ye ;
She has a sad and darken'd soul, loves dully.
A merry and a free wench, give her liberty,
Believe her, in the lightest form she appears to ye,

Believe her excellent, though she despise ye ;
Let but these fits and flashes pass, she will show to ye

As jewels rubb'd from dust, or gold new bur-nish'd : 90

Such had I been, had you believ'd.

PIN. Is 't possible ?

LIL. And to your happiness, I dare assure
ye,

If true love be accounted so, your pleasure,
Your will, and your command, had tied my motions ;

But that hope's gone. I know you are young and giddy,

And, till you have a wife can govern with ye,
You sail upon this world-sea light and empty,
Your bark in danger daily. 'T is not the name neither

Of wife can steer ye, but the noble nature,
The diligence, the care, the love, the patience ;
She makes the pilot, and preserves the husband, 101

That knows and reckons every rib he is built
on.

But this I tell ye, to my shame.

PIN. I admire ye ;

And now am sorry that I aim beyond ye.

MIR. [aside] So, so, so ; fair and softly !
She is thine own, boy ;

She comes now without lure.<sup>6</sup>

PIN. But that it must needs
Be reckon'd to me as a wantonness,
Or worse, a madness, to forsake a blessing,
A blessing of that hope —

LIL. I dare not urge ye ;
And yet, dear sir —

PIN. 'T is most certain, I had rather, [110
If 't were in mine own choice — for you are my countrywoman,

A neighbor here, born by me ; she a stranger,<sup>7</sup>
And who knows how her friends —

LIL. Do as you please, sir ;
If ye be fast, not all the world — I love ye,
'T is most true, and clear, I would persuade
ye ;

And I shall love ye still.

PIN. Go, get before me —
So much ye have won upon me — do it presently.<sup>8</sup>

Here's a priest ready — I'll have you.

LIL. Not now, sir ;
No, you shall pardon me. Advance your
lady ;

<sup>6</sup> The falconer's bait for enticing back the hawk.

I dare not hinder your most high preferment: 120

'Tis honor enough for me I have unmask'd ye.

PIN. How's that?

LIL. I have caught ye, sir. Alas, I am no stateswoman, Nor no great traveller, yet I have found ye; I have found your lady too, your beauteous lady;

I have found her birth and breeding too, her discipline,

Who brought her over, and who kept your lady,

And, when he laid her by, what virtuous nunnery

Received her in; I have found all these. Are ye blank now?

Methinks such travell'd wisdoms should not fool thus, —

Such excellent indiscretions!

MIR. [aside] How could she know this? 130

LIL. 'Tis true she is English born; but most part French<sup>9</sup> now,

And so I hope you will find her, to your comfort.

Alas, I am ignorant of what she cost ye;

The price of these hired clothes I do not know, gentlemen;

Those jewels are<sup>10</sup> the broker's, how ye stand bound for 'em.

PIN. Will you make this good?

LIL. Yes, yes; and to her face, sir, That she is an English whore, a kind of fling-dust,<sup>11</sup>

One of your London light-o'-loves, a right one;

Came over in thin pumps and half a petticoat, One faith, and one smock, with a broken haberdasher — 140

I know all this without a conjurer.

Her name is Jumping Joan, an ancient sin-weaver;

She was first a lady's chambermaid, there slipp'd,

And broke her leg above the knee; departed, And set up shop herself; stood the fierce conflicts

Of many a furious term;<sup>12</sup> there lost her colors,

And last shipp'd over hither.

MIR. [aside] We are betray'd!

LIL. Do you come to fright me with this mystery?

To stir me with a stink none can endure, sir? I pray ye, proceed; the wedding will become ye! 150

Who gives the lady? you? An excellent father!

A careful man, and one that knows a beauty! Send ye fair shipping, sir! and so, I'll leave ye.

Be wise and manly; then I may chance to love ye! Exit [with Servant].

MIR. As I live, I am asham'd this wench has reach'd<sup>13</sup> me, Monstrous asham'd; but there's no remedy. This skew'd-ey'd carrion —

PIN. This I suspected ever. — Come, come, uncase;<sup>14</sup> we have no more use of ye;

Your clothes must back again.

MARI. Sir, ye shall pardon me; 'Tis not our English use to be degraded. 160

If you will visit me, and take your venture, You shall have pleasure for your properties.

And so, sweetheart — [Exit.]

MIR. Let her go, and the Devil go with her!

We have never better luck with these preludiums.

Come, be not daunted; think she is but a woman,

And, let her have the Devil's wit, we'll reach her! Exit [MIRABEL with PINAC].

SCENE II<sup>15</sup>

Enter ROSALURA and LUGIER.

ROS. Ye have now redeem'd my good opinion, tutor,

And ye stand fair again.

LUG. I can but labor And sweat in your affairs. I am sure Belleur Will be here instantly, and use his anger, His wonted harshness.

ROS. I hope he will not beat me.

LUG. No, sure, he has more manners. Be you ready.

ROS. Yes, yes, I am; and am resolv'd to fit him,

With patience to outdo all he can offer. But how does Oriana?

<sup>12</sup> "Season", when the courts were sitting, and London was full of visitors.

<sup>15</sup> The same; i.e., some public place.

LUG. Worse and worse still;
There is a sad house for her; she is now, [10
Poor lady, utterly distracted.

Ros. Pity,
Infinite pity! 't is a handsome lady.
That Mirabel's a beast, worse than a monster,
If this affliction work not.

Enter LILLIA BIANCA.

LIL. Are ye ready?
Belleur is coming on here, hard behind me:
I have no leisure to relate my fortune;
Only I wish you may come off as handsomely.
Upon the sign, you know what.

Ros. Well, well; leave me.
[Exeunt LILLIA BIANCA and LUGIER.]

Enter BELLEUR.

BEL. How now?

Ros. Ye are welcome, sir.

BEL. 'T is well ye have [manners].<sup>16</sup>
That curtsy again, and hold your countenance staidly. 20

That look's too light; take heed. So; sit ye down now;

And, to confirm me that your gall is gone,
Your bitterness dispers'd (for so I'll have it),
Look on me steadfastly, and, whatsoe'er I say to ye,

Move not, nor alter in your face — ye are gone, then;

For, if you do express the least distaste,
Or show an angry wrinkle, (mark me, woman! We are now alone,) I will so conjure thee,
The third part of my execution
Cannot be spoke.

Ros. I am at your dispose, sir. [30

BEL. Now rise, and woo me a little; let me hear that faculty;
But touch me not; nor do not lie, I charge ye.

Begin now.

Ros. If so mean and poor a beauty
May ever hope the grace —

BEL. Ye cog, ye flatter
Like a lewd<sup>17</sup> thing; ye lie: "May hope that grace!"

Why, what grace canst thou hope for? Answer not;

For, if thou dost, and liest again, I'll swinge thee.

Do not I know thee for a pestilent woman?
A proud at both ends? Be not angry,
Nor stir not, o' your life.

<sup>17</sup> Wicked.

Ros. I am [counsell'd,]<sup>18</sup> sir. [40
BEL. Art thou not now (confess, for I'll have the truth out)

As much unworthy of a man of merit,
Or any of ye all, nay, of mere man,
Though he were crooked, cold,<sup>19</sup> all wants upon him,
Nay, of any dishonest thing that bears that figure,

As devils are of mercy?

Ros. We are unworthy.

BEL. Stick to that truth, and it may chance to save thee.

And is it not our bounty that we take ye?
That we are troubled, ve[x]'d, or tortur'd with ye,

Our mere and special bounty?

Ros. Yes.

BEL. Our pity, [50
That for your wickedness we swinge ye soundly;

Your stubbornness and stout hearts, we belabor ye?

Answer to that!

Ros. I do confess your pity.

BEL. And dost not thou<sup>20</sup> deserve in thine own person,
Thou impudent, thou pert — do not change countenance.

Ros. I dare not, sir.

BEL. For, if ye do —

Ros. I am settled.

BEL. Thou wagtail, peacock, puppy, look on me:

I am a gentleman.

Ros. It seems no less, sir,

BEL. And darest thou in thy surquedry —

Ros. I beseech ye! —

It was my weakness, sir, I did not view ye; [60
I took not notice of your noble parts,
Nor call'd your person nor your fashion proper.<sup>21</sup>

BEL. This is some amends yet.

Ros. I shall mend, sir, daily,
And study to deserve.

BEL. Come a little nearer.
Canst thou repent thy villainy?

Ros. Most seriously.

BEL. And be asham'd?

Ros. I am asham'd.

BEL. Cry.

<sup>21</sup> So F.; F 1652 transposes last two words.

ROS. It will be hard to do, sir.

BEL. Cry now instantly ;
Cry monstrously, that all the town may hear thee ;

Cry seriously, as if thou hadst lost thy monkey ;

And, as I like thy tears —

ROS. Now !

Enter LILLIA [BIANCA] and four Women, laughing.

BEL. How ! how ! Do ye jeer me ? [70
Have ye broke your bounds again, dame ?

ROS. Yes, and laugh at ye,
And laugh most heartily.

BEL. What are these ? whirlwinds ?
Is hell broke loose, and all the Furies flutter'd ?
Am I greas'd <sup>22</sup> once again ?

ROS. Yes, indeed are ye ;
And once again ye shall be, if ye quarrel.
Do you come to vent your fury on a virgin ?
Is this your manhood, sir ?

1 WOM. Let him do his best ;
Let's see the utmost of his indignation ;
I long to see him angry. — Come, proceed,
sir. — [The Women display knives.]

Hang him, he dares not stir ; a man of timber !

2 WOM. Come hither to fright maids with thy bull-faces ! 81

To threaten gentlewomen ! Thou a man ! A Maypole,

A great dry pudding.

3 WOM. Come, come, do your worst, sir ;
Be angry, if thou dar'st.

BEL. The Lord deliver me !

4 WOM. Do but look scurvily upon this
lady,

Or give us one foul word ! — We are all mistaken ;

This is some mighty dairymaid in man's clothes.

LIL. I am of that mind too.

BEL. [aside] What will they do to me ?

LIL. And hired to come and abuse us. — A man has manners ;

A gentleman, civility and breeding : — 90
Some tinker's trull, with a beard glu'd on.

1 WOM. Let's search him,
And, as we find him —

BEL. Let me but depart from ye,
Sweet Christian women !

LIL. Hear the thing speak, neighbors.

BEL. 'Tis but a small request : if e'er I trouble ye,

<sup>22</sup> Cajoled ; cf. "battered."

If e'er I talk again of beating women,
Or beating anything that can but turn to me ;
Of ever thinking of a handsome lady
But virtuously and well ; of ever speaking
But to her honor, — this I'll promise ye :

I will take rhubarb, and purge choler <sup>23</sup> mainly ; <sup>24</sup> 100

Abundantly I'll purge.

LIL. I'll send ye broths, sir.

BEL. I will be laugh'd at, and endure it patiently ;

I will do anything.

ROS. I'll be your bail, then.

When ye come next to woo, pray ye come not boist'rously,

And furnish'd like a bearward. <sup>25</sup>

BEL. No, in truth, forsooth.

ROS. I scented ye long since.

BEL. I was to blame, sure ;
I will appear a gentleman.

ROS. 'Tis the best for ye,

For a true noble gentleman's a brave <sup>26</sup> thing.
Upon that hope, we quit ye. You fear seriously ? 109

BEL. Yes, truly do I ; I confess I fear ye,
And honor ye, and anything.

ROS. Farewell, then.

WOM. And, when ye come to woo next,
bring more mercy.

Exeunt [all except BELLEUR].

BEL. A dairymaid ! A tinker's trull !
Heaven bless me !

Sure, if I had provok'd 'em, they had quarter'd
me.

Enter two Gentlemen.

I am a most ridiculous ass, now I perceive
it ;

A coward, and a knave too.

1 GENT. 'Tis the mad gentleman ;

Let's set our faces right.

BEL. No, no ; laugh at me,

And laugh aloud.

2 GENT. We are better manner'd, sir.

BEL. I do deserve it ; call me patch <sup>27</sup> and puppy,

And beat me, if you please.

1 GENT. No, indeed ; we know ye. [120

BEL. 'Death, do as I would have ye !

2 GENT. Ye are an ass, then,

A coxcomb, and a calf !

<sup>23</sup> Bile (which was supposed to predispose one to anger).

<sup>27</sup> Fool.

BEL. I am a great calf.
Kick me a little now. Why, when! <sup>28</sup> [They kick him.] Sufficient.
Now laugh aloud, and scorn me. So; good buy ye!

And ever, when ye meet me, laugh.

GENTLEMEN.

We will, sir.

Exeunt.

SCENE III <sup>29</sup>

Enter NANTOLET, LA CASTRE, DE GARD, LUGIER, [and] MIRABEL.

MIR. Your patience, gentlemen; why do ye bait me?

NANT. Is't not a shame you are so stubborn-hearted,
So stony and so dull, to such a lady,
Of her perfections and her misery?

LUG. Does she not love ye? Does not her distraction

For your sake only, her most pitied lunacy
Of all but you, show ye? Does it not compel ye?

MIR. Soft and fair, gentlemen; pray ye, proceed temperately.

LUG. If ye have any feeling, any sense in ye,
The least touch of a noble heart —

LA CAST. Let him alone;
It is his glory that he can kill beauty. — [11
Ye bear my stamp, but not my tenderness;
Your wild unsavory courses set <sup>30</sup> that in ye!
For shame, be sorry, though ye cannot cure her;

Show something of a man, of a fair nature.

MIR. Ye make me mad!

DE GARD. Let me pronounce this to ye:
You take a strange felicity in slighting
And wronging women, which my poor sister feels now;
Heaven's hand be gentle on her! Mark me,
sir;

That very hour she dies (there's small hope otherwise), <sup>20</sup>

That minute, you and I must grapple for it;
Either your life or mine.

MIR. Be not so hot, sir;
I am not to be wrought on by these policies,
In truth, I am not; nor do I fear the tricks,
Or the high-sounding threats, of a Savoyan.
I glory not in cruelty, (ye wrong me,)

<sup>30</sup> The reading of the old eds.; we must suppose that to refer to Mirabel's glory in killing beauty. Mason emends, perhaps rightly, let, = hinder, inhibit.

Nor grow up water'd with the tears of women.
This let me tell ye, howsoever I show to ye,
Wild, as you please to call it, or self-will'd,
When I see cause, I can both do and suffer, [30
Freely and feelingly, as a true gentleman.

Enter ROSALURA and LILLIA [BIANCA].

Ros. Oh, pity, pity! thousand, thousand pities!

LIL. Alas, poor soul, she will die! She is grown senseless;

She will not know nor speak now.

Ros. Die for love!

And love of such a youth! I would die for a dog first;

He that kills me, I'll give him leave to eat me;

I'll know men better, ere I sigh for any of 'em.

LIL. You have done a worthy act, sir, a most famous;

Ye have kill'd a maid the wrong way; ye are a conqueror.

Ros. A conqueror? A cobbler! Hang him, sowter! <sup>40</sup>

Go hide thyself, for shame! Go lose thy memory!

Live not 'mongst men; thou art a beast, a monster,

A blatant beast!

LIL. If ye have yet any honesty,

Or ever heard of any, take my counsel:

Off with your garters, and seek out a bough,
A handsome bough, for I would have ye hang like a gentleman;

And write some doleful matter to the world,
A warning to hard-hearted men.

MIR. Out, kitlings! <sup>32</sup>

What caterwauling's here! What gibbing! <sup>33</sup>

Do you think my heart is soft'ned with a black santis? <sup>34</sup> <sup>50</sup>

Show me some reason.

Enter ORIANA on a bed. <sup>35</sup>

Ros. Here then, here is a reason.

NANT. Now, if ye be a man, let this sight shake ye!

LA CAST. Alas, poor gentlewoman! — Do ye know me, lady?

LUG. How she looks up, and stares!

ORI. I know ye very well;

You are my godfather: and that's the mon-sieur.

<sup>34</sup> Black sanctus, burlesque hymn, a great discord. <sup>35</sup> I.e., the curtains before the inner stage are opened, and she is discovered.

DE GARD. And who am I?

ORI. You are Amadis de Gaul, sir. —
Oh, oh, my heart! — Were you never in love, sweet lady?

And do you never dream of flow'rs and gardens?

I dream of walking fires; take heed; it comes
now.

Who's that? Pray, stand away. I have seen that face, sure. — 60

How light my head is!

ROS. Take some rest.

ORI. I cannot;
For I must be up to-morrow to go to church,
And I must dress me, put my new gown on,
And be as fine to meet my love! Heigh-ho!
Will not you tell me where my love lies buried?

MIR. He is not dead. — [aside] Beshrew my heart, she stirs me!

ORI. He is dead to me.

MIR. [aside] Is 't possible my nature
Should be so damnable to let her suffer? —
Give me your hand.

ORI. How soft you feel, how gentle!
I'll tell ye your fortune, friend.

MIR. How she stares on me! [70

ORI. You have a flatt'ring face, but 't is a fine one;

I warrant you may have a hundred sweet-
hearts.

Will ye pray for me? I shall die to-morrow;
And will ye ring the bells?

MIR. I am most unworthy,
I do confess, unhappy. Do you know me?

ORI. I would I did!

MIR. Oh, fair tears, how ye take me!

ORI. Do you weep too? You have not lost your lover?

You mock me; I'll go home and pray.

MIR. Pray ye, pardon me;
Or, if it please ye to consider justly,
Scorn me, for I deserve it; scorn and shame
me, 80
Sweet Oriana!

LIL. Let her alone; she trembles;
Her fits will grow more strong, if ye provoke
her.

LA CAST. Certain she knows ye not, yet loves to see ye.
How she smiles now!

Enter BELLEUR.

BEL. Where are ye? Oh, why do not ye laugh? Come, laugh at me!
Why a devil art thou sad, and such a subject,

Such a ridiculous subject, as I am,
Before thy face?

MIR. Prithee, put off this lightness;
This is no time for mirth, nor place; I have us'd too much on 't.

I have undone myself and a sweet lady 90
By being too indulgent to my foolery,
Which truly I repent. Look here.

BEL. What ails she?

MIR. Alas, she is mad!

BEL. Mad!

MIR. Yes, too sure; for me, too.

BEL. Dost thou wonder at that? By this good light, they are all so;

They are co'z'ning-mad, they are brawling-
mad, they are proud-mad;

They are all, all mad. I came from a world of mad women,

Mad as March hares. Get 'em in chains, then deal with 'em.

There's one that's mad; she seems well, but she is dog-mad.

Is she dead, dost think?

MIR. Dead! Heaven forbid!

BEL. Heaven further it!

For, till they be key-cold <sup>86</sup> dead, there's no
trusting of 'em; 100

Whate'er they seem, or howsoe'er they carry
it,

Till they be chapfallen, and their tongues at
peace,

Nail'd in their coffins sure, I'll ne'er believe
'em.

Shall I talk with her?

MIR. No, dear friend, be quiet,
And be at peace a while.

BEL. I'll walk aside,
And come again anon. But take heed to her:
You say she is a woman?

MIR. Yes.

BEL. Take great heed;
For, if she do not cozen thee, then hang me;
Let her be mad, or what she will, she'll cheat thee! Exit.

MIR. Away, wild fool! — How vild <sup>87</sup> this shows in him now! — 110

Now take my faith, (before ye all I speak it,)
And with it my repentant love.

LA CAST. This seems well.

MIR. Were but this lady clear again, whose sorrows

My very heart melts for, were she but perfect,

<sup>86</sup> A common comparison, the key in or near the door being a familiar bit of cold iron.

<sup>87</sup> F. vile.

(For thus to marry her would be two miseries),
Before the richest and the noblest beauty France or the world could show me, I would take her.

As she is now, my tears and prayers shall wed
her.

DE GARD. This makes some small amends.

ROS. She beckons to ye ;

To us, too, to go off.

NANT. Let's draw aside all. [120
[All retire except ORIANA and MIRABEL.]

ORI. Oh, my best friend ! I would fain —

MIR. What, she speaks well,
And with another voice.

ORI. But I am fearful,
And shame a little stops my tongue —

MIR. Speak boldly.

ORI. Tell ye, I am well. I am perfect well (pray ye, mock not) ;

And that I did this to provoke your nature ;
Out of my infinite and restless love,
To win your pity. Pardon me !

MIR. Go forward ;
Who set ye on ?

ORI. None, as I live, no creature ;
Not any knew or ever dream'd what I meant.
Will ye be mine ?

MIR. 'Tis true, I pity ye ; 130
But, when I marry ye, ye must be wiser.
Nothing but tricks ? devices ?

ORI. Will ye shame me ?

MIR. Yes, marry, will I. — Come near, come near ! a miracle !

[They come forward.]

The woman's well ; she was only mad for marriage,

Stark mad to be ston'd <sup>28</sup> to death ; give her good counsel.

Will this world never mend ? — Are ye caught, damsel ?

Re-enter BELLEUR.

BEL. How goes it now ?

MIR. Thou art a kind of prophet ;
The woman's well again, and would have
gull'd me ;

Well, excellent well, and not a taint upon her.

BEL. Did not I tell ye ? Let 'em be what can be, 140
Saints, devils, anything, they will abuse <sup>29</sup> us ;
Thou wert an ass to believe her so long, a cox-comb ;

<sup>28</sup> With a play on "stone" = testis.

<sup>29</sup> Deceive.

Give 'em a minute, they'll abuse whole millions.

MIR. And am not I a rare physician, gentle-
men,

That can cure desperate mad minds ?

DE GARD. Be not insolent.

MIR. Well, go thy ways ; from this hour I disclaim thee,

Unless thou hast a trick above this ; then I'll love thee.

Ye owe me for your cure. — Pray, have a care
of her,

For fear she fall into relapse. — Come,
Belleur ;

We'll set up bills <sup>40</sup> to cure diseased virgins.

BEL. Shall we be merry ?

MIR. Yes.

BEL. But I'll no more projects ; [151
If we could make 'em mad, it were some mastery.

Exeunt [MIRABEL and BELLEUR].

LIL. I am glad she is well again.

ROS. So am I, certain. —
Be not ashamed.

ORI. I shall never see a man more.

DE GARD. Come, ye are a fool ; had ye but told me this trick,

He should not have gloried thus.

LUG. He shall not long, neither.

LA CAST. Be rul'd, and be at peace. Ye have my consent,

And what pow'r I can work with.

NANT. Come, leave blushing ;

We are your friends ; an honest way compell'd
ye ;

Heaven will not see so true a love unrecompens'd. 160

Come in, and slight him too.

LUG. The next shall hit him. Exeunt.

ACT V — SCENE I <sup>1</sup>

Enter DE GARD and LUGIER.

DE GARD. 'T will be discover'd.

LUG. That's the worst can happen ;
If there be any way to reach and work upon
him,

Upon his nature suddenly, and catch him —
that he loves,

<sup>1</sup> Unlocated, but doubtless an outer room of La Castre's house or the street before it.

Though he dissemble it, and would show contrary,
And will at length relent, I'll lay <sup>2</sup> my fortune;

Nay, more, my life.

DE GARD. Is she won? <sup>3</sup>

LUG. Yes, and ready,

And my designments set.

DE GARD. They are now for travel;
All for that game again; they have forgot wooing.

LUG. Let 'em; we'll travel with 'em.

DE GARD. Where's his father?

LUG. Within; he knows my mind, too, and allows <sup>4</sup> it, 10

Pities your sister's fortune most sincerely,
And has appointed, for our more assistance,
Some of his secret friends.

DE GARD. Speed the plough! <sup>5</sup>

LUG. Well said!

And be you serious too.

DE GARD. I shall be diligent.

LUG. Let's <sup>6</sup> break the ice for one, the rest will drink, too,

Believe me, sir, of the same cup. My young gentlewomen

Wait but who sets the game afoot. Though they seem stubborn, Reserv'd, and proud now, yet I know their hearts,

Their pulses how they beat, and for what cause, sir,

And how they long to venture their abilities [20
In a true quarrel. Husbands they must and will have,

Or nunneries and thin collations

To cool their bloods. Let's all about our business;

And, if this fail, let nature work.

DE GARD. Ye have arm'd me. Exeunt.

SCENE II <sup>7</sup>

Enter MIRABEL, NANTOLET, [and] LA CASTRE.

LA CAST. Will ye be wilful, then?

MIR. Pray, sir, your pardon;

For I must travel. Lie lazy here,
Bound to a wife! Chain'd to her subtleties,
Her humors, and her wills, which are mere fetters!

To have her to-day pleas'd, to-morrow peevish,
The third day mad, the fourth rebellious!

You see before they are married, what moriscoes, <sup>8</sup>

What masques and mummeries they put upon us.

To be ti'd here, and suffer their lavoltas! <sup>9</sup>

NANT. 'T is your own seeking.

MIR. Yes, to get my freedom. [10
Were they as I could wish 'em —

LA CAST. Fools and meacocks, <sup>10</sup>
To endure what you think fit to put upon 'em!
Come, change your mind.

MIR. Not before I have chang'd air,
Father.

When I know women worthy of my company,
I will return again, and wait upon 'em;

Till then, dear sir, I'll amble all the world over,
And run all hazards, misery, and poverty,
So <sup>11</sup> I escape the dangerous bay of matrimony.

Enter PINAC and BELLEUR.

PIN. Are ye resolv'd?

MIR. Yes, certain; I will out again.

PIN. We are for ye, sir; we are your servants once more; 20

Once more we'll seek our fortune in strange countries;

Ours is too scornful for us.

BEL. Is there ne'er a land
That you have read or heard of (for I care not how far it be,

Nor under what pestiferous star it lies),
A happy kingdom, where there are no women,
Nor have been ever, nor no mention
Of any such lewd <sup>12</sup> things with lewder qualities,

(For thither would I travel) where 't is felony
To confess he had a mother; a mistress, treason?

LA CAST. Are you for travel too?

BEL. For anything, [30
For living in the moon and stopping hedges, <sup>13</sup>
Ere I stay here to be abus'd and baffl'd. <sup>14</sup>

NANT. Why did ye not break your minds to me? They are my daughters;
And, sure, I think I should have that command over 'em,

To see 'em well bestow'd. I know ye are gentlemen,

Men of fair parts and states; I know your parents;

<sup>13</sup> Alluding to the bundle of sticks carried by the man in the moon.

And, had ye told me of your fair affections —
Make but one trial more, and let me second ye.

BEL. No ; I'll make hobnails first, and mend old kettles.

Can ye lend me an armor of high proof, to appear in, 40

And two or three fieldpieces to defend me?

The king's guard are mere pigmies.

NANT. They will not eat ye.

BEL. Yes, and you too, and twenty fatter monsieurs,

If their high stomachs hold.<sup>15</sup> They came with chopping-knives,

To cut me into rands<sup>16</sup> and sirloins, and so powder<sup>17</sup> me. —

Come, shall we go?

NANT. You cannot be so discourteous,
If ye intend to go, as not to visit 'em,
And take your leaves.

MIR. That we dare do, and civilly,
And thank 'em too.

PIN. Yes, sir, we know that honesty.<sup>18</sup>

BEL. I'll come i' the rear, forty foot off, I'll assure ye, 50

With a good gun in my hand. I'll no more Amazons ;

I mean, no more of their frights. I'll make my three legs,<sup>19</sup>

Kiss my hand twice, and, if I smell no danger,
If the interview be clear, maybe I'll speak to
her ;

I'll wear a privy coat<sup>20</sup> too, and behind me,
To make those parts secure, a bandog.<sup>21</sup>

LA CAST. You are
A merry gentleman.

BEL. A wary gentleman, I do assure
ye.

I have been warn'd ; and must be arm'd.

LA CAST. Well, Son,
These are your hasty thoughts ; when I see you are bent to it,

Then I'll believe, and join with ye ; so, we'll leave ye. — 60

[aside] There's a trick will make ye stay.

NANT. [aside] I hope so.

Exeunt [LA CASTRE and NANTOLET].

MIR. We have won immortal fame now, if we leave 'em.

PIN. You have ; but we have lost.

MIR. Pinac, thou art cozen'd.
I know they love ye ; and to gain ye handsomely,

Not to be thought to yield, they would give millions.

Their father's willingness, that must needs show ye.

PIN. If I thought so —

MIR. Ye shall be hang'd, ye recreant !
Would ye turn renegade now?

BEL. No ; let's away, boys,
Out of the air and tumult of their villainies.
Though I were married to that grasshopper,
And had her fast by th' legs, I should think she would cozen me. 71

Enter a Young [Man, disguised as a] Factor.

Y. MAN. Monsieur Mirabel, I take it?

MIR. Y' are i' th' right, sir.

Y. MAN. I am come to seek ye, sir. I have been at your father's,

And, understanding you were here —

MIR. Ye are welcome.
May I crave your name?

Y. MAN. Fosse, sir, and your servant.
That you may know me better, I am factor
To your old merchant, Leverdure.

MIR. How does he?

Y. MAN. Well, sir, I hope ; he is now at Orleans,

About some business.

MIR. You are once more welcome.
Your master's a right honest man, and one [80
I am much beholding to, and must very shortly Trouble his love again.

Y. MAN. You may be bold, sir.

MIR. Your business, if you please now?

Y. MAN. This it is, sir.

I know ye well remember in your travel
A Genoa merchant —

MIR. I remember many.

Y. MAN. But this man, sir, particularly ;
your own benefit

Must needs imprint him in ye ; one Alberto,
A gentleman you sav'd from being murder'd
A little from Bologna ; I was then myself
In Italy, and suppli'd ye ; though haply you
have 90

Forgot me now.

MIR. No, I remember ye,
And that Alberto too ; a noble gentleman ;
More to remember were to thank myself, sir.
What of that gentleman?

Y. MAN. He is dead.

MIR. I am sorry.

Y. MAN. But on his deathbed, leaving to his sister

All that he had, beside some certain jewels,

Which, with a ceremony,<sup>22</sup> he bequeath'd to you
In grateful memory, he commanded strictly
His sister, as she lov'd him and his peace, [99
To see those jewels safe and true deliver'd,
And, with them, his last love. She, as tender
To observe [his] <sup>23</sup> will, not trusting friend nor servant

With such a weight, is come herself to Paris
And at my master's house.

MIR. You tell me a wonder.

Y. MAN. I tell ye a truth, sir. She is young and handsome,
And well attended ; of much state and riches ;
So loving and obedient to her brother,
That, on my conscience, if he had given her also,
She would most willingly have made her tender.<sup>24</sup>

MIR. May not I see her?

Y. MAN. She desires it heartily. [110

MIR. And presently?

Y. MAN. She is now about some business, Passing accounts of some few debts here
owing,
And buying jewels of a merchant.

MIR. Is she wealthy?

Y. MAN. I would ye had her, sir, at all adventure!

Her brother had a main state.<sup>25</sup>

MIR. And fair too?

Y. MAN. The prime of all those parts of Italy

For beauty and for courtesy.

MIR. I must needs see her.

Y. MAN. 'T is all her business, sir. Ye may now see her ;
But to-morrow will be fitter for your visitation,
For she is not yet prepared.

MIR. Only her sight, sir ; [120
And, when you shall think fit, for further visit.

Y. MAN. Sir, ye may see her, and I'll wait your coming.

MIR. And I'll be with ye instantly ; I know the house ;

Meantime, my love and thanks, sir.

Y. MAN. Your poor servant. Exit.

PIN. Thou hast the strangest luck ! What was that Alberto?

MIR. An honest, noble merchant 't was my chance

To rescue from some rogues had almost slain
him ;

And he in kindness to remember this !

<sup>26</sup> Large estate.

BEL. Now we shall have you,
For all your protestations and your forward-
ness, 129

Find out strange fortunes in this lady's eyes,
And new enticements to put off your journey ;

And who shall have honor then?

MIR. No, no, never fear it ;
I must needs see her to receive my legacy.

BEL. If it be ti'd up in her smock, Heaven help thee !

May not we see too?

MIR. Yes, afore we go ;
I must be known myself, ere I be able To make [thee] <sup>26</sup> welcome. Wouldst thou see more women?

I thought you had been out of love with all.

BEL. I may be
(I find that), with the least encouragement ;
Yet I desire to see whether all countries [140
Are naturally possess'd with the same spirits,
For, if they be, I'll take a monastery,
And never travel ; for I had rather be a friar,
And live mewed up, than be a fool, and flouted.

MIR. Well, well, I'll meet ye anon, then tell you more, boys ;

However, stand prepar'd, prest<sup>27</sup> for our
journey ;

For certain we shall go, I think, when I have seen her

And view'd her well.

PIN. Go, go, and we'll wait for ye ;
Your fortune directs ours.

BEL. You shall find us i' th' tavern,
Lamenting in sack and sugar for our losses. [150
If she be right Italian, and want servants,<sup>28</sup>
You may prefer <sup>29</sup> the properest man. How I could

Worry a woman now !

PIN. Come, come, leave prating ;
Ye may have enough to do, without this boasting. Exeunt.

SCENE III <sup>30</sup>

Enter LUGIER, DE GARD, ROSALURA, and LILLIA [BIANCA].

LUG. This is the last adventure.

DE GARD. And the happiest,
As we hope, too.

house.

ROS. We should be glad to find it.

LIL. Who shall conduct us thither?

LUG. Your man is ready,
For I must not be seen; no, nor this gentleman;

That may beget suspicion; all the rest
Are people of no doubt. I would have ye,
ladies,
Keep your old liberties, and as we instruct
ye.

Come, look not pale; you shall not lose your
wishes,
Nor beg 'em neither; but be yourselves and
happy.

ROS. I tell ye true, I cannot hold off
longer, 10

Nor give no more hard language.

DE GARD. You shall not need.

ROS. I love the gentleman, and must now show it;

Shall I beat a proper man out of heart?

LUG. There's none advises ye.

LIL. Faith, I repent me too.

LUG. Repent and spoil all;

Tell what ye know, ye had best!

LIL. I'll tell what I think;

For, if he ask me now if I can love him,
I'll tell him yes, I can. The man's a kind
man,

And out of his true honesty [affects] <sup>31</sup> me.

Although he play'd the fool, which I re-quitted,

Must I still hold him at the stave's end?

LUG. You are two strange women. [20

ROS. We may be, if we fool still.

LUG. Dare ye believe me?

Follow but this advice I have set you in
now,

And if ye lose — would ye yield now so basely?

Give up without your honors sav'd?

DE GARD. Fie, ladies!

Preserve your freedom still.

LIL. Well, well, for this time.

LUG. And carry that full state —

ROS. That's as the wind stands;

If it begin to chop about, and scant us,
Hang me, but I know what I'll do! Come,
direct us;

I make no doubt we shall do handsomely.

DE GARD. Some part o' th' way we'll wait upon ye, ladies; 30

The rest your man supplies.

LUG. Do well, I'll honor ye. Exeunt.

SCENE IV <sup>32</sup>

ORIANA [disguised as an Italian lady,] and two [persons disguised as] Merchants, [discovered above.] Enter, [below, the Young Man dis- guised as a] Factor, and MIRABEL.

Y. MAN. Look ye, sir, there she is; you see how busy.

Methinks you are infinitely bound to her for her journey.

MIR. How gloriously she shows! She is a tall woman.

Y. MAN. Of a fair size, sir. My master not being at home,

I have been so out of my wits to get her company!

I mean, sir, of her own fair sex and fashion —

MIR. Afar off, she is most fair, too.

Y. MAN. Near, most excellent. —

At length, I have entreated two fair ladies (And happily <sup>33</sup> you know 'em), the young daughters

Of Monsieur Nantolet.

MIR. I know 'em well, sir. [10

What are those? Jewels?

Y. MAN. All.

MIR. They make a rich show!

Y. MAN. There is a matter of ten thousand pounds, too,

Was owing here. You see those merchants
with her;

They have brought it in now.

MIR. How handsomely her shape shows!

Y. MAN. Those are still neat; your Italians are most curious. <sup>34</sup>

Now she looks this way.

MIR. She has a goo[d]ly presence;
How full of courtesy! — Well, sir, I'll leave
ye;

And, if I may be bold to bring a friend or two,
Good, noble gentlemen —

Y. MAN. No doubt, ye may, sir;

For you have most command.

MIR. I have seen a wonder! Exit. [20

ORI. Is he gone?

Y. MAN. Yes.

ORI. How?

Y. MAN. Taken to the utmost;

A wonder dwells about him.

ORI. He did not guess at me?

Y. MAN. No, be secure; ye show another
woman.

He is gone to fetch his friends.

<sup>34</sup> Fastidious.

ORI. Where are the gentlewomen?

Y. MAN. Here, here; now they are come,
Sit still, and let them see ye.

Enter [below] ROSALURA, LILLIA [BIANCA, and] Servant.

ROS. Pray ye, where's my friend, sir?

Y. MAN. She is within, ladies; but here's another gentlewoman,
A stranger to this town; so please you visit
her,

'T will be well taken.

LIL. Where is she?

Y. MAN. There, above, ladies.

SERV. Bless me, what thing is this? Two pinnacles 30
Upon her pate! Is't not a glode<sup>38</sup> to catch woodcocks?

ROS. Peace, ye rude knave!

SERV. What a bouncing bum she has too!
There's sail enough for a carack.<sup>39</sup>

ROS. What is this lady?
For, as I live, she's a goodly woman.

Y. MAN. Guess, guess.

LIL. I have not seen a nobler presence.

SERV. 'T is a lusty wench; now could I spend my forty pence,
With all my heart, to have but one fling at
her,

To give her but a washing blow.<sup>37</sup>

LIL. Ye rascal!

SERV. Ay, that's all a man has for's good will. 'T will be long enough

Before ye cry, "Come, Anthony, and kiss
me." 40

LIL. I'll have ye whipp'd.

ROS. Has my friend seen this lady?

Y. MAN. Yes, yes, and is well known to
her.

ROS. I much admire her presence.

LIL. So do I, too;
For, I protest, she is the handsomest,
The rarest, and the newest to mine eye,
That ever I saw yet.

ROS. I long to know her;
My friend shall do that kindness.

ORI. So she shall, ladies:
Come, pray ye, come up.

ROS. Oh me!

LIL. Hang me, if I knew her!—
Were I a man myself, I should now love ye;
Nay, I should dote.

ROS. I dare not trust mine eyes; [50
For, as I live, ye are the strangest alter'd!
I must come up to know the truth.

SERV. So must I, lady;
For I am a kind of unbeliever too.

LIL. Get ye gone, sirrah;
And what ye have seen be secret in; you are paid else!<sup>38</sup>

No more of your long tongue.

Y. MAN. Will ye go in, ladies,
And talk with her? These venturers will come straight.

Away with this fellow.

LIL. There, sirrah; go, disport ye.

SERV. I would the trunk-hos'd<sup>39</sup> woman would go with me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V<sup>40</sup>

Enter MIRABEL, PINAC, [and] BELLEUR.

PIN. Is she so glorious handsome?

MIR. You would wonder;
Our women look like gipsies, like gills<sup>41</sup> to her;
Their clothes and fashions beggarly and bankrupt,

Base, old, and scurvy.

BEL. How looks her face?

MIR. Most heavenly;
And the becoming motion of her body
So sets her off!

BEL. Why then, we shall stay.

MIR. Pardon me,
That's more than I know. If she be that
woman

She appears to be —

BEL. As't is impossible.

MIR. I shall then tell ye more.

PIN. Did ye speak to her?

MIR. No, no; I only saw her; she was busy. 10

Now I go for that end; and mark her, gentle-
men,

If she appear not to ye one of the sweetest,
The handsomest, the fairest in behavior!

We shall meet the two wenches there, too;
they come to visit her,

To wonder, as we do.

<sup>38</sup> Otherwise you will be beaten.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

LIKE The Wild-Goose Chase, A Trick to Catch the Old One illustrates the trend of seventeenth-century comedy toward the school of Etherege and Congreve, and away from on the one hand the romantic narratives of Shakespeare, and on the other the moralistic satires of Jonson. Middleton's play is not so graceful nor so merry as Fletcher's, which moves in a world that after its own fashion is quite as unreal as the Forest of Arden. Money is taken for granted and causes no problem in The Wild-Goose Chase; in A Trick to Catch the Old One it is very much in the foreground. Fletcher is the aristocrat, concerned with such intangibles as charm and taste and, though comically enough, spiritual compatibility. Middleton frankly devotes his play to the principal interest of the bourgeois mind; and the love story of Witgood and Joyce is not brought very far forward. As story, however, this play is superior to Fletcher's. Manners are of course the prime concern, and taken as a whole Middleton's comedies give us our best picture of his London, or at any rate of its seamier side; but the narrative element forms a sturdy foundation for them, and, though Dampit is evidently written in for a special actor, the plot is admirably shaped.

The heroes of both plays are rakes who, after fifth-act repentances, are dismissed into the bonds of matrimony as if their future could be lived independently of their past. Witgood is actually less coldly heartless than Mirabel, but his past is more visibly before us in the rather appealing figure of the Courtesan. Yet Fletcher's rake, detestable as may be his treatment of Oriana, is after all only trying to exercise every man's right to choose for himself; his antagonist is Oriana, who anticipates the Shavian heroine in her aggressiveness; she wins the duel of sex, and Mirabel capitulates with an easy grace. Witgood's duel is no sham one; it is a fight for existence, and courtesy and sportsmanship have no place in it. The adversaries are not ladies of agreeable charm and duplicity, but rascally skinflints. So despicable are they that we lose our moral balance, as Middleton intends that we shall. We want Witgood to win; and in the sordid atmosphere, not of guilty love, but of financial intrigue, we enlist our sympathies on a very dubious side. It is because our sympathies are enlisted, as they are not in The Wild-Goose Chase, that A Trick to Catch the Old One seems on sober reflection so amoral. Wit and gaiety, and the subordination of the narrative, keep the former too artificial to raise the moral issue at all. Middleton's realism, even the very solidity of his play's structure, enforces us to abandon that comfortable neutrality in which the moral faculty is able to slumber undisturbed by the world's intrusion or the demands of life.

The exact dates of composition and production are uncertain. C. 1605 is only a conjecture. The play was probably written for the Boys of St. Paul's, and after their disappearance in 1606 or soon after was acted by the children's company at the Blackfriars. It was played at court on January 1, 1609. No source of the plot is known. The play was entered in the Stationers' Register on October 7, 1607. The first edition appeared, in quarto, probably early in 1609; it bears the date of 1608 (presumably, O. S.), but one of the two issues mentions the court performance. It was reprinted in 1616. The present text follows Q 1, with a few corrections from Q 2. The standard editions of Middleton's works are those of A. Dyce (1840), and A. H. Bullen (1885-1886).

Enter WITGOOD, a gentleman, solus.

WIT. All's gone! still thou'rt a gentleman, that's all; but a poor one, that's nothing. What milk brings thy meadows forth now? Where are thy goodly uplands, and thy downlands? All sunk into that little pit, lechery! Why should a gallant pay but two shillings for his ordinary<sup>3</sup> that nourishes him, and twenty times two for his brothel<sup>4</sup> that consumes him? But where's Longacre?<sup>5</sup> In my uncle's conscience, which is three years' voyage about [10 — he that sets out upon his conscience ne'er finds the way home again — he is either swallowed in the quicksands of law-quillets,<sup>6</sup> or splits upon the piles of a praemunire;<sup>7</sup> yet these old fox-brain'd and ox-brow'd<sup>8</sup> uncles have still<sup>9</sup> defences for their avarice, and apologies for their practices, and will thus greet our follies:

"He that doth his youth expose
To brothel, drink, and danger, 20
Let him that is his nearest kin
Cheat him before a stranger."

And that's his uncle: 't is a principle in usury. I dare not visit the city: there I should ~~be too~~ soon visited by that horrible plague, my debts; and by that means I lose a virgin's love, her portion, and her virtues. Well, how should a man live now that has no living, hum? — Why, are there not a million of men in the ~~world that only sojourn upon their brain,~~ [30 and make their wits their mercers;<sup>10</sup> and am I but one amongst that million, and cannot thrive upon 't? Any trick, out of the compass<sup>11</sup> of law, now, would come happily to me.

Enter Courtesan.

COUR. My love!

WIT. My loathing! hast thou been the secret consumption of my purse, and now com'st

<sup>11</sup> Out of the reach of, and so not punishable to undo my last means, my wits? Wilt leave no virtue in me, and yet thou ne'er the better? 40

Hence, courtesan, round-webb'd tarantula,
That dryest the roses in the cheeks of youth!

COUR. I have been true unto your pleasure;
and all your lands

Thrice rack'd<sup>12</sup> was never worth the jewel which

I prodigally gave you, my virginity.
Lands mortgag'd may return, and more esteem'd;

But honesty<sup>13</sup> once pawn'd is ne'er redeem'd.

WIT. Forgive; I do thee wrong
To make thee sin, and then to chide thee for 't.

COUR. I know I am your loathing now;
farewell. 50

WIT. Stay, best invention,<sup>14</sup> stay.

COUR. I that have been the secret consumption of your purse, shall I stay now to undo your last means, your wits? Hence, courtesan, away!

WIT. I prithee, make me not mad at my own weapon; stay (a thing<sup>15</sup> few women can do, I know that, and therefore they had need wear stays); be not contrary. Dost love me? Fate has so cast<sup>16</sup> it that all my means [60] I must derive from thee.

COUR. From me? Be happy then;
What lies within the power of my performance shall be commanded of thee.

WIT. Spoke like
An honest drab, i' faith. It may prove something;

What trick is not an embryo at first,
Until a perfect shape come over it?

COUR. Come,
I must help you. Whereabouts left you? I'll proceed:

Though you beget, 't is I must help to breed.
Speak, what is 't? I'd fain conceive it. 70

WIT. So, so, so; thou shalt presently take the name and form upon thee of a rich country widow, four hundred a year valiant,<sup>17</sup> in woods, in bullocks, in barns, and in rye-stacks. We'll to London, and to my covetous uncle.

COUR. I begin to applaud thee; our states being both desperate, they are soon resolute. But how for horses?

WIT. Mass, that's true; the jest will be of some continuance. Let me see; horses [80 now, a bots<sup>18</sup> on 'em! Stay, I have acquaintance with a mad host, never yet bawd<sup>19</sup> to thee. I have rins'd the whoreson's gums in mull-sack<sup>20</sup> many a time and often. Put but a good tale into his ear now, so it come off cleanly, and there's horse and man for us, I dare warrant thee.

COUR. Arm your wits then Speedily; there shall want nothing in me, Either in behavior, discourse, or fashion, 90
That shall discredit your intended purpose. I will so artfully disguise my wants,
And set so good a courage on my state,<sup>21</sup>
That I will be believed.

WIT. Why, then, all's furnish'd. I shall go nigh to catch that old fox, mine uncle. Though he make but some amends for my undoing,<sup>22</sup> yet there's some comfort in 't, he cannot otherwise choose (though it be but in hope to cozen<sup>23</sup> me again) but supply any [100 hasty want that I bring to town with me. The device well and cunningly carried, the name of a rich widow, and four hundred a year in good earth, will so conjure up a kind of usurer's love in him to me, that he will not only desire my presence — which at first shall scarce be granted him; I'll keep off a' purpose, — but<sup>24</sup> I shall find him so officious to deserve, so ready to supply! I know the state of an old man's affection so well: if his nephew be [110 poor indeed, why, he let's God alone with him<sup>25</sup>; but if he be once rich, then he'll be the first man that helps him.

COUR. 'T is right the world;<sup>25</sup> for, in these days, an old man's love to his kindred is like his kindness to his wife: 't is always done before he comes at it.

WIT. I owe thee for that jest. Begone. Here's all my wealth; prepare thyself, away! I'll to mine host with all possible [120 haste; and with the best art, and most profitable form, pour the sweet circumstance into his ear, which shall have the gift to turn all the wax to honey. [Exit Courtesan.] — How no[w]? Oh, the right worshipful signiors of our country!

<sup>18</sup> Leaves it to God to look after him.

<sup>20</sup> Strained to produce as much cash as possible.

<sup>25</sup> Worth.

[Enter ONESIPHORUS HOARD, LIMBER, and KIX.]<sup>26</sup>

O. HOA. Who's that?

LIM. Oh, the common rioter;<sup>27</sup> take no note of him.

WIT. [aside] You will not see me now; the comfort is,

Ere it be long you will scarce see yourselves. [Exit.] 130

O. HOA. I wonder how he breathes; h' as consum'd all

Upon that courtesan.

LIM. We have heard so much.

O. HOA. You have heard all truth. His uncle and my brother

Have been these three years mortal adversaries:

Two old tough spirits; they seldom meet but fight,

Or quarrel when 't is calmest. I think their anger

Be the very fire that keeps their age alive.

LIM. What was the quarrel, sir?

O. HOA. Faith, about a purchase,<sup>28</sup> fetching over<sup>29</sup> a young heir. Master Hoard, [140 my brother, having wasted much time in beating the bargain, what did me old Lucre, but as his conscience mov'd him, knowing the poor gentleman, stepp'd in between 'em and cozened him himself.

LIM. And was this all, sir?

O. HOA. This was e'en it, sir; yet for all this, I know no reason but the match might go forward betwixt his wife's son and my niece; what though there be a dissension [150 between the two old men, I see no reason it should put a difference between the two younger; 't is as natural for old folks to fall out, as for young to fall in! A scholar comes a-wooing to my niece; well, he's wise, but he's poor: her son comes a-wooing to my niece; well, he's a fool, but he's rich —

LIM. Ay, marry, sir?

O. HOA. Pray, now, is not a rich fool better than a poor philosopher? 160

LIM. One would think so, i' faith!

O. HOA. She now remains at London with my brother, her second uncle, to learn fashion, practise music; the voice between her lips and the viol between her legs — she'll be fit for a consort<sup>30</sup> very speedily. A thousand good pound is her portion; if she marry, we'll ride up and be merry.

KIX. A match, if it be a match! Exeunt.

[SCENE II]<sup>31</sup>

Enter at one door, WITGOOD; at the other, Host.

WIT. Mine host!

HOST. Young Master Witgood.

WIT. I have been laying<sup>32</sup> all the town for thee.

HOST. Why, what's the news, bully Hadland?

WIT. What geldings are in the house, of thine own? Answer me to that first.

HOST. Why, man, why?

WIT. Mark me what I say: I'll tell thee [10 such a tale in thine ear that thou shalt trust me spite of thy teeth, furnish me with some money wily-nilly, and ride up with me thyself contra voluntatem et professionem.

HOST. How? Let me see this trick, and I'll say thou hast more art than a conjuror.

WIT. Dost thou joy in my advancement?

HOST. Do I love sack and ginger?

WIT. Comes my prosperity desiredly to thee? [20

HOST. Come forfeitures to a usurer, fees to an officer, punks<sup>33</sup> to an host, and pigs to a parson desiredly? Why, then, la.

WIT. Will the report of a widow of four hundred a year, boy, make thee leap, and sing, and dance, and come to thy place again?

HOST. Wilt thou command me now? I am thy spirit; conjure me into any shape.

WIT. I ha' brought her from her friends, turn'd back the horses by a sleight;<sup>34</sup> not [30 so much as one amongst her six men, goodly large yeomanly fellows, will she trust with this her purpose: by this light, all unmann'd,<sup>35</sup> regardless of her state, neglectful of vainglorious ceremony, all for my love. Oh 't is a fine little voluble tongue, mine host, that wins a widow!

HOST. No, 't is a tongue with a great<sup>36</sup> T, my boy, that wins a widow.

WIT. Now, sir, the case stands thus: [40 good mine host, if thou lov'st my happiness, assist me.

HOST. Command all my beasts i' th' house.

WIT. Nay, that's not all neither; prithee take truce with thy joy, and listen to me. Thou know'st I have a wealthy uncle i' th' city, somewhat the wealthier by <sup>37</sup> my follies. The report of this fortune, well and cunningly carried, might be a means to draw some goodness from the usuring rascal; for I have [50] put her in hope already of some estate that I have either in land or money. Now, if I be found true in neither, what may I expect but a sudden breach of our love, utter dissolution of the match, and confusion of my fortunes for ever?

HOST. Wilt thou but trust the managing of thy business with me?

WIT. With thee? Why, will I desire to thrive in my purpose? Will I hug four [60] hundred a year, I that know the misery of nothing? Will that man wish a rich widow, that has ne'er a hole to put his head in? With thee, mine host? Why, believe it, sooner with thee than with a covey of counsellors.

HOST. Thank you for your good report, i' faith, sir; and if I stand you not in stead, why then let an host come off hic et haec hostis, a deadly enemy to dice, drink, and venery. Come, where's this widow? 70

WIT. Hard at Park End.

HOST. I'll be her servingman for once.

WIT. Why, there we let off together, keep full time; my thoughts were striking then just the same number.

HOST. I knew 't; shall we then see our merry days again?

WIT. Our merry nights — [aside] which ne'er shall be more seen. Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>38</sup>

Enter at several <sup>39</sup> doors, old LUCRE and old [WALKADINE] HOARD; [LAMPREY, SPICHOCK, FREEDOM, and MONEYLOVE] coming between them to pacify 'em.

LAM. Nay, good Master Lucre, and you, Master Hoard, anger is the wind which you're both too much troubled withal.

HOA. Shall my adversary thus daily affront <sup>40</sup> me, ripping up the old wound of our malice, which three summers could not close up? into which wound the very sight of him drops scalding lead instead of balsamum?

LUC. Why, Hoard, Hoard, Hoard, Hoard, Hoard! may I not pass in the state of quiet- [10] ness to mine own house? Answer me to that, before witness, and why? I'll refer the cause to honest, even-minded gentlemen, or require the mere indifferences <sup>41</sup> of the law to decide this matter. I got the purchase, <sup>42</sup> true; was 't not any man's case? Yes. Will a wise man stand as a bawd, whilst another wipes his nose <sup>43</sup> of the bargain? No; I answer no in that case.

LAM. Nay, sweet Master Lucre. 20

HOA. Was it the part of a friend — no, rather of a Jew — mark what I say, — when I had beaten the bush to the last bird, or, as I may term it, the price to a pound, then, like a cunning usurer, to come in the evening of the bargain, and glean all my hopes in a minute? to enter, as it were, at the back door of the purchase? for thou ne'er cam'st the right way by it.

LUC. Hast thou the conscience to tell me [30] so without any impeachment to thyself?

HOA. Thou that canst defeat <sup>44</sup> thy own nephew, Lucre, lap his lands into bonds, and take the extremity of thy kindred's forfeitures, because he's a rioter, a wastethrift, a brothel-master, <sup>45</sup> and so forth — what may a stranger expect from thee but vulnera dilacerata, as the poet says, dilacerate dealing?

LUC. Upbraid'st thou me with nephew? Is all imputation laid upon me? What [40] acquaintance have I with his follies? If he riot, <sup>46</sup> 't is he must want it; if he surfeit, 't is he must feel it; if he drab it, 't is he must lie by 't. What's this to me?

HOA. What's all to thee? Nothing, nothing; such is the gulf of thy desire and the wolf of thy conscience: but be assured, old Pecunius Lucre, if ever fortune so bless me that I may be at leisure to vex thee, or any means so favor me that I may have oppor- [50] tunity to mad thee, I will pursue it with that flame of hate, spirit of malice, unrepressed wrath, that I will blast thy comforts.

LUC. Ha, ha, ha!

LAM. Nay, Master Hoard, you're a wise gentleman —

HOA. I will so cross thee —

LUC. And I thee.

HOA. So without mercy fret thee —

LUC. So monstrously oppose thee — 60

HOA. Dost scoff at my just anger? Oh, that I had as much power as usury has over thee!

LUC. Then thou ~~wouldst~~ have as much power as the Devil has over thee.

HOA. Toad!

LUC. Aspic!<sup>47</sup>

HOA. Serpent!

LUC. Viper!

SPI. Nay, gentlemen, then we must [70 divide you perforce.

LAM. When the fire grows too unreasonable hot, there's no better way than to take off the wood.

Exeunt [LAMPREY and SPICHCOCK, drawing off LUCRE and HOARD different ways].

FREE. A word, good signior.

MON. How now, what's the news?

FREE. 'T is given me to understand that you are a rival of mine in the love of Mistress Joyce, Master Hoard's niece: say me ay, say me no. 80

MON. Yes, 't is so.

FREE. Then look to yourself: you cannot live long. I'm practising every morning; a month hence I'll challenge you.

MON. Give me your hand upon 't; there's my pledge I'll meet you. Strikes him. Exit.

FREE. Oh, oh! — What reason had you for that, sir, to strike before the month? You knew I was not ready for you, and that made you so crank.<sup>48</sup> I am not such a coward [90 to strike again, I warrant you. My ear has the law of her side, for it burns horribly. I will teach him to strike a naked face, the longest day of his life. 'Slid, it shall cost me some money but I'll bring this box into the chancery. Exit.

[SCENE IV] <sup>49</sup>

Enter WITGOOD and the Host.

HOST. Fear you nothing, sir; I have lodg'd her in a house of credit.<sup>50</sup> I warrant you.

WIT. Hast thou the writings?

HOST. Firm, sir.

WIT. Prithee, stay, and behold the most prodigious rascals that ever shipp'd into the shape of men: Dampit, ~~sirrah~~, and young Gulf, his fellow caterpillar.<sup>51</sup>

HOST. Dampit? Sure I have heard of that Dampit. 10

WIT. Heard of him! Why, man, he that has lost both his ears may hear of him: a famous infamous trampler of time<sup>52</sup> — his own phrase. Note him well: that Dampit, sirrah, he in the uneven beard and the serge cloak, is the most notorious, usuring, blasphemous, atheistical, brothel-vomiting rascal that we have in these latter times now extant; whose first beginning was the stealing of a masty<sup>53</sup> dog from a farmer's house. 20

HOST. He look'd as if he would obey the commandment well, when he began first with stealing.

WIT. True. The next town he came at, he set the dogs together by th' ears.

HOST. A sign he should follow the law, by my faith.

WIT. So it followed, indeed; and being destitute of all fortunes, stak'd his masty against a noble,<sup>54</sup> and by great fortune his dog had [30 the day.<sup>55</sup> How he made it up ten shillings, I know not, but his own boast is that he came to town with but ten shillings in his purse, and now is credibly worth ten thousand pound.

HOST. How the Devil came he by it?

[Enter DAMPIT and GULF.]

WIT. How the Devil came he not by it? If you put in the Devil once, riches come with a vengeance.<sup>56</sup> H'as been a trampler of the law, sir; and the Devil has a care of his footmen. [40 The rogue has spied me now; he nibbled me finely once, too. — A pox<sup>57</sup> search you! — Oh, Master Dampit! — the very loins of thee! — Cry you mercy, Master Gulf; you walk so low, I promise you I saw you not, sir!

GULF. He that walks low walks safe, the poets tell us.

WIT. [aside] And nigher hell by a foot and a half than the rest of his fellows. — But, my old Harry! 50

DAM. My sweet Theodorus!

WIT. 'T was a merry world when thou cam'st to town with ten shillings in thy purse.

DAM. And now worth ten thousand pound, my boy. Report it: Harry Dampit, a trampler of time, say, he would be up in a morning, and be here with his serge gown,

dash'd up to the hams in a cause; have his feet stink about Westminster Hall,<sup>58</sup> and come home again; see the galleons, the galleasses,<sup>59</sup> the great armadas of the law; then there [61 be hoys<sup>60</sup> and petty vessels, oars and scullers<sup>61</sup> of the time; there be picklocks of the time too. Then would I be here; I would trample up and down like a mule: now to the judges, "May it please your reverend-honorable Fatherhoods;" then to my counsellor, "May it please your worshipful Patience;" then to the examiner's office, "May it please your Mastership's gentleness;" then to one of [70 the clerks, "May it please your worshipful Lousiness," — for I find him scrubbing in his codpiece;<sup>62</sup> then to the Hall again, then to the chamber again —

WIT. And when to the cellar again?

DAM. E'en when thou wilt again! Tramp-plers of time, motions of Fleet Street,<sup>63</sup> and visions of Holborn;<sup>64</sup> here I have fees of one, there I have fees of another; my clients come about me, the fooliaminy<sup>65</sup> and coxcomby<sup>66</sup> of the country: I still trash'd<sup>67</sup> and [81 trotted for other men's causes. Thus was poor Harry Dampit made rich by others' laziness, who though they would not follow their own suits, I made 'em follow me with their purses.

WIT. Didst thou so, old Harry?

DAM. Ay, and I sous'd<sup>68</sup> 'em with bills of charges, i' faith; twenty pound a year have I brought in for boat hire, and I ne'er stepp'd into boat in my life. 90

WIT. Trampplers of time!

DAM. Ay, trampplers of time, rascals of time, bull-beggars!<sup>69</sup>

WIT. Ah, thou'rt a mad old Harry! — Kind Master Gulf, I am bold to renew my acquaintance.

GULF. I embrace it, sir. Exeunt.

Enter LUCRE.

LUC. My adversary evermore twits me with my nephew, forsooth, my nephew. Why may not a virtuous uncle have a dissolute nephew? What though he be a brotheller, a wastethrift, a common surfeiter, and, to conclude, a beggar; must sin in him call up shame in me? Since we have no part in their follies, why should we have part in their infamies? For my strict hand toward his mortgage, that I deny not; I confess I had an uncle's pen'- [10 worth;<sup>2</sup> let me see, half in half, true. I saw neither hope of his reclaiming, nor comfort in his being; and was it not then better bestow'd upon his uncle than upon one of his aunts? — I need not say bawd, for everyone knows what "aunt" stands for in the last translation.

[Enter Servant.]

Now, sir?

SER. There's a country servingman, sir, attends to speak with your Worship. 20

LUC. I'm at best leisure now; send him in to me. [Exit Servant.]

Enter Host like a servingman.

HOST. Bless your venerable Worship.

LUC. Welcome, good fellow.

HOST. [aside] He calls me thief<sup>3</sup> at first sight, yet he little thinks I am an host.

LUC. What's thy business with me?

HOST. Faith, sir, I am sent from my mistress, to any sufficient gentleman, indeed, to ask advice upon a doubtful point: 't is [30 indifferent, sir, to whom I come, for I know none, nor did my mistress direct me to any particular man, for she's as mere a stranger here as myself; only I found your Worship within, and 't is a thing I ever lov'd, sir, to be dispatch'd as soon as I can.

LUC. [aside] A good, blunt honesty; I like him well. — What is thy mistress?

HOST. Faith, a country gentlewoman, and a widow, sir. Yesterday was the first flight [40 of us; but now she intends to stay till a little term business<sup>4</sup> be ended.

LUC. Her name, I prithee?

HOST. It runs there in the writings, sir, among her lands: Widow Medler.

<sup>4</sup> Legal business, to be transacted during the court term.

LUC. Medler? Mass, have I ne'er heard of that widow?

HOST. Yes, I warrant you, have you, sir; not the rich widow in Staffordshire?

LUC. Cuds me,<sup>5</sup> there 't is indeed; thou [50 hast put me into memory. There's a widow indeed; ah, that I were a bachelor again!

HOST. No doubt your Worship might do much then; but she's fairly promis'd to a bachelor already.

LUC. Ah, what is he, I prithee?

HOST. A country gentleman too; one of whom your Worship knows not, I'm sure; h'as spent some few follies in his youth, but marriage, by my faith, begins to call him [60 home. My mistress loves him, sir, and love covers faults, you know: one Master Witgood, if ever you have heard of the gentleman.

LUC. Ha? Witgood, say'st thou?

HOST. That's his name indeed, sir; my mistress is like to bring him to a goodly seat yonder; four hundred a year, by my faith.

LUC. But, I pray, take me with you.<sup>6</sup>

HOST. Ay, sir.

LUC. What countryman might this [70 young Witgood be?

HOST. A Leicestershire gentleman, sir.

LUC. [aside] My nephew, by th' mass, my nephew! I'll fetch out more of this, i' faith. A simple country fellow — I'll work 't out of him. — And is that gentleman, say'st thou, presently to marry her?

HOST. Faith, he brought her up to town, sir; h'as the best card in all the bunch for 't, her heart; and I know my mistress will [80 be married ere she go down; ' nay, I'll swear that, for she's none of those widows that will go down first, and be married after; she hates that, I can tell you, sir.

LUC. By my faith, sir, she is like to have a proper<sup>8</sup> gentleman, and a comely; I'll give her that gift.

HOST. Why, does your Worship know him, sir?

LUC. I know him! Does not all the [90 world know him? Can a man of such exquisite qualities be hid under a bushel?

HOST. Then your Worship may save me a labor, for I had charge given me to inquire after him.

LUC. Inquire of him? If I might counsel thee, thou shouldst ne'er trouble thyself further; inquire of him no more but of me; I'll fit thee. I grant he has been youthful; but is he not now reclaim'd? Mark you that, [100 sir; has not your mistress, think you, been wanton in her youth? If men be wags, are there not women wagtails?<sup>9</sup>

HOST. No doubt, sir.

LUC. Does not he return wisest that comes home whipp'd with his own follies?

HOST. Why, very true, sir.

LUC. The worst report you can hear of him, I can tell you, is that he has been a kind gentleman, a liberal, and a worthy; who [110 but lusty Witgood, thrice-noble Witgood!

HOST. Since your Worship has so much knowledge in him, can you resolve<sup>10</sup> me, sir, what his living might be? My duty binds me, sir, to have a care of my mistress' estate; she has been ever a good mistress to me, though I say it. Many wealthy suitors has she nonsuited for his sake; yet, though her love be so fix'd, a man cannot tell whether his non-performance may help to remove it, [120 sir; he makes us believe he has lands and living.

LUC. Who, young Master Witgood? Why, believe it, he has as goodly a fine living out yonder — what do you call the place?

HOST. Nay, I know not, i' faith.

LUC. Hum — see, like a beast, if I have not forgot the name — pooh! and out yonder again, goodly grown woods and fair meadows; pax<sup>11</sup> on 't, I can ne'er hit of that place neither. — He? Why, he's Witgood of Witgood Hall; he an unknown thing! [131

HOST. Is he so, sir? To see how rumor will alter! Trust me, sir, we heard once he had no lands, but all lay mortgag'd to an uncle he has in town here.

LUC. Push!<sup>12</sup> 't is a tale, 't is a tale.

HOST. I can assure you, sir, 't was credibly reported to my mistress.

LUC. Why, do you think, i' faith, he was ever so simple to mortgage his lands to [140 his uncle, or his uncle so unnatural to take the extremity of such a mortgage?

HOST. That was my saying still, sir.

LUC. Pooh, ne'er think it.

HOST. Yet that report goes current.

LUC. Nay, then you urge me: Cannot I tell that best that am his uncle?

HOST. How, sir? what have I done!

<sup>5</sup> An ejaculation of surprise; probably a corruption of "God save me."

<sup>6</sup> Let me understand you, explain yourself.

<sup>12</sup> Pish!

LUC. Why, how now! In a swoon, man?

HOST. Is your Worship his uncle, sir?

LUC. Can that be any harm to you, sir?

HOST. I do beseech you, sir, do me the [150] favor to conceal it. What a beast was I to utter so much! Pray, sir, do me the kindness to keep it in; I shall have my coat pull'd o'er my ears, an't should be known; for the truth is, an't please your Worship, to prevent much rumor and many suitors, they intend to be married very suddenly and privately.

LUC. And dost thou think it stands with my judgment to do them injury? Must I needs say the knowledge of this marriage comes from [160] thee? Am I a fool at fifty-four? Do I lack subtlety now, that have got all my wealth by it? There's a leash of angels<sup>13</sup> for thee: come, let me woo thee speak where lie<sup>14</sup> they?

HOST. So<sup>15</sup> I might have no anger, sir —

LUC. Passion of me, not a jot; prithee, come.

HOST. I would not have it known, [sir,]<sup>16</sup> it came by my means.

LUC. Why, am I a man of wisdom? [170]

HOST. I dare trust your Worship, sir; but I'm a stranger to your house; and to avoid all intelligencers, I desire your Worship's ear.

LUC. [aside] This fellow's worth a matter of trust. — Come, sir. [Host whispers to him.] Why, now, thou'rt an honest lad. — Ah, sirrah nephew!

HOST. Please you, sir, now I have begun with your Worship, when shall I attend for your advice upon that doubtful point? [180] I must come warily now.

LUC. Tut, fear thou nothing; To-morrow's evening shall resolve<sup>17</sup> the doubt.

HOST. The time shall cause my attendance.

Exit.

LUC. Fare thee well. — There's more true honesty in such a country servingman than in a hundred of our clock companions:<sup>18</sup> I may well call 'em companions, for since blue<sup>19</sup> coats have been turn'd into cloaks, we can scarce know the man from the master. — George! [190]

[Enter GEORGE.]

GEO. Anon, sir.

LUC. List hither: [whispers] — keep the place secret; commend me to my nephew; I know no cause, tell him, but he might see his uncle.

GEO. I will, sir.

LUC. And, do you hear, sir?

Take heed you use him with respect and duty.

GEO. [aside] Here's a strange alteration; one day he must be turn'd out like a beg- [200] gar, and now he must be call'd in like a knight.

Exit.

LUC. Ah, sirrah, that rich widow! — four hundred a year! beside, I hear she lays claim to a title of a hundred more. This falls unhappily that he should bear a grudge to me now, being likely to prove so rich. What is't, throw<sup>20</sup> that he makes me a stranger for? Hum — I hope he has not so much wit to apprehend that I cozened him: he deceives me then. Good Heaven, who would have [210] thought it would ever have come to this pass! yet he's a proper gentleman, i' faith, give him his due — marry, that's his mortgage; but that I ne'er mean to give him. I'll make him rich enough in words, if that be good; and if it come to a piece of money, I will not greatly stick for't: there may be hope some of the widow's lands, too, may one day fall upon me, if things be carried wisely.

[Re-enter GEORGE.]

Now, sir, where is he? 220

GEO. He desires your Worship to hold him excus'd; he has such weighty business it commands him wholly from all men.

LUC. Were those my nephew's words?

GEO. Yes, indeed, sir.

LUC. [aside] When men grow rich, they grow proud too, I perceive that. He would not have sent me such an answer once within this twelvemonth; see what 't is when a man comes to his lands! Return to him again, [230] sir; tell him his uncle desires his company for an hour; I'll trouble him but an hour, say; 't is for his own good, tell him; and, do you hear, sir? put "Worship" upon him. Go to, do as I bid you; he's like to be a gentleman of Worship very shortly.

GEO. [aside] This is good sport, i' faith.

Exit.

LUC. Troth, he uses his uncle discourteously now. Can he tell what I may do for him? Goodness may come from me in a minute, [240] that comes not in seven year again. He knows my humor; <sup>21</sup> I am not so usually good; 't is no small thing that draws kindness from me, he

may know that an he will. The chief cause that invites me to do him most good is the sudden astonishing of old Hoard, my adversary. How pale his malice will look at my nephew's advancement! With what a dejected spirit he will behold his fortunes, whom but last day he proclaim'd rioter, [250] penurious makeshift, despised brothel-master! Ha, ha! 't will do me more secret joy than my last purchase, ~~more~~ precious comfort than all these widow's revenues.

[Re-Enter [GEORGE, showing in] WITGOOD.]

Now, sir?

GEO. With much entreaty he's at length come, sir. [Exit.]

LUC. Oh, Nephew, let me salute you, sir! You're welcome, Nephew.

WIT. Uncle, I thank you. 260

LUC. Y'ave a fault, Nephew; you're a stranger here. Well, Heaven give you joy!

WIT. Of what, sir?

LUC. Hah, we can hear! You might have known your uncle's house, i' faith,

You and your widow; go to, you were to blame,

If I may tell you so without offence.

WIT. How could you hear of that, sir?

LUC. Oh, pardon me! It was your will to have [kept it] <sup>25</sup> from me, I perceive now.

WIT. Not for any defect of love, I protest, Uncle. 271

LUC. Oh, 't was unkindness, Nephew! fie, fie, fie.

WIT. I am sorry you take it in that sense, sir.

LUC. Pooh, you cannot color it, i' faith, Nephew.

WIT. Will you but hear what I can say in my just excuse, sir?

LUC. Yes, faith, will I, and welcome. 280

WIT. You that know my danger i' th' city, sir, so well, how great my debts are, and how extreme my creditors, could not out of your pure judgment, sir, have wish'd us hither.

LUC. Mass, a firm reason indeed.

WIT. Else, my uncle's house! why, 't 'ad been the only make-match.

LUC. Nay, and thy credit.

WIT. My credit? Nay, my countenance.<sup>24</sup> Push! nay, I know, Uncle, you would [290] have wrought it so by ~~your~~ wit you would have made her believe in time the whole house had been mine.

LUC. Ay, and most of the goods too.

WIT. La, you there! Well, let 'em all prate what they will, there's nothing like the bringing of a widow to one's uncle's house.

LUC. Nay, let nephews be rul'd as they list, they shall find their uncle's house the most natural place when all's done. 300

WIT. There they may be bold.

LUC. Life, they may do anything there, man, and fear neither beadle nor summ'ner. An uncle's house! a very Cole Harbor.<sup>25</sup> Sirrah, I'll touch thee near now: hast thou so much interest in thy widow that by a token thou couldst presently send for her?

WIT. Troth, I think I can, Uncle.

LUC. Go to, let me see that.

WIT. Pray, command one of your men hither, Uncle. 311

LUC. George!

[Re-Enter GEORGE.]

GEO. Here, sir.

LUC. Attend my nephew. [WITGOOD whispers to GEORGE, who then goes out.] — [aside] I love a' life <sup>26</sup> to prattle with a rich widow; 't is pretty, methinks, when our tongues go together; and then to promise much and perform little. I love that sport a' life, i' faith; yet I am in the mood now to do my nephew some good, if he take me handsomely. — What, have you dispatch'd? 321

WIT. I ha' sent, sir.

LUC. Yet I must condemn you of unkindness, Nephew.

WIT. Heaven forbid, Uncle!

LUC. Yes, faith, must I. Say your debts be many, your creditors importunate, yet the kindness of a thing is all, Nephew; you might have sent me close <sup>27</sup> word on 't, without the least danger or prejudice to your fortunes.

WIT. Troth, I confess it, Uncle; I was [331] to blame there; but, indeed, my intent was to have clapp'd it up suddenly, and so have broke forth like a joy to my friends, and a wonder to the world. Beside, there's a trifle of a forty-pound matter toward the setting of me forth <sup>28</sup>; my friends should ne'er have known on't: I meant to make shift for that myself.

LUC. How, Nephew? let me not hear such a word again, I beseech you. Shall I be beholding<sup>29</sup> to you? 341

WIT. To me? Alas, what do you mean, Uncle?

LUC. I charge you, upon my love, you trouble nobody but myself.

WIT. Y'ave no reason for that. Uncle.

LUC. Troth, I'll ne'er be friends with you while you live, an you do.

WIT. Nay, an you say so, Uncle, here's my hand; I will not do't —

LUC. Why, well said! there's some [351 hope in thee when thou wilt be rul'd. I'll make it up fifty, faith, because I see thee so reclaim'd. Peace; here comes my wife with Sam, her tother husband's son.

[Enter MISTRESS LUCRE and FREEDOM.]

WIT. Good Aunt.

FREE. Cousin Witgood, I rejoice in my salute; you're most welcome to this noble city, govern'd with the sword in the scabbard.

WIT. [aside] And the wit in the pom- [361 mel. — Good Master Sam Freedom, I return the salute.

LUC. By the mass, she's coming; Wife, let me see now how thou wilt entertain<sup>30</sup> her.

MRS. L. I hope I am not to learn, sir, to entertain a widow; 't is not so long ago since I was one myself!

[Enter Courtesan.]

WIT. Uncle —

LUC. She's come indeed! 370

WIT. My Uncle was desirous to see you, widow, and I presum'd to invite you.

COUR. The presumption was nothing, Master Witgood. Is this your uncle, sir?

LUC. Marry am I, sweet widow; and his good uncle he shall find me; ay, by this smack that I give thee, thou'rt welcome. — Wife, bid the widow welcome the same way again.

FREE. [aside] I am a gentleman now too by my father's occupation, and I see no rea- [380 son but I may kiss a widow by my father's copy;<sup>31</sup> truly, I think the charter is not against it; surely these are the words: "The son once a gentleman may revel it, though his father were a dauber;"<sup>32</sup> 't is about the fifteenth page. I'll to her.

[Offers to kiss the Courtesan, who repulses him.]

<sup>31</sup> Certificate of membership in one of the city companies. <sup>32</sup> Plasterer. — For "fifteenth," Qq 15.

LUC. Y'are not very busy now; a word with thee, sweet widow.

FREE. [aside] Coads-nigs!<sup>33</sup> I was never so disgrac'd since the hour my mother whipp'd me. 391

LUC. Beside, I have no child of mine own to care for; she's my second wife, old, past bearing; clap sure to him, widow; he's like to be my heir, I can tell you.

COUR. Is he so, sir?

LUC. He knows it already, and the knave's proud on't; jolly rich widows have been offer'd him here i' th' city, great merchants' wives; and do you think he will once look [400 upon 'em? Forsooth, he'll none. You are beholding to him i' th' country, then, ere we could be. Nay, I'll hold a wager, widow, if he were once known to be in town, he would be presently<sup>34</sup> sought after; nay, and happy were they that could catch him first.

COUR. I think so.

LUC. Oh, there would be such running to and fro, widow! He should not pass the streets for 'em; he'd be took up in one [410 great house or other presently. Fah! they know he has it, and must have it. You see this house here, widow; this house and all comes to him; goodly rooms, ready furnish'd, ceil'd with plaster of Paris, and all hung above<sup>35</sup> with cloth of arras. — Nephew.

WIT. Sir.

LUC. Show the widow your house; carry her into all the rooms, and bid her welcome. — You shall see, widow. — [aside to Witgood] Nephew, strike all sure above an thou [421 beest a good boy, — ah! —

WIT. Alas, sir, I know not how she would take it!

LUC. The right way, I warrant t'e.<sup>36</sup> A pox! art an ass? Would I were in thy stead! Get you up; I am asham'd of you. [Exeunt WITGOOD and Courtesan.] — [aside] So; let 'em agree as they will now; many a match has been struck up in my house a' this [430 fashion: let 'em try all manner of ways, still there's nothing like an uncle's house to strike the stroke in. I'll hold my wife in talk a little. — Now Jinny, your son there goes a-wooing to a poor gentlewoman but of a thousand portion; see my nephew, a lad of less hope, strikes at four hundred a year in good rubbish.

<sup>35</sup> I.e., upstairs. So Q1; Q2, followed by mod. eds., about. Above is required: the stage was certainly not so hung!

Mrs. L. Well, we must do as we may, sir.

LUC. I'll have his money ready told <sup>37</sup> for him again <sup>38</sup> he come down. Let me see, [440 too ; — by th' mass, I must present the widow with some jewel, a good piece a' plate, or such a device ; 't will hearten her on well. I have a very fair standing cup ; and a good high standing cup will please a widow above all other pieces. Exit.

Mrs. L. Do you mock us with your nephew ? — I have a plot in my head, Son ; — i' faith, Husband, to cross you.

FREE. Is it a tragedy plot, or a comedy [450 plot, good mother ?

Mrs. L. 'Tis a plot shall vex him. I charge you, of my blessing, son Sam, that you presently withdraw the action of your love from Master Hoard's niece.

FREE. How, <sup>39</sup> Mother ?

Mrs. L. Nay, I have a plot in my head, i' faith. Here, take this chain of gold, and this fair diamond ; dog me the widow home to her lodging, and at thy best opportunity, fasten [460 'em both upon her. Nay, I have a reach ; <sup>40</sup> I can tell you thou art known what thou art, son, among the right Worshipful, all the twelve companies.

FREE. Truly, I thank 'em for it.

Mrs. L. He ? he's a scab <sup>41</sup> to thee ; and so certify her thou hast two hundred a year of thyself, beside thy good parts — a proper person and a lovely. If I were a widow, I could find in my heart to have thee myself, son ; ay, from 'em all. [471

FREE. Thank you for your good will, Mother, but indeed I had rather have a stranger ; and if I woo her not in that violent fashion that I will make her be glad to take these gifts ere I leave her, let me never be called the heir of your body.

Mrs. L. Nay, I know there's enough in you, son, if you once come to put it forth. 479

FREE. I'll quickly make a bolt or a shaft on 't. <sup>42</sup> Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>43</sup>

Enter [WALKADINE] HOARD and MONEYLOVE.

MON. Faith, Master Hoard, I have bestowed many months in the suit of your niece, such was the dear love I ever bore to her virtues ; but since she hath so extremely denied me, I am to lay out for my fortunes elsewhere.

HOA. Heaven forbid but you should, sir ! I ever told you my niece stood otherwise affected. <sup>44</sup>

MON. I must confess you did, sir ; yet, in regard of my great loss of time, and the [10 zeal with which I sought your niece, shall I desire one favor of your Worship ?

HOA. In regard of those two, 't is hard but you shall, sir.

MON. I shall rest grateful. 'Tis not full three hours, sir, since the happy rumor of a rich country widow came to my hearing.

HOA. How ? a rich country widow ?

MON. Four hundred a year landed.

HOA. Yea ?

MON. Most firm, sir ; and I have learnt her lodging. Here my suit begins, sir ; if I might but entreat your Worship to be a countenance for me, and speak a good word (for your words will pass), I nothing doubt but I might set fair for the widow ; nor shall your labor, sir, end altogether in thanks ; two hundred angels —

HOA. So, so ; what suitors has she ?

MON. There lies the comfort, sir ; the report of her is yet but a whisper ; and only so- [30 licted by young riotous Witgood, nephew to your mortal adversary.

HOA. Ha ! art certain he's her suitor ?

MON. Most certain, sir ; and his uncle very industrious to beguile the widow, and make up the match.

HOA. So ! very good !

MON. Now, sir, you know this young Witgood is a spendthrift, dissolute fellow.

HOA. A very rascal. 40

MON. A midnight surfeiter.

HOA. The spume of a brothel-house.

MON. True, sir ! which being well told in your Worship's phrase, may both heave him out of her mind, and drive a fair way for me to the widow's affections.

HOA. Attend me about five.

MON. With my best care, sir. Exit.

HOA. Fool, thou hast left thy treasure with a thief,

To trust a widower with a suit in love ! [50 Happy revenge, I hug thee ! I have not only the means laid before me, extremely to cross my adversary and confound the last hopes of his nephew, but thereby to enrich my state, augment my revenues, and build mine own fortunes greater ; ha, ha !

I'll mar your phrase, o'erturn your flatteries,
 Undo your windings, policies, and plots,
 Fall like a secret, and dispatchful <sup>46</sup> plague
 On your <sup>47</sup> secured comforts. Why, I am able [60
 To buy three of Lucre; thrice outbid him,
 Let my out-monies <sup>48</sup> be reckon'd and all.

Enter three [of Witgood's] Creditors.

1 CRED. I am glad of this news.

2 CRED. So are we, by my faith.

3 CRED. Young Witgood will be a gallant again now.

HOA. [listening] Peace!

1 CRED. I promise you, Master Cockpit, she's a mighty rich widow.

2 CRED. Why, have you ever heard [70
 of her?

1 CRED. Who? Widow Medler? She lies open <sup>47</sup> to much rumor.

3 CRED. Four hundred a year, they say, in very good land.

1 CRED. Nay, take 't of my word, if you believe that, you believe the least.

2 CRED. And to see how close he keeps it!

1 CRED. Oh, sir, there's policy in that, to prevent better suitors. 80

3 CRED. He owes me a hundred pound, and I protest I ne'er look'd for a penny.

1 CRED. He little dreams of our coming;
 he'll wonder to see his creditors upon him.

Exeunt [Creditors].

HOA. Good, his creditors; I'll follow.

This makes for me.

All know the widow's wealth; and 't is well
 known

I can estate her fairly, ay, and will.

In this one chance shines a twice-happy fate
 I both deject my foe and raise my state.<sup>48</sup>

Exit.

MUSIC

ACT III — [SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] WITGOOD with his Creditors.

WIT. Why, alas, my creditors, could you find no other time to undo me but now?
 Rather your malice appears in this than the justness of the debt.

1 CRED. Master Witgood, I have forborne my money long.

<sup>1</sup> Witgood's lodgings.

WIT. I pray, speak low, sir; what do you mean?

2 CRED. We hear you are to be married suddenly to a rich country widow. 10

WIT. What can be kept so close but you creditors hear on't! Well, 't is a lamentable state, that our chiefest afflictors should first hear of our fortunes. Why, this is no good course, i' faith, sirs; if ever you have hope to be satisfied, why do you seek to confound the means that should work it? There's neither piety, no, nor policy in that. Shine favorably now, why, I may rise and spread again, to your great comforts. 20

1 CRED. He says true, i' faith.

WIT. Remove me now, and I consume for ever.

2 CRED. Sweet gentleman!

WIT. How can it thrive which from the sun you sever?

3 CRED. It cannot, indeed!

WIT. Oh, then, show patience! I shall have enough

To satisfy you all.

1 CRED. Ay, if we could

Be content, a shame take us!

WIT. For, look you;

I am but newly sure <sup>2</sup> yet to the widow,
 And what a rend might this discredit make! [30
 Within these three days will I bind you lands

For your securities.

1 CRED. No, good Master Witgood;
 Would 't were as much as we dare trust you
 with!

WIT. I know you have been kind; however,
 now,

Either by wrong report or false incitement;
 Your gentleness is injured; in such
 A state as this a man cannot want foes.
 If on the sudden he begin to rise,
 No man that lives can count his enemies.
 You had some intelligence, I warrant ye, 40
 From an ill-willer.

2 CRED. Faith, we heard you brought up a rich widow, sir, and were suddenly to marry
 her.

WIT. Ay, why there it was; I knew 't was so; but since you are so well resolv'd <sup>3</sup> of my faith toward you, let me be so much favor'd of you, I beseech you all —

ALL. Oh, it shall not need, i' faith, sir! —

WIT. As to lie still awhile, and bury [50 my debts in silence, till I be fully possess'd of

the widow ; for the truth is — I may tell you as my friends —

ALL. Oh, oh, oh ! —

WIT. I am to raise a little money in the city, toward the setting forth of myself, for my own credit and your comfort. Now, if my former debts should be divulg'd, all hope of my proceedings were quite extinguish'd.

1 CRED. [aside to Witgood] Do you [60 hear, sir? I may deserve your custom hereafter ; pray let my money be accepted before a stranger's. Here's forty pound I receiv'd as I came to you ; if that may stand you in any stead, make use on 't. — Nay, pray, sir ; 't is at your service.

WIT. [aside] You do so ravish me with kindness that I'm constrain'd to play the maid, and take it.<sup>4</sup>

1 CRED. [aside] Let none of them see it, I beseech you.

WIT. [aside] Fah !

1 CRED. [aside] I hope I shall be first in your remembrance 70

After the marriage rites.

WIT. [aside] Believe it firmly.

1 CRED. So. — What, do you walk, sirs?

2 CRED. I go. — [aside to Witgood] Take no care, sir, for money to furnish you ; within this hour I'll send you sufficient. — Come, Master Cockpit, we both stay for you.

3 CRED. I ha' lost a ring, i' faith ; I'll follow you presently ; [Exeunt 1 and 2 Creditors.] — but you shall find it, sir. I know your youth and expenses have disfurnish'd [80 you of all jewels : there's a ruby of twenty pound price, sir ; bestow it upon your widow. — What, man ! 't will call up her blood to you ; beside, if I might so much work with you, I would not have you beholding to those bloodsuckers for any money.

WIT. Not I, believe it.

3 CRED. Th' are a brace of cutthroats !

WIT. I know 'em.

3 CRED. Send a note of all your wants [90 to my shop, and I'll supply you instantly.

WIT. Say you so? Why, here 's my hand, then, no man living shall do 't but thyself.

3 CRED. Shall I carry it away from 'em both, then?

WIT. I' faith, shalt thou !

3 CRED. Troth, then, I thank you, sir.

WIT. Welcome, good Master Cockpit ! Exit [3 Creditor]. — Ha, ha, ha ! why, is not this better now than lying abed? I perceive there's nothing conjures up wit sooner than poverty, and nothing lays it down sooner than wealth and lechery ! This has some savor yet. Oh, that I had the mortgage from mine uncle as sure in possession as these trifles ! I would forswear brothel at noonday, and muscadine<sup>5</sup> and eggs at midnight.

Enter Courtesan.

COUR. Master Witgood, where are you?

WIT. Holla !

COUR. Rich news ! 110

WIT. Would 't were all in plate !

COUR. There's some in chains and jewels. I am so haunted with suitors, Master Witgood, I know not which to dispatch first.

WIT. You have the better term,<sup>7</sup> by my faith.

COUR. Among the number One Master Hoard, an ancient gentleman.

WIT. Upon my life, my uncle's adversary.

COUR. It may well hold so, for he rails on you,

Speaks shamefully of him.

WIT. As I could wish it. [120

COUR. I first denied him, but so cunningly, I rather promis'd him assured hopes Than any loss of labor.

WIT. Excellent !

COUR. I expect him every hour with gentlemen,

With whom he labors to make good his words, To approve<sup>8</sup> you riotous, your state consum'd. Your uncle —

WIT. Wench, make up thy own fortunes now ; do thyself a good turn once in thy days. He's rich in money, (movables,<sup>9</sup> and [130 lands ; marry him — he's an old doting fool, and that's worth all : marry him. 'T would be a great comfort to me to see thee do well, i' faith : marry him. 'T would ease my conscience well to see thee well bestow'd ; I have a care of thee, i' faith.

COUR. Thanks, sweet Master Witgood.

WIT. I reach at farder happiness : first, I am sure it can be no harm to thee, and there may happen goodness to me by it. [140 Prosecute it well ; let's send up for our wits,

<sup>7</sup> It was in term time, i.e., while the courts were sitting, that London was full of visitors, and the prostitutes were most in demand.

now we require their best and most pregnant assistance!

COUR. Step in; I think I hear 'em. [Exeunt.]

Enter HOARD and Gentlemen<sup>10</sup> with the Host [as] servingman.

HOA. Art thou the widow's man? By my faith, sh'as a company of proper men then.

HOST. I am the worst of six, sir; good enough for blue coats.<sup>11</sup>

HOA. Hark hither: I hear say thou art in most credit with her. 150

HOST. Not so, sir.

HOA. Come, come, thou'rt modest. There's a brace of royals;<sup>12</sup> prithee, help me to th' speech of her.

HOST. I'll do what I may, sir, always saving myself harmless.<sup>13</sup>

HOA. Go to; do't, I say; thou shalt hear better from me.

HOST. [aside] Is not this a better place than five mark<sup>14</sup> a year standing wages? Say [160 a man had but three such clients in a day, methinks he might make a poor living on't; beside, I was never brought up with so little honesty to refuse any man's money; never. What gulls<sup>15</sup> there are a' this side the world! Now know I the widow's mind; none but my young master comes in her clutches; ha, ha, ha! Exit.

HOA. Now, my dear gentlemen, stand firmly to me;

You know his follies and my worth.

1 GENT. We do, sir. [170

2 GENT. But, Master Hoard, are you sure he is not i' th' house now?

HOA. Upon my honesty, I chose this time A' purpose, fit; the spendthrift is abroad. Assist me; here she comes. —

[Enter Courtesan.]

Now, my sweet widow.

COUR. Y' are welcome, Master Hoard.

HOA. Dispatch, sweet gentlemen, dispatch. —

I am come, widow, to prove those my words Neither of envy<sup>16</sup> sprung nor of false tongues, But such as their<sup>17</sup> deserts and actions

<sup>17</sup> Witgood's and his uncle's.

Do merit and bring forth; all which these gentlemen, 180

Well known and better reputed, will confess.

COUR. I cannot tell

How my affections may dispose of me;
But surely if they find him so desertless,
They'll have that reason to withdraw themselves.

And therefore, gentlemen, I do entreat you,
As you are fair in reputation

And in appearing form, so shine in truth.

I am a widow, and, alas, you know, 189

Soon overthrown! 'T is a very small thing

That we withstand, our weakness is so great;
Be partial unto neither, but deliver,
Without affection,<sup>18</sup> your opinion.

HOA. And that will drive it home.

COUR. Nay, I beseech your silence, Master Hoard;

You are a party.

HOA. Widow, not a word!

1 GENT. The better first to work you to belief,

Know neither of us owe him flattery,
Nor tother malice; but unbribed censure,<sup>19</sup>
So help us our best fortunes!

COUR. It suffices. [200

1 GENT. That Witgood is a riotous,<sup>20</sup> undone<sup>21</sup> man,

Imperfect both in fame and in estate,
His debts wealthier than he, and executions
In wait for his due body, we'll maintain
With our best credit and our dearest blood.

COUR. Nor land nor living, say you? Pray, take heed

You do not wrong the gentleman!

1 GENT. What we speak
Our lives and means are ready to make good.

COUR. Alas, how soon are we poor souls beguil'd!

2 GENT. And for his uncle —

HOA. Let that come to me. [210
His uncle, a severe extortioner;
A tyrant at a forfeiture; greedy of others'
Miseries; one that would undo his brother,
Nay, swallow up his father, if he can,
Within the fathoms of his conscience.

1 GENT. Nay, believe it, widow,
You had not only match'd yourself to wants,
But in an evil and unnatural stock.

HOA. [aside] Follow hard, gentlemen, follow hard!

<sup>21</sup> Ruined.

COUR. Is my love so deceiv'd? Before you all 220
I do renounce him; on my knees I vow
He ne'er shall marry me.

WIT. [peeping in] Heaven knows he never meant it!

HOA. [aside to Gentleman] There take her at the bound.

1 GENT. Then, with a new and pure affection,

Behold yon gentleman; grave, kind, and rich,
A match worthy yourself; esteeming him,
You do regard your state.

HOA. [aside] I'll make her a jointure,
say.

1 GENT. He can join land to land, and will possess you
Of what you can desire.

2 GENT. Come, widow, come. [230]

COUR. The world is so deceitful!

1 GENT. There, 't is deceitful,
Where flattery, want, and imperfection lies;
But none of these in him; push!

COUR. Pray, sir —

1 GENT. Come, you widows are ever most backward when you should do yourselves most good; but were it to marry a chin not worth a hair now,<sup>22</sup> then you would be forward enough! Come, clap hands, a match.

HOA. With all my heart, widow. [HOARD and Courtesan take hands.] — Thanks,
gentlemen;

I will deserve your labor, and [to Courtesan]
thy love. 240

COUR. Alas, you love not widows but for wealth!

I promise you I ha' nothing, sir.

HOA. Well said, widow,
Well said; thy love is all I seek, before
These gentlemen.

COUR. Now I must hope the best.

HOA. My joys are such they want to be express'd.

COUR. But, Master Hoard, one thing I must remember you of, before these gentlemen, your friends: how shall I suddenly avoid the loathed soliciting of that perjurd Wit-good, and his tedious, dissembling uncle? [250 who this very day hath appointed a meeting for the same purpose too; where, had not truth come forth, I had been undone, utterly undone.

HOA. What think you of that, gentlemen?

1 GENT. 'T was well devised.

<sup>22</sup> I.e., an impecunious youngster.

HOA. Hark thee, widow: train<sup>23</sup> out young Witgood single; <sup>24</sup> hasten him thither with thee, somewhat before the hour; where, at the place appointed, these gentlemen and [260 myself will wait the opportunity, when, by some sleight<sup>25</sup> removing him from thee, we'll suddenly enter and surprise thee, carry thee away by boat to Cole Harbor, have a priest ready, and there clap it up instantly. How lik'st it, widow?

COUR. In that it pleaseth you, it likes<sup>26</sup> me well.

HOA. I'll kiss thee for those words. —
Come, gentlemen;

Still must I live a suitor to your favors,
Still to your aid beholding.

1 GENT. We're engag'd, sir; [270
'T is for our credits now to see 't well ended.

HOA. 'T is for your honors, gentlemen;
nay, look to 't. —

Not only in joy, but I in wealth excel. —
No more sweet widow, but sweet wife, fare-
well.

COUR. Farewell, sir.

Exeunt [HOARD and Gentlemen].

Re-enter WITGOOD.

WIT. Oh, for more scope! I could laugh eternally! Give you joy, Mistress Hoard;
I promise your fortune was good, forsooth;
y'ave fell upon wealth enough, and there's young gentlemen enow<sup>27</sup> can help you to [280 the rest. Now it requires our wits; carry thyself but heedfully now, and we are both —

[Re-enter Host.]

HOST. Master Witgood, your uncle.

WIT. Cuds me! remove thyself awhile;
I'll serve for him!

[Exeunt Courtesan and Host.]

Enter LUCRE.

LUC. Nephew, good morrow, Nephew.

WIT. The same to you, kind Uncle.

LUC. How fares the widow? Does the meeting hold?

WIT. Oh, no question of that, sir.

LUC. I'll strike the stroke, then, for thee;
no more days.<sup>28</sup> 290

WIT. The sooner the better, Uncle. Oh, she's mightily follow'd!

LUC. And yet so little rumor'd!

WIT. Mightily ! Here comes one old gentleman, and he'll make her a jointure of three hundred a year, forsooth ; another wealthy suitor will estate his son in his lifetime, and make him weigh down the widow ; here a merchant's son will possess her with no less than three goodly lordships at once, [300 which were all pawns to his father.

LUC. Peace, Nephew, let me hear no more of 'em ; it mads me. Thou shalt prevent <sup>29</sup> 'em all. No words to the widow of my coming hither. Let me see — 't is now upon nine ; before twelve, Nephew, we will have the bargain struck, we will, faith, boy.

WIT. Oh, my precious Uncle ! [Exeunt.]

[SCENE II] <sup>30</sup>

Enter [WALKADINE] HOARD and [JOYCE,] his Niece.

HOA. Niece, sweet Niece, prithee, have a care to my house : I leave all to thy discretion. Be content to dream awhile ; I'll have a husband for thee shortly : put that care upon me, wench ; for in choosing wives and husbands I am only fortunate ; I have that gift given me. [Exit.]

JOY. But 't is not likely you should choose for me,

Since nephew to your chiefest enemy
Is he whom I affect ; <sup>31</sup> but, oh, forgetful ! 10
Why dost thou flatter thy affections so,
With name of him that for a widow's bed
Neglects thy purer love ? Can it be so,
Or does report dissemble ?

[Enter GEORGE.]

How, now, sir ?

GEO. A letter, with which came a private charge.

JOY. Therein I thank your care.

[Exit GEORGE.]

— I know this hand —

(Reads.) " Dearer than sight, what the world reports of me, yet believe not ; rumor will alter shortly. Be thou constant ; I am still the same that I was in love, and I hope to be [20 the same in fortunes.

THEODORUS WITGOOD."

I am resolv'd ; <sup>32</sup> no more shall fear or doubt
Raise their pale powers to keep affection out.

[Exit.]

<sup>32</sup> Convinced.

[SCENE III] <sup>33</sup>

Enter, with a Drawer, [WALKADINE] HOARD and two Gentlemen.<sup>34</sup>

DRA. You're very welcome, gentlemen. — Dick, show those gentlemen the Pomegranate,<sup>35</sup> there.

HOA. Hist !

DRA. Up those stairs, gentlemen.

HOA. Pist ! <sup>36</sup> drawer —

DRA. Anon, sir !

HOA. Prithee, ask at the bar if a gentleman came not in lately.

DRA. William, at the bar, did you see [10 any gentleman come in lately ? Speak you ay, speak you no !

Within. No ; none came in yet, but Mistress Florence.

DRA. He says none came in yet, sir, but one Mistress Florence.

HOA. What is that Florence ? a widow ?

DRA. Yes, a Dutch widow.

HOA. How ?

DRA. That's an English drab, sir ; give [20 your Worship good morrow. [Exit.]

HOA. A merry knave, i' faith ! I shall remember a Dutch widow the longest day of my life.

1 GENT. Did not I use most art to win the widow ?

2 GENT. You shall pardon me for that, sir ; Master Hoard knows I took her at best vantage.

HOA. What's that, <sup>37</sup> sweet gentlemen, [30 what's that ?

2 GENT. He will needs bear me down, that his art only wrought with the widow most.

HOA. Oh, you did both well, gentlemen, you did both well, I thank you.

1 GENT. I was the first that mov'd her.

HOA. You were, i' faith.

2 GENT. But it was I that took her at the bound.

HOA. Ay, that was you ; faith, gentlemen, 't is right.

3 GENT. I boasted least, but 't was I join'd their hands.

<sup>34</sup> Probably, as Dyce notes, Lamprey and Spichcock should be assigned some, at least, of the speeches here. Note assignment of speech, l. 39. The two of the entrance direction indicates reduction of personnel in the interest of economy.

<sup>35</sup> Tavern rooms were named instead of numbered.

<sup>37</sup> I.e., the best vantage (though this meaning may not be intended by Hoard).

HOA. By th' mass, I think he did ; you did all well, 40
Gentlemen, you did all well ; contend no more.
1 GENT. Come, yon room 's fittest.

HOA. True, 't is next the door !
Ex[eun]t.

Enter WITGOOD, Courtesan, [Drawer,] and Host.

DRA. You 're very welcome ; please you to walk upstairs, cloth 's laid, sir.

COUR. Upstairs? Troth, I am <sup>38</sup> weary, Master Witgood.

WIT. Rest yourself here awhile, widow ;
we 'll have a cup of muscadine in this little
room.

DRA. A cup of muscadine? You shall [50 have the best, sir.

WIT. But, do you hear, sirrah?

DRA. Do you call? Anon, sir.

WIT. What is there provided for dinner?

DRA. I cannot readily tell you, sir ; if you please you may go into the kitchen and see yourself, sir ; many gentlemen of Worship do use to do it, I assure you, sir ! [Exit.]

HOST. A pretty familiar, priggish [g] <sup>39</sup> rascal ;
he has his part without book ! <sup>40</sup> 60

WIT. Against <sup>41</sup> you are ready to drink to me, widow, I 'll be present to pledge you.

COUR. Nay, I commend your care ; 't is done well of you ! [Exit WITGOOD.] — ['Las,] <sup>42</sup> what have I forgot !

HOST. What, mistress?

COUR. I slipp'd my wedding ring off when I wash'd, and left it at my lodging. Prithce, run ; I shall be sad without it. [Exit Host.] —
So, he 's gone. — Boy ! 70

[Enter Boy.]

BOY. Anon, forsooth.

COUR. Come hither, sirrah : learn secretly if one Master Hoard, an ancient gentleman, be about house.

BOY. I heard such a one nam'd.

COUR. Commend me to him.

Re-enter HOARD with Gentlemen.

HOA. [Ay, boy,] <sup>43</sup> do thy commendations !

COUR. Oh, you come well ; away, to boat,
begone !

HOA. Thus wise men are reveng'd ; give two for one. Exeunt.

<sup>42</sup> Old eds. asee, but in Q, it is evident that a type has dropped out. Q, preserves the space.

<sup>43</sup> Cor. Dyce ; old eds. I bee.

Re-enter WITGOOD and Vintner.

WIT. I must request 80
You, sir, to show extraordinary care :
My uncle comes with gentlemen, his friends,
And 't is upon a making ! <sup>44</sup>

VIN. Is it so?
I 'll give a special charge, good Master Wit-
good.

May I be bold to see her?

WIT. Who? [t]he widow?
With all my heart, i' faith, I 'll bring you to
her !

VIN. If she be a Staffordshire gentlewoman,
't is much

If I know her not —

WIT. How now? Boy ! drawer !

VIN. Hie !

[Re-enter Boy.]

BOY. Do you call, sir?

WIT. Went the gentlewoman up that was here?

BOY. Up, sir? She went out, sir.

WIT. Out, sir !

BOY. Out, sir : [90

One Master Hoard, with a guard of gentlemen, Carried her out at back door, a pretty while since, sir.

WIT. Hoard ! Death and darkness !
Hoard !

Re-enter Host.

HOST. The devil of ring I can find !

WIT. How now? What news?
Where 's the widow?

HOST. My mistress? Is she not here, sir?

WIT. More madness yet !

HOST. She sent me for a ring.

WIT. A plot, a plot ! — To boat ! she 's stole away.

HOST. What?

Enter LUCRE with Gentlemen.

WIT. Follow ! Inquire old Hoard, my uncle's adversary. [Exit Host.]

LUC. Nephew, what 's that?

WIT. Thrice-miserable wretch !

LUC. Why, what 's the matter?

VIN. The widow 's borne away, sir.

LUC. Ha? passion of me ! — A heavy welcome, gentlemen. 101

1 GENT. The widow gone?

LUC. Who durst attempt it?

<sup>44</sup> Matchmaking.

WIT. Who but old Hoard, my uncle's adversary?

LUC. How?

WIT. With his confederates.

LUC. Hoard,

My deadly enemy? — Gentlemen, stand to me;

I will not bear it; 't is in hate of me;

That villain seeks my shame, nay, [thirsts] <sup>45</sup> my blood;

He owes me mortal malice.

I'll spend my wealth on this despiteful plot,

Ere he shall cross me and my nephew thus.

WIT. So maliciously!

Re-enter Host.

LUC. How now, you treacherous rascal? 111

HOST. That's none of my name, sir.

WIT. Poor soul, he knew not on 't!

LUC. I'm sorry. — I see then 't was a mere plot.

HOST. I trac'd 'em nearly —

LUC. Well?

HOST. And hear for certain They have took Cole Harbor.

LUC. The Devil's sanctuary! They shall not rest; I'll pluck her from his arms —

Kind and dear gentlemen,

If ever I had seat within your breasts —

1 GENT. No more, good sir; it is a wrong to us

To see you injur'd; in a cause so just 120 We'll spend our lives but we will right our friends.

LUC. Honest and kind! come, we have delay'd too long;

Nephew, take comfort; a just cause is strong.

Exeunt [all but WITGOOD].

WIT. That's all my comfort, Uncle. Ha, ha, ha!

Now may events fall luckily and well; He that ne'er strives, says wit, shall ne'er excel.

[Exit.]

[SCENE IV] <sup>46</sup>

Enter DAMPIT, the usurer, drunk.

DAM. When did I say my prayers? In anno '88, when the great Armado was coming; and in anno '99, <sup>47</sup> when the great thunder and lightning was: I pray'd heartily then, i' faith, to overthrow Poovies' <sup>48</sup> new buildings; I kneeled by my great iron chest, I remember.

<sup>48</sup> Probably not, as mod. eds. suggest, an error for '89 (when there was a terrific thunderstorm); the point is the long lapse of time.

[Enter AUDREY.]

AUD. Master Dampit, one may hear you before they see you; you keep sweet hours, Master Dampit; we were all abed three hours ago.

DAM. Audrey — 10

AUD. O, y' are a fine gentleman!

DAM. So I am i' faith, and a fine scholar.

Do you use to go to bed so early, Audrey?

AUD. Call you this early, Master Dampit?

DAM. Why, is't not one of clock i' th' morning? Is not that early enough? Fetch me a glass of fresh beer.

AUD. Here, I have warm'd your nightcap for you, Master Dampit.

DAM. Draw it on then. I am very [20 weak, truly; I have not eaten so much as the bulk of an egg these three days.

AUD. You have drunk the more, Master Dampit.

DAM. What's that?

AUD. You mought, <sup>49</sup> an you would, Master Dampit.

DAM. I answer you, I cannot. Hold your prating; you prate too much, and understand too little. Are you answered? Give me a [30 glass of beer.

AUD. May I ask you how you do, Master Dampit?

DAM. How do I? I' faith, naught.

AUD. I ne'er knew you do otherwise.

DAM. I ate not one penn'ort' of bread these two years. Give me a glass of fresh beer. I am not sick, nor I am not well.

AUD. Take this warm napkin about your neck, sir, whilst I help to make you un- [40 ready. <sup>50</sup>

DAM. How now, Audrey-prater, with your scurvy devices, what say you now?

AUD. What say I, Master Dampit? I say nothing, but that you are very weak.

DAM. Faith, thou hast more cony-catching <sup>51</sup> devices than all London!

AUD. Why, Master Dampit, I never deceiv'd you in all my life.

DAM. Why was that? Because I never [50 did trust thee.

AUD. I care not what you say, Master Dampit!

<sup>52</sup> Cheating.

DAM. Hold thy prating; I answer thee, thou art a beggar, a quean,<sup>52</sup> and a bawd : are you answer'd?

AUD. Fie, Master Dampit! a gentleman, and have such words?

DAM. Why, thou base drudge of infortunity,<sup>53</sup> thou kitchen-stuff drab of beggary, roguery, and coxcombry, thou caver-ned quean of foolery,<sup>54</sup> knavery, and bawd-reaminy,<sup>55</sup> I'll tell thee what, I will not give a louse for thy fortunes.

AUD. No, Master Dampit? and there's a gentleman comes a-wooing to me, and he doubts<sup>56</sup> nothing but that you will get me from him.

DAM. I? If I would either have thee or lie with thee for two thousand pound, would [70 I might be damn'd! Why, thou base, impudent quean of foolery, flattery, and coxcombry, are you answer'd?

AUD. Come, will you rise and go to bed, sir?

DAM. Rise, and go to bed too, Audrey? How does Mistress Proserpine?

AUD. Fooh!

DAM. She's as fine a philosopher of a stinkard's wife, as any within the liberties.<sup>57</sup> Fah, fah, Audrey! 80

AUD. How now, Master Dampit?

DAM. Fie upon't, what a choice of stinks here is! What hast thou done, Audrey? Fie upon't, here's a choice of stinks indeed! Give me a glass of fresh beer, and then I will to bed.

AUD. It waits for you above, sir.

DAM. Foh! I think they burn horns in Barnard's Inn.<sup>58</sup> If ever I smelt such an abominable stink, usury forsake me, [Exit.]

AUD. They be the stinking nails of his [90 trampling feet, and he talks of burning of horns. Exit.]

ACT IV — [SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter, at Cole Harbor, [WALKADINE] HOARD, [Courtesan as] the Widow, [LAMPREY, SPICK- COCK,] and Gentlemen; he married now.

1 GENT. Join hearts, join hands,
In wedlock's bands,

<sup>1</sup> A room in Cold Harbor. See on II, i, 304. Cf. on III, iii, entrance direction.

Never to part

Till death cleave your heart.

You shall forsake all other women;

You, lords, knights, gentlemen, and yeomen.

What my tongue slips

Make up with your lips.

HOA. Give you joy, Mistress Hoard; let the kiss come about.<sup>2</sup>

Who knocks? Convey my little pig-eater<sup>3</sup> out. 10

LUC. [within] Hoard!

HOA. Upon my life, my adversary, gentlemen!

LUC. [within] Hoard, open the door, or we will force it ope;

Give us the widow.

HOA. Gentlemen, keep 'em out.

LAM. He comes upon his death that enters here.

LUC. [within] My friends assist me.

HOA. He has assistants, gentlemen.

LAM. Tut, nor him nor them we in this action fear.

LUC. [within] Shall I, in peace, speak one word with the widow?

COUR. Husband, and gentlemen, hear me but a word.

HOA. Freely, sweet wife.

COUR. Let him in peaceably; [20 You know we're sure from any act of his.

HOA. Most true.

[COUR.]<sup>4</sup> You may stand by and smile at his old weakness;

Let me alone<sup>5</sup> to answer him.

HOA. Content;

'T will be good mirth, i' faith. How think you, gentlemen?

LAM. Good gullery!<sup>6</sup>

HOA. Upon calm conditions let him in.

LUC. [within] All spite and malice —

LAM. Hear me, Master Lucre:

So<sup>7</sup> you will vow a peaceful entrance<sup>8</sup>

With those your friends, and only exercise

Calm conference with the widow, without fury, 30

The passage shall receive you.

Enter LUCRE, [Gentlemen, and Host.]

LUC. I do vow it.

LAM. Then enter and talk freely; here she stands.

<sup>3</sup> A term of endearment.

<sup>5</sup> Leave it to me.

<sup>7</sup> Provided that.

LUC. Oh, Master Hoard, your spite has watch'd the hour!

You're excellent at vengeance, Master Hoard.

HOA. Ha, ha, ha!

LUC. I am the fool you laugh at;
You are wise, sir, and know the seasons well. —

[LUCRE takes Courtesan aside.]

Come hither, widow; why! is it thus?

Oh, you have done me infinite disgrace,

And your own credit no small injury!

Suffer mine enemy so despitely 40

To bear you from my nephew? Oh, I had

Rather half my substance had been forfeit

And begg'd by some starv'd rascal!

COUR. Why, what would you wish me do,
sir?

I must not overthrow my state for love;

We have too many precedents for that;

From thousands of our wealthy undone widows
One may derive some wit. I do confess

I lov'd your nephew; nay, I did affect him

Against the mind and liking of my friend[s];<sup>9</sup>

Believ'd his promises; lay here in hope 51

Of flatter'd living, and the boast of lands.

Coming to touch his wealth and state indeed,

It appears dross; I find him not the man;

Imperfect, mean, scarce furnish'd of his needs;

In words, fair lordships; in performance,
hovels.

Can any woman love the thing that is not?

LUC. Broke you for this?

COUR. Was it not cause too much?

Send to inquire his state: most part of it Lay two years mortgag'd in his uncle's hands.

LUC. Why, say it did; you might have known my mind; 61

I could have soon restor'd it.

COUR. Ay, had I but seen any such thing
perform'd,

Why, 't would have tied my affection, and contain'd

Me in my first desires. Do you think, i' faith,

That I could twine such a dry oak as this,

Had promise in your nephew took effect?

LUC. Why, and there's no time past; and rather than

My adversary should thus thwart my hopes,
I would — 70

COUR. Tut, y'ave been ever full of golden speech;

If words were lands, your nephew would be rich.

<sup>9</sup> Add. Q.

LUC. Widow, believe it, I vow by my best
bliss,

Before these gentlemen, I will give in
The mortgage to my nephew instantly,
Before I sleep or eat.

1 GENT. [of Lucre's party] We'll pawn
our credits,

Widow, what he speaks shall be perform'd
In fullness.

LUC. Nay, more: I will estate him
In farther blessings; he shall be my heir; —
I have no son — 80
I'll bind myself to that condition.

COUR. When I shall hear this done, I shall soon yield
To reasonable terms.

LUC. In the mean season,
Will you protest, before these gentlemen,
To keep yourself as you are now at this present?

COUR. I do protest, before these gentlemen,
I will be as clear then as I am now.

LUC. I do believe you. Here's your own honest servant;
I'll take him along with me.

COUR. Ay, with all my heart.

LUC. He shall see all perform'd, and bring you word. 90

COUR. That's all I wait for.

[LUCRE and Courtesan rejoin the rest.]

HOA. What, have you finish'd, Master Lucre?

Ha, ha, ha, ha!

LUC. So laugh, Hoard, laugh at your poor enemy, do;

The wind may turn, you may be laugh'd at
too;

Yes, marry, may you, sir. — Ha, ha, ha!

Exeunt [LUCRE, his party, and Host].

HOA. Ha, ha, ha! if every man that swells in malice

Could be reveng'd as happily as I,
He would choose hate, and forswear amity. —
What did he say, Wife, pritheeth?

COUR. Faith, spoke to ease his mind.

HOA. Oh, oh, oh! [100

COUR. You know now, little to any purpose.

HOA. True, true, true!

COUR. He would do mountains now.

HOA. Ay, ay, ay, ay.

LAM. Y'ave struck him dead, Master
Hoard.

SPI. Ay, and his nephew desperate.

HOA. I know't, sirs, ay;
Never did man so crush his enemy! Exeunt

[SCENE II] <sup>10</sup>

Enter LUCRE with Gentlemen [and Host,] meeting SAM FREEDOM.

LUC. My son-in-law, Sam Freedom!
Where's my nephew?

FREE. O man in lamentation,<sup>11</sup> Father!

LUC. How!

FREE. He thumps his breast like a gallant dicer that has lost his doublet, and stands in 's shirt to do penance.

LUC. Alas, poor gentleman!

FREE. I warrant you may hear him sigh in a still evening to your house at Highgate.

LUC. I prithee send him in.

FREE. Were it to do a greater matter, I [10] will not stick with<sup>12</sup> you, sir, in regard you married my mother. [Exit.]

LUC. Sweet gentlemen, cheer him up; I will but fetch the mortgage and return to you instantly. Exit.

1 GENT. We'll do our best, sir. — See where he comes,
E'en joyless and regardless of all form.

[Enter WITGOOD.]

2 GENT. Why, how [now,]<sup>13</sup> Master Witgood? Fie! you a firm scholar, and an understanding gentleman, and give your [20] best parts to passion?<sup>14</sup>

1 GENT. Come, fie!

WIT. Oh, gentlemen! —

1 GENT. Sorrow of me, what a sigh was there, sir! Nine such widows are not worth it.

WIT. To be borne from me by that lecher, Hoard!

1 GENT. That vengeance is your uncle's; being done
More in despite to him than wrong to you: [29] But we bring comfort now.

WIT. I beseech you, gentlemen —

2 GENT. Cheer thyself, man; there's hope of her, i' faith!

WIT. Too gladsome to be true.

Re-enter LUCRE.

LUC. Nephew, what cheer?
Alas, poor gentleman, how art thou chang'd!
Call thy fresh blood into thy cheeks again:
She comes —

<sup>13</sup> Add. Q a.

WIT. Nothing afflicts me so much,
But that it is your adversary, Uncle,
And merely<sup>15</sup> plotted in despite of you.

LUC. Ay, that's it mads me, spites me!
I'll spend my wealth ere he shall carry her so, because I know 't is only to spite me. Ay, [40] this is it. — Here, Nephew [giving a paper], before these kind gentlemen, I deliver in your mortgage, my promise to the widow; see, 't is done. Be wise; you're once more master of your own. The widow shall perceive now you are not altogether such a beggar as the world reputes you; you can make shift to bring her to three hundred a year, sir.

1 GENT. Berlady, and that's no toy,<sup>16</sup> sir. 50

LUC. A word, Nephew.

1 GENT. [to Host] Now you may certify the widow.

LUC. [drawing WITGOOD aside] You must conceive it aright, Nephew, now;
To do you good I am content to do this.

WIT. I know it, sir.

LUC. But your own conscience can tell I had it
Dearly enough of you.

WIT. Ay, that's most certain.

LUC. Much money laid out, beside many a journey
To fetch the rent; I hope you'll think on't, Nephew.

WIT. I were worse than a beast else, i' faith.

LUC. Although to blind the widow and the world 61
I out of policy do't, yet there's a conscience, Nephew.

WIT. Heaven forbid else!

LUC. When you are full possess'd,
'T is nothing to return it.

WIT. Alas, a thing quickly done, Uncle!

LUC. Well said! you know I give it you but in trust.

WIT. Pray, let me understand you rightly, Uncle:
You give it me — but in trust?

LUC. No.

WIT. That is, you trust me with it? 70

LUC. True, true.

WIT. [aside] But if ever I trust you with it again, would I might be truss'd up<sup>17</sup> for my labor!

LUC. You can all witness, gentlemen; and you, sir yeoman?

<sup>16</sup> Trifle.

HOST. My life for yours, sir, now, I know my mistress's mind [so]<sup>18</sup> well toward your nephew ; let things be in preparation ; and I'll train<sup>19</sup> her hither in most excellent fashion.

Exit.

LUC. A good old boy ! — Wife ! Jinny ! [81

Enter Wife.

MRS. L. What's the news, sir?

LUC. The wedding day's at hand ; prithee, sweet wife, express thy housewifery. Thou'rt a fine cook, I know't ; thy first husband married thee out of an alderman's kitchen ; go to, he rais'd thee for raising of paste. What ! here's none but friends ; most of our beginnings must be wink'd at. — Gentlemen, I invite you all to my nephew's wedding against Thursday morning. 91

1 GENT. With all our hearts, and we shall joy to see

Your enemy so mock'd.

LUC. He laugh'd at me, gentlemen ; ha, ha, ha ! Exeunt, all but Witgood.

WIT. He has no conscience, faith, would laugh at them : they laugh at one another ! Who then can be so cruel ? Troth, not I ; I rather pity now, than aught envy.<sup>20</sup> 99 I do conceive such joy in mine own happiness, I have no leisure yet to laugh at their follies. [To the mortgage] Thou soul of my estate, I kiss thee !

I miss life's comfort when I miss thee.

O, never will we part again,
Until I leave the sight of men !

We'll ne'er trust conscience of our kin,
Since cozenage brings that title in. [Exit.]

[SCENE III] <sup>21</sup>

Enter three Creditors.

1 CRED. I'll wait these seven hours but I'll see him caught.

2 CRED. Faith, so will I.

3 CRED. Hang him, prodigal ! He's stripp'd of the widow.

1 CRED. A' my troth, she's the wiser ; she has made the happier choice ; and I wonder of what stuff those widows' hearts are made of, that will marry unfledg'd boys before comely thrum<sup>22</sup>-chinn'd gentlemen. 10

<sup>22</sup> Tufted ; the thrum was the waste end of the warp.

Enter a Boy.

BOY. News, news, news !

1 CRED. What, boy?

BOY. The rioter is caught.

1 CRED. So, so, so, so ! it warms me at the heart ; I love a' life<sup>23</sup> to see dogs upon men. Oh, here he comes.

Enter Witgood, with Sergeants.

WIT. My last joy was so great it took away the sense of all future afflictions. What a day is here o'ercast ! How soon a black tempest rises ! 20

1 CRED. Oh, we may speak with you now, sir ! What's become of your rich widow ? I think you may cast your cap at the widow, may you not, sir ?

2 CRED. He a rich widow ? Who, a prodigal, a daily rioter, and a nightly vomiter ? He, a widow of account ? He, a hole<sup>24</sup> i' th' Counter.<sup>25</sup>

WIT. You do well, my masters, to tyrannize over misery, to afflict the afflicted ; 't is a [30 custom you have here amongst you ; I would wish you never leave it, and I hope you'll do as I bid you.

1 CRED. Come, come, sir ; what say you extempore now to your bill of a hundred pound ? A sweet debt for frotting<sup>26</sup> your doublets ?

2 CRED. Here's mine of forty.

3 CRED. Here's mine of fifty.

WIT. Pray, sirs, — you'll give me [40 breath ?

1 CRED. No, sir, we'll keep you out of breath still ; then we shall be sure you will not run away from us.

WIT. Will you but hear me speak ?

2 CRED. You shall pardon us for that, sir ; we know you have too fair a tongue of your own : you overcame us too lately, a shame take you ! We are like to lose all that for want of witnesses ; we dealt in policy [50 then : always when we strive to be most politic we prove most coxcombs ; non plus ultra I perceive by us : we're not ordain'd to thrive by wisdom, and therefore we must be content to be tradesmen.

WIT. Give me but reasonable time, and I protest I'll make you ample satisfaction.

1 CRED. Do you talk of reasonable time to us ?

WIT. 'T is true, beasts know no reason- [60 able time.

2 CRED. We must have either money or carcass.

WIT. Alas, what good will my carcass do
you?

3 CRED. Oh, 't is a secret delight we have amongst us! We that are us'd to keep birds in cages, have the heart to keep men in prison,
I warrant you.

WIT. [aside] I perceive I must crave a [70 little more aid from my wits. — Do but make shift for me this once, and I'll forswear ever to trouble you in the like fashion hereafter;
I'll have better employment for you, an I live.
— You'll give me leave, my masters, to make trial of my friends, and raise all means I can?

1 CRED. That's our desires, sir.

Enter Host.

HOST. Master Witgood.

WIT. Oh, art thou come?

HOST. May I speak one word with you [80
in private, sir?

WIT. No, by my faith, canst thou; I am in hell here, and the devils will not let me come
to thee.

CITIZENS.<sup>27</sup> Do you call us devils? You shall find us Puritans. — Bear him away; let 'em talk as they go; we'll not stand to hear
'em. — Ah, sir, am I a devil? I shall think the better of myself as long as I live — a devil, i' faith!

Exeunt. [90

[SCENE IV]<sup>28</sup>

Enter [WALKADINE] HOARD.

HOA. What a sweet blessing hast thou, Master Hoard, above a multitude! Wilt thou never be thankful? How dost thou think to be blest another time? Or dost thou count this the full measure of thy happiness? By my troth, I think thou dost: not only a wife large in possessions, but spacious in content:
she's rich, she's young, she's fair, she's wise.
When I wake, I think of her lands — that revives me; when I go to bed, I dream of [10 her beauty — and that's enough for me; she's worth four hundred a year in her very smock, if a man knew how to use it. But the journey will be all, in troth, into the country; to ride to her lands in state and order following; my brother, and other worshipful gentlemen, whose companies I ha' sent down for already,

to ride along with us in their goodly decorum beards, their broad velvet cassocks, and chains of gold twice or thrice double; against<sup>29</sup> [20 which time I'll entertain some ten men of mine own into liveries, all of occupations or qualities: I will not keep an idle man about me; the sight of which will so vex my adversary Lucre — for we'll pass by his door of purpose, make a little stand for [the] nonce,<sup>30</sup> and have our horses curvet before the window — certainly he will never endure it, but run up and hang himself presently!

[Enter Servant.]

How now, sirrah, what news? Any that [30 offer their service to me yet?

SER. Yes, sir, there are some i' th' hall that wait for your Worship's liking, and desire to be entertain'd.

HOA. Are they of occupation?

SER. They are men fit for your Worship,
sir.

HOA. Say'st so? Send 'em all in! [Exit Servant.] — To see ten men ride after me in watchet<sup>31</sup> liveries, with orange-tawny [40 capes, — 't will cut his comb, i' faith.

Enter All [: Tailor, Barber, Perfumer, Falconer, and Huntsman].

How now? Of what occupation are you, sir?

TAI. A tailor, an't please your Worship.

HOA. A tailor? Oh, very good; you shall serve to make all the liveries. — What are you,
sir?

BAR. A barber, sir.

HOA. A barber? very needful; you shall shave all the house, and, if need require, stand for a reaper i' th' summer time. — You, [50
sir?

PER. A perfumer.

HOA. I smelt you before. Perfumers, of all men, had need carry themselves uprightly; for if they were once knaves, they would be smelt out quickly. — To you, sir?

FAL. A fale'ner, an't please your Worship.

HOA. Sa ho, sa ho, sa ho! — And you, sir?

HUNT. A huntsman, sir.

HOA. There, boy, there, boy, there, [60 boy! I am not so old but I have pleasant days to come. I promise, you, my masters, I take such a good liking to you, that I entertain you

to 1 Cred. They are all talking at once.

all; I put you already into my countenance,<sup>32</sup> and you shall be shortly in my livery; but especially you two, my jolly falc'ner and my bonny huntsman; we shall have most need of you at my wife's manor houses i' th' country; there's goodly parks and champion<sup>33</sup> grounds for you; we shall have all our [70 sports within ourselves; all the gentlemen a' th' country shall be beholding<sup>34</sup> to us and our pastimes.

FAL. And we'll make your Worship admire,<sup>35</sup> sir.

HOA. Say'st thou so? Do but make me admire, and thou shalt want for nothing. — My tailor!

TAI. Anon, sir.

HOA. Go presently in hand with the [80 liveries.

TAI. I will, sir.

HOA. My barber.

BAR. Here, sir.

HOA. Make 'em all trim fellows, louse 'em well, — especially my huntsman — and cut all their beards of the Polonian<sup>36</sup> fashion. — My perfumer.

PER. Under your nose, sir.

HOA. Cast a better savor upon the [90 knaves, to take away the scent of my tailor's feet, and my barber's lotium-water.<sup>37</sup>

PER. It shall be carefully perform'd, sir.

HOA. But you, my falc'ner and huntsman, the welcom'st men alive, i' faith!

HUNT. And we'll show you that, sir, shall deserve your Worship's favor.

HOA. I prithee, show me that. — Go, you knaves all, and wash your lungs i' th' buttery, go. [Exeunt Tailor, Barber, &c.] — By [100 th' mass, and well rememb'ed! I'll ask my wife that question. — Wife, Mistress Jane Hoard!

Enter Courtesan, alter'd in apparel.

COUR. Sir, would you with me?

HOA. I would but know, sweet Wife, which might stand best to thy liking, to have the wedding dinner kept here or i' th' country?

COUR. Hum! — faith, sir, 't would like me better here; here you were married, here let all rites be ended. 110

HOA. Could a marquesse<sup>38</sup> give a better answer? Hoard, bear thy head aloft; thou'st a wife will advance it.<sup>39</sup>

[Enter Host with a letter.]

What haste comes here now? Yea, a letter? Some dreg of my adversary's malice. Come hither; what's the news?

HOST. A thing that concerns my mistress, sir. [Gives a letter to Courtesan.]

HOA. Why then it concerns me, knave!

HOST. Ay, and you, knave, too — cry [120 your Worship mercy. You are both like to come into trouble. I promise you, sir; a precontract.<sup>40</sup>

HOA. How? a precontract, say'st thou?

HOST. I fear they have too much proof on't, sir; old Lucre, he runs mad up and down, and will to law as fast as he can; young Witgood laid hold on by his creditors, he exclaims upon you a' tother side, says you have wrought his undoing by the injurious de- [130 taining of his contract.

HOA. Body a' me!

HOST. He will have utmost satisfaction; The law shall give him recompense, he says.

COUR. [aside] Alas, his creditors so merciless! my state being yet uncertain, I deem it not unconscionable to further him.

HOST. True, sir, —

HOA. Wife, what says that letter? Let me construe it. 140

COUR. Curs'd be my rash and unadvised words!

[Tears the letter and stamps on it.]

I'll set my foot upon my tongue, And tread my inconsiderate grant to dust.

HOA. Wife —

HOST. [aside] A pretty shift,<sup>41</sup> i' faith! I commend a woman when she can make away a letter from her husband handsomely, and this was cleanly done, by my troth.

COUR. I did, sir!

Some foolish words I must confess did pass, Which now litigiously he fastens on me. [151

HOA. Of what force? Let me examine 'em.

COUR. Too strong, I fear: would I were well freed of him!

HOA. Shall I compound?

COUR. No, sir, I'd have it done some nobler way

Of your side; I'd have you come off with honor;
Let baseness keep with them. Why, have you not

The means, sir? The occasion's offer'd you.

HOA. Where, how, dear Wife? 160

COUR. He is now caught by his creditors; the slave's needy; his debts petty; he'll rather bind himself to all inconveniences than rot in prison; by this only means you may get a release from him. 'Tis not yet come to his uncle's hearing; send speedily for the creditors; by this time he's desperate; he'll set his hand to anything; take order for his debts, or discharge 'em quite; a pax on him, let's be rid of a rascal! 170

HOA. Excellent!

Thou dost astonish me. — Go, run, make haste;

Bring both the creditors and Witgood hither.

HOA. [aside] This will be some revenge yet. [Exit.]

HOA. In the mean space I'll have a release drawn. — Within there!

[Enter Servant.]

SER. Sir?

HOA. Sirrah, come take directions; go to my scrivener.

COUR. [aside] I'm yet like those whose riches lie in dreams —

If I be wak'd, they're false; such is my fate,
Who ventures deeper than the desperate state. 180

Though I have sinn'd, yet could I become new;
For where I once vow, I am ever true.

HOA. Away, dispatch; on my displeasure, quickly. [Exit Servant.]

Happy occasion! pray Heaven he be in the right vein now to set his hand to 't, that nothing alter him; grant that all his follies may meet in him at once, to besot him enough! I pray for him, i' faith, and here he comes.

[Enter Witgood and Creditors.]

WIT. What would you with me now, my uncle's spiteful adversary? 190

HOA. Nay, I am friends.

WIT. Ay, when your mischief's spent.

HOA. I heard you were arrested.

WIT. Well, what then?

You will pay none of my debts, I am sure.

HOA. A wise man cannot tell;

There may be those conditions 'greed upon
May move me to do much.

WIT.

Ay, when? —

'Tis thou, perjured woman! (Oh, no name
Is vild enough to match thy treachery!)
Thou art the cause of my confusion.

COUR. Out, you penurious slave! 200

HOA. Nay, Wife, you are too froward;
Let him alone; give losers leave to talk.

WIT. Shall I remember thee of another
promise

Far stronger than the first?

COUR. I'd fain know that.

WIT. 'T would call shame to thy cheeks.

COUR. Shame!

WIT. Hark in your ear. —
[They converse apart.]

Will he come off, think'st thou, and pay my debts roundly?

COUR. Doubt nothing; there's a release a-drawing and all, to which you must set your
hand. 210

WIT. Excellent!

COUR. But methinks, i' faith, you might have made some shift to discharge this yourself, having in the mortgage, and never have burd'ned my conscience with it.

WIT. A' my troth, I could not; for my creditors' cruelties extend to the present.

COUR. No more. —

Why, do your worst for that, I defy you.

WIT. Y' are impudent: I'll call up witnesses. 220

COUR. Call up thy wits, for thou hast been devoted

To follies a long time.

HOA. Wife, y' are too bitter. — Master Witgood, and you, my masters, you shall hear a mild speech come from me now, and this it is: 't'as been my fortune, gentlemen, to have an extraordinary blessing pour'd upon me a' late, and here she stands; I have wedded her, and bedded her, and yet she is little the worse. Some foolish words she hath pass'd to you in the country, and some [230 peevish] debts you owe here in the city; set the hare's head to the goose-gibbet: * release you her of her words, and I'll release you of your debts, sir.

WIT. Would you so? I thank you for that, sir; I cannot blame you, i' faith.

HOA. Why, are not debts better than words,
sir?

WIT. Are not words promises, and are not promises debts, sir? 240

* Silly, ridiculous.

* A proverbial expression = tit for tat.

HOA. He plays at back-racket <sup>44</sup> with me.

1 CRED. Come hither, Master Witgood, come hither; be rul'd by fools once.

[Witgood steps aside with the Creditors.]

2 CRED. We are citizens, and know what belong to't.

1 CRED. Take hold of his offer; pax on her, let her go. If your debts were once discharged, I would help you to a widow myself worth ten of her.

3 CRED. Mass, partner, and now you [250 remember me on't, there's Master Mulligrub's sister newly fall'n a widow.

1 CRED. Cuds me, as pat as can be! There's a widow left for you: ten thousand in money, beside plate, jewels, et cetera; I warrant it a match: we can do all in all with her. Prithee, dispatch; we'll carry thee to her presently.

WIT. My uncle will ne'er endure me when he shall hear I set my hand to a release. [260

2 CRED. Hark, I'll tell thee a trick for that. I have spent five hundred pound in suits in my time; I should be wise. Thou'rt now a prisoner; make a release; take't of my word, whatsoever a man makes as long as he is in durance, 't is nothing in law, not thus much. [Snaps his fingers.]

WIT. Say you so, sir?

3 CRED. I have paid for't; I know't.

WIT. Proceed, then; I consent. 270

3 CRED. Why, well said.

HOA. How now, my masters; what, have you done with him?

1 CRED. With much ado, sir, we have got him to consent.

HOA. Ah—a—a! and what came his debts to now?

1 CRED. Some eightscore odd pounds, sir.

HOA. Naw, naw, naw, naw! tell me the second time; give me a lighter sum. [280 They are but desperate debts, you know; ne'er call'd in but upon such an accident; a poor, needy knave, he would starve and rot in prison. Come, come, you shall have ten shillings in the pound, and the sum down roundly.

1 CRED. You must make it a mark,<sup>45</sup> sir.

HOA. Go to, then; tell <sup>46</sup> your money in the meantime; you shall find little less there

[giving them money].—Come, Master [290 Witgood, you are so unwilling to do yourself good now!

[Enter Scrivener.]

Welcome, honest scrivener.—Now you shall hear the release read.

SCRI. [reads.] "Be it known to all men, by these presents, that I, Theodorus Witgood, gentleman, sole nephew to Pecunius Lucre, having unjustly made title and claim to one Jane Medler, late widow of Anthony Medler, and now wife to Walkadine Hoard, in [300 consideration of a competent sum of money to discharge my debts, do for ever hereafter disclaim any title, right, estate, or interest in or to the said widow, late in the occupation of the said Anthony Medler, and now in the occupation of Walkadine Hoard; as also neither to lay claim by virtue of any former contract, grant, promise, or demise, to any of her manor[s], manor houses, parks, groves, meadow-grounds, arable lands, barns, stacks, [310 stables, dove-holes, and coney<sup>47</sup>-burrows; together with all her cattle, money, plate, jewels, borders, chains, bracelets, furnitures, hangings, moveables, or [immoveables].<sup>48</sup> In witness whereof, I, the said Theodorus Witgood, have interchangeably set to my hand and seal before these presents, the day and date above written."

WIT. What a precious fortune hast thou slipp'd <sup>49</sup> here, like a beast as thou art! [320

HOA. Come, unwilling heart, come.

WIT. Well, Master Hoard, give me the pen; I see

'T is vain to quarrel with our destiny.

[Signs the paper.]

HOA. Oh, as vain a thing as can be! you cannot commit a greater absurdity, sir. So, so; give me that hand now; before all these presents, I am friends for ever with thee.

WIT. Troth, and it were pity of my heart now, if I should bear you any grudge, i' faith.

HOA. Content; I'll send for thy uncle [330 against the wedding dinner; we will be friends once again.

WIT. I hope to bring it to pass myself, sir!

HOA. How now? Is't <sup>50</sup> right, my masters?

1 CRED. 'T is something wanting, sir; yet it shall be sufficient.

HOA. Why, well said; a good conscience makes a fine show nowadays. Come, my masters, you shall all taste of my wine [340 ere you depart.

ALL. We follow you, sir.

[Exeunt HOARD and Scrivener.]

WIT. [aside] I'll try these fellows now. — A word, sir; what, will you carry me to that widow now?

I CRED. Why, do you think we were in earnest, i' faith? Carry you to a rich widow? We should get much credit by that: a noted rioter! a contemptible prodigal! 'T was a trick we have amongst us to get in our [350 money; fare you well, sir.

[Exeunt [Creditors].

WIT. Farewell, and be hang'd, you short pig-hair'd,<sup>51</sup> ram-headed<sup>52</sup> rascals! He that believes in you shall ne'er be sav'd, I warrant him. By this new league I shall have some access unto my love.

She is above.

JOYCE. Master Witgood!

WIT. My life!

JOYCE. Meet me presently; that note directs you [throwing it down]; I would [360 not be suspected. Our happiness attends us; farewell.

WIT. A word's enough. [Exeunt.

[SCENE V]<sup>53</sup>

DAMPIT, the usurer, in his bed;<sup>54</sup> AUDREY spinning by; [Boy.]

SONG

Let the usurer cram him, in interest that excel,
There's pits enow to damn him, before he comes to hell;

In Holborn some, in Fleet Street some,<sup>55</sup>
Where'er he come there's some, there's some.

DAM. Trahe, traheto; draw the curtain; give me a sip of sack more.

[Enter [LAMPREY and SPICHCOCK].<sup>56</sup>

LAM. Look you; did not I tell you he lay like the Devil in chains, when he was bound for a thousand year?<sup>57</sup>

<sup>55</sup> Cf. on I, iv, 77, 78. The "pits" are the brothels, and the taverns where Dampit is killing himself by drinking. These particular streets are mentioned because he tramps about them on his business, visiting their "pits" en route. (Kittredge.)

SPI. But I think the Devil had no steel [10 bedstuffs; <sup>58</sup> he goes beyond him for that.

LAM. Nay, do but mark the conceit <sup>59</sup> of his drinking; one must wipe his mouth for him with a muckinder,<sup>60</sup> do you see, sir?

SPI. Is this the sick trampler? <sup>61</sup> Why, he is only bedrid with drinking.

LAM. True, sir. — He spies us.

DAM. What, Sir Tristram? <sup>62</sup> You come and see a weak man here, a very weak man.

LAM. If you be weak in body, you [20 should be strong in prayer, sir.

DAM. Oh, I have prayed too much, poor man!

LAM. There's a taste of his soul for you!

SPI. Fah, loathsome!

LAM. I come to borrow a hundred pound of you, sir.

DAM. Alas, you come at an ill time! I cannot spare it, i' faith; I ha' but two thousand i' th' house. 30

AUD. Ha, ha, ha!

DAM. Out, you gernative <sup>63</sup> quean, the mullipood of villainy, the spinner of concupiscency!

Enter [SIR LAUNCELOT and] other Gentlemen.

SIR L. Yea, gentlemen, are you here before us? How is he now?

LAM. Faith, the same man still: the tavern bitch has bit him i' th' head.<sup>64</sup>

SIR L. We shall have the better sport with him; peace! — And how cheers Master [40 Dampit now?

DAM. Oh, my bosom,<sup>65</sup> Sir Launcelot, how cheer I! Thy presence is restorative.

SIR L. But I hear a great complaint of you, Master Dampit, among gallants.

DAM. I am glad of that, i' faith; prithee, what?

SIR L. They say you are wax'd proud a' late, and if a friend visit you in the afternoon, you'll scarce know him. 50

DAM. Fie, fie; proud? I cannot remember any such thing; sure I was drunk then.

SIR L. Think you so, sir?

<sup>62</sup> I.e., libertine. See on Philaster, IV, ii, 18. Professor Kittredge observes that the appellation here supports this interpretation, since lampreys were supposed to be a strong aphrodisiac.

DAM. There 't was, i' faith; nothing but the pride of the sack; and so certify 'em. — Fetch sack, sirrah.

BOY. A vengeance sack you once!

[Exit, and returns presently with sack.]

AUD. Why, Master Dampit, if you hold on as you begin, and lie a little longer, you need not take care how to dispose your wealth; [60 you 'll make the vintner your heir.

DAM. Out, you babliaminy;<sup>66</sup> you unfeathered, cremitoried<sup>67</sup> quean; you cullisance<sup>68</sup> of scabiosity!

AUD. Good words, Master Dampit, to speak before a maid and a virgin!

DAM. Hang thy virginity upon the pole of carnality!

AUD. Sweet terms! My mistress shall know 'em. 70

LAM. Note but the misery of this usuring slave: here he lies, like a noisome dunghill, full of the poison of his drunken blasphemies; and they to whom he bequeaths all grudge him the very meat that feeds him, the very pillow that eases him. Here may a usurer behold his end. What profits it to be a slave in this world, and a devil i' th' next?

DAM. Sir Launcelot, let me buss<sup>69</sup> thee, Sir Launcelot; thou art the only friend that [80 I honor and respect.

SIR L. I thank you for that, Master Dampit.

DAM. Farewell, my bosom Sir Launcelot.

SIR L. Gentlemen, an you love me, let me step behind you, and one of you fall a-talking of me to him.

LAM. Content. — Master Dampit —

DAM. So, sir.

LAM. Here came Sir Launcelot to see [90 you e'en now.

DAM. Hang him, rascal!

LAM. Who? Sir Launcelot?

DAM. Pythagorical<sup>70</sup> rascal!

LAM. Pythagorical?

DAM. Ay, he changes his cloak when he meets a sergeant.

SIR L. What a rogue's this!

LAM. I wonder you can rail at him, sir; he comes in love to see you. 100

DAM. A louse for his love! His father

was a comb-maker; I have no need of his crawling love. He comes to have longer day,<sup>71</sup> the superlative rascal!

SIR L. 'Sfoot, I can no longer endure the rogue! — Master Dampit, I come to take my leave once again, sir.

DAM. Who? my dear and kind Sir Launcelot, the only gentleman of England? Let me hug thee; farewell, and a thousand.<sup>72</sup>

LAM. Compos'd of wrongs and slavish [111 flatteries!

SIR L. Nay, gentlemen, he shall show you more tricks yet; I'll give you another taste of him.

LAM. Is't possible?

SIR L. His memory is upon<sup>73</sup> departing.

DAM. Another cup of sack!

SIR L. Mass, then't will be quite gone! Before he drink that, tell him there's a [120 country client come up, and here attends for his learned advice.

LAM. Enough.

DAM. One cup more, and then let the bell toll; I hope I shall be weak enough by that time.

LAM. Master Dampit —

DAM. Is the sack spouting?

LAM. 'Tis coming forward, sir. Here's a countryman, a client of yours, waits for [130 your deep and profound advice, sir.

DAM. A coxcomby; where is he? Let him approach; set me up a peg higher.

LAM. [to SIR LAUNCELOT] You must draw near, sir.

DAM. Now, Goodman Fooliaminy, what say you to me now?

SIR L. Please your good Worship, I am a poor man, sir —

DAM. What make you in my chamber then?

SIR L. I would entreat your Worship's [141 device<sup>74</sup> in a just and honest cause, sir.

DAM. I meddle with no such matters; I refer 'em to Master No-man's office.

SIR L. I had but one house left me in all the world, sir, which was my father's, my grandfather's, my great-grandfather's; and now a villain has unjustly wrung me out, and took possession on't.

DAM. Has he such feats? Thy best [150 course is to bring thy ejectione firmæ, and in seven year thou mayst shove him out by the law.

SIR L. Alas, an't please your Worship, I have small friends and less money!

DAM. Hoyday! this gear<sup>75</sup> will fadge well.<sup>76</sup> Hast no money? Why, then, my advice is thou must set fire a' th' house, and so get him out.

LAM. That will break<sup>77</sup> strife, indeed. [160

SIR L. I thank your Worship for your hot counsel, sir. — Alt'ring but my voice a little, you see he knew me not; you may observe by this that a drunkard's memory holds longer in the voice than in the person. But, gentlemen, shall I show you a sight? Behold the little divedapper<sup>78</sup> of damnation, Gulf the usurer, for his time<sup>79</sup> worse than tother.

Enter HOARD with GULF.

LAM. What's he comes with him? 170

SIR L. Why, Hoard, that married lately the Widow Medler.

LAM. Oh, I cry you mercy, sir.

HOA. Now, gentlemen visitants, how does Master Dampit?

SIR L. Faith, here he lies, e'en drawing in, sir, good canary as fast as he can, sir; a very weak creature, truly; he is almost past memory.

HOA. Fie, Master Dampit! you lie lazing abed here, and I come to invite you to [181 my wedding dinner; up, up, up!

DAM. Who's this? Master Hoard? Who hast thou married, in the name of foolery?

HOA. A rich widow.

DAM. A Dutch widow! <sup>80</sup>

HOA. A rich widow; one Widow Medler.

DAM. Medler? She keeps open house.<sup>81</sup>

HOA. She did, I can tell you, in her tother husband's days; open house for [190 all comers; horse and man was welcome, and room enough for 'em all.

DAM. There's too much for thee, then; thou mayst let out some to thy neighbors.

GULF. What, hung alive in chains? O spectacle! bedstaffs of steel? O monstrum horrendum, informe, ingens, cui lumen ademptum!<sup>82</sup> O Dampit, Dampit, here's a just

judgment shown upon usury, extortion, and trampling<sup>83</sup> villainy! 200

SIR L. This is excellent, thief rails upon the thief!

GULF. Is this the end of cutthroat usury, brothel, and blasphemy? Now mayst thou see what race a usurer runs.

DAM. Why, thou rogue of universality, do not I know thee? Thy sound is like the cuckoo, the Welsh ambassador;<sup>84</sup> thou cowardly slave, that offers to fight with a sick man when his weapon's down! Rail [210 upon me in my naked bed? <sup>85</sup> Why, thou great Lucifer's little vicar! I am not so weak but I know a knave at first sight. Thou inconscionable rascal! thou that goest upon Middlesex juries, and will make haste to give up thy verdict because thou wilt not lose thy dinner! Are you answered?

GULF. An't were not for shame —

DAM. Thou wouldst be hang'd then. 219

LAM. Nay, you must exercise patience, Master Gulf, always, in a sick man's chamber.

SIR L. He'll quarrel with none, I warrant you, but those that are bedrid.

DAM. Let him come, gentlemen, I am arm'd; reach my close-stool hither.

SIR L. Here will be a sweet<sup>86</sup> fray anon; I'll leave you, gentlemen.

LAM. Nay, we'll along with you. — Master Gulf —

GULF. Hang him, usuring rascal! 230

SIR L. Pish, set your strength to his, your wit to his!

AUD. Pray, gentlemen, depart; his hour's come upon him. — Sleep in my bosom, sleep.

SIR L. Nay, we have enough of him, i' faith; keep him for the house.

Now make your best;

For thrice his wealth I would not have his breast.

GULF. A little thing would make me beat him now he's asleep.

SIR L. Mass, then 't will be a pitiful [241 day when he wakes; I would be loath to see that day; come.

GULF. You overrule me, gentlemen, i' faith. Exeunt.

ACT V — [SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>Enter LUCRE and WITGOOD.

WIT. Nay, Uncle, let me prevail with you so much; i' faith, go, now he has invited you.

LUC. I shall have great joy there when he has borne away the widow!

WIT. Why, la, I thought where I should find you presently. — Uncle, a' my troth, 't is nothing so.

LUC. What's nothing so, sir? Is not he married to the widow?

WIT. No, by my troth, is he not, Uncle. [10

LUC. How?

WIT. Will you have the truth on 't? He is married to a whore, i' faith.

LUC. I should laugh at that.

WIT. Uncle, let me perish in your favor if you find it not so; and that 't is I that have married the honest woman.

LUC. Ha! I'd walk ten mile afoot to see that, i' faith.

WIT. And see 't you shall, or I'll ne'er [20 see you again.

LUC. A quean, i' faith? Ha, ha, ha!

Exeunt.[SCENE II]<sup>2</sup>

Enter [WALKADINE] HOARD, tasting wine, the Host following in a livery cloak.

HOA. Pup, pup, pup, pup; I like not this wine. Is there never a better tierce in the house?

HOST. Yes, sir, there are as good tierce<sup>3</sup> in the house as any are in England.

HOA. Desire your mistress, you knave, to taste 'em all over; she has better skill.

HOST. [aside] Has she so? The better for her, and the worse for you. Exit.

HOA. Arthur! 10

[Enter ARTHUR.]

Is the cupboard of plate<sup>4</sup> set out?

ARTH. All's in order, sir. [Exit.]

HOA. I am in love with my liveries every time I think on 'em; they make a gallant show, by my troth. Niece!

[Enter JOYCE.]

JOYCE. Do you call, sir?

HOA. Prithee, show a little diligence, and overlook the knaves a little; they'll filch and steal to-day, and send whole pasties home to their wives; an thou beest a good niece, do [20 not see me purloin'd.

JOYCE. Fear it not, sir — [aside] I have cause: though the feast be prepared for you, yet it serves fit for my wedding dinner too. [Exit.]

Enter [LAMPREY and SPICHOCK].

HOA. Master Lamprey and Master Spichcock, two the most welcome gentlemen alive! Your fathers and mine were all free a' th' fish-mongers.<sup>5</sup>

LAM. They were indeed, sir. You see bold guests, sir; soon entreated. 30

HOA. And that's best, sir.

[Enter Servant.]

How now, sirrah?

SER. There's a coach come to th' door, sir. [Exit.]

HOA. My Lady Foxstone, a' my life! — Mistress Jane Hoard! Wife! — Mass, 't is her Ladyship indeed!

[Enter LADY FOXSTONE.]

Madam, you are welcome to an unfurnish'd house, dearth of cheer, scarcity of attendance.

L. FOX. You are pleas'd to make the worst, sir. 40

HOA. Wife!

[Enter Courtesan.]

L. FOX. Is this your bride?

HOA. Yes, madam. — Salute my Lady Foxstone.

COUR. Please you, madam, awhile to taste the air in the garden?

L. FOX. 'T will please us well.

Exeunt [L. FOXSTONE and Courtesan].

HOA. Who would not wed? The most delicious life!

No joys are like the comforts of a wife.

LAM. So we bachelors think, that are [50 not troubled with them.

[Re-enter Servant.]

SER. Your Worship's brother, with another ancient gentleman,<sup>6</sup> are newly alighted, sir. [Exit.]

<sup>6</sup> Mod. eds. emend other . . . gentlemen perhaps rightly. There may have been reduction of personnel here.

HOA. Master Onesiphorus Hoard? Why, now our company begins to come in.

[Enter ONESIPHORUS HOARD, LIMBER, and KIX.]

My dear and kind Brother, welcome, i' faith.

O. HOA. You see we are men at an hour, Brother.

HOA. Ay, I'll say that for you, Brother; you keep as good an hour to come to a feast [60 as any gentleman in the shire. — What, old Master Limber and Master Kix! Do we meet, i' faith, jolly gentlemen?

LIM. We hope you lack guests,<sup>7</sup> sir?

HOA. Oh, welcome, welcome! We lack still such guests<sup>7</sup> as your Worships.

O. HOA. Ah, sirrah Brother, have you catch'd up Widow Medler?

HOA. From 'em all, Brother; and I may tell you I had mighty enemies, those that [70 stuck sore; old Lucre is a sore fox, I can tell you, Brother.

O. HOA. Where is she? I'll go seek her out; I long to have a smack at her lips.

HOA. And most wishfully,<sup>8</sup> Brother, see where she comes.

[Re-enter Courtesan and LADY FOXSTONE.]

Give her a [smack]<sup>9</sup> now we may hear it all the house over.

[Courtesan and ONESIPHORUS HOARD turn back.]

COUR. O Heaven, I am betray'd! I know that face. 80

HOA. Ha, ha, ha! Why, how now? Are you both asham'd? — Come, gentlemen, we'll look another way.

O. HOA. Nay, Brother, hark you: come, y'<sup>7</sup> are dispos'd to be merry.

HOA. Why do we meet else, man?

O. HOA. That's another matter; I was ne'er so 'fraid in my life but that you had been in earnest.

HOA. How mean you, Brother? 90

O. HOA. You said she was your wife!

HOA. Did I so? By my troth, and so she is.

O. HOA. By your troth, Brother?

HOA. What reason have I to dissemble with my friends, Brother? If marriage can make her mine, she is mine! Why —

O. HOA. Troth, I am not well of a sudden. I must crave pardon, Brother; I came to see you, but I cannot stay dinner, i' faith.

HOA. I hope you will not serve me so, Brother. 101

LIM. By your leave, Master Hoard —

HOA. What now? what now? Pray, gentlemen: — you were wont to show yourselves wise men.

LIM. But you have shown your folly too much here.

HOA. How?

KIX. Fie, fie! a man of your repute and name!

You'll feast your friends, but cloy 'em first with shame.

HOA. This grows too deep; pray, let us reach the sense. 110

LIM. In your old age dote on a courtesan!

HOA. Ha?

KIX. Marry a strumpet!

HOA. Gentlemen!

O. HOA. And Witgood's quean!

HOA. Oh! nor lands nor living?

✓ O. HOA. Living!

✓ HOA. [to Courtesan] Speak.

COUR. Alas, you know, at first, sir, I told you I had nothing. 120

HOA. Out, out! I am cheated; infinitely cozened!

LIM. Nay, Master Hoard —

Enter WITGOOD and LUCRE [and JOYCE.]

HOA. A Dutch widow! a Dutch widow! a Dutch widow!

LUC. Why, Nephew, shall I trace thee still a liar?

Wilt make me mad? Is not yon thing the widow?

WIT. Why, la, you are so hard a' belief Uncle!

By my troth, she's a whore.

LUC. Then thou'rt a knave.

WIT. Negatur argumentum, Uncle. 129

LUC. Probo tibi, Nephew: he that knows a woman to be a quean must needs be a knave; thou say'st thou knowest her to be one; ergo, if she be a quean, thou'rt a knave.

WIT. Negatur sequela majoris, Uncle: he that knows a woman to be a quean must needs be a knave — I deny that.

HOA. Lucre and Witgood, y' are both villains; get you out of my house!

LUC. Why, didst not invite me to thy wedding dinner? 140

WIT. And are not you and I sworn perpetual friends before witness, sir, and were both drunk upon 't?

<sup>7</sup> Old eds. spell guesses.

HOA. Daintily abus'd! Y'ave put a junt<sup>10</sup>
upon me!

LUC. Ha, ha, ha!

HOA. A common strumpet!

WIT. Nay, now

You wrong her, sir; if I were she, I'd have
The law on you for that; I durst depose for
her

She ne'er had common use nor common
thought.

COUR. Despise me, publish me: I am your wife;

What shame can I have now but you'll have
part? 150

If in disgrace you share, I sought not you;
You pursu'd me, nay, forc'd me; had I friends would follow it,

Less than your action has been prov'd a rape.

O. HOA. Brother!

COUR. Nor did I ever boast of lands unto
you,

Money, or goods; I took a plainer course,
And told you true, I'd nothing.

If error were committed, 't was by you;
Thank your own folly. Nor has my sin been
So odious but worse has been forgiven; 160
Nor am I so deform'd but I may challenge
The utmost power of any old man's love.

She that tastes not sin before, twenty to one but she'll taste it after; most of you old men are content to marry young virgins, and take that which follows; where,<sup>11</sup> marrying one of us, you both save a sinner and are quit from a cuckold for ever.

And more, in brief, let this your best thoughts win:

She that knows sin, knows best how to hate sin.

HOA. Curs'd be all malice! black are the fruits of spite, 171

And poison first their owners. Oh, my friends,
I must embrace shame, to be rid of shame!
Conceal'd disgrace prevents a public name.

Ah, Witgood! ah, Theodorus!

WIT. Alas, sir, I was prick'd in conscience to see her well bestow'd, and where could I bestow her better than upon your pitiful Worship? Excepting but myself, I dare swear she's a virgin; and now, by marrying your [180 niece, I have banish'd myself for ever from her. She's mine aunt<sup>12</sup> now, by my faith, and there's no meddling with mine aunt, you know — a sin against my nuncle.<sup>13</sup>

<sup>10</sup> Trick.

COUR. [kneeling] Lo, gentlemen, before you
all

In true reclaimed form I fall.

Henceforth for ever I defy<sup>14</sup>

The glances of a sinful eye,

Waving of fans (which some suppose Tricks of fancy<sup>15</sup>), treading of toes, 190

Wringing of fingers, biting the lip,

The wanton gait, th' alluring trip;

All secret friends<sup>16</sup> and private meetings,

Close<sup>17</sup>-borne letters and bawds' greetings;

Feigning excuse to women's labors

When we are sent for to th' next neighbor's;

Taking false physic, and ne'er start

To be let blood though sign be at heart;<sup>18</sup>

Removing chambers, shifting beds,

To welcome friends in husbands' steads; 200

Them to enjoy, and you to marry;

They first serv'd, while you must tarry;

They to spend, and you to gather;

They to get, and you to father: —

These, and thousand, thousand more,

New reclaimed, I now abhor.

LUC. [to Witgood] Ah, here's a lesson, rioter, for you!

WIT. [kneeling] I must confess my follies:
I'll down too;

And here for ever I disclaim

The cause of youth's undoing, game, 210

Chiefly dice, those true outlanders,

That shake out beggars, thieves, and panders:

Soul-wasting surfeits, sinful riots,

Queans' evils, doctors' diets,

Pothecaries' drugs, surgeons' glisters;<sup>19</sup>

Stabbing of arms<sup>20</sup> for a common mistress;

Riband favors, ribald speeches;

Dear perfum'd jackets,<sup>21</sup> penniless breeches;

Dutch flapdragons,<sup>22</sup> healths in urine;<sup>23</sup>

Drabs that keep a man too sure in — 220

I do defy you all.

Lend me each honest hand, for here I rise

A reclaim'd man, loathing the general vice.

HOA. So, so; all friends! the wedding dinner cools.

Who seem most crafty prove oftentimes most fools. [Exeunt.]

<sup>14</sup> Renounce. <sup>15</sup> Love. <sup>16</sup> Lovers. <sup>17</sup> Secretly.

<sup>18</sup> And therefore unfavorable. "According to the directions for bleeding in old almanacs, blood was to be taken from particular parts under particular planets." (Dyce.) <sup>19</sup> Clysters, syringes.

<sup>20</sup> And then mixing the blood with wine in a health to one's mistress. <sup>21</sup> Cf. on IV, iii, 36.

<sup>22</sup> A flap dragon was a raisin, or similar object, set on fire and drunk in wine as it flamed. Dutchman were supposed to be experts at this variety of drinking.

<sup>23</sup> Another extravagance of the gallants; it was drunk mixed with wine.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

The Changeling is sadly marred, to a modern taste, by the lunatic divertissements which were always acceptable to the Elizabethans; yet it is none the less among the most powerful tragedies of the seventeenth century. Beatrice-Joanna and De Flores provide acting rôles of tremendous force. In a series of lurid flashes the lightning-like scenes of the tragic plot reveal their Titanic passions and their indomitable wills, while under a sky lowering with almost Websterian darkness and horror the proud heroine is hunted to her doom.

To Middleton's collaborator the comic portion of the play is due; but Rowley is also credited with the opening and the closing of the main plot. Middleton is doubtless the author of the great tragic episodes. They mark the height of his powers, which he seems only to have reached during the period of his association with Rowley.

The source is the fourth story in Book I of John Reynolds's Triumphs of God's Revenge against Murder (1621); but the material is freely handled, the deaths of the principal characters being radically altered. The play was probably written c. 1622; it was acted at court on January 4, 1624, and had a long career on the public stage. It was revived after the Restoration, when the great Betterton was much applauded as De Flores.

No edition, however, is known prior to that of 1653, on which the present text is based. A later issue, in 1668, consists merely of the remaindered sheets of 1653, with a new title page. As Oliphant observes, we can have no confidence that the play has reached us in its original state; the thirty years that elapsed between its production and publication afforded ample scope for stage tampering, which is reflected in the broken metre of many of the lines, and in such inconsistencies as the omission of scenes carefully prepared for — e.g., the quarrel between Antonio and Franciscus (see IV, iii, 168, ff.). It is a grievous commentary on public taste that the title alludes to the leading figure of the foolish underplot.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

VERMANDERO, [governor of the castle of Alicante,] father to Beatrice.
TOMAZO DE PIRACQUO, a noble lord.
ALONZO DE PIRACQUO, his brother, suitor to Beatrice.
ALSEMERO, a nobleman, afterwards married to Beatrice.
JASPERINO, his friend.
ALIBIUS, a jealous doctor.
LOLLIO, his man.

PEDRO, friend to Antonio.
ANTONIO, the changeling.<sup>1</sup>
FRANCISCUS, the counterfeit madman
DE FLORES, servant to Vermantero.
Madmen.
Servants.

BEATRICE [-JOANNA], daughter to Vermantero.
DIAPHANTA, her waiting woman.
ISABELLA, wife to Alibius.

THE SCENE — Alicante.

ACT I — [SCENE I]<sup>2</sup>

Enter ALSEMERO.

ALS. 'T was in the temple where I first beheld her,
And now again the same. What omen yet
Follows of that? None but imaginary.
Why should my hopes or fate be timorous?
The place is holy, so is my intent :
I love her beauties to the holy purpose ;
And that, methinks, admits comparison
With man's first creation, the place blest,
And is his right home back, if he achieve it.
The church hath first begun our interview, [10
And that's the place must join us into one ;
So there's beginning and perfection too.

Enter JASPERINO.

JAS. Oh, sir, are you here? Come, the wind's fair with you ;
Y' are like to have a swift and pleasant passage.
ALS. Sure, y' are deceived, friend, 't is contrary,
In my best judgment.

<sup>1</sup> Idiot ; with a glance, however, at the meanings :
(1) turncoat ; (2) child (especially an idiot child), substituted by the fairies for a normal human child which they have stolen from its cradle.

<sup>2</sup> Before a church. — Q Allegant, above.

JAS. What, for Malta? <sup>3</sup>
If you could buy a gale amongst the witches,<sup>4</sup>
They could not serve you such a lucky penny-worth <sup>5</sup>

As comes a' God's name.<sup>6</sup>

ALS. Even now I observ'd
The temple's vane to turn full in my face ; [20
I know 't is against me.

JAS. Against you?
Then you know not where you are.

ALS. Not well, indeed.

JAS. Are you not well, sir?

ALS. Yes, Jasperino,
Unless there be some hidden malady
Within me, that I understand not.

JAS. And that
I begin to doubt,<sup>7</sup> sir. I never knew
Your inclinations to travels at a pause
With any cause to hinder it, till now. -

Ashore you were wont to call your servants up,
And help to trap your horses for the speed ;<sup>8</sup>
At sea I have seen you weigh the anchor with
'em, 31
Hoist sails for fear to lose the foremost breath,
Be in continual prayers for fair winds ;
And have you chang'd your orisons?

<sup>3</sup> In the source Alsemero was on his way there, hoping to obtain a command against the Turks.

<sup>8</sup> In order to hasten the process.

ALS. No, friend ;
I keep the same church, same devotion.

JAS. Lover I'm sure y'are none ; the stoic was Found in you long ago ; your mother nor Best friends, who have set snares of beauty, ay,
And choice ones too, could never trap you that
way.

What might be the cause ?

ALS. Lord, how violent [40
Thou art ! I was but meditating of Somewhat I heard within the temple.

JAS. Is this
Violence ? 'T is but idleness compar'd
With your haste yesterday.

ALS. I'm all this while
A-going, man.

Enter Servants.

JAS. Backwards, I think, sir. Look,
Your servants.

1 SER. The seamen call ; shall we board your trunks ?

ALS. No, not to-day.

JAS. 'T is the critical day, it seems, and the sign * in Aquarius. 51

2 SER. We must not to sea to-day ; this smoke will bring forth fire.

ALS. Keep all on shore ; I do not know the end,
Which needs I must do, of an affair in hand
Ere I can go to sea.

1 SER. Well, your pleasure.

2 SER. Let him e'en take his leisure too ; we are safer on land. Exeunt Servants.

Enter BEATRICE-JOANNA, DIAPHANTA, and Servants ; [ALSEMERO accosts the lady and then kisses her.<sup>10</sup>]

JAS. [aside] How now ! The laws of the Medes are chang'd sure ; salute a woman ! [60
He kisses too ; wonderful ! Where learnt he this ? and does it perfectly too. In my conscience,<sup>11</sup> he ne'er rehears'd it before. Nay, go on ; this will be stranger and better news at Valencia than if he had ransom'd half Greece from the Turk.

BEAT. You are a scholar, sir ?

ALS. A weak one, lady.

BEAT. Which of the sciences is this love you speak of ?

* In the almanac.

<sup>10</sup> A common salutation then, not necessarily indicative of love.

<sup>11</sup> As far as I know.

ALS. From your tongue I take it to be
music.

BEAT. You are skilful in 't, can sing at first sight. 70

ALS. And I have show'd you all my skill at
once ;

I want more words to express me further,
And must be forc'd to repetition :
I love you dearly.

BEAT. Be better advis'd, sir ;
Our eyes are sentinels unto our judgments,
And should give certain judgment what they
see ;

But they are rash sometimes, and tell us wonders

Of common things, which when our judgments
find,

They can then check the eyes, and call them
blind.

ALS. But I am further, lady ; yesterday [80
Was mine eyes' employment, and hither
now

They brought my judgment, where are both agreed.

Both houses<sup>12</sup> then consenting, 't is agreed ;
Only there wants the confirmation

By the hand royal : that's your part, lady.

BEAT. Oh, there's one above me,<sup>13</sup> sir. —
[aside] For five days past

To be recall'd ! Sure mine eyes were mistaken ; This was the man was meant me. That he should come

So near his time, and miss it !

JAS. [aside] We might have come by the [90 carriers from Valencia, I see, and sav'd all our sea-provision ; we are at farthest, sure. Methinks I should do something too ;

I meant to be a venturer<sup>14</sup> in this voyage.

Yonder's another vessel, I'll board<sup>15</sup> her ;

If she be lawful prize, down goes her topsail.<sup>16</sup>

[Accosts DIAPHANTA.]

Enter DE FLORES.

DE F. Lady, your father —

BEAT. Is in health, I hope.

DE F. Your eye shall instantly instruct you,
lady ;

He's coming hitherward.

BEAT. What needed then
Your duteous preface ? I had rather 100

He had come unexpected ; you must stall<sup>17</sup>

A good presence with unnecessary blabbing ;

<sup>17</sup> Forestall.

And how welcome for your part you are,
I'm sure you know.

DE F. [aside] Will 't never mend, this
scorn,
One side nor other? Must I be enjoin'd
To follow still <sup>18</sup> whilst she flies from me?
Well,
Fates, do your worst, I'll please myself with sight

Of her at all opportunities,
If but to spite her anger. I know she had Rather see me dead than living; and yet [110
She knows no cause for 't but a peevish will.

ALS. You seem'd displeas'd, lady, on the sudden.

BEAT. Your pardon, sir; 't is my infirmity;
Nor can I other reason render you
Than his or hers, [of] <sup>19</sup> some particular thing
They must abandon as a deadly poison,
Which to a thousand other tastes were whole-
some;

Such to mine eyes is that same fellow there,
The same that report speaks of the basilisk.<sup>20</sup>

ALS. This is a frequent frailty in our nature; 120
There's scarce a man amongst a thousand found

But hath his imperfection: one distastes
The scent of roses, which to infinites
Most pleasing is and odoriferous;
One, oil, the enemy of poison;
Another, wine, the cheerer of the heart
And lively refresher of the countenance.
Indeed this fault, if so it be, is general;
There's scarce a thing but is both lov'd and loath'd; 129

Myself, I must confess, have the same frailty.

BEAT. And what may be your poison, sir?
I am bold with you.

ALS. What <sup>21</sup> might be your desire, perhaps:
a cherry.

BEAT. I am no enemy to any creature
My memory has, but yon gentleman.

ALS. He does ill to tempt your sight, if he knew it.

BEAT. He cannot be ignorant of that, sir,
I have not spar'd to tell him so; and I want <sup>22</sup>
To help myself, since he's a gentleman
In good respect with my father, and follows
him.

ALS. He's out of his place then now.

[They talk apart.]

JAS. I am a mad wag, wench. [140

DIA. So methinks; but for your comfort, I can tell you, we have a doctor in the city that undertakes the cure of such.

JAS. Tush, I know what physic is best for the state of mine own body.

DIA. 'T is scarce a well-govern'd state, I believe.

JAS. I could show thee such a thing with an ingredian <sup>23</sup> that we two would compound together, and if it did not tame the mad- [150 dest blood i' th' town for two hours after, I'll ne'er profess physic again.

DIA. A little poppy, sir, were good to cause you sleep.

JAS. Poppy? I'll give thee a pop i' th' lips for that first, and begin there. Poppy is one simple <sup>24</sup> indeed, and cuckoo (what-you-call 't) another. I'll discover no more now; another time I'll show thee all. [Exit.] <sup>25</sup>

Enter VERMANDERO and Servants.

BEAT. My father, sir.

VER. Oh, Joanna, I came to meet
thee. 160

Your devotion's ended?

BEAT. For this time, sir. —
[aside] I shall change my saint, <sup>26</sup> I fear me; I find

A giddy turning in me. — Sir, this while
I am beholding <sup>27</sup> to this gentleman,
Who left his own way to keep me company,
And in discourse I find him much desirous
To see your castle. He hath deserv'd it, sir,
If ye please to grant it.

VER. With all my heart, sir.
Yet there's an article between; <sup>28</sup> I must
know

Your country; we use not to give survey [170
Of our chief strengths <sup>29</sup> to strangers; our citadels

Are plac'd conspicuous to outward view,
On promonts' <sup>30</sup> tops, but within are secrets.

ALS. A Valencian, sir.

VER. A Valencian?
That's native, sir. Of what name, I beseech
you?

ALS. Alsemero, sir.

not introduced to Vermandero.

<sup>20</sup> A fabulous serpent, hatched from a cock's egg;
it killed with its glance.

<sup>21</sup> Q And what; erroneously repeating from the preceding line.

<sup>22</sup> Am unable, lack means.

VER. Alsemero? Not the son
Of John de Alsemero?

ALS. The same, sir.

VER. My best love bids you welcome.

BEAT. He was wont
To call me so, and then <sup>31</sup> he speaks a most Unfeigned truth.

VER. Oh, sir, I knew your father; [180
We two were in acquaintance long ago,
Before our chins were worth iulan <sup>32</sup> down,
And so continued till the stamp of time
Had coin'd us into silver. Well, he's gone;
A good soldier went with him.

ALS. You went together <sup>33</sup> in that, sir.

VER. No, by Saint Jacques, I came behind
him;
Yet I've done somewhat too. An unhappy
day

Swallowed him at last at Gibraltar,
In fight with those rebellious Hollanders. [190
Was it not so?

ALS. Whose death I had reveng'd,
Or followed him in fate, had not the late league <sup>34</sup>
Prevented me.

VER. Ay, ay, 't was time to breathe. —
Oh, Joanna, I should ha' told thee news;
I saw Piracquo lately.

BEAT. [aside] That's ill news.

VER. He's hot preparing for this day of triumph; <sup>35</sup>
Thou must be a bride within this sevennight.

ALS. [aside] Ha!

BEAT. Nay, good sir, be not so violent;
with speed

I cannot render satisfaction
Unto the dear companion of my soul, 200
Virginity, whom I thus long have liv'd with,
And part with it so rude and suddenly.
Can such friends divide, never to meet again,
Without a solemn farewell?

VER. Tush, tush! there's a toy. <sup>36</sup>

ALS. [aside] I must now part, and never meet again

With any joy on earth. — Sir, your pardon;
My affairs call on me.

VER. How, sir? By no means;
Not chang'd so soon, I hope! You must see my castle,
And her best entertainment, e'er we part;

<sup>34</sup> A truce existed between the Dutch and the Spaniards from 1609 till 1621.

<sup>36</sup> Trifle.

I shall think myself unkindly us'd else. [210
Come, come, let's on; I had good hope your stay

Had been awhile with us in Alicant;

I might have bid you to my daughter's wedding.

ALS. [aside] He means to feast me, and poisons me beforehand. —

I should be dearly glad to be there, sir,
Did my occasions suit as I could wish.

BEAT. I shall be sorry if you be not there
When it is done, sir; but not so suddenly.

VER. I tell you, sir, the gentleman's complete,

A courtier and a gallant, enrich'd 220
With many fair and noble ornaments;
I would not change him for a son-in-law
For any he in Spain, the proudest he,
And we have great ones, that you know.

ALS. He's much
Bound to you, sir.

VER. He shall be bound to me
As fast as this tie can hold him; I'll want
My will else.

BEAT. [aside] I shall want mine, if you
do it.

VER. But come; by the way I'll tell you more of him.

ALS. [aside] How shall I dare to venture in his castle, 229
When he discharges murderers <sup>37</sup> at the gate?
But I must on, for back I cannot go.

BEAT. [aside] Not this serpent gone yet?

[Drops a glove.]

VER. Look, girl, thy glove's fallen.
Stay, stay; De Flores, help a little.

DE F. Here, lady. [Offers her the glove.]

BEAT. Mischief on your officious forward-
ness!

Who bade you stoop? They touch my hand
no more —

There! For tother's sake I part with this; [Takes off and throws down the other glove.]

Take 'em, and draw thine own skin off with
'em!

Exeunt [all but DE FLORES].

DE F. Here's a favor come with a mischief now! I know

She had rather wear my pelt tann'd in a pair
Of dancing pumps, than I should thrust my fingers 240

Into her sockets here. I know she hates me,
Yet cannot choose but love her. No matter;

<sup>37</sup> Cannon used to scatter shot at short ranges.

If but to vex her, I'll haunt her still ;
Though I get nothing else, I'll have my will.

Exit.

[SCENE II] <sup>38</sup>

Enter ALIBIUS and LOLLIO.

ALIB. Lollio, I must trust thee with a secret,
But thou must keep it.

LOL. I was ever close <sup>39</sup> to a secret, sir.

ALIB. The diligence that I have found in
thee,

The care and industry already past,
Assures me of thy good continuance.

Lollio, I have a wife.

LOL. Fie, sir, 't is too late to keep her secret ; she's known close to a secret, all the town and country over. <sup>40</sup>

ALIB. Thou goest too fast, my Lollio.

That knowledge

I allow no man can be barr'd it ;

But there is a knowledge which is nearer,
Deeper, and sweeter, Lollio.

LOL. Well, sir, let us handle that between you and I.

ALIB. 'T is that I go about, man. Lollio,
My wife is young.

LOL. So much the worse to be kept secret,
sir. <sup>41</sup>

ALIB. Why, now thou meet'st the substance of the point ;

I am old, Lollio.

LOL. No, sir ; 't is I am old Lollio.

ALIB. Yet why may not this concord and sympathize ?

Old trees and young plants often grow together,

Well enough agreeing.

LOL. Ay, sir, but the old trees raise themselves higher and broader than the young plants.

ALIB. Shrewd <sup>42</sup> application ! There's the fear, man ; <sup>43</sup>

I would wear my ring on my own finger ;

Whilst it is borrowed, it is none of mine,

But his that useth it.

LOL. You must keep it on still <sup>44</sup> then ; if it but lie by, one or other will be thrusting into 't.

ALIB. Thou conceiv'st <sup>45</sup> me, Lollio ; here thy watchful eye

Must have employment ; I cannot always be
At home.

LOL. I dare swear you cannot.

ALIB. I must look out. <sup>46</sup>

LOL. I know't, you must look out ; 't is every man's case.

ALIB. Here, I do say, must thy employment be ;

To watch her treadings, and in my absence
Supply my place.

LOL. I'll do my best, sir ; yet surely I cannot see who you should have cause to be jealous of.

ALIB. Thy reason for that, Lollio ? 'T is
A comfortable <sup>47</sup> question.

LOL. We have but two sorts of people in [50 the house, and both under the whip : that's fools <sup>48</sup> and madmen ; the one has not wit enough to be knaves, and the other not knav-ery enough to be fools.

ALIB. Ay, those are all my patients, Lollio ;
I do profess the cure of either sort ;

My trade, my living 't is ; I thrive by it ;
But here's the care that mixes with my thrift :

The daily visitants, that come to see
My brainsick patients, I would not have <sup>60</sup>

To see my wife. Gallants I do observe

Of quick, enticing eyes, rich in habits,

Of stature and proportion very comely ;

These are most shrewd temptations, Lollio.

LOL. They may be easily answered, sir ; if they come to see the fools and madmen, you and I may serve the turn, and let my mistress alone ; she's of neither sort.

they to see <sup>69</sup>

Our madmen or our fools, let 'em see no more
Than what they come for ; by that consequent

They must not see her ; I'm sure she's no fool.

LOL. And I'm sure she's no madman.

ALIB. Hold that buckler fast ; Lollio, my trust

Is on thee, and I account it firm and strong.

What hour is 't, Lollio ?

LOL. Towards belly-hour, sir.

ALIB. Dinner time ? Thou mean'st twelve a'clock ?

LOL. Yes, sir, for every part has his hour :
we wake at six and look about us, that's [80 eye-hour ; at seven we should pray, that's knee-hour ; at eight walk, that's leg-hour ; at nine gather flowers and pluck a rose, <sup>50</sup> that's nose-hour ; at ten we drink, that's mouth-hour ;
at eleven lay about us for victuals, that's hand-hour ; at twelve go to dinner, that's belly-hour.

<sup>40</sup> Devilish, cursed. Alibius takes the greater height of the old trees as an allusion to the horns of the cuckold.

ALIB. Profoundly, Lollio ! It will be long Ere all thy scholars learn this lesson, and I did look to have a new one ent'red ; — stay, I think my expectation is come home. 90

Enter PEDRO, and ANTONIO [disguised] like an idiot.

PED. Save you, sir ; my business speaks it-self :

This sight takes off the labor of my tongue.

ALIB. Ay, ay, sir, 't is plain enough, you mean

Him for my patient.

PED. And if your pains prove but commodious,<sup>47</sup> to give but some little strength to his sick and weak part of nature in him, these are [giving him money] but patterns to show you of the whole pieces that will follow to you, beside the charge of diet, washing, and other [100 necessities, fully defrayed.

ALIB. Believe it, sir, there shall no care be wanting.

LOL. Sir, an officer in this place may deserve something. The trouble will pass through my hands.

PED. 'T is fit something should come to your hands then, sir. [Gives him money.]

LOL. Yes, sir, 't is I must keep him sweet,<sup>48</sup> and read to <sup>49</sup> him. What is his name ?

PED. His name is Antonio ; marry, we [110 use but half to him, only Tony.

LOL. Tony, Tony ; 't is enough, and a very good name for a fool. — What's your name, Tony ?

ANT. He, he, he ! well, I thank you, cousin ; he, he, he !

LOL. Good boy ! hold up your head. — He can laugh ; I perceive by that he is no beast.

PED. Well, sir,
If you can raise him but to any height, 120
Any degree of wit ; might he attain,
As I might say, to creep on but all four Towards the chair of wit, or walk on crutches,
'T would add an honor to your worthy pains,
And a great family might pray for you,
To which he should be heir, had he discretion
To claim and guide his own. Assure you, sir,
He is a gentleman.

LOL. Nay, there's nobody doubted that : at first sight I knew him for a gentleman ; [130 he looks no other yet.

PED. Let him have good attendance and sweet lodging.

LOL. As good as my mistress lies in, sir ; and as you allow us time and means, we can raise him to the higher degree of discretion.

PED. Nay, there shall no cost want, sir.

LOL. He will hardly be stretch'd up to the wit of a magnifico.<sup>50</sup>

PED. Oh, no, that's not to be expected ; far shorter will be enough. 140

LOL. I'll warrant you [I'll] make him fit to bear office in five weeks ; I'll undertake to wind him up to the wit of constable.

PED. If it be lower than that, it might serve turn.

LOL. No, fie ; to level him with a head-borough,<sup>51</sup> beadle, or watchman, were but little better than he is. Constable I'll able<sup>52</sup> him ; if he do come to be a justice afterwards, let him thank the keeper. Or I'll go further [150 with you ; say I do bring him up to my own pitch, say I make him as wise as myself.

PED. Why, there I would have it.

LOL. Well, go to ; either I'll be as errant a fool as he, or he shall be as wise as I, and then I think 't will serve his turn.

PED. Nay, I do like thy wit passing well.

LOL. Yes, you may ; yet if I had not been a fool, I had had more wit than I have too. Remember what state <sup>53</sup> you find me in. [160

PED. I will, and so leave you. Your best cares, I beseech you. Exit PEDRO.

ALIB. Take you none with you ; leave 'em all with us.

ANT. Oh, my cousin's gone ! cousin, cousin, oh !

LOL. Peace, peace, Tony ; you must not cry, child ; you must be whipp'd if you do ; your cousin is here still ; I am your cousin, Tony. 170

ANT. He, he ! then I'll not cry, if thou be'st my cousin ; he, he, he !

LOL. I were best try his wit a little, that I may know what form <sup>54</sup> to place him in.

ALIB. Ay, do, Lollio, do.

LOL. I must ask him easy questions at first. — Tony, how many true <sup>55</sup> fingers has a tailor on his right hand ?

ANT. As many as on his left, cousin.

LOL. Good ; and how many on both ? 180

ANT. Two less than a deuce, cousin.

LOL. Very well answered. I come to you again, cousin Tony ; how many fools goes to <sup>56</sup> a wise man ?

<sup>56</sup> Make.

ANT. Forty in a day sometimes, cousin.

LOL. Forty in a day? How prove you that?

ANT. All that fall out amongst themselves, and go to a lawyer to be made friends.

LOL. A parlous <sup>57</sup> fool! he must sit in [190 the fourth form at least. I perceive that. — I come again, Tony; how many knaves make an honest man?

ANT. I know not that, cousin.

LOL. No, the question is too hard for you. I'll tell you, cousin; there's three knaves may make an honest man: a sergeant, a jailor, and a beadle; the sergeant catches him, the jailor holds him, and the beadle lashes him; and if he be not honest then, the hangman must [200 cure him.

ANT. Ha, ha, ha! that's fine sport, cousin.

ALIB. This was too deep a question for the fool, Lollio.

LOL. Yes, this might have serv'd yourself, though I say 't. — Once more and you shall go play, Tony.

ANT. Ay, play at push-pin, <sup>58</sup> cousin; ha, he!

LOL. So thou shalt; say how many fools are here. — 210

ANT. Two, cousin; thou and I.

LOL. Nay, y'are too forward there, Tony. Mark my question; how many fools and knaves are here; a fool before a knave, a fool behind a knave, between every two fools a knave; how many fools, how many knaves?

ANT. I never learnt so far, cousin.

ALIB. Thou putt'st too hard questions to him, Lollio. 219

LOL. I'll make him understand it easily. — Cousin, stand there.

ANT. Ay, cousin.

LOL. Master, stand you next the fool.

ALIB. Well, Lollio.

LOL. Here's my place. Mark now, Tony, there's a fool before a knave.

ANT. That's I, cousin.

LOL. Here's a fool behind a knave — that's I; and between us two fools there is a knave — that's my master; 't is but "We [230 Three" <sup>59</sup> — that's all.

ANT. We three, we three, cousin.

1 MADMAN. (within) Put's head i' th' pil-lory; the bread's too little.

<sup>57</sup> Shrewd.

<sup>58</sup> Or put-pin, a child's game, in which each player pushes or flips his pin with the object of crossing that of another player. (N.E.D.)

<sup>59</sup> A stock joke was a picture of two fools, entitled "We Three", the third of course being the spectator.

2 MAD. (within) Fly, fly, and he catches the swallow.

3 MAD. (within) Give her more onion, or the Devil put the rope about her crag. <sup>60</sup>

LOL. You may hear what time of day it is; the chimes of Bedlam goes. 240

ALIB. Peace, peace, or the wire <sup>61</sup> comes!

3 MAD. (within) Cat whore, cat whore! her permasant, her permasant! <sup>62</sup>

ALIB. Peace, I say! — Their hour's come; they must be fed, Lollio.

LOL. There's no hope of recovery of that Welsh madman: was undone by a mouse that spoil'd him a permasant; lost his wits for 't.

ALIB. Go to your charge, Lollio; I'll to mine. 250

LOL. Go you to your madmen's ward; let me alone with your fools. <sup>63</sup>

ALIB. And remember my last charge, Lollio. Exit.

LOL. Of which your patients do you think I am? — Come, Tony, you must amongst your schoolfellows now; there's pretty scholars amongst 'em, I can tell you; there's some of 'em at stultus, stulta, stultum. <sup>64</sup>

ANT. I would see the madmen, cousin, [260 if they would not bite me.

LOL. No, they shall not bite thee, Tony.

ANT. They bite when they are at dinner, do they not, coz?

LOL. They bite at dinner, indeed, Tony. Well, I hope to get credit by thee; I like thee the best of all the scholars that ever I brought up, and thou shalt prove a wise man, or I'll prove a fool myself. Exeunt.

ACT II — [SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter BEATRICE and JASPERINO severally.

BEAT. Oh, sir, I'm ready now for that fair service

Which makes the name of friend sit glorious on you!

Good angels and this conduct be your guide!
[Gives a paper.]

Fitness of time and place is there set down, sir.

<sup>64</sup> I.e., so far advanced as to be able to decline stultus, = foolish.

JAS. The joy I shall return<sup>2</sup> rewards my service. Exit.

BEAT. How wise is Alsemero in his friend !
It is a sign he makes his choice with judgment ;
Then I appear in nothing more approv'd
Than making choice of him ; for 't is a principle,

He that can choose 10
That bosom well who of his thoughts partakes,
Proves most discreet in every choice he makes.
Methinks I love now with the eyes of judgment,

And see the way to merit, clearly see it.
A true deserver like a diamond sparkles :
In darkness you may see him — that's in absence,

Which is the greatest darkness falls on love ;
Yet is he best discern'd then
With intellectual eyesight. What's Piracquo,
My father spends his breath for ? And his blessing 20

Is only mine as I regard his name,
Else it goes from me, and turns head against me,

Transform'd into a curse. Some speedy way
Must be rememb'ed. He's so forward too,
So urgent that way, scarce allows me breath
To speak to my new comforts.

Enter DE FLORES.

DE F. [aside] Yonder's she ;
Whatever ails me, now a' late especially,
I can as well be hang'd as refrain seeing her ;
Some twenty times a day, nay, not so little,
Do I force errands, frame ways and excuses,
To come into her sight ; and I've small reason
for 't, 31

And less encouragement ; for she baits me still

Every time worse than other, does profess herself

The cruellest enemy to my face in town,
At no hand can abide the sight of me,
As if danger or ill luck hung in my looks.
I must confess my face is bad enough,
But I know far worse has better fortune,
And not endur'd alone, but doted on ;
And yet such pick-hair'd faces, chins like witches', 40

Here and there five hairs whispering in a corner,

As if they grew in fear one of another,
Wrinkles like troughs, where swine-deformity
swills

<sup>2</sup> To Alsemero.

The tears of perjury, that lie there like wash
Fallen from the slimy and dishonest eye, —
Yet such a one [plucks]<sup>3</sup> sweets without restraint,

And has the grace of beauty to his sweet.<sup>4</sup> Though my hard fate has thrust me out to servitude,

I tumbled into th' world a gentleman.
She turns her blessed eye upon me now, 50
And I'll endure all storms before I part with't.

BEAT. [aside] Again ?
This ominous ill-fac'd fellow more disturbs me
Than all my other passions.

DE F. [aside] Now 't begins again ;
I'll stand this storm of hail, though the stones pelt me.

BEAT. Thy business ? What's thy business ?

DE F. [aside] Soft and fair !
I cannot part so soon now.

BEAT. [aside] The villain's fix'd. —
Thou standing toad-pool<sup>5</sup> —

DE F. [aside] The show'r falls amain now.

BEAT. Who sent thee ? What's thy errand ? Leave my sight !

DE F. My Lord your father charg'd me to deliver 60

A message to you.

BEAT. What, another since ?
Do 't, and be hang'd then ; let me be rid of thee.

DE F. True service merits mercy.

BEAT. What's thy message ?

DE F. Let beauty settle but in patience,
You shall hear all.

BEAT. A dallying, trifling torment !

DE F. Signior Alonzo de Piracquo, lady,
Sole brother to Tomazo de Piracquo —

BEAT. Slave, when wilt make an end ?

DE F. Too soon I shall.

BEAT. What all this while of him ?

DE F. The said Alonzo,
With the foresaid Tomazo —

BEAT. Yet again ? [70]

DE F. Is new alighted.

BEAT. Vengeance strike the news !
Thou thing most loath'd, what cause was there in this

To bring thee to my sight ?

DE F. My Lord your father
Charg'd me to seek you out.

BEAT. Is there no other
To send his errand by ?

<sup>4</sup> In his sweetheart's eyes.

DE F. It seems 't is my luck
To be i' th' way still.

BEAT. Get thee from me !

DE F. So.
[aside] Why, am not I an ass to devise ways
Thus to be rail'd at? I must see her still !
I shall have a mad qualm within this hour
again,

I know 't ; and, like a common Garden<sup>6</sup> bull,
I do but take breath to be lugg'd ' again. [81
What this may bode I know not ; I'll despair
the less,

Because there's daily precedents of bad faces
Belov'd beyond all reason. These foul chops<sup>8</sup>
May come into favor one day 'mongst his<sup>9</sup> fellows.

Wrangling has prov'd the mistress of good pastime ;

As children cry themselves asleep, I ha' seen
Women have chid themselves abed to men.

Exit DE FLORES.

BEAT. I never see this fellow but I think
Of some harm towards me ; danger's in my mind still ; 90

I scarce leave trembling of an hour after.
The next good mood I find my father in,
I'll get him quite discarded. — Oh, I was Lost in this small disturbance, and forgot Affliction's fiercer torrent that now comes
To bear down all my comforts !

Enter VERMANDERO, ALONZO, [and] TOMAZO.

VER. Y' are both welcome,
But an especial one belongs to you, sir,
To whose most noble name our love presents
The addition<sup>10</sup> of a son, our son Alonzo.

ALON. The treasury of honor cannot bring
forth 100
A title I should more rejoice in, sir.

VER. You have improv'd it well. — Daughter, prepare ;
The day will steal upon thee suddenly.

BEAT. [aside] Howe'er, I will be sure to keep<sup>11</sup> the night,
If it should come so near me.

[*BEATRICE and VERMANDERO talk
apart.*]

TOM. Alonzo.

ALON. Brother?

TOM. In troth I see small welcome in her eye.

<sup>6</sup> Bulls and bears were baited at Paris Garden, near the theatres on the Bankside, in Southwark.

<sup>7</sup> Worried by the ear, baited.

<sup>8</sup> I.e., my face,

<sup>9</sup> Its ; referring to his face ; expressed by "foul chops." <sup>10</sup> Title. <sup>11</sup> Head.

ALON. Fie, you are too severe a censurer<sup>12</sup>
Of love in all points, there's no bringing on
you.

If lovers should mark everything a fault,
Affection would be like an ill-set<sup>13</sup> book, [110 Whose faults<sup>14</sup> might prove as big as half the volume.

BEAT. That's all I do entreat.

VER. It is but reasonable ;
I'll see what my son says to 't. — Son Alonzo,
Here is a motion made but to reprieve
A maidenhead three days longer : the request
Is not far out of reason, for indeed
The former time is pinching.

ALON. Though my joys
Be set back so much time as I could wish
They had been forward, yet since she desires
it,

The time is set as pleasing as before ; 120
I find no gladness wanting.

VER. May I ever
Meet it in that point still ! Y' are nobly welcome, sirs.

Exeunt VERMANDERO and BEATRICE.

TOM. So ; did you mark the dulness of her parting now?

ALON. What dulness? Thou art so exceptious<sup>15</sup> still !

TOM. Why, let it go then ; I am but a fool
To mark your harms so heedfully.

ALON. Where's the oversight?

TOM. Come, your faith's cozened<sup>16</sup> in her,
strongly cozened.

Unsettle your affection with all speed
Wisdom can bring it to ; your peace is ruin'd else.

Think what a torment 't is to marry one 130
Whose heart is leap'd into another's bosom :
If ever pleasure she receive from thee,
It comes not in thy name, or of thy gift ;
She lies but with another in thine arms,
He the half-father unto all thy children
In the conception ; if he get 'em not,
She helps to get 'em for him ;<sup>17</sup> and how dangerous

And shameful her restraint may [grow]<sup>18</sup> in time to,

It is not to be thought on without sufferings.

<sup>17</sup> Q adds in his passions. Dyce suggests that the author wrote the phrase and failed to strike it out upon revision.

<sup>18</sup> Conj. Bullen ; Q go.

ALON. You speak as if she lov'd some other,
then. 140

TOM. Do you apprehend so slowly?

ALON. Nay, an that
Be your fear only, I am safe enough.
Preserve your friendship and your counsel,
Brother,

For times of more distress ; I should depart
An enemy, a dangerous, deadly one,
To any but thyself, that should but think
She knew the meaning of inconstancy, Much less the use and practice ; yet w' are
friends.

Pray, let no more be urg'd ; I can endure
Much, till I meet an injury to her ; 150
Then I am not myself. Farewell, sweet
Brother ;

How much w' are bound to Heaven to depart lovingly. Exit.

TOM. Why, here is love's tame madness ;
thus a man
Quickly steals into his vexation. Exit.

[SCENE II] 19

Enter DIAPHANTA and ALSEMERO.

DIA. The place is my charge ; you have kept your hour,
And the reward of a just meeting bless you !
I hear my lady coming. Complete gentleman,
I dare not be too busy with my praises ;
The' are dangerous things to deal with. Exit.

ALS. This goes well ;
These women are the ladies' cabinets :
Things of most precious trust are lock'd into
'em.

Enter BEATRICE.

BEAT. I have within mine eye all my desires.
Requests that holy prayers ascend Heaven
for,
And brings 'em down to furnish our defects, [10
Come not more sweet to our necessities
Than thou unto my wishes.

ALS. W' are so like
In our expressions, lady, that unless I borrow
The same words, I shall never find their equals.

BEAT. How happy were this meeting, this embrace,
If it were free from envy ! 20 This poor kiss
It has an enemy, a hateful one,

<sup>20</sup> Malice.

That wishes poison to 't. How well were I
now,

If there were none such name known as Piracquo !

Nor no such tie as the command of parents — 20

I should be but too much blessed.

ALS. One good service
Would strike off both your fears, and I'll go near it too,

Since you are so distress'd. Remove the cause,
The command ceases ; so there's two fears blown out

With one and the same blast.

BEAT. Pray, let me find <sup>21</sup> you, sir.
What might that service be, so strangely
happy?

ALS. The honorablest piece 'bout man,
valor ;

I'll send a challenge to Piracquo instantly.

BEAT. How? Call you that extinguishing of fear,

When 't is the only way to keep it flaming? [30
Are not you ventured <sup>22</sup> in the action,

That's all my joys and comforts? Pray, no more, sir.

Say you prevail'd, you're danger's and not mine then ;

The law would claim you from me, or obscurity

Be made the grave to bury you alive.

I'm glad these thoughts come forth ; oh, keep not one

Of this condition, sir ! Here was a course
Found to bring sorrow on her way to death ;
The tears would ne'er 'a' dried, till dust had chok'd 'em.

Blood-guiltiness becomes a fouler visage ; —
And now I think on one. — [aside] I was to blame, 41

I ha' marr'd so good a market with my scorn ;
'T had been done questionless ; the ugliest
creature

Creation fram'd for some use ; yet to see
I could not mark so much where it should be !

ALS. Lady !

BEAT. [aside] Why, men of art make much of poison,
Keep one to expel another. Where was my art?

ALS. Lady, you hear not me.

BEAT. I do especially, sir.
The present times are not so sure of our side

<sup>22</sup> Risked.

As those hereafter may be ; we must use 'em
then 50
As thrifty folks their wealth, sparingly now,
Till the time opens.

ALS. You teach wisdom, lady.

BEAT. Within there ! Diaphanta !

Re-enter DIAPHANTA.

DIA. Do you call, madam ?

BEAT. Perfect your service, and conduct
this gentleman

The private way you brought him.

DIA. I shall, madam.

ALS. My love's as firm as love e'er built upon.

Exeunt DIAPHANTA and ALSEMERO.

Enter DE FLORES.

DE F. [aside] I have watch'd this meeting, and do wonder much
What shall become of tother ; I'm sure both Cannot be serv'd unless she transgress ; happily <sup>23</sup>

Then I'll put in for one ; for if a woman [60
Fly from one point, from him she makes a
husband,

She spreads and mounts then like arithmetic :
One, ten, a hundred, a thousand, ten thousand —

Proves in time sutler to an army royal.

Now do I look to be most richly rail'd at,

Yet I must see her.

BEAT. [aside] Why, put case <sup>24</sup> I loath'd him

As much as youth and beauty hates a sepulchre, Must I needs show it ? Cannot I keep that secret,

And serve my turn upon him ? See, he's here. —

De Flores.

DE F. [aside] Ha, I shall run mad with joy ! 70

She call'd me fairly by my name, De Flores,
And neither rogue nor rascal.

BEAT. What ha' you done
To your face a' late ? Y' ave met with some good physician ;

Y' ave prun'd <sup>25</sup> yourself, methinks ; you were not wont

To look so amorously. <sup>26</sup>

DE F. Not I. —

[aside] 'T is the same physnomy, <sup>27</sup> to a hair and pimple,

<sup>26</sup> So like a lover. <sup>27</sup> Physiognomy.

Which she call'd scurvy scarce an hour ago.

How is this ?

BEAT. Come hither ; nearer, man.

DE F. [aside] I'm up to the chin in Heaven !

BEAT. Turn, let me see ;

Vauh, <sup>28</sup> 't is but the heat of the liver, I perceive 't ; 80

I thought it had been worse.

DE F. [aside] Her fingers touch'd me !
She smells all amber. <sup>29</sup>

BEAT. I'll make a water for you shall cleanse this

Within a fortnight.

DE F. With your own hands, lady ?

BEAT. Yes, mine own, sir ; in a work of cure

I'll trust no other.

DE F. [aside] 'T is half an act of
pleasure

To hear her talk thus to me.

BEAT. When w' are us'd

To a hard face, 't is not so unpleasing ;

It mends still in opinion, hourly mends ;

I see it by experience.

DE F. [aside] I was blest 90

To light upon this minute ; I'll make use on 't.

BEAT. Hardness becomes the visage of a man well ;

It argues service, resolution, manhood —

If cause were of employment.

DE F. 'T would be soon seen

If e'er your Ladyship had cause to use it ;

I would but wish the honor of a service

So happy as that mounts to.

BEAT. [aside] We shall try you. —

O my De Flores !

DE F. [aside] How's that ? She calls me hers

Already ! My De Flores ! — You were about
To sigh out somewhat, madam ?

BEAT. No, was I ? [100

I forgot, — oh ! —

DE F. There 't is again, the very Fellow on 't.

BEAT. You are too quick, sir.

DE F. There's no excuse for 't now ; I heard it twice, madam ;

That sigh would fain have utterance : take pity on 't,

And lend it a free word. 'Las, how it labors
For liberty ! I hear the murmur yet

Beat at your bosom.

BEAT. Would creation —

DE F. Ay, well said, that 's it.

<sup>29</sup> Ambergris.

BEAT. Had form'd me man !

DE F. Nay, that's not it.

BEAT. Oh, 't is the soul of freedom !
I should not then be forc'd to marry one [110
I hate beyond all depths ; I should have power
Then to oppose my loathings, nay, remove 'em
For ever from my sight.

DE F. [aside] O blest occasion ! — Without change to your sex you have your wishes ;

Claim so much man in me.

BEAT. In thee, De Flores ?
There's small cause for that.

DE F. Put it not from me ;
It's a service that I kneel for to you. [Kneels.]

BEAT. You are too violent to mean faithfully.

There's horror in my service, blood, and
danger.

Can those be things to sue for ?

DE F. If you knew [120
How sweet it were to me to be employed
In any act of yours, you would say then
I fail'd, and us'd not reverence enough
When I receive[d] the charge on 't.

BEAT. [aside] This is much,
Methinks ; belike his wants are greedy ; and,
To such, odd tastes like angel's food. — Rise.

DE F. I'll have the work first.

BEAT. [aside] Possible his need Is strong upon him. — There's to encourage thee ; [Gives money.]

As thou art forward, and thy service dangerous,

Thy reward shall be precious.

DE F. That I have thought on ; [130
I have assur'd myself of that beforehand,
And know it will be precious ; the thought ravishes !

BEAT. Then take him to thy fury !

DE F. I thirst for him.

BEAT. Alonzo de Piracquo.

DE F. [rising] His end's upon him ;
He shall be seen no more.

BEAT. How lovely now Dost thou appear to me ! Never was man
Dearlier rewarded.

DE F. I do think of that.

BEAT. Be wondrous careful in the execution.

DE F. Why, are not both our lives upon the cast ? <sup>20</sup>

BEAT. Then I throw all my fears upon thy
service. 140

<sup>20</sup> Throw of the dice.

DE F. They ne'er shall rise to hurt you.

BEAT. When the deed's done,
I'll furnish thee with all things for thy flight ;
Thou mayst live bravely <sup>31</sup> in another country.

DE F. Ay, ay ;
We'll talk of that hereafter.

BEAT. [aside] I shall rid myself
Of two inveterate loathings at one time :
Piracquo, and his dog-face. Exit.

DE F. O my blood !
Methinks I feel her in mine arms already ;
Her wanton fingers combing out this beard,
And, being pleased, praising this bad face. [150 Hunger and pleasure, <sup>32</sup> they'll commend sometimes

Slovenly dishes, and feed heartily on 'em.
Nay, which is stranger, refuse daintier for 'em.
Some women are odd feeders. — I'm too loud.
Here comes the man goes supperless to bed,
Yet shall not rise to-morrow to his dinner.

Enter ALONZO.

ALON. De Flores.

DE F. My kind, honorable Lord.

ALON. I am glad I ha' met with thee.

DE F. Sir.

ALON. Thou canst show me
The full strength of the castle.

DE F. That I can, sir.

ALON. I much desire it.

DE F. And if the ways and straits [160
Of some of the passages be not too tedious for
you,

I will assure you, worth your time and sight,
my Lord.

ALON. Pooh, that shall be no hindrance.

DE F. I'm your servant, then.
'T is now near dinner time ; 'gainst <sup>33</sup> your Lordship's rising <sup>34</sup>

I'll have the keys about me.

ALON. Thanks, kind De Flores.

DE F. [aside] He's safely thrust upon me, beyond hopes. Exeunt.

ACT III — [SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter ALONZO and DE FLORES. (In the act-time <sup>2</sup> DE FLORES hides a naked rapier.)

DE F. Yes, here are all the keys ; I was afraid, my Lord,

<sup>3</sup> In the source, behind a door.

I'd wanted <sup>4</sup> for the postern — this is it.
I've all, I've all, my Lord: this for the sconce.<sup>5</sup>

ALON. 'Tis a most spacious and impregnable fort.

DE F. You'll tell me more, my Lord. This descent

Is somewhat narrow, we shall never pass
Well with our weapons, they'll but trouble
us.

ALON. Thou say'st true.

DE F. Pray, let me help your Lordship.

ALON. 'Tis done; thanks, kind De Flores.

DE F. Here are hooks, my Lord,
To hang such things on purpose.

[Hanging up his own sword and that of ALONZO.]

ALON. Lead, I'll follow thee. [10
*Exeunt at one door, and enter at the
other.*]

[SCENE II] <sup>6</sup>

DE F. All this is nothing; you shall see
anon

A place you little dream on.

ALON. I am glad

I have this leisure; all your master's house
Imagine I ha' taken a gondola.

DE F. All but myself, sir, — [aside] which makes up my safety. —

My Lord, I'll place you at a casement here
Will show you the full strength of all the castle.
Look, spend your eye awhile upon that object.

ALON. Here's rich variety, De Flores.

DE F. Yes, sir.

ALON. Goodly munition.

DE F. Ay, there's ordnance, sir, [10
No bastard metal, will ring you a peal like bells

At great men's funerals. Keep your eye straight, my Lord;

Take special notice of that sconce before you;
There you may dwell awhile.

[Takes the rapier which he has hidden.]

ALON. I am upon 't.

DE F. And so am I. [Stabs him.]

ALON. De Flores! O De Flores!

Whose malice hast thou put on?

DE F. Do you question
A work of secrecy? I must silence you.

[Stabs him.]

ALON. O, O, O!

<sup>6</sup> In the source, the "vault of the casemate."

DE F. I must silence you. [Stabs him.]
So; here's an undertaking well accomplish'd.
This vault serves to good use now. Ha, what's that

Threw sparkles in my eye? — Oh, 'tis a diamond

He wears upon his finger; it was well found;
This will approve the work.<sup>7</sup> What, so fast
on?

Not part in death? I'll take a speedy course
then.

Finger and all shall off. [Cuts off the finger.]

So; now I'll clear

The passages from all suspect or fear.

Exit with body.

[SCENE III] <sup>8</sup>

Enter ISABELLA and LOLLIO.

ISA. Why, sirrah, whence have you commission

To fetter the doors against me? If you
Keep me in a cage, pray whistle to me,
Let me be doing something.

LOL. You shall be doing, if it please you;
I'll whistle to you, if you'll pipe after.

ISA. Is it your master's pleasure, or your
own,

To keep me in this pinfold? <sup>9</sup>

LOL. 'Tis for my master's pleasure, lest being taken in another man's corn, you [10 might be pounded<sup>10</sup> in another place.

ISA. 'Tis very well, and he'll prove very wise.

LOL. He says you have company enough in the house, if you please to be sociable, of all sorts of people.

ISA. Of all sorts? Why, here's none but fools and madmen.

LOL. Very well; and where will you find any other, if you should go abroad? [20
There's my master and I to boot too.

ISA. Of either sort one, a madman and a fool.

LOL. I would ev'n participate of both, then, if I were as you; I know y' are half mad already; be half foolish too.

ISA. Y' are a brave,<sup>11</sup> saucy rascal! Come on, sir,

Afford me then the pleasure of your bedlam.<sup>12</sup>
You were commending once to-day to me

<sup>10</sup> Put in a pound, with an obvious double-entendre.

<sup>12</sup> Madhouse.

Your last-come lunatic ; what a proper <sup>13</sup> [30
Body there was without brains to guide it,
And what a pitiful delight appear'd
In that defect, as if your wisdom had found
A mirth in madness ; pray, sir, let me partake,
If there be such a pleasure.

LOL. If I do not show you the handsomest, discreetest madman, one that I may call the understanding madman, then say I am a fool.

ISA. Well, a match ; <sup>14</sup> I will say so.

LOL. When you have a taste of the [40 madman, you shall, if you please, see Fool's College, o' th' <sup>15</sup> side. I seldom look there ;
't is but shooting a bolt or two, and you are amongst 'em. Exit. Re-enter presently. <sup>16</sup> — Come on, sir ; let me see how handsomely you'll behave yourself now.

Enter FRANCISCUS.

FRAN. How sweetly she looks ! Oh, but there's a wrinkle in her brow as deep as philosophy. Anacreon, drink to my mistress' health ; I'll pledge it. Stay, stay, there's [50 a spider in the cup ! No, 't is but a grape-stone ; swallow it ; fear nothing, poet ; so,
so, lift higher.

ISA. Alack, alack, 't is too full of pity
To be laugh'd at ! How fell he mad ? Canst thou tell ?

LOL. For love, mistress. He was a pretty poet, too, and that set him forwards first ; <sup>17</sup> the Muses then forsook him ; he ran mad for a chambermaid, yet she was but a dwarf neither.

FRAN. Hail, bright Titania ! 60
Why stand'st thou idle on these flow'ry banks ?

Oberon is dancing with his Dryades ;
I'll gather daisies, primrose, violets,
And bind them in a verse of poesy.

LOL. [holding up a whip] Not too near !
You see your danger.

FRAN. Oh, hold thy hand, great Diomed !
Thou feed'st thy horses well ; they shall obey
thee.

Get up, Bucephalus kneels. [Kneels.]

LOL. You see how I awe my flock ; a [70 shepherd has not his dog at more obedience.

ISA. His conscience is unquiet ; sure that was

The cause of this ; a proper gentleman !

FRAN. Come hither, Æsculapius ; hide the poison.

LOL. Well, 't is hid. [Hides the whip.]

FRAN. Didst thou never hear of one Ti-resias, <sup>18</sup>

A famous poet ?

LOL. Yes, that kept tame wild-geese.

FRAN. That's he ; I am the man.

LOL. No !

80

FRAN. Yes ; but make no words on 't. I was a man

Seven years ago.

LOL. A stripling, I think, you might.

FRAN. Now I'm a woman, all feminine.

LOL. I would I might see that !

FRAN. Juno struck me blind.

LOL. I'll ne'er believe that ; for a woman, they say, has an eye more than a man.

FRAN. I say she struck me blind.

LOL. And Luna made you mad ; you have two trades to beg with. 90

FRAN. Luna is now big-bellied, and there's room

For both of us to ride with Hecate ;

I'll drag thee up into her silver sphere,

And there we'll kick the dog — and beat the bush —

That barks against the witches of the night ;
The swift lycanthropi <sup>19</sup> that walks the round, We'll tear their wolvisk skins, and save the sheep. [Attempts to seize LOLLIO.]

LOL. Is't come to this ? Nay, then, my poison comes forth again. [showing the whip]
Mad slave, indeed ; abuse your keeper ! [100

ISA. I prithee, hence with him, now he grows dangerous.

FRAN. (sing.)

Sweet love, pity me ;
Give me leave to lie with thee.

LOL. No, I'll see you wiser first. To your own kennel !

FRAN. No noise, she sleeps ; draw all the curtains round ;

Let no soft sound molest the pretty soul

But love, and love creeps in at a mouse-hole.

LOL. I would you would get into your hole !
(Exit FRANCISCUS.) — Now, mistress, I will bring you another sort ; you shall be [110 fool'd another while. [Exit, and re-enter.] — Tony, come hither, Tony : look who's yonder, Tony.

<sup>18</sup> The Theban prophet of classical mythology. According to one version of his story Juno struck him blind. His sexual metamorphoses are also part of his myth. The allusion to the geese is presumably mere nonsensical talk to the supposed lunatic.

<sup>17</sup> Got him started.

Enter ANTONIO.

ANT. Cousin, is it not my aunt? <sup>20</sup>

LOL. Yes, 't is one of 'em, Tony.

ANT. He, he! how do you, Uncle?

LOL. Fear him not, mistress; 't is a gentle nidget; <sup>21</sup> you may play with him, as safely with him as with his bauble. <sup>22</sup>

ISA. How long hast thou been a fool? 120

ANT. Ever since I came hither, cousin.

ISA. Cousin? I'm none of thy cousins, fool.

LOL. Oh, mistress, fools have always so much wit as to claim their kindred.

MADMAN. [above] (within) Bounce, <sup>23</sup> bounce! he falls, he falls!

ISA. Hark you, your scholars in the upper room

Are out of order. 129

LOL. Must I come amongst you there? — Keep you the fool, mistress; I'll go up and play left-handed Orlando <sup>24</sup> amongst the madmen. Exit.

ISA. Well, sir.

ANT. 'T is opportuneful now, sweet lady! — nay,

Cast no amazing eye upon this change.

ISA. Ha!

ANT. This shape of folly shrouds your dearest love,
The truest servant to your powerful beauties,
Whose magic had this force thus to transform me. 140

ISA. You are a fine fool indeed!

ANT. Oh, 't is not strange!
Love has an intellect that runs through all
The scrutinous consciences; and, like a cunning poet,

Catches a quantity of every knowledge,
Yet brings all home into one mystery,
Into one secret that he proceeds in.

ISA. Y' are a parlous fool.

ANT. No danger in me; I bring naught but love
And his soft-wounding shafts to strike you with.

Try but one arrow; if it hurt you, I'll 150
Stand you twenty back in recompense.

[Kisses her.] <sup>25</sup>

ISA. A forward fool too!

ANT.

This was love's teaching:
A thousand ways [he] <sup>26</sup> fashion'd out my way,

And this I found the safest and [the] nearest,
To tread the Galaxia <sup>27</sup> to my star.

ISA. Profound withal! Certain, you dream'd of this;

Love never taught it waking.

ANT. Take no acquaintance
Of these outward follies; there is within
A gentleman that loves you.

ISA. When I see him, [159
I'll speak with him; so, in the meantime, keep Your habit; it becomes you well enough.

As you are a gentleman, I'll not discover you;
That's all the favor that you must expect.
When you are weary, you may leave the school,
For all this while you have but play'd the fool.

Re-enter LOLLIO.

ANT. And must again. — He, he! I thank you, cousin;

I'll be your valentine to-morrow morning.

LOL. How do you like the fool, mistress?

ISA. Passing well, sir.

LOL. Is he not witty, pretty well, for [170
a fool?

ISA. If he holds on as he begins, he is like to come to something.

LOL. Ay, thank a good tutor. You may put him to 't; he begins to answer pretty hard questions. — Tony, how many is five times six?

ANT. Five times six is six times five.

LOL. What arithmetician could have answer'd better? How many is one hun- [180 dred and seven?

ANT. One hundred and seven is seven hundred and one, cousin.

LOL. This is no wit to speak on! — Will you be rid of the fool now?

ISA. By no means: let him stay a little.

MADMAN (within) Catch there; catch the last couple in hell! <sup>28</sup>

LOL. Again! Must I come amongst you? — Would my master were come home! [190
I am not able to govern both these wards together. Exit.

ANT. Why should a minute of love's hour be lost?

<sup>28</sup> Alluding to the game of barley-break; the last couple was left in "hell", the middle of three compartments.

ISA. Fie, out again! I had rather you kept Your other posture; you become not your
tongue

When you speak from <sup>29</sup> your clothes.

ANT. How can he freeze
Lives near so sweet a warmth? Shall I alone
Walk through the orchard of th' Hesperides,
And, cowardly, not dare to pull an apple?

Re-enter LOLLIO, above.

This with the red cheeks I must venture for.

[Attempts to kiss her.]

ISA. Take heed, there's giants keep 'em.

LOL. [aside] How now, fool, are you [202 good at that? Have you read Lipsius? <sup>30</sup> He's past Ars Amandi <sup>31</sup>; I believe I must put harder questions to him, I perceive that.

ISA. You are bold without fear too.

ANT. What should I fear,
Having all joys about me? Do you smile,
And love shall play the wanton on your lip,
Meet and retire, retire and meet again;
Look you but cheerfully, and in your eyes [210
I shall behold mine own deformity,
And dress myself up fairer. I know this shape
Becomes me not, but in those bright mirrors
I shall array me handsomely.

LOL. Cuckoo, cuckoo! <sup>32</sup> Exit.

Madmen [cry] above, some as birds,
others as beasts.

ANT. What are these?

ISA. Of fear enough to part us;
Yet are they but our schools of lunatics,
That act their fantasies in any shapes, Suiting their present thoughts; if sad, they cry;

If mirth be their conceit, they laugh again.
Sometimes they imitate the beasts and birds,
Singing or howling, braying, barking, all [221
As their wild fancies prompt 'em.

Re-enter LOLLIO.

ANT. These are no fears.

ISA. But here's a large one, my man.

ANT. Ha, he! that's fine sport, indeed, cousin.

LOL. I would my master were come home!
'Tis too much for one shepherd to govern

<sup>30</sup> "Is it necessary to notice that the name of this great scholar is introduced merely for the sake of its first syllable?" (Dyce.) Lipsius was a sixteenth-century Belgian.

two of these flocks; nor can I believe that one churchman can instruct two benefices at once; there will be some incurable mad [230 of the one side, and very fools on the other.
— Come, Tony.

ANT. Prithce, cousin, let me stay here still.

LOL. No, you must to your book now; you have play'd sufficiently.

ISA. Your fool is grown wondrous witty.

LOL. Well, I'll say nothing: but I do not think but he will put you down <sup>33</sup> one of these days.

Exeunt LOLLIO and ANTONIO.

ISA. Here the restrained current might make breach, 240
Spite of the watchful bankers.<sup>34</sup> Would a woman stray,

She need not gad abroad to seek her sin:
It would be brought home one ways or other.
The needle's point will to the fixed north;
Such drawing arctics <sup>35</sup> women's beauties
are.

Re-enter LOLLIO.

LOL. How dost thou, sweet rogue?

ISA. How now?

LOL. Come, there are degrees; one fool may be better than another.

ISA. What's the matter? 250

LOL. Nay, if thou giv'st thy mind to fool's flesh, have at thee!

ISA. You bold slave, you!

LOL. I could follow now as tother fool
did:

"What should I fear,
Having all joys about me? Do you but smile,
And love shall play the wanton on your lip,
Meet and retire, retire and meet again;
Look you but cheerfully, and in your eyes
I shall behold my own deformity, 261
And dress myself up fairer. I know this shape

Becomes me not — "

And so as it follows: but is not this the more foolish way? Come, sweet rogue; kiss me, my little Lacedaemonian; let me feel how thy pulses beat. Thou hast a thing about thee would do a man pleasure, I'll lay <sup>36</sup> my hand on 't.

ISA. Sirrah, no more! I see you have discovered 270

This love's knight [e]rrant, who hath made adventure

For purchase of <sup>37</sup> my love. Be silent, mute, Mute as a statue, or his injunction, For me enjoying, shall be to cut thy throat ; I'll do it, though for no other purpose ; and Be sure he'll not refuse it.

LOL. My share, that's all ; I'll have my fool's part with you.

ISA. No more ! Your master.

Enter ALIBIUS.

ALIB. Sweet, how dost thou ?

ISA. Your bounden servant, sir.

ALIB. Fie, fie, sweetheart, no more of that.

ISA. You were best lock me up. 280

ALIB. In my arms and bosom, my sweet Isabella,

I'll lock thee up most nearly. — Lollo, We have employment, we have task in hand. At noble Vermandero's, our castle captain, There is a nuptial to be solemniz'd — Beatrice-Joanna, his fair daughter, bride, — For which the gentleman hath bespoke our pains,

A mixture of our madmen and our fools, To finish, as it were, and make the fag <sup>38</sup> Of all the revels, the third night from the first ; Only an unexpected passage over, <sup>39</sup> 291 To make a frightful pleasure, that is all, But not the all I aim at. Could we so act it, To teach it in a wild distracted measure, <sup>40</sup> Though out of form and figure, breaking time's head,

It were no matter, 't would be heal'd again In one age or other, if not in this ; This, this, Lollo ; there's a good reward begun, And will beget a bounty, be it known.

LOL. This is easy, sir, I'll warrant you ; [300 you have about you fools and madmen that can dance very well ; and 't is no wonder, your best dancers are not in the wisest men ; the reason is, with often jumping they jolt their brains down into their feet, that their wits lie more in their heels than in their heads.

ALIB. Honest Lollo, thou giv'st me a good reason, And a comfort in it.

ISA. Y'ave a fine trade on 't. Madmen and fools are a staple commodity.

ALIB. Oh, wife, we must eat, wear clothes, and live. 310

Just at the lawyer's haven we arrive : By madmen and by fools we both do thrive.

Exeunt.

[SCENE IV] <sup>41</sup>

Enter VERMANDERO, ALSEMERO, JASPERINO, and BEATRICE.

VER. Valencia speaks so nobly of you, sir, I wish I had a daughter now for you.

ALS. The fellow of this creature were a partner For a king's love.

VER. I had her fellow once, sir ; But Heaven has married her to joys eternal ; 'T were sin to wish her in this vale again.

Come, sir, your friend and you shall see the pleasures

Which my health chiefly joys in.

ALS. I hear The beauty of this seat largely [commended]. <sup>42</sup>

VER. It falls much short of that.

Exeunt [all but] BEATRICE.

BEAT. So, here's one step [10 Into my father's favor ; time will fix him. I've got him now the liberty of the house. So wisdom, by degrees, works out her freedom ; And if that eye be dark'ned that offends me, — I wait but that eclipse, — this gentleman Shall soon shine glorious in my father's liking, Through the refulgent virtue of my love.

Enter DE FLORES.

DE F. [aside] My thoughts are at a banquet ; for <sup>43</sup> the deed, I feel no weight in 't ; 't is but light and cheap For the sweet recompense that I set down for 't. [20

BEAT. De Flores.

DE F. Lady.

BEAT. Thy looks promise cheerfully.

DE F. All things are answerable : time, circumstance, Your wishes, and my service.

BEAT. Is it done, then ?

DE F. Piracquo is no more.

BEAT. My joys start at mine eyes ; our sweet'st delights Are evermore born weeping.

DE F. I've a token for you.

BEAT. For me ?

DE F. But it was sent somewhat unwillingly ;

I could not get the ring without the finger.

[Producing the finger and ring.]

BEAT. Bless me, what hast thou done?

DE F. Why, is that more [30
Than killing the whole man? I cut his heart-strings;

A greedy hand thrust in a dish at court,
In a mistake, hath had as much as this.

BEAT. 'T is the first token my father made me send him.

DE F. And I made him send it back again
For his last token. I was loth to leave it,
And I'm sure dead men have no use of jewels;
He was as loth to part with 't, for it stuck
As if the flesh and it were both one substance.

BEAT. At the stag's fall, the keeper has his fees; 40

'T is <sup>44</sup> soon appli'd: all dead men's fees are yours, sir.

I pray, bury the finger; but the stone
You may make use on shortly; the true value,
Take 't of my truth, is near three hundred
ducats.

DE F. 'T will hardly buy a capcase <sup>45</sup> for one's conscience though,
To keep it from the worm, as fine as 't is.
Well, being my fees, I'll take it;
Great men have taught me that, or else my merit

Would scorn the way on 't.

BEAT. It might justly, sir.
Why, thou mistak'st, De Flores; 't is not given 50

In state of <sup>46</sup> recompense.

DE F. No, I hope so, lady;
You should soon witness my contempt to 't
then.

BEAT. Prithee — thou look'st as if thou wert offended.

DE F. That were strange, lady; 't is not possible
My service should draw such a cause from
you.

Offended! Could you think so? That were much

For one of my performance, and so warm
Yet in my service.

BEAT. 'T were misery in me to give you cause, sir.

DE F. I know so much: it were so; misery 60

In her most sharp condition.

BEAT.

'T is resolv'd <sup>47</sup> then;
Look you, sir, here's three thousand golden florins; <sup>48</sup>

I have not meanly thought upon thy merit.

DE F. What! salary? Now you move me.

BEAT. How, De Flores?

DE F. Do you place me in the rank of ver-minous fellows,

To destroy things for wages? Offer gold
For the lifeblood of man? Is anything
Valued too precious for my recompense?

BEAT. I understand thee not.

DE F. I could ha' hir'd
A journeyman in murder at this rate, 70
And mine own conscience might have [slept at ease], <sup>49</sup>

And have had the work brought home.

BEAT. [aside] I'm in a labyrinth;
What will content him? I'd fain be rid of
him. —

I'll double the sum, sir.

DE F. You take a course
To double my vexation, that's the good you
do.

BEAT. [aside] Bless me, I am now in worse plight than I was;
I know not what will please him. — For my fear's sake,

I prithee, make away with all speed possible;

And if thou be'st so modest not to name
The sum that will content thee, paper blushes
not: 80

Send thy demand in writing, it shall follow
thee;

But, prithee, take thy flight.

DE F. You must fly too, then.

BEAT. I?

DE F. I'll not stir a foot else.

BEAT. What's your meaning?

DE F. Why, are not you as guilty? In,
I'm sure,

As deep as I; and we should stick together.
Come, your fears counsel you but ill; my absence

Would draw suspect upon you instantly;
There were no rescue for you.

BEAT. [aside] He speaks home!

DE F. Nor is it fit we two, engag'd so jointly,

Should part and live asunder.

<sup>47</sup> Settled.

<sup>44</sup> I.e., my remark about the keeper's fees is. Apparently De Flores makes a gesture of inquiry or dissent.

<sup>48</sup> The English name for various continental coins. In view of the weight of such a sum in gold Dyce suggests that Beatrice may hand De Flores a paper <sup>49</sup> Add. ed. 1816.

BEAT. How now, sir! [90
This shows not well.

DE F. What makes your lip so strange? <sup>80</sup>
This must not be betwixt us.

BEAT. The man talks wildly!

DE F. Come, kiss me with a zeal now.

BEAT. [aside] Heaven, I doubt <sup>81</sup> him!

DE F. I will not stand so long to beg 'em shortly.

BEAT. Take heed, De Flores, of forgetful-
ness;

'T will soon betray us.

DE F. Take you heed first;
Faith, y' are grown much forgetful; y' are to blame in 't.

BEAT. [aside] He's bold, and I am blam'd
for 't.

DE F. I have eas'd you
Of your trouble; think on 't: I'm in pain, [99
And must be eas'd of <sup>82</sup> you; 't is a charity:
Justice invites your blood to understand me.

BEAT. I dare not.

DE F. Quickly!

BEAT. Oh, I never shall!
Speak it yet further off, that I may lose
What has been spoken, and no sound remain
on 't;

I would not hear so much offence again
For such another deed.

DE F. Soft, lady, soft!
The last is not yet paid for. Oh, this act
Has put me into spirit; I was as greedy
on 't

As the parch'd earth of moisture, when the clouds weep. 109

Did you not mark I wrought myself into 't, Nay, sued and kneel'd for 't? Why was all that pains took?

You see I have thrown contempt upon your
gold;

'Not that I want it [not], <sup>83</sup> for I do piteously;
In order I'll come unto 't, and make use on 't;
But 't was not held so precious to begin with,
For I place wealth after the heels of pleasure;
And were not I resolv'd in my belief
That thy virginity were perfect in thee,
I should but take my recompense with grudg-
ing. <sup>84</sup> 119

As if I had but half my hopes I agreed for.

BEAT. Why, 't is impossible thou canst be so wicked,

Or shelter such a cunning cruelty,
To make his death the murderer of my honor!

Thy language is so bold and vicious,
I cannot see which way I can forgive it
With any modesty.

DE F. Push! you forget yourself;
A woman dipp'd in blood, and talk of modesty!

BEAT. O misery of sin! would I had been bound

Perpetually unto my living hate 129
In that Piracquo, than to hear these words!
Think but upon the distance that creation
Set 'twixt thy blood and mine, and keep thee
there.

DE F. Look but into your conscience; read me there:—

'T is a true book; you'll find me there your equal.

Push! fly not to your birth, but settle you
In what the act has made you; y' are no more
now.

You must forget your parentage; <sup>85</sup> to me
Y' are the deed's creature; by that name
You lost your first condition, and I challenge
you, 139

As peace and innocency has turn'd you out,
And made you one with me.

BEAT. With thee, foul villain!

DE F. Yes, my fair murd'ress. Do you urge me,
Though thou writ'st maid, thou whore in thy affection?

'T was chang'd from thy first love, and that's a kind

Of whoredom in thy heart; and he's chang'd
now

To bring thy second on, thy Alsemero, Whom, by all sweets that ever darkness
tasted,

If I enjoy thee not, thou ne'er enjoy'st!
I'll blast the hopes and joys of marriage; <sup>86</sup>
I'll confess all; my life I rate at nothing. [150

BEAT. De Flores!

DE F. I shall rest from all lovers' plagues then;

I live in pain now: that shooting eye
Will burn my heart to cinders.

BEAT. Oh, sir, hear me!

DE F. She that in life and love refuses me,
In death and shame my partner she shall be.

BEAT. [kneeling] Stay, hear me once for all;
I make thee master

Of all the wealth I have in gold and jewels;
Let me go poor unto my bed with honor,
And I am rich in all things!

<sup>84</sup> Complaining.

of after "me."

<sup>86</sup> Trisyllabic.

DE F. Let this silence thee :
The wealth of all Valencia shall not buy [160
My pleasure from me ;
Can you weep Fate from its determin'd purpose ?

So soon may [you] weep me.

BEAT. Vengeance begins ;
Murder, I see, is followed by more sins.
Was my creation in the womb so curs'd,
It must engender with a viper first ?

DE F. Come, rise and shroud your blushes
in my bosom ;

Silence is one of pleasure's best receipts ;<sup>57</sup>
Thy peace is wrought for ever in this yielding.
'Las ! how the turtle<sup>58</sup> pants ! Thou 'lt love
anon 170

What thou so fear'st and faint'st to venture on.
Exeunt.

ACT IV

[DUMB SHOW]

Enter Gentlemen, VERMANDERO meeting them with action of wonderment at the flight of Piracquo. Enter ALSEMERO with JASPERINO and Gallants: VERMANDERO points to him, the Gentlemen seeming to applaud the choice. ALSEMERO, JASPERINO, and Gentlemen; BEATRICE the bride following in great state, accompanied with DIAPHANTA, ISABELLA, and other Gentlewomen; DE FLORES after all, smiling at the accident: ALONZO's Ghost appears to DE FLORES in the midst of his smile, startles him, showing him the hand whose finger he had cut off. They pass over in great solemnity.<sup>1</sup>

[SCENE I]<sup>2</sup>

Enter BEATRICE.

BEAT. This fellow has undone me endlessly ;
Never was bride so fearfully distress'd.
The more I think upon th' ensuing night,
And whom I am to cope with in embraces :
One both ennobled<sup>3</sup> in blood and mind,
So clear in understanding — that's my plague
now, —

Before whose judgment will my fault appear

<sup>3</sup> Q both ennobled both. "Ennobled" is quadrisyllabic.

Like malefactors' crimes before tribunals.
There is no hiding on 't, the more I dive
Into my own distress. How a wise man [10 Stands for 'a great calamity ! There's no venturing

Into his bed, what course soe'er I light upon, Without my shame, which may grow up to danger.

He cannot but in justice strangle me
As I lie by him — as a cheater use me ;
'T is a precious craft to play with a false die Before a cunning gamester. Here's his closet ;

The key left in 't, and he abroad i' th' park !
Sure 't was forgot ; I'll be so bold as look in 't.
[Opens closet.]

Bless me ! a right<sup>4</sup> physician's closet 't is, [20
Set round with vials ; every one her mark too.
Sure he does practise physic for his own use,
Which may be safely call'd your great man's wisdom.<sup>6</sup>

What manuscript lies here ? "The Book of Experiment,
Call'd Secrets in Nature." So 't is ; 't is so.

[Reads.] "How to know whether a woman be with child or no."

I hope I am not yet, — if he should try
though !

Let me see [reads] "folio forty-five," here 't is,
The leaf tuck'd dow[n] upon 't, the place suspicious. 30

[Reads.] "If you would know whether a woman be with child or not, give her two spoonfuls of the white water in glass C —" Where's that glass C ? Oh, yonder, I see 't
now —

[Reads.] "and if she be with child, she sleeps full twelve hours after ; if not, not :"

None of that water comes into my belly ;
I'll know you from a hundred ; I could break
you now,

Or turn you into milk, and so beguile
The master of the mystery ; but I'll look to
you. 40

Ha ! that which is next is ten times worse :

[Reads.] "How to know whether a woman be a maid or not ;"

If that should be appli'd, what would become of me ?

Belike he has a strong faith of my purity,
That never yet made proof ;<sup>7</sup> but this he calls

ment; the author Antonius Mizaldus.<sup>9</sup> Give the party you suspect the quantity of a spoonful of the water in the glass M, which, [50 upon her that is a maid, makes three several effects: 't will make her incontinently<sup>10</sup> gape, then fall into a sudden sneezing, last into a violent laughing; else, dull, heavy, and lumpish."

Where had I been?

I fear it; yet 't is seven hours to bedtime.

Enter DIAPHANTA.

DIA. Cuds,<sup>11</sup> madam, are you here?

BEAT. [aside] Seeing that wench now, A trick comes in my mind; 't is a nice piece<sup>12</sup> Gold cannot purchase. — I come hither, wench, 60 To look my lord.

DIA. Would I had such a cause To look him too! Why, he's i' th' park, madam.

BEAT. There let him be.

DIA. Ay, madam, let him compass Whole parks and forests, as great rangers do, At roosting time a little lodge can hold 'em. Earth-conquering Alexander, that thought the world Too narrow for him, in th' end had but his pit-hole.

BEAT. I fear thou art not modest, Diaphanta.

DIA. Your thoughts are so unwilling to be known, madam.

'T is ever the bride's fashion, towards bedtime, 70 To set light by her joys, as if she ow'd<sup>13</sup> 'em not.

BEAT. Her joys? Her fears thou wouldst say.

DIA. Fear of what?

BEAT. Art thou a maid, and talk'st so to a maid?

You leave a blushing business behind; Beshrew your heart for 't!

DIA. Do you mean good sooth, madam?

BEAT. Well, if I'd thought upon the fear at first,

Man should have been unknown.

DIA. Is 't possible?

<sup>9</sup> A sixteenth-century French astrologer. According to Sampson, the De Arcanis Naturae contains no such experiments; but similar ones are found elsewhere in his works.

BEAT. I will give a thousand ducats to that woman

Would try what my fear were, and tell me true To-morrow, when she gets from 't; as she likes, 80

I might perhaps be drawn to 't.

DIA. Are you in earnest?

BEAT. Do you get the woman, then challenge me, And see if I'll fly from 't; but I must tell you This by the way, she must be a true maid. Else there's no trial; my fears are not her's else.

DIA. Nay, she that I would put into your hands, madam, Shall be a maid.

BEAT. You know I should be sham'd else, Because she lies for me.

DIA. 'T is a strange humor! <sup>14</sup> But are you serious still? Would you resign Your first night's pleasure, and give money too? 90

BEAT. As willingly as live. — [aside] Alas, the gold Is but a by<sup>15</sup>-bet to wedge in the honor!

DIA. I do not know how the world goes abroad

For faith or honesty; there's both requir'd in this.

Madam, what say you to me, and stray no further?

I've a good mind, in troth, to earn your money.

BEAT. Y' are too quick,<sup>16</sup> I fear, to be a maid.

DIA. How? not a maid? Nay, then you urge me, madam:

Your honorable self is not a truer, With all your fears upon you —

BEAT. [aside] Bad enough then. [100

DIA. Than I with all my lightsome joys about me.

BEAT. I'm glad to hear 't. Then you dare put your honesty<sup>17</sup>

Upon an easy trial.

DIA. Easy? — Anything.

BEAT. I'll come to you straight.

[Goes to the closet.]

DIA. She will not search me, will she, Like the forewoman of a female jury?

BEAT. Glass M: ay, this is it. [Brings vial.]

Look, Diaphanta, You take no worse than I do. [Drinks.]

<sup>17</sup> Chastity.

DIA. And in so doing,
I will not question what't is, but take it.

[Drinks.]

BEAT. [aside] Now if th' experiment be true, 't will praise itself,
And give me noble ease : begins already ;

[DIAPHANTA gapes.]

There's the first symptom ; and what haste it makes

111

To fall into the second, there by this time !

[DIAPHANTA sneezes.]

Most admirable secret ! on the contrary,
It stirs not me a whit, which most concerns it.

DIA. Ha, ha, ha !

BEAT. [aside] Just in all things, and in order

As if 't were circumscrib'd ; one accident <sup>18</sup>
Gives way unto another.

DIA. Ha, ha, ha !

BEAT. How now, wench ?

DIA. Ha, ha, ha ! I am so, so light
At heart — ha, ha, ha ! — so pleasurable !
But one swig more, sweet madam.

BEAT. Ay, to-morrow, [120
We shall have time to sit by 't.

DIA. Now I'm sad again.

BEAT. [aside] It lays itself so gently too ! —
Come, wench.

Most honest <sup>19</sup> Diaphanta I dare call thee now.

DIA. Pray, tell me, madam, what trick call you this ?

BEAT. I'll tell thee all hereafter ; we must study
The carriage of this business.

DIA. I shall carry 't well,
Because I love the burthen.

BEAT. About midnight
You must not fail to steal forth gently,
That I may use the place.

DIA. Oh, fear not, madam ;
I shall be cool by that time. The bride's place, 130
And with a thousand ducats ! I'm for a justice now :

I bring a portion with me ; I scorn small fools.<sup>20</sup> Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>21</sup>

Enter VERMANDERO and Servant.

VER. I tell thee, knave, mine honor is in question,
A thing till now free from suspicion,

<sup>21</sup> Another room in the castle.

Nor ever was there cause. Who of my gentle-
men

Are absent ? Tell me, and truly, how many,
and who ?

SER. Antonio, sir, and Franciscus.

VER. When did they leave the castle ?

SER. Some ten days since, sir ; the one intending to

Briamata,<sup>22</sup> th' other for Valencia.

VER. The time accuses 'em ; a charge of murder

Is brought within my castle-gate, Piracquo's
murder ; 10

I dare not answer faithfully their absence.

A strict command of apprehension

Shall pursue 'em suddenly, and either wipe

The stain off clear, or openly discover it.

Provide me winged warrants for the purpose.

Exit Servant.

See, I am set on again.

Enter TOMAZO.

TOM. I claim a brother of you.

VER. Y' are too hot ;
Seek him not here.

TOM. Yes, 'mongst your dearest bloods,
If my peace find no fairer satisfaction.

This is the place must yield account for
him,

For here I left him ; and the hasty tie 21
Of this snatch'd marriage gives strong testimony

Of his most certain ruin.

VER. Certain falsehood !
This is the place indeed ; his breach of faith

Has too much marr'd both my abused love,
The honorable love I reserv'd for him,
And mock'd my daughter's joy ; the pre-par'd morning

Blush'd at his infidelity ; he left Contempt and scorn to throw upon those
friends

Whose belief hurt 'em. Oh, 't was most ignoble 30

To take his flight so unexpectedly,
And throw such public wrongs on those that lov'd him !

TOM. Then this is all your answer.

VER. 'T is too fair
For one of his alliance ; <sup>23</sup> and I warn you
That this place no more see you. Exit.

<sup>22</sup> The source mentions this "fair house" of Ver-mandero's, ten leagues from Alicante.

<sup>23</sup> Related to him.

Enter DE FLORES.

TOM. The best is,
There is more ground to meet a man's revenge
on. —

Honest De Flores.

DE F. That's my name indeed.
Saw you the bride? Good sweet sir, which way took she?

TOM. I have bless'd mine eyes from seeing such a false one.

DE F. [aside] I'd fain get off; this man's not for my company: 40
I smell his brother's blood when I come near
him.

TOM. Come hither, kind and true one; I remember
My brother lov'd thee well.

DE F. Oh, purely,<sup>24</sup> dear sir! — [aside] Methinks I am now again a-killing on
him,
He brings it so fresh to me.

TOM. Thou canst guess, sirrah —
[An]<sup>25</sup> honest friend has an instinct of jealousy —

At some foul guilty person.

DE F. 'Las! sir,
I am so charitable, I think none Worse than myself! — You did not see the bride then?

TOM. I prithee, name her not: is she not wicked? 50

DE F. No, no; a pretty, easy, round-pack'd<sup>26</sup> sinner,
As your most ladies are, else you might think
I flatter'd her; but, sir, at no hand wicked,
Till th' are so old their [chins and noses]<sup>27</sup>
meet,
And they salute witches. I am call'd, I think,
sir. —

[aside] His company ev'n o'erlays my conscience. Exit.

TOM. That De Flores has a wondrous honest heart!
He'll bring it out in time, I'm assur'd on't.
Oh, here's the glorious<sup>28</sup> master of the day's joy!
I<sup>29</sup> will not be long till he and I do reckon. — 60

Enter ALSEMERO.

Sir.
ALS. You are most welcome.

TOM. You may call that word back;
I do not think I am, nor wish to be.

ALS. 'T is strange you found the way to this house, then.

TOM. Would I'd ne'er known the cause!
I'm none of those, sir,
That come to give you joy, and swill your
wine;

'T is a more precious liquor that must lay
The fiery thirst I bring.

ALS. Your words and you
Appear to me great strangers.

TOM. Time and our swords
May make us more acquainted. This the business:

I should have had a brother in your place; [70
How treachery and malice have dispos'd of
him

I'm bound to inquire of him which holds his right,
Which never could come fairly.

ALS. You must look
To answer for that word, sir.

TOM. Fear you not,
I'll have it ready drawn at our next meeting.
Keep your day solemn: <sup>30</sup> farewell; I disturb it not;

I'll bear the smart with patience for a time.
Exit.

ALS. 'T is somewhat ominous this; a quarrel ent'red
Upon this day; my innocence relieves me —

Enter JASPERINO.

I should be wondrous sad else. — Jasperino, 80

I have news to tell thee, strange news.

JASP. I ha' some too,
I think as strange as yours. Would I might keep

Mine, so my faith and friendship might be kept in't!

Faith, sir, dispense a little with my zeal,
And let it cool in this.

ALS. This puts me on,<sup>31</sup>
And blames thee for thy slowness.

JAS. All may prove nothing,
Only a friendly fear that leap'd from me, sir.

ALS. No question, it may prove nothing;
let's partake it though.

JAS. 'T was Diaphanta's chance — for to that wench

I pretend <sup>32</sup> honest love, and she deserves it —

<sup>30</sup> Go on celebrating your wedding day.

To leave me in a back part of the house, 91
A place we chose for private conference.
She was no sooner gone, but instantly
I heard your bride's voice in the next room to
me ;

And lending more attention, found De Flores Louder than she.

ALS. De Flores ! Thou art out now.

JAS. You'll tell me more anon.

ALS. Still I'll prevent <sup>33</sup> thee :
The very sight of him is poison to her.

JAS. That made me stagger too ; but Diaphanta

At her return confirm'd it.

ALS. Diaphanta ! 100

JAS. Then fell we both to listen, and words
pass'd

Like those that challenge interest in a woman.

ALS. Peace ! quench thy zeal ; 't is dangerous to thy bosom.

JAS. Then truth is full of peril.

ALS. Such truths are.

Oh, were she the sole glory of the earth,
Had eyes that could shoot fire into kings' breasts,

And touch'd, <sup>34</sup> she sleeps not here ! Yet I have time,

Though night be near, to be resolv'd <sup>35</sup> hereof ;
And, prithee, do not weigh me by my passions. <sup>36</sup>

JAS. I never weigh'd friend so.

ALS. Done charitably ! [110
That key will lead thee to a pretty secret, [Gives key.]

By a Chaldean taught me, and I've
My study upon some. Bring from my closet
A glass inscrib'd there with the letter M,
And question not my purpose.

JAS. It shall be done, sir. Exit.

ALS. How can this hang together ? Not an hour since

Her woman came, pleading her lady's fears,
Deliver'd <sup>37</sup> her for the most timorous virgin
That ever shrunk at man's name, and so modest

She charg'd her weep out her request to me
That she might come obscurely to my bosom. 121

Enter BEATRICE.

BEAT. [aside] All things go well ; my woman's preparing yonder

<sup>35</sup> Show of emotions.

For her sweet voyage, which grieves me to lose ;

Necessity compels it ; I lose all, else.

ALS. [aside] Push ! modesty's shrine is set in yonder forehead ;

I cannot be too sure, though. — My Joanna !

BEAT. Sir, I was bold to weep a message to
you ;

Pardon my modest fears.

ALS. [aside] The dove's not meeker ;
She's abus'd, questionless.

Re-enter JASPERINO [with vial].

Oh, are you come, sir ?

BEAT. [aside] The glass, upon my life ! I see the letter. 130

JAS. Sir, this is M. [Giving vial.]

ALS. 'T [i]s it.

BEAT. [aside] I am suspected.

ALS. How fitly our bride comes to partake
with us !

BEAT. What is't, my Lord ?

ALS. No hurt.

BEAT. Sir, pardon me,
I seldom taste of any composition. <sup>38</sup>

ALS. But this, upon my warrant, you shall venture on.

BEAT. I fear't will make me ill.

ALS. Heaven forbid that.

BEAT. [aside] I'm put now to my cunning ;
th' effects I know,

If I can now but feign 'em handsomely.

[Drinks.]

ALS. [aside to JASPERINO] It has that secret virtue, it ne'er miss'd, sir,

Upon a virgin.

JAS. Treble-qualified ? <sup>39</sup> 140
[BEATRICE gapes and sneezes.]

ALS. By all that's virtuous, it takes there !
proceeds !

JAS. This is the strangest trick to know a maid by.

BEAT. Ha, ha, ha !

You have given me joy of heart to drink, my
Lord.

ALS. No, thou hast given me such joy of
heart

That never can be blasted.

BEAT. What's the matter, sir ?

ALS. [aside] See, now't is settled in a melancholy ;

Keep[s] both the time and method. — My Joanna,

<sup>38</sup> I.e., mixed drink.

<sup>39</sup> Cf. IV, i, 51.

Chaste as the breath of Heaven, or morning's womb,
That brings the day forth! thus my love encloses thee. Exeunt. [150]

[SCENE III] <sup>40</sup>

Enter ISABELLA and LOLLIO.

ISA. O Heaven! is this the [waning] <sup>41</sup> moon? Does love turn fool, run mad, and all at once? Sirrah, here's a madman, akin to the fool too, a lunatic lover.

LOL. No, no, not he I brought the letter from?

ISA. Compare his inside with his out, and tell me.

LOL. The out's mad, I'm sure of that; I had a taste on 't. [Reads letter.] "To the bright Andromeda, chief chambermaid to the Knight of the Sun,<sup>42</sup> at the sign of Scorpio, [10 in the middle region, sent by the bellows-mender of Aeolus. Pay the post." This is stark madness!

ISA. Now mark the inside. [Takes the letter and reads.] "Sweet lady, having now cast off this counterfeit cover of a madman, I appear to your best judgment a true and faithful lover of your beauty."

LOL. He is mad still.

ISA. [reads.] "If any fault you find, [20 chide those perfections in you which have made me imperfect; 't is the same sun that causeth to grow and enforceth to wither, ——"

LOL. O rogue!

ISA. [reads.] "Shapes and transhapes, destroys and builds again. I come in winter to you, dismantled of my proper ornaments; by the sweet splendor of your cheerful smiles, I spring and live a lover."

LOL. Mad rascal still! 30

ISA. [reads.] "Tread him not under foot that shall appear an honor to your bounties. I remain — mad till I speak with you, from whom I expect my cure, yours all, or one beside himself, FRANCISCUS."

LOL. You are like to have a fine time on 't. My master and I may give over our professions; I do not think but you can cure fools and madmen faster than we, with little pains too. 40

ISA. Very likely.

LOL. One thing I must tell you, mistress:

you perceive that I am privy to your skill; if I find you minister once, and set up the trade, I put in for my thirds; <sup>43</sup> I shall be mad or fool else.

ISA. The first place is thine, believe it, Lollio,

If I do fall.

LOL. I fall upon you.

ISA. So.

LOL. Well, I stand to my venture.

ISA. But thy counsel now;

How shall I deal with 'em?

LOL. [Why,] <sup>44</sup> do you mean to deal with 'em? 50

ISA. Nay, the fair understanding <sup>45</sup> — how to use 'em.

LOL. Abuse <sup>46</sup> 'em! That's the way to mad the fool, and make a fool of the madman, and then you use 'em kindly.<sup>47</sup>

ISA. 'T is easy, I'll practise; <sup>48</sup> do thou observe it.

The key of thy wardrobe.

LOL. There [giving key]; fit yourself for 'em, and I'll fit 'em both for you.

ISA. Take thou no further notice than the outside. Exit.

LOL. Not an inch; I'll put you to the inside. 60

Enter ALIBIUS.

ALIB. Lollio, art there? Will all be perfect, think'st thou?

To-morrow night, as if to close up the Solemnity, Vermandero expects us.

LOL. I mistrust the madmen most; the fools will do well enough; I have taken pains with them.

ALIB. Tush! they cannot miss; the more absurdity, The more commends it, so no rough behaviors

Affright the ladies; they're nice <sup>49</sup> things, thou know'st.

LOL. You need not fear, sir; so long as [70 we are there with our commanding pizzles,<sup>50</sup> they'll be as tame as the ladies themselves.

ALIB. I will see them once more rehearse before they go.

LOL. I was about it, sir; look you to the madmen's morris,<sup>51</sup> and let me alone with

the other. There is one or two that I mistrust their fooling; <sup>52</sup> I'll instruct them, and then they shall rehearse the whole measure. <sup>53</sup>

ALIB. Do so; I'll see the music prepar'd; but, Lollio,

By the way, how does my wife brook her restraint? 80

Does she not grudge <sup>54</sup> at it?

LOL. So, so; she takes some pleasure in the house; she would abroad else. You must allow her a little more length; she's kept too short.

ALIB. She shall along to Vermandero's with us;

That will serve her for a month's liberty.

LOL. What's that on your face, sir?

ALIB. Where, Lollio? I see nothing.

LOL. Cry you mercy, <sup>55</sup> sir, 't is your [90 nose; it show'd like the trunk of a young elephant. <sup>56</sup>

ALIB. Away, rascal! I'll prepare the music, Lollio. Exit ALIBIUS.

LOL. Do, sir, and I'll dance the whilst. — Tony, where art thou, Tony?

Enter ANTONIO.

ANT. Here, cousin; where art thou?

LOL. Come, Tony, the footmanship I taught you.

ANT. I had rather ride, cousin.

LOL. Ay, a whip take you! but I'll [100 keep you out; vault in: look you, Tony: fa, la, la, la, la. [Dances.]

ANT. Fa, la, la, la, la. [Dances.]

LOL. There, an honor. <sup>57</sup>

ANT. Is this an honor, coz?

LOL. Yes, an it please your Worship.

ANT. Does honor bend in the hams, coz?

LOL. Marry does it, as low as worship, squireship, nay, yeomanry itself sometimes, from whence it first stiffened: there, rise, a caper. <sup>58</sup> 111

ANT. Caper after an honor, coz?

LOL. Very proper, for honor is but a caper, rise[s] as fast and high, has a knee or two, and falls to th' ground again. You can remember your figure, <sup>59</sup> Tony? Exit.

ANT. Yes, cousin; when I see thy figure, I can remember mine.

<sup>56</sup> It looks as though someone had been pulling your nose. Professor Kittredge adds, "Perhaps with an allusion to being led by the nose."

Re-enter ISABELLA, [dressed as a madwoman.]

ISA. Hey, how [he] <sup>60</sup> treads the air! Shough, shough, tother way! he burns [120 his wings else. Here's wax enough below, Icarus, more than will be cancelled <sup>61</sup> these eighteen moons. He's down, he's down! what a terrible fall he had! Stand up, thou son of Cretan Daedalus, And let us tread the lower labyrinth; I'll bring thee to the clue.

ANT. Prithee, coz, let me alone.

ISA. Art thou not drown'd? About thy head I saw a heap of clouds 129 Wrapp'd like a Turkish turban; on thy back

A crook'd chameleon-color'd rainbow hung Like a tiara down unto thy hams.

Let me suck out those billows in thy belly; Hark, how they roar and rumble in the [straits]! <sup>62</sup>

Bless thee from the pirates!

ANT. Pox upon you, let me alone!

ISA. Why shouldst thou mount so high as Mercury,

Unless thou hadst reversion of <sup>63</sup> his place?

Stay in the moon with me, Endymion, And we will rule these wild rebellious waves,

That would have drown'd my love.

ANT. I'll kick thee if Again thou touch me, thou wild unshapen antic; 141

I am no fool, you bedlam!

ISA. But you are, as sure as I am, mad.

Have I put on this habit of a frantic,

With love as full of fury, to beguile

The nimble eye of watchful jealousy,

And am I thus rewarded?

ANT. Ha! dearest beauty!

ISA. No, I have no beauty now, Nor never had but what was in my garments. You a quick-sighted lover! Come not near me: 150

Keep your caparisons, y' are aptly clad;

I came a feigner, to return stark mad. Exit.

ANT. Stay, or I shall change condition, And become as you are.

Re-enter LOLLIO.

LOL. W[h]y, Tony, whither now? Why, fool!

<sup>63</sup> Promise of succeeding to.

ANT. Whose fool, usher of idiots? You coxcomb!

I have fool'd too much.

LOL. You were best be mad another while
then. 160

ANT. So I am, stark mad; I have cause
enough;

And I could throw the full effects on thee,
And beat thee like a fury.

LOL. Do not, do not; I shall not forbear the gentleman under the fool, if you do.
Alas! I saw through your fox-skin <sup>64</sup> before now! Come, I can give you comfort; my mistress loves you; and there is as arrant a madman i' th' house as you are a fool, your rival, whom she loves not. If after the [170 masque we can rid her of him, you earn her love, she says, and the fool shall ride her.

ANT. May I believe thee?

LOL. Yes, or you may choose whether you will or no.

ANT. She's eas'd of him; I have a good quarrel on 't.

LOL. Well, keep your old station yet, and be quiet.

ANT. Tell her I will deserve her love. 179

[Exit.]

LOL. And you are like to have your desire. <sup>65</sup>

Enter FRANCISCUS.

FRAN. [sings.] "Down, down, down, a-down a-down,"—and then with a horse-trick <sup>66</sup>

To kick Latona's <sup>67</sup> forehead, and break her bowstring.

LOL. [aside] This is tother counterfeit;
I'll put him out of his humor—[Takes out a letter and reads.] "Sweet lady, having now cast <sup>68</sup> this counterfeit cover of a madman, I appear to your best judgment a true and faithful lover of your beauty." This is pretty well for a madman.

FRAN. Ha! what's that? 180

LOL. [reads.] "Chide those perfections in you which have made me imperfect."

FRAN. [aside] I am discover'd to the fool.

LOL. [aside] I hope to discover the fool in you, ere I have done with you.— [Reads.] "Yours all, or one beside himself, FRANCISCUS." This madman will mend sure.

FRAN. What do you read, sirrah?

LOL. Your destiny, sir; you'll be hang'd for this trick, and another that I know. 200

FRAN. Art thou of counsel with thy mistress?

LOL. Next her apron-strings.

FRAN. Give me thy hand.

LOL. Stay, let me put yours in my pocket first. [Putting letter into his pocket.] Your hand is true, <sup>69</sup> is it not? It will not pick?
I partly fear it, because I think it does lie.

FRAN. Not in a syllable.

LOL. So if you love my mistress so well as you have handled the matter here, you [210 are like to be cur'd of your madness.

FRAN. And none but she can cure it.

LOL. Well, I'll give you over then, and she shall cast your water <sup>70</sup> next.

FRAN. Take for thy pains past.

[Gives money.]

LOL. I shall deserve more, sir, I hope. My mistress loves you, but must have some proof of your love to her.

FRAN. There I meet my wishes.

LOL. That will not serve; you must [220 meet her enemy and yours.

FRAN. He's dead already.

LOL. Will you tell me that, and I parted
but now with him?

FRAN. Show me the man.

LOL. Ay, that's a right course now; see him before you kill him, in any case; and yet it needs not go so far neither. 'Tis but a fool that haunts the house and my mistress in the shape of an idiot; bang but his [230 fool's coat well-favoredly, and 't is well.

FRAN. Soundly, soundly!

LOL. Only reserve him till the masque be past; and if you find him not now in the dance yourself, I'll show you. In, in! my master! [Dancing.]

FRAN. He handles him like a feather. Hey!

Enter ALIBIUS.

ALIB. Well said; <sup>71</sup> in a readiness, Lollio?

LOL. Yes, sir.

ALIB. Away then, and guide them in,
Lollio;

Entreat your mistress to see this sight. 240

Hark, is there not one incurable fool
That might be begg'd? <sup>72</sup> I have friends.

LOL. I have him for you,
One that shall deserve it too.

<sup>71</sup> Well done.

<sup>72</sup> Alluding to the practice of begging the king to grant the guardianship of a wealthy fool for the sake of enjoying the income from his property.

ALIB. Good boy, Lollio !

[Exit LOLLIO. He returns at once with] the madmen and fools, [who] dance.

'T is perfect ; well, fit but once these strains,
We shall have coin and credit for our pains.

Exeunt.

ACT V — [SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter BEATRICE : a clock strikes one.

BEAT. One struck, and yet she lies by 't !
O my fears !

This strumpet serves her own ends, 't is apparent now,

Devours the pleasure with a greedy appetite
And never minds my honor or my peace, Makes havoc of my right. But she pays dearly for 't ;

No trusting of her life with such a secret,
That cannot rule her blood <sup>2</sup> to keep her promise ;

Beside, I have some suspicion of her faith to
me,

Because I was suspected of my lord,
And it must come from her. [Strike two.]

Hark ! by my horrors, 10
Another clock strikes two !

Enter DE FLORES.

DE F. Pist ! where are you ?

BEAT. De Flores ?

DE F. Ay. Is she not come from him
yet ?

BEAT. As I am a living soul, not !

DE F. Sure the Devil Hath sow'd his itch <sup>3</sup> within her. Who would trust

A waiting woman ?

BEAT. I must trust somebody.

DE F. Push ! they are t[e]rmagants ;
Especially when they fall upon their masters
And have their ladies' first fruits ; th'are mad
whelps :

You cannot stave 'em off from game royal ;
then

You are so [rash] <sup>4</sup> and hardy, ask no counsel ;
And I could have help'd you to a pothecary's
daughter 21

Would have fall'n off before eleven, and thank you too.

BEAT. O me, not yet ! this whore forgets herself.

DE F. The rascal fares so well. Look,
y' are undone ;

The day-star, by this hand ! see [Phosphorus] <sup>5</sup> plain yonder.

BEAT. Advise me now to fall upon some ruin ;

There is no counsel safe else.

DE F. Peace ! I ha't now,
For we must force a rising ; there's no remedy.

BEAT. How ? take heed of that.

DE F. Tush ! be you quiet, or else give over
all. 30

BEAT. Prithee, I ha' done then.

DE F. This is my reach : <sup>6</sup> I'll set
Some part afire of Diaphanta's chamber.

BEAT. How ? fire, sir ? That may endanger the whole house.

DE F. You talk of danger when your fame's on fire.

BEAT. That's true ; do what thou wilt now.

DE F. Push ! I aim
At a most rich success <sup>7</sup> strikes all dead sure.
The chimney being afire, and some light parcels

Of the least danger in her chamber only,
If Diaphanta should be met by chance then Far from her lodging, which is now suspicious, 40

It would be thought her fears and affrights
then

Drove her to seek for succor ; if not seen
Or met at all, as that's the likeliest,
For her own shame she'll hasten towards her lodging ;

I will be ready with a piece <sup>8</sup> high-charg'd,
As 't were to cleanse the chimney ; there 't is proper now,

But she shall be the mark.

BEAT. I'm fore'd to love thee now,
'Cause thou provid'st so carefully for my
honor.

DE F. 'Slid, it concerns the safety of us
both,

Our pleasure and continuance.

BEAT. One word now, [50
Prithee ; how for the servants ?

DE F. I'll dispatch them,
Some one way, some another in the hurry,
For buckets, hooks, ladders ; fear not you,
The deed shall find its time ; and I've thought since

Upon a safe conveyance * for the body too !
How this fire purifies wit ! Watch you your minute.

BEAT. Fear keeps my soul upon 't, I cannot stray from 't.

Enter ALONZO'S Ghost.

DE F. Ha ! what art thou that tak'st away
the light
Betwixt that star and me ? I dread thee
not. —

'T was but a mist of conscience ; all's clear again. Exit. [60

BEAT. Who's that, De Flores ? Bless me, it slides by ! [Exit Ghost.]
Some ill thing haunts the house ; 't has left behind it

A shivering sweat upon me ; I'm afraid now.
This night hath been so tedious ! Oh, this strumpet !

Had she a thousand lives, he should not leave
her

Till he had destroy'd the last. List ! O my terrors ! Struck three a'clock.

* Three struck by St. Sebastian's !

Within. Fire, fire, fire !

BEAT. Already ? How rare is that man's speed !

How heartily he serves me ! his face loathes
one ;

But look upon his care, who would not love
him ? 70

The east is not more beauteous than his service.

Within. Fire, fire, fire !

Re-enter DE FLORES [and] Servants : pass over : ring a bell.

DE F. Away, dispatch ! hooks, buckets, ladders ! that's well said.

The fire bell rings ; the chimney works, my charge ;

The piece is ready. Exit.

BEAT. Here's a man worth loving !

Enter DIAPHANTA.

O y' are a jewel !

DIA. Pardon frailty, madam ;
In troth I was so well, I ev'n forgot myself.

BEAT. Y' have made trim work !

DIA. What ?

BEAT. Hie quickly to your chamber ;
Your reward follows you.

* Artifice.

DIA. I never made
So sweet a bargain. Exit.

Enter ALSEMERO.

ALS. O my dear Joanna, 80
Alas ! art thou risen too ? I was coming,
My absolute treasure !

BEAT. When I miss'd you,
I could not choose but follow.

ALS. Th'art all sweetness ;
The fire is not so dangerous.

BEAT. Think you so, sir ?

ALS. I prithee, tremble not ; believe me,
't is not.

Enter VERMANDERO [and] JASPERINO.

VER. Oh, bless my house and me !

ALS. My Lord your father.

Re-enter DE FLORES with a piece.

VER. Knave, whither goes that piece ?

DE F. To scour the chimney. Exit.

VER. Oh, well said, well said !

That fellow's good on all occasions.

BEAT. A wondrous necessary man, my
Lord. 90

VER. He hath a ready wit ; he's worth 'em
all, sir ;

Dog <sup>10</sup> at a house of <sup>11</sup> fire ; I ha' seen him sing'd ere now. — The piece goes off.

Ha, there he goes !

BEAT. 'T is done !

ALS. Come, sweet, to bed now ;
Alas ! thou wilt get cold.

BEAT. Alas ! the fear keeps that out !
My heart will find no quiet till I hear

How Diaphanta, my poor woman, fares ;
It is her chamber, sir, her lodging chamber.

VER. How should the fire come there ?

BEAT. As good a soul as ever lady coun-tenanc'd, 99

But in her chamber negligent and heavy <sup>12</sup> ;
She scap'd a mine twice.

VER. Twice ?

BEAT. Strangely twice, sir.

VER. Those sleepy sluts are dangerous in a
house,

An they be ne'er so good.

Re-enter DE FLORES.

DE F. O poor virginity,
Thou hast paid dearly for't !

VER. Bless us ! What's that ?

<sup>12</sup> Sleepy.

DE F. A thing you all knew once, Diaphanta's burnt.

BEAT. My woman! O my woman!

DE F. Now the flames
Are greedy of her; burnt, burnt, burnt to death, sir!

BEAT. O my presaging soul!

ALS. Not a tear more!
I charge you by the last embrace I gave you
In bed, before this rais'd us.

BEAT. Now you tie me; [110]
Were it my sister, now she gets no more.

Enter Servant.

VER. How now?

SER. All danger's past; you may now take Your rests, my Lords; the fire is thoroughly quenched.

Ah, poor gentlewoman, how soon was she stified!

BEAT. De Flores, what is left of her inter,
And we as mourners all will follow her.
I will entreat that honor to my servant
Ev'n of my Lord himself.

ALS. Command it, sweetness.

BEAT. Which of you spied the fire first?

DE F. 'T was I, madam.

BEAT. And took such pains in't too? A double goodness! 120

'T were well he were rewarded.

VER. He shall be. —
De Flores, call upon me.

ALS. And upon me, sir.

Exeunt [all but DE FLORES].

DE F. Rewarded? Precious! here's a trick beyond me.

I see in all bouts, both of sport and wit,
Always a woman strives for the last hit.

Exit.

[SCENE II] 12

Enter TOMAZO.

TOM. I cannot taste the benefits of life
With the same relish I was wont to do.
Man I grow weary of, and hold his fellowship
A treacherous bloody friendship; and because I'm ignorant in whom my wrath should settle,
I must think all men villains, and the next
I meet, whoe'er he be, the murderer
Of my most worthy brother. Ha! what's he?

Enter DE FLORES [and] passes over the stage.
Oh, the fellow that some call honest De Flores;

12 Another room in the castle.

But methinks honesty was hard bestead 14 [10]
To come there for a lodging; as if a queen
Should make her palace of a pesthouse.

I find a contrariety in nature
Betwixt that face and me; the least occasion
Would give me game upon 15 him; yet he's so foul

One would scarce touch 16 with a sword he lov'd

And made account of; so most deadly venomous,

He would go near to poison any weapon
That should draw blood on him; one must resolve

Never to use that sword again in fight, 20
In way of honest manhood, that strikes him;
Some river must devour it; 't were not fit
That any man should find it. What, again?

Re-enter DE FLORES.

He walks a' purpose by, sure, to choke me up,
'T infect my blood.

DE F. My worthy noble Lord!

TOM. Dost offer to come near and breathe upon me? [Strikes him.]

DE F. A blow! [Draws.]

TOM. Yea, are you so prepar'd?

I'll rather like a soldier die by th' sword,
Than like a politician by thy poison. [Draws.]

DE F. Hold, my Lord, as you are honorable! 30

TOM. All slaves that kill by poison are still 17
cowards.

DE F. [aside] I cannot strike; I see his brother's wounds

Fresh bleeding in his eye, as in a crystal. —

I will not question this: I know y' are noble;
I take my injury with thanks given, sir,
Like a wise lawyer, and as a favor

Will wear it for the worthy hand that gave
it. —

[aside] Why this from him that yesterday appear'd

So strangely loving to me?

Oh, but instinct 18 is of a subtler strain! 40
Guilt must not walk so near his lodge again;
He came near me now. 19 Exit.

TOM. All league with mankind I renounce for ever,

Till I find this murderer; not so much
As common courtesy but I'll lock up;

14 Hard up, hard put to it.

15 Would afford me an occasion to fight.

16 Mod. eds. insert him.

17 Accented on second syllable.

18 He nearly found me out.

19 Always.

For in the state of ignorance I live in,
A brother may salute his brother's murderer,
And wish good speed to th' villain in a greeting.

Enter VERMANDERO, ALIBIUS, and ISABELLA.

VER. Noble Piracquo !

TOM. Pray, keep on your way, sir ;
I've nothing to say to you.

VER. Comforts bless you, sir ; [50

TOM. I've forsworn compliment,<sup>20</sup> in troth
I have, sir ;

As you are merely man, I have not left
A good wish for you, nor <sup>21</sup> any here.

VER. Unless you be so far in love with grief
You will not part from 't upon any terms,
We bring that news will make a welcome for us.

TOM. What news can that be ?

VER. Throw no scornful smile
Upon the zeal I bring you ; 't is worth more,
sir.

Two of the chiefest men I kept about me
I hide not from the law or your just vengeance. 60

TOM. Ha !

VER. To give your peace more ample satisfaction,

Thank these discoverers.

TOM. If you bring that calm,
Name but the manner I shall ask forgiveness in
For that contemptuous smile<sup>22</sup> upon you ;
I'll perfect it with reverence that belongs
Unto a sacred altar. [Kneels.]

VER. Good sir, rise ;

Why, now you overdo as much a' this hand
As you fell short a' tother. — Speak, Alibius.

ALIB. 'T was my wife's fortune, as she is most lucky 70

At a discovery, to find out lately,
Within our hospital of fools and madmen,
Two counterfeits slipp'd into these disguises ;
Their names, Franciscus and Antonio.

VER. Both mine, sir, and I ask no favor for
'em.

ALIB. Now that which draws suspicion to their habits,

The time of their disguisings agrees justly <sup>23</sup>
With the day of the murder.

TOM. O blest revelation !

VER. Nay, more, nay, more, sir — I'll not spare mine own

In way of justice — they both feign'd a journey 80

To Br[i]lamata, and so wrought out their leaves <sup>24</sup> ;

My love was so abus'd <sup>25</sup> in 't.

TOM.

Time's too precious

To run in waste now ; you have brought a
peace

The riches of five kingdoms could not purchase.
Be my most happy conduct ; I thirst for 'em ;
Like subtle lightning will I wind about 'em,
And melt their marrow in 'em. Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>26</sup>

Enter ALSEMERO and JASPERINO.

JAS. Your confidence, I'm sure, is now of proof ;

The prospect from the garden <sup>27</sup> has show'd
Enough for deep suspicion.

ALS. The black mask

That so continually was worn upon 't
Condemns the face for ugly ere 't be seen :
Her despite to him, and so seeming bottomless.

JAS. Touch it home then ; 't is not a shallow probe

Can search this ulcer soundly ; I fear you'll find it

Full of corruption. 'T is fit I leave you ;
She meets you opportunely from that walk ;
She took the back door at his parting with
her. Exit JASPERINO. [11

ALS. Did my fate wait for this unhappy stroke

At my first sight of woman? — She's here.

Enter BEATRICE.

BEAT. Alsemero !

ALS. How do you ?

BEAT. How do I ?

Alas ! how do you ? You look not well.

ALS. You read me well enough ; I am not
well.

BEAT. Not well, sir ? Is't in my power to better you ?

ALS. Yes.

BEAT. Nay, then y' are cur'd again.

ALS. Pray, resolve me <sup>28</sup> one question, lady.

BEAT. If I can. 21

ALS. None can so sure. Are you honest ? <sup>29</sup>

BEAT. Ha, ha, ha ! that's a broad question,
my Lord.

<sup>24</sup> Obtained their leaves of absence. <sup>25</sup> Deceived.

<sup>26</sup> Alsemero's apartment. Dyce suggests the location of the earlier part elsewhere, on account of walk in l. 10. But note door in l. 11.

<sup>29</sup> Chaste.

ALS. But that's not a modest answer, my Lady.

Do you laugh? My doubts are strong upon me.

BEAT. 'T is innocence that smiles, and no rough brow

Can take away the dimple in her cheek.

Say I should strain a tear to fill the vault,
Which would you give the better faith to?

ALS. 'T were but hypocrisy of a sadder color, 30

But the same stuff; neither your smiles nor tears

Shall move or flatter me from my belief:
You are a whore!

BEAT. What a horrid sound it hath!
It blasts a beauty to deformity;
Upon what face soever that breath falls,
It strikes it ugly. Oh, you have ruin'd
What you can ne'er repair again.

ALS. I'll all
Demolish, and seek out truth within you.
If there be any left; let your sweet tongue
Prevent<sup>30</sup> your heart's rifling; there I'll ransack 40

And tear out my suspicion.

BEAT. You may, sir;
'T is an easy passage; yet, if you please,
Show me the ground whereon you lost your love;

My spotless virtue may but tread on that Before I perish.

ALS. Unanswerable;
A ground you cannot stand on; you fall down
Beneath all grace and goodness when you set
Your ticklish heel on 't. There was a visor
O'er that cunning face, and that became you;
Now impudence in triumph rides upon 't. 50
How comes this tender reconciliation else
'Twixt you and your despite, your rancorous loathing,
De Flores? He that your eye was sore at sight
of,

He's now become your arm's supporter, your Lip's saint!

BEAT. Is there the cause?

ALS. Worse, your lust's devil,
Your adultery!

BEAT. Would any but yourself say that,
'T would turn him to a villain!

ALS. 'T was witness'd
By the counsel of your bosom,<sup>31</sup> Diaphanta.

BEAT. Is your witness dead then?

ALS. 'T is to be fear'd
It was the wages of her knowledge; poor soul,
She liv'd not long after the discovery. 61

BEAT. Then hear a story of not much less horror

Than this your false suspicion is beguil'd with;
To your bed's scandal I stand up innocence,<sup>32</sup>
Which even the guilt of one black other deed
Will stand for proof of: your love has made
me

A cruel murd'ress.

ALS. Ha!

BEAT. A bloody one;
I have kiss'd poison for it, strok'd a serpent:
That thing of hate, worthy in my esteem
Of no better employment, and him most worthy 70

To be so employ'd, I caus'd to murder
That innocent Piracquo, having no Better means than that worst to assure Yourself to me.

ALS. Oh, the place itself e'er since
Has crying been for vengeance! the temple,
Where blood and beauty first unlawfully
Fir'd their devotion and quench'd the right
one;

'T was in my fears at first, 't will have it now;
Oh, thou art all deform'd!

BEAT. Forget not, sir,
It for your sake was done. Shall greater dangers 80
Make the less welcome?

ALS. Oh, thou shouldst have gone
A thousand leagues about to have avoided
This dangerous bridge of blood! Here we are lost.

BEAT. Remember, I am true unto your bed.

ALS. The bed itself's a charnel, the sheets shrouds

For murdered carcasses. It must ask pause
What I must do in this; meantime you shall Be my prisoner only; enter my closet;<sup>33</sup>

Exit BEATRICE [into closet].
I'll be your keeper yet. Oh, in what part
Of this sad story shall I first begin? — Ha! [90
This same fellow has put me in.<sup>34</sup> — De Flores!

Enter DE FLORES.

DE F. Noble Alsemero!

ALS. I can tell you
News, sir; my wife has her commended to you.

DE F. That's news indeed, my Lord; I think she would

<sup>31</sup> By your confidante.

Commend me to the gallows if she could,
She ever lov'd me so well ; I thank her.

ALS. What's this blood upon your band,<sup>35</sup>
De Flores?

DE F. Blood ! no, sure 't was wash'd since.

ALS. Since when, man?

DE F. Since tother day I got a knock
In a sword-and-dagger school ; I think 't is
out. 100

ALS. Yes, 't is almost out, but 't is perceiv'd though.

I had forgot my message ; this it is :
What price goes murder ?

DE F. How, sir ?

ALS. I ask you, sir ;
My wife's behindhand with<sup>36</sup> you, she tells
me,
For a brave bloody blow you gave for her sake
Upon Piracquo.

DE F. Upon ? 'T was quite through him, sure ;
Has she confess'd it ?

ALS. As sure as death to both of you ;
And much more than that.

DE F. It could not be much more ;
'T was but one thing, and that — she's a
whore.

ALS. [It] could not choose but follow. O cunning devils ! 110
How should blind men know you from fair-fac'd saints ?

BEAT. (within) He lies ! the villain does belie me !

DE F. Let me go to her, sir.

ALS. Nay, you shall to her. —
Peace, crying crocodile, your sounds are heard ;
Take your prey to you. — Get you in to her,
sir. Exit DE FLORES [into closet].

I'll be your pander now ; rehearse again
Your scene of lust, that you may be perfect
When you shall come to act it to the black audience,

Where howls and gnashings shall be music to
you.

Clip your adult'ress freely ; 't is the pilot [120
Will guide you to the mare mortuum,
Where you shall sink to faithjoms bottomless.

Enter VERMANDERO, ALIBIUS, ISABELLA, TO-MAZO, FRANCISCUS, and ANTONIO.

VER. O Alsemero ! I have a wonder for
you.

ALS. No, sir, 't is I, I have a wonder for
you.

<sup>35</sup> Collar.

<sup>36</sup> Indebted to.

VER. I have suspicion near as proof itself
For Piracquo's murder.

ALS. Sir, I have proof,
Beyond suspicion, for Piracquo's murder.

VER. Beseech you, hear me ; these two have been disguis'd

E'er since the deed was done.

ALS. I have two other
That were more close disguis'd than your two could be 130

E'er since the deed was done.

VER. You'll hear me — these mine own
servants —

ALS. Hear me — those nearer than your
servants,
That shall acquit them and prove them guilt-less.

FRAN. That may be done with easy truth,
sir.

TOM. How is my cause bandied through your delays !

'T is urgent in<sup>37</sup> blood and calls for haste.

Give me a brother<sup>38</sup> alive or dead ;

Alive, a wife with him ; if dead, for both

A recompense for murder and adultery. 140

BEAT. (within) Oh, oh, oh !

ALS. Hark ! 't is coming to you.

DE F. (within) Nay, I'll along for company.

BEAT. (within) Oh, oh !

VER. What horrid sounds are these ?

ALS. Come forth, you twins
Of mischief !

Re-enter DE FLORES, bringing in BEATRICE
[wounded].

DE F. Here we are ; if you have any more
To say to us, speak quickly : I shall not Give you the hearing else ; I am so stout yet,
And so, I think, that broken rib of mankind.

VER. A host of enemies ent'red my citadel
Could not amaze like this. Joanna ! Beatrice-Joanna !

BEAT. O, come not near me, sir ; I shall defile you ! 150

I am that of your blood<sup>39</sup> was taken from you,
For your better health ; look no more upon 't,
But cast it to the ground regardlessly ;
Let the common sewer take it from distinction
Beneath the stars ; upon yon meteor

{Points to DE FLORES.}

Ever hang<sup>40</sup> my fate 'mongst things corruptible ;

I ne'er could pluck it from him ; my loathing

<sup>40</sup> Dyce emends hung.

Was prophet to the rest, but ne'er believ'd.
 Mine honor fell with him, and now my life. —
 Alsemero, I am a stranger to your bed ; 160
 Your bed was coz'n'd on the nuptial night, —
 For which your false bride died.

ALS. Diaphanta!

DE F. Yes, and the while I coupled with your mate

At barley-break ; now we are left in hell.<sup>41</sup>

VER. We are all there ; it circumscribes<sup>42</sup>
 here.

DE F. I lov'd this woman in spite of her
 heart ;

Her love I earn'd out of Piracquo's murder.

TOM. Ha ! my brother's murderer?

DE F. Yes, and her honor's prize
 Was my reward ; I thank life for nothing
 But that pleasure ; it was so sweet to me, [170
 That I have drunk up all, left none behind
 For any man to pledge me.

VER. Horrid villain !

Keep life in him for future tortures.

DE F. No !

I can prevent you ; here's my penknife still ;
 It is but one thread more [stabbing himself],
 and now 't is cut. —

Make haste, Joanna, by that token to thee,
 Canst<sup>43</sup> not forget, so lately put in mind ;
 I would not go to leave thee far behind. (Dies.)

BEAT. Forgive me, Alsemero, all forgive !

'T is time to die when 't is a shame to live. [180
Dies.

VER. Oh, my name is ent'red now in that record<sup>44</sup>

Where till this fatal hour 't was never read.

ALS. Let it be blotted out ; let your heart lose it,

And it can never look you in the face,
 Nor tell a tale behind the back of life
 To your dishonor. Justice hath so right<sup>45</sup>
 The guilty hit, that innocence is quit
 By proclamation, and may joy again. —

Sir, you are sensible of what truth hath
 done ;

'T is the best comfort that your grief can find.

TOM. Sir, I am satisfied ; my injuries [191
 Lie dead before me ; I can exact no more,
 Unless my soul were loose, and could o'ertake
 Those black fugitives that are fled from thence.<sup>46</sup>

To take<sup>47</sup> a second vengeance ; but there are wraths

Deeper than mine, 't is to be fear'd, about 'em.

ALS. What an opacous<sup>48</sup> body had that moon

That last chang'd on us ! Here's beauty
 chang'd

To ugly whoredom ; here servant-obedience
 To a master-sin, imperious murder ; 200

I, a suppos'd husband, chang'd embraces With wantonness — but that was paid before.<sup>49</sup> —

[to TOMAZO] Your change is come too, from an ignorant wrath

To knowing friendship. — Are there any more on's?

ANT. Yes, sir, I was chang'd, too, from a little ass as I was to a great fool as I am ; and had like to ha' been chang'd to the gallows, but that you know my innocence<sup>50</sup> always excuses
 me.

FRAN. I was chang'd from a little wit to be stark mad, 210

Almost for the same purpose.

ISA. Your change is still behind,<sup>51</sup>

But deserve best your transformation ;
 You are a jealous coxcomb,<sup>52</sup> keep schools of
 folly,

And teach your scholars how to break your own head.

ALIB. I see all apparent, Wife, and will change now

Into a better husband, and never keep
 Scholars that shall be wiser than myself. [217

ALS. Sir, you have yet a son's duty living ;
 Please you, accept it ; let that your sorrow,
 As it goes from your eye, go from your heart :
 Man and his sorrow at the grave must part.

EPILOGUE

ALS. All we can do to comfort one another,
 To stay a brother's sorrow for a brother,
 To dry a child from the kind father's eyes,
 Is to no purpose ; it rather multiplies :
 Your only smiles have power to cause relive
 The dead again, or in their rooms to give Brother a new brother, father a child ;
 If these appear, all griefs are reconcil'd.

Exeunt omnes.

<sup>52</sup> Fool.

Pauls Church-yard, at the signe of the Tygers head. Anno. M. DC.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

THOUGH Massinger is inadequately represented by a single play, the selection of A New Way to Pay Old Debts is inevitable. It is the only non-Shakespearean drama prior to The Beggar's Opera which has held the English-speaking stage down to the present time. Whatever its literary shortcomings, and it must be conceded that Massinger's poetic merits are negligible, the most recent professional productions, those of the Old Vic in London and Walter Hampden in the United States, testified anew to the remarkable qualities of the principal rôle as an acting vehicle, and to the entertaining nature of Wellborn's trick to catch the old one.

The similarity to Middleton's play of this part of the plot is obvious, but the dramatists' treatment could hardly be more divergent. Massinger is consistently serious, didactic even; his play does not end in forgiveness and a good dinner. Small wonder, then, that A New Way to Pay Old Debts, sweating moral earnestness at every pore, seems not to have been brought on the gay stage of Restoration London,<sup>1</sup> where in irresponsible wickedness a purer comedy flourished like the green bay tree. The rising tide of sentimentalism in the eighteenth century carried the piece back into favor; and, of the distinguished actors of the nineteenth, John Philip Kemble, Edmund and Charles Kean, Edwin Forrest, J. B. and Edwin Booth, Samuel Phelps, and Henry Irving all played Sir Giles.

It is of course the monomania of Overreach that gives the play its driving force; character is the mainspring, even though the title is supplied by the intrigue plot. To what extent Sir Giles was studied from life is uncertain. It is not unlikely that the portrait was influenced by the career of a rapacious contemporary, Sir Giles Mompesson, whose extortionate practices as a royal commissioner, monopolist, and patentee were exposed in 1621.

Nor can we be positive when the play was written and produced. 1621-1622 has been suggested, in view of the absence of any record of its licensing in the Astley-Herbert Revels Office book, which began on May 10, 1622. On the other hand, Queen Henrietta's Men began to act at the Phoenix (or Cockpit) in Drury Lane late in 1625; and the fall of Breda, mentioned in I, ii, 28, occurred on July 1 of that year. The allusion may have been added subsequently to the original production; but since it has no appearance of being an insertion, 1625 seems the most likely conclusion.

Whatever the date of composition, the play was not published till 1633. On the Quarto of that year the present text is based. There is as yet no satisfactory edition of Massinger's works. W. Gifford's second and revised edition appeared in 1813. P. Cunningham's was first published in 1867. Among the separate editions of A New Way to Pay Old Debts are those of B. Matthews (in vol. III of Gayley's Representative English Comedies, 1914), and A. H. Cruikshank (1926).

A NEW WAY TO PAY OLD DEBTS

BY

PHILIP MASSINGER

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

LOVELL, an English lord.

SIR GILES OVERREACH, a cruel extortioner.

[FRANK] WELLBORN, a prodigal.

[TOM] ALLWORTH, a young gentleman, page to Lord Lovell.

GREEDY [WOODCOCK], a hungry justice of peace.

[JACK] MARRALL, a term-driver<sup>1</sup>; a creature of Sir Giles Overreach.

ORDER [steward],

AMBLE [usher],

FURNACE [cook],

WATCHALL [porter],

} servants to the Lady Allworth.

WILLDO, a parson.

[TIMOTHY] TAPWELL, an alehouse keeper

Three Creditors, [Servants, etc.]

The LADY ALLWORTH, a rich widow.

MARGARET, Overreach his daughter.

FROTH, Tapwell's wife.

Waiting Woman.

Chambermaid.

[THE SCENE — The country, near Nottingham.]

ACT I. SCENE I.

[Enter] WELLBORN in tattered apparel, TAPWELL, [and] FROTH.

WELL. No booze? nor no tobacco?

TAP. Not a suck, sir;

Nor the remainder of a single can

Left by a drunken porter, all night pall'd<sup>2</sup> too.

FROTH. Not the dropping of the tap for your morning's draught, sir.

'T is verity, I assure you.

WELL. Verity, you brach!<sup>4</sup>

The Devil turn'd<sup>5</sup> precisian!<sup>5</sup> Rogue, what am I?

TAP. Troth, durst I trust you with a looking-glass,

To let you see your trim shape, you would quit me

And take the name yourself.

WELL. How, dog!

TAP. Even so, sir.

And I must tell you, if you but advance 10

<sup>1</sup> " ? = term-trotter, one who comes up to the law courts for the term." (N.E.D.)

Your Plymouth cloak<sup>6</sup> you shall be soon instructed

There dwells, and within call, if it please your Worship,

A potent monarch call'd the constable,
That does command a citadel call'd the stocks;
Whose guards are certain files of rusty billmen<sup>7</sup>
Such as with great dexterity will hale
Your tatter'd, lousy —

WELL. Rascal! slave!

FROTH. No rage, sir.

TAP. At his own peril. Do not put yourself

In too much heat, there being no water near
To quench your thirst; and sure, for other liquor,

As mighty ale, or beer, they are things, I take it,

You must no more remember; not in a dream, sir.

WELL. Why, thou unthankful villain, dar'st thou talk thus?

Is not thy house, and all thou hast, my gift?

<sup>7</sup> Men with rusty halberds.

TAP. I find it not in chalk; and Timothy Tapwell
Does keep no other register.

WELL. Am not I he Whose riots<sup>8</sup> fed and cloth'd thee? Wert thou not
Born on my father's land, and proud to be
A drudge in his house?

TAP. What I was, sir, it skills<sup>9</sup> not;
What you are, is apparent. Now, for a fare-
well, 30

Since you talk of father, in my hope it will torment you,

I'll briefly tell your story. Your dead father,
My quondam master, was a man of worship, Old Sir John Wellborn, justice of peace and quorum,<sup>10</sup>

And stood fair to be custos rotulorum; <sup>11</sup> Bare the whole sway of the shire, kept a great
house,

Reliev'd the poor, and so forth; but he dying
And the twelve hundred a year coming to
you,

Late Master Francis, but now forlorn Well-
born —

WELL. Slave, stop! or I shall lose myself.

FROTH. Very hardly; [40
You cannot out of your way.<sup>12</sup>

TAP. But to my story:
You were then a lord of acres, the prime gallant,

And I your under-butler. Note the change
now.

You had a merry time of 't; hawks and hounds;

With choice of running horses; mistresses

Of all sorts and all sizes, yet so hot 2. States

As their embraces made your lordships<sup>13</sup> melt;

Which your uncle, Sir Giles Overreach, observ-
ing,

(Resolving not to lose a drop of 'em,)

On foolish mortgages, statutes,<sup>14</sup> and bonds, [50
For a while suppli'd your looseness, and then left you.

WELL. Some curate hath penn'd this invective, mongrel,
And you have studied it.

presence was required to constitute a bench.

<sup>11</sup> The principal justice of the peace in a county and custodian of the rolls and records of the sessions.

<sup>12</sup> I.e., that'll be a hard job for you — you have no way!

<sup>14</sup> Bonds involving forfeiture of land in case of default.

TAP. I have not done yet.
Your land gone, and your credit not worth a token,<sup>15</sup>

You grew the common borrower; no man
scap'd

Your paper pellets,<sup>16</sup> from the gentleman
To the beggars on highways, that sold you switches

In your gallantry.

WELL. I shall switch your brains out.

TAP. Where <sup>17</sup> poor Tim Tapwell, with a little stock,

Some forty pounds or so, bought a small cottage, 60

Humbled myself to marriage with my Froth
here,

Gave entertainment —

WELL. Yes, to whores and canters,<sup>18</sup>
Clubbers by night.<sup>19</sup>

TAP. True, but they brought in profit,
And had a gift to pay for what they call'd for,
And stuck not <sup>20</sup> like your Mastership. The poor income

I glean'd from them hath made me in my parish

Thought worthy to be scavenger, and in time
May rise to be overseer of the poor;

Which if I do, on your petition, Wellborn, [80
I may allow you thirteepence a quarter,<sup>21</sup>

And you shall thank my Worship.

WELL. Thus, you dogbolt,<sup>22</sup>
And thus — Beats and kicks him.

TAP. [to FROTH] Cry out for help!

WELL. Stir, and thou diest;
Your potent prince, the constable, shall not save you.

Hear me, ungrateful hellhound! Did not I Make purses for you? Then you lick'd my boots,

And thought your holiday cloak too coarse to clean 'em.

'T was I that, when I heard thee swear if ever Thou couldst arrive at forty pounds thou wouldst

Live like an emperor, 't was I that gave it
In ready gold. Deny this, wretch!

TAP. I must, sir; [80
For, from the tavern to the taphouse, all,

<sup>15</sup> Tradesmen, especially tavern keepers, issued tokens for small change.

<sup>19</sup> Ruffraff who gather together in night revels.

<sup>21</sup> I.e., a dole of a penny a week.

<sup>22</sup> Wretch; literally, a blunt arrow.

On forfeiture of their licenses, stand bound Never to remember who their best guests were,
If they grew poor like you.

WELL. They are well rewarded
That beggar themselves to make such cuckolds
rich.

Thou viper, thankless viper ! impudent bawd !
But since you are grown forgetful, I will help
Your memory, and tread thee into mortar :
Not leave one bone unbroken.

[Beats and kicks him again.]

TAP.

Oh !

FROTH.

Ask mercy.

Enter ALLWORTH.

WELL. 'T will not be granted.

ALL. Hold — for my sake, hold. [90 Deny me, Frank ? They are not worth your anger.

WELL. For once thou hast redeem'd them from this sceptre ; <sup>23</sup>
But let 'em vanish, creeping on their knees,
And, if they grumble, I revoke my pardon.

FROTH. This comes of your prating, Husband ; you presum'd
On your ambling wit, and must use your glib
tongue,
Though you are beaten lame for't.

TAP. Patience, Froth ;
There's law to cure our bruises.

They go off on their hands and knees.

WELL. Sent <sup>24</sup> to your mother ?

ALL. My lady, Frank, my patroness, my
all !

She's such a mourner for my father's death, [100
And, in her love to him, so favors me,
That I cannot pay too much observance to
her.

There are few such stepdames.

WELL. 'T is a noble widow,
And keeps her reputation pure, and clear
From the least taint of infamy ; her life,
With the splendor of her actions, leaves no
tongue

To envy or detraction. Prithee tell me, <sup>Page</sup>
Has she no suitors ?

ALL. Even the best of the shire, Frank,
My Lord excepted ; such as sue and send,
And send and sue again, but to no purpose ; [110
Their frequent visits have not gain'd her presence.

Yet she's so far from sullenness and pride
That I dare undertake you shall meet from her

<sup>24</sup> I.e., by Lord Lovell.

A liberal entertainment. I can give you
A catalogue of her suitors' names.

WELL.

Forbear it,

While I give you good counsel. I am bound to it :

Thy father was my friend, and that affection
I bore to him, in right descends to thee ;
Thou art a handsome and a hopeful youth,
Nor will I have the least affront stick on thee,
If I with any danger can prevent it. 121

ALL. I thank your noble care ; but, pray you, in what

Do I run the hazard ?

WELL.

Art thou not in love ?

Put it not off with wonder. <sup>25</sup>

ALL.

In love, at my years !

WELL. You think you walk in clouds, but are trans[pa]rent.

I have heard all, and the choice that you have
made,

And, with my finger, can point out the north star

By which the loadstone <sup>26</sup> of your folly's
guided ;

And, to confirm this true, what think you of Fair Margaret, the only child and heir 130 Of Cormorant Overreach ? Does it blush and start,

To hear her only nam'd ? Blush at your want
Of wit and reason.

ALL.

You are too bitter, sir.

WELL. Wounds of this nature are not to be cur'd

With balms, but corrosives. I must be plain : <sup>Page</sup>

Art thou scarce manumiz'd <sup>27</sup> from the porter's lodge <sup>28</sup> ~~where~~ <sup>Where</sup> servants were <sup>punish'd</sup>

And yet sworn servant to the pantofle, <sup>29</sup> I fear
And dar'st thou dream of marriage ?

'T will be concluded for impossible

That there is now, nor e'er shall be hereafter, 140

A handsome page or player's boy of fourteen
But either loves a wench, or drabs love him ;
Court-waiters <sup>30</sup> not exempted.

ALL.

This is madness.

Howe'er you have discover'd my intents,
You know my aims are lawful ; and if ever
The queen of flowers, the glory of the spring,

<sup>25</sup> I.e., don't try to put my question aside by pretending surprise.

<sup>29</sup> Slipper (as an instrument of discipline).

The sweetest comfort to our smell, the rose,
Sprang from an envious <sup>31</sup> briar, I may infer
There's such disparity in their conditions [149
Between the goddess of my soul, the daughter,
And the base churl her father.

WELL. Grant this true,
As I believe it, canst thou ever hope
To enjoy a quiet bed with her whose father
Ruin'd thy state?

ALL. And yours too.

WELL. I confess it;
True, I must tell you as a friend, and freely,
That, where impossibilities are apparent,
'T is indiscretion to nourish hopes.

Canst thou imagine (let not self-love blind
thee)

That Sir Giles Overreach, that, to make her great

In swelling titles, without touch of conscience <sup>160</sup>

Will <sup>32</sup> cut his neighbor's throat, and I hope his own too,

Will e'er consent to make her thing? Give o'er,

And think of some course suitable to thy rank,
And prosper in it.

ALL. You have well advis'd me.
But in the meantime you that are so studi-
ous

Of my affairs wholly neglect your own.
Remember yourself, and in what plight you
are.

WELL. No matter, no matter.

ALL. Yes, 't is much material.
You know my fortune and my means; yet something

I can spare from myself to help your wants.

WELL. How's this? [170

ALL. Nay, be not angry; there's eight pieces <sup>33</sup> — French.

To put you in better fashion.

WELL. Money from thee?

From a boy? A stipendiary? One that lives

At the devotion of a stepmother

And the uncertain favor of a lord?

I'll eat my arms first. Howsое'er blind Fortune

Hath spent the utmost of her malice on me —

Though I am vomited out of an alehouse,

And thus account'ed — know not where to eat,

Or drink, or sleep, but underneath this can-opy — <sup>34</sup> <sup>180</sup>

Although I thank thee, I despise thy offer;

And as I in my madness broke my state <sup>35</sup>
Without th' assistance of another's brain,
In my right wits I'll piece <sup>36</sup> it; at the worst,
Die thus and be forgotten.

ALL. A strange humor! <sup>37</sup> Exeunt.

A Room in Lady Allworth's house.
SCENE II <sup>38</sup>

[Enter] ORDER, AMBLE, FURNACE, [and]

Servants. WATCHALL.

ORD. Set all things right, or, as my name is Order,

And by this staff of office that commands you,
This chain and double ruff, symbols of power,
Whoever misses in his function,
For one whole week makes forfeiture of his breakfast

And privilege in the wine cellar.

AMB. You are merry,

Good Master Steward.

FURN. Let him; I'll be angry.

AMB. Why, fellow Furnace, 't is not twelve a'clock yet,

Nor dinner taking up; then, 't is allow'd,
Cooks, by their places, may be choleric. <sup>10</sup>

FURN. You think you have spoke wisely,
Goodman Amble,

My Lady's go-before!

ORD. Nay, nay, no wrangling.

FURN. Twit me with the authority of the kitchen!

At all hours, and all places, I'll be angry;
And thus provok'd, when I am at my prayers
I will be angry.

AMB. There was no hurt meant.

FURN. I am friends with thee; and yet I will be angry.

ORD. With whom?

FURN. No matter whom; yet, now I think on 't,

I am angry with my Lady.

WATCH. Heaven forbid, man!

ORD. What cause has she given thee?

FURN. Cause enough, Master Steward. [20
I was entertain'd by her to please her palate;
And, till she forswore eating, I perform'd it.
Now, since our master, noble Allworth, died,
Though I crack my brains to find out tempting sauces,

And raise fortifications in the pastry
Such as might serve for models in the Low
Countries,

<sup>38</sup> A room in Lady Allworth's house.

Which, if they had been practis'd at Breda, ~~Spinola~~<sup>39</sup> might have thrown his cap at it, and ne'er took it —

AMB. But you had wanted matter there to work on.<sup>40</sup>

FURN. Matter! with six eggs, and a strike<sup>41</sup> of rye meal, 30
 I had kept the town till doomsday, perhaps longer.

ORD. But what's this to your pet against my Lady?

FURN. What's this? Marry this: when I am three parts roasted
 And the fourth part parboil'd to prepare her viands,
 She keeps her chamber, dines with a panada<sup>42</sup>
 Or water-gruel, my sweat never thought on.

ORD. But your art is seen in the dining-room.

FURN. By whom?
 By such as pretend love to her, but come
 To feed upon her. Yet, of all the harpies
 That do devour her, I am out of charity 40
 With none so much as the thin-gutted squire
 That's stol'n into commission.<sup>43</sup>

ORD. Justice Greedy?

FURN. The same, the same; meat's cast away upon him, —
 It never thrives. He holds this paradox:
 Who eats not well can ne'er do justice well.
 His stomach's as insatiate as the grave,
 Or strumpets' ravenous appetites.

WATCH. One knocks.

ALLWORTH knocks and enters.

ORD. Our late young master!

AMB. Welcome, sir.

FURN. Your hand;
 If you have a stomach, a cold bake-meat's ready.

ORD. His father's picture in little.<sup>44</sup>

FURN. We are all your servants. [50

AMB. In you he lives.

ALL. At once, my thanks to all;
 This is yet some comfort. Is my Lady stirring?

Enter the LADY ALLWORTH, Waiting Woman,
 [and] Chambermaid.

ORD. Her presence answer for us.

L. ALL. Sort those silks well;
 I'll take the air alone.

Exeunt Waiting Woman and Cham-
 bermaid.

FURN. You air and air;
 But will you never taste but spoon-meat<sup>45</sup>
 more?

To what use serve I?

L. ALL. Prithee, be not angry:
 I shall ere long; i' the meantime, there is gold
 To buy thee aprons, and a summer suit.

FURN. I am pleas'd, and Furnace now grows [cool].<sup>46</sup>

L. ALL. And, as I gave directions, if this morning 60

I am visited by any, entertain 'em.
 As heretofore; but say, in my excuse,
 I am indispos'd.

ORD. I shall, madam.

L. ALL. Do, and leave me. —
 Nay, stay you, Allworth.

Exeunt ORDER, AMBLE, FURNACE,
 [and] WATCHALL.

ALL. I shall gladly grow here,
 To wait on your commands.

L. ALL. So soon turn'd courtier!

ALL. Style not that courtship, madam, which is duty

Purchas'd on your part.

L. ALL. Well, you shall o'ercome;
 I'll not contend in words. How is it with Your noble master?

ALL. Ever like himself,
 No scruple lessen'd in the full weight of
 honor. 70

He did command me, pardon my presumption,
 As his unworthy deputy, to kiss
 Your Ladyship's fair hands.

L. ALL. I am honor'd in His favor to me. Does he hold his purpose
 For the Low Countries?

ALL. Constantly, good madam;
 But he will in person first present his service.

L. ALL. And how approve you of his course?

You are yet
 Like virgin parchment, capable of any Inscription, vicious or honorable.
 I will not force your will, but leave you free [80
 To your own election.

<sup>45</sup> Liquid or soft diet.

<sup>46</sup> Cor. Coxeter; Q Cooks.

ALL. Any form you please
I will put on ; but, might I make my choice,
With humble emulation I would follow
The path my Lord marks to me.

L. ALL. 'T is well answer'd,
And I commend your spirit. You had a
father,

Blest be his memory ! that some few hours
Before the will of Heaven took him from me,
Who did commend you, by the dearest ties
Of perfect love between us, to my charge ;
And, therefore, what I speak you are bound to
hear 90

With such respect as if he liv'd in me.
He was my husband, and howe'er you are not
Son of my womb, you may be of my love,
Provided you deserve it.

ALL. I have found you,
Most honor'd madam, the best mother to
me ;
And, with my utmost strengths of care and
service,

Will labor that you never may repent
Your bounties show'r'd upon me.

L. ALL. I much hope it.
These were your father's words : " If e'er my
son

Follow the war, tell him it is a school 100
Where all the principles tending to honor
Are taught, if truly followed ; but for such
As repair thither as a place in which They do presume they may with license practise

Their lusts and riots, they shall never merit
The noble name of soldiers. To dare boldly
In a fair cause, and for their country's safety
To run upon the cannon's mouth undaunted ;
To obey their leaders, and shun mutinies ;
To bear with patience the winter's cold 110
And summer's scorching heat, and not to faint,

When plenty of provision fails, with hunger ;
Are the essential parts make up a soldier ;
Not swearing, dice, or drinking."

ALL. There's no syllable
You speak but is to me an oracle,
Which but to doubt were impious.

L. ALL. To conclude :
Beware ill company, for often men
Are like to those with whom they do converse ;
And, from one man I warn'd '7 you, and that's
Wellborn :

Not 'cause he's poor ; that rather claims your pity ; 120

<sup>47</sup> Gifford emends (silently) warn.

But that he's in his manners so debauch'd,
And hath to vicious courses sold himself.
'T is true, your father lov'd him, while he
was

Worthy the loving ; but if he had liv'd
To have seen him as he is, he had cast him off,
As you must do.

ALL. I shall obey in all things.

L. ALL. Follow <sup>48</sup> me to my chamber, you shall have gold
To furnish you like my son, and still <sup>49</sup> supplied,

As I hear from you.

ALL. I am still <sup>49</sup> your creature. Exeunt.

SCENE III <sup>50</sup>

[Enter] OVERREACH, GREEDY, ORDER, AMBLE, FURNACE, WATCHALL, [and] MARRALL.

GREEDY. Not to be seen !

OVER. Still cloistered up ! Her reason,
I hope, assures her, though she make herself
Close prisoner ever for her husband's loss,
'T will not recover him.

ORD. Sir, it is her will,
Which we, that are her servants, ought to serve it,

And not dispute. Howe'er, you are nobly
welcome ;

And, if you please to stay, that you may think
so,

There came, not six days since, from Hull, a pipe

Of rich Canary, which shall spend itself
For my Lady's honor.

GREEDY. Is it of the right race ? <sup>51</sup> [10

ORD. Yes, Master Greedy.

AMB. [aside] How his mouth runs o'er !

FURN. [aside] I'll make it run, and run. —
Save your good Worship !

GREEDY. Honest Master Cook, thy hand ;
again ! how I love thee !
Are the good dishes still in being ? Speak,
boy.

FURN. If you have a mind to feed, there is a chine

Of beef, well seasoned.

GREEDY. Good !

FURN. A pheasant, larded.

GREEDY. That I might now give thanks
for 't !

<sup>51</sup> A particular class of wine, or the characteristic flavor of this, supposed to be due to the soil.
(N.E.D.)

FURN. Other kickshaws.<sup>52</sup>
Besides, there came last [n]ight, from the forest of Sherwood,
The fattest stag I ever cook'd.

GREEDY. A stag, man?

FURN. A stag, sir; part of it prepar'd for dinner, 20
And bak'd in puff paste.

GREEDY. Puff paste too! Sir Giles,
A ponderous chine of beef! a pheasant larded!
And red deer too, Sir Giles, and bak'd in puff paste!

All business set aside; let us give thanks here.

FURN. [aside] How the lean skeleton's rapt!

OVER. You know we cannot.

MAR. Your Worships are to sit on a commission,
And if you fail to come, you lose the cause.

GREEDY. Cause me no causes. I'll prove 't, for such a dinner

We may put off a commission: you shall find it
Henrico decimo quarto.<sup>53</sup>

OVER. Fie, Master Greedy! [30
Will you lose me a thousand pounds for a dinner?

No more, for shame! We must forget the belly
When we think of profit.

GREEDY. Well, you shall o'errule me;
I could ev'n cry now. — Do you hear, Master
Cook,

Send but a corner<sup>54</sup> of that immortal pasty,
And I, in thankfulness, will, by your boy,
Send you a brace of threepences.

FURN. Will you be so prodigal?

Enter WELLBORN.

OVER. Remember me to your lady. — Who have we here?

WELL. You know me.

OVER. I did once, but now I will not;
Thou art no blood of mine. Avaunt, thou beggar! 40

If ever thou presume to own me more,
I'll have thee cag'd and whipp'd.

GREEDY. I'll grant the warrant. —
Think of Pie Corner.<sup>55</sup> Furnace!

*Exeunt OVERREACH, GREEDY, [and]
MARRALL.*

WATCH. Will you out, sir?
I wonder how you durst creep in.

<sup>55</sup> I.e., the piece of pie, but also alluding to the locality, in West Smithfield; it was noted, according to Strype, for its cooks' shops.

ORD. This is rudeness,
And saucy impudence.

AMB. Cannot you stay
To be serv'd, among your fellows, from the basket,<sup>56</sup>

But you must needs press into the hall?

FURN. Prithee, vanish
Into some outhouse, though it be the pigsty;
My scullion shall come to thee.

Enter ALLWORTH.

WELL. This is rare.
Oh, here's Tom Allworth. Tom!

ALL. We must be strangers; [50
Nor would I have you seen here for a million.

Exit ALLWORTH.

WELL. Better and better. He contemns me too!

Enter [Waiting] Woman and Chambermaid.

WOMAN. Foh, what a smell's here! What thing's this?

CHAM. A creature
Made out of the privy; let us hence, for love's sake,

Or I shall swoon.

WOMAN. I begin to faint already.

*Exeunt [Waiting] Woman and Cham-
bermaid.*

WATCH. Will know your way?

AMB. Or shall we teach it you,
By the head and shoulders?

WELL. No; I will not stir;
Do you mark, I will not: let me see the wretch
That dares attempt to force me. Why, you slaves,

Created only to make legs<sup>57</sup> and cringe; [60
To carry in a dish, and shift a trencher;

That have not souls only to hope a blessing
Beyond blackjacks<sup>58</sup> or flagons; you that were born

Only to consume meat and drink, and batten<sup>59</sup>
Upon reversions<sup>60</sup>! — who advances? who Shows me the way?

ORD. My Lady!

*Enter LADY ALLWORTH, [Waiting] Woman,
[and] Chambermaid.*

CHAM. Here's the monster.

WOMAN. Sweet madam, keep your glove<sup>61</sup> to your nose.

<sup>61</sup> Gloves were often perfumed.

CHAM. Or let me
Fetch some perfumes <sup>62</sup> may be predominant ;
You wrong yourself else.

WELL. Madam, my designs
Bear me to you.

L. ALL. To me?

WELL. And though I have met with But ragged entertainment from your grooms
here, 71

I hope from you to receive that noble usage
As may become the true friend of your husband ;

And then I shall forget these.

L. ALL. I am amaz'd
To see and hear this rudeness. Dar'st thou
think,

Though sworn, <sup>63</sup> that it can ever find belief,
That I, who to the best men of this country
Deni'd my presence since my husband's death,
Can fall so low as to change words with thee?
Thou son of infamy, forbear my house, 80
And know and keep the distance that's between us ;

Or, though it be against my gentler temper,
I shall take order <sup>64</sup> you no more shall be
An eyesore to me.

WELL. Scorn me not, good lady ;
But, as in form you are angelical,
Imitate the heavenly natures, and vouchsafe
At the least awhile to hear me. You will grant
The blood that runs in this arm is as noble
As that which fills your veins ; those costly
jewels,

And those rich clothes you wear, your men's observance 90

And women's flattery, are in you no virtues ;
Nor these rags, with my poverty, in me vices.
You have a fair fame, and, I know, deserve it ;
Yet, lady, I must say, in nothing more
Than in the pious sorrow you have shown
For your late noble husband.

ORD. [aside] How she starts B

FURN. [aside] And hardly can keep finger from the eye,
To hear him nam'd.

L. ALL. Have you aught else to say?

WELL. That husband, madam, was once in his fortune
Almost as low as I ; want, debts, and quarrels 100

Lay heavy on him. Let it not be thought
A boast in me, though I say I reliev'd him.

<sup>63</sup> Even if the declaration should be made under oath. ~~Make arrangements that.~~

'T was I that gave him fashion <sup>65</sup> ; mine the
sword

That did on all occasions second his ;
I brought him on and off with honor, lady ;
And when in all men's judgments he was sunk,
And, in his own hopes, not to be [buoy'd] <sup>66</sup> up,
I stepp'd unto him, took him by the hand,
And set him upright.

FURN. [aside] Are not we base rogues,
That could forget this?

WELL. I confess, you made him [110
Master of your estate ; nor could your friends, Though he brought no wealth with him, blame
you for 't ;

For he had a shape, and to that shape a mind
Made up of all parts either great or noble ;
So winning a behavior, not to be Resisted, madam.

L. ALL. 'T is most true, he had.

WELL. For his sake, then, in that I was his friend,
Do not contemn me.

L. ALL. For what's past excuse me ;
I will redeem it. Order, give the gentleman
A hundred pounds.

WELL. No, madam, on no terms ; [120
I will nor beg nor borrow sixpence of you,
But be suppli'd elsewhere, or want thus ever.
Only one suit I make, which you deny not
To strangers ; and 't is this. (Whispers to her.)

L. ALL. Fie ! nothing else?

WELL. Nothing, unless you please to charge
your servants
To throw away a little respect upon me.

L. ALL. What you demand is yours.

WELL. I thank you, lady.
Now what can be wrought out of such a suit
Is yet in supposition ; I have said all ;
When you please, you may retire. —

[to the Servants] Nay, all's forgotten ;
And, for a lucky omen to my project, 131
Shake hands, and end all quarrels in the cellar.

ORD. Agreed ; agreed.

FURN. Still merry Master Wellborn.
Exeunt.

ACT II — SCENE I

Enter OVERREACH [and] MARRALL.

OVER. He's gone, I warrant thee ; this commission crush'd him.

MAR. Your Worship[s]<sup>2</sup> have the way
[on 't],<sup>3</sup> and ne'er miss
To squeeze these unthrifts into air; and yet,
The chapfallen<sup>4</sup> justice did his part, return-
ing
For your advantage the certificate,
Against his conscience, and his knowledge, too,
With your good favor, to the utter ruin
Of the poor farmer.

OVER. 'T was for these good ends
I made him a justice; he that bribes his belly
Is certain to command his soul.

MAR. I wonder,
Still with your license, why your Worship having 11
The power to put this thin-gut in commission,
You are not in 't yourself.

OVER. Thou art a fool;
/In being out of office I am out of danger;
Where,<sup>5</sup> if I were a justice, besides the trouble,
I might, or out of wilfulness or error,
Run myself finely into a praemunire,<sup>6</sup>
And so become a prey to the informer.
No, I'll have none of 't; 't is enough I keep Greedy at my devotion; so ' he serve 20
My purposes, let him hang or damn, I care
not;

✓Friendship is but a word.

MAR. You are all wisdom.

OVER. I would be worldly wise; for the other wisdom,
That does prescribe us a well govern'd life,
And to do right to others as ourselves,
I value not an atom.

MAR. What course take you,
With your good patience, to hedge in the manor
Of your neighbor, Master Frugal? as 't is said,
He will nor sell, nor borrow, nor exchange;
And his land, lying in the midst of your many lordships, 30
Is a foul blemish.

OVER. I have thought on 't, Marrall,
And it shall take. I must have all men sellers,
And I the only purchaser.

MAR. 'T is most fit, sir.

OVER. I'll therefore buy some cottage near his manor;

<sup>6</sup> Strictly, a writ charging a sheriff to produce a person guilty of certain unusual offences; hence, any writ involving a similar penalty; and so = scrape, predicament.

Which done, I'll make my men break ope his fences,

Ride o'er his standing corn, and in the night
Set fire on his barns, or break his cattle's legs.
These trespasses draw on suits and suits expenses,

Which I can spare, but will soon beggar him.
When I have harried him thus two or three year, 40

Though he sue in forma pauperis, in spite
Of all his thrift and care, he'll grow behindhand.<sup>8</sup>

MAR. The best I ever heard! I could adore
you.

OVER. Then, with the favor of my man of
law,

I will pretend some title. Want will force him
To put it to arbitrament; then, if he sell
For half the value, he shall have ready money,
And I possess his land.

MAR. 'T is above wonder!
Wellborn was apt to sell, and needed not Those fine arts, sir, to hook him in.

OVER. Well thought on. [50
This varlet, Marrall, lives too long, to upbraid
me

With my close cheat<sup>9</sup> put upon him. Will nor cold
Nor hunger kill him?

MAR. I know not what to think on 't.
I have us'd all means; and the last night I caus'd

His host, the tapster, to turn him out of doors;
And have been since with all your friends and tenants,
And, on the forfeit of your favor, charg'd
[them],<sup>10</sup>

Though a crust of mouldy bread would keep him from starving,
Yet they should not relieve him. This is done,
sir.

OVER. That was something, Marrall; but thou must go further, 60
And suddenly, Marrall.

MAR. Where and when you please, sir.

OVER. I would have thee seek him out, and,
if thou canst,
Persuade him that 't is better steal than beg;
Then, if I prove he has but robb'd a henroost,
Not all the world shall save him from the gallows.

Do anything to work him to despair;
And 't is thy masterpiece.

<sup>8</sup> Be unable to meet his financial obligations.

MAR. I will do my best, sir.

OVER. I am now on my main work with the Lord Lovell,

The gallant-minded, popular Lord Lovell,
The minion<sup>11</sup> of the people's love. I hear [70
He's come into the country, and my aims are
To insinuate myself into his knowledge,
And then invite him to my house.

MAR. I have you ;
This points at my young mistress.

OVER. She must part with
That humble title, and write Honorable, Right Honorable, Marrall, my Right Honorable daughter,

If all I have, or e'er shall get, will do it.
I will have her well attended ; there are ladies
Of errant knights decay'd and brought so low,
That for cast clothes and meat will gladly serve her. 80

And 't is my glory, though I come from the city,<sup>12</sup>

To have their issue whom<sup>13</sup> I have undone,
To kneel to mine as bondslaves.

MAR. 'T is fit state, sir.

OVER. And therefore, I'll not have a cham-
bermaid
That ties her shoes, or any meaner office,
But such whose fathers were Right Worshipful.

'T is a rich man's pride ! there having ever been

More than a feud, a strange antipathy,
Between us and true gentry.

Enter WELLBORN.

MAR. See, who's here, sir.

OVER. Hence, monster ! prodigy !

WELL. Sir, your wife's nephew ; [90
She and my father tumbled in one belly.

OVER. Avoid my sight ! thy breath's infectious, rogue !

I shun thee as a leprosy, or the plague.

Come hither, Marrall ; — [aside] this is the time to work him. Exit OVERREACH.

MAR. I warrant you, sir,

WELL. By this light I think he's mad.

MAR. Mad ! had you took compassion on
yourself,
You long since had been mad.

WELL. You have took a course,
Between you and my venerable uncle,
To make me so.

MAR. The more pale-spirited you,
That would not be instructed. I swear deeply — 100

WELL. By what ?

MAR. By my religion.

WELL. Thy religion !
The Devil's creed : — but what would you have done ?

MAR. Had there been but one tree in all the shire,

Nor any hope to compass a penny halter,
Before, like you, I had outliv'd my fortunes,
A withe had serv'd my turn to hang myself.
I am zealous in your cause ; pray you hang
yourself,

And presently,<sup>14</sup> as you love your credit.<sup>15</sup>

WELL. I thank you.

MAR. Will you stay till you die in a ditch, or lice devour you ? —

Or, if you dare not do the feat yourself, 110
But that<sup>16</sup> you'll put the state to charge and
trouble,

Is there no purse to be cut, house to be broken,

Or market woman with eggs that you may
murder,

And so dispatch the business ?

WELL. Here's variety,
I must confess ; but I'll accept of none
Of all your gentle offers, I assure you.

MAR. Why, have you hope ever to eat
again,

Or drink ? or be the master of three farthings ?
If you like not hanging, drown yourself !
Take some course

For your reputation.

WELL. 'T will not do, dear tempter, [120
With all the rhetoric the Fiend hath taught
you.

I am as far as thou art from despair ;
Nay, I have confidence, which is more than
hope,

To live, and suddenly, better than ever.

MAR. Ha ! ha ! these castles you build in the air

Will not persuade me or to give or lend
A token<sup>17</sup> to you.

WELL. I'll be more kind to thee.
Come, thou shalt dine with me.

MAR. With you !

WELL. Nay more, dine gratis.

MAR. Under what hedge, I pray you ? or at whose cost ?

<sup>17</sup> See on I, i, 54.

Are they padders<sup>18</sup> or Abram-men<sup>19</sup> that are your consorts? 130

WELL. Thou art incredulous; but thou shalt dine

Not alone at her house, but with a gallant
lady;

With me, and with a lady.

MAR. Lady! what lady?
With the Lady of the Lake,<sup>20</sup> or Queen of Fairies?

For I know it must be an enchanted dinner.

WELL. With the Lady Allworth, knave.

MAR. Nay, now there's hope
Thy brain is crack'd.

WELL. Mark there, with what respect
I am entertain'd.

MAR. With choice, no doubt, of dog whips.

Why, doest thou ever hope to pass her porter?

WELL. 'T is not far off; go with me; trust thine own eyes. 140

MAR. Troth, in my hope, or my assurance rather,

To see thee curvet<sup>21</sup> and mount like a dog in a blanket,

If ever thou presume to pass her threshold,
I will endure thy company.

WELL. Come along then. Exeunt.

SCENE II<sup>22</sup>

[Enter] ALLWORTH, Waiting Woman, Cham-bermaid, ORDER, AMBLE, FURNACE, [and] WATCHALL.

WOMAN. Could you not command your leisure one hour longer?

CHAM. Or half an hour?

ALL. I have told you what my haste is;
Besides, being now another's, not mine own,
Howe'er I much desire to enjoy you longer,
My duty suffers, if, to please myself,
I should neglect my Lord.

WOMAN. Pray you do me the favor
To put these few quince-cakes into your pocket;

They are of mine own preserving.

CHAM. And this marmalade;

'T is comfortable for your stomach.

WOMAN. And, at parting,
Excuse me if I beg a farewell from you. [10

CHAM. You are still before me. I move the same suit, sir.

[ALLWORTH] kisses 'em severally.

FURN. How greedy these chamberers are of a beardless chin!

I thin[k] the tits<sup>23</sup> will ravish him.

ALL.

My service

To both.

WOMAN. Ours waits on you.

CHAM. And shall do ever.

ORD. You are my lady's charge; be therefore careful

That you sustain your parts.

WOMAN. We can bear, I warrant you.

Exeunt [Waiting] Woman and Cham-
bermaid.

FURN. Here, drink it off; the ingredients are cordial,

And this the true elixir; it hath boil'd

Since midnight for you. 'T is the quintessence
Of five cocks of the game, ten dozen of sparrows, 20

Knuckles of veal, potato-roots and marrow, Coral, and ambergris. Were you two years older,

And I had a wife, or gamesome mistress,

I durst trust you with neither. You need not bait<sup>24</sup>

After this, I warrant you, though your journey's long;

You may ride on the strength of this till tomorrow morning.

ALL. Your courtesies overwhelm me; I much grieve

To part from such true friends; and yet find comfort

My attendance on my honorable Lord,

Whose resolution holds to visit my Lady, [30
Will speedily bring me back.

Knocking at the gate; MARRALL and WELLBORN within.

MAR. Dar'st thou venture further?

WELL. Yes, yes, and knock again.

ORD. 'T is he; disperse!

AMB. Perform it bravely.

FURN. I know my cue, ne'er doubt me.

[Except ALLWORTH] they go off several ways.

[Re-enter WATCHALL, with WELLBORN and MARRALL.]

WATCH. Beast that I was, to make you stay! Most welcome;
You were long since expected.

WELL. Say so much
To my friend, I pray you.

WATCH. For your sake, I will, sir.

MAR. For his sake!

WELL. Mum; this is nothing.

MAR. More than ever

I would have believ'd, though I had found it in my primer.

ALL. When I have giv'n you reasons for my late harshness,

You'll pardon and excuse me; for, believe
me, 40

Though now I part <sup>25</sup> abruptly, in my service
I will deserve it.

MAR. Service! with a vengeance!

WELL. I am satisfied; farewell, Tom.

ALL. All joy stay with you!

Exit ALLWORTH.

Re-enter AMBLE.

AMB. You are happily encounter'd; I yet never

Presented one so welcome as I know
You will be to my Lady.

MAR. This is some vision,
Or, sure, these men are mad, to worship a dunghill;

It cannot be a truth.

WELL. Be still a pagan,
An unbelieving infidel; be so, miscreant, [49
And meditate on blankets, and on dog whips!

Re-enter FURNACE.

FURN. I am glad you are come; until I know your pleasure
I knew not how to serve up my Lady's dinner.

MAR. His pleasure! is it possible?

WELL. What's thy will?

FURN. Marry, sir, I have some grouse, and turkey chicken,
Some rails and quails, and my Lady will'd me
ask you,

What kind of sauces best affect your palate,
That I may use my utmost skill to please it.

MAR. [aside] The Devil's enter'd this cook.
Sauce for his palate!

That, on my knowledge, for almost this twelvemonth,

Durst wish but cheese-parings and brown bread on Sundays. 60

WELL. That way I like 'em best.

FURN. It shall be done, sir.

Exit FURNACE.

<sup>25</sup> Depart.

WELL. What think you of the hedge we shall dine under?

Shall we feed gratis?

MAR. I know not what to think;
Pray you make me not mad.

Re-enter ORDER.

ORD. This place becomes you not;
Pray you walk, sir, to the dining-room.

WELL. I am well here,
Till her Ladyship quits her chamber.

MAR. Well here, say you?
'T is a rare change! But yesterday you
thought

Yourselves well in a barn, wrapp'd up in peas-
straw.

Re-enter [Waiting] Woman and Chambermaid.

WOMAN. Oh, sir, you are wish'd for.

CHAM. My lady dreamt, sir, of you.

WOMAN. And the first command she gave,
after she rose, 70

Was (her devotions done) to give her notice
When you approach'd here.

CHAM. Which is done, on my virtue.

MAR. I shall be converted; I begin to grow
Into a new belief, which saints nor angels
Could have won me to have faith in.

WOMAN. Sir, my Lady.

Enter LADY [ALLWORTH].

L. ALL. I come to meet you, and languish'd till I saw you.

This first kiss is for form; I allow a second
To such a friend.

MAR. To such a friend! Heaven bless me!

WELL. I am wholly yours; yet, madam, if you please

To grace this gentleman with a salute — [80
MAR. Salute me at his bidding!

WELL. I shall receive it
As a most high favor.

L. ALL. Sir, you may command me.
[Advances to salute MARRALL, who retires.]

WELL. Run backward from a lady! and such a lady!

MAR. To kiss her foot is, to poor me, a favor

I am unworthy of. Offers <sup>25</sup> to kiss her foot.

L. ALL. Nay, pray you rise;
And since you are so humble, I'll exalt you.
You shall dine with me to-day, at mine own table.

<sup>25</sup> Tries.

MAR. Your Ladyship's table! I am not good enough
To sit at your steward's board.
L. ALL. You are too modest;
I will not be deny'd.

Re-enter FURNACE.

FURN. Will you still be babbling [90
Till your meat freeze on the table? The old trick still;

My art ne'er thought on!

L. ALL. Your arm, Master Wellborn. —
[To MARRALL] Nay, keep us company.

MAR. I was never so grac'd.

Exeunt WELLBORN, LADY [ALL-WORTH], AMBLE, MARRALL, [Waiting] Woman, [and Chambermaid].

ORD. So! we have play'd our parts, and are come off well;

But if I know the mystery, why my Lady
Consented to it, or why Master Wellborn
Desir'd it, may I perish!

FURN. Would I had
The roasting of his heart that cheated him,
And forces the poor gentleman to these shifts!

By fire! for cooks are Persians,<sup>27</sup> and swear by
it, 100

Of all the griping and extorting tyrants
I ever heard or read of, I ne'er met
A match to Sir Giles Overreach.

WATCH. What will you take
To tell him so, fellow Furnace?

FURN. Just as much
As my throat is worth, for that would be the price on't.

To have a usurer that starves himself,
And wears a cloak of one-and-twenty years
On a suit of fourteen groats,<sup>28</sup> bought of the hangman,<sup>29</sup>

To grow rich, and then purchase, is too common;

But this Sir Giles feeds high, keeps many
servants, 110

Who must at his command do any outrage;

Rich in his habit, vast in his expenses;

Yet he to admiration<sup>30</sup> still increases

In wealth and lordships.

ORD. He frights men out of their estates,
And breaks through all law-nets, made to curb ill men,

As they were cobwebs. No man dares reprove him.

Such a spirit to dare and power to do were never

Lodg'd so unluckily.

Re-enter AMBLE.

AMB. Ha! ha! I shall burst.

ORD. Contain thyself, man.

FURN. Or make us partakers

Of your sudden mirth.

AMB. Ha! ha! my Lady has got [120
Such a guest at her table! — this term-driver,<sup>31</sup>

Marrall,

This snip of an attorney —

FURN. What of him, man?

AMB. The knave thinks still he's at the cook's shop in Ram Alley,<sup>32</sup>

Where the clerks divide, and the elder is to choose;

And feeds so slovenly!

FURN. Is this all?

AMB. My Lady

Drank to him for fashion sake, or to please
Master Wellborn;

As I live, he rises, and takes up a dish

In which there were some remnants of a boil'd
capon,

And pledges her in white broth!<sup>33</sup>

FURN. Nay, 't is like

The rest of his tribe.

AMB. And when I brought him wine, [130
He leaves his stool, and, after a leg<sup>34</sup> or two,
Most humbly thanks my Worship.

ORD. Rose already!

AMB. I shall be chid.

Re-enter LADY [ALLWORTH], WELLBORN, [and] MARRALL.

FURN. My Lady frowns.

L. ALL. [aside to AMBLE] You wait well!
Let me have no more of this; I observ'd your jeering.

Sirrah, I'll have you know whom I think worthy

To sit at my table, be he ne'er so mean,

When I am present, is not your companion.<sup>35</sup>

ORD. [aside] Nay, she'll preserve what's due to her.

FURN. [aside] This refreshing
Follows your flux of laughter.

<sup>35</sup> Fellow, equal.

L. ALL. [to WELLBORN] You are master
Of your own will. I know so much of manners 140

As not to inquire your purposes ; in a word,
To me you are ever welcome, as to a house
That is your own.

WELL. [aside to MARRALL] Mark that.

MAR. [aside] With reverence, sir,
An it like your Worship.

WELL. Trouble yourself no farther,
Dear madam ; my heart's full of zeal and
service,

However in my language I am sparing. —
Come, Master Marrall.

MAR. I attend your Worship.

Exeunt WELLBORN [and] MARRALL.

L. ALL. I see in your looks you are sorry, and you know me

An easy mistress. Be merry ; I have forgot all.

Order and Furnace, come with me ; I must give you 150
Further directions.

ORD. What you please.

FURN. We are ready. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III <sup>36</sup>

[Enter] WELLBORN [and] MARRALL.

WELL. I think I am in a good way.

MAR. Good, sir ! the best way,
The certain best way !

WELL. There are casualties
That men are subject to.

MAR. You are above 'em ;
And as you are already Worshipful,
I hope ere long you will increase in worship,
And be Right Worshipful.

WELL. Prithee do not flout me ;
What I shall be, I shall be. Is't for your ease,
You keep your hat off ?

MAR. Ease ! an it like your Worship !
I hope Jack Marrall shall not live so long,
To prove himself such an unmannerly beast,
Though it hail hazel-nuts, as to be cover'd [11
When your Worship's present.

WELL. [aside] Is not this a true rogue,
That, out of mere hope of a future coz'nage,<sup>37</sup>
Can turn thus suddenly ? 'T is rank already.

MAR. I know your Worship's wise, and needs no counsel ;
Yet if, in my desire to do you service,
I humbly offer my advice, (but still <sup>38</sup>

<sup>38</sup> Always.

Under correction,) I hope I shall not Incur your high displeasure.

WELL. No ; speak freely.

MAR. Then, in my judgment, sir, my simple judgment, 20
(Still with your Worship's favor,) I could wish
you

A better habit,<sup>39</sup> for this cannot be
But much distasteful to the noble lady
(I say no more) that loves you ; for, this morning,

To me, and I am but a swine to her,
Before th' assurance of her wealth perfum'd
you,

You savor'd not of amber.<sup>40</sup>

WELL. I do now, then ?

MAR. This your baton hath got a touch of
it. — Kisses the end of his cudgel.
Yet, if you please, for change,<sup>41</sup> I have twenty pounds here,

Which, out of my true love, I presently 30
Lay down at your Worship's feet ; 't will serve to buy you /

A riding suit.

WELL. But where's the horse ?

MAR. My gelding
Is at your service ; nay, you shall ride me,
Before your Worship shall be put to the trouble
To walk afoot. Alas, when you are lord
Of this lady's manor, as I know you will be,
You may with the lease of glebeland called
Knave's Acre,

A place I would manure,<sup>42</sup> requite your vassal.

WELL. I thank thy love, but must make no use of it ;

What's twenty pounds ?

MAR. 'T is all that I can make,<sup>43</sup> sir. [40

WELL. Doest thou think, though I want clothes, I could not have 'em,
For one word to my lady ?

MAR. As <sup>44</sup> I know not that !

WELL. Come, I'll tell thee a secret, and so leave thee.

I'll not give her the advantage, though she
be

A gallant-minded lady, after we are married, (There being no woman but is sometimes fro-ward,) <sup>45</sup>

To hit me in the teeth, and say she was forc'd
To buy my wedding clothes, and took me on
With a plain riding suit and an ambling nag.

<sup>39</sup> Suit of clothes. <sup>40</sup> Ambergris.

<sup>41</sup> I.e., to enable you to buy a change of clothing.

No, I'll be furnish'd something like myself, [50
And so farewell; for <sup>46</sup> thy suit touching
Knave's Acre,
When it is mine, 't is thine.

MAR. I thank your Worship.

Exit WELLBORN.

How was [I] <sup>47</sup> cozen'd in the calculation
Of this man's fortune! My master cozen'd too,
Whose pupil I am in the art of undoing <sup>48</sup> men;
For that is our profession! Well, well, Master
Wellborn,

You are of a sweet nature, and fit again to be cheated;

Which, if the Fates please, when you are possess'd

Of the land and lady, you, sans question, shall
be.

I'll presently think of the means.

Walk by, mazing.<sup>49</sup>

*Enter OVERREACH, [speaking to a Servant
within.]*

OVER. Sirrah, take my horse. [60
I'll walk to get me an appetite; 't is but a mile,

And exercise will keep me from being pursy.<sup>50</sup>
Ha! Marrall! Is he conjuring? Perhaps
The knave has wrought the prodigal to do
Some outrage on himself, and now he feels Compunction in his conscience for't; no
matter,

So it be done. Marrall!

MAR. Sir, —

OVER. How succeed we
In our plot on Wellborn?

MAR. Never better, sir.

OVER. Has he hang'd or drown'd himself?

MAR. No, sir, he lives;
Lives once more to be made a prey to you, [70
A greater prey than ever.

OVER. Art thou in thy wits?
If thou art, reveal this miracle, and briefly.

MAR. A lady, sir, is fall'n in love with him.

OVER. With him? What lady?

MAR. The rich Lady Allworth.

OVER. Thou dolt! how dar'st thou speak
this?

MAR. I speak truth;

And I do so but once a year, unless
It be to you, sir. We din'd with her Ladyship,
I thank his Worship.

OVER. His Worship!

MAR. As I live, sir,
I din'd with him, at the great lady's table, Simple <sup>51</sup> as I stand here; and saw when she kiss'd him, 80

And would, at his request, have kiss'd me too:
But I was not so audacious [as] <sup>52</sup> some youths
are,

And dare do anything, be it ne'er so absurd,
And sad <sup>53</sup> after performance.

OVER. Why, thou rascal!
To tell me these impossibilities.

Dine at her table! and kiss him! or thee! —
Impudent varlet, have not I myself,

To whom great countesses' doors have oft flew open,

Ten times attempted, since her husband's
death,

In vain, to see her, though I came — a suitor?
And yet your good Solicitorship, and rogue
Wellborn, 91

Were brought into her presence, feasted with
her! —

But that I know thee a dog that cannot blush,
This most incredible lie would call up one
On thy buttermilk cheeks.

MAR. Shall I not trust my eyes, sir,
Or taste? I feel her good cheer in my belly.

OVER. You shall feel me, if you give not over, sirrah;

Recover your brains again, and be no more gull'd

With a beggar's plot, assisted by the aids
Of servingmen and chambermaids — for beyond these 100

Thou never saw'st a woman — or I'll quit you
From my employments.

MAR. Will you credit this yet?
On my confidence of their marriage, I offer'd

Wellborn —
(aside) I would give a crown now I durst say

"his Worship" —
My nag and twenty pounds.

OVER. Did you so, [idiot]! <sup>54</sup>
Strikes him down.

Was this the way to work him to despair,
Or rather to cross me?

MAR. Will your Worship kill me?
OVER. No, no; but drive the lying spirit out of you.

MAR. He's gone.

OVER. I have done then; now, forgetting

Q mazing. <sup>50</sup> Short-winded and fat.

<sup>54</sup> Cor. Coxeter; Q I doe (for Idiot.)

Your late imaginary feast and lady, 110
Know my Lord Lovell dines with me to-morrow.

Be careful naught be wanting to receive him ;
And bid my daughter's women trim her up ;
Though they paint her, so <sup>55</sup> she catch the lord, I'll thank 'em.

There's a piece for my late blows.

MAR. (aside) I must yet suffer ;
But there may be a time —

OVER. Do you grumble ?

MAR. No, sir. [Exeunt.]

ACT III — SCENE I <sup>1</sup>

[Enter LORD] LOVELL, ALLWORTH, [and]
Servants.

LOV. Walk the horses down the hill ; something in private
I must impart to Allworth.

Exeunt [Servants].<sup>2</sup>

ALL. Oh, my Lord,
What sacrifice of reverence, duty, watching,
Although I could put off the use of sleep,
And ever wait on your commands [to] <sup>3</sup>
serve 'em ;

What dangers, though in ne'er so horrid
shapes,
Nay death itself, though I should run to meet
it,

Can I, and with a thankful willingness, suffer !
But still the retribution will fall short
Of your bounties show'r'd upon me.

LOV. Loving youth, [10
Till what I purpose be put into act,
Do not o'erprize it ; since you have trusted me
With your soul's nearest, nay, her dearest,
secret,

Rest confident 't is in a cabinet lock'd
Treachery shall never open. I have found you (For so much to your face I must profess, Howe'er you guard <sup>4</sup> your modesty with a blush for 't)

More zealous in your love and service to me
Than I have been in my rewards.

ALL. Still great ones,
Above my merit.

LOV. Such your gratitude calls 'em ; [20
Nor am I of that harsh and rugg'd temper

As some great men are tax'd <sup>5</sup> with, who imagine

They part from the respect due to their honors

If they use not all such as follow 'em,
Without distinction of their births, like slaves.
I am not so condition'd ; <sup>6</sup> I can make
A fitting difference between my footboy
And a gentleman by want compell'd to serve
me.

ALL. 'T is thankfully acknowledg'd ; you have been

More like a father to me than a master. 30
Pray you, pardon the comparison.

LOV. I allow it ;
And, to give you assurance I am pleas'd in 't,
My carriage and demeanor to your mistress,
Fair Margaret, shall truly witness for me
I can command my passions.

ALL. 'T is a conquest
Few lords can boast of when they are tempted
— oh !

LOV. Why do you sigh ? Can you be doubtful of me ?

By that fair name I in the wars have purchas'd,
And all my actions, hitherto untainted,
I will not be more true to mine own honor [40
Than to my Allworth !

ALL. As you are the brave Lord Lovell,
Your bare word only given is an assurance
Of more validity and weight to me
Than all the oaths, bound up with imprecations,

Which, when they would deceive, most courtiers practice ;

Yet being a man, (for, sure, to style you more
Would relish of gross flattery,) I am forc'd, Against my confidence of your worth and virtues,

To doubt, nay, more, to fear.

LOV. So young, and jealous !

ALL. Were you to encounter with a single foe, 50

The victory were certain ; but to stand
The charge of two such potent enemies,
At once assaulting you, as wealth and beauty,
And those, too, seconded with power, is odds
Too great for Hercules.

LOV. Speak your doubts and fears,
Since you will nourish 'em, in plainer language,
That I may understand them.

ALL. What's your will,
Though I lend arms against myself, (provided

<sup>1</sup> The same, or another road.

<sup>6</sup> Such is not my disposition.

They may advantage you,) must be obeyed.
My much-lov'd Lord, were Margaret only
fair, 60

The cannon of her more than earthly form, Though mounted high, commanding all beneath it,

And ramm'd with bullets of her sparkling
eyes,

Of all the bulwarks that defend your senses
Could batter [none] <sup>7</sup> but that which guards your sight.

But when the well-tun'd accents of her tongue
Make music to you, and with numerous <sup>8</sup>
sounds

Assault your hearing, (such as if Ulysses
Now liv'd again, howe'er he stood the Sirens, Could not resist,) the combat must grow doubtful 70

Between your reason and rebellious passions.
Add this too: when you feel her touch, and
breath

Like a soft western wind when it glides o'er
Arabia, creating gums and spices;

And, in the van, the nectar of her lips,
Which you must taste, bring the battalia on,
Well arm'd and strongly li[n]d <sup>9</sup> with her discourse,

And knowing manners, to give entertain-
ment —

Hippolytus himself would leave Diana,
To follow such a Venus.<sup>10</sup>

Lov. Love hath made you [so Poetical, Allworth.

ALL. Grant all these beat off,
Which if it be in man to do, you'll do it;
Mammon, in Sir Giles Overreach, steps in
With heaps of ill-got gold, and so much land,
To make her more remarkable, as would tire
A falcon's wings in one day to fly over.

O my good Lord! these powerful aids, which would

Make a misshapen negro beautiful,
(Yet are but ornaments to give her lustre,
That in herself is all perfection,) must 80
Prevail for her. I here release your trust;
'Tis happiness enough for me to serve you
And sometimes, with chaste eyes, to look upon
her.

Lov. Why, shall I swear?

ALL. Oh, by no means, my Lord;
And wrong not so your judgment to the world
As from your fond indulgence to a boy,

Your page, your servant, to refuse a blessing
Divers great men are rivals for.

Lov. Suspend
Your judgment till the trial. How far is it
T' Overreach house?

ALL. At the most, some half hour's riding; 100

You'll soon be there.

Lov. And you the sooner freed
From your jealous fears.

ALL. Oh, that I durst but hope it!
Exeunt.

SCENE II <sup>11</sup>

[Enter] OVERREACH, GREEDY, [and] MARRALL.

OVER. Spare for no cost; let my dressers crack with the weight

Of curious viands.

GREEDY. Store indeed 's no sore,<sup>12</sup> sir.

OVER. That proverb fits your stomach,
Master Greedy.

And let no plate be seen but what 's pure gold,
Or such whose workmanship exceeds the
matter

That it is made of; let my choicest linen Perfume the room, and, when we wash, the water,

With precious powders mix'd, so please my
Lord

That he may with envy wish to bathe so ever.

MAR. 'T will be very chargeable.<sup>13</sup>

OVER. Avaunt, you drudge! [10
Now all my labor'd ends are at the stake, Is't a time to think of thrift? Call in my daughter. [Exit MARRALL.]

And, Master Justice, since you love choice dishes,

And plenty of 'em —

GREEDY. As I do, indeed, sir,
Almost as much as to give thanks for 'em.

OVER. I do confer that providence,<sup>14</sup> with my power

Of absolute command to have abundance,
To your best care.

GREEDY. I'll punctually discharge it,
And give the best directions. Now am I,
In mine own conceit, a monarch; at the
least, 20

Arch-president of the boil'd, the roast, thebak'd;

For which I will eat often, and give thanks

<sup>14</sup> Duty of providing.

When my belly's brac'd up like a drum, and that's pure justice. Exit GREEDY.

OVER. [It]<sup>16</sup> must be so. Should the foolish girl prove modest,
She may spoil all; she had it not from me,
But from her mother; I was ever forward,<sup>16</sup>
As she must be, and therefore I'll prepare her.

[Enter] MARGARET.

Alone — and let your women wait without.

MARG. Your pleasure, sir?

OVER. Ha! this is a neat dressing!
These orient pearls and diamonds well plac'd
too! 30
The gown affects me not;<sup>17</sup> it should have
been Embroider'd o'er and o'er with flowers of gold;
But these rich jewels and quaint<sup>18</sup> fashion help
it.

And how below? since oft the wanton eye,
The face observ'd, descends unto the foot,
Which being well proportion'd, as yours is,
Invites as much as perfect white and red, Though without art. How like you your new
woman,

The Lady Downfall'n?

MARG. Well, for a companion;
Not as a servant.

OVER. Is she humble, Meg, 40
And careful too, her ladyship forgotten?

MARG. I pity her fortune.

OVER. Pity her! trample on her!
I took her up in an old tamin<sup>19</sup> gown, (Even starv'd for want of twopenny chops,) to serve thee;

And if I understand she but repines
To do thee any duty, though ne'er so servile, I'll pack her to her knight, where I have lodg'd him,
Into the Counter<sup>20</sup> and there let 'em howl together.

MARG. You know your own ways; but for<sup>21</sup> me, I blush

When I command her, that was once attended 50

With persons not inferior to myself

In birth.

OVER. In birth! why, art thou not my
daughter,

The blest child of my industry and wealth?
Why, foolish girl, was't not to make thee great
That I have ran, and still pursue, those ways

<sup>16</sup> Q. I. <sup>17</sup> Bold, ardent.

That hale down curses on me, which I mind
not?

Part with these humble thoughts, and apt<sup>22</sup>
thyself

To the noble state I labor to advance thee;
Or, by my hopes to see thee Honorable,
I will adopt a stranger to<sup>23</sup> my heir, 60
And throw thee from my care. Do not provoke me.

MARG. I will not, sir; mould me which way you please.

Re-enter GREEDY.

OVER. How! Interrupted?

GREEDY. 'Tis matter of importance.
The cook, sir, is self-will'd, and will not learn From my experience. There's a fawn brough[t] in, sir,

And, for my life, I cannot make him roast it
With a Norfolk dumpling<sup>24</sup> in the belly of it;
And, sir, we wise men know, without the dumpling

'Tis not worth threepence.

OVER. Would it were whole in thy belly,
To stuff it out! Cook it any way; prithee, leave me. 70

GREEDY. Without order for the dumpling?

OVER. Let it be dump'd
Which way thou wilt; or tell him, I will scald
him

In his own caldron.

GREEDY. I had lost my stomach<sup>25</sup> Had I lost my mistress dumpling, I'll give thanks for. Exit GREEDY.

OVER. But to our business, Meg; you have heard who dines here?

MARG. I have, sir.

OVER. 'Tis an honorable man;
A lord, Meg, and commands a regiment
Of soldiers, and, what's rare, is one himself,
A bold and understanding one; and to be
A lord and a good leader, in one volume, 80
Is granted unto few but such as rise up
The kingdom's glory.

Re-enter GREEDY.

GREEDY. I'll resign my office,
If I be not better obey'd.

OVER. Slight, art thou frantic?

<sup>24</sup> Fuller (Worthies) says of this expression, in the sense of "inhabitant of Norfolk", that it "relates to the fare they commonly feed on."

<sup>25</sup> Would have lost my appetite. — Punctuation in next line follows Q. ? Semicolon after "dumpling", and read for it.

GREEDY. Frantic! 'T would make me a frantic, and stark mad,
Were I not a justice of peace and quorum <sup>26</sup>
too,
Which this rebellious cook cares not a straw
for.

There are a dozen of woodcocks ~~fool~~.

OVER. Make thyself
Thirteen,<sup>27</sup> the baker's dozen.

GREEDY. I am contented,
So they may be dress'd to my mind; he has found out

A new device for sauce, and will not dish
'em <sup>90</sup>

With toasts and butter. My father was a tailor,<sup>28</sup>

And my name, though a justice, Greedy Woodcock;

And, ere I'll see my lineage so abus'd,
I'll give up my commission.

OVER. [calling off stage] Cook!—Rogue, obey him!—

I have given the word, pray you now remove yourself

To a collar of brawn,<sup>29</sup> and trouble me no farther.

GREEDY. I will, and meditate what to eat at dinner. Exit GREEDY.

OVER. And as I said, Meg, when this gull disturb'd us,

This honorable lord, this colonel,
I would have thy husband.

MARG. There's too much disparity [100
Between his quality <sup>30</sup> and mine, to hope it.

OVER. I more than hope 't, and doubt not to effect it.

Be thou no enemy to thyself,<sup>31</sup> my wealth Shall weigh his titles down and make you equals.

Now for the means to assure him thine, observe me:

Remember he's a courtier and a soldier,
And not to be trifl'd with; and, therefore,
when

He comes to woo you, see you, do not coy it.
This mincing modesty has spoil'd many a match

By a first refusal, in vain after hop'd for. [110

<sup>26</sup> I.e., one of the better qualified justices whose presence was required to constitute a bench. Q
coram.

<sup>27</sup> "Woodcock" also meant "fool."

<sup>28</sup> "Tailors were supposed to have good appetites."
(Cruikshank.)

<sup>31</sup> I.e., if you acquiesce in my scheme.

MAR. You'll have me, sir, preserve the distance that Confines a virgin?

OVER. Virgin me no virgins! .
I must have you lose that name, or you lose
me.

I will have you private <sup>32</sup>—start not—I say,
private;

If thou art my true daughter, not a bastard,
Thou wilt venture alone with one man, though he came

Like Jupiter to Semele, and come off,<sup>33</sup> too;
And therefore, when he kisses you, kiss close.

MARG. I have heard this is the strumpet's fashion, sir;

Which I must never learn.

OVER. Learn anything, [120
And from any creature, that may make thee
great;

From the Devil himself.

MARG. [aside] This is but devilish doctrine!

OVER. Or, if his blood grow hot, suppose he offer <sup>34</sup>

Beyond this, do not you stay till it cool,
But meet his ardor; if a couch be near,
Sit down on 't, and invite him.

MARG. In your house,
Your own house, sir? For Heav'n's sake, what are you then?

Or what shall I be, sir?

OVER. Stand not on form;
Words are no substances.

MARG. Though you could dispense
With your own honor, cast aside religion, [130
The hopes of Heaven, or fear of hell, (excuse
me,)

In worldly policy this is not the way
To make me his wife; his whore, I grant it may do.

My maiden honor so soon yielded up,
Nay, prostituted, cannot but assure him
I, that am light to him, will not hold weight
When he is <sup>35</sup> tempted by others; so, in judgment,

When to his lust I have given up my honor,
He must and will forsake me.

OVER. How? forsake thee!
Do I wear a sword for fashion? or is this arm 140

<sup>35</sup> Gifford (followed by others) emends here, failing to perceive that Margaret fears her easy yielding would decrease her value in Lovell's eyes and encourage his infidelity.

Shrunk up or wither'd? Does there live a man

Of that large list I have encounter'd with
Can truly say I e'er gave inch of ground
Not purchas'd with his blood that did oppose me?

Forsake thee when the thing is done! He dares not.

Give me but proof he has enjoy'd thy person :
Though all his captains, echoes to his will,
Stood arm'd by his side to justify the wrong;
And he himself in the head of his bold troop,
Spite of his lordship, and his colonelship, [150
Or the judge's favor, I will make him render
A bloody and a strict account, and force him,
By marrying thee, to cure thy wounded honor !
I have said it.

Re-enter MARRALL.

MAR. Sir, the man of honor's <sup>36</sup> come,
Newly alighted.

OVER. In, without reply.
And do as I command, or thou art lost. —

Exit MARGARET.

Is the loud music I gave order for Ready to receive him?

MAR. 'T is, sir.

OVER. Let 'em sound
A princely welcome. — [Exit MARRALL.]
Roughness awhile leave me ;
For fawning now, a stranger to my nature, [160
Must make way for me.

Loud music. Enter [LORD] LOVELL, GREEDY, ALLWORTH, [and] MARRALL.

LOV. Sir, you meet your trouble.

OVER. What you are pleas'd to style so is an honor

Above my worth and fortunes.

ALL. [aside] Strange, so humble.

OVER. A justice of peace, my Lord.

Presents GREEDY to him.

LOV. Your hand, good sir.

GREEDY. [aside] This is a lord, and some think this a favor :

But I had rather have my hand in my dumpling.

OVER. Room for my Lord.

LOV. I miss, sir, your fair daughter
To crown my welcome.

OVER. May it please my Lord
To taste a glass of Greek wine first, and suddenly

She shall attend my Lord.

<sup>36</sup> Nobleman's.

LOV. You 'll be obey'd, sir. [170
Exeunt [all but] OVERREACH.

OVER. 'T is to my wish : as soon as come,
ask for her !

Why, Meg! Meg Overreach.

[Re-enter MARGARET.]

How ! tears in your eyes !

Ha ! dry 'em quickly, or I'll dig 'em out.

Is this a time to whimper? Meet that great-
ness

That flies into thy bosom ; think what 't is
For me to say, " My Honorable daughter ; "
And thou, when I stand bare, to say, " Put
on ; "

Or, " Father, you forget yourself." No more ;
But be instructed, or expect — he comes.

Re-enter [LORD] LOVELL, GREEDY, ALLWORTH, [and] MARRALL.

A black-brow'd <sup>37</sup> girl, my Lord.

LOV. As I live, a rare one. [180
They salute.

ALL. [aside] He's took already : I am lost.

OVER. [aside] That kiss Came twanging off ; I like it. — Quit the room.

[Exeunt all but OVERREACH, LOVELL, and MARGARET.] <sup>38</sup>

A little bashful, my good Lord, but you,
I hope, will teach her boldness.

LOV. I am happy

In such a scholar ; but —

OVER. I am past learning, And therefore leave you to yourselves. — (to his daughter) Remember !

Exit OVERREACH.

LOV. You see, fair lady, your father is solicitous

To have you change the barren name of virgin
Into a hopeful wife.

MARG. [His] <sup>39</sup> haste, my Lord,

Holds no power o'er my will.

LOV. But o'er your duty. [190

MARG. Which, forc'd too much, may break.

LOV. Bend rather, sweetest ;
Think of your years.

MARG. Too few to match with yours ;
And choicest fruits, too soon plucked, rot and wither.

LOV. Do you think I am old ?

MARG. I am sure I am too young.

LOV. I can advance you.

<sup>39</sup> Q He.

MARG. To a hill of sorrow,
Where every hour I may expect to fall,
But never hope firm footing. You are noble,
I of a low descent, however rich ;
And tissues match'd with scarlet <sup>40</sup> suit but ill.
Oh, my good Lord, I could say more, but
that 200
I dare not trust these walls.

LOV. Pray you, trust my ear then.

Re-enter OVERREACH [behind], listening.

OVER. Close at it ! whispering ! this is excellent !
And, by their postures, a consent on both parts.

Re-enter GREEDY [behind].

GREEDY. Sir Giles, Sir Giles !

OVER. The great Fiend stop that clapper !

GREEDY. It must ring out, sir, when my belly rings noon.
The bak'd meats are run out, <sup>41</sup> the roasts turn'd powder.

OVER. I shall powder you.

GREEDY. Beat me to dust, I care not ;
In such a cause as this, I'll die a martyr.

OVER. Marry, and shall, you barathrum <sup>42</sup> of the shambles ! Strikes him.

GREEDY. How ! strike a justice of peace !
'T is petty treason, 210
Edwardi quinto ; but that you are my friend,
I could commit you without bail or main-prize. <sup>43</sup>

OVER. Leave your bawling, sir, or I shall commit you Where you shall not dine to-day. Disturb my Lord,
When he is in discourse !

GREEDY. Is't a time to talk
When we should be munching ?

LOV. Ha ! I heard some noise.

OVER. Mum, villain ; vanish ! Shall we break a bargain Almost made up ? Thrust GREEDY off.

LOV. Lady, I understand you,
And rest most happy in your choice, believe it ;

I'll be a careful pilot to direct 220
Your yet uncertain bark to a port of safety.

MARG. So shall your Honor save two lives, and bind us
Your slaves for ever.

LOV. I am in the act rewarded,
Since it is good ; howe'er, you must put on
An amorous carriage towards me to delude
Your subtle father.

MARG. I am prone to that.

LOV. Now break we off our conference. —
Sir Giles !
Where is Sir Giles ?

Re-enter OVERREACH and the rest.

OVER. My noble Lord ; and how Does your Lordship find her ?

LOV. Apt, Sir Giles, and coming ;
And I like her the better.

OVER. So do I, too. [230
LOV. Yet, should we take forts at the first assault,
'T were poor in the defendant ; I must confirm her

With a love letter or two, which I must have Deliver'd by my page, and you give way to 't.

OVER. With all my soul ; a towardly gentleman !

Your hand, good Master Allworth ; know my house

Is ever open to you.

ALL. (aside) 'T was shut till now.

OVER. Well done, well done, my Honorable daughter !

Th' art so already. Know this gentle youth,
And cherish him, my Honorable daughter. [240

MARG. I shall, with my best care.

Noise within, as of a coach.

OVER. A coach !

GREEDY. More stops
Before we go to dinner ! O my guts ! <sup>44</sup>

Enter LADY [ALLWORTH] and WELLBORN.

L. ALL. If I find welcome,
You share in it ; if not, I'll back again,
Now I know your ends ; for I come arm'd for all

Can be objected.

LOV. How ! the Lady Allworth !

OVER. And thus attended !

LOVELL salutes the LADY [ALLWORTH] ; the LADY [ALLWORTH] salutes MARGARET.

<sup>40</sup> Not the rich silks of the courtier matched with the red gown of the city fathers. In view of IV, i, 225, where "scarlet" alludes (as it frequently does in these plays) to the gaily clad courtiers, the antithesis here is not, as Cruickshank suggests, between "the court and the city", but between the parvenu and the courtier, the richness of "tissues" standing for the former. Cf. Philaster, V, iv, 100.

<sup>44</sup> Massinger's lines are so regular that it seems likely that this exclamation is an actor's gag, the line being completed by the present l. 243.

MAR. [aside to OVERREACH] No, I am a dolt !

The spirit of lies had ent'red me !

OVER. [aside to MARRALL] Peace, patch ; <sup>45</sup>
'T is more than wonder ! an astonishment
That does possess me wholly !

LOV. Noble lady, [250
This is a favor, to prevent <sup>46</sup> my visit,
The service of my life can never equal.

L. ALL. My Lord, I laid wait for you, and much hop'd

You would have made my poor house your first inn ;

And therefore, doubting <sup>47</sup> that you might forget me,

Or too long dwell here, having such ample
cause

In this unequall'd beauty for your stay,
And fearing to trust any but myself
With the relation <sup>48</sup> of my service to you,
I borrow'd so much from my long restraint [260
And took the air in person to invite you.

LOV. Your bounties are so great, they rob me, madam,
Of words to give you thanks.

L. ALL. Good Sir Giles Overreach.
Salutes him.

— How doest thou, Marrall ? Lik'd you my meat so ill,

You'll dine no more with me ?

GREEDY. I will, when you please,
An it like your Ladyship.

L. ALL. When you please, Master Greedy ;
If meat can do it, you shall be satisfied.
And now, my Lord, pray take into your knowledge

This gentleman ; howe'er his outside's coarse,
Presents WELLBORN.

His inward linings are as fine and fair 270
As any man's ; (wonder not I speak at large ; <sup>49</sup>)

And howsoe'er his humor carries him
To be thus accout'red, or what taint soever,
For his wild life, hath stuck upon his fame,
He may ere long, with boldness, rank himself
With some that have condemn'd him. Sir
Giles Overreach,

If I am welcome, bid him so.

OVER. My nephew.
He has been too long a stranger. Faith you
have ;

Pray let it be mended.

LOVELL conferring with WELLBORN.

MAR. [aside to OVERREACH] Why, sir,
what do you mean ?

This is rogue Wellborn, monster, prodigy, [280
That should hang or drown himself ; no man of worship,

Much less your nephew.

OVER. [aside] Well, sirrah, we shall reckon
For this hereafter.

MAR. [aside] I'll not lose my jeer,
Though I be beaten dead for 't.

WELL. Let my silence plead
In my excuse, my Lord, till better leisure Offer itself to hear a full relation

Of my poor fortunes.

LOV. I would hear, and help 'em.

OVER. Your dinner waits you.

LOV. Pray you lead ; we follow.

L. ALL. Nay, you are my guest ; come, dear
Master Wellborn.

Exeunt [all but] <sup>50</sup> GREEDY.

GREEDY. " Dear Master Wellborn ! " so she said. Heav'n ! Heav'n ! 290
If my belly would give me leave, I could ruminate

All day on this. I have granted twenty warrants

To have him committed, from all prisons in the shire

To Nottingham jail ; and now " Dear Master
Wellborn ! "

And " My good nephew ! " — but I play the
fool

To stand here prating, and forget my dinner. —

Re-enter MARRALL.

Are they set, Marrall ?

MAR. Long since ; pray you a word, sir.

GREEDY. No wording now.

MAR. In troth, I must. My master, Knowing you are his good friend, makes bold
with you,

And does entreat you, more guests being come
in 300

Than he expected, especially his nephew,
The table being full, too, you would excuse him,
And sup with him on the cold meat.

GREEDY. How ? No dinner,
After all my care ?

MAR. 'T is but a penance for
A meal ; besides, you broke your fast.

GREEDY. That was
But a bit to stay my stomach. A man in commission

Give place to a tatterdemalion !

<sup>49</sup> Freely, at length.

MAR. No bug <sup>51</sup> words, sir ;
Should his Worship hear you —

GREEDY. Lose my dumpling too,
And butter'd toasts, and woodcocks !

MAR. Come, have patience.
If you will dispense a little with your worship, <sup>52</sup> 310

And sit with the waiting women, you [']ll <sup>53</sup> have dumpling,

Woodcock, and butter'd toasts <sup>54</sup> too.

GREEDY. This revives me ;
I will gorge there sufficiently.

MAR. This is the way, sir. Exeunt.

SCENE III <sup>55</sup>

[Enter] OVERREACH, as from dinner.

OVER. She's caught ! O women ! She neglects my Lord,
And all her compliment's <sup>56</sup> appli'd to Well-
born !

The garments of her widowhood laid by,
She now appears as glorious as the spring ;
Her eyes fix'd on him, in the wine she drinks,
He being her pledge, she sends him burning
kisses,

And sits on thorns till she be private with him.
She leaves my meat to feed upon his looks,
And if in our discourse he be but nam'd,
From her a deep sigh follows. But why grieve I <sup>10</sup>

At this ? It makes for me ; if she prove his,
All that is hers is mine, as I will work him.

Enter MARRALL.

MAR. Sir, the whole board is troubled at your rising.

OVER. No matter, I'll excuse it. Prithee,
Marrall,

Watch an occasion to invite my nephew
To speak with me in private.

MAR. Who ? the rogue
The lady scorn'd to look on ?

OVER. You are a wag.

Enter LADY [ALLWORTH] and WELLBORN.

MAR. See, sir, she's come, and cannot be without him.

<sup>56</sup> Politeness, courtesy. Q omits apostrophe.

L. ALL. With your favor, sir, after a plenteous dinner,

I shall make bold to walk a turn or two, 20
In your rare garden.

OVER. There's an arbor too,
If your Ladyship please to use it.

L. ALL. Come, Master Wellborn.

Exeunt LADY [ALLWORTH] and WELL-
BORN.

OVER. Grosser and grosser ! Now I believe the poet <sup>57</sup>

Feign'd not, but was historical, when he wrote
Pasiphaë was enamor'd of a bull :

This lady's lust's more monstrous. — My
good Lord,

Enter [LORD] LOVELL, MARGARET, and the rest.

Excuse my manners.

LOV. There needs none, Sir Giles —
I may ere long say "Father," when it pleases
My dearest mistress to give warrant to it.

OVER. She shall seal to it, my Lord, and make me happy. 30

Re-enter WELLBORN and the LADY [ALLWORTH].

MARG. My Lady is return'd.

L. ALL. Provide my coach ;
I'll instantly away. My thanks, Sir Giles,
For my entertainment.

OVER. 'T is your nobleness
To think it such.

L. ALL. I must do you a further wrong
In taking away your honorable guest.

LOV. I wait on you, madam ; farewell, good
Sir Giles.

L. ALL. Good Mistress Margaret ! Nay,
come, Master Wellborn,
I must not leave you behind ; in sooth, I must
not.

OVER. Rob me not, madam, of all joys at
once ;

Let my nephew stay behind. He shall have my coach, 40

And, after some small conference between
us,

Soon overtake your Ladyship.

L. ALL. Stay not long, sir.

LOV. This parting kiss ; [kisses MARGARET] you shall every day hear from me,

By my faithful page:

ALL. 'T is a service I am proud of.

Exeunt [LORD] LOVELL, LADY [ALL-WORTH], ALLWORTH, [and] MAR-RALL.

<sup>57</sup> Ovid (Metamorphoses XV, 500 ff.).

OVER. Daughter, to your chamber. —

[Exit] MARGARET.

— You may wonder, Nephew,
After so long an enmity between us,
I should desire your friendship.

WELL. So <sup>58</sup> I do, sir;
'T is strange to me.

OVER. But I'll make it no wonder;
And what is more, unfold my nature to you.
We worldly men, when we see friends and kinsmen 50

Past hope sunk in their fortunes, lend no hand
To lift 'em up, but rather set our feet
Upon their heads, to press 'em to the bottom;
As, I must yield, <sup>59</sup> with you I practis'd it.
But now I see you in a way to rise,
I can and will assist you. This rich lady
(And I am glad of 't) is enamor'd of you;
'T is too apparent, Nephew.

WELL. No such thing;
Compassion rather, sir.

OVER. Well, in a word,
Because your stay is short, I'll have you
seen 60
No more in this base shape; <sup>60</sup> nor shall she
say
She married you like a beggar, or in debt.

WELL. (aside) He'll run into the noose, and save my labor.

OVER. You have a trunk of rich clothes, not far hence,
In pawn; I will redeem 'em; and that no
clamor
May taint your credit for your petty debts,
You shall have a thousand pounds to cut 'em
off,
And go a freeman to the wealthy lady.

WELL. This done, sir, out of love, and no ends else —

OVER. As it is, Nephew.

WELL. Binds me still your servant. [70

OVER. No compliments; you are stay'd for.
Ere y' ave supp'd

You shall hear from me. — My coach, knaves, for my nephew.

To-morrow I will visit you.

WELL. Here's an uncle
In a man's extremes <sup>61</sup>! How much they do believe you,

That say you are hard-hearted!

OVER. My deeds, Nephew, Shall speak my love; what men report I weigh not. Exeunt.

<sup>59</sup> Concede, admit,
<sup>61</sup> Extremities.

ACT IV — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter LORD] LOVELL [and] ALLWORTH.

LOV. 'T is well; give me my cloak; I now discharge you
From further service. Mind your own affairs;
I hope they will prove successful.

ALL. What is blest
With your good wish, my Lord, cannot but prosper.

Let aftertimes report, and to your honor,
How much I stand engag'd, for I want language

To speak my debt; yet if a tear or two
Of joy, for your much goodness, can supply
My tongue's defects, I could —

LOV. Nay, do not melt;
This ceremonial thanks to me's superfluous.

OVER. (within) Is my Lord stirring? 11

LOV. 'T is he! oh, here's your letter. Let him in.

Enter OVERREACH, GREEDY, [and] MARRALL.

OVER. A good day to my Lord!

LOV. You are an early riser,
Sir Giles.

OVER. And reason, to attend your Lordship.

LOV. And you, too, Master Greedy, up so
soon?

GREEDY. In troth, my Lord, after the sun is up,

I cannot sleep, for I have a foolish stomach
That croaks for breakfast. With your Lordship's favor,

I have a serious question to demand
Of my worthy friend Sir Giles.

LOV. Pray you use your pleasure. [20

GREEDY. How far, Sir Giles, and pray you answer me

Upon your credit, hold you it to be
From your manor-house, to this of my Lady's Allworth's?

OVER. Why, some four mile.

GREEDY. How! four mile? good Sir
Giles,

Upon your reputation, think better;
For if you do abate but one half-quarter
Of five, you do yourself the greatest wrong
That can be in the world; for four miles' riding

Could not have rais'd so huge an appetite
As I feel gnawing on me.

<sup>1</sup> A room in Lady Allworth's house.

MAR. Wh[et]her you ride, [30
Or go afoot, you are that way still <sup>2</sup> provided,
An it please your Worship.

OVER. How now, sirrah? Prating Before my Lord! No difference? Go to my nephew;
See all his debts discharg'd, and help his Worship
To fit on his rich suit.

MAR. [aside] I may fit you too.
Toss'd like a dog still! <sup>3</sup> Exit MARRALL.

LOV. I have writ this morning
A few lines to my mistress, your fair daughter.

OVER. 'T will fire her, for she's wholly yours already. —

Sweet Master Allworth, take my ring: 't will carry you

To her presence, I dare warrant you; and there plead 40

For my good Lord, if you shall find occasion.
That done, pray ride to Nottingham, get a license,

Still by this token. I'll have it dispatch'd,
And suddenly, my Lord; that I may say,
My Honorable, nay, Right Honorable
daughter.

GREEDY. Take my advice, young gentleman: get your breakfast;

'T is unwholesome to ride fasting. I'll eat
with you,
And eat to purpose.

OVER. Some Fury's in that gut; Hungry again! Did you not devour, this morning,

A shield of brawn,<sup>4</sup> and a barrel of Colchester
oysters? 50

GREEDY. Why, that was, sir, only to scour
my stomach —

A kind of a preparative. Come, gentleman,
I will not have you feed like the hangman of Flushing,<sup>5</sup>

Alone, while I am here.

LOV. Haste your return.

ALL. I will not fail, my Lord.

GREEDY. Nor I, to line
My Christmas coffer.<sup>6</sup>

Exeunt GREEDY and ALLWORTH.

OVER. To my wish, we are private.
I come not to make offer with my daughter

<sup>3</sup> Cf. II, i, 142.

<sup>4</sup> A piece of a hog's skin was placed inside a cylindrical mold and filled with meat, which was then cooked soft. (N.E.D.)

<sup>5</sup> Few would seek a hangman's company at dinner.
But Flushing is unexplained. (Q Vllushing.)

<sup>6</sup> Cf. "bread-box", "bread-basket."

A certain portion — that were poor and trivial;

In one word, I pronounce all that is mine,
In lands or leases, ready coin or goods, 60
With her, my Lord, comes to you; nor shall you have

One motive to induce you to believe
I live too long, since every year I'll add Something unto the heap, which shall be yours, too.

LOV. You are a right kind father.

OVER. You shall have reason
To think me such. How do you like this seat?
It is well wooded, and well water'd, the acres
Fertile and rich; would it not serve for change,
To entertain your friends in a summer progress? <sup>7</sup>

What thinks my noble Lord?

LOV. 'T is a wholesome air, [70
And well-built pile; and she that's mistress of
it,

Worthy the large revenue.<sup>8</sup>

OVER. She the mistress!
It may be so for a time; but let my Lord
Say only that he likes it, and would have it,
I say, ere long 't is his.

LOV. Impossible.

OVER. You do conclude too fast, not knowing me,
Nor the engines <sup>9</sup> that I work by. 'T is not alone

The Lady Allworth's lands, for those once
Wellborn's

(As by her dotage on him I know they will be,) Shall soon be mine; but point out any man's
In all the shire, and say they lie convenient [81
And useful for your Lordship, and once more,
I say aloud, they are yours.

LOV. I dare not own
What's by unjust and cruel means extorted;
My fame and credit are more dear to me
Than so to expose 'em to be censur'd by
The public voice.

OVER. You run, my Lord, no hazard.
Your reputation shall stand as fair,
In all good men's opinions, as now;
Nor can my actions, though condemn'd for
ill, 90

Cast any foul aspersion upon yours.
For, though I do condemn report myself
As a mere sound, I still will be so tender
Of what concerns you, in all points of honor,
That the immaculate whiteness of your fame,

<sup>9</sup> Contrivances.

Nor your unquestion'd integrity,
Shall e'er be sullied with one taint or spot
That may take from your innocence and candor.<sup>10</sup>

All my ambition is to have my daughter Right Honorable, which my Lord can make
her; 100

And might I live to dance upon my knee
A young Lord Lovell, borne by her unto you,
I write nil ultra to my proudest hopes.

As for possessions and annual rents,
Equivalent to maintain you in the port<sup>11</sup>
Your noble birth and present state requires,
I do remove that burthen from your shoulders,
And take it on mine own; for, though I ruin
The country to supply your riotous waste,
The scourge of prodigals, want, shall never find you. 110

Lov. Are you not frightened with the imprecations
And curses of whole families, made wretched
By your sinister practices?

OVER. Yes, as rocks are,
When foamy billows split themselves against
Their flinty ribs; or as the moon is mov'd
When wolves, with hunger pin'd, howl at her brightness.

I am of a solid temper, and, like these,
Steer on a constant course. With mine own
sword,

If call'd into the field, I can make that right Which fearful enemies murmur'd at as wrong. 120

Now, for these other piddling<sup>12</sup> complaints
Breath'd out in bitterness; as when they call
me

Extortioner, tyrant, cormorant, or intruder
On my poor neighbor's right, or grand encloser<sup>13</sup>

Of what was common, to my private use;
Nay, when my ears are pierc'd with widows'
cries,

And undone orphans wash with tears my threshold,

I only think what 't is to have my daughter Right Honorable; and 't is a powerful charm<sup>14</sup>

Makes me insensible of remorse, or pity, 130
Or the least sting of conscience.

Lov. I admire<sup>15</sup>
The toughness of your nature.

<sup>13</sup> Enclosures, the fencing off for sheep pasturage of common lands, constituted one of the great grievances of the time.

<sup>14</sup> Understand "which." <sup>15</sup> Wonder at.

OVER. 'T is for you,
My Lord, and for my daughter, I am marble;
Nay more, if you will have my character
In little, I enjoy more true delight
In my arrival to my wealth these dark
And crooked ways, than you shall e'er take
pleasure

In spending what my industry hath compass'd.
My haste commands me hence; in one word,
therefore,

Is it a match?

Lov. I hope that is past doubt now. 140

OVER. Then rest secure; not the hate of all mankind here,

Nor fear of what can fall on me hereafter,
Shall make me study aught but your advancement

One story higher: an earl! if gold can do it.
Dispute not my religion, nor my faith;
Though I am borne thus headlong by my will,
You may make choice of what belief you
please —

To me they are equal; so, my Lord, good morrow. Exit.

Lov. He's gone; I wonder how the earth can bear

Such a portent! I, that have liv'd a soldier,
And stood the enemy's violent charge undaunted, 151

To hear this blasphemous beast am bath'd all over

In a cold sweat; yet, like a mountain, he,
Confirm'd in atheistical assertions,
Is no more shaken than Olympus<sup>16</sup> is When angry Boreas loads his double head
With sudden drifts of snow.

Enter AMBLE, LADY [ALLWORTH,] and [Waiting] Woman.

L. ALL. Save you, my Lord!
Disturb I not your privacy?

Lov. No, good madam;
For your own sake I am glad you came no sooner,

Since this bold bad man, Sir Giles Overreach, 160

Made such a plain discovery of himself,
And read this morning such a devilish matins,
That I should think it a sin next to his
But to repeat it.

<sup>16</sup> "Either Massinger, or his transcriber, has mistaken Olympus for Parnassus: it may be the former, for, in trusting to their memory, such slips are not unusual in our old writers, who were indeed little solicitous of accuracy in these trivial matters." (Gifford.)

L. ALL. I ne'er press'd, my Lord,
On others' privacies ; yet, against my will,
Walking, for health' sake, in the gallery
Adjoining to your lodgings, I was made,
So vehement and loud he was, partaker
Of his tempting offers.

[Lov.] Please you to command
Your servants hence, and I shall gladly hear 170
Your wiser counsel.

L. ALL. 'T is, my Lord, a woman's,
But true and hearty. — Wait in the next room,
But be within call ; yet not so near to force me
To whisper my intents.

AMB. We are taught better
By you, good madam.

W. WOM. And well know our distance.

L. ALL. Do so, and talk not ; 't will become your breeding. —

Exeunt AMBLE and [Waiting] Woman.
Now, my good Lord ; if I may use my freedom,
As to an honor'd friend —

Lov. You lessen else
Your favor to me.

L. ALL. I dare then say thus :
As you are noble (howe'er common men [180
Make sordid wealth the object and sole end
Of their industrious aims), 't will not agree
With those of eminent blood, who are engag'd
More to prefer <sup>17</sup> their honors than to increase
The state <sup>18</sup> left to 'em by their ancestors,
To study large additions to their fortunes,
And quite neglect their births — though I must grant,
Riches, well got, to be a useful servant,
But a bad master.

Lov. Madam, 't is confessed ,
But what infer you from it ?

L. ALL. This, my Lord ; [190
That as all wrongs, though thrust into one scale,
Slide of themselves off when right fills the
other,

And cannot bide the trial ; so all wealth,
I mean if ill-acquir'd, cemented to honor
By virtuous ways achiev'd, and bravely purchas'd,<sup>19</sup>

Is but as rubbage <sup>20</sup> pour'd into a river, (Howe'er intended to make good <sup>21</sup> the bank,)
Rendering the water, that was pure before, Polluted and unwholesome. I allow
The heir of Sir Giles Overreach, Margaret, [200
A maid well qualified and the richest match

Our north part can make boast of ; yet she cannot,
With all that she brings with her, fill their mouths <sup>22</sup>

That never will forget who was her father ;
Or that my husband Allworth's lands, and Wellborn's,
(How wrung from both needs now no repetition.)

Were real motive that more work'd your Lordship
To join your families, than her form and virtues.

You may conceive <sup>23</sup> the rest.

Lov. I do, sweet madam,
And long since have consider'd it. I know
The sum of all that makes a just man
happy 211

Consists in the well choosing of his wife ;
And there, well to discharge it,<sup>24</sup> does require Equality of years, of birth, of fortune ;
For beauty being poor, and not cried up <sup>25</sup>
By birth or wealth, can truly mix with neither.
And wealth, where there's such difference in
years,

And fair descent, must make the yoke uneasy.
But I come nearer.

L. ALL. Pray you do, my Lord.

Lov. Were Overreach' states thrice cen-tupl'd, his daughter 220

Millions of degrees much fairer than she is,
Howe'er I might urge precedents to excuse me,
I would not so adulterate my blood
By marrying Margaret, and so leave my issue
Made up of several pieces, one part scarlet,<sup>26</sup>
And the other London blue. In my own tomb
I will inter my name first.

L. ALL. (aside) I am glad to hear this. — Why then, my Lord, pretend you marriage to
her ?

Dissimulation but ties false knots 229
On that straight line by which you, hitherto,
Have measur'd all your actions.

Lov. I make answer,
And aptly, with a question. Wherefore have
you,
That, since your husband's death, have liv'd a strict
And chaste nun's life, on the sudden giv'n
yourself
To visits and entertainments ? Think you,
madam,

<sup>17</sup> I.e., stop the talk of those.

'T is not grow[n] public conference? <sup>27</sup> or the favors

Which you too prodigally have thrown on Wellborn,

Being too reserv'd before, incur not censure?

L. ALL. I am innocent here; and, on my life, I swear

My ends are good.

LOV. On my soul, so are mine [240 To Margaret; but leave both to the event.

And since this friendly privacy does serve

But as an offer'd means unto ourselves

To search each other farther, you having shown

Your care of me, I my respect to you,

Deny me not, but still in chaste words, madam,

An afternoon's discourse.

L. ALL. So <sup>28</sup> I shall hear you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II <sup>29</sup>

[Enter] TAPWELL [and] FROTH.

TAP. Undone, undone! this was your counsel, Froth.

FROTH. Mine! I defy thee! Did not Master Marrall

(He has marr'd all, I am sure) strictly command us,

On pain of Sir Giles Overreach' displeasure, To turn the gentleman out of doors?

TAP. 'T is true; But now he's his uncle's darling, and has got Master Justice Greedy, since he fill'd his belly, At his commandment, to do anything.

Woe, woe to us!

FROTH. He may prove merciful.

TAP. Troth, we do not deserve it at his hands. 10

Though he knew all the passages <sup>30</sup> of our house,

As the receiving of stol'n goods, and bawdry, When he was rogue Wellborn no man would believe him,

And then his information could not hurt us; But now he is Right Worshipful again,

Who dares but doubt his testimony? Methinks,

I see thee, Froth, already in a cart, <sup>31</sup>

For a close <sup>32</sup> bawd, thine eyes ev'n pelted out With dirt and rotten eggs; and my hand

hissing, <sup>33</sup>

If I scape the halter, with the letter R <sup>34</sup> [20 Printed upon it.

FROTH. Would that were the worst! That were but nine days' wonder. As for credit, <sup>35</sup>

We have none to lose, but we shall lose the money

He owes us, and his custom; there's the hell on't.

✓ TAP. He has summon'd all his creditors by the drum,

And they swarm about him like so many soldiers

On the pay day; and has found out such a new way

To pay his old debts, as 't is very likely

He shall be chronic'd for it!

FROTH. He deserves it 29

More than ten pageants. <sup>36</sup> But are you sure his Worship Comes this way, to my Lady's? A cry within: Brave Master Wellborn!

TAP. Yes, I hear him.

FROTH. Be ready with your petition and present it

To his good grace.

Enter WELLBORN in a rich habit, [MARRALL,] GREEDY, ORDER, FURNACE, [and] three Creditors; TAPWELL, kneeling, delivers his bill of debt.

WELL. How's this? petition'd to? But note what miracles the payment of A little trash, and a rich suit of clothes, Can work upon these rascals! I shall be, I think, Prince Wellborn.

MAR. When your Worship's married, You may be; I know what I hope to see you.

WELL. Then look thou for advancement.

MAR. To be known Your Worship's bailiff is the mark I shoot at. 40

WELL. And thou shalt hit it.

MAR. Pray you, sir, dispatch These needy followers, and for my admittance. <sup>37</sup>

Provided you'll defend me from Sir Giles,

Whose service I am weary of, I'll say something

You shall give thanks for.

WELL. Fear me <sup>38</sup> not Sir Giles.

GREEDY. Who, Tapwell? I remember thy wife brought me

Last New Year's tide, a couple of fat turkeys.

TAP. And shall do every Christmas, let your Worship

But stand my friend now.

GREEDY. How! with Master Wellborn? I can do anything with him on such terms. — 50

See you this honest couple? They are good souls

As ever drew out faucet. Have they not

A pair of honest faces?

WELL. I o'erheard you, And the bribe he promis'd. You are cozen'd in 'em;

For, of all the scum that grew rich by my riots,

This, for a most unthankful knave, and this, For a base bawd and whore, have worst deserv'd me:

And therefore speak not for 'em. By your place

You are rather to do me justice. Lend me your ear. —

[aside to GREEDY] Forget his turkeys, and call in his license, 60

And, at the next fair, I'll give you a yoke of oxen

Worth all his poultry.

GREEDY. I am chang'd on the sudden In my opinion! — Come near; nearer, rascal. And, now I view him better, did you e'er see One look so like an archknave? His very countenance,

Should an understanding judge but look upon him,

Would hang him, though he were innocent.

TAP. [and] FROTH. Worshipful sir.

GREEDY. No, though the great Turk came, instead of turkeys,

To beg my favor, I am inexorable.

Thou hast an ill name: besides thy musty ale, 70

That hath destroy'd many of the King's liege people,

Thou never hadst in thy house, to stay men's stomachs,

A piece of Suffolk cheese or gammon of bacon, Or any esculent, as the learned call it,

For their emolument, but sheer drink only, For which gross fault I here do damn thy license,

Forbidding thee ever to tap or draw;

For, instantly, I will, in mine own person,

Command the constable to pull down thy sign, And do it before I eat.

FROTH. No mercy?

GREEDY. Vanish! [80

If I show any, may my promis'd oxen gore me!

TAP. Unthankful knaves are ever so rewarded.

Exeunt GREEDY, TAPWELL, [and]

FROTH.

WELL. Speak, what are you?

1 CRED. A decay'd vintner, sir, That might have thrived, but that your Worship broke <sup>39</sup> me

With trusting you with muscadine <sup>40</sup> and eggs, And five-pound suppers, with your after-drinkings,<sup>41</sup>

When you lodg'd upon the Bankside.

WELL. [I] <sup>42</sup> remember.

1 CRED. I have not been hasty, nor e'er laid <sup>43</sup> to arrest you;

And therefore, sir —

WELL. Thou art an honest fellow; I'll set thee up again. — See his bill paid. — What are you?

2 CRED. A tailor once, but now mere butcher.<sup>44</sup> 91

I gave you credit for a suit of clothes, Which was all my stock; but you failing in payment,

I was remov'd from the shopboard, and confin'd

Under a stall.

WELL. See him paid; — and botch no more.

2 CRED. I ask no interest, sir.

WELL. Such tailors need not: If their bills are paid in one-and-twenty year, They are seldom losers. — [to 3 Creditor]

Oh, I know thy face:

Thou wert my surgeon.<sup>45</sup> You must tell no tales;

Those days are done. I will pay you in private. 100

ORD. A royal gentleman!

FURN. Royal as an emperor! He'll prove a brave master; my good lady knew

To choose a man.

WELL. See all men else discharg'd; And since <sup>46</sup> old debts are clear'd by a new way,

<sup>46</sup> Q italicizes the rest of the line.

OVER. So my Lord have you,
What do I care who gives you? Since my
Lord

Does purpose to be private, I'll not cross him.
I know not, Master Allworth, how my Lord
May be provided, and therefore there's a purse 110

Of gold: 't will serve this night's expense;
tomorrow

I'll furnish him with any sums. In the mean
time,

Use my ring to my chaplain; he is benefic'd
At my manor of Gotham,<sup>63</sup> and call'd Parson
Willdo.

'T is no matter for a license; I'll bear him out
in 't;

MARG. With your favor, sir, what warrant is your ring?

He may suppose I got that twenty ways,
Without your knowledge; and then to be refus'd

Were such a stain upon me! If you pleas'd,
sir,

Your presence would do better.

OVER. Still perverse! [120
I say again, I will not cross my Lord;
Yet I'll prevent you <sup>64</sup> too. — Paper and ink,
there!

ALL. I can furnish you.

OVER. I thank you; I can write, then.
Writes on his book.

ALL. You may, if you please, put out the name of my Lord,
In respect he comes disguis'd, and only write,
"Marry her to this gentleman."

OVER. Well advis'd.
'T is done; away. — (MARGARET kneels.) My blessing, girl? Thou hast it.

Nay, no reply; begone. — Good Master All-worth,<sup>65</sup>

This shall be the best night's work you ever
made.

ALL. I hope so, sir.

Exeunt ALLWORTH and MARGARET.

OVER. Farewell! — Now all's cock-sure; <sup>66</sup> 130

Methinks I hear already knights and ladies Say, "Sir Giles Overreach, how is it with Your Honorable daughter? Has her Honor

<sup>63</sup> A village a few miles south of Nottingham.
Q Gotham: Stronach suggests a play on "Got 'em."

<sup>64</sup> Anticipate you; i.e., your objections.

<sup>65</sup> Q has (in various copies) a full stop or a comma here, and a comma after "begone."

<sup>66</sup> Perfectly safe.

Slept well to-night?" <sup>67</sup> or, "Will her Honor
please

To accept this monkey, dog, or parrakeet?
(This is state <sup>68</sup> in ladies) or my eldest son
To be her page, and wait upon her trencher?"
My ends, my ends are compass'd! Then for
Wellborn

And the lands: were he once married to the widow,

I have him here. — I can scarce contain myself, 140

I am so full of joy, nay, joy all over. Exit.

ACT V — SCENE [I] <sup>1</sup>

[Enter LORD] LOVELL, LADY [ALLWORTH, and] AMBLE.

L. ALL. By this you know how strong the motives were

That did, my Lord, induce me to dispense

A little with my gravity to advance,

In personating some few favors to him,

The plots and projects of the downtrod Well-
born.

Nor shall I e'er repent, although I suffer
In some few men's opinions for 't, the action;
For he that ventur'd all for my dear husband

Might justly claim an obligation from me

To pay him such a courtesy; which had I [10

Coyly or over-curiously <sup>2</sup> denied,

It might have argu'd me of little love

To the deceas'd.

LOV. What you intended, madam,
For the poor gentleman hath found good success;

For, as I understand, his debts are paid,

And he once more furnish'd for fair employ-
ment;

But all the arts that I have us'd to raise

The fortunes of your joy and mine, young Allworth,

Stand yet in supposition, though I hope well;

For the young lovers are in wit more pregnant 20

Than their years can promise; and for their
desires,

On my knowledge, they are equal.

<sup>1</sup> A room in Lady Allworth's house. Q Scena quinta.

<sup>2</sup> Over-scrupulously.

L. ALL. As my wishes
Are with yours, my Lord ; yet give me leave to fear
The building, though well grounded : to deceive
Sir Giles, that's both a lion and a fox
In his proceedings, were a work beyond
The strongest undertakers, not the trial
Of two weak innocents.

Lov. Despair not, madam :
Hard things are compass'd oft by easy means ;
And judgment, being a gift deriv'd from
Heaven, 30
Though sometimes lodg'd i' th' hearts of worldly men,
That ne'er consider from whom they receive it,
Forsakes such as abuse the Giver of it.
Which is the reason that the politic
And cunning statesman, that believes he fathoms
The counsels of all kingdoms on the earth,
Is by simplicity oft overreach[d].<sup>3</sup>

L. ALL. May he be so ! Yet, in his name <sup>4</sup>
to express it,
Is a good omen.

Lov. May it to myself
Prove so, good lady, in my suit to you ! 40
What think you of the motion ? <sup>5</sup>

L. ALL. Troth, my Lord,
My own unworthiness may answer for me ;
For had you, when that I was in my prime,
My virgin flower uncropp'd, presented me
With this great favor ; looking on my lowness
Not in a glass of self-love, but of truth,
I could not but have thought it as a blessing
Far, far beyond my merit.

Lov. You are too modest,
And undervalue that which is above
My title, or whatever I call mine. 50
I grant, were I a Spaniard, to marry
A widow might disparage me ; <sup>6</sup> but being A true-born Englishman, I cannot find
How it can taint my honor : nay, what's more,
That which you think a blemish is to me
The fairest lustre. You already, madam,
Have given sure proofs how dearly you can cherish
A husband that deserves you ; which confirms
me

<sup>6</sup> Doubtless an allusion to the exaggerated value attached to virginity by Spanish convention, especially in the drama of the Golden Age.

That, if I am not wanting in my care
To do you service, you'll be still the same 60
That you were to your Allworth : in a word,
Our years, our states, our births are not unequal,

You being descended nobly, and alli'd so ;
If then you may be won to make me happy,
But join your lips to mine, and that shall be
A solemn contract.

L. ALL. I were blind to my own good
Should I refuse it ; [kisses him] yet, my Lord, receive me

As such a one, the study of whose whole life
Shall know no other object but to please you.

Lov. If I return not, with all tenderness, [70
Equal respect to you, may I die wretched.

L. ALL. There needs no protestation, my
Lord,
To her that cannot doubt —

Enter WELLBORN [handsomely apparelled].

You are welcome, sir.
Now you look like yourself.

WELL. And will continue
Such in my free acknowledgment that I am
Your creature, madam, and will never hold
My life mine own, when you please to command it.

Lov. It is a thankfulness that well becomes
you.
You could not make choice of a better shape
To dress your mind in.

L. ALL. For me, I am happy [80
That my endeavors prosper'd. Saw you of late
Sir Giles, your uncle ?

WELL. I heard of him, madam,
By his minister, Marrall ; he's grown into strange passions
About his daughter. This last night he look'd
for

Your Lordship at his house, but missing you,
And she not yet appearing, his wise head
Is much perplex'd and troubl'd.

Lov. It may be,
Sweetheart, my project took.

L. ALL. I strongly hope.

Enter OVERREACH, with distracted looks, driving in MARRALL before him [with a box].

OVER. Ha ! find her, booby, thou huge lump of nothing ;
I'll bore thine eyes out else.

WELL. [aside] May it please your Lord-
ship, 90

For some ends of mine own, but to withdraw
A little out of sight, though not of hearing,
You may, perhaps, have sport.

LOV. You shall direct me. (Steps aside.)

OVER. I shall sol fa <sup>7</sup> you, rogue!

MAR. Sir, for what cause
Do you use me thus?

OVER. Cause, slave! Why, I am angry,
And thou a subject only fit for beating,
And so to cool my choler. Look to the writ-
ing;

Let but the seal be broke upon the box
That has slept in my cabinet these three years,

I'll rack thy soul for't.

MAR. (aside) I may yet cry quittance, [100
Though now I suffer, and dare not resist.

OVER. Lady, by your leave, did you see my daughter-lady?

And the lord her husband? Are they in your house?

If they are, discover, that I may bid 'em joy,
And, as an entrance to her place of honor, See your Ladyship on her left hand, and make cur[t]sies

When she nods on you, which you must receive
As a special favor.

L. ALL. When I know, Sir Giles,
Her state <sup>8</sup> requires such ceremony, I shall pay
it;

But in the meantime, as I am myself, 110
I give you to understand, I neither know
Nor care where her Honor is.

OVER. When you once see her
Supported, and led by the lord her husband,
You'll be taught better. — Nephew!

WELL. Sir.

OVER. No more? <sup>9</sup>

WELL. 'T is all I owe you.

OVER. Have your redeem'd rags
Made you thus insolent?

WELL. (in scorn) Insolent to you!
Why, what are you, sir, unless in your years,
At the best, more than myself?

OVER. His fortune swells him.
'T is rank <sup>10</sup> he's married.

L. ALL. This is excellent!

OVER. Sir, in calm language, though I seldom use it, 120

I am familiar with the cause that makes you
Bear up thus bravely; there's a certain buzz
Of a stol'n marriage; do you hear? of a stol'n
marriage,

In which, 't is said, there's somebody hath been cozen'd;

I name no parties.

WELL. Well, sir, and what follows?

OVER. Marry, this; since you are peremp-tory. Remember,

Upon mere hope of your great match, I lent
you

A thousand pounds; put me in good security,
And suddenly, [by] <sup>11</sup> mortgage or by statute <sup>12</sup>
Of some of your new possessions, or I'll have
you 130

Dragg'd in your lavender robes <sup>13</sup> to the jail.

You know me;

And therefore do not trifle.

WELL. Can you be

So cruel to your nephew, now he's in

The way to rise? Was this the courtesy

You did me "in pure love, and no ends else?"

OVER. End me no ends! Engage the whole estate

And force your spouse to sign it, you shall have

Three or four thousand more, to roar and swag-
ger

And revel in bawdy taverns.

WELL. And beg after,

Mean you not so?

OVER. My thoughts are mine, and free. 140

Shall I have security?

WELL. No, indeed, you shall not,
Nor bond, nor bill, nor bare acknowledgment;
Your great looks fright not me.

OVER. But my deeds shall.
Outbrav'd? They both draw.

L. ALL. Help, murder! murder!

The Servants enter.

WELL. Let him come on,
With all his wrongs and injuries about him,
Arm'd with his cutthroat practices to guard
him;

The right that I bring with me will defend me,
And punish his extortion.

OVER. That I had thee
But single in the field!

L. ALL. You may; but make not
My house your quarrelling scene.

OVER. Were't in a church, [150
By Heaven and hell, I'll do't!

<sup>11</sup> Cor. Coxeter; Q my.

<sup>12</sup> See on I, i, 50.

<sup>13</sup> To "lay up in lavender" was a common euphemism for pawning.

<sup>9</sup> But this curt form of address.

MAR. [aside to WELLBORN] Now put him to the showing of the deed.

WELL. This rage is vain, sir ; For fighting, fear not, you shall have your hands full, Upon the least incitement ; and whereas You charge me with a debt of a thousand pounds, If there be law, (howe'er you have no conscience,)

Either restore my land or I'll recover A debt, that's truly due to me from you, In value ten times more than what you challenge.<sup>14</sup>

OVER. I in thy debt ! O impudence ! did I not purchase 160 The land left by thy father, that rich land, That had continued in Wellborn's name Twenty descents ; which, like a riotous fool, Thou didst make sale of ? Is not here inclos'd The deed that does confirm it mine ?

MAR. Now, now ! WELL. I do acknowledge none ; I ne'er pass'd o'er Any such land. I grant for a year or two You had it in trust ; which if you do discharge, Surrend'ring the possession, you shall ease Yourself and me of chargeable<sup>15</sup> suits in law, 170 Which, if you prove not honest, as I doubt it, Must of necessity follow.

L. ALL. In my judgment, He does advise you well.

OVER. Good ! good ! Conspire With your new husband, lady ; second him In his dishonest practices ; but when This manor is extended<sup>16</sup> to my use, You'll speak in an humbler key, and sue for favor.

L. ALL. Never ; do not hope it.

WELL. Let despair first seize me.

OVER. Yet, to shut up thy mouth, and make thee give Thyself the lie, the loud lie, I draw out 180 The precious evidence ; if thou canst forswear Thy hand and seal, and make a forfeit of

Opens the box.

Thy ears to the pillory, see ! here's that will make

My interest clear — ha !

L. ALL. A fair skin of parchment.

WELL. Indented,<sup>17</sup> I confess, and labels<sup>18</sup> too ;

But neither wax<sup>19</sup> nor words. How ! thunderstruck ?

Not a syllable to insult with ? My wise Uncle, Is this your precious evidence ? Is this that makes

Your interest clear ?

OVER. I am o'erwhelm'd with wonder ! What prodigy is this ? What subtle devil [190 Hath raz'd out the inscription, the wax Turn'd into dust ? The rest of my deeds whole As when they were deliver'd, and this only Made nothing ! Do you deal with witches, rascal ?

There is a statute<sup>20</sup> for you, which will bring Your neck in a hempen circle ; yes, there is ; And now 't is better thought, for, cheater, know

This juggling shall not save you.

WELL. To save thee Would beggar the stock of mercy.

OVER. Marrall !

MAR. Sir.

OVER. (flattering him) Though the witnesses are dead, your testimony 200 Help with an oath or two ; and for thy master, Thy liberal master, my good honest servant, I know you will swear anything, to dash This cunning sleight ; besides, I know thou art A public notary, and such stand in law For a dozen witnesses ; the deed being drawn too

By thee, my careful Marrall, and deliver'd When thou wert present, will make good my title.

Wilt thou not swear this ?

MAR. I ? no, I assure you ; I have a conscience not sear'd up like yours ; 210

I know no deeds.

OVER. Wilt thou betray me ?

MAR. Keep him From using of his hands, I'll use my tongue, To his no little torment.

OVER. Mine own varlet Rebel against me ?

MAR. Yes, and uncase<sup>21</sup> you too. The idiot, the patch, the slave, the booby, <sup>17</sup> Contracts were written in duplicate on the same sheet, which was then divided irregularly ; the indented edges would fit and thus attest the genuineness of the separate copies.

The property fit only to be beaten
 For your morning exercise, your football, or
 Th' unprofitable lump of flesh, your drudge,
 Can now anatomize<sup>22</sup> you, and lay open
 All your black plots, and level with the earth
 Your hill of pride, and, with these gabions<sup>23</sup> guarded, 221
 Unload my great artillery, and shake,
 Nay pulverize, the walls you think defend
 you.

— L. ALL. How he foams at the mouth with rage!

WELL. To him again.

OVER. Oh, that I had thee in my gripe; I would tear thee

Joint after joint!

MAR. I know you are a tearer, But I'll have first your fangs par'd off, and
 then

Come nearer to you; when I have discover'd<sup>24</sup>
 And made it good before the judge what ways

And devilish practices you us'd to cozen 230
 With an army of whole families, who yet
 live,

And, but<sup>25</sup> enroll'd for soldiers, were<sup>26</sup> able To take in<sup>27</sup> Dunkirk.

WELL. All will come out.

L. ALL. The better.

OVER. But that I will live, rogue, to torture
 thee,

And make thee wish, and kneel in vain, to
 die,

These swords that keep thee from me should fix here,

Although they made my body but one
 wound,

But I would reach thee.

LOV. (aside) Heav'n's hand is in this;
 One bandog<sup>28</sup> worry the other.

OVER. I play the fool,
 And make my anger but ridiculous; 240
 There will be a time and place, there will be,
 cowards,

When you shall feel what I dare do.

WELL. I think so:
 You dare do any ill, yet want true valor
 To be honest, and repent.

<sup>23</sup> Wicker baskets filled with earth, used to strengthen defensive works and also, evidently, to protect gunners. Here the gabions are Marrall's protectors.

OVER. They are words I know not,
 Nor e'er will learn. Patience, the beggar's
 virtue,

Enter GREEDY and PARSON WILLDO.

Shall find no harbor here. — After these storms

At length a calm appears. Welcome, most welcome!

There's comfort in thy looks. Is the deed done?
 Is my daughter married? Say but so, my chaplain,

And I am tame.

WILLDO. Married? Yes, I assure you. [250

OVER. Then vanish all sad thoughts!
 There's more gold for thee.

My doubts and fears are in the titles drown'd
 Of my Honorable, my Right Honorable
 daughter.

GREEDY. Here will I be<sup>29</sup> feasting! At least for a month

I am provided. Empty guts, croak no more.
 You shall be stuff'd like bagpipes, not with
 wind,

But bearing<sup>30</sup> dishes.

OVER. (whispering to WILLDO) Instantly be here?

To my wish! to my wish! Now you that plot against me,

And hop'd to trip my heels up, that contemn'd
 me, 259

Think on't and tremble. They come! I hear the music. — Loud music.

A lane there for my Lord!

WELL. This sudden heat
 May yet be cool'd, sir.

OVER. Make way there for my Lord!

Enter ALLWORTH and MARGARET.

MARG. (kneeling) Sir, first your pardon, then your blessing, with

Your full allowance of the choice I have
 made.

As ever you could make use of your reason,
 Grow not in passion; since you may as well Call back the day that's past, as untie the knot

Which is too strongly fasten'd. Not to dwell
 Too long on words, this 's my husband.

OVER. How!

ALL. So I assure you; all the rites of marriage, 270

With every circumstance, are past. Alas! sir,

Although I am no lord, but a lord's page,
Your daughter and my lov'd wife mourns not for it;

And, for Right Honorable son-in-law, you may say,

Your dutiful daughter.

OVER. Devil! are they married?

WILLDO. Do a father's part, and say,
"Heaven give 'em joy!"

OVER. Confusion and ruin! Speak, and speak quickly,
Or thou art dead.

WILLDO. They are married.

OVER. Thou hadst better
Have made a contract with the king of fiends,
Than these — my brain turns!

WILLDO. Why this rage to me? [280
Is not this your letter, sir, and these the words,
"Marry her to this gentleman"?

OVER. It cannot —
Nor will I e'er believe it; 'sdeath! I will not;
That I, that in all passages I touch'd
At worldly profit have not left a print
Where I have trod for the most curious search
To trace my footsteps, should be gull'd by children,

Baff'd and fool'd, and all my hopes and labors
Defeated and made void.

WELL. As it appears,
You are so, my grave uncle.

OVER. Village nurses [290
Revenge their wrongs with curses; I'll not waste

A syllable, but thus I take the life
Which, wretched, I gave to thee.

Offers <sup>31</sup> to kill MARGARET.

LOV. [coming forward] Hold, for your own sake!

Though charity to your daughter hath quite
left you,

Will you do an act, though in your hopes lost
here,

Can leave no hope for peace or rest hereafter?
Consider; at the best you are but a man,
And cannot so create your aims but that
They may be cross'd.

OVER. Lord, thus I spit at thee,
And at thy counsel; and again desire thee, [300
And as thou art a soldier, if thy valor
Dares show itself where multitude and example Lead not the way, let's quit the house, and change

Six words in private.

LOV. I am ready.

<sup>32</sup> Attempts.

L. ALL.

Stay, sir;

Contest with one distracted?

WELL.

You'll grow like him,
Should you answer his vain challenge.

OVER.

Are you pale?
Borrow his help, though Hercules call it odds, I'll stand against both as I am, hemm'd in
thus.

Since, like [a] <sup>32</sup> Libyan lion in the toil, <sup>33</sup>
My fury cannot reach the coward hunters, [310
And only spends itself, I'll quit the place.
Alone I can do nothing; but I have servants
And friends to second me; and if I make
not

This house a heap of ashes (by my wrongs,
What I have spoke I will make good!) or [leave] <sup>34</sup>

One throat uncut, — if it be possible,
Hell, add to my afflictions! Exit OVERREACH.
MAR. Is't not brave sport?

GREEDY. Brave sport! I am sure it has ta'en away my stomach;
I do not like the sauce.

ALL. Nay, weep not, dearest,
Though it express your pity; what's decreed 320

Above we cannot alter.

L. ALL. His threats move me
No scruple, madam.

MAR. Was it not a rare trick,
An it please your Worship, to make the deed
nothing?

I can do twenty neater, if you please
To purchase and grow rich; for I will be Such a solicitor and steward for you,
As never Worshipful had.

WELL. I do believe thee;
But first discover the quaint <sup>35</sup> means you us'd

To raze out the conveyance?

MAR. They are mysteries
Not to be spoke in public: certain minerals 330

Incorporated in the ink and wax.

Besides, he gave me nothing, but still fed
me

With hopes and blows; but that was the inducement

To this conun[d]rum. <sup>36</sup> If it please your Worship

To call to memory, this mad beast once caus'd
me

To urge you or to drown or hang yourself ;
I'll do the like to him, if you command me.

WELL. You are a rascal. He that dares be false

To a master, though unjust, will ne'er be true
To any other. Look not for reward 340
Or favor from me ; I will shun thy sight
As I would do a basilisk's.<sup>37</sup> Thank my pity

If thou keep thy ears ; howe'er, I will take order <sup>38</sup>

Your practice shall be silenc'd.

GREEDY. I'll commit him,
If you'll have me, sir.

WELL. That were to little purpose ;
His conscience be his prison. Not a word,
But instantly begone.

ORD. Take this kick with you.

AMB. And this.

FURN. If that I had my cleaver here,
I would divide your knave's head,

MAR. This is the haven
False servants still <sup>39</sup> arrive at.

Exit MARRALL.

Re-enter OVERREACH.

L. ALL. Come again ! [350

Lov. Fear not, I am your guard.

WELL. His looks are ghastly.

W[ILL]DO. Some little time I have spent,
under your favors,

In physical studies, and if my judgment err not,

He's mad beyond recovery ; but <sup>40</sup> observe him,

And look to yourselves.

OVER. Why, is not the whole world
Included in myself ? To what use then Are friends and servants ? Say there were a squadron

Of pikes,<sup>41</sup> lined <sup>42</sup> through with shot,<sup>43</sup> when I am mounted

Upon my injuries, shall I fear to charge 'em ?
No, I'll through the battalia, and, that routed, 360

Flourishing his sword [sheathed].<sup>44</sup>

I'll fall to execution — ha ! I am feeble :

Some undone widow sits upon mine arm,
And takes away the use of 't ; and my sword,
Glu'd to my scabbard with wrong'd orphans'
tears,

<sup>37</sup> The fabulous serpent whose glance was deadly.

<sup>44</sup> Q unsheathed.

Will not be drawn. Ha ! what are these ?
Sure, hangmen

That come to bind my hands, and then to drag
me

Before the judgment seat ; now they are new shapes,

And do appear like Furies, with steel whips
To scourge my ulcerous soul. Shall I then fall

Ingloriously, and yield ? No ; spite of Fate,
I will be forc'd to hell like to myself. 371

Though you were legions of accursed spirits,
Thus would I fly among you.

[Rushes forward and flings himself on the ground.]<sup>45</sup>

WELL. There's no help ;
Disarm him first, then bind him.

GREEDY. Take a mittimus <sup>46</sup>
And carry him to Bedlam.<sup>47</sup>

LOV. How he foams !

WELL. And bites the earth !

WILLDO. Carry him to some dark room,<sup>48</sup>
There try what art can do for his recovery.

MARG. O my dear father !

They force OVERREACH off.

ALL. You must be patient, mistress.

Lov. Here is a precedent to teach wicked
men

That when they leave religion, and turn atheists 380

Their own abilities leave 'em. Pray you take comfort ;

I will endeavor you shall be his guardians
In his distractions ; and for your land, Master
Wellborn,

Be it good or ill in law, I'll be an umpire
Between you, and this, th' undoubted heir

Of Sir Giles Overreach. For me, here's the anchor

That I must fix on.

ALL. What you shall determine,
My Lord, I will allow of.<sup>49</sup>

WELL. 'T is the language
That I speak too ; but there is something else
Beside the repossession of my land, 390
And payment of my debts, that I must practice.

I had a reputation, but 't was lost
In my loose course ; and, till I redeem it
Some noble way, I am but half made up.

<sup>47</sup> Bethlehem Hospital, London's institution for the insane, and hence any lunatic asylum.

<sup>48</sup> A regular method of treatment then.

It is a time of action ; if your Lordship
 Will please to confer a company upon me
 In your command, I doubt not in my service
 To my king and country but I shall do something

That may make me right again.

Lov. Your suit is granted,
 And you lov'd for the motion.<sup>50</sup>

WELL. [coming forward] Nothing wants
 then 400

But your allowance <sup>51</sup> —

<sup>50</sup> Proposal.

THE EPILOGUE

BUT your allowance, and in that our all
 Is comprehended ; it being known nor we
 Nor he that wrote the comedy can be free
 Without your manumission ; which if you
 Grant willingly, as a fair favor due
 To the poet's and our labors, (as you may,
 For we despair not, gentlemen, of the play,)
 We jointly shall profess your grace hath might
 To teach us action, and him how to write. 410

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

FORD's first publication, Fame's Memorial, is a long elegiac poem on Charles Blount, Lord Mountjoy and Earl of Devonshire, whose death in 1606 followed by a few months his marriage to Penelope Rich, née Devereux, Sidney's Stella. Her wedded life with Robert, Lord Rich, had been a miserable one, and she had long been Devonshire's mistress, without their incurring serious reprobation. Their marriage, however, after her divorce, was regarded as scandalous, and the Earl died heartbroken at the King's displeasure. The youthful Ford, generous and romantic, was deeply moved by the lovers' trials, and throughout his literary career remained a somewhat quixotic idealist and amorist. For him the spiritual union of lovers is an inviolable thing, and wedlock adulterous without a marriage of true minds. To what extent The Broken Heart is influenced by the still earlier relations (whatever they may have been) between Penelope and Sir Philip Sidney is very uncertain, despite Sherman's argument (Introduction, Belles Lettres Series) that their predicament was similar to that of Orgilus and Penthea. In any case, the poet's doctrinaire sympathy with lovers as such, his worship of beauty, and his contempt for conventional morality, are constantly reflected in his works.

Ford, then, is not an echo of Shakespeare, Webster, or Fletcher, but the most original of their immediate successors. He is dominated by an idea or mood, which in his best plays he is able to project with remarkable success. To apply to The Broken Heart the test of probability, save in the Aristotelian sense, would be as foolish as to reproach Whistler for not delineating in one of his nocturnes every window and chimney pot on the far side of the river. If in this play we are not sensible of the surge of great power, there is a place for sentiment and pathos, especially when they are rendered with such literary distinction. Ford is perhaps a poet first; yet the dramatic effectiveness of The Broken Heart is very considerable. Whether there is any justice in the charge that his works are decadent is an interesting question which the Editor hopes soon to discuss elsewhere.

Despite the assertion in lines fifteen and sixteen of the prologue, no source for the plot has been found. The date of composition, and of production by the King's Men at the Blackfriars, has not been precisely determined. Weber (1811) called attention to the citation (IV, ii, 15) of Thomas Deloney's Garland of Good Will, of which there was an edition, though it was not the first, in 1631 (Percy Society Reprints, vol. 30, p. viii). The sole quarto of The Broken Heart appeared two years later; c. 1632 seems a likely, though quite unsupported, date for its writing. The Quarto of 1633, on which the present text is based, does not carry the author's name on the title page, save in the anagram, Fide Honor; but it is signed to the dedication.

The standard edition of Ford's works is still that of W. Gifford, in the revision of A. Dyce (1869). Excellent reprints of the quartos are provided in W. Bang's Materialen zur Kunde des Älteren Englischen Dramas, in vol. XXIII, and in vol. I of the "New Series" by H. De Vocht. The Broken Heart and 'Tis Pity She's a Whore were also edited by S. P. Sherman (1915).

THE PROLOGUE

OUR scene is Sparta. He whose best of art
Hath drawn this piece calls it The Broken Heart.
The title lends no expectation here
Of apish laughter, or of some lame jeer
At place or persons ; no pretended <sup>3</sup> clause
Of jests fit for a brothel courts applause
From vulgar admiration : such low songs,
Tun'd to unchaste ears, suit not modest tongues.
The Virgin Sisters <sup>4</sup> then deserv'd fresh bays
When innocence and sweetness crown'd their lays ; 10
Then vices gasp'd for breath, whose whole commerce
Was whipp'd to exile by unblushing verse.
This law we keep in our presentment now,
Not to take freedom more than we allow ;
What may be here thought a fiction, when Time's youth
Wanted some riper years was known A Truth : <sup>5</sup>
In which, if words have cloth'd the subject right,
You may partake a pity with delight.

<sup>5</sup> See introductory note.

ACT I—SCENE I<sup>6</sup>Enter CROTOLON and ORGILUS.

CROT. Dally not further; I will know the reason

That speeds thee to this journey.

ORG. Reason? good sir, I can yield many.

CROT. Give me one, a good one; Such I expect, and ere we part must have. Athens! Pray, why to Athens? You intend not

To kick against the world, turn cynic, stoic, Or read the logic lecture, or become An Areopagite,<sup>7</sup> and judge in cases Touching the commonwealth; for, as I take it,

The budding of your chin cannot prognosticate 10

So grave an honor.

ORG. All this I acknowledge.

CROT. You do! Then, son, if books and love of knowledge Inflammé you to this travel, here in Sparta You may as freely study.

ORG. 'T is not that, sir.

CROT. Not that, sir! As a father, I command thee

To acquaint me with the truth.

✓ORG. Thus I obey 'ee. After so many quarrels as dissension, Fury, and rage had br[oa]ch'd in blood, and sometimes

With death to such confederates as sided With now-dead Thrasus and yourself, my Lord; 20

Our present king, Amyclas, reconcile'd Your eager swords and seal'd a gentle peace: Friends you profess'd yourselves; which to confirm,

A resolution for a lasting league Betwixt your families was entertain'd, By joining in a Hymenean bond Me and the fair Penthea, only daughter To Thrasus.

CROT. What of this?

ORG. Much, much, dear sir. A freedom of converse, an interchange Of holy and chaste love, so fix'd our souls [30 In a firm growth of union<sup>8</sup> that no time

<sup>8</sup> Some copies of Q of holy union. (Dyce. See also De Vocht.)

Can eat into the pledge; we had enjoy'd The sweets our vows expected, had not cruelty Prevented all those triumphs we prepar'd for, By Thrasus his untimely death.

CROT. Most certain.

ORG. From this time sprouted up that poisonous stalk

Of aconite, whose ripened fruit hath ravish'd All health, all comfort of a happy life; ✓For Ithocles, her brother, proud of youth, And prouder in his power, nourish'd closely<sup>9</sup> The memory of former discontents, 41 To glory in revenge. By cunning partly, Partly by threats, 'a<sup>10</sup> woos at once and forces His virtuous sister to admit<sup>11</sup> a marriage With Bassanes, a nobleman, in honor And riches, I confess, beyond my fortunes.

CROT. All this is no sound reason to importune

My leave for thy departure.

ORG. Now it follows.

Beauteous Penthea, wedded to this torture By an insulting<sup>12</sup> brother, being secretly 50 Compell'd to yield her virgin freedom up To him who never can usurp her heart, Before contracted mine, is now so yok'd To a most barbarous thralldom, misery, Affliction, that he savors not humanity Whose sorrow melts not into more than pity In hearing but her name.

CROT. As how, pray?

ORG. Bassanes,

The man that calls her wife, considers truly What heaven of perfections he is lord of By thinking fair Penthea his; this thought [60 Begets a kind of monster-love, which love Is nurse unto a fear so strong and servile As brands all dotage with a jealousy: All eyes who gaze upon that shrine of beauty He doth resolve<sup>13</sup> do homage to the miracle; Some one, he is assur'd, may now or then, If opportunity but sort,<sup>14</sup> prevail.

✓So much, out of a self-unworthiness, His fears transport him; not that he finds cause

In her obedience, but his own distrust. 70

CROT. You spin out your discourse.

ORG. My griefs are violent.

For, knowing how the maid was heretofore Courted by me, his jealousies grow wild That I should steal again into her favors,

{And undermine her virtues ; which the gods Know I nor dare nor dream of. Hence, from
hence

I undertake a voluntary exile ;
First, by my absence to take off the cares
Of jealous Bassanes ; but chiefly, sir,
To free Penthea from a hell on earth ; 80
Lastly, to lose the memory of something
Her presence makes to live in me afresh.

CROT. Enough, my Orgilus, enough. To Athens

I give a full consent. — Alas, good lady ! —
We shall hear from thee often ?

ORG. Often.

CROT. See,
Thy sister comes to give a farewell.

Enter EUPHRANEA.

EUPH. Brother !

ORG. Euphranea, thus upon thy cheeks I print

A brother's kiss ; more careful of thine honor,
Thy health, and thy well-doing than my life.
Before we part, in presence of our father, 90
I must prefer a suit to 'ee.<sup>15</sup>

EUPH. You may style it,
My Brother, a command.

ORG. That you will promise
To pass never to any man, however Worthy, your faith, till, with our father's leave,

I give a free consent.

CROT. An easy motion ! <sup>16</sup>
I'll promise for her, Orgilus.

ORG. Your pardon ;
Euphranea's oath must yield me satisfaction.

EUPH. By Vesta's sacred fires I swear.

CROT. And I,
By Great Apollo's beams, join in the vow,
Not without thy allowance <sup>17</sup> to bestow her [100
On any living.

✓ORG. Dear Euphranea,
Mistake me not ; far, far 't is from my thought,
As far from any wish of mine, to hinder
Preferment to an honorable bed
Or fitting fortune ; thou art young and handsome,

And 't were injustice, more, a tyranny,
Not to advance thy merit. Trust me, Sister,
It shall be my first care to see thee match'd
As may become thy choice and our contents.
I have your oath.

<sup>15</sup> Common for "ye", though here perhaps =

<sup>16</sup> Proposal.

<sup>17</sup> Approval.

EUPH. You have. But mean you,
Brother, 110
To leave us, as you say ?

CROT. Ay, ay, Euphranea ;
He has just grounds <sup>18</sup> direct him. I will prove

A father and a brother to thee.

EUPH. Heaven
Does look into the secrets of all hearts. —
Gods, you have mercy with 'ee, else —

CROT. Doubt nothing ;
Thy brother will return in safety to us.

ORG. Souls sunk in sorrows never are without 'em ;
They change fresh airs, but bear their griefs about 'em. Exeunt omnes.

SCENE II <sup>19</sup>

Flourish. Enter AMYCLAS the King, ARMOS-TES, PROPHILUS, and Attendants.

AMY. The Spartan gods are gracious ; our humility
Shall bend before their altars, and perfume
Their temples with abundant sacrifice.
See, Lords, Amyclas, your old king, is ent'ring
Into his youth again ! I shall shake off
This silver badge of age, and change this snow
For hairs as gay as are Apollo's locks ;
Our heart leaps in new vigor.

ARM. May old time
Run back to double your long life, great sir !

AMY. It will, it must, Armotes : thy bold
nephew, 10
Death-braving Ithocles, brings to our gates Triumphs and peace upon his conquering
sword.

Laconia is a monarchy at length ;
Hath in this latter war trod under foot
✓Messene's pride ; Messene <sup>20</sup> bows her neck
To Lacedaemon's royalty. Oh, 't was
A glorious victory, and doth deserve
More than a chronicle — a temple, Lords,
A temple to the name of Ithocles. —
Where didst thou leave him, Prophilus ?

Pro. At Pephon, <sup>21</sup> [20
Most gracious sovereign ; twenty of the noblest

Of the Messenians there attend your pleasure,

<sup>20</sup> The town of this name was not founded till after the overthrow of the Spartan supremacy, but the name was anciently given to Messenia.

<sup>21</sup> Pephnus, a Laconian town on the eastern shore of the Messenian Gulf. It was regarded by the Messenians as the limit of their territories.

For such conditions as you shall propose
In settling peace, and liberty of life.

AMY. When comes your friend, the general?

PRO. He promis'd
To follow with all speed convenient.

*Enter CROTON, CALANTHA, CHRISTALLA
[and] PHILEMA [with a garland], and EU-PHRANEA.*

AMY. Our daughter! — Dear Calantha, the happy news,
The conquest of Messene, hath already Enrich'd thy knowledge.

CAL. With the circumstance
And manner of the fight, related faithfully [30
By Prophilus himself. — But, pray, sir, tell me
How doth the youthful general demean
His actions in these fortunes?

PRO. Excellent Princess,
Your own fair eyes may soon report a truth
Unto your judgment, with what moderation, Calmness of nature, measure, bounds, and limits

Of thankfulness and joy, 'a doth digest
Such amplitude of his success as would
In others, moulded of a spirit less clear,
Advance 'em to comparison with Heaven; [40
But Ithocles —

CAL. Your friend —

PRO. He is so, madam,
In which the period of my fate consists:
He, in this firmament of honor, stands
Like a star fix'd, not mov'd with <sup>22</sup> any thunder

Of popular applause or sudden lightning
Of self-opinion; he hath serv'd his country,
And thinks 't was but his duty.

CROT. You describe
A miracle of man.

AMY. Such, Crotolon,
On forfeit of a king's word, thou wilt find him. — Flourish.
Hark, warning of his coming! All attend
him. 50

Enter ITHOCLES, HEMOPHIL, and GRONEAS; the rest of the Lords ushering him in.

Return into these arms, thy home, thy sanctuary,
Delight of Sparta, treasure of my bosom,
Mine own, own Ithocles.

ITH. Your humblest subject.

ARM. Proud of the blood I claim an interest
in,

<sup>22</sup> By.

As brother to thy mother, I embrace thee,
Right noble Nephew.

ITH. Sir, your love's too partial.

CROT. Our country speaks by me, who by thy valor,
Wisdom, and service shares in this great action,

Returning thee, in part of thy due merits,
A general welcome.

ITH. You exceed in bounty. [60

CAL. Christalla, Philema, the chaplet.
[Takes it.] — Ithocles,

Upon the wings of Fame the singular
And chosen fortune of an high attempt
Is borne so past the view of common sight,
That I myself with mine own hands have
wrought,

To crown thy temples, this provincial garland: <sup>23</sup>

Accept, wear, and enjoy it as our gift,
Deserv'd, not purchas'd.

ITH. Y' are a royal maid.

AMY. She is in all our daughter.

ITH. Let me blush,
Acknowledging how poorly I have serv'd, [70
What nothings I have done, compar'd with th' honors

Heap'd on the issue of a willing mind;
In that lay mine ability, that only.
For who is he so sluggish from his birth,
So little worthy of a name or country,
That owes not out of gratitude for life,
A debt of service, in what kind soever
Safety or counsel of the commonwealth
Requires, for payment?

CAL. 'A speaks truth.

ITH. Whom Heaven
Is pleas'd to style victorious, there, to such, [80
Applause runs madding, like the drunken priests

In Bacchus' sacrifices, without reason,
Voicing the leader-on a demigod;
Whenas, indeed, each common soldier's blood
Drops down as current coin in that hard purchase

As his whose much more delicate condition
Hath suck'd the milk of ease: judgment commands,

But resolution executes. I use not,
Before this royal presence, these fit slights <sup>24</sup>
As in contempt of such as can direct; 90

<sup>23</sup> "The wreath (of laurel) . . . which the ancients conferred on those who . . . had added a province to the empire." (Gifford.)

<sup>24</sup> I.e., these appropriate depreciatory expressions.

My speech hath other end : not to attribute All praise to one man's fortune, which is strengthened

By many hands. For instance, here is Prophilus,

A gentleman — I cannot flatter truth —
Of much desert ; and, though in other rank,
Both Hemophil and Groneas were not miss-
ing

To wish their country's peace ; for, in a word,
All there did strive their best, and 't was our duty.

AMY. Courtiers turn soldiers ! — We vouchsafe our hand. [They kiss his hand.]
Observe your great example.

HEM. With all diligence. [100

GRO. Obsequiously and hourly.

AMY. Some repose
After these toils are <sup>25</sup> needful. We must think on

Conditions for the conquered ; they expect <sup>26</sup>
'em.

On ! — Come, my Ithoeces.

EUPH. [to PROPHILUS] Sir, with your
favor,

I need not a supporter.<sup>27</sup>

PRO. Fate instructs me.

Exeunt [all but] HEMOPHIL, [who] stays
CHRISTALLA ; [and] GRONEAS, [who stays] PHILEMA.

CHRIS. With me?

PHIL. Indeed, I dare not stay.

HEM. Sweet lady,

Soldiers are blunt — your lip.

CHRIS. Fie, this is rudeness ;
You went not hence such creatures.

GRO. Spirit of valor
Is of a mounting nature.

PHIL. It appears so. —

Pray, in earnest, how many men apiece 110
Have you two been the death of?

GRO. 'Faith, not many ;
We were compos'd of mercy.

HEM. For our daring,
You heard the general's approbation
Before the King.

CHRIS. You "wish'd your country's peace ;"

That show'd your charity. Where are your spoils,

Such as the soldier fights for?

PHIL. They are coming.

<sup>26</sup> Are waiting for.

<sup>27</sup> Evidently Philophilus has offered his arm or
hand.

CHRIS. By the next carrier, are they not?

GRO. Sweet Philema,

When I was in the thickest of mine enemies,
Slashing off one man's head, another's nose,
Another's arms and legs —

PHIL. And all together. [120

GRO. Then would I with a sigh remember
thee,

And cry "Dear Philema, 't is for thy sake
I do these deeds of wonder ! " — Dost not love
me

With all thy heart now?

PHIL. Now as heretofore.

I have not put my love to use ; <sup>28</sup> the principal
Will hardly yield an interest.

GRO. By Mars,
I'll marry thee !

PHIL. By Vulcan,<sup>29</sup> y' are forsworn,
Except my mind do alter strangely.

GRO. One word.

CHRIS. You lie beyond all modesty — forbear me.

HEM. I'll make thee mistress of a city ;
't is 130

Mine own by conquest.

CHRIS. By petition ; sue for 't
In forma pauperis.<sup>30</sup> — City? kennel ! — Gallants,

Off with your f[e]athers ; put on aprons, gal-
lants ;

Learn to reel,<sup>31</sup> thrum,<sup>32</sup> or trim a lady's dog,
And be good, quiet souls of peace, hobgoblins !

HEM. Christalla !

CHRIS. Practise to drill hogs, in hope
To share in the acorns. — Soldiers? corn-cutters !

But not so valiant : they oft-times draw blood, Which you durst never do. When you have practis'd

More wit or more civility, we'll rank 'ee 140
I' th' list of men : till then, brave things-at-
arms,

Dare not to speak to us — most potent Gro-neas !

PHIL. And Hemophil the hardy ! — at your services.

Exeunt CHRISTALLA and PHILEMA.

GRO. They scorn us as they did before we went.

<sup>28</sup> Out at interest ; i.e., I have not lent my love to anyone, and therefore am not expecting to receive anything in return.

<sup>29</sup> Who got the better of Mars.

<sup>30</sup> A pauper being entitled to exemption from court costs and to service of counsel gratis.

<sup>32</sup> Make tufts in cloth.

HEM. Hang 'em ! let us scorn them, and be reveng'd.

GRO. Shall we ?

HEM. We will : and when we slight them thus,
Instead of following them, they'll follow us ;
It is a woman's nature.

GRO. 'T is a scurvy one. Exeunt.

SCENE III <sup>33</sup>

Enter TECNICUS, a philosopher, and ORGILUS disguised like a scholar of his.

TEC. Tempt not the stars, young man ;
thou canst not play,
With the severity of Fate ; this change
Of habit <sup>34</sup> and disguise in outward view
Hides not the secrets of thy soul within thee
From their quick-piercing eyes, which dive at all times

Down to thy thoughts. In thy aspect I note
A consequence of danger. <sup>35</sup>

ORG. Give me leave,
Grave Tecnicus, without foredooming destiny,
Under thy roof to ease my silent griefs
By applying to my hidden wounds the balm [10
Of thy oraculous lectures. If my fortune
Run such a crooked byway as to wrest
My steps to ruin, yet thy learned precepts
Shall call me back and set my footings straight.
I will not court the world.

TEC. Ah, Orgilus,
Neglects in young men of delights and life
Run often to extremities ; they care not
For harms to others who condemn their own.

ORG. But I, most learned artist, am not so much
At odds with nature that I grudge the thrift [20
Of any true deserver ; nor doth malice
Of present hopes <sup>36</sup> so check them with despair
As that I yield to thought of more affliction
Than what is incident to frailty. <sup>37</sup> Wherefore, Impute not this retired course of living
Some little time to any other cause
Than what I justly render : the information
Of an unsettled mind, as the effect
Must clearly witness.

TEC. Spirit of truth inspire thee !
On these conditions I conceal thy change, [30
And willingly admit thee for an auditor. —
I'll to my study.

ORG. I to contemplations

<sup>34</sup> Clothing. <sup>35</sup> Dangerous outcome.

<sup>37</sup> I.e., the general frailty of men.

In these delightful walks. — [Exit TECNICUS.]

Thus metamorph[ol]s'd,
I may without suspicion hearken after Penthea's usage and Euphranea's faith.
Love, thou art full of mystery ! The deities Themselves are not secure <sup>38</sup> in searching out
The secrets of those flames, which, hidden,
waste

A breast made tributary to the laws
Of beauty ; physic yet hath never found 40
A remedy to cure a lover's wound. —

Ha ! who are those that cross yon private walk
Into the shadowing grove in amorous foldings ?

PROPHILUS passeth over, supporting EUPHRA-NEA, and whispering.

My sister ! Oh, my sister ! 't is Euphranea With Philus ; supported, too ! I would
It were an apparition ! Philus
Is Ithocles his <sup>39</sup> friend ; it strangely puzzles me.
Again ? Help me, my book ; this scholar's habit Must stand <sup>40</sup> my privilege. My mind is busy ;

Mine eyes and ears are open.

Walk by, reading.

Enter again PROPHILUS and EUPHRANEA.

PRO. Do not waste [50
The span of this stol'n time, lent by the gods
For precious use, in niceness ! <sup>41</sup> Bright Eu-
phranea,

Should I repeat old vows, or study new,
For purchase of belief to my desires, —

ORG. [aside] Desires !

PRO. My service, my integrity, —

ORG. [aside] That's better.

PRO. I should but repeat a lesson
Oft conn'd without a prompter but thine eyes.
My love is honorable.

ORG. [aside] So was mine
To my Penthea, chastely honorable.

PRO. Nor wants there more addition to my wish 60

Of happiness than having thee a wife ;
Already sure of Ithocles, a friend
Firm and unalterable.

ORG. [aside] But a brother
More cruel than the grave.

EUPH. What can you look for,
In answer to your noble protestations,
From an unskilful <sup>42</sup> maid, but language suited
To a divided mind ?

<sup>42</sup> Inexperienced.

ORG. [aside] Hold out, Euphranea!

EUPH. Know, Phililus, I never undervalued,

From the first time you mentioned worthy love,

Your merit, means, or person; it had been [70]
A fault of judgment in me, and a dullness
In my affections, not to weigh and thank
My better stars that offered me the grace
Of so much blissfulness. For, to speak truth,
The law of my desires kept equal pace
With yours, nor have I left that resolution;
But only, in a word, whatever choice
Lives nearest in my heart must first procure Consent both from my father and my brother,
Ere he can own me his.

ORG. [aside] She is forsworn else. [80]

PRO. Leave me that task.

EUPH. My brother, ere he parted
To Athens, had my oath.

ORG. [aside] Yes, yes, 'a had, sure.

PRO. I doubt not, with the means the court supplies,
But to prevail at pleasure.

ORG. [aside] Very likely!

PRO. Meantime, best, dearest, I may build my hopes

On the foundation of thy constant suff'rance <sup>43</sup>
In <sup>44</sup> any opposition.

EUPH. Death shall sooner
Divorce life and the joys I have in living
Than my chaste vows from truth.

PRO. On thy fair hand
I seal the like.

ORG. [aside] There is no faith in
woman. 90

Passion, oh, be contain'd! My very heartstrings

Are on the tenters. <sup>45</sup>

EUPH. Sir, we are overheard.
Cupid protect us! 'T was a stirring, sir,
Of some one near.

PRO. Your fears are needless, lady;
None have access into these private pleasures <sup>46</sup>
Except some near in court, or bosom-student
From Tecnicus his oratory, granted
By special favor lately from the King
Unto the grave philosopher.

EUPH. Methinks
I hear one talking to himself — I see him. [100]

PRO. 'T is a poor scholar, as I told you,
lady.

ORG. [aside] I am discovered. — [as if studying] Say it: is it possible,
With a smooth tongue, a leering countenance,
Flattery, or force of reason — I come t'ee
sir —

To turn or to appease the raging sea?

Answer to that. — Your art! what art to catch

And hold fast in a net the sun's small atoms?
No, no; they'll out, they'll out: ye may as easily

Outrun a cloud driven by a northern blast
As fiddle-faddle so! Peace, or speak sense. [110]

EUPH. Call you this thing a scholar? 'Las, he's lunatic.

PRO. Observe him, sweet; 't is but his recreation.

ORG. But will you hear a little? You are so tetchy,

You keep no rule in argument. Philosophy
Works not upon impossibilities,

But natural conclusions. — Mew! — absurd! <sup>47</sup>

The metaphysics are but speculations
Of the celestial bodies, or such accidents

As not mix'd perfectly, in the air engend'red
Appear to us unnatural; that's all. — 120

Prove it; — yet, with a reverence to your gravity,

I'll balk illiterate sauciness, submitting
My sole opinion to the touch of writers.

PRO. Now let us fall in with him.

[They come forward.]

ORG. Ha, ha, ha!

These apish boys, when they but taste the grammates <sup>48</sup>

And principles of theory, imagine
They can oppose their teachers. Confidence Leads many into errors.

PRO. By your leave, sir.

EUPH. Are you a scholar, friend?

ORG. I am, gay creature,
With pardon of your deities, a mushroom [130]
On whom the dew of heaven drops now and
then;

The sun shines on me too, I thank his beams!
Sometime I feel their warmth, and eat and
sleep.

PRO. Does Tecnicus read to <sup>49</sup> thee?

ORG. Yes, forsooth;
He is my master surely; yonder door
Opens upon his study.

<sup>47</sup> "A term of the schools . . . used when false conclusions are illogically deduced from the opponent's premises." (Gifford.)

<sup>46</sup> Pleasure grounds.

PRO. Happy creatures !
Such people toil not, sweet, in heats of state,
Nor sink in thaws of greatness ; their affections
Keep order with the limits of their modesty ;
Their love is love of virtue. — What's thy
name ? 140

ORG. Aplotes, sumptuous master, a poor
wretch.

EUPH. Dost thou want anything ?

ORG. Books, Venus, books.

PRO. Lady, a new conceit <sup>50</sup> comes in my
thought,

And most available for both our comforts.

EUPH. My Lord —

PRO. Whiles I endeavor to deserve
Your father's blessing to our loves, this scholar
May daily at some certain hours attend <sup>51</sup>
What notice I can write of my success,
Here in this grove, and give it to your hands ;
The like from you to me : so can we never, [150
Barr'd of our mutual speech, want sure intelligence,

And thus our hearts may talk when our tongues cannot.

EUPH. Occasion is most favorable ; use it.

PRO. Aplotes, wilt thou wait us twice a day,
At nine i' th' morning and at four at night,
Here in this bower, to convey such letters
As each shall send to other ? Do it willingly, Safely, and secretly, and I will furnish
Thy study, or what else thou canst desire.

ORG. Jove, make me thankful, thankful, I beseech thee, 160
Propitious Jove ! I will prove sure and trusty.
You will not fail me books ?

PRO. Nor aught besides Thy heart can wish. This lady's name 's Eu-
phranea,
Mine Phililus.

ORG. I have a pretty memory ;
It must prove my best friend. I will not miss
One minute of the hours appointed.

PRO. Write
The books thou wouldst have bought thee in a
note,
Or take thyself some money.

ORG. No, no money ;
Money to scholars is a spirit invisible —
We dare not finger it : or books or noth-
ing. 170

PRO. Books of what sort thou wilt ; do not forget
Our names.

ORG. I warrant 'ee, I warrant 'ee.

<sup>50</sup> Idea.

<sup>51</sup> Wait for.

PRO. Smile, Hymen, on the growth of our
desires ;
We'll feed thy torches with eternal fires !

Exeunt [PROPHILUS and EUPHRANEA].
ORG. Put out thy torches, Hymen, or their
light

Shall meet a darkness of eternal night !

Inspire me, Mercury, with swift deceits.

Ingenious Fate has leap'd into mine arms,
Beyond the compass of my brain.<sup>52</sup> Mortality Creeps on the dung of earth, and cannot reach <sup>53</sup> 180

The riddles which are purpos'd by the gods.
Great arts best write themselves in their own
stories ;

They die too basely who outlive their glories.
Exit.

ACT II — SCENE I <sup>1</sup>

Enter BASSANES and PHULAS.

BASS. I'll have that window next the street
damm'd up ;
It gives too full a prospect to temptation,
And courts a gazer's glances. There's a lust Committed by the eye, that sweats and travails,

Plots, wakes, contrives, till the deformed bear-
whelp,<sup>2</sup>

Adultery, be lick'd into the act,
The very act. That light shall be damm'd up ;
D'ee hear, sir ?

PHU. I do hear, my Lord ; a mason
Shall be provided suddenly.<sup>3</sup>

BASS. Some rogue,
Some rogue of your confederacy — factor <sup>4</sup> [10
For slaves and strumpets ! — to convey close <sup>5</sup> packets

From this spruce springal <sup>6</sup> and the tother youngster,

That gaudy earwig,<sup>7</sup> or my Lord your patron, Whose pensioner you are. — I'll tear thy throat out,

Son of a cat, ill-looking hound's-head — rip up
Thy ulcerous maw, if I but scent a paper,
A scroll, but half as big as what can cover

<sup>7</sup> I.e., insinuating person. Q Earwig.

A wart upon thy nose, a spot, a pimple,
Directed to my lady : it may prove
A mystical preparative to lewdness. 20

PHU. Care shall be had ; I will turn every thread
About me to an eye. — [aside] Here's a sweet
life !

BASS. The city housewives, cunning in the traffic

Of chamber merchandise, set all at price
By wholesale ; yet they wipe their mouths and simper,

Cull,<sup>8</sup> kiss, and cry "sweetheart," and stroke
the head

Which they have branch'd ;<sup>9</sup> and all is well
again !

Dull clods of dirt, who dare not feel the rubs
Stuck on [their]<sup>10</sup> foreheads !

PHU. 'T is a villainous world ;
One cannot hold his own in 't.

BASS. Dames at court, [30
Who flaunt in riots, run another bias ;<sup>11</sup>
Their pleasure heaves the patient ass that suffers

Up on the stilts of office, titles, incomes ;
Promotion justifies the shame, and sues for 't.
Poor Honor, thou art stabb'd, and bleed'st to
death

By such unlawful hire ! The country mistress
Is yet more wary, and in blushes hides
Whatever trespass draws her troth to guilt.

But all are false ; on this truth I am bold :
No woman but can fall, and doth or would. —
Now for the newest news about the city ; [41
What blab the voices, sirrah ?

PHU. O, my Lord,
The rarest, quaintest, strangest, tickling news
That ever —

BASS. Hey-day ! up and ride me, rascal !
What is 't ?

PHU. Forsooth, they say the King has mew'd<sup>12</sup>

All his gray beard, instead of which is budded
Another of a pure carnation color,
Speckled with green and russet.

BASS. Ignorant block !<sup>13</sup>

PHU. Yes, truly ; and 't is talk'd about the streets

That, since Lord Ithocles came home, the lions<sup>50</sup>

Never left roaring, at which noise the bears
Have danc'd their very hearts out.

BASS. Dance out thine too.

PHU. Besides, Lord Orgilus is fled to Athens
Upon a fiery dragon, and 't is thought
'A never can return.

BASS. Grant it, Apollo !

PHU. Moreover, please your Lordship, 't is reported

For certain, that whoever is found jealous
Without apparent proof that's wife is wanton
Shall be divorc'd ; but this is but she-news —
I had it from a midwife. I have more yet. [60

BASS. Antic,<sup>14</sup> no more ! Idiots and stupid fools

Grate my calamities. Why to be fair
Should yield presumption of a faulty soul —
Look to the doors.

PHU. [aside] The horn of plenty<sup>15</sup>
crest him ! Exit PHULAS.

BASS. Swarms of confusion huddle in my
thoughts

In rare distemper. — Beauty ! Oh, it is An unmatch'd blessing or a horrid curse.

Enter PENTHEA and GRAUSIS, an old Lady.

She comes, she comes ! so shoots the morning
forth,

Spangled with pearls of transparent dew.
The way to poverty is to be rich, 70
As I in her am wealthy ; but for her,
In all contents a bankrupt. — Lov'd Penthea !
How fares my heart's best joy ?

GRAU. In sooth, not well ;
She is so oversad.

BASS. Leave chattering, magpie. — Thy brother is return'd, sweet — safe, and honor'd

✓ With a triumphant victory ; thou shalt visit
him.

We will to court, where, if it be thy pleasure,
Thou shalt appear in such a ravishing lustre
Of jewels above value, that the dames
Who brave<sup>16</sup> it there, in rage to be out-shin'd, 80

Shall hide them in their closets, and unseen
Fret in their tears ; whiles every wond'ring
eye

Shall crave none other brightness but thy presence.

Choose thine own recreations ; be a queen
Of what delights thou fanciest best, what company,

<sup>14</sup> Fool.

<sup>15</sup> Cornucopia ; but allusive to the horns of the cuckold.

What place, what times ; do anything, do all things

Youth can command, so <sup>17</sup> thou wilt chase these clouds

From the pure firmament of thy fair looks.

GRAU. Now 't is well said, my Lord. —

What, lady ! laugh,

Be merry ; time is precious.

BASS. [aside] Furies whip thee ! [90]

✓ PEN. Alas, my Lord, this language to your handmaid

Sounds as would music to the deaf ; I need

No braveries nor cost of art to draw

The whiteness of my name into offence.

Let such, if any such there are, who covet

A curiosity of admiration,

By laying out their plenty to full view,

Appear in gaudy outsides ; my attires

Shall suit the inward fashion of my mind ;

From which, if your opinion, nobly plac'd, [100]

Change not the livery your words bestow,

My fortunes with my hopes are at the highest.

BASS. This house, methinks, stands somewhat too much inward ;

It is too melancholy ; we'll remove

Nearer the court. Or what thinks my Penthea

Of the delightful island we command ?

Rule me as thou canst wish.

PEN. I am no mistress.

✓ Whither you please, I must attend ; all ways are alike pleasant to me.

GRAU. Island ? prison !

A prison is as gaysome ; we'll no islands ; [110]

Marry, out upon 'em ! Whom shall we see there ?

Sea gulls, and porpoises, and water rats,

And crabs, and mews, <sup>18</sup> and dogfish ; goodly gear

For a young lady's dealing, or an old one's.

On no terms islands ; I'll be stew'd first.

BASS. [aside to GRAUSIS] Grausis,

You are a juggling bawd. — This sadness, sweetest,

Becomes not youthful blood. — [aside to GRAUSIS] I'll have you pounded. —

For my sake put on a more cheerful mirth ;

Thou 'lt mar thy cheeks, and make me old in griefs. —

[aside to GRAUSIS] Damnable bitch-fox !

GRAU. I am thick of hearing, [120]

Still, when the wind blows southerly. — What think 'ee

If your fresh lady breed young bones, my Lord ?

Would not a chopping boy d'ee good at heart ?

But, as you said —

BASS. [aside to GRAUSIS] I'll spit thee on a stake,

Or chop thee into collops ! <sup>19</sup>

GRAU. Pray, speak louder.

Sure, sure the wind blows south still.

PEN. Thou prat'st madly.

BASS. 'T is very hot ; I sweat extremely.

Re-enter PHULAS.

Now ?

PHU. A herd of lords, sir.

BASS. Ha ?

PHU. A flock of ladies.

BASS. Where ?

PHU. Shoals of horses.

BASS. Peasant, how ?

PHU. Caroches <sup>20</sup>

In drifts ; th' one enter, th' other stand without, sir ; 130

And now I vanish. Exit PHULAS.

Enter PROPHILUS, HEMOPHIL, GRONEAS, CHRISTALLA, and PHILEMA.

PRO. Noble Bassanes !

BASS. Most welcome, Prophilus ; ladies, gentlemen,

To all my heart is open ; you all honor me, — [aside] A tympany <sup>21</sup> swells in my head already —

Honor me bountifully. — [aside] How they flutter,

Wagtails <sup>22</sup> and jays together !

PRO. From your brother, By virtue of your love to him, I require Your instant presence, fairest.

PEN. He is well, sir ?

PRO. The gods preserve him ever ! Yet, dear beauty,

I find some alteration in him lately, 140 Since his return to Sparta. — My good Lord,

I pray, use no delay.

BASS. We had not needed

An invitation, if his sister's health

Had not fallen into question. — Haste, Penthea,

<sup>22</sup> The name of these birds was often applied to wanton women.

Slack not a minute. — Lead the way, good Prophilus ;

I'll follow step by step.

PRO. Your arm, fair madam.

Exeunt [all but] <sup>23</sup> BASSANES and GRAUSIS.

BASS. One word with your old Bawdship :
th' hadst been better

Rail'd at the sins <sup>24</sup> thou worshipp'st than have thwarted

My will. I'll use thee cursedly.

GRAU. You dote ;
You are beside yourself. <sup>150</sup> A politician
In jealousy ? No, y' are too gross, too vulgar. //
Pish, teach not me my trade ; I know my cue.
My crossing you sinks me into her trust,
By which I shall know all ; my trade's a sure
one.

BASS. Forgive me, Grausis ; 't was consideration

I relish'd not ; <sup>25</sup> but have a care now.

GRAU. Fear not ;
I am no new-come-to-'t.

BASS. Thy life's upon it,
And so is mine. My agonies are infinite.

Exeunt omnes.

SCENE II <sup>26</sup>

Enter ITHOCLES, alone.

ITH. Ambition ! 't is of vipers' breed : it gnaws

A passage through the womb that gave it motion.

Ambition, like a seeled <sup>27</sup> dove, mounts upward,

Higher and higher still, to perch on clouds,
But tumbles headlong down with heavier ruin.

So squibs and crackers fly into the air,
Then, only breaking with a noise, they vanish

In stench and smoke. Morality, appli'd ~
To timely practice, keeps the soul in tune, }
At whose sweet music all our actions dance ; [10

But this is form of books and school <sup>28</sup> tradi-
tion ;

It physics not the sickness of a mind Broken with griefs. Strong fevers are not eas'd

<sup>27</sup> Temporarily blinded by having had its eyelids sewed up. The dove would then soar straight up till its strength was exhausted, when it would fall at the feet of the "sportsmen."

<sup>28</sup> Scholastic.

With counsel, but with best receipts and
means ;

Means, speedy means and certain ; that's the cure.

Enter ARMOSTES and CROTOLON.

ARM. You stick, Lord Crotolon, upon a point

Too nice <sup>29</sup> and too unnecessary ; Prophilus
Is every way desertful. I am confident
Your wisdom is too ripe to need instruction
From your son's tutelage.

CROT. Yet not so ripe, <sup>20</sup>
My Lord Armotes, that it dares to dote
Upon the painted meat <sup>30</sup> of smooth persuasion,

Which tempts me to a breach of faith.

ITH. Not yet
Resolv'd, my Lord ? Why, if your son's consent

Be so available, we'll write to Athens
For his repair to Sparta. The King's hand
Will join with our desires ; he has been mov'd
to 't.

ARM. Yes, and the King himself impor-tun'd <sup>31</sup> Crotolon

For a dispatch.

CROT. Kings may command ; their wills
Are laws not to be questioned.

ITH. By this marriage [30
You knit an union so devout, so hearty,
Between your loves to me and mine to yours,
As if mine own blood had an interest in
it ;

For Prophilus is mine, and I am his.

CROT. My Lord, my Lord ! —

ITH. What, good sir ? Speak your thought.

CROT. Had this sincerity been real once,
My Orgilus had not been now unwiv'd,
Nor your lost sister buried in a bride-bed.
Your uncle here, Armotes, knows this truth ;
For had your father Thrasus liv'd, — but peace <sup>40</sup>

Dwell in his grave ! I have done.

ARM. Y' are bold and bitter.

ITH. [aside] 'A presses home the injury ; it smarts. —

No reprehensions, Uncle ; I deserve 'em. —

Yet, gentle sir, consider what the heat
Of an unsteady youth, a giddy brain,
Green indiscretion, flattery of greatness,
Rawness of judgment, wilfulness in folly,

<sup>31</sup> Accented on second syllable.

Thoughts vagrant as the wind and as uncertain,

Might lead a boy in years to. 'T was a fault,
A capital fault; for then I could not dive [50
Into the secrets of commanding love;

Since when, experience, by the extremities (in others),

Hath forc'd me collect.<sup>32</sup> And, trust me,
Crotolon,

I will redeem those wrongs with any service
Your satisfaction can require for current.<sup>33</sup>

ARM. Thy acknowledgment is satisfaction. —

What would you more?

CROT. I'm conquer'd; if Euphranea
Herself admit the motion, let it be so;
I doubt not my son's liking.

ITH. Use my fortunes, Life, power, sword, and heart — all are your
own. 60

Enter BASSANES, PROPHILUS, CALANTHA, PENTHEA, EUPHRANEA, CHRISTALLA, PHILEMA, and GRAUSIS.

ARM. The Princess, with your sister.

CAL. I present 'ee
A stranger here in court, my Lord; for did not Desire of seeing you draw her abroad,
We had not been made happy in her company.

ITH. You are a gracious princess. — Sister,
wedlock

Holds too severe a passion in your nature,
Which can engross all duty to your husband,
Without attendance on so dear a mistress. —
[To BASSANES] 'T is not my brother's pleasure,

I presume,

T' immure her in a chamber.

BASS. 'T is her will; [70
She governs her own hours. Noble Ithocles,
We thank the gods for your success and welfare.
Our lady has of late been indispos'd,
Else we had waited on you with the first.

ITH. How does Penthea now?

PEN. You best know, Brother, From whom my health and comforts are deriv'd.

BASS. [aside] I like the answer well; 't is sad<sup>34</sup> and modest.

There may be tricks yet, tricks. — Have an eye, Grausis!

CAL. Now, Crotolon, the suit we join'd in must not Fall by too long demur.

CROT. 'T is granted, Princess, [80

For my part.

ARM. With condition, that his son
Favor the contract.

CAL. Such delay is easy. —
The joys of marriage make thee, Philus,
A proud deserfer of Euphranea's love,
And her of thy desert!

PRO. Most sweetly gracious!

BASS. The joys of marriage are the Heaven on earth,

Life's paradise, great Princess, the soul's quiet,
Sinews of concord, earthly immortality,
Eternity of pleasures; no restoratives
Like to a constant woman! — [aside] but where is she? 90

'T would puzzle all the gods but to create
Such a new monster. — I can speak by proof,
For I rest in Elysium; 't is my happiness.

CROT. Euphranea, how are you resolv'd,<sup>35</sup> speak freely,

In your affections to this gentleman?

EUPH. Nor more nor less than as his love assures me;

Which — if your liking with my brother's warrants —

I cannot but approve in all points worthy.

CROT. So, so. — [to PROPHILUS] I know your answer.

ITH. 'T had been pity
To sunder hearts so equally consented. 100

Enter HEMOPHIL.

HEM. The King, Lord Ithocles, commands your presence; —

And, fairest Princess, yours.

CAL. We will attend him.

Enter GRONEAS.

GRO. Where are the lords? All must unto the King

Without delay: the Prince of Argos —

CAL. Well, sir?

GRO. Is coming to the court, sweet lady.

CAL. How!

The Prince of Argos?

GRO. 'T was my fortune, madam,
T' enjoy the honor of these happy tidings.

ITH. Penthea! —

PEN. Brother?

ITH. Let me an hour hence
Meet you alone within the palace grove;
I have some secret with you. — Prithee,
friend, 110

<sup>35</sup> Decided.

Conduct her thither, and have special care
The walks be clear'd of any to disturb us.

PRO. I shall.

BASS. [aside] How's that? ✓

ITH. Alone, pray be alone. —

I am your creature, Princess. — On, my Lords! Exeunt [all but] BASSANES.

✓BASS. Alone! alone! What means that?
word "alone"?

Why might not I be there? — hum! — he's her brother.

Brothers and sisters are but flesh and blood,
And this same whoreson court-ease is tempta-
tion

To a rebellion in the veins.<sup>36</sup> — Besides,
His fine friend Prophilus must be her guardian. 120

Why may not he dispatch a business nimbly
Before the other come? — or — pand'ring, pand'ring

For one another, — be't to sister, mother, Wife, cousin, anything, — 'mongst youths of mettle

Is in request; it is so — stubborn fate!

But if I be a cuckold, and can know it,

I will be fell, and fell.

Re-enter GRONEAS.

GRO. My Lord, y' are call'd for.

BAS. Most heartily I thank ye. Where's my wife, pray?

GRO. Retir'd amongst the ladies.

BASS. Still I thank 'ee.

There's an old waiter<sup>37</sup> with her; saw you her
too? 130

GRO. She sits i' th' presence-lobby fast asleep, sir.

BASS. Asleep! [a]sleep, sir!

GRO. Is your Lordship troubled?

You will not to the King?

BASS. Your humblest vassal.

GRO. Your servant, my good Lord.

BASS. I wait your footsteps.

Exeunt.

SCENE III<sup>38</sup>

[Enter] PROPHILUS [and] PENTHEA.

PRO. In this walk, lady, will your brother
find you;

And, with your favor, give me leave a little

To work a preparation. In his fashion

I have observ'd of late some kind of slackness,

<sup>38</sup> The grove.

To such alacrity as nature<sup>39</sup>

And custom took delight in; sadness grows
Upon his recreations, which he hoards

In such a willing silence, that to question

The grounds will argue [little]<sup>40</sup> skill in friendship,

And less good manners.

PEN. Sir, I'm not inquisitive [10
Of secresies without an invitation.

PRO. With pardon, lady, not a syllable
Of mine implies so rude a sense; the drift —

Enter ORGILUS, [disguised as before].

[to ORGILUS] Do thy best

To make this lady merry for an hour. Exit.

ORG. Your will shall be a law, sir.

PEN. Prithee, leave me;
I have some private thoughts I would account
with;

Use thou thine own.

ORG. Speak on, fair nymph; our souls
Can dance as well to music of the spheres
As any's who have feasted with the gods. [20

PEN. Your school terms are too troublesome.

ORG. What Heaven
Refines mortality from dross of earth
But such as uncompounded beauty hallows
With glorified perfection?

PEN. Set thy wits
In a less wild proportion.

ORG. Time can never
On the white table of unguilty faith
Write counterfeit dishonor; turn those eyes,
The arrows of pure love, upon that fire Which once rose to a flame, perfum'd with vows

As sweetly scented as the incense smoking [30
On Vesta's<sup>41</sup> [altars];<sup>42</sup> virgin tears,<sup>43</sup> like
The holiest odors, sprinkled dews to feed 'em
And to increase their fervor.

PEN. Be not frantic.

ORG. All pleasures are but mere imagina-
tion,

Feeding the hungry appetite with steam
And sight of banquet, whilst the body pines,
Not relishing the real<sup>43</sup> taste of food:
Such is the leanness of a heart divided
From intercourse of troth-contracted loves; [39
No horror should deface that precious figure
Seal'd with the lively stamp of equal souls.

<sup>41</sup> Q transposes On Vesta's and The holiest. Cor.
Olyphant.

<sup>43</sup> Dissyllabic.

PEN. Away! some Fury hath bewitch'd thy tongue.

The breath of ignorance, that flies from thence,

Ripens a knowledge in me of afflictions Above all suff'rance. — Thing of talk, begone! Begone, without reply!

ORG. Be just, Penthea, In thy commands; when thou send'st forth a doom

Of banishment, know first on whom it lights. Thus I take off the shroud in which my cares

Are folded up from view of common eyes. [50

[Throws off his scholar's dress.]

What is thy sentence next?

PEN. Rash man! thou layest A blemish on mine honor, with the hazard Of thy too desperate life; yet I profess, By all the laws of ceremonious wedlock, I have not given admittance to one thought Of female change since cruelty enforc'd Divorce betwixt my body and my heart. Why would you fall from goodness thus?

ORG. Oh, rather Examine me, how I could live to say I have been much, much wrong'd. 'T is for thy sake 60

I put on this imposture. Dear Penthea, If thy soft bosom be not turn'd to marble, Thou' t pity our calamities; my interest Confirms me thou art mine still.

PEN. Lend your hand; With both of mine I clasp it thus, thus kiss it, Thus kneel before ye.

ORG. You instruct my duty. [They remain for some moments kneeling, with clasped hands.]

PEN. We may stand up. — Have you aught else to urge

Of new demand? As for the old, forget it; 'T is buried in an everlasting silence, And shall be, shall be ever. What more would ye? 70

ORG. I would possess my wife; the equity Of very reason bids me.

PEN. Is that all?

ORG. Why, 't is the all of me, myself.

PEN. Remove Your steps some distance from me. — At this space

A few words I dare change; but first put on Your borrowed shape.

ORG. You are obey'd; 't is done. [He resumes his disguise.]

PEN. How, Orgilus, by promise I was thine The Heavens do witness; they can witness too A rape done on my truth; how I do love thee Yet, Orgilus, and yet, must best appear 80 In tendering thy freedom; for I find The constant preservation of thy merit, By thy not daring to attempt my fame With injury of any loose conceit, Which might give deeper wounds to discontents.

Continue this fair race: <sup>44</sup> then, though I cannot

Add to thy comfort, yet I shall more often Remember from what fortune I am fallen, And pity mine own ruin. — Live, live happy,

Happy in thy next choice, that thou mayst people 90

This barren age with virtues in thy issue! And oh, when thou art married, think on me With mercy, not contempt! I hope thy wife, Hearing my story, will not scorn my fall. — Now let us part.

ORG. Part! yet advise thee better; Penthea is the wife to Orgilus, And ever shall be.

PEN. Never shall nor will.

ORG. How!

PEN. Hear me; in a word I'll tell thee why.

The virgin dowry which my birth bestow'd Is ravish'd by another; my true love 100 Abhors to think that Orgilus deserv'd No better favors than a second bed.

ORG. I must not take this reason.

PEN. To confirm it Should I outlive my bondage, let me meet Another worse than this and less desir'd, If, of all the men alive, thou shouldst but touch

My lip or hand again!

ORG. Penthea, now I tell 'ee, you grow wanton in my sufferance; <sup>45</sup> Come, sweet, th' art mine.

PEN. Uncivil sir, forbear! Or I can turn affection into vengeance; 110 Your reputation, if you value any, Lies bleeding at my feet. Unworthy man, If ever henceforth thou appear in language, Message, or letter, to betray my frailty, I'll call thy former protestations lust, And curse my stars for forfeit of my judgment.

<sup>45</sup> Reckless in regard to my suffering.

Go thou, fit only for disguise, and [walk],<sup>46</sup>
To hide thy shame ; this once I spare thy life.
I laugh at mine own confidence ; my sorrows

By thee are made inferior to my fortunes. [120
If ever thou didst harbor worthy love, Dare not to answer. My good genius guide
me,
That I may never see thee more ! — Go from
me !

✓ORG. [I'll] <sup>47</sup> tear my veil of politic French
off,

And stand up like a man resolv'd to do :
Action, not words, shall show me. — O
Pentheia ! Exit ORGILUS.

PEN. 'A sigh'd my name, sure, as he parted
from me.

I fear I was too rough. Alas, poor gentleman,
'A look'd not like the ruins of his youth,
But like the ruins of those ruins. Honor, [130
How much we fight with weakness to preserve thee ! [Walks aside.]

Enter BASSANES and GRAUSIS.

BASS. Fie on thee ! damn thee, rotten mag-got, damn thee !
Sleep ? sleep at court ? and now ? Aches,<sup>48</sup>
convulsions,
Imposthumes,<sup>49</sup> rheums, gouts, palsies, clog thy bones
A dozen years more yet !

GRAU. Now y' are in humors.
BASS. She's by herself : there's hope of that ; she's sad too ;
She's in strong contemplation ; yes, and fix'd :
The signs are wholesome.

GRAU. Very wholesome, truly.
BASS. Hold your chops,<sup>50</sup> nightmare ! —
Lady, come ; your brother
Is carried to his closet ; you must thither. [140
PEN. Not well, my Lord ?
BASS. A sudden fit ; 't will off !
Some surfeit or disorder. How doest, dearest ?
PEN. Your news is none o' th' best.

Re-enter PROPHILUS.

PRO. The chief of men,
The excellentest Ithocles, desires
Your presence, madam.

BASS. We are hasting to him.

<sup>46</sup> Emend. Kittredge ; Q walks. I.e., walk ever in that disguise, to hide thy shameful self.

<sup>50</sup> Jaws.

PEN. In vain we labor in this course of life
To piece our journey out at length, or crave
Respite of breath ; our home is in the grave. }

BASS. Perfect philosophy ! <sup>51</sup> Then let us care 149

To live so, that our reckonings may fall even
When w' are to make account.

PRO. He cannot fear
Who builds on noble grounds : sickness or pain

Is the deserver's exercise ; <sup>52</sup> and such
Your virtuous brother to the world is known.
Speak comfort to him, lady ; be all gentle.
Stars fall but in the grossness of our sight ;
A good man dying, th' earth doth lose a light.

Exeunt omnes.

ACT III — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter TECNICUS, and ORGILUS in his own shape.

TEC. Be well advis'd ; <sup>2</sup> let not a resolution
Of giddy rashness choke the breath of reason.

ORG. It shall not, most sage master.

TEC. I am jealous ; <sup>3</sup>
For if the borrowed shape <sup>4</sup> so late put on Infer'd a consequence, we must conclude
Some violent design of sudden nature
Hath shook that shadow <sup>5</sup> off, to fly upon
A new-hatch'd execution. Orgilus,
Take heed thou hast not, under our integrity,
Shrouded unlawful plots ; our mortal eyes [10
Pierce not the secrets of your [heart] : <sup>6</sup> the
gods

Are only privy to them.

ORG. Learned Tecnicus,
Such doubts are causeless ; and, to clear the
truth

From misconceit,<sup>7</sup> the present state commands me.

The Prince of Argos comes himself in person
In quest of great Calantha for his bride,
Our kingdom's heir ; besides, mine only sister,
Euphranea, is dispos'd <sup>8</sup> to Prophilus ;
Lastly, the King is sending letters for me
To Athens, for my quick repair to court. [20
Please to accept these reasons.

Pentheia. <sup>52</sup> Discipline.

<sup>8</sup> Misconception.

Tec. Just ones, Orgilus,
Not to be contradicted ; yet beware
Of an unsure foundation ; no fair colors
Can fortify a building faintly jointed.
I have observ'd a growth in thy aspect <sup>9</sup>
Of dangerous extent, sudden, and — look
to't —

I might add, certain —

Org. My aspect ! <sup>9</sup> Could art Run through mine inmost thoughts, it should not sift

An inclination there more than what suited
With justice of mine honor.

Tec. I believe it. 30
But know then, Orgilus, what honor is.
Honor consists not in a bare opinion
By doing any act that feeds content,
Brave in appearance, 'cause we think it brave ;
Such honor comes by accident, not nature,
Proceeding from the vices of our passion,
Which makes our reason drunk ; but real
honor

Is the reward of virtue, and acquir'd
By justice, or by valor which for basis
Hath justice to uphold it. He then fails 40
In honor, who for lucre [or] <sup>10</sup> revenge Commits thefts, murders, treasons, and adulteries,

With such like, by intrenching on just laws,
Whose sov'reignty is best preserv'd by justice.
Thus, as you see how honor must be groundd
On knowledge, not opinion, — for opinion
Relies on probability and accident,
But knowledge on necessity and truth, —
I leave thee to the fit consideration
Of what becomes the grace of real honor, [50
Wishing success to all thy virtuous meanings.

Org. The gods increase thy wisdom, reverend oracle,

And in thy precepts make me ever thrifty ! <sup>11</sup>

Tec. I thank thy wish. — Exit ORGILUS.

Much mystery of fate
Lies hid in that man's fortunes ; curiosity
May lead his actions into rare attempts.
But let the gods be moderators still ;
No human power can prevent their will.

Enter ARMOSTES [with a casket].

From whence come 'ee ?

ARM. From King Amyclas — pardon
My interruption of your studies. — Here, [80
In this seal'd box, he sends a treasure dear

To him as his crown. 'A prays your Gravity
You would examine, ponder, sift, and bolt
The pith and circumstance of every tittle
The scroll within contains.

Tec. What is't, Armostes ?

ARM. It is the health of Sparta, the King's
life,

Sinews and safety of the commonwealth :
The sum of what the oracle deliver'd
When last he visited the prophetic temple
At Delphos. <sup>12</sup> What his reasons are, for which, 70

After so long a silence, he requires
Your counsel now, grave man, his Majesty
Will soon himself acquaint you with.

Tec. [taking the casket] Apollo
Inspire my intellect ! — The Prince of Argos
Is entertain'd ?

ARM. He is ; and has demanded
Our princess for his wife ; which I conceive
One special cause the King importunes you
For resolution of the oracle.

Tec. My duty to the King, good peace to Sparta,
And fair day to Armostes !

ARM. Like to Tecnicus ! Exeunt. [80

[SCENE II] <sup>13</sup>

Soft music.

A SONG

Can you paint a thought ? or number
Every fancy in a slumber ?
Can you count soft minutes roving
From a dial's point by moving ?
Can you grasp a sigh ? or, lastly,
Rob a virgin's honor chastely ?

No, oh, no ! yet you may Sooner do both that and this,
This and that, and never miss,

Than by any praise display
Beauty's beauty ; such a glory,
As beyond all fate, all story,
All arms, all arts,
All loves, all hearts,
Greater than those or they,
Do, shall, and must obey.

10

During which time enters PROPHILUS, BAS-SANES, PENTHEA, GRAUSIS, passing over the stage. BASSANES and GRAUSIS enter again softly, stealing to several stands, and listen.

BASS. All silent, calm, secure. — Grausis, no creaking ?
No noise ? Dost hear nothing ?

following l. 32.

GRAU. Not a mouse,
Or whisper of the wind.

BASS. The floor is matted ;
The bedposts sure are steel or marble. — Soldiers 20
Should not affect, methinks, strains so effeminate :

Sounds of such delicacy are but fawnings
Upon the sloth of luxury,<sup>14</sup> they heighten
Cinders of covert lust up to a flame.

GRAU. What do you mean, my Lord? — speak low ; that gabbling
Of yours will but undo us.

BASS. Chamber combats
Are felt, not h[e]ard.

PRO. [within] 'A wakes.

BASS. What's that?

ITH. [within] Who's there?
Sister? — All quit the room else.

BASS. 'T is consented !

Re-enter PROPHILUS.

PRO. Lord Bassanes, your brother would be private ;

We must forbear ; his sleep hath newly left
him. 30

Please 'ee withdraw.

BASS. By any means ;<sup>15</sup> 't is fit.

PRO. Pray, gentlewoman, walk too.

GRAU. Yes, I will, sir. Exeunt omnes.

ITHOCLES discovered in a chair, and PENTHEA.

ITH. Sit nearer, Sister, to me ; nearer yet.
We had one father, in one womb took life,
Were brought up twins together, yet have liv'd

At distance, like two strangers. I could wish
That the first pillow whereon I was cradl'd
Had prov'd to me a grave.

PEN. ✓ You had been happy :
Then had you never known that sin of life
Which blots all following glories with a vengeance, 40

For forfeiting the last will of the dead,
From whom you had your being.

ITH. ✓ Sad Penthea,
Thou canst not be too cruel ; my rash spleen Hath with a violent hand pluck'd from thy bosom

A lover-blest<sup>16</sup> heart, to grind it into dust ;
For which mine's now a-breaking.

PEN. Not yet, Heaven,
I do beseech thee ! First let some wild fires

Scorch, not consume it ! may the heat be cherish'd

With desires infinite, but hopes impossible !

ITH. Wrong'd soul, thy prayers are heard.

PEN. Here, lo, I breathe, [50

✓ A miserable creature, led to ruin

By an unnatural brother !

ITH. I consume

✓ In languishing affections<sup>17</sup> for that trespass ;
Yet cannot die.

PEN. The handmaid to the wages
Of country toil drinks the untroubled streams<sup>18</sup>
With leaping kids and with the bleating lambs,
And so allays her thirst secure, whiles I Quench my hot sighs with fleetings<sup>19</sup> of my tears.

ITH. The laborer doth eat his coarsest bread,

Earn'd with his sweat, and lies him down to sleep ; 60

Which<sup>20</sup> every bit I touch turns in digestion<sup>21</sup>
To gall as bitter as Penthea's curse.

✓ Put me to any penance for my tyranny,
And I will call thee merciful.

PEN. Pray kill me ;
Rid me from living with a jealous husband ; ✓
Then we will join in friendship, be again
Brother and sister. — Kill me, pray ; nay, will 'ee?

ITH. How does thy lord esteem thee?

PEN. Such an one
As only you have made me : a faith-breaker,
A spotted whore — forgive me : I am one [70 :
In [act,]<sup>22</sup> not in desires, the gods must witness.

ITH. Thou dost belie thy friend.<sup>23</sup>

PEN. I do not, Ithocles ;
For she that's wife to Orgilus, and lives
In known adultery with Bassanes,
Is at the best a whore. Wilt kill me now?
The ashes of our parents will assume
Some dreadful figure, and appear to charge Thy bloody guilt, that hast betray'd their
name

To infamy in this reproachful match.

ITH. After my victories abroad, at home [80
I meet despair ; ingratitude of nature Hath made my actions monstrous. Thou shalt stand

A deity, my sister, and be worshipp'd

<sup>14</sup> Lust.

<sup>16</sup> Gifford and Dyce, perhaps rightly, love-blest.

For thy resolved martyrdom ; wrong'd maids
And married wives shall to thy hallowed shrine

Offer their orisons, and sacrifice
Pure turtles,<sup>24</sup> crown'd with myrtle ; if thy pity

Unto a yielding brother's pressure lend
One finger but to ease it.

PEN. Oh, no more !

ITH. Death waits to waft me to the Stygian
banks 90

And free me from this chaos of my bondage ;
And till thou wilt forgive, I must endure.

PEN. Who is the saint you serve ?

ITH. Friendship, or [nearness]<sup>25</sup>
Of birth to any but my sister, durst not
Have mov'd that question, as<sup>26</sup> a secret,
Sister,

I dare not murmur to myself.

PEN. Let me,
By your new protestations I conjure 'ee,
Partake her name.

ITH. Her name ? — 't is — 't is — I dare
not.

PEN. All your respects are forg'd.<sup>27</sup>

ITH. They are not. — Peace !
Calantha is — the Princess — the King's
daughter — 100

Sole heir of Sparta. — Me, most miserable,
Do I now love thee ? For my injuries
Revenge thyself with bravery, and gossip
My treasons to the King's ears, do. Calantha Knows it not yet, nor Prophilus, my nearest.

PEN. Suppose you were contracted to her,
would it not

Split even your very soul to see her father
Snatch her out of your arms against her will,
And force her on the Prince of Argos ?

ITH. Trouble not
The fountains of mine eyes with thine own story ; 110

I sweat in blood for 't.

PEN. We are reconcil'd.
Alas, sir, being children, but two branches
Of one stock, 't is not fit we should divide.
Have comfort ; you may find it.

ITH. Yes, in thee ;
Only in thee, Penthea mine.

PEN. If sorrows
Have not too much dull'd my infected brain,

I'll cheer invention for an active strain.<sup>28</sup>

ITH. Mad man ! why have I wrong'd a maid so excellent ?

Enter BASSANES with a poniard ; PROPHILUS, GRONEAS, HEMOPHIL, and GRAUSIS.

BASS. I can forbear no longer ; more, I will not.

Keep off your hands, or fall upon my point. —
Patience is tir'd ; for, like a slow-pac'd
ass, 121

Ye ride my easy nature, and proclaim
My sloth to vengeance a reproach and property.<sup>29</sup>

ITH. The meaning of this rudeness ?

PRO. He's distracted.

PEN. Oh, my griev'd Lord ! —

GRAU. Sweet lady, come not near
him ;

He holds his perilous weapon in his hand
To prick 'a cares not whom nor where — see,
see, see !

BASS. My birth is noble ; though the popular blast

Of vanity, as giddy as thy youth,
Hath rear'd thy name up to bestride a cloud,
Or progress in the chariot of the sun, 131
I am no clod of trade, to lackey pride,
Nor, like your slave of expectation,<sup>30</sup> wait
The bawdy hinges of your doors, or whistle
For mystical conveyance to your bed-sports.

GRO. Fine humors ! they become him.

HEM. How 'a stares, Struts, puffs, and sweats ! Most admirable<sup>31</sup>
lunacy !

ITH. But that I may conceive the spirit of wine

Has took possession of your soberer custom,
I'd say you were unmannerly.

PEN. Dear Brother ! — [140

BASS. Unmannerly ! — mew, kitling !<sup>32</sup> — smooth formality

Is usher to the rankness of the blood,
But impudence bears up the train. Indeed,
sir,

Your fiery mettle, or your springal<sup>33</sup> blaze
Of huge renown, is no sufficient royalty
To print upon my forehead the scorn, " Cuck-old."

ITH. His jealousy has robb'd him of his wits ;

<sup>24</sup> I.e., I'll try to think of something that can be done.

<sup>27</sup> All the considerations you have mentioned are feigned ; i.e., your new attitude toward me is not genuine.

'A talks 'a knows not what.

BASS. Yes, and 'a knows
To whom 'a talks; to one that franks<sup>34</sup> his lust

In swine-security of bestial incest. 150

ITH. Ha, devil!

BASS. I will halloo 't; though I blush
more

To name the filthiness than thou to act it.

ITH. Monster!

PRO. Sir, by our friendship —

PEN. By our bloods —
Will you quite both undo us, Brother?

GRAU. Out on him!
These are his megrims,<sup>35</sup> firks,<sup>36</sup> and melancholies.

HEM. Well said, old touchhole.

GRO. Kick him out at doors.

PEN. With favor, let me speak. — My Lord, what slackness

In my obedience hath deserv'd this rage?

Except humility and silent duty 159

Have drawn on your unquiet, my simplicity
Ne'er studied your vexation.

BASS. Light of beauty,
Deal not ungently with a desperate wound!
No breach of reason dares make war with
her

Whose looks are sovereignty, whose breath is balm.

Oh, that I could preserve thee in fruition

As in devotion!

PEN. Sir, may every evil
Lock'd in Pandora's box show'r, in your presence,

On my unhappy head, if, since you made me
A partner in your bed, I have been faulty

In one unseemly thought against your
honor! 170

ITH. Purge not his griefs, Penthea.

BASS. Yes, say on,
Excellent creature! — [to ITHOCLES] Good,<sup>37</sup>
be not a hindrance

To peace and praise of virtue. — Oh, my senses

Are charm'd with sounds celestial! — On,
dear, on:

I never gave you one ill word; say, did I?

Indeed I did not.

PEN. Nor, by Juno's forehead,
Was I e'er guilty of a wanton error.

BASS. A goddess! let me kneel.

GRAU. Alas, kind animal!

ITH. No; but for penance.

BASS. Noble sir, what is it?
With gladness I embrace it; yet, pray let
not 180

My rashness teach you to be too unmerci-
ful.

ITH. When you shall show good proof that manly wisdom,

Not oversway'd by passion or opinion,

Knows how to lead<sup>38</sup> judgment, then this
lady,

Your wife, my sister, shall return in safety
Home, to be guided by you; but, till
first

I can out of clear evidence approve<sup>39</sup> it,
She shall be my care.

BASS. Rip my bosom up,
I'll stand the execution with a constancy;
This torture is unsufferable.

ITH. Well, sir, 190
I dare not trust her to your fury.

BASS. But
Penthea says not so.

PEN. She needs no tongue
To plead excuse who never purpos'd wrong.

HEM. Virgin of reverence and antiquity,
Stay you behind.

GRO. [to GRAUSIS] The court wants not your diligence.

Exeunt [all but] BASSANES and GRAUSIS.

GRAU. What will you do, my Lord? My Lady's gone;
I am deni'd to follow.

BASS. I may see her,
Or speak to her once more?

GRAU. And feel her too, man;
Be of good cheer: she's your own flesh and bone.

BASS. Diseases desperate must find cures alike. 200

She swore she has been true.

GRAU. True, on my modesty.

BASS. Let him want truth who credits not her vows!

Much wrong I did her, but her brother infinite;
Rumor will voice me the contempt of manhood,

Should I run on thus. Some way I must try
To outdo art, and cry a' <sup>40</sup> jealousy.

Exeunt omne[s].

<sup>38</sup> Weber conj. the addition of your, which Gifford silently adopts.

<sup>40</sup> Cry on, exclaim against. Gifford emends jealously decry.

<sup>37</sup> I.e., good sir.

[SCENE III] <sup>41</sup>

Flourish. Enter AMYCLAS, NEARCHUS leading CALANTHA, ARMOSTES, CROTON, EU-PHRANEA, CRISTALLA, PHILEMA, and AMELUS.

AMY. Cousin of Argos, what the Heavens have pleas'd
In their unchanging counsels to conclude
For both our kingdoms' weal, we must submit
to ;

Nor can we be unthankful to their bounties,
Who, when we were even creeping to our [grave],<sup>42</sup>

Sent us a daughter, in whose birth our hope Continues of succession. As you are
In title next, being grandchild to our aunt,
So we in heart desire you may sit nearest Calantha's love ; since we have ever vow'd [10
Not to enforce affection by our will,
But by her own choice to confirm it gladly.

NEAR. You speak the nature of a right just
father.

I come not hither roughly to demand
My cousin's thralldom, but to free mine own.
Report of great Calantha's beauty, virtue,
Sweetness, and singular perfections, courted
All ears to credit what I find was publish'd
By constant truth ; from which, if any service
Of my desert can purchase fair construction, 20

This lady must command it.

CAL. Princely sir,
So well you know how to profess observance,<sup>43</sup>
That you instruct your hearers to become Practitioners in duty ; of which number
I'll study to be chief.

NEAR. Chief, glorious virgin,
In my devotions, as in all men's wonder.

AMY. Excellent Cousin, we deny no liberty ;
Use thine own opportunities. — Armostes,
We must consult with the philosophers ;
The business is of weight.

ARM. Sir, at your pleasure. [30

AMY. You told me, Crotolon, your son's
return'd
From Athens. Wherefore comes 'a not to court

As we commanded ?

CROT. He shall soon attend
Your royal will, great sir.

AMY. The marriage

<sup>43</sup> Courtship.

Between young Prophilus and Euphranea
Tastes of too much delay.

CROT. My Lord, —

AMY. Some pleasures

At celebration of it would give life
To th' entertainment of the Prince our kins-
man ;

Our court wears gravity more than we relish.

ARM. Yet the Heavens smile on all your high attempts, 40

Without a cloud.

CROT. So may the gods protect us.

CAL. A prince a subject ?

NEAR. Yes, to beauty's sceptre ;
As all hearts kneel, so mine.

CAL. You are too courtly.

[Enter] to them ITHOCLES, ORGILUS, [and]
PROPHILUS.

ITH. Your safe return to Sparta is most welcome.

I joy to meet you here, and, as occasion
Shall grant us privacy, will yield you reasons
Why I should covet to deserve the title
Of your respected friend ; for, without compliment,

Believe it, Orgilus, 't is my ambition.

ORG. Your Lordship may command me, your poor servant. 50

ITH. [aside] So amorously close ! — so soon ! — my heart !

PRO. What sudden change is next ?

ITH. Life to the King !

To whom I here present this noble gentle-
man,

New come from Athens. Royal sir, vouchsafe

Your gracious hand in favor of his merit.

CROT. [aside] My son preferr'd<sup>44</sup> by Ithocles !

AMY. Our bounties
Shall open to thee, Orgilus ; for instance, — Hark in thine ear, — if, out of those inventions

Which flow in Athens, thou hast there en-gross'd<sup>45</sup>

Some rarity of wit, to grace the nuptials 60

Of thy fair sister, and renown our court

In th' eyes of this young prince, we shall be debtor

To thy conceit : think on't.

ORG. Your Highness honors me.

NEAR. My tongue and heart are twins.

<sup>45</sup> Acquired.

CAL. A noble birth,
Becoming such a father. — Worthy Orgilus,
You are a guest most wish'd for.

ORG. May my duty
Still rise in your opinion, sacred Princess!

ITH. Euphranea's brother, sir; a gentleman
Well worthy of your knowledge.

NEAR. We embrace him,
Proud of so dear acquaintance.

AMY. All prepare [70
For revels and disport; the joys of Hymen,
Like Phoebus in his lustre, puts to flight
All mists of dullness. Crown the hours with gladness;

No sounds but music, no discourse but mirth!

CAL. Thine arm, I prithee, Ithocles. —
Nay, good

My Lord, keep on your way; I am provided.

NEAR. I dare not disobey.

ITH. Most heavenly lady! Exeunt.

[SCENE IV] <sup>46</sup>

Enter CROTOLON [and] ORGILUS.

CROT. The King has spoke his mind.

ORG. His will he hath;
But were it lawful to hold plea against
The power of greatness, not the reason, haply
Such undershrubs as subjects sometimes might

Borrow of nature justice, to inform
That license sovereignty holds without check
Over a meek obedience.

CROT. How resolve you
Touching your sister's marriage? Prophilus
Is a deserving and a hopeful youth.

ORG. I envy not his merit, but applaud it; <sup>10</sup>
Could wi[s]h him thrift <sup>47</sup> in all his best desires,
And with a willingness inleague our blood
With his, for purchase of full growth in friendship.

He never touch'd on any wrong that malic'd
The honor of our house nor stirr'd our peace.
Yet, with your favor, let me not forget Under whose wing he gathers warmth and
comfort,

Whose creature he is bound, made, and must live so.

CROT. Son, son, I find in thee a harsh condition; <sup>48</sup>

No courtesy can win it; 't is too rancorous. [20

<sup>48</sup> State of mind.

<sup>47</sup> Prosperity.

ORG. Good sir, be not severe in your construction;

I am no stranger to such easy calms
As sit in tender bosoms. Lordly Ithocles Hath grac'd my entertainment <sup>49</sup> in abundance,

Too humbly hath descended from that height
Of arrogance and spleen which wrought the rape

On griev'd Penthea's purity; his scorn
Of my untoward fortunes is reclaim'd
Unto a cou[r]tship, almost to a fawning:

I'll kiss his foot, since you will have it so. [30

CROT. Since I will have it so! Friend, I will have it so,

Without our ruin by your politic plots,
Or wolf of hatred snarling in your breast. ✓
You have a spirit, sir, have ye? A familiar <sup>50</sup>
That posts i' th' air for your intelligence?
Some such hobgoblin hurried you from Athens,
For yet you come unsent for.

ORG. If unwelcome,
I might have found a grave there.

CROT. Sure, your business
Was soon dispatch'd, or your mind alter'd quickly.

ORG. 'T was care, sir, of my health cut short my journey; <sup>40</sup>
For there a general infection
Threatens a desolation.

CROT. And I fear
Thou hast brought back a worse infection with
thee —
Infection of thy mind, which, as thou say'st,
Threatens the desolation of our family.

ORG. Forbid it, our dear genius! <sup>51</sup> I will rather

Be made a sacrifice on Thrasus' monument
Or kneel to Ithocles, his son, in dust, Than woo a father's curse. My sister's marriage

With Prophilus is from my heart confirm'd;
May I live hated, may I die despis'd, <sup>51</sup>
If I omit to further it in all
That can concern me! ✓

CROT. I have been too rough.
My duty to my King made me so earnest;
Excuse it, Orgilus.

ORG. Dear sir! —

Enter to them PROPHILUS, EUPHRANEA, ITHO-CLES, GRONEAS, [and] HEMOPHIL.

CROT. Here comes Euphranea with Prophilus and Ithocles.

<sup>51</sup> Tutelar deity.

ORG. Most honored ! — ever famous !

ITH. Your true friend ;

On earth not any truer. — With smooth eyes

Look on this worthy couple ; your consent
Can only make them one.

ORG. They have it. — Sister, [60
Thou pawn'dst to me an oath, of which engagement

I never will release thee, if thou aim'st
At any other choice than this.

EUPH. Dear Brother,
At him, or none.

CROT. To which my blessing's added.

ORG. Which, till a greater ceremony perfect, —

Euphranea, lend thy hand, — here, take her,
Prophilus. —

Live long a happy man and wife ; and further,
That these in presence may conclude an omen,
Thus for a bridal song I close my wishes :

[Sings]

Comforts lasting, loves increasing, 70
Like soft hours never ceasing ;
Plenty's pleasure, peace complying,
Without jars, or tongues' envying ;<sup>88</sup>
Hearts by holy union wedded,
More than theirs by custom bedded ;
Fruitful issues ; life so graced,
Not by age to be defaced,
Budding, as the year ensu'th,
Every spring another youth :
All what thought can add beside 80
Crown this bridegroom and this bride.

PRO. You have seal'd joy close to my soul.

— Euphranea,

Now I may call thee mine.

ITH. I but exchange
One good friend for another.

ORG. If these gallants
Will please to grace a poor invention
By joining with me in some slight device,
I'll venture on a strain my younger days
Have studied for delight.

HEM. With thankful willingness
I offer my attendance.

GRO. No endeavor
Of mine shall fail to show itself.

ITH. We will [90
All join to wait on thy directions, Orgilus.

ORG. Oh, my good Lord, your favors flow towards

A too unworthy worm ; but, as you please ;
I am what you will shape me.

ITH. A fast friend.

<sup>88</sup> Malice.

CROT. I thank thee, son, for this acknowledgment ;

It is a sight of gladness.

ORG. But my duty.

Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE V] <sup>89</sup>

Enter CALANTHA, PENTHEA, CHRISTALLA, [and] PHILEMA.

CAL. Whoe'er would speak with us, deny his entrance ;
Be careful of our charge.

CHRIS. We shall, madam.

CAL. Except the King himself, give none admittance ;

Not any.

PHIL. Madam, it shall be our care.

Exeunt [CHRISTALLA and PHI-LEMA].

CAL. Being alone, Penthea, you have granted

The opportunity you sought, and might
At all times have commanded.

PEN. 'T is a benefit
Which I shall owe your goodness even in death
for.

My glass of life, sweet Princess, hath few minutes

Remaining to run down ; the sands are spent ; 10

[For by an inward messenger I feel
The summons of departure short and certain.

CAL. You feel too much your melancholy.

PEN. Glories
Of human greatness are but pleasing dreams
And shadows soon decaying : on the stage

Of my mortality my youth hath acted
Some scenes of vanity, drawn out at length

By varied pleasures, sweet'ned in the mixture,
But tragical in issue. Beauty, pomp,

With every sensuality our giddiness 20
Doth frame an idol, are unconstant friends,

When any troubled passion makes assault
On the unguarded castle of the mind.

CAL. Contemn not your condition for the proof

Of bare opinion only. To what end
Reach all these moral texts ?

PEN. To place before 'ee
A perfect mirror, wherein you may see

How weary I am of a ling'ring life,
Who count the best a misery.

<sup>89</sup> Calantha's apartment in the palace.

CAL. Indeed
You have no little cause ; yet none so great [30
As to distrust a remedy.

PEN. That remedy
Must be a winding sheet, a fold of lead,
And some untrod-on corner in the earth. —
Not to detain your expectation, Princess,
I have an humble suit.

CAL. Speak ; I enjoy <sup>64</sup> it.
PEN. Vouchsafe, then, to be my executrix,
And take that trouble on 'ee to dispose
Such legacies as I bequeath, impartially.
I have not much to give : the pains are easy ;
Heaven will reward your piety, and thank
it 40
When I am dead ; for sure I must not live —
I hope I cannot.

CAL. Now, beshrew thy sadness,
Thou turn'st me too much woman. [Weeps.]

PEN. [aside] Her fair eyes
Melt into passion.<sup>65</sup> — Then I have assurance Encouraging my boldness. In this paper
My will was character'd ; which you, with pardon,
Shall now know from mine own mouth.

CAL. Talk on, prithee ;
It is a pretty earnest.

PEN. I have left me
But three poor jewels to bequeath. The first
is
My youth ; for though I am much old in griefs, 50
In years I am a child.

CAL. To whom that [jewel] <sup>66</sup> ?

PEN. To virgin wives, such as abuse not
wedlock

By freedom of desires, but covet chiefly
The pledges of chaste beds for ties of love,
Rather than ranging of their blood ; and next
To married maids, such as prefer the number
Of honorable issue in their virtues
Before the flattery of delights by marriage :
May those be ever young !

CAL. A second jewel
You mean to part with ?

PEN. 'T is my fame, I trust [60
By scandal yet untouch'd ; this I bequeath
To Memory, and Time's old daughter, Truth.
If ever my unhappy name find mention
When I am fall'n to dust, may it deserve
Beseeming charity without dishonor !

CAL. How handsomely thou play'st with harmless sport

Of mere imagination ! Speak the last.
I strangely like thy will.

PEN. This jewel, madam,
Is dearly precious to me ; you must use
The best of your discretion to employ 70
This gift as I intend it.

CAL. Do not doubt me.

PEN. 'T is long ago since first I lost my
heart ;

Long I have liv'd without it, else for certain
I should have given that too ; but instead
Of it, to great Calantha, Sparta's heir,
By service bound and by affection vow'd,
I do bequeath, in holiest rites of love,
Mine only brother, Ithocles.

CAL. What said'st thou ?

PEN. Impute not, heaven-blest lady, to ambition

A faith as humbly perfect as the prayers [80
Of a devoted suppliant can endow it.
Look on him, Princess, with an eye of pity ;
How like the ghost of what he late appear'd
'A moves before you.

CAL. [aside] Shall I answer here,
Or lend my ear too grossly ?

PEN. First his heart
Shall fall in cinders, scorch'd by your disdain,
Ere he will dare, poor man, to ope an eye
On these divine looks, but with low-bent
thoughts

Accusing such presumption ; as for words,
'A dares not utter any but of service. 90
Yet this lost creature loves 'ee. — Be a princess

In sweetness as in blood ; give him his doom,
Or raise him up to comfort.

CAL. What new change
Appears in my behavior, that thou dar'st
Tempt my displeasure ?

PEN. I must leave the world
To revel [in] <sup>67</sup> Elysium, and 't is just
To wish my brother some advantage here ;
Yet, by my best hopes, Ithocles is ignorant
Of this pursuit. But if you please to kill him, Lend him one angry look or one harsh word, 100

And you shall soon conclude how strong a power

Your absolute authority holds over
His life and end.

CAL. You have forgot, Penthea,
How still I have a father.

PEN. But remember
I am a sister, though to me this brother

<sup>66</sup> Add. Gifford.

Hath been, you know, unkind, oh, most unkind !

CAL. Christalla, Philema, where are 'ee? —
Lady,
Your check lies in my silence.

Re-enter CHRISTALLA and PHILEMA.

BOTH. Madam, here.

CAL. I think 'ee sleep, 'ee drones; wait on Penthea
Unto her lodging. — [aside] Ithocles? Wrong'd
lady! 110

PEN. My reckonings are made even; death or fate
Can now nor strike too soon, nor force too late.
Exeunt.

ACT IV — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

Enter ITHOCLES and ARMOSTES.

ITH. Forbear your inquisition; curiosity
Is of too subtle and too searching nature,
In fears of love too quick, too slow of credit.
I am not what you doubt me.<sup>2</sup>

ARM. Nephew, be, then,
As I would wish; — all is not right. — Good
Heaven

Confirm your resolutions for dependence
On worthy ends, which may advance your quiet!

ITH. I did the noble Orgilus much injury,
But griev'd Penthea more: I now repent it —
Now, Uncle, now; this "now" is now too
late. 10

So provident is folly in sad issue,
That after-wit, like bankrupts' debts, stand[s]
tallied,

Without all possibilities of payment.

Sure, he 's an honest, very honest gentle-
man;

A man of single<sup>3</sup> meaning.

ARM. I believe it.
Yet, Nephew, 't is the tongue informs our
ears;

Our eyes can never pierce into the thoughts,
For they are lodg'd too inward: — but I question

No truth in Orgilus. — The Princess, sir.

ITH. The Princess? ha!

ARM. With her the Prince of Argos. [20

Enter NEARCHUS leading CALANTHA, AME-LUS, CHRISTALLA, [and] PHILEMA.

NEAR. Great fair one, grace my hopes with any instance
Of livery<sup>4</sup> from the allowance of your favor;
This little spark —

[Attempts to take a ring from her finger.]

CAL. A toy!

NEAR. Love feasts on toys,
For Cupid is a child; vouchsafe this bounty —
It cannot be [de]jni'd.

CAL. You shall not value,
Sweet Cousin, at a price, what I count
cheap;
So cheap, that let him take it who dares stoop
for 't,

And give it at next meeting to a mistress;
She'll thank him for 't, perhaps.

Casts it to ITHOCLES.

AME. The ring, sir, is
The Princess's; I could have took it up. 30

ITH. Learn manners, prithee. — To the blessed owner,
Upon my knees —

[Kneels and offers it to CALANTHA.]

NEAR. Y' are saucy.

CAL. This is pretty!
I am, belike, "a mistress" — wondrous pretty!

Let the man keep his fortune, since he found
it;

He's worthy on 't. — On, Cousin!

ITH. [to AMELUS] Follow, spaniel;
I'll force 'ee to a fawning else.

AME. You dare not.

Exeunt [all but] ITHOCLES and ARMOSTES.

ARM. My Lord, you were too forward.

ITH. Look 'ee, Uncle,
Some such there are whose liberal contents
Swarm without care in every sort of plenty;
Who after full repasts can lay them down [40
To sleep; and they sleep, Uncle: in which silence

Their very dreams present 'em choice of pleasures,

Pleasures — observe me, Uncle — of rare
object;

Here heaps of gold, there increments of honors,
Now change of garments, then the votes of
people;

Anon varieties of beauties, courting,
In flatteries of the night, exchange of dal-liance —

<sup>4</sup> I.e., by giving me something I can wear as a sign that I am in your service.

Yet these are still but dreams. Give me felicity
Of which my senses waking are partakers,
A real, visible, material happiness ; 50
And then, too, when I stagger in expectance
Of the least comfort that can cherish life. —
I saw it, sir, I saw it ; for it came
From her own hand.

ARM. The Princess threw it t'ee.

ITH. True ; and she said — well I remember what —

Her cousin prince would beg it.

ARM. Yes, and parted

In anger at your taking on't.

ITH. Penthea,
Oh, thou hast pleaded with a powerful language !
I want a fee to gratify <sup>5</sup> thy merit ;

But I will do —

ARM. What is't you say ?

ITH. In anger ! [60

In anger let him part ; for could his breath,
Like whirlwinds, toss such servile slaves as lick
The dust his footsteps print into a vapor,
It durst not stir a hair of mine : it should not ;
I'd rend it up by th' roots first. ✓ To be anything

Calantha smiles on, is to be a blessing
More sacred than a petty prince of Argos
Can wish to equal, or in worth or title.

ARM. Contain yourself, my Lord : Ixion, aiming

To embrace Juno, bosom'd but a cloud, 70
And begat centaurs ; 't is an useful moral.
Ambition hatch'd in clouds of mere opinion
Proves but in birth a prodigy.<sup>6</sup>

ITH. I thank 'ee ;
Yet, with your licence,<sup>7</sup> I should seem uncharitable

To gentler fate, if, relishing the dainties
Of a soul's settled peace, I were so feeble
Not to digest it.

ARM. He deserves small trust
Who is not privy-counsellor to himself.

Re-enter NEARCHUS, ORGILUS, and AMELUS.

NEAR. Brave me !

ORG. ✓ Your Excellence mistakes his temper ;

For Ithocles in fashion of his mind 80
Is beautiful, soft, gentle, the clear mirror
Of absolute perfection.

<sup>6</sup> Monstrosity.

<sup>7</sup> If you will allow me to say so.

AME. Was't your modesty
Term'd any of the Prince his servants "spaniel" ?

Your nurse, sure, taught you other language.

ITH. Language !

NEAR. A gallant man at arms is here, a doctor

In feats of chivalry, blunt and rough-spoken,
Vouchsafing not the fustian of civility,
Which [less] <sup>8</sup> rash spirits style good manners !

ITH. Manners !

ORG. No more, illustrious sir ; 't is matchless Ithocles.

NEAR. You might have understood who I am.

ITH. Yes. [90
I did ; else — but the presence <sup>9</sup> calm'd th' affront —

Y' are cousin to the Princess.

NEAR. To the King, too ;

A certain instrument that lent supportance
To your colossic greatness — to that King, too,
You might have added.

ITH. There is more divinity
In beauty than in majesty.

ARM. O fie, fie !

NEAR. This odd youth's pride turns heretic in loyalty.

Sirrah ! low mushrooms never rival cedars.
Exeunt NEARCHUS and AMELUS.

ITH. Come back ! — What pitiful dull thing am I

So to be tamely scolded at ! come back ! — [100
Let him come back, and echo once again
That scornful sound of "mushroom" !
painted colts —

Like heralds' coats gilt o'er with crowns and sceptres — <sup>10</sup>

May bait a muzzled lion.

ARM. Cousin, Cousin,
Thy tongue is not thy friend.

ORG. In point of honor { Discretion knows no bounds. Amelus told me
'T was all about a little ring.

ITH. A ring
The Princess threw away, and I took up.
Admit she threw't to me, what arm of brass Can snatch it hence ? No ; could 'a grind the hoop 110

To powder, 'a might sooner reach my heart

<sup>10</sup> "Our old writers used colt . . . for a compound of rudeness and folly." (Gifford.) Lions were supposed to fear royalty (and, here, its symbols), as that true lion, Falstaff, makes plain in Shakespeare's Henry IV, II, iv, 299 ff.

Than steal and wear one dust on 't. — Orgilus,
I am extremely wrong'd.

ORG. A lady's favor
Is not to be so slighted.

ITH. Slighted!

ARM. Quiet
These vain unruly passions, which will render
ye
Into a madness.

ORG. Grievs will have their vent.

Enter TECNICUS [with a scroll].

ARM. Welcome; thou com'st in season,
reverend man,
To pour the balsam of a [suppling]<sup>11</sup> patience
Into the festering wound of ill-spent fury.

ORG. [aside] What makes he here?

TEC. The hurts are yet but mortal,<sup>12</sup> [120]
Which shortly will prove deadly. To the
King,

Armotes, see in safety thou deliver
This seal'd-up counsel; bid him with a constancy

Peruse the secrets of the gods. — O Sparta,
O Lacedaemon! double-nam'd, but one In fate: when kingdoms reel, — mark well my saw, —

Their heads must needs be giddy. Tell the
King

That henceforth he no more must inquire after My aged head; Apollo wills it so.
I am for Delphos.

ARM. Not without some conference [130]
With our great master?

TEC. Nevermore to see him;
A greater prince commands me. — Ithocles,
*When youth is ripe, and age from time doth
part,*

The lifeless trunk shall wed the broken heart.

ITH. What's this, if understood?

TEC. List, Orgilus;
Remember what I told thee long before;
These tears shall be my witness.

ARM. 'Las, good man!

TEC. Let craft with courtesy awhile confer;

✓ Revenge proves its own executioner.

ORG. Dark sentences are for Apollo's priests; 140

I am not Oedipus.<sup>13</sup>

TEC. My hour is come;

Cheer up the King; farewell to all. — O
Sparta,

O Lacedaemon! Exit TECNICUS.

ARM. If prophetic fire
Have warm'd this old man's bosom, we might construe

His words to fatal sense.

ITH. Leave to the powers
Above us the effects of their decrees;

My burthen lies within me: servile fears
Prevent no great effects. — Divine Calantha!

ARM. The gods be still propitious!

Exeunt [ITHOCLES and ARMOTES].

ORG. Something oddly
The book-man prated, yet 'a talk'd it weep-
ing: 150

Let craft with courtesy a while confer;

Revenge proves its own executioner.

Con it again; for what? It shall not puzzle
me;

'T is dotage of a withered brain. — Penthea
Forbade me not her presence; I may see her,
And gaze my fill. Why see her, then, I may,
When, if I faint to speak, I must be silent.

Exit ORGILUS.

[SCENE II]<sup>14</sup>

Enter BASSANES, GRAUSIS, and PHULAS.

BASS. Pray, use your recreations, all the
service

I will expect is quietness amongst 'ee;
Take liberty at home, abroad, at all times,
And in your charities appease the gods,
Whom I, with my distractions, have offended.

GRAU. Fair blessings on thy heart!

PHU. [aside] Here's a rare change!
My Lord, to cure the itch, is surely gelded;
The cuckold in conceit<sup>15</sup> hath cast<sup>16</sup> his horns.

BASS. Betake 'ee to your several occasions;
And wherein I have heretofore been faulty, [10]
Let your constructions mildly pass it over.

Henceforth I'll study reformation, — more
I have not for employment.

GRAU. Oh, sweet man!
Thou art the very Honeycomb of Honesty.<sup>17</sup>

PHU. The Garland of Good-will. — Old lady, hold up

Thy reverend snout, and trot behind me
softly,

As it becomes a moil <sup>18</sup> of ancient carriage.

Exeunt [GRAUSIS and PHULAS].

BASS. Beasts, only capable of sense, enjoy
The benefit of food and ease with thankful-
ness ;

Such silly creatures, with a grudging, kick
not 20

Against the portion nature hath bestow'd :

But men, endow'd with reason and the use

Of reason, to distinguish from the chaff

Of abject scarcity the quintessence,

Soul, and elixir of the earth's abundance,

The treasures of the sea, the air, nay, heaven,

Repining at these glories of creation,

Are verier beasts than beasts ; and of those beasts

The worst am I : I, who was made a monarch

Of what a heart could wish for, a chaste
wife, 30

Endeavor'd what in me lay to pull down

That temple built for adoration only,

And level't in the dust of causeless scandal.

But, to redeem a sacrilege so impious,

Humility shall pour before the deities

I have incens'd a [largess] <sup>19</sup> of more patience

Than their displeased altars can require.

No tempests of commotion shall disquiet

The calms of my composure.

Enter ORGILUS.

ORG.

I have found thee,

Thou patron of more horrors than the bulk [40

Of manhood, hoop'd about with ribs of iron,

Can cram within thy breast. Penthea, Bassan'es,

Curs'd by thy jealousies, — more, by thy dot-
age, —

Is left a prey to words.

BASS.

Exercise

Your trials for addition to my penance ;

I am resolv'd.

ORG.

Play not with misery

Past cure : some angry minister of fate

Hath depos'd the empress of her soul, her
reason,

From its most proper throne ; but, what's the miracle

More new, I, I have seen it, and yet live ! [50

BASS. You may delude my senses, not my judgment ;

'T is anchor'd into a firm resolution ;

Dalliance of mirth or wit can ne'er unfix it :

Practice <sup>20</sup> yet further.

ORG.

May thy death of love to her

Damn all thy comforts to a lasting fast

From every joy of life ! Thou barren rock,

By thee we have bee[n] split in ken <sup>21</sup> of harbor.

Enter ITHOCLES, PENTHEA her hair about her ears, [ARMOSTES,] PHILEMA, [and] CHRIS-TALLA.

ITH. Sister, look up ; your Ithocles, your
brother,

Speaks t' ee ; why do you weep ? Dear, turn
not from me. —

Here is a killing sight ; lo, Bassanes, 60

A lamentable object !

ORG.

Man, dost see't ?

Sports are more gamesome ; am I yet in merri-
ment ?

Why dost not laugh ?

BASS.

Divine and best of ladies,

Please to forget my outrage ! Mercy ever

Cannot but lodge under a roof[f] so excellent.

I have cast off that cruelty of frenzy

Which once appear'd, [impostor],<sup>22</sup> and then juggled

To cheat my sleeps of rest.

ORG.

Was I in earnest ?

PEN. Sure, if we were all Sirens, we should sing pitifully.

And 't were a comely music, when in parts [70

One sung another's knell. The turtle <sup>23</sup> sighs

When he hath lost his mate ; and yet some say

'A must be dead first. 'T is a fine deceit

To pass away in a dream ; indeed, I've slept

With mine eyes open a great while. No falsehood

Equals a broken faith ; there's not a hair

Sticks on my head but, like a leaden plummet,

It sinks me to the grave. I must creep thither ;

The journey is not long.

ITH.

But, thou, Penthea,

Hast many years, I hope, to number yet, [80

Ere thou canst travel that way.

BASS.

Let the [sun] <sup>24</sup> first

Be wrapp'd up in an everlasting darkness,

Before the light of nature, chiefly form'd

For the whole world's delight, feel an eclipse

So universal !

ORG.

Wisdom, look 'ee, begins

To rave ! — Art thou mad too, antiquity ?

PEN. Since I was first a wife, I might have

<sup>21</sup> Within sight.

<sup>22</sup> Emend. Weber ; Q Impostors ; Gifford omits comma and reads imposture.

<sup>24</sup> Emend. Weber ; Q Swan.

Mother to many pretty prattling babes ;
They would have smil'd when I smil'd, and for certain

I should have cri'd when they cri'd : — truly,
Brother, 90

My father would have pick'd me out a husband,

And then my little ones had been no bastards ;
But 't is too late for me to marry now —
I am past childbearing ; 't is not my fault.

BASS. Fall on me, if there be a burning Aetna,

And bury me in flames ! Sweats hot as sulphur Boil through my pores ! Affliction hath in store

No torture like to this.

ORG. Behold a patience !
Lay by thy whining gray dissimulation :
Do something worth a chronicle ; show justice 100

Upon the author of this mischief ; dig out
The jealousies that hatch'd this thralldom first
With thine own poniard. Every antic rapture
Can roar as thine does.

ITH. Orgilus, forbear.

BASS. Disturb him not ; it is a talking motion <sup>25</sup>

Provided for my torment. What a fool am I
To bawdy <sup>26</sup> passion ! Ere I'll speak a word,
I will look on and burst.

PEN. [to ORGILUS] I lov'd you once.

ORG. Thou didst, wrong'd creature, in despite of malice ;

For it I love thee ever.

PEN. Spare your hand ; [110
Believe me, I'll not hurt it.

ORG. Pain my heart too.

[PEN.] <sup>27</sup> Complain not though I wring it hard. I'll kiss it ;

Oh, 't is a fine soft palm ! — Hark, in thine
ear ;

Like whom do I look, prithee ? — Nay, no whispering.

Goodness ! we had been happy ; too much happiness

Will make folk proud, they say — but that is he — Points at ITHOCLES.

And yet he paid for 't home ; alas, his heart
Is crept into the cabinet of the Princess ;

We shall have points <sup>28</sup> and bride-laces. <sup>29</sup> Remember,

<sup>29</sup> Pieces of silk or lace used to tie the sprigs of rosemary in use at weddings.

When we last gather'd roses in the garden, [120
I found my wits ; but truly you lost yours.
That's he, and still 't is he.

ITH. Poor soul, how idly
Her fancies guide her tongue !

BASS. [aside] Keep in, vexation,
And break not into clamor.

ORG. [aside] She has tutor'd me :
Some powerful inspiration checks my lazy-
ness. —

Now let me kiss your hand, griev'd beauty.

PEN. Kiss it. —
Alack, alack, his lips be wondrous cold.

Dear soul, h' as lost his color : have 'ee seen
A straying heart ? All crannies ! every drop
Of blood is turn'd to an amethyst, 130
Which married bachelors hang in their ears.

ORG. Peace usher her into Elysium ! —
If this be madness, madness is an oracle.

Exit ORGILUS.

ITH. Christalla, Philema, when slept my sister ? —

Her ravings are so wild.

CHRIS. Sir, not these ten days.

PHIL. We watch by her continually ; besides,

We can not any way pray her to eat. )

BASS. Oh, misery of miseries !

PEN. Take comfort ;
You may live well, and die a good old man.

By yea and nay, an oath not to be broken, [140
If you had join'd our hands once in the temple, —

'T was since my father di'd, for had he liv'd
He would have done 't, — I must have call'd you father. —

Oh, my wrack'd honor ! (ruin'd by those ty-
rants,

A cruel brother and a desperate dotage !

There is no peace left for a ravish'd wife

Widow'd by lawless marriage ; to all memory
Penthea's, poor Penthea's name is strumpeted.

But since her blood was season'd by the forfeit

Of noble shame with mixtures of pollution, [150
Her blood — 't is just — be henceforth never height'ned

With taste of sustenance ! Starve ; let that fullness

Whose pleurisy <sup>30</sup> hath fever'd faith and modesty —

Forgive me ; oh, I faint !

ARM. Be not so wilful,
Sweet Niece, to work thine own destruction.

<sup>30</sup> Excess.

ITH. Nature
Will call her daughter monster! — What! not eat?

Refuse the only ordinary means
Which are ordain'd for life? Be not, my sister,
A murd'ress to thyself. — Hear'st thou this,
Bassanes?

BASS. Fo! I am busy; for I have not thoughts 160

Enow to think; all shall be well anon.
'Tis tumbling in my head; there is a mastery
In art to fatten and keep smooth the outside,
Yes, and to comfort up the vital spirits
Without the help of food; fumes or perfumes, Perfumes or fumes. Let her alone; I'll search out

The trick on 't.

PEN. Lead me gently; Heavens reward ye.
Griefs are sure friends: they leave without control

Nor cure nor comforts for a leproug soul.

Exeunt the Maids supporting PEN-THEA.

BASS. I grant t'ee; and will put in practice instantly 170

What you shall still admire: 't is wonderful,
'T is super-singular, not to be match'd;
Yet, when I've done 't, I've done 't: — ye shall all thank me. Exit BASSANES.

ARM. The sight is full of terror.

ITH. On my soul
Lies such an infinite clog of massy dullness,
As that I have not sense enough to feel it. —
See, Uncle, th' [angry] <sup>31</sup> thing returns again;
Shall's welcome him with thunder? We are haunted,

And must use exorcism to conjure down
This spirit of malevolence.

ARM. Mildly, Nephew. [180

Enter NEARCHUS and AMELUS.

NEAR. I come not, sir, to chide your late disorder,
Admitting that th' inurement to a roughness
In soldiers of your years and fortunes, chiefly,
So lately prosperous, hath not yet shook off
The custom of the war in hours of leisure;
Nor shall you need excuse, since y' are to render

Account to that fair excellence, the Princess,
Who in her private gallery expects it
From your own mouth alone; I am a messenger

But to her pleasure.

<sup>31</sup> Weber; Q augury.

ITH. Excellent Nearchus, [190
Be prince still of my services, and conquer
Without the combat of dispute; I honor 'ee.

NEAR. The King is on a sudden indispos'd;
Physicians are call'd for; 't were fit, Armostes,
You should be near him.

ARM. Sir, I kiss your hands.

Exeunt [ITHOCLES and ARMOSTES].

NEAR. Amelus, I perceive Calantha's bosom
Is warm'd with other fires than such as can Take strength from any fuel of the love
I might address to her. Young Ithocles, 200
Or ever I mistake, is lord ascendant
Of her devotions; one, to speak him truly;
In every disposition nobly fashioned.

AME. But can your Highness brook to be so rivall'd,
Considering th' inequality of the persons?

NEAR. I can, Amelus; for affections injur'd,
By tyranny or rigor of compulsion,
Like tempest-threat'ned trees unfirmly rooted,
Ne'er spring to timely growth. Observe, for instance,

Life-spent Penthea and unhappy Orgilus.

AME. How does your Grace determine?

NEAR. To be jealous [210
In public of what privately I'll further;
And though they shall not know, yet they shall find it. Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE III] <sup>32</sup>

Enter HEMOPHIL and GRONEAS leading AMYCLAS, and placing him in a chair; followed by ARMOSTES [with a box], CROTOLON, and PROPHILUS.

AMY. Our daughter is not near?

ARM. She is retired, sir,
Into her gallery.

AMY. Where's the Prince our cousin?

PRO. New walk'd into the grove, my Lord.

AMY. All leave us
Except Armostes, and you, Crotolon;
We would be private.

PRO. Health unto your Majesty!

Exeunt PROPHILUS, HEMOPHIL, and GRONEAS.

AMY. What! Tecnicus is gone?

ARM. He is, to Delphos;
And to your royal hands presents this box.

AMY. Unseal it, good Armostes; therein lies
The secrets of the oracle; out with it.

[ARMOSTES takes out the scroll.]

Apollo live our patron! Read, Armostes. 10

<sup>32</sup> A room in the palace.

ARM. [reads.] "The plot in which the vine takes root

Begins to dry from head to foot;
The stock soon withering, want of sap
Doth cause to quail <sup>33</sup> the budding grape;
But from the neighboring elm a dew
Shall drop, and feed the plot anew."

AMY. That is the oracle. What exposition
Makes the philosopher?

ARM. This brief one only:

[Reads.] "The plot is Sparta, the dri'd vine the
King;

The quailing grape his daughter; but the
thing 20

Of most importance, not to be reveal'd,
Is a near prince, the elm; the rest conceal'd.

TECNICUS."

AMY. Enough; although the opening <sup>34</sup> of this riddle

Be but itself a riddle, yet we construe
How near our lab'ring age draws to a rest.
But must Calantha quail too, that young grape

Untimely budded? I could mourn for her;
Her tenderness hath yet deserv'd no rigor
So to be cross'd by fate.

ARM. You misapply, sir, — [30
With favor let me speak it, — what Apollo
Hath clouded in hid sense. I here conjecture Her marriage with some neighb'ring prince, the dew

Of which befriending elm shall ever strengthen
Your subjects with a sovereignty of power.

CROT. Besides, most gracious Lord, the pith of oracles

Is to be then digested when th' events
Expound their truth, not brought as soon to
light

As utter'd. Truth is child of Time; and herein

I find no scruple, rather cause of comfort, [40
With unity of kingdoms.

AMY. May it prove so,
For weal of this dear nation! — Where is Ithocles? —

Armotes, Crotolon, when this wither'd vine
Of my frail carcass on the funeral pile
Is fir'd into its ashes, let that young man
Be hedg'd about still with your cares and loves.

Much owe I to his worth, much to his service. —

Let such as wait come in now.

ARM. All attend here!

<sup>34</sup> Exposition.

Enter ITHOCLES, CALANTHA, PROPHILUS, ORGI-LUS, EUPHRANEA, HEMOPHIL, and GRONEAS.

CAL. Dear sir! King! Father!

ITH. O my royal master!

AMY. Cleave not my heart, sweet twins of my life's solace, 50

With your forejudging fears; there is no
physic

So cunningly restorative to cherish

The fall of age, or call back youth and vigor,

As your consents in duty. I will shake off
This languishing disease of time, to quicken Fresh pleasures in these drooping hours of sadness.

Is fair Euphranea married yet to Prophilus?

CROT. This morning, gracious Lord.

ORG. This very morning;

Which, with your Highness' leave, you may observe, too.

Our sister looks, methinks, mirthful and sprightly, 60

As if her chaster fancy could already Expound the riddle of her gain in losing
A trifle maids know only that they know not. — Pish! prithee, blush not; 'tis but honest
change

Of fashion in the garment, loose for strait,
And so the modest maid is made a wife.

Shrewd business — is't not, Sister?

EUPH. You are pleasant.

AMY. We thank thee, Orgilus; this mirth becomes thee.

But wherefore sits the court in such a silence?
A wedding without revels is not seemly. 70

CAL. Your late indisposition, sir, forbade
it.

AMY. Be it thy charge, Calantha, to set forward

The bridal sports, to which I will be present;

If not, at least consenting. — Mine own Itho-
cles,

I have done little for thee yet.

ITH. Y' have built me

To the full height I stand in.

CAL. [aside] Now or never! — <sup>35</sup>

May I propose a suit?

AMY. Demand, and have it.

CAL. Pray, sir, give me this young man, and no further

Account him yours than he deserves in all things

<sup>35</sup> So Weber, et al. Q has no punctuation here.

To be thought worthy mine. I will esteem
him 80
According to his merit.

AMY. Still th'art my daughter,
Still grow'st upon my heart. — [to ITHOCLES]
Give me thine hand. —

Calantha, take thine own ; in noble actions Thou'lt find him firm and absolute. — I would
not

Have parted with thee, Ithocles, to any
But to a mistress who is all what I am.

ITH. A change, great King, most wish'd for,
'cause the same.

CAL. [aside to ITHOCLES] Th' art mine.
Have I now kept my word?

ITH. [aside to CALANTHA] Divinely.

ORG. Rich fortunes, guard to favor of a princess,<sup>36</sup>

Rock thee, brave man, in ever-crowned plenty! 90

Y' are minion<sup>37</sup> of the time ; be thankful for
it. —

[aside] Ho ! here's a swing in destiny — apparent !

The youth is up on tiptoe, yet may stumble.

AMY. On to your recreations. — Now convey me

Unto my bedchamber ; none on his forehead
Wear a distempered look.

OMNES. The gods preserve 'ee !

CAL. [aside to ITHOCLES] Sweet, be not from my sight.

ITH. [aside to CALANTHA] My whole felicity !

Exeunt, carrying out of the King. ORGI-LUS stays ITHOCLES.

ORG. Shall I be bold, my Lord?

ITH. Thou canst not, Orgilus :
Call me thine own ; for Prophilus must hence-
forth

Be all thy sister's. Friendship, though it cease
not 100

In marriage, yet is oft at less command
Than when a single freedom can dispose it.

ORG. Most right, my most good Lord, my most great Lord,

My gracious princely Lord, I might add, royal.

ITH. Royal ! A subject royal?

ORG. Why not, pray, sir?

The sovereignty of kingdoms in their nonage Stoop'd to desert, not birth ; there's as much merit

In clearness of affection as in puddle
Of generation : you have conquer'd love
Even in the loveliest ; if I greatly err not, [110
The son of Venus hath bequeath'd his quiver

To Ithocles his manage,<sup>38</sup> by whose arrows
Calantha's breast is open'd.

ITH. Can't be possible?

ORG. I was myself a piece of suitor once,
And forward in preferment too ; so forward

That, speaking truth, I may without offence,
sir,

Presume to whisper that my hopes, and — hark 'ee —

My certainty of marriage, stood assured
With as firm footing — by your leave — as any's

Now at this very instant — but —

ITH. 'T is granted ; [120
And for a league of privacy between us,
Read o'er my bosom and partake a secret :
The Princess is contracted mine.

ORG. Still, why not?
I now applaud her wisdom. When your kingdom

Stands seated in your will, secure and settled,

I dare pronounce you will be a just monarch ;

Greece must admire and tremble.

ITH. Then the sweetness
Of so imparadis'd a comfort, Orgilus !
It is to banquet with the gods.

ORG. The glory
Of numerous children, potency of nobles, [130
Bent knees, hearts pav'd to tread on !

ITH. With a friendship
So dear, so fast as thine.

ORG. I am unfitting
For office ; but for service —

ITH. We'll distinguish
Our fortunes merely in the title, partners
In all respects else but the bed.

ORG. The bed !
Forfend it Jove's own jealousy ! — till lastly
We slip down in the common earth together,
And there our beds are equal ; save some monument

To show this was the king, and this the subject. — Soft, sad music.

List, what sad sounds are these? — extremely sad ones. 140

ITH. Sure, from Penthea's lodgings.

<sup>38</sup> Ithocles's management.

<sup>36</sup> So Sherman ; Q omits the comma after fortunes ; Gifford-Dyce : "Rich fortunes guard, the favour of a princess Rock thee . . ."

<sup>37</sup> Darling, favorite.

ORG. Hark ! a voice too.

A SONG [within]

Oh, no more, no more, too late
Sighs are spent ; the burning tapers
Of a life as chaste as fate,
Pure as are unwritten papers,
Are burnt out : no heat, no light
Now remains ; 't is ever night.

Love is dead ; let lovers' eyes,
Lock'd in endless dreams,
Th' extremes of all extremes, 150
Ope no more, for now Love dies,
Now Love dies, — implying
Love's martyrs must be ever, ever dying.

ITH. Oh, my misgiving heart !

ORG. A horrid stillness Succeeds this deathful air ; let's know the reason.

Tread softly ; there is mystery in mourning.
Exeunt.

SCENE [IV] <sup>39</sup>

Enter CHRISTALLA and PHILEMA, bringing in PENTHEA in a chair, veil'd ; two other Servants placing two chairs, one on the one side, and the other with an engine <sup>40</sup> on the other. The Maids sit down at her feet, mourning. The Servants go out : meet them ITHOCLES and ORGILUS.

SER. [aside to ORGILUS] 'T is done ; that on her right hand.

ORG. Good ; begone.
[Exeunt Servants.]

ITH. Soft peace enrich this room !

ORG. How fares the lady ?

PHIL. Dead !

CHRIS. Dead !

PHIL. Starv'd !

CHRIS. Starv'd !

ITH. Me miserable !

ORG. Tell us

How parted she from life.

PHIL. She call'd for music,
And begg'd some gentle voice to tune a fare-
well

To life and griefs. Christalla touch'd the lute ;

I wept the funeral song.

CHRIS. Which scarce was ended
But her last breath seal'd up these hollow
sounds :

" Oh, cruel Ithocles and injur'd Orgilus ! "
So down she drew her veil, so di'd.

ITH. So di'd ! [10

<sup>39</sup> Penthea's apartment.

<sup>40</sup> Mechanism.

ORG. Up ! you are messengers of death ; go from us ;

Here's woe enough to court without a promp-
ter.

Away ; and — hark ye — till you see us next,
No syllable that she is dead. — Away,
Keep a smooth brow.

Exeunt PHILEMA and CHRISTALLA.

My Lord, —

ITH. Mine only sister !

Another is not left me.

ORG. Take that chair ;
I'll seat me here in this : between us sits
The object of our sorrows ; some few tears
We'll part among us. I perhaps can mix
One lamentable story to prepare 'em. — 20
There, there ; sit there, my Lord.

ITH. Yes, as you please.

ITHOCLES sits down, and is catch'd in the engine.

What means this treachery ?

ORG. Caught ! you are caught,
Young master ; 't is thy throne of corona-
tion,

Thou fool of greatness ! See, I take this veil
off ;

Survey a beauty wither'd by the flames
Of an insulting <sup>41</sup> Phaëthon, her brother.

ITH. Thou mean'st to kill me basely.

ORG. I foreknew

The last act of her life, and train'd thee hither
To sacrifice a tyrant to a turtle.

You dreamt of kingdoms, did 'ee ? How to
bosom 30

The delicacies of a youngling princess ;
How with this nod to grace that subtle courtier,

How with that frown to make this noble trem-
ble,

And so forth ; whiles Penthea's groans and tor-
tures,

Her agonies, her miseries, afflictions, Ne'er touch'd upon your thought. As for my injuries,

Alas, they were beneath your royal pity ;
But yet they liv'd, thou proud man, to confound thee.

Behold thy fate ; this steel !

ITH. Strike home ! A courage
As keen as thy revenge shall give it welcome ; 40

But prithee faint not ; if the wound close up, Tent <sup>42</sup> it with double force, and search it deeply.

Thou look'st that I should whine and beg compassion,

As loth to leave the vainness of my glories.

A statelier resolution arms my confidence,

To cozen thee of honor ; neither could I

With equal trial of unequal fortune

By hazard of a duel ; 't were a bravery

Too mighty for a slave intending murder.

On to the execution, and inherit

A conflict with thy horrors.

50

ORG.

By Apollo,

Thou talk'st a goodly language ! for requital

I will report thee to thy mistress richly.

And take this peace along : some few short minutes

Determin'd, my resolves shall quickly follow

Thy wrathful ghost ; then, if we tug for mastery,

Penthea's sacred eyes shall lend new courage.

Give me thy hand : be healthful in thy parting

From lost mortality ! thus, thus I free it.

Kills him.

ITH. Yet, yet, I scorn to shrink.

✓ORG.

Keep up thy spirit : [60

I will be gentle even in blood ; to linger

Pain, which I strive to cure, were to be cruel.

[Stabs him again.]

ITH. Nimble in vengeance, I forgive thee.

Follow

Safety, with best success : Oh, may it prosper ! —

Penthea, by thy side thy brother bleeds ;

The earnest of his wrongs to thy forc'd faith.

Thoughts of ambition, or delicious banquet

With beauty, youth, and love, together perish

In my last breath, which on the sacred altar

Of a long-look'd-for peace — now — moves — to Heaven. [Dies.] <sup>43</sup> [70

ORG. Farewell, fair spring of manhood !

Henceforth welcome

Best expectation of a noble suff'rance.

I'll lock the bodies safe, till what must follow

Shall be approv'd. — Sweet twins, shine stars for ever ! —

In vain they build their hopes whose life is shame ;

No monument lasts but a happy name. —

Exit ORGILUS.

<sup>44</sup> Q moritur.

ACT V — SCENE I <sup>1</sup>

Enter BASSANES, alone.

BASS. Athens, to Athens I have sent, the nursery

Of Greece for learning and the fount of knowledge ;

For here in Sparta there's not left amongst us One wise man to direct ; we're all turn'd mad-caps.

'T is said Apollo is the god of herbs ;

Then certainly he knows the virtue of 'em.

To Delphos I have sent, too. If there can be A help for nature, we are sure yet.

Enter ORGILUS.

ORG.

Honor

Attend thy counsels ever !

BASS.

I beseech thee

With all my heart, let me go from thee quietly ;

10

I will not aught to do with thee, of all men.

The [doubles] <sup>2</sup> of a hare, or in a morning

Salutes from a play-footed witch, to drop

Three drops of blood at th' nose just and no more,

Croaking of ravens, or the screech of owls,

Are not so boding mischief as thy crossing

My private meditations. Shun me, prithee ;

And if I cannot love thee heartily,

I'll love thee as well as I can.

ORG.

Noble Bassanes,

Mistake me not.

BASS.

Phew ! then we shall be troubled.

Thou wert ordain'd my plague — Heaven make me thankful,

21

And give me patience too, Heaven, I beseech thee.

ORG. Accept a league of amity ; for hence-

forth,

I vow, by my best genius, <sup>3</sup> in a syllable,

Never to speak vexation. I will study

Service and friendship, with a zealous sorrow

For my past incivility towards 'ee.

BASS. Heyday ! good words, good words !

I must believe 'em,

And be a coxcomb <sup>4</sup> for my labor.

ORG.

Use not

So hard a language ; your misdoubt is causeless.

30

For instance, if you promise to put on
A constancy of patience, such a patience
As chronicle or history ne'er mentioned,
As follows not example, but shall stand
A wonder and theme for imitation,
The first, the index <sup>5</sup> pointing to a second,
I will acquaint 'ee with an unmatch'd secret,
Whose knowledge to your griefs shall set a period.

BASS. Thou canst not, Orgilus; 't is in the power
Of the gods only; yet, for satisfaction, 40
Because I note an earnest in thine utterance,
Unforc'd and naturally free, be resolute <sup>6</sup>
The virgin bays shall not withstand the lightning
With a more careless danger than my constancy
The full of thy relation. Could it move
Distraction in a senseless marble statue,
It should find me a rock. I do expect now
Some truth of unheard moment.

ORG. To your patience
You must add privacy, as strong in silence
As mysteries lock'd up in Jove's own bosom. [50

BASS. A skull hid in the earth a treble age
Shall sooner prate.

ORG. Lastly, to such direction
As the severity of a glorious action Deserves to lead your wisdom and your judgment,
You ought to yield obedience.

BASS. With assurance
Of will and thankfulness.

ORG. With manly courage
Please, then, to follow me.

BASS. Where'er, I fear not.
Exeunt omnes.

SCENE II <sup>7</sup>

Loud music. Enter GRONEAS and HEMOPHIL, leading EUPHRANEA; CHRISTALLA and PHILEMA, leading PROPHILUS; NEARCHUS supporting CALANTHA; CROTON and AMELUS. Cease loud music; all make a stand.<sup>8</sup>

CAL. We miss our servant Ithocles and Orgilus;
On whom attend they?

CROT. My son, gracious Princess, Whisper'd some new device, to which these
revels

Should be but usher, wherein I conceive
Lord Ithocles and he himself are actors.

CAL. A fair excuse for absence; as for Bassanes,
Delights to him are troublesome. Armostes
Is with the King?

CROT. He is.

CAL. On to the dance! —
Dear Cousin, hand you the bride; the bridegroom must be
Intrusted to my courtship. Be not jealous, [10
Euphranea; I shall scarcely prove a temptress. —

Fall to our dance.

Music

NEARCHUS dance with EUPHRANEA, PROPHI-
LUS with CALANTHA, CHRISTALLA with HEM-OPHIL, PHILEMA with GRONEAS.

Dance the first change, during which enter AR-MOSTES.

ARM. (in CALANTHA'S ear) The King
your father's dead.

CAL. To the other change.

ARM. Is 't possible?
Dance again.

Enter BASSANES.

BASS. [whispering to CALANTHA] Oh,
madam!

Pentheas, poor Pentheas starv'd.

CAL. Beshrew thee! —

Lead to the next.

BASS. Amazement dulls my senses.
Dance again.

Enter ORGILUS.

ORG. [whispering to CALANTHA] Brave Itho-cles is murder'd, murder'd cruelly.

CAL. How dull this music sounds! Strike up more sprightly;

Our footings are not active like our heart,
Which treads the nimbler measure.

ORG. I am thunderstruck.

Last change. Cease music.

CAL. So; let us breathe awhile. — Hath not this motion 20

Rais'd fresher color on your cheeks?

NEAR. Sweet Princess,
A perfect purity of blood enamels
The beauty of your white.

CAL. We all look cheerfully;
And, Cousin, 't is, methinks, a rare presump-

<sup>8</sup> Weber, perhaps rightly, emends our.

<sup>8</sup> Halt.

In any who prefer our lawful pleasures
Before their own sour censure, to interrupt
The custom of this ceremony bluntly.

NEAR. None dares, lady.

CAL. Yes, yes ; some hollow voice deliver'd
to me

How that the King was dead.

ARM. The King is dead : [30
That fatal news was mine ; for in mine arms
He breath'd his last, and with his crown be-queath'd 'ee

Your mother's wedding ring, which here I tender.

CROT. Most strange !

CAL. Peace crown his ashes ! We are queen, then.

NEAR. Long live Calantha ! Sparta's sovereign queen !

OMNES. Long live the Queen !

CAL. What whispered Bassanes ?

BASS. That my Penthea, miserable soul,
Was starv'd to death.

CAL. ✓ She's happy ; she hath finish'd
A long and painful progress. — A third murmur

Pierc'd mine unwilling ears.

ORG. That Ithocles [40
Was murder'd ; — rather butcher'd, had not bravery

Of an undaunted spirit, conquering terror,
Proclaim'd his last act triumph over ruin. ✓

ARM. How ! murder'd !

CAL. By whose hand ?

ORG. By mine : this weapon
Was instrument to my revenge ; the reasons Are just, and known ; quit him of these, and
then

Never liv'd gentleman of greater merit,
Hope or abiliment <sup>10</sup> to steer a kingdom.

CROT. Fie, <sup>11</sup> Orgilus !

EUPH. Fie, Brother !

CAL. You have done it.

BASS. How it was done let him report, the
forfeit 50

Of whose allegiance to our laws doth covet
Rigor of justice ; but that done it is,
Mine eyes have been an evidence of credit
Too sure to be convinc'd. <sup>12</sup> Armestes, rent <sup>13</sup>
not

Thine arteries with hearing the bare circumstances

Of these calamities ; thou'st lost a nephew,

A niece, and I a wife : continue man still ; ✓ Make me the pattern of digesting evils,
Who can outlive my mighty ones, not shrink-
ing

At such a pressure as would sink a soul 60
Into what's most of death, the worst of horrors.

But I have seal'd a covenant with sadness,
And enter'd into bonds without condition,
To stand these tempests calmly ; mark me,
nobles,

I do not shed a tear, not for Penthea !

Excellent misery !

CAL. We begin our reign

With a first act of justice : thy confession,
Unhappy Orgilus, dooms thee a sentence ;
But yet thy father's or thy sister's presence
Shall be excus'd. — Give, Crotolon, a bless-
ing 70

To thy lost son ; — Euphranea, take a farewell ; —

And both be gone.

CROT. [to ORGILUS] Confirm thee, noble sorrow,

In worthy resolution !

EUPH. Could my tears speak,

My griefs were slight.

ORG. All good[n]ess dwell amongst ye !
Enjoy my sister, Prophilus ; my vengeance
Aim'd never at thy prejudice. <sup>14</sup>

CAL. Now withdraw. —

Exeunt CROTOLON, PROPHILUS, and EUPHRANEA.

Bloody relater of thy stains in blood,
For that <sup>15</sup> thou hast reported him, whose fortunes

And life by thee are both at once snatch'd
from him,

With honorable mention, make thy choice [80
Of what death likes <sup>16</sup> thee best ; there's all our bounty. —

But to excuse delays, let me, dear Cousin,
Entreat you and these lords see execution
Instant before 'ee part.

NEAR. Your will commands us.

ORG. One suit, just Queen, my last : vouchsafe your clemency,

That by no common hand I be divided
From this my humble frailty.

CAL. To their wisdoms
Who are to be spectators of thine end
I make the reference. Those that are dead

<sup>16</sup> Is pleasing to.

Are dead ; had they not now di'd, of necessity 90

They must have paid the debt they ow'd to nature

One time or other. — Use dispatch,<sup>17</sup> my Lords ;

We'll suddenly prepare our coronation.

Exeunt CALANTHA, PHILEMA, [and] CHRISTALLA.

ARM. 'Tis strange these tragedies should never touch on

Her female pity.

BASS. She has a masculine spirit ;
And wherefore should I pule, and like a girl
Put finger in the eye ? Let's be all toughness,
Without distinction betwixt sex and sex.

NEAR. Now, Orgilus, thy choice ?

ORG. To bleed to death.

ARM. The executioner ?

ORG. Myself, no surgeon ; [100
I am well skill'd in letting blood. Bind fast
This arm, that so the pipes may from their conduits

Convey a full stream ; here's a skilful instrument. [Shows his dagger.]

Only I am a beggar to some charity
To speed me in this execution
By lending th' other prick to th' tother arm,
When this is bubbling life out.

BASS. I am for 'ee ;
It most concerns my art, my care, my credit. —
Quick, fillet<sup>18</sup> both [his] <sup>19</sup> arms.

ORG. Gramercy, friendship !
Such courtesies are real which flow cheerfully
Without an expect[ation] of requital. 111 Reach me a staff in this hand. — If a prone-
ness

Or custom in my nature from my cradle
Had been inclin'd to fierce and eager bloodshed,

A coward guilt, hid in a coward quaking,
Would have betray'd fame<sup>20</sup> to ignoble flight
And vagabond pursuit of dreadful<sup>21</sup> safety ;
But look upon my steadiness, and scorn not
The sickness of my fortune, which, since Bas-san's

Was husband to Penthea, had lain bedrid. [120
We trifle time in words ; thus I show cunning
In opening of a vein too full, too lively.

[Pierces a vein.]

ARM. Desperate courage !

<sup>18</sup> I.e., bind with a narrow strip, to facilitate the blood-letting.

<sup>21</sup> Timorous.

[NEAR.]<sup>22</sup> Honorable infamy !
HEM. I tremble at the sight.

GRO. Would I were loose !

BASS. It sparkles like a lusty wine new broach'd ;

The vessel must be sound from which it issues. —

Grasp hard this other stick — I'll be as nimble —

But prithee, look not pale — have at 'ee !
stretch out

Thine arm with vigor and <sup>23</sup> unshook virtue.
[Opens a vein.]

Good ! Oh, I envy not a rival, fitted 130

To conquer in extremities. This pastime
Appears majestical ; some high-tun'd poem
Hereafter shall deliver to posterity

The writer's glory and his subject's triumph.
How is't, man ? Droop not yet.

ORG. I feel no palsies.
On a pair royal do I wait in death :

My sovereign, as his liegeman ; on my mistress,

As a devoted servant ; <sup>24</sup> and on Ithocles,
As if no brave, yet no unworthy enemy.

Nor did I use an engine to entrap 140

His life out of a slavish fear to combat Youth, strength, or cunning ; <sup>25</sup> but for that I durst not

Engage the goodness of a cause on fortune,
By which his name might have outfaced my vengeance.

O Tecnicus, inspir'd with Phoebus' fire,
I call to mind thy augury ; 't was perfect :
Revenge proves its own executioner.

When feeble man is bending to his mother,
The dust 'a was first fram'd on, thus he tot-ters.

BASS. Life's fountain is dri'd up.

ORG. So falls the standards [150
Of my prerogative in being a creature !
A mist hangs o'er mine eyes, the sun's bright splendor

Is clouded in an everlasting shadow ;

Welcome, thou ice, that sitt'st about my heart :
No heat can ever thaw thee. Dies.

NEAR. Speech hath left him.

BASS. 'A has shook hands <sup>26</sup> with Time ;
his funeral urn

Shall be my charge. Remove the bloodless body.

<sup>26</sup> Said goodbye.

The coronation must require attendance ;
That past, my few days can be but one mourning. Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>27</sup>

An altar covered with white ; two lights of virgin wax, during which music of recorders ; <sup>28</sup> enter Four bearing ITHOCLES on a hearse, or in a chair, in a rich robe, and a crown on his head ;
place him on one side of the altar. After him enter CALANTHA in a white robe and crown'd ;
EUPHRANEA, PHILEMA, [and] CHRISTALLA,
in white ; NEARCHUS, ARMOSTES, CROTO- OLON, PROPHILUS, AMELUS, BASSANES, HE-
MOPHIL, and GRONEAS.

CALANTHA goes and kneels before the altar ; the rest stand off, the Women kneeling behind.
Cease recorders during her devotions. Soft music. CALANTHA and the rest rise, doing obeisance to the altar.

CAL. Our orisons are heard ; the gods are merciful. —

Now tell me, you whose loyalties pays tribute
To us your lawful sovereign, how unskilful
Your duties or obedience is to render Subjection to the sceptre of a virgin,
Who have been ever fortunate in princes
Of masculine and stirring composition !
A woman has enough to govern wisely
Her own demeanors, passions, and divisions.<sup>29</sup>
A nation warlike and inur'd to practice 10
Of policy and labor cannot brook
A feminate authority. We therefore Command your counsel, how you may advise
us

In choosing of a husband whose abilities
Can better guide this kingdom.

NEAR. Royal lady,
Your law is in your will.

ARM. We have seen tokens
Of constancy too lately to mistrust it.

CROT. Yet, if your Highness settle on a choice
By your own judgment both allow'd and lik'd
of,

Sparta may grow in power, and proceed 20
To an increasing height.

CAL. Hold you the same mind ?

BASS. Alas, great mistress, reason is so clouded

With the thick darkness of my [infinite] <sup>30</sup> woes,

That I forecast nor dangers, hopes, or safety.
Give me some corner of the world to wear out
The remnant of the minutes I must number, ✓ Where I may hear no sounds but sad complaints

Of virgins who have lost contracted partners ;
Of husbands howling that their wives were ravish'd

By some untimely fate ; of friends divided [30
By churlish opposition ; or of fathers
Weeping upon their children's slaughtered carcasses ;

Or daughters groaning o'er their fathers'
hearses ;

And I can dwell there, and with these keep consort

As musical as theirs. What can you look for
From an old, foolish, peevish, doting man
But craziness of age ?

CAL. Cousin of Argos, —

NEAR. Madam ?

CAL. Were I presently
To choose you for my lord, I'll open <sup>31</sup> freely
What articles I would propose to treat on 40
Before our marriage.

NEAR. Name them, virtuous lady.

CAL. I would presume you would retain the royalty

Of Sparta in her own bounds ; then in Argos
Armotes might be viceroy ; in Messene
Might Crotolon bear sway ; and Bassanes —
BASS. I, Queen ! alas, what I ?

CAL. Be Sparta's marshal :
The multitudes of high employments could
not

But set a peace to private griefs. These gentlemen,

Groneas and Hemophil, with worthy pensions,
Should wait upon your person in your chamber. — 50

I would bestow Christalla on Amelus.
She'll prove a constant wife ; and Philema
Should into Vesta's Temple.

BASS. [aside] This is a testament !
It sounds not like conditions on a marriage.

NEAR. All this should be perform'd.

CAL. Lastly, for Phililus,
He should be, Cousin, solemnly invested
In all those honors, titles, and preferments
Which his dear friend and my neglected husband

Too short a time enjoy'd.

PRO. I am unworthy

To live in your remembrance.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

WHEN the Puritans closed the theatres in 1642, Shirley was the leading London dramatist, not only for comedy, but for tragedy and tragi-comedy as well. Alone of the major dramatists he survived the closing and the Commonwealth; his death in 1666 was due to exposure suffered during the Great Fire. When the theatres reopened at least eight of his plays were speedily revived, but The Lady of Pleasure seems not to have been among them.

Nevertheless this amusing piece, while it is no Way of the World, shows how Restoration comedy was in the making before the Civil Wars. From Jonson, the great and original source, the stream flows on, through the channels of Middleton, Fletcher, and Shirley, till, mirroring the Merry Monarch and his gaily trivial court, it spreads into the sparkling lake of Etherege, Wycherley, Shadwell, and Congreve. The Lady of Pleasure is verbally less coarse than the later comedy, or indeed than many of the earlier plays. In this respect several of Shirley's other works better represent the trend of the times. And there are noble sentiments and considerations of honor in Celestina and her Lord, which are rarely echoed by the more brilliant of Shirley's successors, and may have blocked the play's revival in the '60's.

On the other hand, the cool and calculated intrigue of Aretina is thoroughly typical of the degradation of love in the seventeenth-century comedy of manners, even though we must wait a quarter of a century for the unmixed cynicism of the Restoration masters. The moral note is struck in The Lady of Pleasure, but it is not struck very hard. The fifth-act repentances are pretty perfunctory, and the whole play is marked by much the same compromise between wit and conscience as the moral-immoral comedy with which Cibber and Farquhar were to ring the curtain down on Congreve.

The Lady of Pleasure was probably written in 1635, for on October 15 of that year it was licensed for production by the Master of the Revels. It was performed by Queen Henrietta's Men at the Phoenix (or Cockpit in Drury Lane). According to Shirley, in his dedicatory epistle to Richard, Lord Lovelace, it was "fortunate in the scene." No source for the plot is known or needed.

The standard edition of Shirley's works, a most unsatisfactory one, is still that of A. Dyce (1833). The Lady of Pleasure was first published, in quarto, in 1637; on that edition the present text is based.

[THE] SCENE — The Strand [in London].

ACT I — [SCENE I] <sup>3</sup>

Enter ARETINA, and her Steward.

STEW. Be patient, madam ; you may have your pleasure.

ARE. 'T is that I came to town for. I would
not

Endure again the country conversation,
To be the lady of six shires ! The men
So near the primitive making they retain
A sense of nothing but the earth, their brains
And barren heads standing as much in want Of ploughing as their ground. To hear a fellow

Make himself merry and his horse, with whistling

Sellinger's Round ! <sup>4</sup> To observe with what solemnity 10

They keep their wakes, <sup>5</sup> and throw for pewter candlesticks !

<sup>1</sup> Gewgaw, trifle. — Master is usually abbreviated
Mr., throughout.

<sup>2</sup> In allusion to Pietro Aretino, the sixteenth-century dramatist and satirist, the lubricity of whose writings made his name a byword.

63, 64.

<sup>5</sup> Festivals.

How they become the morris, with whose bells
They ring all in to Whitsun-ales ; <sup>6</sup> and sweat, Through twenty scarfs and napkins, till the hobbyhorse <sup>6</sup>

Tire, and the Maid Marian, <sup>7</sup> dissolv'd to a jelly
Be kept for spoon meat ! <sup>8</sup>

STEW. These, with your pardon, are no argument

To make the country life appear so hateful ;
At least to your particular, <sup>9</sup> who enjoy'd
A blessing in that calm, would you be pleas'd [20
To think so, and the pleasure of a kingdom.
While your own will commanded what should move

Delights, your husband's love and power joined To give your life more harmony. You liv'd
there

Secure, and innocent, beloved of all,
Prais'd for your hospitality, and pray'd for.
You might be envied, but malice knew
Not where you dwelt. I would not prophesy,
But leave to your own apprehension,
What may succeed your change.

<sup>6</sup> A performer in the morris dance, who capered about with the figure of a horse fastened to his waist.

<sup>7</sup> A hoydenish character in the morris dance, representing originally Robin Hood's sweetheart.

<sup>8</sup> Soft or liquid diet.

<sup>9</sup> In your case.

ARE. You do imagine, [30
No doubt, you have talk'd wisely, and confuted London past all defence. Your master should Do well to send you back into the country,
With title of superintendent-bailiff].

STEW. How, madam!

ARE. Even so, sir.

STEW. I am a gentleman,
Though now your servant.

ARE. A country gentleman,
By your affection to converse with stubble.
His tenants will advance your wit, and plump
it so

With beef and bag-pudding!

STEW. You may say your pleasure;
It becomes not me dispute.

ARE. Complain to [40
The lord of the soil, your master.

STEW. Y' are a woman
Of an un govern'd passion, and I pity you.

Enter Sir THOMAS BORNWELL

BORN. How now? What's the matter?

STEW. Nothing, sir. [Exit.]

BORN. Angry, sweetheart?

ARE. I am angry with myself,
To be so miserably restrained in things
Wherein it doth concern your love and honor
To see me satisfied.

BORN. In what, Aretina,
Dost thou accuse me? Have I not obey'd
All thy desires? Against mine own opinion
Quitted the country, and remov'd the hope [50
Of our return, by sale of that fair lordship
We liv'd in? chang'd a calm and retir'd life
For this wild town, compos'd of noise and charge? <sup>10</sup>

ARE. What charge, more than is necessary
for
A lady of my birth and education?

BORN. I am not ignorant how much nobility Flows in your blood; your kinsmen great and powerful
I' th' state; but with this, lose not your memory
Of being my wife. I shall be studious,
Madam, to give the dignity of your birth [80
All the best ornaments which become my fortune;
But would not flatter it, to ruin both,
And be the fable of the town, to teach
Other men loss of wit by mine, employ'd
To serve your vast expenses.

<sup>10</sup> Expence.

ARE. Am I then
Brought in the balance? So, sir!

BORN. Though you weigh
Me in a partial scale, my heart is honest,
And must take liberty to think you have Obeyed no modest counsel, to [affect],<sup>11</sup>
Nay, study, ways of pride and costly ceremony : 70

Your change of gaudy furniture, and pictures
Of this Italian master, and that Dutchman's;
Your mighty looking-glasses, like artillery,
Brought [home] <sup>12</sup> on engines; the superfluous
plate,

Antique and novel; vanities of tires;
Fourscore-pound suppers for my Lord, your kinsman,

Banquets for tother Lady Aunt and cousins,
And perfumes that exceed all; train of servants,

To stifle us at home, and show abroad
More motley than the French or the Venetian,
About your coach, whose rude postillion 81
Must pester <sup>13</sup> every narrow lane, till passengers <sup>14</sup>

And tradesmen curse your choking up their stalls;

And common cries pursue your Ladyship,
For hind'ring o' their market.

ARE. Have you done, sir?

BORN. I could accuse the gaiety of your wardrobe,
And prodigal embroideries, under which Rich satins, plushes, cloth of silver, dare
Not show their own complexions; your jewels,
Able to burn out the spectators' eyes, 90
And show like bonfires on you by the tapers.
Something might here be spar'd, [with safety] <sup>15</sup>
of

Your birth and honor, since the truest wealth
Shines from the soul, and draws up just admirers.

I could urge something more.

ARE. Pray do; I like
Your homily of thrift.

BORN. I could wish, madam,
You would not game so much.

ARE. A gamester, too?

BORN. But are not come to that [acquaintance] <sup>16</sup> yet, Should teach you skill enough to raise your profit.

<sup>16</sup> Emend. Dyce; Q repentance.

You look not through the subtlety of cards, [100
And mysteries of dice ; nor can you save Charge with the box,<sup>17</sup> buy petticoats and pearls,

And keep your family by the precious income ;
Nor do I wish you should : my poorest servant
Shall not upbraid my tables, nor his hire, Purchas'd beneath my honor. You make
play

Not a pastime but a tyranny, and vex
Yourself and my estate by it.

ARE. Good ! proceed.

BORN. Another game you have, which consumes more

Your make than purse ; your revels in the
night, 110

Your meetings call'd the Ball, to which [repair,]<sup>18</sup>

As to the Court of Pleasure, all your gallants
And ladies, thither bound by a subpoena
Of Venus, and small Cupid's high displeasure ;
'T is but the Family of Love<sup>19</sup> translated Into more costly sin ! There was a play on 't ;<sup>20</sup>
And had the poet not been brib'd to a modest Expression of your antic gambols in 't,
Some darks had been discovered, and the deeds
too. 119

In time he may repent, and make some blush,
To see the second part dan'd on the stage.
My thoughts acquit you for<sup>21</sup> dishonoring me
By any foul act ; but the virtuous know
'T is not enough to clear ourselves, but the Suspicious of our shame.

ARE. Have you concluded
Your lecture ?

BORN. I ha' done ; and howsoever
My language may appear to you, it carries
No other than my fair and just intent
To your delights, without curb to their modest<sup>22</sup>

And noble freedom.

ARE. I'll not be so tedious [130
In my reply ; but, without art or elegance,
Assure you, I keep still my first opinion ;
And though you veil your avaricious meaning
With handsome names of modesty and thrift,
I find you would entrench<sup>23</sup> and wound the liberty

I was born with. Were my desires unprivileged

By example, while my judgment thought 'em
fit,

You ought not to oppose ; but when the practice

And trac[k] of every honorable lady<sup>24</sup>

Authorize<sup>25</sup> me, I take it great injustice [140
To have my pleasures circumscribed, and taught me.

A narrow-minded husband is a thief

To his own fame, and his preferment,<sup>26</sup> too ;
He shuts his parts<sup>27</sup> and fortunes from the
world,

While, from the popular vote and knowledge,
men

Rise to employment in the state.

BORN.

I have

No great ambition to buy preferment at
So dear a rate.

ARE. Nor I to sell my honor,
By living poor and sparingly. I was not Bred in that ebb of fortune, and my fate [150
Shall not compel me to it.

BORN.

I know not,

Madam ; but you pursue these ways —

ARE.

What ways ?

BORN. In the strict sense of honesty, I dare
Make oath they are innocent.

ARE.

Do not divert,

By busy troubling of your brain, those
thoughts

That should preserve 'em.

BORN.

How was that ?

ARE.

'T is English.

BORN. But carries some unkind sense.

Enter MADAM DECOY.

DEC. Good morrow, my sweet madam.

ARE.

Decoy ! welcome ;

This visit is a favor.

DEC.

Alas, sweet madam,

I cannot stay : I came but to present 160

My service to your Ladyship ; I could not Pass by your door, but I must take the bold-

ness

To tender my respects.

ARE.

You oblige me, madam ;

But I must not dispense so with your absence.

DEC.

Alas, the coach, madam, stays for me at the door..

ARE. Thou sha't command mine ; prithee, sweet Decoy —

DEC. I would wait on you, madam, but I have many Visits to make this morning; I beseech —

ARE. So you will promise to dine with me.

DEC. I shall 169

Present a guest.

ARE. Why, then good morrow, madam.

DEC. A happy day shine on your Ladyship!

Exit.

Re-enter Steward.

ARE. What's your news, sir?

STEW. Madam, two gentlemen.

ARE. What gentlemen? Have they no names?

STEW. They are

The gentleman with his own head of hair
Whom you commended for his horsemanship
In Hyde Park, and becoming<sup>28</sup> the saddle,
The tother day.

ARE. What circumstance is this
To know him by?

STEW. His name's at my tongue's
end —

He lik'd the fashion of your pearl chain,
madam,

And borrowed it for his jeweller to take 180
A copy by it.

BORN. [aside] What cheating gallant's
this?

STEW. That never walks without a lady's busk,<sup>29</sup>

And plays with fans — Master Alexander Kickshaw! —

I thought I should remember him.

ARE. What's the other?

STEW. What an unlucky memory I have!
The gallant that still danceth in the street,
And wears a gross of ribbon in his hat;
That carries oringado<sup>30</sup> in his pocket,
And sugarplums, to sweeten his discourse;
That studies compliment, defies all wit 190
[In]<sup>31</sup> black, and censures plays that are not bawdy —

Master John Littleworth!

ARE. They are welcome; but Pray entertain them a small time, lest I

Be unprovided.

BORN. Did they ask for me?

STEW. No, sir.

BORN. It matters not, they must be welcome.

ARE. Fie! how's this hair disordered?
Here's a curl

<sup>31</sup> Q On.

Straddle[s] most impiously. I must to my closet. Exit.

BORN. Wait on 'em; my Lady will return
again. [Exit Steward.]

I have to such a height fulfill'd her humor,<sup>32</sup>
All application's<sup>33</sup> dangerous: these gallants
Must be receiv'd, or she will fall into 201
A tempest, and the house be shook with names
Of all her kindred. 'T is a servitude
I may in time shake off.

Enter ALEXANDER [KICKSHAW] and LITTLE-WORTH.

KICK.<sup>34</sup> [and] LITTLE. Save you, Sir Thomas!

BORN. Save you, gentlemen!

KICK. I kiss your hand.

BORN. What<sup>35</sup> day is it abroad?

LITTLE. The morning rises from your lady's
eye:

If she look clear, we take the happy omen
Of a fair day.

BORN. She'll instantly appear,
To the discredit of your compliment; 210
But you express your wit thus.

KICK. And you modesty,
Not to affect<sup>36</sup> the praises of your own.

BORN. Leaving this subject, what game's now on foot?

What exercise carries the general vote
O' th' town now? Nothing moves without your knowledge.

KICK. The cocking now has all the noise;
I'll have

A hundred pieces<sup>37</sup> of one battle. Oh,
These birds of Mars!

LITTLE. Venus is Mars his bird too.

KICK. Why, and the pretty doves are Venus's,

To show that kisses draw the chariot. 220

LITTLE. I am for that skirmish.

BORN. When shall we have More booths and bagpipes upon Banstead<sup>38</sup> downs?

No mighty race is expected? — But my lady Returns!

Re-enter ARETINA.

ARE. Fair morning to you, gentlemen!
You went not late to bed by<sup>39</sup> your early visit.
You do me honor.

KICK. It becomes our service.

ARE. What news abroad? You hold precious intelligence.

LITTLE. All tongues are so much busy with your praise

They have not time to frame other discourse. Will ['t] please you, madam, taste a sugar-plum? 230

BORN. What does the goldsmith think the pearl is worth

You borrowed of my Lady?

KICK. 'T is a rich one.

BORN. She has many other toys, whose fashion you

Will like extremely. You have no intention To buy any of her jewels?

KICK. Understand me —

BORN. You had rather sell, perhaps. But, leaving this,

I hope you'll dine with us.

KICK. I came a' purpose.

ARE. And where were you last night?

KICK. I, madam? Where

I slept not; it had been sin, where so much Delight and beauty was to keep me waking. There is a lady, madam, will be worth 241

Your free society; my conversation Ne'er knew so elegant and brave a soul, With most incomparable flesh and blood; So spirited! so courtly! speaks the languages, Sings, dances, plays o' th' lute to admiration! 40 Is fair, and paints not; games, too, keeps a table,

And talks most witty satire; has a wit Of a clean 41 Mercury —

LITTLE. Is she married?

KICK. No.

ARE. A virgin?

KICK. Neither.

LITTLE. What, a widow? Something [250 Of this wide commendation might have been Excus'd. This such a prodigy!

KICK. Repent, Before I name her. She did never see Yet full sixteen, an age, in the opinion Of wise men, not contemptible. She has Mourned out her year, too, for the honest knight

That had compassion of her youth, and di'd So timely. Such a widow is not common; And now she shines more fresh and tempting Than any natural virgin.

ARE. What's her name? 260

KICK. She was christened Celestina; by her husband,

40 Wonderfully.

41 Absolute, veritable.

The Lady Bellamour. This ring was hers.

BORN. You borrowed it to copy out the posy.<sup>42</sup>

KICK. Are they not pretty rubies? 'T was a grace

She was pleas'd to show me, that I might have one

Made of the same fashion; for I love

All pretty forms.

ARE. And is she glorious?

KICK. She is full of jewels, madam; but I am

Most taken with the bravery 43 of her mind, Although her garments have all grace and ornament. 270

ARE. You have been high in praises.

KICK. I come short;

No flattery can reach her.

BORN. [aside] Now my lady

Is troubled, as 44 she fear'd to be eclips'd: This news will cost me somewhat.

ARE. You deserve Her favor, for this noble character.<sup>45</sup>

KICK. And I possess it, by my stars' benevolence.

ARE. You must bring us acquainted.

BORN. I pray do, sir;

I long to see her too. — Madam, I have Thought upon 't, and corrected my opinion. Pursue what ways of pleasure your desires Incline you to; not only with my state, 281 But with my person, I will follow you.

I see the folly of my thrift, and will

Repent in sack and prodigality,

To your own heart's content.

ARE. But do not mock.

BORN. Take me to your embraces, gentlemen,

And tutor me.

LITTLE. And will you kiss the ladies?

BORN. And sing and dance. I long to see this beauty;

I would fain lose a hundred pounds at dice now. Thou sha't have another gown and petticoat To-morrow. Will you sell my running-horses? 291

We have no Greek wine in the house, I think; Pray send one of our footmen to the merchant, And throw the hogsheads of March beer 46 into The kennel, to make room for sacks and claret.

What think you to be drunk yet before dinner?
 We will have constant music, and maintain
 Them and their fiddles in fantastic liveries;
 I'll tune my voice to catches. I must have My dining-room enlarg'd, to invite ambassadors. 300
 We'll feast the parish in the fields, and teach
 The military men new discipline,
 Who shall charge all their new <sup>47</sup> artillery
 With oranges and lemons, boy, to play
 All dinner upon our capons.

KICK. He's exalted!

BORN. I will do anything to please my lady;
 Let that suffice; and kiss o' th' same condition.

I am converted; do not you dispute,
 But patiently allow the miracle.

ARE. I am glad to hear you, sir, in so good tune. 310

Enter Servant.

SERV. Madam, the painter.

ARE. I am to sit this morning.

BORN. Do, while I give new directions to my steward.

KICK. With your favor, we'll wait on you;
 sitting's but

A melancholy exercise without
 Some company to discourse.

ARE. It does conclude
 A lady's morning work. We rise, make fine,
 Sit for our picture, and 't is time to dine.

LITTLE. Praying's forgot.

KICK. 'T is out of fashion.
Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>48</sup>

Enter CELESTINA and her Steward.

CEL. Fie! what an air this room has!

STEW. 'T is perfum'd.

CEL. With some cheap stuff. Is it your Wisdom's thrift

To infect my nostrils thus? or is't to favor
 The gout in your Worship's hand, you are afraid

To exercise your pen in your account book?
 Or do you doubt my credit to discharge
 Your bills?

STEW. Madam, I hope you have not found

My duty, with the guilt of sloth or jealousy,
 Unapt to your command.

<sup>48</sup> A room in Celestina's house.

CEL.

You can extenuate
 Your faults with language, sir; but I expect 10

To be obeyed. What hangings have we here!
 STEW. They are arras, madam.

CEL. Impudence! I know't.
 I will have fresher, and more rich; not
 wrought

With faces that may scandalize a Christian,
 With Jewish <sup>49</sup> stories stuff'd with corn and camels.<sup>50</sup>

You had best wrap all my chambers in wild Irish

And make a nursery of monsters here,
 To fright the ladies <sup>51</sup> comes to visit me.

STEW. Madam, I hope —

CEL. I say I will have other,
 Good Master Steward, of a finer loom: 20
 Some silk and silver, if your Worship please
 To let me be at so much cost. I'll have Stories to fit the seasons of the year,
 And change as often as I please.

STEW. You shall, madam.

CEL. I am bound to your consent, forsooth! And is

My coach brought home?

STEW. This morning I expect it.

CEL. The inside, as I gave direction,
 Of crimson plush?

STEW. Of crimson camel <sup>52</sup> plush.

CEL. Ten thousand moths consume't!
 Shall I ride through

The streets in penance, wrapp'd up round in haircloth? 30

Sell't to an alderman; 't will serve his wife
 To go a-feasting to their country-house,<sup>53</sup>

Or fetch a merchant's nurse-child, and come home

Laden with fruit and cheese-cakes. I despise
 it!

STEW. The nails adorn it, madam, set in method,

And pretty forms.

CEL. But single gilt, I warrant.

STEW. No, madam, —

CEL. Another solecism! Oh, fie!
 This fellow will bring me to a consumption
 With fretting at his ignorance. Some lady Had rather never pray than go to church
 in't. 40

The nails not double gilt! To market wo't? <sup>54</sup>

'T will hackney out to Mile End,<sup>55</sup> or convey Your city tumblers<sup>56</sup> to be drunk with cream
And prunes<sup>57</sup> at Islington,<sup>58</sup>

STEW. Good madam, hear me —

CEL. I'll rather be beholding<sup>59</sup> to my aunt,
The Countess, for her mourning coach, than be Disparag'd so. Shall any juggling tradesman Be at charge to shoe his running-horse with gold,<sup>60</sup>

And shall my coach nails be but single gilt?
How dare these knaves abuse me so!

STEW. Vouchsafe [50
To hear me speak.

CEL. Is my sedan yet finish'd,
And liveries for my men-mules,<sup>61</sup> according
As I gave charge?

STEW. Yes, madam, it is finish'd,
But without tilting-plumes at the four corners;
The scarlet's pure, but not embroidered.

CEL. What mischief were it to your conscience

Were my coach lin'd with tissue,<sup>62</sup> and my harness

Cover'd with needle-work? if my sedan
Had all the story of the prodigal
Embroidered with pearl?

STEW. Alas, good madam, [60
I know 't is your own cost; I am but your steward,

And would discharge my duty the best way.
You have been pleas'd to hear me; 't is not for My profit that I manage your estate
And save expense, but for your honor, madam.

CEL. How, sir! my honor?

STEW. Though you hear it not,
Men's tongues are liberal<sup>63</sup> in<sup>64</sup> your character,

Since you began to live thus high. I know
Your fame<sup>65</sup> is precious to you.

CEL. I were best
Make you my governor. Audacious var-
let! 70

How dare you interpose your doting counsel?
Mind your affairs with more obedience,
Or I shall ease you of an office, sir.

Must I be limited to please your Honor,
Or, for the vulgar breath, confine my pleasures?

<sup>65</sup> Reputation.

I will pursue 'em in what shapes I fancy,
Here, and abroad; my entertainments shall Be oft'ner, and more rich. Who shall control me?

I live i' th' Strand, whither few ladies come
To live, and purchase<sup>66</sup> more than fame. I will 80

Be hospitable then, and spare no cost
That may engage all generous report
To trumpet forth my bounty and my bravery,

Till the court envy, and remove. I'll have My house the academy of wits, who shall Exalt<sup>67</sup> with rich sack and sturgeon,
Write panegyrics of my feasts, and praise
The method of my witty superfluities.

The horses shall be taught, with frequent waiting

Upon my gates, to stop in their career 90
Toward Charing Cross, spite of the coachman's fury;

And not a tilter<sup>68</sup> but shall strike<sup>69</sup> his plume,
When he sails by my window. My balcony Shall be the courtier's idol, and more gaz'd
at

Than all the pageantry at Temple Bar,<sup>70</sup>
By country clients.

STEW. Sure my lady's mad.

CEL. Take that for your ill manners.

[Strikes him.]

STEW. Thank you, madam.

I would there were less quicksilver in your fingers. Exit.

CEL. There's more than simple honesty in a servant

Requir'd to his full duty; none should dare 100

But with a look, much less a saucy language, Check at their mistress' pleasure. I'm resolv'd

To pay for some delight: my estate will bear
it;

I'll rein it shorter when I please.

Re-enter Steward.

STEW. A gentleman
Desires to speak with your Ladyship.

CEL. His name?

<sup>69</sup> Lower, as a ship "strikes" her flag, topsail, or topmast, as a token of respect or submission.

<sup>70</sup> Which marked the western limit of the municipal authority. Here the sovereign paused to receive the sword of the city on visits of state.

STEW. He says you know him not ; he seems to be Of quality.<sup>71</sup>

CEL. Admit him. [Exit Steward.]

Enter HAIRCUT.

Sir, with me?

HAIR. Madam, I know not how you may receive This boldness from me ; but my fair intents Known, will incline you to be charitable. [110]

CEL. No doubt, sir.

HAIR. He must live obscurely, madam, That hath not heard what virtues you possess ;

And I, a poor admirer of your fame, Am come to kiss your hand.

CEL. That all your business?

HAIR. Though it were worth much travel, I have more In my ambition.

CEL. Speak it freely, sir.

HAIR. You are a widow.

CEL. So !

HAIR. And I a bachelor.

CEL. You come a-wooing, sir, and would perhaps

Show me a way to reconcile the two?

HAIR. And bless my stars for such a happiness. 120

CEL. I like you, sir, the better, that you do not Wander about, but shoot home to the meaning ;

It is a confidence will make a man Know sooner what to trust to. But I never Saw you before, and I believe you come not With hope to find me desperate<sup>72</sup> upon marriage.

If maids, out of their ignorance of what Men are, refuse these offers, widows may, Out of their knowledge, be allow'd some coyness.

And yet I know not how much happiness [130 A peremptory answer may deprive me of.

You may be some young lord, and though I see not

Your footmen and your groom, they may not be Far off, in conference with your horse. Please you

To instruct me with your title, against which I would not willingly offend.

HAIR. I am A gentleman ; my name is Haircut, madam. CEL. Sweet Master Haircut, are you a courtier?

HAIR. Yes.

CEL. I did think so, by your confidence. Not to detain you, sir, with circumstance,<sup>73</sup> [140 I was not so unhappy in my husband But that 't is possible I may be a wife Again ; but I must tell you, he that wins My affection shall deserve me.

HAIR. I will hope, If you can love, I shall not present, madam, An object to displease you in my person ; And when time, and your patience, shall possess you

With further knowledge of me, and the truth Of my devotion, you will not repent The offer of my service.

CEL. You say well. 150 How long do you imagine you can love, sir? Is it a quotidian<sup>74</sup> or will it hold But every other day?

HAIR. You are pleasant,<sup>75</sup> madam.

CEL. Does 't take you with a burning at the first,

Or with a cold fit? for you gentlemen Have both your summer and your winter service.

HAIR. I am ignorant what you mean ; but I shall never Be cold in my affection to such beauty.

CEL. And 't will be somewhat long ere I be warm in 't.

HAIR. If you vouchsafe me so much honor, madam, 160 That I may wait on you sometimes, I sha' not Despair to see a change.

CEL. But now I know Your mind, you shall not need to tell it when You come again : I shall remember it.

HAIR. You make me fortunate.

Re-enter Steward.

STEW. Madam, your kinswomen, The Lady Novice, and her sister, are New lighted from their coach.

CEL. I did expect 'em, They partly are my pupils. I'll attend 'em.

HAIR. Madam, I have been too great a trespasser

Upon your patience ; I'll take my leave. [170

<sup>71</sup> Gentility, social position.

You have affairs, and I have some employment
Calls me to court; I shall present again
A servant to you. Exit HAIRCUT.

CEL. Sir, you may present,<sup>76</sup>
But not give fire, I hope. — Now to the ladies.
This recreation's past; the next must be
To read to them some court philosophy.
Exeunt.

ACT II — [SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter SIR THOMAS BORNWELL.

BORN. 'T is a strange humor I have undertaken,
To dance and play<sup>2</sup> and spend as fast as she does;
But I am resolv'd: it may do good upon her,
And fright her into thrift. Nay, I'll endeavor
To make her jealous too; if this do not
Allay her gamboling, she's past a woman,
And only a miracle must tame her.

Enter Steward.

STEW. 'T is Master Frederick, my Lady's nephew.

BORN. What of him?

STEW. Is come from the university.

BORN. By whose directions?

STEW. It seems, my Lady's.

BORN. Let me speak with him [10
Before he see his aunt. [Exit Steward.] — I do not like it. —

Re-enter [Steward, with] MASTER FREDERICK, [in his college dress.]

Master Frederick, welcome! I expected not So soon your presence; what's the hasty cause?

FRED. These letters, from my tutor, will acquaint you.

STEW. Welcome home, sweet Master Frederick!

FRED. Where's my aunt?

STEW. She's busy about her painting, in her closet;

The outlandish man of art<sup>3</sup> is copying out
Her countenance.

FRED. She is sitting for her picture?

STEW. Yes, sir; and when 't is drawn she will be hang'd

Next the French cardinal, in the dining-room; 20

But when she hears you're come, she will dismiss

The Belgic gentleman, to entertain
Your Worship.

FRED. Change of air has made you witty.
[Exit Steward.]

BORN. Your tutor gives you a handsome character,

Frederick, and is sorry your aunt's pleasure
Commands you from your studies; but I hope
You have no quarrel to the liberal arts.

Learning is an addition<sup>4</sup> beyond Nobility of birth. Honor of blood,
Without the ornament of knowledge, is 30
A glorious<sup>5</sup> ignorance.

FRED. I never knew more sweet and happy hours

Than I employ'd upon my books. I heard
A part of my philosophy, and was so Delighted with the harmony of nature,
I could have wasted my whole life upon 't.

BORN. [aside] 'T is pity a rash indulgence should corrupt
So fair a genius! — She's here; I'll observe.

Enter ARETINA, ALEXANDER [KICKSHAW], LITTLEWORTH, [and] Steward.

FRED. My most lov'd aunt!

ARE. Support me; I shall faint.

LITTLE. What ails your Ladyship?

ARE. Is that Frederick, [40
In black?

KICK. Yes, madam; but the doublet's satin.

ARE. The boy's undone!<sup>6</sup>

FRED. Madam, you appear troubled.

ARE. Have I not cause? Was not I trusted with

Thy education, boy, and have they sent thee
Home like a very scholar?

KICK. 'T was ill done,
Howe'er they us'd him in the university,
To send him to his friends thus.

FRED. Why, sir? Black,
(For 't is the color that offends your eyesight,)
Is not, within my reading, any blemish:
Sables are no disgrace in heraldry. 50

KICK. 'T is coming from the college thus,
that makes it

Dishonorable. While you w[o]re it for Your father, it was commendable; or were
Your aunt dead, you might mourn, and justify.

<sup>6</sup> Ruined.

ARE. What luck? I did not send him into France!

They would have given him generous education,

Taught him another garb, to wear his lock,<sup>7</sup>
And shape,<sup>8</sup> as gaudy as the summer; how
To dance, and wag his feather à la mode,
To compliment, and cringe;<sup>10</sup> to talk not modestly,

Like, "ay, forsooth," and "no, forsooth" —
to blush,
And look so like a chaplain! — There he might

Have learned a brazen confidence, and observ'd
So well the custom of the country, that
He might, by this time, have invented fashions
For us, and been a benefit to the kingdom;
Preserv'd our tailors in their wits, and sav'd
The charge of sending into foreign courts
For pride and antic<sup>11</sup> fashions. — Observe
In what a posture he does hold his hat now! [70

FRED. Madam, with your pardon, you have
practis'd

Another dialect than was taught me when I was commended to your care and breeding.
I understand not this; Latin or Greek
Are more familiar to my apprehension:
Logic was not so hard in my first lectures
As your strange language.

ARE. Some strong waters; oh!

LITTLE. Comfits will be as comfortable to your stomach, madam. [Offers his box.]

ARE. I fear he's spoil'd for ever! He did
name

Logic, and may, for aught I know, be gone
So far to understand it. I did always Suspect they would corrupt him in the college. —

Will your Greek saws and sentences discharge<sup>12</sup>

The mercer?<sup>13</sup> Or is Latin a fit language
To court a mistress in? — Master Alexander,
If you have any charity, let me
Commend him to your breeding. — I suspect
I must employ my doctor first, to purge
The university that lies in's head;
It alters his complexion.<sup>14</sup>

KICK. If you dare
Trust me to serve him —

ARE. Master Littleworth,
Be you join'd in commission.

LITTLE.

I will teach him

Postures and rudiments.

ARE.

I have no patience

To see him in this shape; it turns my stomach.
When he has cast his academic skin
He shall be yours. I am bound in conscience
To see him bred; his own state<sup>15</sup> shall maintain

The charge, while he's my ward. — Come hither, sir.

FRED. What does my aunt mean to do with
me?

STEW. To make you a fine gentleman, and translate you

Out of your learned language, sir, into
The present Goth and Vandal, which is French.

BORN. [aside] Into what mischief will this humor ebb?

She will undo the boy; I see him ruin'd.
My patience is not manly; but I must Use stratagem to reduce her: open ways
Give me no hope.

Exit.

STEW. You shall be obey'd, madam.
Exeunt [all but FREDERICK and Steward].

FRED. Master Steward, are you sure we do not dream?

Was't not my aunt you talk'd to?

STEW. One that loves you Dear as her life. These clothes do not become
you;

You must have better, sir —

FRED. These are not old.

STEW. More suitable to the town and time;
we keep

No Lent here, nor is't my Lady's pleasure you Should fast from anything you have a mind
to;

Unless it be your learning, which she would have you

Forget with all convenient speed that may be,
For the credit of your noble family.

The case is alter'd since we liv'd i' th' country:
We do not [now]<sup>16</sup> invite the poor o' th' parish
To dinner, keep a table for the tenants; [120
Our kitchen does not smell of beef; the cellar
Defies the price of malt and hops: the footmen
And coach-drivers may be drunk like gentle-
men,

With wine; nor will three fiddlers upon holidays,

With aid of bagpipes, that call'd in the country

<sup>14</sup> Constitution.

To dance, and plough the hall up with their hobnails,
Now make my Lady merry. We do feed Like princes, and feast nothing [else]<sup>17</sup> but princes;

And are these robes fit to be seen amongst
'em?

FRED. My Lady keeps a court then! Is
Sir Thomas 130

Affected<sup>18</sup> with this state and cost?

STEW. He was not,
But is converted; and I hope you wo'<sup>19</sup> not Persist in heresy, but take a course Of riot, to content your friends; you shall Want nothing, if you can be proud, and spend
it

For my Lady's honor. Here are a hundred Pieces, will serve you till you have new clothes;
I will present you with a nag of mine,
Poor tender of my service; please you accept;
My Lady's smile more than rewards me for
it. 140

I must provide fit servants to attend you,
Monsieurs, for horse and foot.

FRED. I shall submit,
If this be my aunt's pleasure, and be rul'd;
My eyes are open'd with this purse already,
And sack will help to inspire me. I must spend it?

STEW. What else, sir?

FRED. I'll begin with you: to encourage
You to have still a special care of me,
There is five pieces — not for your nag.

STEW. No, sir; I hope it is not.

FRED. Buy a beaver
For thy own block;<sup>20</sup> I shall be rul'd. Who does 150

Command the wine cellar?

STEW. Who command but you, sir?

FRED. I'll try to drink a health or two, my aunt's,
Or anybody's; and if that foundation
Stagger me not too much, I will commence
In all the arts of London.

STEW. If you find, sir,
The operation of the wine exalt
Your blood to the desire of any female Delight, I know your aunt wo' not deny
Any of her chambermaids to practice on;
She loves you but too well.

FRED. I know not how [160
I may be for that exercise. — Farewell, Aristotle;

<sup>17</sup> Add. Dyce. <sup>18</sup> Favorably disposed toward.
<sup>19</sup> Will. <sup>20</sup> Head: properly, hat-mould.

Prithee commend me to the library<sup>21</sup>
At Westminster; my bones I bequeath thither,
And to the learned worms that mean to visit
'em.

I will compose myself; I begin to think
I have lost time indeed. — Come to the wine cellar. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE II]<sup>22</sup>

Enter CELESTINA, MARIANA, [and] ISABELLA.

MAR. But shall we not, madam, expose ourselves

To censure for this freedom?

CEL. Let them answer
That dare mistake us. Shall we be so much Cowards, to be frighted from our pleasure
Because men have malicious tongues, and show
What miserable souls they have? No, Cousin,
We hold our life and fortunes upon no
Man's charity; if they dare show so little Discretion to traduce our fames, we will Be guilty of so much wit to laugh at 'em. 10

ISAB. 'Tis a becoming fortitude.

CEL. My stars
Are yet kind to me; for, in a happy minute Be't spoke, I'm not in love, and men shall never

Make my heart lean with sighing,<sup>23</sup> nor with tears

Draw on my eyes the infamy of spectacles.
'Tis the chief principle to keep your heart
Under your own obedience; jest, but love not.
I say my prayers, yet can wear good clothes,
And only satisfy my tailor for 'em.

I wo' not lose my privilege. 20

MAR. And yet they say your entertainments are,

Give me your pardon, madam, to proclaim
Yourself a widow, and to get a husband.

CEL. As if a lady of my years, some beauty, Left by her husband rich, that had mourn'd
for him

A twelvemonth too, could live so obscure i' th' town

That gallants would not know her, and invite Themselves, without her chargeable proclamations!

Then we are worse than citizens: no widow Left wealthy can be thoroughly warm in mourning, 30

<sup>22</sup> A room in Celestina's house.

<sup>23</sup> Every sigh was supposed to cost a drop of blood.

But some one noble blood, or lusty kindred,
Claps in, with his gilt coach and Flandrian <sup>24</sup>
trotters,

And hurries her away to be a countess.
Courtiers have spies, and great ones with [large] <sup>25</sup> titles,

Cold in their own estates, would warm themselves

At a rich city bonfire.

ISAB. Most true, madam.

CEL. No matter for corruption of the blood ;
Some undone courtier made her husband rich, <sup>26</sup>
And this new lord receives it back again.

Admit it were my policy, and that <sup>40</sup>
My entertainments pointed to acquaint me
With many suitors, that I might be safe
And make the best election, could you blame
me?

MAR. Madam, 't is wisdom.

CEL. But I should be
In my thoughts miserable, to be fond
Of <sup>27</sup> leaving the sweet freedom I possess,
And court myself into new marriage fetters.
I now observe men's several wits and windings, <sup>28</sup>

And can laugh at their follies.

MAR. You have given
A most ingenious <sup>29</sup> satisfaction. <sup>50</sup>

CEL. One thing I'll tell you more, and this
I give you

Worthy your imitation, from my practice :
You see me merry, full of song and dancing,
Pleasant in language, apt to all delights
That crown a public meeting ; but you cannot Accuse me of being prodigal of my favors
To any of my guests. I do not summon,
By any wink, a gentleman to follow me
To my withdrawing chamber ; I hear all Their pleas in court, nor can they boast abroad, <sup>60</sup>

And do me justice, after a salute, <sup>30</sup>
They have much conversation with my lip.
I hold the kissing of my hand a courtesy,
And he that loves me must, upon the strength
Of that, expect <sup>31</sup> till I renew his favor.
Some ladies are so expensive in their graces
To those that honor 'em, and so prodigal,
That in a little time they have nothing but
The naked sin left to reward their servants ; <sup>32</sup>
Whereas a thrift in our rewards will keep [70

<sup>24</sup> Flemish.

<sup>25</sup> So Dyce ; Q charge.

<sup>26</sup> I.e., the deceased citizen made his money by ruining some courtier.

<sup>32</sup> Suitors.

Men long in their devotion, and preserve Ourselves in stock, to encourage those that honor us.

ISAB. This is an art worthy a lady's practice.

CEL. It takes not from the freedom of our
mirth,

But seems to advance it, when we can possess
Our pleasures with security of our honor ;
And, that preserv'd, I welcome all the joys
My fancy can let in. In this I have given
The copy of my mind, nor do I blush
You understand it.

ISAB. You have honor'd us. <sup>80</sup>

Enter Celestina's Gentlewoman.

GENTLEW. Madam, Sir William Scentlove's come to wait on you.

CEL. There's one would be a client. —
Make excuse

For a few minutes. [Exit Gentlewoman.]

MAR. One that comes a-wooing?

CEL. Such a thing he would seem ; but in his guiltiness

Of little land, his expectation is not
So valiant as it might be. He wears <sup>33</sup> clothes,
And feeds with noblemen ; to some, I hear,
No better than a wanton emissary,
Or scout for Venus' wild fowl ; which made tame,

He thinks no shame to stand court sentinel, <sup>90</sup>
In hope of the reversion. <sup>34</sup>

MAR. I have heard

That some of them are often my Lord's tasters :

The first fruits they condition <sup>35</sup> for, and will Exact as fees, for the promotion. <sup>36</sup>

CEL. Let them agree ; there's no account shall lie

For me among their traffic.

Re-enter Gentlewoman.

GENTLEW. Master Haircut, madam,
Is new come in, to tender you his service.

CEL. Let him discourse a little with Sir
William. [Exit Gentlewoman.]

MAR. What is this gentleman, Master
Haircut, madam?

I note him very gallant, and much courted [100
By gentlemen of quality.

CEL. I know not,
More than a trim, gay man ; he has some great office,

<sup>33</sup> Dyce adds rich.

<sup>34</sup> Ultimate possession.

<sup>36</sup> I.e., their efforts in furthering the affair.

Sure, by his confident behavior.
He would be entertain'd under the title
Of servant to me, and I must confess,
He is the sweetest of all men that visit me.

ISAB. How mean you, madam?

CEL. He is full of powder ;
He will save much in perfume for my chamber,
Were he but constant here. — Give 'em access.

Enter SIR WILLIAM SCENTLOVE [and] MASTER
HAIRCUT.

SCENT. Madam, the humblest of your servants is [110]
Exalted to a happiness, if you smile
Upon my visit.

HAIR. I must beg your charity
Upon my rudeness, madam ; I shall give
That day up lost to any happiness,
When I forget to tender you my service.

CEL. You practice courtship,<sup>37</sup> gentlemen.

SCENT. But cannot Find where with more desert to exercise it.
What lady's this, I pray?

CEL. A kinswoman
Of mine, Sir William.

SCENT. I am more her servant.
[SCENTLOVE talks apart with the other
ladies.]

CEL. You came from court, now, I presume?

HAIR. 'Tis, madam, [120]
The sphere I move in, and my destiny
Was kind to place me there, where I enjoy
All blessings that a mortal can possess
That lives not in your presence ; and I should Fix my ambition, when you would vouch-
safe

Me so much honor to accept from me
An humble entertainment there.

CEL. But by What name shall I be known? In what degree
Shall I be of kin[d]red to you?

HAIR. How mean you, madam?

CEL. Perhaps you'll call me sister : I shall take it [130]

A special preferment ; or it may be
I may pass under title of your mistress,
If I seem rich, and fair enough, to engage
Your confidence to own me.

HAIR. I would hope —

CEL. But 't is not come to that yet ; you will, sir,
Excuse my mirth.

<sup>37</sup> Courtliness.

HAIR. Sweet madam !

CEL. Shall I take
Boldness to ask what place you hold in court?
'T is an uncivil curiosity ;
But you'll have mercy to a woman's question.

HAIR. My present condition, madam, carries [140]
Honor and profit, though not to be nam'd
With that employment I expect i' th' state,
Which shall discharge the first maturity
Upon your knowledge ; until then, I beg
You allow a modest silence.

CEL. I am charm'd, sir ;
And if you scape ambassador, you cannot Reach a preferment wherein I'm against
you.

But where's Sir William Scentlove?

HAIR. Give him leave
To follow his nose, madam, while he hunts
In view — he'll soon be at a fault.<sup>38</sup>

CEL. You know him? [150]
HAIR. Know Scentlove? not a page but can decipher him ;

The waiting women know him to a scruple ;
He's call'd the blister-maker<sup>39</sup> of the town.

CEL. What's that?
[HAIR.]<sup>40</sup> The laundry ladies can resolve<sup>41</sup> you,

And you may guess : an arrant epicure,
As this day lives, born to a pretty wit,
A knight, [too] ;<sup>42</sup> but no gentleman. I must Be plain to you ; your Ladyship may have
Use of this knowledge, but conceal the author.

SCENT. [coming forward, as HAIRCUT joins the other ladies] I kiss your fairest hand.

MAR. You make a difference ; [160]
Pray reconcile them to an equal whiteness.

SCENT. You wound my meaning, lady.

CEL. Nay, Sir William
Has the art of compliment.

SCENT. Madam, you honor me
'Bove my desert of language.

CEL. Will you please
To enrich me with your knowledge of that gentleman?

SCENT. Do you not know him, madam?

CEL. What is he?

SCENT. A camphire<sup>43</sup> ball ; you shall know more hereafter ;

<sup>38</sup> Lose the scent.

<sup>39</sup> Alluding to the Spanish fly, and its provocative effect. I.e., he is a pimp. Cf. ll. 87–89.

<sup>40</sup> Emend. Dyce ; Q Is.

mous with "harlot."

<sup>42</sup> Add. Dyce.

<sup>43</sup> Camphor ; balls of it were used by barbers.

He shall tell you himself, and save my character ;

Till then, — you see he's proud.

CEL. One thing, gentlemen,
I observe in your behavior, which is rare [170
In two that court one mistress: you pre-serve

A noble friendship ; there's no gum within
Your hearts ; you cannot fret,<sup>44</sup> or show an envy

Of one another's hope ; some would not govern

Their passions with that temper !

SCENT. The whole world
Sha' not divorce our friendship, — Master Haircut !

Would I had lives to serve him ! He is lost
To goodness does not honor him.

HAIR. My knight !

CEL. [aside] This is right playing at court shuttlecock.<sup>45</sup>

Re-enter Gentlewoman.

GENTLEW. Madam, there is a gentleman
desires 180

To speak w' ee, one Sir Thomas Bornwell.

CEL. Bornwell ?

GENTLEW. He says he is a stranger to your Ladyship.

SCENT. I know him.

HAIR. Your neighbor, madam.

SCENT. Husband to
The lady that so revels in the Strand.

HAIR. He has good parts, they say, but cannot help
His lady's bias.

CEL. They have both much fame
I' th' town, for several <sup>46</sup> merits. Pray admit him. [Exit Gentlewoman.]

HAIR. [aside] What comes he for ?

Enter Sir THOMAS [BORNWELL].

BORN. Your pardon, noble lady, that I
have Presum'd, a stranger to your knowledge, —

[Salutes CELESTINA.]

CEL. Sir, [190
Your worth was here before you, and your person

Cannot be here ungrateful.

BORN. 'T is the bounty

<sup>44</sup> Chafe. "Velvet, when stiffened with gum, quickly rubbed and fretted itself out." (Skeat and Mayhew.)

<sup>45</sup> I.e., at bandying of compliments.

<sup>46</sup> Different.

Of your sweet disposition, madam. — Make
me

Your servant, lady, by her fair example,
To favor me. — [ISABELLA gives him her cheek.] <sup>47</sup> I never knew one turn

Her cheek to a gentleman that came to kiss
her,

But sh' ad a stinking breath. — Your servant,
gentlemen.

Will Scentlove, how is 't ?

CEL. [aside to ISABEL] I am sorry, Coz,
To accuse you ; we in nothing more betray
Ourselves to censure of ridiculous pride 200
Than answering a fair salute too rudely.

Oh, it shows ill upon a gentlewoman
Not to return the modest lip, if she Would have the world believe her breath is
not

Offensive.

BORN. Madam, I have business <sup>48</sup>
With you.

SCENT. [aside] His looks are pleasant.

CEL. [walking aside with BORNWELL] With me, sir ?

BORN. I hear you have an exc'llent wit,
madam ;

I see you're fair.

CEL. The first is but report ;
And do not trust your eyesight for the last,
'Cause I presume y' are mortal, and may
err. 210

HAIR. He is very gamesome.

BORN. Y' ave an exc'llent voice,
(They say you catch'd it from a dying swan,)
Which, join'd to the sweet harmony of your lute,

You ravish all mankind.

CEL. Ravish mankind ?

BORN. With their consent.

CEL. It were the stranger rape ;
But there's the less indictment lies against it :
And there is hope your little honesties <sup>49</sup>

Cannot be much the worse, for men do rather Believe they had a maidenhead, than put Themselves to th' rack of memory how long
'T is since they left the burden of their innocence. 221

BORN. Why, you are bitter, madam !

CEL. So is physic ;
I do not know your constitution.

BORN. You shall, if ['t] please you, madam.

CEL. Y' are too hasty ;

<sup>47</sup> Dyce : "offers to salute Isab. who turns from him." But the point is that she withholds her lips.

<sup>49</sup> Chastities.

I must examine what certificate

You have first, to prefer you.

BORN. Fine! certificate?

CEL. Under your lady's hand and seal.

BORN. Go to ;

I see you are a wag.

CEL. But take heed how

You trust to 't.

BORN. I can love you in my wedlock,
As well as that young gallant o' th' first
hair, 230

Or the knight-bachelor ; and can return
As amorous delight to thy soft bosom.

CEL. Your person and your language are both strangers.

BORN. But may be more familiar ; I have those
That dare make affidavit for my body.

CEL. D' ee mean your surgeon? <sup>50</sup>

BORN. My surgeon, madam?
I know not how you value my abilities,
But I dare undertake as much, to express
My service to your Ladyship, and with
As fierce ambition fly to your commands, [240
As the most valiant of these <sup>51</sup> lay siege to
you.

CEL. You dare not, sir.

BORN. How, madam?

CEL. I will justify 't.
You dare not marry me ; and I imagine
Some here, should I consent, would fetch a priest

Out of the fire. <sup>52</sup>

BORN. I have a wife indeed.

CEL. And there's a statute not repeal'd, I take it.

BORN. Y' are in the right ; I must confess
y' ave hit

And bled me in a master vein.

CEL. You think

I took you on the advantage ; use your best Skill at defence, I'll come up to your
valor, 250

And show another work you dare not do :

You dare not, sir, be virtuous.

BORN. I dare,

By this fair hand I dare ; and ask a pardon,
If my rude words offend thy innocence,
Which, in a form so beautiful, would shine
To force a blush in them suspected it,
And from the rest draw wonder.

<sup>52</sup> I.e., should I consent to marry, not you, but one of them, would go through fire to fetch a priest.

HAIR.

I like not

Their secret parley ; shall I interrupt 'em?

ISAB. By no means, sir.

SCENT. Sir Thomas was not wont
To show so much a courtier.

MAR. He cannot [260

Be prejudicial to you ; suspect not

Your own deserts so much : he's married.

BORN. I have other business, madam : you
keep music ;

I came to try how you can dance.

CEL. You did? — [aside] I'll try his humor
out of breath. —

Although I boast no cunning, sir, in revels,
If you desire to show your art that way,
I can wait on you.

BORN. You much honor me ;

Nay, all must join to make a harmony.

They dance.

BORN. I have nothing now, madam, but to beseech, 270

After a pardon for my boldness, you
Would give occasion to pay my gratitude.

I have a house will be much honor'd,
If you vouchsafe your presence ; and a wife
Desires to present herself your servant.

I came with the ambition to invite you ;

Deny me not ; your person you shall trust
On fair security.

CEL. Sir, although I use not
This freedom with a stranger, you shall have
No cause to hold me obstinate.

BORN. You grace me. [280
Sir William Scentlove —

HAIR. I must take my leave.
You will excuse me, madam ; court attend-
ances —

CEL. By any means.

BORN. Ladies, you will vouchsafe
Your company?

ISAB. We wait upon you, sir. Exeunt.

ACT III — [SCENE II]<sup>1</sup>

Table and looking-glass. Enter Lord, un-ready ;<sup>2</sup> HAIRCUT preparing his periwig.

LORD. What hour is 't?

HAIR. 'Bout three a'clock, my Lord.

LORD. 'T is time to rise.

HAIR. Your Lordship went but late
To bed last night.

LORD. 'T was early in the morning.

<sup>1</sup> A room in the Lord's house. <sup>2</sup> Undressed.

He shall tell you himself, and save my character ;

Themselves to th' rack of memory how long
'T is since they left the burden of their innocence. 221

BORN. Why, you are bitter, madam !

CEL. So is physic ;
I do not know your constitution.

BORN. You shall, if ['t] please you, madam.

CEL. Y' are too hasty ;

<sup>47</sup> Dyce : "offers to salute Isab. who turns from him." But the point is that she withholds her lips.

<sup>49</sup> Chastities.

I must examine what certificate

You have first, to prefer you.

BORN. Fine ! certificate ?

CEL. Under your lady's hand and seal.

BORN. Go to ;

I see you are a wag.

CEL. But take heed how

You trust to 't.

BORN. I can love you in my wedlock,
As well as that young gallant o' th' first
hair, 230

Or the knight-bachelor ; and can return

As amorous delight to thy soft bosom.

CEL. Your person and your language are both strangers.

BORN. But may be more familiar ; I have those

That dare make affidavit for my body.

CEL. D' ee mean your surgeon ? <sup>50</sup>

BORN. My surgeon, madam ?

I know not how you value my abilities,
But I dare undertake as much, to express
My service to your Ladyship, and with
As fierce ambition fly to your commands, [240
As the most valiant of these <sup>51</sup> lay siege to
you.

CEL. You dare not, sir.

BORN. How, madam ?

CEL. I will justify 't.

You dare not marry me ; and I imagine
Some here, should I consent, would fetch a priest

Out of the fire. <sup>52</sup>

BORN. I have a wife indeed.

CEL. And there's a statute not repeal'd, I take it.

BORN. Y' are in the right ; I must confess
y' ave hit

And bled me in a master vein.

CEL. You think

I took you on the advantage ; use your best Skill at defence, I'll come up to your
valor, 250

And show another work you dare not do :

You dare not, sir, be virtuous.

BORN. I dare,

By this fair hand I dare ; and ask a pardon,
If my rude words offend thy innocence,
Which, in a form so beautiful, would shine
To force a blush in them suspected it,
And from the rest draw wonder.

<sup>50</sup> Who can certify that he is free from venereal disease.

<sup>51</sup> Understand "who."

<sup>52</sup> I.e., should I consent to marry, not you, but one of them, would go through fire to fetch a priest.

HAIR.

I like not

Their secret parley ; shall I interrupt 'em ?

ISAB. By no means, sir.

SCENT. Sir Thomas was not wont
To show so much a courtier.

MAR. He cannot [260

Be prejudicial to you ; suspect not

Your own deserts so much : he's married.

BORN. I have other business, madam : you
keep music ;

I came to try how you can dance.

CEL. You did ? — [aside] I'll try his humor
out of breath. —

Although I boast no cunning, sir, in revels,

If you desire to show your art that way,

I can wait on you.

BORN. You much honor me ;

Nay, all must join to make a harmony.

They dance.

BORN. I have nothing now, madam, but to
beseech, 270

After a pardon for my boldness, you

Would give occasion to pay my gratitude.

I have a house will be much honor'd,

If you vouchsafe your presence ; and a wife

Desires to present herself your servant.

I came with the ambition to invite you ;

Deny me not ; your person you shall trust

On fair security.

CEL. Sir, although I use not

This freedom with a stranger, you shall have
No cause to hold me obstinate.

BORN. You grace me. [280

Sir William Scentlove —

HAIR. I must take my leave.

You will excuse me, madam ; court attend-
ances —

CEL. By any means.

BORN. Ladies, you will vouchsafe
Your company ?

ISAB. We wait upon you, sir. Exeunt.

ACT III — [SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Table and looking-glass. Enter Lord, un-ready ; <sup>2</sup> HAIRCUT preparing his perwig.

LORD. What hour is 't ?

HAIR. 'Bout three a'clock, my Lord.

LORD. 'T is time to rise.

HAIR. Your Lordship went but late
To bed last night.

LORD. 'T was early in the morning.

<sup>1</sup> A room in the Lord's house. <sup>2</sup> Undressed.

SEC. [within] Expect <sup>3</sup> awhile; my Lord is busy.

Enter Secretary.

LORD. What's the matter?

SEC. Here is a lady
Desires access to you upon some affairs,
She says, may specially concern your Lordship.

LORD. A lady? What's her name?

SEC. Madam Decoy.

LORD. Decoy? Prithee admit her.

Enter DECOY.

Have you business, madam,

With me?

DEC. And such, I hope, as will not be [10
Offensive to your Lordship.

LORD. I pray speak it.

DEC. I would desire your Lordship's ear more private.

LORD. Wait i' th' next chamber till I call. —

Exeunt [Secretary and HAIRCUT].

Now, madam.

DEC. Although I am a stranger to your Lordship,
I would not lose a fair occasion offer'd
To show how much I honor and would serve
you.

LORD. Please you to give me the particular,
That I may know the extent of my engagement.

I am ignorant by what desert you should
Be encourag'd to have care of me.

DEC. My Lord, [20
I will take boldness to be plain; beside Your other excellent parts, you have much fame

For your sweet inclination to our sex.

LORD. How d' ee mean, madam?

DEC. I' that way your Lordship Hath honorably practis'd upon some
Not to be nam'd. Your noble constancy
To a mistress hath deserv'd our general vote;
And I, a part of womankind, have thought
How to express my duty.

LORD. In what, madam?

DEC. Be not so strange,<sup>4</sup> my Lord. I [knew]<sup>5</sup> the beauty 30
And pleasures of your eyes, that handsome
creature

With whose fair life all your delight took leave,
And to whose memory you have paid too
much

Sad tribute.

* Wait. * Offish. * So Dyce (silently); Q know.

LORD. What's all this?

DEC. This: if your Lordship
Accept my service, in pure zeal to cure
Your melancholy, I could point where you might

Repair your loss.

LORD. Your Ladyship, I conceive,
Doth traffic in flesh merchandise.

DEC. To men
Of honor, like yourself. I am well known
To some in court, and come not with ambi-
tion 40

Now to supplant your officer.<sup>6</sup>

LORD. What is
The lady of pleasure you prefer?

DEC. A lady
Of birth and fortune, one upon whose virtue
I may presume, the Lady Aretina.

LORD. Wife to Sir Thomas Bornwell?

DEC. The same, sir.

LORD. Have you prepar'd her?

DEC. Not for your Lordship, till I have found your pulse.

I am acquainted with her disposition,
She has a very applicable<sup>7</sup> nature.

LORD. And, madam, when expect you to be whipp'd<sup>8</sup> 50

For doing these fine favors?

DEC. How, my Lord?
Your Lordship does but jest, I hope; you
make

A difference between a lady that Does honorable offices, and one They call a bawd. Your Lordship was not wont

To have such coarse opinion of our practice.

LORD. The Lady Aretina is my kinswoman.

DEC. What if she be, my Lord? The nearer blood,

The dearer sympathy.

LORD. I'll have thee carted.<sup>9</sup>

DEC. Yo' Lordship wo' not so much stain
your honor 60

And education, to use a woman

Of my quality —

LORD. 'T is possible you may
Be sent off with an honorable convoy
Of halberdiers.

DEC. Oh, my good Lord!

LORD. Your ladyship shall be no protection,
If thou but stay'st three minutes.

<sup>6</sup> Here evidently = "pander", "bawd." Cf. l. 160.
<sup>7</sup> Compliant.

<sup>8</sup> A regular punishment of bawds.

<sup>9</sup> Bawds were also punished by being exhibited through the streets in a cart.

DEC. I am gone. —
When next you find rebellion in your blood,<sup>10</sup>
May all within ten mile o' th' court turn honest! <sup>11</sup> Exit.

LORD. I do not find that proneness, since the fair
Bella Maria died; my blood is cold, 70
Nor is there beauty enough surviving
To heighten me to wantonness. — Who waits?

Re-enter HAIRCUT [and Secretary].

And what said my Lady?

HAIR. The silent language of her face, my
Lord,
Was not so pleasant as it show'd upon
Her entrance.

LORD. Would any man that meets
This lady take her for a bawd?

HAIR. She does
The trade an honor, credit to the profession.
We may in time see baldness, quarter noses,
And rotten legs <sup>12</sup> to take the wall <sup>13</sup> of foot-cloths.<sup>14</sup> 80

LORD. I ha' thought better; call the lady
back. —

I wo' not lose this opportunity. —

Bid her not fear. [Exit Secretary.] — The favor is not common,
And I'll reward it. I do wonder much
Will Scentlove was not here to-day.

HAIR. I heard him say this morning he would wait
Upon your Lordship. — She is return'd, sir.

Re-enter Secretary and DECOY.

SEC. Madam, be confident, my Lord's not angry.

LORD. You return welcome, madam; you are better
Read in your art, I hope, than to be frightened
With any shape of anger, when you bring [91
Such news to gentlemen. Madam, you shall Soon understand how I accept the office.

DEC. You are the first lord, since I studied carriage,<sup>15</sup>
That show'd such infidelity and fury
Upon so kind a message. Every gentleman
Will show some breeding; but if one Right Honorable
Should not have noble blood —

<sup>11</sup> Chaste.

<sup>12</sup> All resulting from syphilis.

<sup>13</sup> I.e., have precedence.

<sup>14</sup> Cloths, sometimes embroidered, laid across horses' backs and hanging almost to the ground.
Their use was a mark of wealth or rank.

<sup>15</sup> Deportment.

LORD. You shall return
My compliment, in a letter, to my Lady
Aretina. Favor me with a little patience. —
Show her that chamber.

DEC. I'll attend your Lordship. [101
Exeunt [DECOY and HAIRCUT].

LORD. Write: Madam, where your honor is in danger, my love must not be silent.

Enter SCENTLOVE and KICKSHAW.

Scentlove and Kickshaw!

KICK. Your Lordship's busy.

LORD. Writing a letter; — nay, it sha' not bar

Any discourse.

[Walks alternately to the Secretary and to SCENTLOVE and KICKSHAW.]

SEC. "Silent."

LORD. "Though I be no physician, I may prevent a fever in your blood." —
And where have you spent the morning's conversation? 110

SCENT. Where you would have given the best barbary
In your stable to have met on honorable
terms.

LORD. What new beauty? You acquaint yourselves

With none but wonders.

SCENT. 'T is too low, — a miracle.

LORD. 'T will require a strong faith.

SEC. "Your blood."

LORD. "If you be innocent, preserve your fame, lest this Decoy-madam betray it, to your repentance." — 119

By what name is she known?

SCENT. Ask Alexander;
He knows her.

KICK. Whom?

SCENT. The Lady Celestina.

LORD. He has a vast knowledge of ladies.

'Las, poor Alexander!

When dost thou mean thy body shall lie fallow?

KICK. When there is mercy in a petticoat;
I must turn pilgrim for some breath.

LORD. I think
'T were cooler travel, if you examine it,
Upon the hoof through Spain.

SCENT. Through Ethiopia.

LORD. Nay, less laborious to serve a prenti-ceship

In Peru, and dig gold out of the mine,
Though all the year were dog days. 130

SEC. "To repentance."

LORD. "In brief, this lady, could you fall from virtue, within my knowledge will not blush to be a bawd."

SCENT. But hang 't, 't is honorable journey-work ;

Thou art famous by it, and thy name's up.

KICK. So, sir !
Let me ask you a question, my dear knight ;
Which is less servile, to bring up the pheasant,
And wait, or sit at table uncontroll'd, 139
And carve to my own appetite ?

SCENT. No more ;
Th'art witty as I am.

SEC. "A bawd."

SCENT. How's that ?

KICK. Oh, you are famous by 't, and your name's up, sir.

LORD. "Be wise, and reward my caution with timely care of yourself, so I shall not repent to be known your [loving]<sup>16</sup> kinsman and servant." —

Gentlemen, the Lady Celestina,
Is she so rare a thing ?

KICK. If you'll have my Opinion, my Lord, I never saw
So sweet, so fair, so rich a piece of nature.

LORD. I'll show thee a fairer presently, to shame 151
Thy eyes and judgment : look o' that. [Gives him a miniature.] — So ; I'll subscribe.
[Signs the letter.]

Seal it ; I'll excuse your pen for the direction.

KICK. Bella Maria's picture ! she was handsome.

SCENT. But not to be compar'd —

LORD. Your patience, gentlemen ; I'll return instantly. Exit.

KICK. Whither is my Lord gone ?

SEC. To a lady i' th' next chamber.

SCENT. What is she ?

SEC. You shall pardon me ; I am his secretary.

SCENT. I was wont to be of his counsel. A new officer,<sup>17</sup> 160

And I not know 't ? I am resolv'd to batter
All other with the praise of Celestina ;
I must retain<sup>18</sup> him.

Re-enter LORD.

LORD. Has not that object
Convinc'd your erring judgments ?

KICK. What ! this picture ?

LORD. Were but your thoughts as capable as mine

Of her idea,<sup>19</sup> you would wish no thought
That were not active in her praise, above
All worth and memory of her sex.

SCENT. She was fair,
I must confess ; but had your Lordship look'd
With eyes more narrow, and some less affection,
170

Upon her face, —

KICK. [returning the miniature] I do not love the copies

Of any dead : they make me dream of goblins ;
Give me a living mistress, with but half
The beauty of Celestina. Come, my Lord,
'T is pity that a lord of so much flesh<sup>20</sup>
Should waste upon a ghost, when they are living
Can give you a more honorable consumption.

SCENT. Why, do you mean, my Lord, to live an infidel ?

Do, and see what will come on 't ; observe<sup>21</sup>
still,

And dote upon your vigils ; build a chamber
Within a rock, a tomb among the worms,
Not far off, where you may, in proof apocryphal,
182

Court 'em not devour the pretty pile
Of flesh your mistress carried to the grave.
There are no women in the world ; all eyes,
And tongues, and lips, are buried in her coffin !

LORD. Why, do you think yourselves competent judges
Of beauty, gentlemen ?

BOTH. What should hinder us ?

KICK. I have seen and tried as many as another,

With a mortal back.

LORD. Your eyes are brib'd, [190
And your hearts chain'd to some desires ; you cannot

Enjoy the freedom of a sense.

KICK. Your Lordship
Has a clear eyesight, and can judge and penetrate.

LORD. I can, and give a perfect censure<sup>22</sup> of Each line and point ; distinguish beauty from
A thousand forms, which your corrupted optics

Would pass for natural.

SCENT. I desire no other
Judge should determine us,<sup>23</sup> and if your Lordship

Dare venture but your eyes upon this lady,
I'll stand their justice, and be confident 200

<sup>17</sup> See on l. 41.

<sup>22</sup> Judgment.

<sup>23</sup> Decide for us.

You shall give Celestina victory
And triumph o'er all beauties past and living.

KICK. I dare, my Lord, venture a suit of clothes

You'll be o'ercome.

LORD. You do not know my fortit[ude].

SCENT. Nor frailty; you dare not trust yourself to see her.

LORD. Think you so, gentlemen? I dare see this creature

To make you know your errors, and the difference

Of her whose memory is my saint. Not trust
My senses? I dare see, and speak with her. [209
Which holds the best acquaintance to prepare
My visit to her?

SCENT. I will do't, my Lord.

KICK. She is a lady free in entertainments.

LORD. I would give this advantage to your
cause :

Bid [her] <sup>24</sup> appear in all the ornaments

Did ever wait on beauty, all the riches

Pride can put on, and teach her face more charm

Than ever poet dress'd up Venus in ;

Bid her be all the Graces, and the Queen

Of Love in one ; I'll see her, Scentlove, and Bring off my heart, arm'd but [with] <sup>25</sup> single thought <sup>220</sup>

Of one that is dead, without a wound ; and
when

I have made your folly prisoner, I'll laugh at
you.

SCENT. She shall expect you ; trust to me for knowledge.

LORD. I'm for the present somewhere else engag'd.

Let me hear from you.

SCENT. So ! I am glad he's yet
So near conversion.

KICK. I am for Aretina.

SCENT. No mention of my Lord.

KICK. Prepare his lady :

'T is time he were reduc'd <sup>26</sup> to the old sport ;
One lord like him more would undo the court.

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE II] <sup>27</sup>

Enter ARETINA, with a letter, [and] DECOY.

DEC. He is the ornament of your blood,<sup>28</sup>
madam ;

I am much bound to his Lordship.

<sup>28</sup> Family, kindred.

ARE.

He gives you

A noble character.

DEC.

'T is his goodness, madam.

ARE. [aside] I wanted such an engine. My Lord has Done me a courtesy, to disclose her nature ;

I now know one to trust, and will employ
her. —

Touching my Lord, for reasons which I shall Offer to your Ladyship hereafter, I

Desire you would be silent ; but, to show
How much I dare be confident in your secrecy, <sup>10</sup>

I pour my bosom forth. I love a gentleman,
One whom there wo' not [need] <sup>29</sup> much conjuration

To meet. — Your ear. [Whispers.]

DEC.

I apprehend you, and I shall Be happy to be serviceable. I am sorry

Your Ladyship did not know me before now.

I have done offices ; and not a few

Of the nobility but have done feats

Within my house, which is so convenient

For situation, and artful chambers,

And pretty pictures to provoke the fancy. [20

Enter LITTLEWORTH.

LITTLE. Madam, all pleasures languish in your absence.

ARE. Your pardon a few minutes, sir. —
You must

Contrive it thus. [Walks aside with DECOY.]

LITTLE. I attend, and shall account it
Honor to wait on your return.

ARE.

He may not

Have the least knowledge of my name or person.

DEC. I have practis'd that already for some great ones,

And dare again, to satisfy you, madam ;

I have a thousand ways to do sweet offices.

LITTLE. If this Lady Aretina should be honest,

I ha' lost time. She's free as air ; I must <sup>30</sup>

Have closer conference, and if I have art,

Make her affect me in revenge.

DEC.

This evening?

Leave me to manage things.

ARE.

You will oblige me.

DEC. You shall commend my art, and thank me after. Exit.

ARE. I hope the revels are maintained
within.

LITTLE. By Sir Thomas and his mistress.

<sup>29</sup> So Dyce ; Q meet.

ARE. How? His mistress?

LITTLE. The Lady Celestina; I ne'er saw
Eyes shoot more amorous interchange.

ARE. Is't so?

LITTLE. He wears her favor with mere <sup>30</sup> pride —

ARE. Her favor?

LITTLE. A feather that he ravish'd from her fan; 40

And is so full of courtship, which she smiles on.

ARE. 'T is well.

LITTLE. And praises her beyond all poetry.

ARE. I'm glad he has so much wit.

LITTLE. [aside] Not jealous!

ARE. [aside] This secures me. What would make other ladies pale

With jealousy, gives but a license to my wan-d'rings.

Let him now tax <sup>31</sup> me, if he dare; and yet
Her beauty's worth my envy, and I wish
Revenge upon it, not because he loves,
But that it shines above my own.

Enter ALEXANDER [KICKSHAW].

KICK. Dear madam!

ARE. [aside] I have it. — You two gentlemen profess 50

Much service to me; if I have a way

To employ your wit and secrecy? —

BOTH. You'll honor us.

ARE. You gave a high and worthy character

Of Celestina.

KICK. I remember, madam.

ARE. Do either of you love her?

KICK. Not I, madam.

LITTLE. I would not, if I might.

ARE. She's now my guest

And, by a trick, invited by my husband,

To disgrace me. — You, gentlemen, are held

Wits of the town, the consuls that do govern

The senate here, whose jeers are all authentic.

The taverns and the ordinaries are 61

Made academies, where you come, and all

Your sins and surfeits made [the] <sup>32</sup> time's example.

Your very nods can quell a theatre;

No speech or poem good without your seal;

You can protect scurrility, and publish;

By your authority believ'd, no rapture

Ought to have honest meaning.

KICK. Leave our characters.

LITTLE. And name the employment.

<sup>32</sup> Add. Dyce (silently).

ARE.

You must exercise

The strength of both your wits upon this
lady, 70

And talk her into humbleness or anger,

Both which are equal, to my thought. If
you

Dare undertake this slight thing for my sake,

My favor shall reward it; but be faithful,

And seem to let all spring from your own freedom.

KICK. This all! We can defame her; if
you please,

My friend shall call her whore, or anything,

And never be endanger'd to a duel.

ARE. How's that?

KICK. He can endure a cudgelling, and no
man 80

Will fight after so fair a satisfaction;

But leave us to our art, and do not limit us.

ARE. They are here; begin not till I whisper you.

Enter SIR THOMAS [BORNWELL], CELESTINA,
MARIANA, [and] ISABELLA.

ARE. Je vous prie, madame, d'excuser l'importunité de mes affaires, qui m'ont fait offenser, par mon absence, une dame de laquelle j'ai reçu tant d'obligation.

CEL. *Pardonnez-moi, madame; vous me
faîtes trop d'honneur.*

ARE. C'est bien de la douceur de votre na- [90 turel, que vous tenez cette <sup>33</sup> langage; mais j'espère que mon mari n'a pas manqué de vous entretenir en mon absence.

CEL. En vérité, monsieur nous a fort obligé[es].

ARE. Il eût trop failli, s'il n'eût tâché de tout son pouvoir à vous rendre toutes sortes de services.

CEL. C'est de sa bonté qu'il nous a tant favorisé[es].

ARE. De la vôtre plutôt, madame, qu[il] [100 vous fait donner d'interprétation si bénigne à ses efforts.

CEL. Je vois bien que la victoire sera toujours à madame, et de langage et de la courtesie.<sup>34</sup>

ARE. Vraiment, madame, que<sup>35</sup> jamais personne a plus désiré l'honneur de votre compagnie que moi.

CEL. Laissons-en, je vous supplie, des complimens, et permettez à votre servante de vous baiser les mains. 110

ARE. Vous m'obligez trop.

BORN. I have no more patience; let's be merry again

<sup>33</sup> Sic.

In our own language. Madam, our mirth cools. —
Our nephew!

Enter FREDERICK [drunk, and Steward].

ARE. Passion of my brain!

FRED. Save you, gentlemen! save you,
ladies!

ARE. I am undone.

FRED. I must salute; no matter at which end I begin. [Salutes CELESTINA.]

ARE. There's a compliment! 120

CEL. Is this your nephew, madam?

ARE. *Je vous prie, madame, d'excuser les habits et le rude comportement de mon cousin.
Il est tout fraîchement venu de l'université, où on l'a tout gâté.*

CEL. Excusez-moi, madame, il est bien accompli.

FRED. This language should be French by the motions of your heads and the mirth of your faces. 130

ARE. I am dishonor'd.

FRED. 'T is one of the finest tongues for ladies to show their teeth in; if you'll Latin,
I am for you, or Greek it; my tailor has not put me into French yet. Mille basia, basia mille.

CEL. Je ne vous entends pas, monsieur: I understand you not, sir.

FRED. Why, so!

You and I then shall be in charity,
For though we should be abusive, we ha' the benefit 140
Not to understand one another. Where's my aunt?

I did hear music somewhere; and my brains,
Tun'd with a bottle of your capering claret,
Made haste to show their dancing.

LITTLE. Please you, madam, [Offering his box of sweetmeats to CELESTINA.]

They are very comfortable.<sup>34</sup>

STEW. Alas, madam,

How would you have me help it? I did use
All means I could, after he heard the music,
To make him drunk, in hope so to contain
him;

But the wine made him lighter, and his head
Flew hither, ere I miss'd his heels. 150

KICK. Nay, he spoke Latin to the lady.

ARE. Oh, most unpardonable! Get him off
Quickly, and discreetly [too];<sup>35</sup> or, if I live —

STEW. It is not in my power; he swears I am

<sup>34</sup> Comforting.

<sup>35</sup> Add. Dyce.

An absurd sober fellow; and if you keep
A servant in his house to cross his humor,
When the rich sword and belt comes home,
he'll kill him.

ARE. What shall I do? Try your skill,
Master Littleworth.

LITTLE. He has ne'er a sword. — Sweet
Master Frederick —

BORN. 'T is pity, madam, such a scion<sup>36</sup> should 160

Be lost; — but you are clouded.

CEL. Not I, sir,

I never found myself more clear at heart.

BORN. I could play with a feather; your fan, lady. —

Gentlemen, Aretina, ta, ra, ra, ra! Come,
madam.

FRED. Why, my good tutor in election!
You might have been a scholar.

LITTLE. But I thank

My friends, they brought me up a little better.
Give me the town wits, that deliver jests
Clean from the bow, that whistle in the air,
And cleave the pin<sup>37</sup> at twelvescore! Ladies
do 170

But laugh at a gentleman that has any learn-
ing;

'T is sin enough to have your clothes suspected.
Leave us, and I will find a time to instruct you.
Come, here are sugarplums; 't is a good Frederick.

FRED. Why, is not this my aunt's house in the Strand?

The noble rendezvous? Who laughs at me?
Go! I will root here if I list, and talk
Of rhetoric, logic, Latin, Greek, or anything,
And understand 'em too; who says the contrary?

Yet, in a fair way, I condemn all learning, 180
And will be as ignorant as he, or he,
Or any taffeta, satin, scarlet, plush,
Tissue,<sup>38</sup> or cloth a' bodkin<sup>39</sup> gentleman,
Whose manners are most gloriously infected. —
Did you laugh at me, lady?

CEL. Not I, sir;

But if I did show mirth upon your question,
I hope you would not beat me, little gentle-
man?

FRED. How! "little gentleman"? You dare not say

These words to my new clothes, and fighting
sword.

<sup>39</sup> Cloth of bawdikin, rich brocade.

ARE. Nephew Frederick!

FRED. "Little gentleman!"
"T is an affront both to my blood and person. 191

I am a gentleman of as tall a birth
As any [boast] <sup>40</sup> nobility; though my clothes
Smell o' the lamp, my coat <sup>41</sup> is honorable,
Right honorable, full of or and argent. —
A "little gentleman!"

BORN. Coz, you must be patient;
My Lady meant you no dishonor, and
You must remember she's a woman.

FRED. Is she a woman? That's another
matter. —

Do you hear? My uncle tells me what you
are. 200

CEL. So, sir.

FRED. You call'd me "little gentleman."

CEL. I did, sir.

FRED. A little pink <sup>42</sup> has made a lusty ship Strike her topsail; the crow may beard the elephant,
A whelp may tame the tiger; spite of all False decks <sup>43</sup> and murderers; <sup>44</sup> and a "little gentleman"

Be hard enough to grapple with your Ladyship,
Top and topgallant. — Will you go drink,
Uncle,

Totter enchanted bottle? You and I 210
Will tippie, and talk philosophy.

BORN. Come, Nephew. —
You will excuse a minute's absence, madam. —
Wait you on us.

STEW. My duty, sir.
Exeunt [Sir THOMAS BORNWELL, FREDERICK, and Steward.]

ARE. Now, gentlemen.

KICK. Madam, I had rather you accuse my language

For speaking truth, than virtue suffer in My further silence; and it is my wonder
That you, whose noble carriage hath deserv'd
All honor and opinion, should now
Be guilty of ill manners.

CEL. What was that
You told me, sir?

LITTLE. Do you not blush, madam, [220
To ask that question?

<sup>41</sup> With a play on coat of arms.

<sup>43</sup> Frederick returns to his nautical figure. "The false deck was a slight one raised over the other, as a defence against boarders, and was sometimes blown up in action." (Dyce.)

<sup>44</sup> Cannon for short ranges. They fired scattering shot.

CEL. You amaze rather My cheek to paleness. What [mean you] <sup>45</sup> by
this?

I am not troubled with the hiccup, gentlemen,
<sup>46</sup> You should bestow this fright upon me.

LITTLE. Then
Pride and ill memory go together.

CEL. How, sir? —

KICK. The gentleman on whom you exercis[d]

Your thin wit, was a nephew to the lady
Whose guest you are; and though her modesty
Look calm on the abuse of one so near
Her blood, the affront was impious.

LITTLE. I am asham'd on't. [230
You an ingenious lady, and well manner'd!
I'll teach a bear as much civility.

CEL. You may be master of the college, sir,
For aught I know.

LITTLE. What college?

[CEL.] <sup>47</sup> Of the bears. <sup>48</sup>
Have you a plot upon me? D'ee possess
Your wits, or know me, gentlemen?

Re-enter [Sir THOMAS] BORNWELL [behind].

BORN. How's this?

KICK. Know you? Yes; we do know you to an atom.

LITTLE. Madam, we know what stuff your soul is made on.

CEL. But do not bark so like a mastiff, pray. —

Sure they are mad. — Let your brains stand awhile, 240

And settle, gentlemen; you know not me;
What am I?

LITTLE. Th' art a puppet, a thing made
Of clothes and painting, and not half so handsome

As that which play'd Susanna in the fair.

CEL. I heard you visited those canvas tragedies,

One of their constant audience, and so taken
With Susan, that you wish'd yourself a rival
With the two wicked elders.

KICK. You think this Is wit now. Come, you are —

CEL. What, I beseech you?
Your character <sup>49</sup> will be full of salt and satire, 250

No doubt. What am I?

<sup>46</sup> Understand "that." <sup>47</sup> Om. Q.

<sup>48</sup> I.e., you have the manners of a bearward.

<sup>49</sup> Of me.

KICK. Why, you are a woman —
 CEL. And that's at least a bow wide of you[r] knowledge.
 KICK. Would be thought handsome, and might pass i' th' country
 Upon a market day; but <sup>50</sup> miserably forfeit to pride and fashions, that if Heaven Were a new gown, you'd not stay in't a fortnight.
 CEL. It must be miserably out of fashion then.
 Have I no sin but pride?
 KICK. Hast any virtue,
 Or but a good face, to excuse that want?
 CEL. You prais'd it yesterday.
 KICK. That made you proud. [260]
 CEL. More pride!
 KICK. You need not. To close up the praise,
 [I have seen a better countenance in a sybil.
 CEL. When you wore spectacles of sack,<sup>61</sup> mistook
 The painted cloth,<sup>52</sup> and kiss'd it for <sup>53</sup> your mistress.
 KICK. Let me ask you a question: how much
 Have you consum'd <sup>54</sup> in expectation
 That I would love you?
 CEL. Why, I think as much
 As you have paid away in honest debts
 This seven year. 'T is a pretty impudence,
 But cannot make me angry.
 LITTLE. Is there any [270]
 Man that will cast away his limbs upon her?
 KICK. You do not sing so well as I imagin'd,
 Nor dance; you reel in your coranto,<sup>55</sup> and pinch
 Your petticoat too hard: y' ave no good ear
 To th' music, and incline too much one shoulder,
 As <sup>56</sup> you were dancing on the rope, and falling.
 You speak abominable French, and make
 A curtsey like a dairymaid. — [aside] Not mad!

LITTLE. [aside] Do we not sting her handsomely?

BORN. [behind] A conspiracy!

KICK. Your state <sup>57</sup> is not so much as 't is reported, 280

When you confer notes, all your husband's debts,
 And your own reconcil'd; but that's not it
 Will so much spoil your marriage.

CEL. As what, sir?
 Let me know all my faults.

KICK. Some men do whisper
 You are not overhonest.<sup>58</sup>

CEL. All this shall not Move me to more than laughter, and some pity,

Because you have the shapes <sup>59</sup> of gentlemen;
 And though you have been insolent upon me,
 I will engage no friend to kick or cudgel you,
 To spoil your living and your limbs together.
 I leave that to diseases that offend you, 291
 And spare my curse, poor silken vermin! and Hereafter shall distinguish men from monkeys.

BORN. [coming forward] Brave soul! — You brace of horseleeches <sup>60</sup>! — I have heard

Their barbarous language, madam; y' are too merciful.

They shall be silent to your tongue; pray punish 'em.

CEL. They are things not worth my character,<sup>61</sup> nor mention

Of any clean breath; so lost in honesty,
 They cannot satisfy for wrongs enough,
 Though they should steal out of the world at

LITTLE. We are hang'd already.

CEL. Yet I will talk a little to the pilchards. — <sup>63</sup>

You two, that have not 'twixt you both the hundred

Part of a soul, coarse woolen-witted fellows,
 Without a nap, with bodies made for burdens!
 You, that are only stuffings for apparel,
 As you were made but engines <sup>64</sup> for your tailors

To frame their clothes upon, and get them custom,

Until men see you move; yet, then you dare not,

Out of your guilt <sup>65</sup> of being the ignobler beast, 310

But give a horse the wall,<sup>66</sup> whom you excel
 Only in dancing of the brawls,<sup>67</sup> because

The horse was not taught the French way.

Your two faces,
One fat like Christmas, tother lean like Candlemas

And prologue to a Lent, both bound together,
Would figure Janus, and do many cures
On agues, and the green disease,<sup>66</sup> by frightening;
But neither can, with all the characters<sup>69</sup>
And conjuring circles, charm a woman, though Sh'ad fourscore years upon her, and but
one 320

Tooth in her head, to love or think well of
you;

And I were miserable to be at cost
To court such a complexion as your malice
Did impudently insinuate. But I waste time,
And stain my breath in talking to such tad-poles.

Go home, and wash your tongues in barley-
water,

Drink<sup>70</sup> clean tobacco, be not hot i' th' mouth,
And you may scape the beadle; so I leave you
To shame, and your own garters<sup>71</sup>! — Sir, I must

Entreat you, for my honor, do not penance
'em; 330

They are not worth your anger. How shall I<sup>72</sup>
Acquit<sup>73</sup> your lady's silence?

BORN. Madam, I
Am sorry to suspect, and dare revenge.

CEL. No cause of mine.

BORN. It must become me to attend you
home.

CEL. You are noble. — Farewell, mushrooms.

[Exit with SIR THOMAS BORNWELL.]

ARE. Is she gone?

LITTLE. I think we pepper'd her.

KICK. I'm glad 't is over;
But I repent no service for you, madam. —

Enter Servant, with a letter [and a jewel, which he delivers to KICKSHAW].

To me? from whence? — A jewel! a good preface.

Be happy the conclusion. He smiles upon 't.
ARE. Some love letter. [340

LITTLE. He has a hundred mistresses; you may

Be charitable, madam; I ha' none;
He surfeits, and I fall away i' th' kidneys.

<sup>66</sup> Greensickness, chlorosis.

<sup>71</sup> To hang yourselves in.

<sup>72</sup> Q I shall. <sup>73</sup> Requite.

KICK. I'll meet. — [Exit Servant.]

[aside] 'T is some great lady, questionless, that has Taken notice, and would satisfy her appetite.

ARE. Now, Master Alexander, you look bright o' the sudden;

Another spirit's in your eye.

KICK. Not mine, madam;
Only a summons to meet a friend.

ARE. What friend?

LITTLE. By this jewel, I know her not.

ARE. 'T is a she-friend. I'll follow, gentlemen; 351

We may have a game at cent<sup>74</sup> before you go.

KICK. I shall attend you, madam.

LITTLE. 'T is our duty.

[Exeunt KICKSHAW and LITTLE-
WORTH.]

ARE. I blush while I converse with my own
thoughts.

Some strange fate governs me, but I must on;
The ways are cast already, and we thrive
When our sin fears no eye nor perspective.

Exit.

ACT IV — [SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter two men leading ALEXANDER [KICK-
SHAW] blinded, and go off suddenly.

KICK. I am not hurt; my patience to obey
'em,

Not without fear to ha' my throat cut else, Did me a courtesy. Whither ha' they brought me? [Pulls off the bandage.]

'T is devilish dark; the bottom of a well
At midnight, with but two stars on the top,
Were broad day to this darkness. I but think How like a whirlwind these rogues caught me
up,

And smothered my eyesight. Let me see;
These may be spirits, and, for aught I know,
Have brought me hither over twenty steeples.
Pray Heaven they were not bailiffs! — that's more worth 11

My fear — and this a prison. All my debts
Reek in my nostril, and my bones begin
To ache with fear to be made dice; and yet
This is too calm and quiet for a prison. —
What if the riddle prove I am robb'd? And
yet

I did not feel 'em search me. How now!
music!

<sup>1</sup> A room in the house of Madam Decoy.

Enter DECOY, like an old woman, with a light.

And a light! What beldam's this? I cannot pray. —

What art?

DEC. A friend. Fear not, young man,

I am

No spirit.

KICK. Off!

DEC. Despise me not for age, 20
Or this coarse outside, which I wear not out Of poverty. Thy eyes be witness, 't is No cave, or beggar's cell, th' art brought to ;

let

That gold speak here's no want, which thou mayst spend,
And find a spring to tire even prodigality,
If thou beest wise.

KICK. The Devil was a coiner
From the beginning; yet the gold looks current.

DEC. Th' art still in wonder; know I am mistress of

This house, and of a fortune that shall serve
And feed thee with delights; 't was I sent for
thee; 30

The jewel and the letter came from me.
It was my art thus to contrive our meeting,
Because I would not trust thee with my fame,
Until I found thee worth a woman's honor.

KICK. [aside] Honor and fame! The Devil means to have

A care on's credit. Though she sent for me,
I hope she has another customer
To do the trick withal; I would not turn Familiar<sup>2</sup> to a witch.

DEC. What say'st? Canst thou Dwell in my arms to-night? Shall we change<sup>3</sup>
kisses, 40

And entertain the silent hours with pleasure,
Such as old Time shall be delighted with,
And blame the too swift motion of his wings,
While we embrace?

KICK. [aside] Embrace! She has had no teeth

This twenty years, and the next violent cough Brings up her tongue; it cannot possibly Be sound at root. I do not think but one Strong sneeze upon her, and well meant, would
make

Her quarters fall away; one kick would blow
Her up like gunpowder, and loose all her
limbs. 50

She is so cold an incubus would not heat her;

<sup>2</sup> A spirit bound to service.

<sup>3</sup> Exchange.

Her phlegm would quench a furnace, and her
breath

Would damp a musket bullet.<sup>4</sup>

DEC. Have you, sir,

Consider'd?

KICK. What?

DEC. My proposition.

Canst love?

KICK. I could have done; whom do you mean?

I know you are pleas'd but to make sport.

DEC. Thou art not

So dull of soul as thou appear'st.

KICK. [aside] This is

But some device; my grannam has some trick
in't. —

Yes, I can love.

DEC. But canst thou affect me?

KICK. Although to reverence so grave a matron 60

Were an ambitious word in me, yet since

You give me boldness, I do love you.

DEC. Then

Thou art my own.

KICK. [aside] Has she no cloven foot?

DEC. And I am thine, and all that I command

Thy servants; from this minute thou art
happy,

And fate in thee will crown all my desires.

I griev'd a proper<sup>5</sup> man should be compell'd

To bring his body to the common market.<sup>6</sup>

My wealth shall make thee glorious; and, the
more

To encourage thee, howe'er this form may fright 70

Thy youthful eyes, yet thou wo't find by light

Of thy own sense, for other light is banish'd

My chamber, when our arms tie lovers' knots

And kisses seal the welcome of our lips,

I shall not there affright thee, nor seem old,

With rivell'd<sup>7</sup> veins; my skin is smooth and soft

As ermines, with a spirit to meet thine,

Active, and equal to the Queen of Love's

When she did court Adonis.

KICK. [aside] This doth more

Confirm she is a devil, and I am 80

Within his own dominions. I must on,

Or else be torn a' pieces. I have heard

These succubae must not be cross'd.

<sup>4</sup> I.e., the charge of powder.

<sup>6</sup> I.e., patronize professional prostitutes.

<sup>7</sup> Shriveled, shrunken.

DEC. We trifle
Too precious time away; I'll show you a prospect

Of the next chamber, and then out the candle.

KICK. Have you no sack i' th' house? I would go arm'd
Upon this breach.

DEC. It sha' not need.

KICK. One word,
Mother; have not you been a cat in your days?

DEC. I am glad you are so merry, sir. You observe
That bed?

KICK. A very brave one.

DEC. When you are [90
Disrob'd, you can come thither in the dark.
You sha' not stay for me. Come, as you wish
For happiness. Exit.

KICK. I am preferr'd, if I
Be modest and obey. She cannot have
The heart to do me harm, an she were Hecate Herself. I will have a strong faith, and think
I march upon a mistress, the less evil.
If I scape fire now, I defy the Devil. Exit.

[SCENE II] *

Enter FREDERICK [gaily dressed,] LITTLE-WORTH, [and] Steward.

FRED. And how d' ee like me now?

STEW. Most excellent.

FRED. Your opinion, Master Littleworth.

LITTLE. Your French tailor
Has made you a perfect gentleman; I may Converse now with you, and preserve my credit.

D' ee find no alteration in your body
With these new clothes?

FRED. My body altered? No.

LITTLE. You are not yet in fashion then.
That must

Have a new motion, garb,<sup>8</sup> and posture, too,
Or all your pride is cast away; it is not
The cut of your apparel makes a gallant, 10
But the geometrical wearing of your clothes.

STEW. Master Littleworth tells you right;
you wear your hat
Too like a citizen.

LITTLE. 'Tis like a midwife;
Place it with best advantage of your hair.
Is half your feather moulted? This does make
No show; it should spread over, like a canopy;
Your hot-rein'd<sup>10</sup> monsieur wears it for a shade

* A room in Bornwell's house.

<sup>8</sup> Bearing. <sup>10</sup> Hot-loined; i.e., lustful.

And cooler to his back. Your doublet must Be more unbutton'd hereabouts; you'll not
Be a sloven else: a foul shirt is no blemish; [20
You must be confident, and outface clean
linen.

Your doublet and your breeches must be al-low'd

No private meeting here; your cloak's too
long.

It reaches to your buttock, and doth smell
Too much of Spanish gravity; the fashion
Is to wear nothing but a cape; a coat
May be allow'd a covering for one elbow,
And some to avoid the trouble, choose to walk
In cuerpo,<sup>11</sup> thus.

STEW. [aside] Your coat and cloak's
a-brushing

In Long Lane, Lombard.<sup>12</sup>

FRED. But what if it rain? [30

LITTLE. Your belt about your shoulder is sufficient

To keep off any storm; beside, a reed
But wav'd discreetly, has so many pores,
It sucks up all the rain that falls about one.
With this defence, when other men have beer
Wet to the skin through all their cloaks, I have Defied a tempest, and walk'd by the taverns
Dry as a bone.

STEW. [aside] Because he had no money
To call for wine.

FRED. Why, do you walk enchanted?
Have you such pretty charms in town? But stay; 40

Who must I have to attend me?

LITTLE. Is not that
Yet thought upon?

STEW. I have laid out<sup>13</sup> for servants.

LITTLE. They are everywhere.

STEW. I cannot yet be furnish'd
With such as I would put into his hands.

FRED. Of what condition must they be, and how

Many in number, sir?

LITTLE. Beside your fencing,
Your singing, dancing, riding, and French
master,

Two may serve domestic, to be constant waiters

Upon a gentleman: a fool, a pimp.

STEW. For these two officers I have enquir'd, 50

And I am promis'd a convenient whiskein.<sup>14</sup>

<sup>11</sup> Body (Span.); i.e., without the upper garment.
Q quipo.

<sup>12</sup> There were many clothing shops there.

<sup>14</sup> Pander.

I could save charges, and employ the pie-wench,

That carries her intelligence in whitepots;<sup>15</sup>
Or 't is but taking order<sup>16</sup> with the woman
That holds<sup>17</sup> the ballads; she could fit him
with

A concubine to any tune; but I
Have a design to place a fellow with him
That has read all Sir Pandarus' works: a Trojan,<sup>18</sup>

That lies conceal'd, and is acquainted with Both city and suburban fripperies,<sup>19</sup> 60
Can fetch 'em with a spell at midnight to him,
And warrant which are for his turn; can, for
A need, supply the surgeon too.

FRED. I like thy providence;<sup>20</sup> such a one deserves

A livery twice a year.

STEW. It sha' not need; a cast suit of your Worship's
Will serve; he'll find a cloak to cover it,
Out of his share with those he brings to bed to
you.

FRED. But must I call this fellow pimp?

LITTLE. It is Not necessary;<sup>21</sup> or Jack, or Harry, 70
Or what he's known abroad by, will sound better,

That men may think he is a Christian.

FRED. But hear you, Master Littleworth: is there not
A method, and degrees of title in Men of this art?

LITTLE. According to the honor
Of men that do employ 'em. An emperor
May give this office to a duke; a king
May have his viceroy to negotiate for him;
A duke may use a lord; the lord a knight,
A knight may trust a gentleman; and when [80
They are abroad, and merry, gentlemen
May pimp to one another.

FRED. Good, good fellowship!
But for the fool now, that should wait on me,
And break me jests?

LITTLE. A fool is necessary.

STEW. By any<sup>22</sup> means.

FRED. But which of these two servants
Must now take place?<sup>23</sup>

<sup>15</sup> Dishes of boiled milk, eggs, sugar, etc.

<sup>16</sup> Making arrangements.

<sup>23</sup> Have precedence.

LITTLE. That question, Master Frederick,

The school of heraldry should conclude upon;
But if my judgment may be heard, the fool
Is your first man; and it is known a point
Of state to have a fool.

STEW. But, sir, the other [90
Is held the finer servant; his employments
Are full of trust, his person clean and nimble,
And none so soon can leap into preferment,
Where fools are poor.

LITTLE. Not all; there's story<sup>24</sup> for't; Princes have been no wiser than they should be.

Would any nobleman, that were no fool,
Spend all in hope of the philosopher's stone,
To buy new lordships in another country?
Would knights build colleges, or gentlemen
Of good estates challenge the field, and
fight, 100

Because a whore wo' not be honest?<sup>25</sup> Come,
Fools are a family over all the world;
We do affect<sup>26</sup> one naturally; indeed
The fool is leiger<sup>27</sup> with us.

STEW. Then the pimp
Is extraordinary.<sup>28</sup>

FRED. Do not you fall out
About their places. — Here's my noble aunt!

Enter ARETINA.

LITTLE. How do you like your nephew, madam, now?

ARE. Well! — Turn about, Frederick. —
Very well!

FRED. Am I not now a proper gentleman?
The virtue of rich clothes! Now could I take 110

The wall of Julius Caesar,<sup>29</sup> affront
Great Pompey's upper lip, and defy the Senate.
Nay, I can be as proud as your own heart,
madam:

You may take that for your comfort; I put on
That virtue with my clothes, and I doubt not
But in a little time I shall be impudent
As any page, or player's boy. I am
Beholding to this gentleman's good discipline;
But I shall do him credit in my practice.
Your steward has some pretty notions, too, [120
In moral mischief.

ARE. Your desert in this Exceeds all other service, and shall bind me
Both to acknowledge and reward.

<sup>29</sup> Dyce adds or.

LITTLE. Sweet madam,
Think me but worth your favor ; I would creep
Upon my knees to honor you, and for every Minute you lend to my reward, I'll pay
A year of serviceable tribute.

ARE. You
Can compliment.
LITTLE. (aside) Thus still she puts me
off ;
Unless I speak the downright word, she'll never Understand me. A man would think that creeping 130
Upon one's knees were English to a lady.

*Enter ALEXANDER [KICKSHAW, splendidly
attired].*

KICK. How is 't, Jack ? — Pleasures attend you, madam !
How does my plant of honor ?

ARE. Who is this ?
KICK. 'T is Alexander.
ARE. Rich and glorious !
LITTLE. 'T is Alexander the Great.

KICK. And my Bucephalus
Waits at the door.

ARE. Your case <sup>30</sup> is alter'd, sir.
KICK. I cannot help these things ; the Fates will have it ;
'T is not my land does this.

LITTLE. But thou hast a plough
That brings it in.

ARE. Now he looks brave and lovely.
FRED. Welcome, my gallant Macedonian.

KICK. Madam, you gave your nephew for my pupil. 141
I read <sup>31</sup> but in a tavern ; if you'll honor us,
The Bear at the Bridge foot <sup>32</sup> shall entertain
you.

A drawer <sup>33</sup> is my Ganymede, he shall skink <sup>34</sup>
Brisk nectar to us ; we will only have A dozen partridge in a dish ; as many pheasants,

Quails, cocks, and godwits <sup>35</sup> shall come marching up
Like the train'd band ; <sup>36</sup> a fort <sup>37</sup> of sturgeon Shall give most bold defiance to an army,
And triumph o'er the table. —

ARE. Sir, it will [150
But dull the appetite to hear more, and mine

<sup>30</sup> With a pun on "case" = outside. <sup>31</sup> Teach.

<sup>32</sup> A famous tavern at the Southwark end of London Bridge.

<sup>33</sup> Tapster, waiter. <sup>34</sup> Draw, pour.

<sup>35</sup> Birds of the snipe family.

<sup>36</sup> City militia. <sup>37</sup> I.e., pasty.

Must be excus'd. Another time I may be
Your guest.

KICK. 'T is grown in fashion now with
ladies ;
When you please, I'll attend you. — Little-worth. —

Come, Frederick.

FRED. We'll have music ; I love noise.
We will outroar the Thames, and shake the bridge, boy. Exit [with KICKSHAW].

LITTLE. Madam, I kiss your hand ; would you would think

Of your poor servant : flesh and blood is frail,
And troublesome to carry, without help.

ARE. A coach will easily convey it, or [160
You may take water at Strand Bridge. <sup>38</sup>

LITTLE. But I
Have taken fire.

ARE. The Thames will cool. <sup>39</sup>

LITTLE. But never quench my heart ; your charity

Can only do that !

ARE. I will keep it cold
Of purpose.

LITTLE. Now you bless me, and I dare
Be drunk in expectation. [Exit.]

ARE. I am confident
He knows me not, and I were worse than mad
To be my own betrayer. — Here's my husband.

Enter [Sir THOMAS] BORNWELL.

BORN. Why, how now, Aretina ? What !
alone ?

The mystery of this solitude ? My house [170
Turn desert o' the sudden ! All the gamesters Blown up ! Why is the music put to silence ?
Or have their instruments caught a cold, since we Gave 'em the last heat ? I must know thy ground

Of melancholy.

ARE. You are merry, as <sup>40</sup>
You came from kissing Celestina.

BORN. I Feel her yet warm upon my lip ; she is Most excellent company ; I did not think There was that sweetness in her sex. I must Acknowledge 't was thy cure to disenchant
me 180

From a dull husband to an active lover.

<sup>38</sup> A landing on the Thames, so called because the way to it was a lane from the bridge on which the Strand formerly crossed the rivulet from St.
Clement's Well.

<sup>39</sup> Dyce adds it, sir.

<sup>40</sup> As if.

With such a lady I could spend more years
Than since my birth my glass hath run soft
minutes,

And yet be young ; her presence has a spell
To keep off age ; she has an eye would strike
Fire through an adamant.

ARE. I have heard as much
Bestow'd upon a dull-fac'd chambermaid,
Whom love and wit would thus commend.

True beauty
Is mock'd when we compare thus,<sup>41</sup> itself being

Above what can be fetch'd <sup>42</sup> to make it lovely ; 190

Or,<sup>43</sup> could our thoughts reach something to declare

The glories of a face, or body's elegance,
That touches but our sense ; when <sup>44</sup> beauty spreads

Over the soul, and calls up understanding
To look [what] <sup>45</sup> thence <sup>46</sup> is offer'd, and admire.

In both I must acknowledge Celestina
Most excellently fair, fair above all
The beauties I ha' seen, and one most worthy Man's love and wonder.

BORN. Do you speak, Aretina,
This with a pure sense to commend ? Or is't 200

The mockery of my praise ?

ARE. Although it shame
Myself, I must be just, and give her all
The excellency of women, and were I
A man —

BORN. What then ?

ARE. I know not with what loss
I should attempt her love. She is a piece
So angelically moving, I should think Frailty excus'd to dote upon her form,
And almost virtue to be wicked with her.

Exit.

BORN. What should this mean ? This is no
jealousy,

Or she believes I counterfeit. I feel 210
Something within me, like a heat, to give
Her cause, would Celestina but consent.
What a frail thing is man ! It is not worth
Our glory to be chaste, while we deny

<sup>41</sup> Employ such comparisons.

<sup>43</sup> Neilson conj. Oh, silently adopted by Schelling-Black. But Aretina is arguing against comparisons. Editors have bungled this passage through failure to grasp the antithesis indicated by when in l. 193.

<sup>46</sup> From the soul.

Mirth and converse with women. He is good
That dares the tempter, yet corrects his blood.
Exit.

[SCENE III] <sup>47</sup>

[Enter] CELESTINA, MARIANA, [and] ISABELLA.

CEL. I have told you all my knowledge ;
since he is pleas'd
To invite himself, he shall be entertain'd,
And you shall be my witnesses.

MAR. Who comes with him ?

CEL. Sir William Scentlove, that prepar'd me for

The honorable encounter. I expect
His Lordship every minute.

Enter [SIR WILLIAM] SCENTLOVE.

SCENT. My Lord is come.

CEL. He has honor'd me.

Enter Lord [and] HAIRCUT.

SCENT. My Lord, your periwig is awry !

LORD. You, sir —

While HAIRCUT is busy about his hair,

SCENTLOVE goes to CELESTINA.

SCENT. You may guess at the gentleman that's with him.

It is his barber, madam, d' ee observe ?

An your Ladyship wants a shaver.

HAIR. She is here, sir. — [10
I am betray'd. — Scentlove, your plot. I may Have opportunity to be reveng'd. Exit.

SCENT. She in the midst.

LORD. She's fair, I must confess ;
But does she keep this distance out of state ? <sup>48</sup>

CEL. Though I am poor in language to express

How much your Lordship honors me, my heart
Is rich and proud in such a guest. I shall Be out of love with every air abroad,
And for his grace done my unworthy house,
Be a fond prisoner, become anchorite, 20
And spend my hours in prayer, to reward
The blessing and the bounty of this presence.

LORD. Though you could turn each place you move in to

A temple, rather than a wall should hide
So rich a beauty from the world, it were Less want to lose our piety and your prayer.
A throne were fitter to present you to Our wonder, whence your eyes, more worth than all

<sup>48</sup> Dignity, stateliness.

They look on, should chain every heart a prisoner.

SCENT. 'T was pretty well come off.

LORD. By your example [30
I shall know how to compliment; in this,
You more confirm my welcome. [Kisses her.]

CEL. I shall love
My lips the better, if their silent language
Persuade your Lordship but to think so truly.

LORD. You make me smile, madam.

CEL. I hope you came not
With fear that any sadness here should shake
One blossom from your eye. I should be miserable

To present any object should displease you.

LORD. You do not, madam.

CEL. As I should account
It no less sorrow, if your Lordship should [40
Lay too severe a censure on my freedom.

I wo' not court a prince against his justice,
Nor bribe him with a smile to think me honest.
Pardon, my Lord, this boldness, and the mirth
That may flow from me. I believe my father Thought of no winding sheet when he begot
me.

LORD. She has a merry soul. — It will become

Me ask your pardon, madam, for my rude
Approach, so much a stranger to your knowledge.

CEL. Not, my Lord, so much stranger to my knowledge; 50
Though I have but seen your person afar off,
I am acquainted with your character,
Which I have heard so often, I can speak it.

LORD. You shall do me an honor.

CEL. If your Lordship will Be patient.

LORD. And glad to hear my faults.

CEL. That as your conscience can agree upon 'em;

However, if your Lordship give me privilege,
I'll tell you what's the opinion of the world.

LORD. You cannot please me better.

CEL. Y'are a lord
Born with as much nobility as would, 60
Divided, serve to make ten noblemen,
Without a herald; but with so much spirit
And height of soul, as well might furnish twenty.

You are learn'd, a thing not compatible now
With native honor; and are master of A language that doth chain all [ears],<sup>49</sup> and

<sup>49</sup> Emend. Dyce (silently); Q years.

All hearts, where you persuade; <sup>50</sup> a wit so flowing,

And prudence to correct it, that all men
Believe they only meet in you, which, with
A spacious memory, make up the full wonder. 70

To these you have [join'd] <sup>51</sup> valor, and upon
A noble cause know how to use a sword
To honor's best advantage, though you [wear]<sup>52</sup>
none.

You are as bountiful as the showers that fall

Into the spring's green bosom, as <sup>53</sup> you were Created lord of Fortune, not her steward;
So constant to the cause in which you make Yourself an advocate, you dare all dangers;
And men had rather you should be their friend,
Than justice or the bench bound up together. 80

LORD. But did you hear all this?

CEL. And more, my Lord.

LORD. Pray let me have it, madam.

CEL. To all these virtues there is added
one, —

(Your Lordship will remember, when I name it,
I speak but what I gather from the voice
Of others) — it is grown to a full fame
That you have lov'd a woman.

LORD. But one, madam?

CEL. Yes, many; give me leave to smile,
my Lord,

I shall not need to interpret in what sense;
But you have show'd yourself right honorable, 90

And, for your love to ladies, have deserv'd,
If their vote might prevail, a marble statue.
I make no comment <sup>54</sup> on the people's text. —
My Lord, I should be sorry to offend.

LORD. You cannot, madam; these are things we owe
To nature for.

CEL. And honest men will pay
Their debts.

LORD. If they be able, or compound.

CEL. She had a hard heart would be unmerciful,
And not give day <sup>55</sup> to men so promising;
But you ow'd women nothing.

LORD. Yes, I am [100
Still in their debt, and I must owe them love;
It was part of my character.

<sup>50</sup> Expostulate, employ persuasion.

<sup>54</sup> I add no commentary.

<sup>55</sup> Of grace.

CEL. With your Lordship's
Pardon, I only said you had a fame
For loving women ; but of late, men say
You have, against the imperial laws of love,
Restrained the active flowings of your blood,
And with a mistress buried all that is Hop'd for in love's succession, as all beauty
Had died with her, and left the world benighted !

In this you more dishonor all our sex 110
Than you did grace a part ; when everywhere
Love tempts your eye to admire a glorious harvest,

And everywhere, as full-blown ears submit
Their golden heads, the laden trees bow down
Their willing fruit, and court your amorous tasting.

LORD. I see men would dissect me to a fibre ;

But do you believe this ?

CEL. It is my wonder,
I must confess, a man of nobler earth
Than goes to vulgar composition,
(Born and bred high, so unconfin'd, so rich [120
In fortunes, and so read in all that sum
Up human knowledge, to feed gloriously,
And live at court, the only sphere wherein True beauty moves, nature's most wealthy garden,

Where every blossom is more worth than all
The Hesperian fruit by jealous dragon watch'd,
Where all delights do circle appetite,
And pleasures multiply by being tasted,)
Should be so lost with thought of one turn[d] ashes.

There's nothing left, my Lord, that can excuse
you, 130

Unless you plead what I am asham'd to prompt

Your wisdom to !

LORD. What's that ?

CEL. That you have play'd
The surgeon with yourself.

LORD. And am made eunuch ?

CEL. It were much pity.

LORD. Trouble not yourself,
I could convince your fears with demonstra-
tion

That I am man enough, but knew not where,
Until this meeting, beauty dwelt. The court
You talk'd of must be where the Queen of Love is,

Which moves but with your person ; in your
eye

Her glory shines, and only at that flame 140

Her wanton boy doth light his quick'ning torch.

CEL. Nay, now you compliment ; I would it did,

My Lord, for your own sake.

LORD. You would be kind,

And love me then ?

CEL. My Lord, I should be loving,
Where I found worth to invite it, and should cherish

A constant man.

LORD. Then you should me, madam.

CEL. But is the ice about your heart fallen
off ?

Can you return to do what love commands ? —
Cupid, thou shalt have instant sacrifice,
And I dare be the priest.

LORD. Your hand, your lip ; [150
[Kisses her.]

Now I am proof 'gainst all temptation.

CEL. Your meaning, my good Lord ?

LORD. I, that have strength
Against thy voice and beauty, after this May dare the charms of womankind. — Thou
art,

Bella Maria, unprofaned yet ;
This magic has no power upon my blood. —
Farewell, madam ! if you durst be the example
Of chaste as well as fair, thou wert a brave one.

CEL. I hope your Lordship means not this for earnest.

Be pleas'd to grace a banquet.

LORD. Pardon, madam. — [160
Will Scentlove, follow ; I must laugh at you.

CEL. My Lord, I must beseech you stay,
for honor,

For her whose memory you love best.

LORD. Your pleasure.

CEL. And by that virtue you have now profess'd

I charge you to believe me too ; I can
Now glory that you have been worth my trial,
Which, I beseech you, pardon. Had not you
So valiantly recover'd in this conflict,
You had been my triumph, without hope of
more

Than my just scorn upon your wanton flame ; 170

Nor will I think these noble thoughts grew
first

From melancholy, for some female loss,
As the fantastic world believes, but from Truth, and your love of innocence, which shine
So bright in the two royal luminaries <sup>56</sup>

<sup>56</sup> Charles I and Queen Henrietta Maria.

At court, you cannot lose your way to chastity.
Proceed, and speak of me as honor guides you.

Exit Lord.

I am almost tir'd. — Come, ladies, we'll beguile

Dull time, and take the air another while.

Exeunt.

ACT V — [SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter ARETINA, and Servant [with a purse].

ARE. But hath Sir Thomas lost five hundred pounds
Already?

SERV. And five hundred more he borrow'd.
The dice are notable devourers, madam;
They make no more of pieces<sup>2</sup> than of pebbles,

But thrust their heaps together, to engender.
"Two hundred more the caster!"<sup>3</sup> cries this gentleman.

"I am w' ee." — "I ha' that to nothing, sir.
The caster

Again." "T is covered, and the table, too,
With sums that frigh[t]ed me. Here one sneaks out,

And with a martyr's patience smiles upon 10
His money's executioner, the dice;
Commands a pipe of good tobacco, and I' th' smoke on't vanishes. Another makes The bones vault o'er his head, swears that ill-throwing

Has put his shoulder out of joint, calls for
A bone-setter. That looks to th' box, to bid
His -master send him some more hundred pounds,

Which lost, he takes tobacco, and is quiet.
Here a strong arm throws in and in, with which He brusheth all the table, pays the rooks<sup>4</sup> [20
That went their smelts<sup>5</sup> apiece upon his
hand,

Yet swears he has not drawn a stake this seven
year.

But I was bid make haste; my master may Lose this five hundred pounds ere I come thither. Exit.

ARE. If we both waste so fast, we shall soon find

Our state<sup>6</sup> is not immortal. Something in His other ways appear not well already.

<sup>1</sup> A room in Bornwell's house.

<sup>6</sup> Estate.

Enter Sir THOMAS [BORNWELL, and Servants, one with a purse].

BORN. Ye tortoises, why make you no more haste?

Go pay to th' master of the house that money,
And tell the noble gamesters I have another [30 Superfluous thousand pound; at night I'll visit 'em.

D' ee hear?

SERV. Yes, an[t] please you.

BORN. Do't, ye drudges.
[Exeunt Servants.]

Ta, ra, ra! — Aretina!

ARE. You have a pleasant humor, sir.

BORN. What! should a gentleman be sad?

ARE. You have lost —

BORN. A transitory sum; as good that way
As another.

ARE. Do you not vex within for't?

BORN. I had rather lose a thousand more, than one

Sad thought come near my heart for't. Vex for trash!

Although it go from other men like drops
Of their lifeblood, we lose with the alacrity [40
We drink a cup of sack, or kiss a mistress.
No money is considerable with a gamester;
They have souls more spacious than kings.

Did two

Gamesters divide the empire of the world,
They'd make one throw for't all, and he that
lost

Be no more melancholy than to have play'd
for

A morning's draught. Vex a rich soul for dirt,

The quiet of whose every thought is worth
A province!

ARE. But when dice have consum'd all,
Your patience will not pawn for as much
more. 50

BORN. Hang pawning! Sell outright, and the fear's over.

ARE. Say you so? I'll have another coach
to-morrow

If there be rich above ground.

BORN. I forgot

To bid the fellow ask my jeweller
Whether the chain of diamonds be made up;
I will present it to my Lady Bellamour,
Fair Celestina.

ARE. This gown I have worn
Six days already; it looks dull, I'll give it
My waiting woman, and have one of cloth

Of gold embroidered ; shoes and pantables <sup>7</sup> [60
Will show well of the same.

BORN. I have invited
A covey of ladies and as many gentlemen
To-morrow to the Italian ordinary ; <sup>8</sup>
I shall have rarities and regalias <sup>9</sup>
To pay for, madam ; music, wanton songs,
And tunes of silken petticoats to dance to.

ARE. And to-morrow have I invited half the court
To dine here. What misfortune 't is your company
And ours should be divided ! After dinner
I entertain 'em with a play.

BORN. By that time [70
Your play inclines to the epilogue, shall we Quit our Italian host and whirl in coaches
To the Dutch magazine of sauce, the Steelyard, <sup>10</sup>

Where deal, <sup>11</sup> and backrag, <sup>12</sup> and what strange wine else

They dare but give a name to in the reckoning, <sup>13</sup>

Shall flow into our room, and drown Westpha-lias, <sup>14</sup>

Tongues, and anchovies, like some little town Endangered by a sluice, through whose fierce ebb

We wade, and wash ourselves into a boat,
And bid our coachmen drive their leather tenements <sup>80</sup>

By land, while we sail home, with a fresh tide,
To some new rendezvous.

ARE. If you have not 'Pointed the place, pray bring your ladies
hither ;

I mean to have a ball to-morrow night,
And a rich banquet for 'em, where we'll dance
Till morning rise, and blush to interrupt us.

BORN. Have you no ladies i' th' next room,
to advance

A present mirth ? What a dull house you govern !

Farewell ! a wife's no company. — Aretina,
I've summ'd up my estate, and find we may have <sup>90</sup>

A month good yet.

ARE. What mean you ?

BORN. And I'd rather
Be lord one month of pleasures, to the height

<sup>7</sup> Slippers.

<sup>8</sup> Restaurant.

<sup>14</sup> Westphalian hams.

And rapture of our senses, than be years
Consuming what we have in foolish temperance,

Live in the dark, and no fame wait upon us !
I will live so, posterity shall stand
At gaze when I am mentioned.

ARE. A month good !
And what shall be done then ?

BORN. I'll over sea,
And trail a pike. With <sup>15</sup> watching, marching, lying

In trenches, with enduring cold and hunger,
And taking here and there a musket-shot, [101
I can earn every week four shillings, madam ;
And if the bullets favor me to snatch
Any superfluous limb, when I return,
With good friends, I despair not to be enroll'd Poor knight of Windsor. <sup>16</sup> For your course,
madam,

No doubt you may do well ; your friends are
great ;

Or, if your poverty and their pride cannot Agree, you need not trouble much invention
To find a trade to live by : there are custom-
ers. <sup>17</sup> 110

Farewell ; be frolic, madam ! If I live,
I will feast all my senses, and not fall
Less than a Phaëthon from my throne of pleasure,

Though my estate flame like the world about
me. Exit.

ARE. 'T is very pretty ! —

Enter DECOY.

Madam Decoy !

DEC. What ! melancholy,
After so sweet a night's work ? Have not I
Show'd myself mistress of my art ?

ARE. A lady.

DEC. That title makes the credit of the act
A story higher. Y'ave not seen him yet ?
I wonder what he'll say.

ARE. He's here.

Enter ALEXANDER [KICKSHAW] and FRED-ERICK.

KICK. Bear up, [120
My little myrmidon ; does not Jack Little-worth

Follow ?

FRED. Follow ? He fell into the Thames
At landing.

<sup>15</sup> By.

<sup>16</sup> Quarters were provided for a few pensioners in Windsor Castle.

<sup>17</sup> With a play on the meaning "courtesans."

KICK. The Devil shall dive for him,
Ere I endanger my silk stockings for him.
Let the watermen alone: <sup>18</sup> they have drags and engines.<sup>19</sup>

When he has drunk his julep, I shall laugh
To see him come in pickl'd the next tide.

FRED. He'll never sink, he has such a cork brain.

KICK. Let him be hang'd or drown'd, all's
one to me;

Yet he deserves to die by water <sup>20</sup> cannot 130
Bear his wine credibly.<sup>21</sup>

FRED. Is not this my aunt?

KICK. And another handsome lady; I must know her. [Goes to DECOR.]

FRED. My blood is rampant too, I must court somebody;

As good my aunt as any other body.

ARE. Where have you been, Cousin?

FRED. At the Bridge,
At the Bear's foot,<sup>22</sup> where our first health began

To the fair Arétina, whose sweet company
Was wished by all. We could not get a lay,
A tumbler, a device, a bona roba,<sup>23</sup>
For any money; drawers were grown dull; [140
We wanted our true firks,<sup>24</sup> and our vagaries.—
When were you in drink, aunt?

ARE. How?

FRED. Do not ladies
Play the good fellows too? There's no true
mirth

Without 'em. I have now such tickling fancies!

That doctor of the chair of wit has read
A precious lecture, how I should behave
Myself to ladies; as now, for example.

ARE. Would you practise upon me?

FRED. I first salute you;
You have a soft hand, madam; are you so
All over?

ARE. Nephew!

FRED. Nay, you should but smile. 150
And then again I kiss you; and thus draw Off your white glove, and start, to see your
hand

More excellently white. I grace my own

<sup>21</sup> Creditably.

<sup>22</sup> Dyce emends. Cf. IV, ii, 143. But the transposition is doubtless intentional.

<sup>23</sup> "Tumbler" and "bona roba" often occur as slang for "courtesan." "Lay" and "device" evidently have the same meaning here.

<sup>24</sup> Whims, caprices; doubtless both this word and "vagaries" have here the same meaning as the four mentioned in the preceding note.

Lip with this touch, and turning gently thus,
Prepare you for my skill in palmistry,
Which, out of curiosity, no lady
But easily applies <sup>25</sup> to. The first line
I [l]ook with most ambition to find out,
Is Venus' girdle, a fair semicircle,
Enclosing both the mount of Sol and Saturn;
If that appear, she's for my turn; a lady [161
Whom nature has prepar'd for the career;
And, Cupid at my elbow, I put forward;
You have this very line, Aunt.

ARE. The boy's frantic!

FRED. You have a couch or [pallet]: <sup>26</sup> I can shut

The chamber doo[r]. Enrich a stranger, when Your nephew's coming into play!

ARE. No more.

FRED. Are you so coy to your own flesh and blood?

KICK. Here, take your playfellow; I talk of
sport,

And she would have me marry her.

FRED. Here's Littleworth. 170

Enter LITTLEWORTH, wet.

Why, how now, tutor?

LITTLE. I ha' been fishing.

FRED. And what ha' you caught?

LITTLE. My belly full of water.

KICK. Ha, ha! Where's thy rapier?

LITTLE. My rapier is <sup>27</sup> drown'd,
And I am little better. I was up by th' heels,
And out came a tun of water, beside wine.

KICK. 'T has made thee sober.

LITTLE. Would you have me drunk
With water?

ARE. I hope your fire is quenched by this time.

FRED. It is not now, as when your Worship
"walk'd

By all the taverns," Jack, "dry as a bone."

KICK. You had store of fish under water,
Jack. 180

LITTLE. It has made a poor John <sup>28</sup> of me.

FRED. I do not think but if we cast an angle
Into his belly, we might find some pilchards.

LITTLE. And boil'd, by this time. — Dear madam, a bed.

KICK. Carry but the water spaniel to a grassplot,
Where he may roll himself; let him but shake

<sup>28</sup> Salt fish.

His ears twice in the sun, and you may grind him

Into a posset.<sup>29</sup>

FRED. Come, thou shalt to my bed,
Poor pickerel.

DEC. Alas, sweet gentleman!

LITTLE. I have ill luck an I should smell by
this time; 190
I am but new ta'en, I am sure. — Sweet gentlewoman!

DEC. Your servant.

LITTLE. Pray do not pluck off my skin;
It is so wet, unless you have good eyes,
You'll hardly know it from a shirt.

DEC. Fear nothing.

Exeunt [all but KICKSHAW and ARETINA].

ARE. [aside] He has sack enough, and I may find his humor.

KICK. And how is't with your Ladyship?
You look

Without a sunshine in your face.

ARE. You are glorious
In mind and habit.

KICKS. Ends of gold and silver!

ARE. Your other clothes were not so rich.
Who was

Your tailor, sir?

KICK. They were made for me long
since; 200

They have known but two bright days upon my back.

I had a humor, madam, to lay things by;
They will serve two days more: I think I ha'
gold enough

To go to th' mercer. I'll now allow myself
A suit a week, as this, with necessary
Dependances, beaver, silk stockings, garters,
And roses,<sup>30</sup> in their due conformity;
Boots are forbid a clean<sup>31</sup> leg, but to ride in.
My linen every morning comes in new,
The old goes to great bellies.<sup>32</sup>

ARE. You are charitable. [210]

KICK. I may dine w' ee some time, or at the court,

To meet good company, not for the table.
My clerk o' th' kitchen's here, a witty epi-
cure,

A spirit that, to please me with what's rare,
Can fly a hundred mile a day to market,
And make me lord of fish and fowl. I shall Forget there is a butcher; and to make

My footman nimble, he shall feed on nothing
But wings of wild fowl.

ARE. These ways are costly.

KICK. Therefore I'll have it so; I ha' sprung a mine. 220

ARE. You make me wonder, sir, to see this change

Of fortune; your revenue was not late
So plentiful.

KICK. Hang dirty land and lordships!
I wo' not change one lodging I ha' got,
For the chamber<sup>33</sup> of London.

ARE. Strange, of such a sudden,
To rise to this estate! No fortunate hand
At dice could lift you up so, for 't is since Last night; yesterday, you were no such monarch.

KICK. There be more games than dice.

ARE. It cannot be
A mistress, though your person is worth
love; 230

None possibly are rich enough to feed
As you have cast the method of your riots.
A princess, after all her jewels, must
Be forc'd to sell her provinces.

KICK. Now you talk
Of jewels, what do you think of this?

ARE. A rich one.

KICK. You'll honor me to wear't; this other toy
I had from you; this chain I borrowed of
you,

A friend had it in keeping. [Gives her the jewel and chain.] — If your Ladyship Want any sum, you know your friend and Alexander.

ARE. Dare you trust my security?

KICK. There's gold; [240]
I shall have more to-morrow.

ARE. You astonish me;
Who can supply these?

KICK. A dear friend I have.
She promis'd we should meet again i' th' morning.

ARE. Not that I wish to know
More of your happiness than I have already Heart to congratulate, — be pleas'd to lay
My wonder.

KICK. 'T is a secret —

ARE. Which I'll die
Ere I'll betray.

KICK. You have always wish'd me well;
But you shall swear not to reveal the party.

ARE. I'll lose the benefit of my tongue.

<sup>30</sup> Rosettes for the shoes.

KICK. Nor be [250
Afraid at what I say. What think you first
Of an old witch, a strange ill-favor'd hag,
That, for my company last night, has wrought
This cure upon my fortune? I do sweat
To think upon her name.

ARE. How, sir! a witch?

KICK. I would not fright your Ladyship too
much

At first, but witches are akin to spirits.
The truth is — nay, if you look pale already,
I ha' done.

ARE. Sir, I beseech you.

KICK. If you have
But courage then to know the truth, I'll tell
you 260

In one word; my chief friend is the Devil!

ARE. What devil? how I tremble!

KICK. Have a heart;
'T was a she-devil too, a most insatiate,
Abominable devil, with a tail
Thus long.

ARE. Goodness defend me! Did you see
her?

KICK. No, 't was i' th' dark; but she appear'd first to me
I' th' likeness of a be[ld]am, and was brought,
I know not how, nor whither, by two goblins,
More hooded than a hawk.

ARE. But would you venture
Upon a devil!

KICK. Ay, for means.

ARE. [aside] How black [270
An impudence is this! — But are you sure
It was the Devil you enjoy'd?

KICK. Say nothing;
I did the best to please her; but as sure
As you live, 't was a hell-cat.<sup>34</sup>

ARE. D' ee not quake?

KICK. I found myself the very same<sup>35</sup> i' th'
morning,
Where two of her familiars had left me.

Enter Servant.

SERV. My Lord is come to visit you.

KICK. No words,
As you respect my safety. I ha' told tales
Out of the Devil's school; if it be known,
I lose a friend. 'T is now about the time [280
I promis'd her to meet again; at my Return I'll tell you wonders. Not a word.

Exit.

ARE. [looking in a mirror] 'T is a false glass;
sure I am more deform'd. —
What have I done? — My soul is miserably

Enter Lord.

LORD. I sent you a letter, madam.

ARE. You express'd
Your noble care of me, my Lord.

*Re-enter [Sir THOMAS] BORNWELL [and]
CELESTINA.*

BORN. Your Lordship
Does me an honor.

LORD. Madam, I am glad To see you here; I meant to have kiss'd your
hand,

Ere my return to court.

CEL. Sir Thomas has
Prevail'd to bring me, to his trouble, hither.

LORD. You do him grace.

BORN. Why, what's the matter,
madam? 291
Your eyes are tuning Lachrimae.<sup>36</sup>

ARE. As you
Do hope for Heaven, withdraw, and give me but
The patience of ten minutes.

BORN. Wonderful!
I will not hear you above that proportion.
She talks of Heaven. — Come, where must we to counsel?

ARE. You shall conclude me when you please. [Exit.]

BORN. I follow.
LORD. [aside] What alteration is this? I,
that so late

Stood the temptation of her eye and voice,
Boasted a heart 'bove all licentious flame, [300
At second view turn renegade, and think
I was too superstitious, and full Of phlegm, not to reward her amorous court-
ship

With manly freedom.

CEL. [to BORNWELL] I obey you, sir.

BORN. I'll wait upon your Lordship presently. [Exit.]

LORD. [aside] She could not want a cunning to seem honest
When I neglected her. I am resolv'd. —
You still look pleasant, madam.

CEL. I have cause,
My Lord, the rather for your presence, which Hath power to charm all trouble in my
thoughts. 310

<sup>34</sup> Witch, hag.

<sup>35</sup> Dyce emends myself in the very room. Q my selfe the very same in t' th morning.

<sup>36</sup> You are about to weep. Lachrimae was a musical composition by John Dowland.

LORD. I must translate that compliment, and owe that is cheerful in myself to these quick'ning smiles; and rather than such bright
Eyes should repent their influence upon me,
I would release the aspects, and quit the bounty
Of all the other stars. Did you not think me
A strange and melancholy gentleman,
To use you so unkindly?

CEL. Me, my Lord?

LORD. I hope you made no loud complaint;
I would not
Be tri'd by a jury of ladies.

CEL. For what, my Lord? [320]

LORD. I did not meet that noble entertain-
ment
You were late pleas'd to show me.

CEL. I observ'd
No such defect in your Lordship, but a brave
And noble fortitude.

LORD. A noble folly!
I bring repentance for 't. I know you have,
Madam, a gentle faith, and wo' not ruin
What you have built to honor you.

CEL. What's that?

LORD. If you can love, I'll tell your Lady-
ship.

CEL. I have a stubborn soul else.

LORD. You are all
Compos'd of harmony.

CEL. What love d' ee mean? [330]

LORD. That which doth perfect both.
Madam, you have heard

I can be constant, and if you consent
To grace it so, there is a spacious dwelling
Prepar'd within my heart for such a mistress.

CEL. Your mistress, my good Lord?

LORD. Why, my good Lady,
Your sex doth hold it no dishonor
To become mistress to a noble servant
In the now court Platonic way. Consider Who 't is that pleads to you; my birth and present

Value can be no stain to your embrace; 340
But these are shadows when my love appears,
Which shall, in his first miracle, return
Me in my bloom of youth, and thee a virgin;
When I, within some new Elysium,
Of purpose made and meant for us, shall be
In every thing Adonis, but in his Contempt of love; and court thee from a Daphne

Hid in the cold rind of a bashful tree,

With such warm language and delight, till thou Leap from that bays<sup>37</sup> into the Queen of
Love, 350
And pay my conquest with composing garlands
Of thy own myrtle<sup>38</sup> for me.

CEL. What's all this?

LORD. Consent to be my mistress, Celes-tina,

And we will have it springtime all the year;
Upon whose invitations, when we walk,
The winds shall play soft descant<sup>39</sup> to our feet,
And breathe rich odors to re-pure the air.

Green bowers on every side shall tempt our
stay,

And violets stoop to have us tread upon 'em.
The red rose shall grow pale, being near thy
cheek, 360

And the white blush, o'ercome with such a forehead.

Here laid, and measuring with ourselves some bank,

A thousand birds shall from the woods repair,
And place themselves so cunningly behind
The leaves of every tree, that while they pay [Us]<sup>40</sup> tribute of their songs, thou sha't imagine
The very trees bear music, and sweet voices
Do grow in every arbor. Here can we Embrace and kiss, tell tales, and kiss again,
And none but Heaven our rival.

CEL. When we are [370]
Weary of these, what if we shift our paradise,
And through a grove of tall and even pine,
Descend into a valley, that shall shame
All the delights of Tempe; upon whose Green plush the Graces shall be call'd to dance
To please us, and maintain their fairy revels,
To the harmonious murmurs of a stream
That gently falls upon a rock of pearl.
Here doth the nymph, forsaken Echo, dwell,
To whom we'll tell the story of our love, [380]
Till at our surfeit and her want of joy,
We break her heart with envy. Not far off,
A grove shall call us to a wanton river,
To see a dying swan give up the ghost,
The fishes shooting up their tears in bubbles,
That they must lose the genius of their waves —

And such love<sup>41</sup> linsey-woolsey,<sup>42</sup> to no purpose.

<sup>38</sup> For the myrtle was sacred to Venus, as the bay laurel was to Apollo.

<sup>41</sup> Nonsense, jargon. Literally, a cloth made partly of linen, partly of wool, and therefore neither the one thing nor the other.

LORD. You chide me handsomely ; pray tell me how

You like this language. [He embraces her.]

CEL. Good my Lord, forbear.

LORD. You need not fly out of this circle,
madam. 390

These widows are so full of circumstance !
I'll undertake, in this time I ha' courted
Your Ladyship for the toy, to ha' broken ten,

Nay, twenty colts, virgins I mean, and taught
'em

The amble, or what pace I most affected.

CEL. Y' are not, my Lord, again, the lord I thought you ;

And I must tell you now, you do forget
Yourself and me.

LORD. You'll not be angry, madam ?

CEL. Nor rude, (though gay men have a privilege,)

It shall appear. — There is a man, my Lord, Within my acquaintance, rich in worldly fortunes, 401

But cannot boast any descent of blood,
Would buy a coat of arms.

LORD. He may, and legs
Booted and spurr'd, to ride into the country.

CEL. But these will want antiquity, my
Lord,

The seal of honor. What's a coat cut out
But yesterday, to make a man a gentleman ?
Your family, as old as the first virtue
That merited an escutcheon, doth owe <sup>as</sup> [409
A glorious coat of arms ; if you will sell now
All that your name doth challenge in that ensign,

I'll help you to a chapman <sup>as</sup> that shall pay,
And pour down wealth enough for 't.

LORD. Sell my arms !
I cannot, madam.

CEL. Give but your consent,
You know not how the state may be inclin'd
To dispensation ; we may prevail
Upon the Herald's Office afterward.

LORD. I'll sooner give these arms to th'
hangman's axe,

My head, my heart, to twenty executions,
Than sell one atom from my name.

CEL. Change that, [420
And answer him would buy my honor from
me :

Honor, that is not worn upon a flag
Or pennon, that, without the owner's dangers,
An enemy may ravish, and bear from me ;

<sup>as</sup> Own.

<sup>as</sup> Merchant, buyer.

But that which grows and withers with my
soul,

Beside the body's stain — think, think, my
Lord,

To what you would unworthily betray me,
If you would not, for price of gold, or pleasure
(If that be more your idol), lose the glory
And painted honor of your house. — I ha'
done. 430

LORD. Enough to rectify a satyr's blood.
Obscure my blushes here.

Enter [Sir WILLIAM] SCENTLOVE and HAIRCUT.

HAIR. Or this or fight with me ;
It shall be no exception <sup>as</sup> that I wait
Upon my Lord : I am a gentleman ;
You may be less and be a knight ; the office
I do my Lord is honest, sir. How many Such you have been guilty of, Heaven knows.

SCENT. 'Tis no fear of your sword, but that I would not

Break the good laws established against duels.

HAIR. Off with your periwig, and stand bare.

[SCENTLOVE takes off his periwig.]
LORD. [aside to CELESTINA] From
this 440

Minute I'll be a servant to thy goodness ;
A mistress in the wanton sense is common ;
I'll honor you with chaste thoughts, and call you so.

CEL. [aside to Lord] I'll study to be worth your fair opinion.

LORD. Scentlove, your head was us'd to a covering,

Beside a hat ; when went the hair away ?

SCENT. I laid a wager, my Lord, with Haircut,

Who thinks I shall catch cold, that I'll stand bare

This half hour.

HAIR. Pardon my ambition,
Madam ; I told you truth : I am a gentle-
man, 450

And cannot fear that name is drown'd in my Relation to my Lord.

CEL. I dare not think so.

HAIR. From henceforth call my service duty, madam.

That pig's-head, <sup>as</sup> that betray'd me to your
mirth,

Is doing penance for 't.

SCENT. Why may not I,
My Lord, begin a fashion of no hair ?

<sup>as</sup> Objection.

<sup>as</sup> I.e., closely shorn head.

CEL. Do you sweat, Sir William?

SCENT. Not with store of nightcaps.

Re-enter ARETINA [and SIR THOMAS] BORNWELL.

ARE. [aside to BORNWELL] Heaven has dissolv'd the clouds that hung upon .

My eyes, and if you can with mercy meet
A penitent, I throw my own will off, 460
And now in all things obey yours, my nephew

Send back again to th' college, and myself
To what place you 'll confine me.

BORN. [aside to ARETINA] Dearer now
Than ever to my bosom, thou sha't please
Me best to live at thy own choice. I did
But fright thee with a noise of my expenses ;
The sums are safe, and we have wealth enough,
If yet we use it nobly. — My Lord, — madam,
Pray honor [us] 46 to-night.

ARE. I beg your presence,
And pardon.

BORN. I know not how my Aretina [470
May be dispos'd to-morrow for the country.

CEL. You must not go before you have done

Me honor to accept an entertainment
Where I have power ; on those terms I'm your guest.

BORN. You grace us, madam.

ARE. [aside] Already
I feel a cure upon my soul, and promise
My after life to virtue. Pardon, Heaven,
My shame, yet hid from the world's eye.

Re-enter DECOY.

DEC. Sweet madam !

ARE. Not for the world be seen here ! We are lost.

46 Add. Dyce.

I'll visit you at home. — [aside] But not to practice 480

What she expects ; my counsel may recover
her. [Exit DECOY.]

Re-enter ALEXANDER [KICKSHAW].

KICK. Where's madam ? — [*aside to ARE-
TINA*] Pray lend me a little money ;
My spirit has deceiv'd me ; Proserpine
Has broke her word.

ARE. [aside to KICKSHAW] Do you expect to find
The Devil true to you ?

KICK. [aside] Not too loud.

ARE. [aside] I'll voice it
Louder, to all the world, your horrid sin,
Unless you promise me religiously,
To purge your foul blood by repentance, sir.

KICK. [aside] Then I'm undone.

ARE. [aside] Not while I have power
To encourage you to virtue. I'll endeavor [490
To find you out some nobler way at court,
To thrive in.

KICK. [aside] Do't and I'll forsake the Devil,

And bring my flesh to obedience. You shall steer me, —

My Lord, your servant.

LORD. You are brave again.

KICK. Madam, your pardon.

BORN. Your offence requires
Humility.

KICK. Low as my heart. — Sir Thomas,
I'll sup with you, a part of satisfaction.

BORN. Our pleasures cool. Music ! and when our ladies

Are tir'd with active motion, to give Them rest, in some new rapture to advance [500
Full mirth, our souls shall leap into a dance.

Exeunt.
